THE facts of the case are fully stated in the judgment of SALE, J., dismissing the suit, which was as follows:—

"This is a suit to recover the value of 432 drums of jute delivered by the plaintiffs to the defendant Company for carriage from Serajgunge to Calcutta.

[790] "The plaintiffs are merchants carrying on business at Calcutta and Serajgunge. The name under which they do business in Calcutta is Than Sing Koram Chand, and the name of their business in Serajgunge is Bhood Sing Bal Chand. The defendants are common carriers, and it is admitted that in the ordinary course of business they received the goods in suit for carriage to Calcutta, and the loss of the goods is also admitted. The goods were carried under the terms of an agreement contained in a forwarding note which was signed on behalf of the plaintiffs and constituted a special contract within had been stopped. After the stern of the flat had struck the bank, the forepart closed in on the bank, and the whole grazed along it for a short distance. Directly after the flat had taken the bank, it was found that the water was pouring into her, and the Captain at once started the engines at full speed ahead, and took the flotilla round the loop into the straight reach on the other side, down this reach to a place where it was wide enough for the flotilla to turn, where he turned it, and then beached the flat on a level shoal or beach under the right bank of the river, at a place several hundred yards down the straight reach. An examination of the flat after she had been beached showed a groove in the iron plates of which she is built, on the port quarter, about six feet long, ending in a hole six or seven inches wide and three feet long, tapering towards the ends. This hole was in the side of the flat at a place which had been about two feet under water when the flat took the bank, and all the experts say that it was caused by some hard substance, which was pressed against the flat by the bank, when the flat struck, but that it could not have been caused by the bank itself, had there been nothing unusual at the place at the time. The inclination of their opinion is, as I understand them, that it was caused by a piece of wood which was sticking in the bank some two feet below the surface of the water, though nothing of the kind was found near the spot when search was made after the accident. For myself, I have no doubt that the injury was caused by the end of a large log of wood or a fragment of a tree, the other end of which was pressed against the bank; but whether the wood was sticking in the bank or floating in the water, there is no evidence to show, and I do not think it at all material to inquire. The 166 chests of tea, which are the subject-matter of this suit, were so injured by the water as to be useless and not worth carriage to Calcutta.

Upon evidence of this state of things the learned Judge in the Court below has found that there was a contract within the meaning of section 6 of the Carriers Act, by which the liability of the carriers was limited to a liability for negligence only, and that the Captain of the steamer was negligent in allowing the flat to touch the bank at all, but has further found that the loss of the tea was not caused by the negligence of the Captain in allowing the flat to strike the bank, but by the presence at the spot of a concealed danger, which he had no reason to suspect, and upon these findings has dismissed the suit.

On appeal before us, it was first contended by Mr. Pugh on behalf of the plaintiffs that, as the shipping note was written by the agent of his clients, the owners of the tea, on a form of the India General Steam Navigation Company, there was no contract with the present defendants by which their liability was in any way limited, and that they are liable for the loss of the goods as insurers, whether the loss was caused by negligence or not. I admit that I am unable to understand this argument. It is apparent from the facts which are stated at the beginning of this judgment, that the shipping note, though written on a form issued by one Company, was in fact sent to the agent as the agent of both, and that the defendants carried the goods at the agreed rate upon the terms of it.

The point which has been principally argued before us, and which is, in my opinion, the only point which arises in the case, is whether, upon the evidence upon this record, it appears that the Captain of the steamer was negligent in allowing the flat to touch the bank at all, as, if he was, I cannot doubt that the loss was caused by such negligence, as the hole in the side of the flat was certainly made when the flat struck the bank.

It is no doubt the case that, by section 9 of the Carriers Act, the loss is evidence of negligence as against the carrier; but where, as is the case here, the parties have placed all the evidence on which they rely before the Court, it is for the Court to say upon that evidence whether or not the loss was caused by the negligence of the carriers or their servants, the meaning of the Carriers Act; [791] and in order rightly to apprehend the various points which arise for determination in the suit, it is necessary to state the following facts which are either admitted or proved. The goods were delivered for carriage on board the flat Khyber at Serajgunge early in November 1893, and the flat, which was fully loaded with 29,000 maunds of jute, both baled and in drums, arrived in Calcutta in due course on the 17th November and anchored off Prinsep's Ghat.

"On instructions received from the defendant Company the flat was taken down to the Lower Hooghly Mills and there discharged cargo. She subsequently returned and discharged more cargo at the Sibpore and Howrah Mills On 4th December she was taken out into midstream, and there discharged a further portion of her cargo on board the flat Hafjan. Then she was towed above the [792] Howrah bridge and was cast off opposite the Union Press She arrived there on the afternoon of the 5th December but too late to discharge cargo On the 6th she was occupied all day in discharging the cargo intended for the Union Press, and during that day she discharged 1,300 drums of jute, and she also took on board, for delivery elsewhere, a certain quantity of salt and gunnies Work ceased on the 6th at the usual time about 5-30, and according to the evidence which has been adduced by the defendant Company the usual steps were taken to secure the goods on the flat from accident by fire or otherwise

In this case I can find nothing to show that, in acting as he did, Captain Allen was guilty of any negligence or want of skill, and for that reason I think that the plaintiffs cannot succeed in the action The action was from the first entirely speculative, as the plaintiffs had no knowledge when the action was brought how the accident happened, and relied entirely upon the presumption of negligence raised by section 9 of the Act, and the hope that the carriers would not be able to rebut it When the whole of the case, as it appears from the evidence on the record, is examined it appears that the only question is whether Captain Allen was negligent or unskilful in stopping and reversing the engines when the flotilla was opposite the shoal at the entrance to the loop, and whether the flat took the ground in consequence of his negligence, or want of skill in doing so In considering this question, it is necessary to remember that when the flotilla was opposite the shoal the Captain stopped, and then reversed the engines, and that in consequence of this action on his part the flotilla drifted with the current down and across the stream until it struck the left bank, and that the experts say that, if it can be done the most approved mode of getting round this bend is to keep close to the shoal, with the engines going ahead, and the helms hard aport, but that this is not always possible It has been pressed upon us by the Counsel for the plaintiffs that we should assume that when the flotilla was opposite the shoal, it was in a position from which the Captain could and would have gone round the bend, without touching the bank at all if he had kept his engines going ahead and his helms aport, and that he was attempting to get round in this way when the flat took the bank contrary to his expectation It is said that this is indicated by the fact that he ordered the helms to be put hard aport while the flotilla was drifting, and that it was negligent and unskilful on his part to stop and reverse the engines whilst he was carrying out the manoeuvre, as the consequence of his doing so must have been that the flotilla lay like a log on the water without steerage way and entirely at the mercy of the current The plaintiffs rely strongly on a kind of abstract admission obtained from the Captain in cross examination, that it is dangerous and improper to allow a vessel so to lose her way as to become unmanageable I do not think this contention is supported by the facts which have been proved in the case I cannot infer from the evidence on this record, that when the flotilla was opposite the shoal, it was in such a position that it was possible to get round the bend in the manner described, or that the Captain ever contemplated getting round in that way, or ever attempted to do so The experts all say that it would depend on where the flotilla was when it got to the end of the reach whether the manœuvre would be possible or not, and that under some circumstances it would be impossible to get round without touching the left bank, and there is no evidence here that when the flotilla was opposite the shoal it was so situated that the manœuvre was possible It is certain that Captain Allen was on the bridge looking out at the time, and that what he did was done deliberately and with a knowledge of what he was doing; and as it was certain that the effect of stopping the way of the flotilla at that point must have been that it would drift with the current down and across the stream until it came in contact with the left bank, the only conclusion I can come to is, that Captain Allen found himself in such a position that he could not get round the bend without touching the left bank, that he stopped the engines in order that the flotilla might drift down to that bank, and that he reversed them to lessen the force with which the flat would strike the bank That the place in which he found himself after the flat had touched the bank was appropriate for this purpose, is shown by the fact that from it he was able to take the flotilla round the bend without any check, and that the blow was not a violent one is shown by the fact that the side of the flat was not bulged or injured by the blow of the bank, as all the expert witnesses say would have been the case if the blow had been a violent one It is said that the action of the Captain in putting the helms aport while the flotilla was drifting shows that he intended to get round the bend by keeping close to the shoal I cannot see that this necessarily follows. Captain Allen was not asked why he put the helms aport, and as the head of the flat when the stern struck the bank was away from the left bank, it may be that, as the Captain says was the case, the steamer did answer her helm slightly, and it may be that this had the effect of decreasing the violence of the blow

[793] "The precautions adopted are explained in the evidence of Captain Duncan, the commander of the flat, and of Abdool Koreem the serang and of Tamizuddin the watchman who was on watch at the time the flat took fire. It appears that the flat was constructed on the plan now usually adopted in the case of flats belonging to the Company which are intended for the carriage of jute, that is to say, she had a steel hull and steel deck. She was 270 feet long and 41 in width. She had a roof of corrugated iron which was 30 feet above the deck, and the corrugated iron of the roof was bent down and formed an upper screen going all round the flat, and which came to within 10 feet of the deck. There were corrugated iron bulkheads at each end of the flat which shut off the [794] portion of the flat which was used for storage of the goods

There can, I think, be no doubt that if the burden had been upon the plaintiffs to prove negligence, they would, upon this evidence, have failed to discharge it, and as all the evidence on which the parties rely is before us, I think that, as nothing appears to have been done which was inconsistent with due care and skill, the presumption of negligence is rebutted, and the defendants are entitled to have the action dismissed

For these reasons I think that the Judge was right in dismissing the action, and that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Pigot, J —I am also of opinion that the decree of the original Court should be affirmed, and the appeal dismissed There are one or two points raised in the argument before us, upon which I desire to express an opinion.

I quite agree that the liability of the defendants is to be determined with reference to the conditions on the back of the forwarding note, notwithstanding the fact that the name of the India General Steam Navigation Company, Limited is printed thereon, and not that of the defendant Company I think the effect of the contract of the 4th October 1892, and of the manner in which the two Companies carried on their business, that is, as the learned Judge says, "running in a measure in amalgamation," renders the fact that an India General form was used perfectly immaterial, and makes the name of that Company printed on the forwarding note mere surplusage

The next point as to which I wish to express my opinion is upon the question of remoteness of damage The learned Judge, founding his conclusion upon the protest of Captain Allen, is of opinion that negligence in the navigation of the flotilla is established He says: "I have no alternative but to find that in taking all way off the vessels, in the situation in which they were placed when the accident occurred, and allowing them to drift with the current, Captain Allen did not exercise that degree of skill and care in handling them which the circumstances demanded, or, in other words, that he was guilty of negligence"

The learned Judge found, however, that the damage which actually was done was not the natural and probable consequence of the negligent act of the Captain The question whether he ought, as a reasonable man acquainted with the risks of river navigation, to have anticipated the likelihood of the presence at the place where the flat struck of such an object as that which penetrated her side must, in his opinion, be answered in the negative The substance whatever it was, that caused the injury, was below the surface of the water and invisible There was nothing in the visible natural conditions of the place to suggest the probability of any such substance being there. The bank is perpendicular, with a considerable depth of water beneath it, and the height is swept by a somewhat strong current, so that there would be little likelihood of substances floating down the river depositing themselves upon or attaching themselves to it. It is a clay bank, and without stones and devoid of trees. Then contact with the bank in this bend of the river is shown to be very usual, and generally innocuous. He did not think that Captain Allen could reasonably be expected to have from the portions which were occupied by the Captain and crew, respectively the Captain occupying the portion which was in the fore-part of the flat, and the crew the portion aft. There were doors in these bulkheads, opening into the portion of the flat reserved for the cargo, and when these doors were shut, connection was entirely shut off from the portions occupied by the Captain and the crew respectively. Attached to the screen I spoke of were canvas purdahs reaching down to the deck. These ran from the fore bulkhead to the aft bulkhead. They were secured above to the iron screen and below to the deck by wires fixed to the deck, and immediately inside these purdahs was a bamboo frame work, and round this [795] framework was a space left which formed a passage enabling a person to go round the cargo stored on the flat. In the intermediate portion, that is the portion inside this passage and bounded by it, the cargo was stored up to the roof.

anticipated the likelihood of the presence of a foreign substance at the point where he struck, and all that he could be expected to foresee as a consequence of permitting the vessels to drift, was that they would be carried against the bank, and would experience the consequences ordinarily resulting from such a collision, that they would either suffer no injury at all, or an injury proportionate to the force of the collision.

And on the authority of Sharp v. Powell (L. R., 7 C. P., 293), Greenland v. Chaplain (5 Exch., 240), and other cases cited in Pollock on Torts, pp. 36 et seq., he held the loss not to be attributable to the negligence of the defendants.

In appeal before us, this finding was challenged, and the cases bearing on it were fully discussed on both sides. The appellants put their case somewhat high, in my opinion. As I understood, one point contended for was that, if by reason of negligence the ship or flotilla was allowed to take a course in the descent of the river other than that which was the best, absolutely the best which could possibly be taken, then, for anything which happened while the flotilla was in that course, the defendants must be responsible, whether it could or could not have been reasonably foreseen. I understood the learned Counsel for the appellants to argue that, "If through negligence he deviated from his course and got on a rock, he would be liable on his contract," that is, his contract as carrier. "He is away from where he ought to be."

This would be in fact to apply the language used in Davis v. Garrett (6 Bing., 716) to every case such as the present. That case is no doubt often cited in cases not precisely on all fours with it. It was a case of deviation not warranted in the circumstances, not merely an act of negligence in carrying out the contract, but one in actual violation of it, and it is generally, I think, treated as founded on that consideration, as for instance in Scaramanga v. Stamp (L. R., 5 C.P.D., 295), in Lilley v. Doubleday (L. R., 7 Q.B.D., 510) and other cases.

I should hesitate to accept so absolute a rule as applicable to cases like the present. But upon the facts of the present case, I am unable to share the opinion which I have quoted from the judgment of my learned colleague in the original Court.

I think it results from the evidence that striking the bank ought to be avoided, that there is danger in striking it, which ought to be avoided, if possible. Obviously it is and must be a danger of an uncertain kind, the degrees of which may depend upon various conditions, the nature and shape of the bank, the depth of the water, and the force of the current. The most common kind of risk, at any rate where the bank is a precipitous bank of earth or mud, is the risk of striking it so violently as to injure the frame of the vessel, and break in the plates by the force of the blow. But the risk of what happened in this case is, I think, another danger of striking the bank, and which could not have happened if the bank had not been struck, so far as one can judge from the evidence. It is not suggested, and there is no reason to suppose that the blow came from a substance projecting from the bottom of the river bed : indeed, the depth of the water, 5 to 7 fathoms, would seem to negative anything of the sort; as would the position and shape of the hole in the flat's side, and the line traced by the substance, whatever it was, in the side of the flat up to the point where the side was broken in. The supposition of a snag standing up in the bottom of the river-bed, and causing the damage, may, therefore, I think, be dismissed. The damage must most probably have been done either by some tree or log protruding from the bank, or by some log lying in the water and caught between the flat and the bank when the flat was at the bank. Mr. Mackintosh puts the first of these possibilities very clearly in his evidence. It cannot, I think, be said that the danger of coming on such a fixed or moveable substance by getting to the bank is out of all reasonable anticipation. The banks of rivers such as this are often eaten away by the current in places, the trees growing on them must fall in or slip down too, with their roots perhaps still imbedded in the earth, which falls or slips with them. It is said by some of the witnesses that "The evidence is that at 5-30 when the work was stopped, in accordance with the usual method, the purdahs were let down and secured to the deck. The bulkhead doors were closed and all fires on the flat, whether for cooking purposes or otherwise, were put out.

[796] "There was a staging which had been erected by the servants of the defendant Company, connecting the flat with the shore, and had been used for the purpose of discharging cargo.

"The flat was 40 or 41 feet from the shore and was moored fore and aft with anchors and with hawsers attached to the bank. The gangway was closed by the purdah being let down along the side of the flat and also by a bamboo framework. It is obvious that when this was done the cargo was completely isolated from the crew and all communication with the outside was cut off. At 12 o'clock the person on watch was Tamizuddin. He and another man were set on watch at 12 o'clock, relieving two others who up to that time had been on watch, the rule being that the watch is relieved every one or two hours according to the season of the year; the longer watch being reserved for the hot season.

[797] "Tamizuddin states that on coming on watch he walked down the starboard side along the covering-board which runs all round and on the outside of the flat, the other watchman being stationed on the port side of the flat. He had walked up and down the flat twice, and then his attention was engaged by some floating wreckage or other substance which had got entangled with the anchor at the bow of the flat. He was occupied with that for 7 or 8 minutes. Then he observed a glare on the water, and on looking up, he observed a fire had broken out about amidships on the flat from the starboard side at a place he had passed some 7 minutes before when everything had appeared all right. He gave the alarm to the Captain, and being unable by reason of the fire to pass along the covering board on the starboard side he went round on the port side and roused up the crew.

there were no trees, or only one, on the bank at this place. I am not satisfied of the accuracy of that evidence. Abed Ali describes the attempt of the men to tie the vessel to trees on the bank where she struck. I do not see any reason to doubt this.

Then, again, the Captain says that the idea occurred to him that she had struck a snag as soon as ever he saw her careen over two feet. "I knew something must have broken her, and at that particular place boats taking saul timber often get loose in that bight," and being asked what he means by a snag, he says, "An old tree or log of timber." Later on, speaking of what he believes must have caused the injury, he says, "It must have been a saul log with the end sawn off, from the marks on the flat."

I infer that one of the dangers of striking the bank was, and is, the danger that what did happen might happen, because of the vessel striking the bank; and I do not think that it is straining the Captain's evidence to infer from it that he knew facts from which this danger might be anticipated, not, of course, as a probable thing, but as a quite possible, though perhaps unlikely, result of striking, as one of the reasons, of which no doubt there are many, which make it the duty of the Captain to avoid touching the bank, and to use reasonable care and pains to avoid doing so: so that if it was, as a matter of fact, owing to his negligent management of the flotilla that the flat struck the bank, the defendants would be liable for the damage caused by the snag, or whatever the substance was, that broke into the side of the flat.

Upon the question whether there was negligence or not the learned Judge felt bound, by the contents of the Captain's protest, to decide that there was. No doubt that document, if it is to be read literally, and to be treated as a perfectly accurate description of what took place, would at first sight seem rather to represent the Captain as having committed what, according to the experts examined and according to his own admission as a witness, would be an error in the conduct of the flotilla.

He says in the protest that when he arrived in the Long Reach shortly after 8 A.M., he "eased down the engines of the Makum and reduced her speed, then stopped the engines, and backed them astern, thus stopping all way on the said vessel;" and he then adds some sentences about the best way of getting round this bend, in which, from the evidence of the experts and from his own, it is quite evident that he is entirely wrong, and in fact writing mere nonsense. It is quite clear that it would be wholly wrong to let the flotilla drift without any steerage way in going round the bend.

[798] "An effort was made by the crew to extinguish the flames, in the first place by buckets of water, and afterwards by means of the pump which was aft; but being unable to pass through the bulkhead door they had to take the hose outside, and it was found to be too short to reach the flames. Captain Duncan was at this time cut off from the rest of his crew by reason of the fire rapidly extending to the port side and was unable to communicate with them. He says, however, that he did all he could in the time, the first thing being to cut free the flat Hafjan which was lashed to the port side of the Khyber. The Hafjan was drifted out by the tide amidstream and was uninjured.

The question for us is, however, what he actually did, and the opinion expressed by him in his protest six weeks afterwards, is of no consequence save so far as it may bear upon the probability of his having in fact done what he there appears to say he ought to have done.

He says in his evidence that he did not lose all way on the vessels, no doubt; part of his evidence on this subject I cannot regard as less than uncandid, when he affects to believe that a vessel going in a current, and only by the current's speed, has steerage way. But as to what he did (apart from his opinion), it does seem to me that the protest does not show that he committed any act of negligence conducing to the accident. True, he says, he stopped the engines and backed them, thus stopping all way; and this reads as though he had done so a long way off the point where the flotilla struck. This would certainly have been an act of negligence likely to produce disaster. But in truth this is not said in the protest, from which, save by the word "then," it is not indicated at what point the engines were stopped, or at what point they were reversed.

I take it to be quite certain, on the evidence, that up to point A on Ex. 3 the flotilla was going four miles an hour over the ground, one mile an hour through the water. It is at that point, the Captain says, he reversed the engines. Harvey, the engineer, contradicts him as to that. But I do not rely much on the accuracy of the entries in that engineer's log, having regard to what he says as to the way it was made.

Let it be assumed that the engines were reversed as soon after the flotilla reached A, or rather a point in the stream abreast of A, as the order to reverse could be carried out. Now that point is 200 feet from where the flotilla struck. No question was asked throughout the long examination of the witnesses to ascertain within what time the reversal of the engines could take a mile an hour off the speed. I suppose the answer would not be a very easy one to make with perfect accuracy, but some approach to it might perhaps have been made. We have nothing on the subject, but it has a bearing on the case. Four miles an hour would give less than 40 seconds for the flotilla to reach the bank at B, to which the current ran straight. In the one point of the evidence, at which the matter was nearly touched on, the Captain says: "When the engines are stopped there is way on the vessel for a long time." This, of course, must be so: and to a considerable extent must be true even when the engines were reversed, especially in the case of a mass so heavy as this flotilla must have been.

Now the Captain, even confronted with his protest, persisted in affirming that he still had steerage way, still had control over the vessel. I am quite unable to see any reason to doubt it. Assume the earliest possible moment for the reversing to begin to take effect, in the 35 seconds or so that must have elapsed before the bank was struck, I am unable to say that the Captain speaks erroneously, and that in fact the flotilla became, by reason of the engines being reversed, a mere log on the water within that time, and was thereby, because of being so made helpless, carried up to the bank. But this is the only act of negligence contributing to or causing the disaster which it is sought to establish. In every other respect the Captain's conduct is left unchallenged.

I believe that the flotilla had the necessary steerage way, although, whether from the eddy stated to have existed at that spot or for some other reason, she did not answer her helm when ported, and that the accident was not caused by the reversing of the engines, even if that took place 200 feet off point B. It is proper to add, that it is at least doubtful if the reversing of the engines took place until the flotilla was just at the bank.

For these reasons I agree that no negligence causing or contributing to the disaster is shown, and that therefore the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Macpherson, J.--I also think, for the reasons given in the judgment just delivered, that the appeal must fail. I have nothing to add to the judgment.

[799] "Then the Captain pulled down some of the purdahs on the port side to prevent their catching fire, and immediately afterwards he was, he says, driven to his own quarters by the flames and was obliged to jump over board with his wife, and he remained hanging on to one of the ropes which secured the flat to the shore till he was rescued by the jolly-boat of the flat which had been manned by the serang and some of the crew.

"There were two pumps on the Khyber, one in the Captain's quarters and one aft in the crew's quarters, and the Captain says that when work stopped for the day he went round the flat and found the pumps rigged and ready for use and the cargo in good order. He again went the round of the flat previous to retiring for the night and he found then that everything was in proper order. That was about 9 or 9-30 P.M.

[800] "As the result of the fire, the flat with all the goods then on board, including the goods in suit, were totally destroyed. Under these circumstances various questions have been raised which I shall deal with in order.

"The first question is whether, by reason of any of the provisions of the special contract, the defendant Company are exempted from liability in respect of this loss. When the fire broke out there were still on board some 8,000 drums of jute, all the rest of the ori-[801] ginal cargo having been delivered to the various mills at which the flat had called.

"The defendant Company rely on the 7th clause of the forwarding note as effectually protecting them from liability for the loss of the plaintiffs' goods under the circumstances I have detailed

"That clause runs as follows —

"'The Company will not be under any liability for damages or compensation in respect of loss or damage to goods (whether such goods may be at the time of such loss or damage on board of any steamer, flat or craft, or otherwise situated) except such liability as they are or may be subject to under the provisions of any law for the time being in force, or of any contract other than this for the time being in existence between the Company and the shipper.'

"The plaintiffs contend that this clause does not create any exemption from liability in favour of the defendant Company, but that the effect of it is to impose on them the ordinary liability of common carriers, that is the liability of insurers. It is said that the law which is referred to in the clause is general law in force at the time, and that the liability of the defendant Company imposed by law was the liability of insurers, which was only subject to limitation by a special contract as provided by the Carriers Act.

"The defendant Company, on the other hand, contend that having regard to the relations between the parties at the time the contract was entered into, and looking to the contract as a whole, it must be taken that it was intended by this clause to limit the liability of the defendant Company in the manner provided by the Act, and that on a proper construction of the clause it should be read as exempting the Company from all liability except such liability as by the Carriers Act they were prohibited from relieving themselves of.

"This clause has been recently considered by Mr. Justice HILL in the case of the Central Cachar Tea Company v. The Rivers Steam Navigation Company,* where the question arose as to what the proper construction of the clause in question [802] was, and on that point the learned Judge in a considered judgment expresses himself as follows —

"'But it was contended that assuming this to be so, the 7th condition of the bill of lading (here, it is the forwarding note) could not have the effect of lessening the common-law liability of the defendant Company, because the Company is thereby protected from liability for loss or damage, 'except such liability as they are or may be subject to under the provisions of any law for the time being in force;' or in other words it was said, except liability for loss occasioned otherwise than by the act of God or of the Queen's enemies, since the law imposes upon them liability for loss occasioned by any other means than these. The clause is not happily worded, but such a construction as this would have the result of altogether nullifying its intended effect, which I think clearly was at all events to carry the Company's immunity from liability for loss of goods beyond the point where the common law left it; and it appears to me that the fair construction to put upon it is, that the carrying Company was to be liable for loss or damage only when brought about by causes in respect of which the law would not permit them to relieve themselves from liability. That is, they were to be liable only for loss occasioned by the negligence or criminal acts of themselves or their servants or agents unless that liability was enlarged by a distinct contract, which in the present instance there is no pretence for saying was so.' "

"I have come to the conclusion that I ought to adopt that construction of the clause, and I would only make one additional observation, and that is that, if the plaintiffs' construction be the correct one, the clause itself would be unnecessary, because, if it were struck out, the position of the defendant Company would be precisely that in which the plaintiffs contend the 7th clause places them; whereas, on the other hand, the words 'provisions of any law for the time being in force' to my mind point rather to some written law or statutory enactment than to the unwritten or common law; and if one is to look to the liability which is imposed on the defendant Company by statutory enactment at the time the contract was entered into, it becomes necessary to see what exactly was the liability which, by the terms of the Carriers Act, was imposed on the defendant Company.

" 'Whereas it is expedient, not only to enable common carriers to limit their liability for loss of or damage to property delivered to them to be carried, but also to declare their liability for loss of or damage to such property occasioned by the negligence or criminal acts of themselves, their servants or agents, it is enacted.'

"According to the preamble, therefore, it was intended that the common law liability of the defendant Company at that time existing should be left untouched by the Act, but so far as the imposition of any liability is concerned the only liability expressly imposed is for loss caused by the negligence of the carriers or their agents or servants. Therefore, reading the words in the 7th clause as referring to that liability, that is, the liability for negligence, the effect of the clause is to exempt the Company from all liability except for loss occasioned by the negligence or criminal act of themselves or their servants.

"But even if that be the true construction of the clause, it is said that the defendant Company have disentitled themselves to the protection afforded by the clause by reason of a breach on their part of the conditions of the contract.

"The alleged breach is of a two-fold character.

"It is said, first, that the Khyber came into Calcutta and then improperly went outside the limits of Calcutta to the Lower Hooghly Mills; and in the second place it is said that the duty of the defendant Company being to deliver the goods at Juggernath Ghat, where they ordinarily deliver goods when they have no special instructions to the contrary, it was a breach of duty on their part to go to the Union Press, which is situated further up the river, without having, in the first place, delivered the plaintiffs' goods at Juggernath Ghat.

"The contract was one to carry the goods from Serajgunge to Calcutta. I think there can be no doubt that Calcutta, as used in the contract, means the Port of Calcutta; and that the parties so intended it, is clear from the 11th clause which refers to the Port of shipment and Port of discharge. There is no doubt that both the Lower Hooghly Mills and the Union Press are within the limits of the Port of Calcutta.

[804] "It has been contended that the contract was to carry the plaintiffs' goods from Serajgunge, and to deliver them within a reasonable time at Juggernath Ghat, but in my opinion there is no such duty imposed on the defendant Company by the contract. The duty of the defendant Company on bringing the goods within the Port of Calcutta was to give notice to the consignees of the arrival of the goods and to deliver the goods within a reasonable time at a reasonable place which the owners or consignees should appoint, and, failing such appointment, to deliver the goods at a reasonable place to be fixed by themselves. If any other meaning is to be ascribed to this contract, it would be impossible for the Company as a carrying company to carry on their business. They bring down from places up-country a large quantity of goods for many constituents, and I think the plan they adopt as regards delivery is the only reasonable one. That plan is as follows: When the place of delivery is fixed by the shipper or his agents at the time of shipment, the notice of such fixture is given in the course of voyage by the commander of the flat to the Company in Calcutta, and arrangements are then made to give delivery of such goods at the places in the order in which the flat passes them in coming up the river. As regards those goods, as to which the owners or consignees have given no instructions as to the place of delivery, they are delivered at Juggernath Ghat as soon as the arrangements made for the delivery of the other goods will allow, and due notice of such delivery is given to the owners or to the consignees when the latter are known.

"Between the 17th November and the 4th December a very large portion of the goods had been delivered, and I can find no reason for the suggestion that there had been any unreasonable delay in the delivery of such goods. It must be remembered that between those dates about 20,000 maunds of jute, baled and in drums, had been delivered; and as a matter of fact the Khyber was sent to the Union Press with the object of giving delivery there of one of the two lots of drums of jute which had been shipped by the plaintiffs from Serajgunge under the forwarding note to which I have referred. Both of those lots are stated by the forwarding note to be consigned "to order," and it appears [805] that subsequently notice was received by the Company from the owners or consignees of the second lot to deliver at the Union Press, and it was while the Company were engaged in delivering that lot that the fire occurred in which the other lot covered by the forwarding note, together with the remainder of the jute that was being delivered, was destroyed.

"As regards the goods in suit the Company received no notice to deliver at Juggernath Ghat or elsewhere. I think, therefore, there was no breach of any of the conditions of the contract of carriage by the defendant Company up to the time the flat was moored opposite the Union Press.

"The only remaining question is, whether the loss was occasioned by the negligence or other misconduct of the defendant Company.

"There is no doubt that the onus of showing that the loss was not occasioned by any negligence or other misconduct of the Company or their servants is on the defendant Company, and the way in which they seek to discharge it is by showing what took place immediately before and at the time the fire broke out, and also by showing what precautions had been taken by them for preventing any injury to the goods while in their custody.

"The conclusion to which, it seems to me, one ought to arrive on this question must depend upon the credit which is to be attached to the witnesses who have given their evidence in this case; because, if the story told by them is one which ought to be substantially accepted, I do not think there can be any reasonable doubt that the precautions against injury which a person of ordinary prudence would adopt, had been and were adopted by the defendant Company at the time of the loss. What the evidence shows is not merely that the possibility had been excluded of the fire having originated inside the flat, but it is also shown that steps had been taken which it might reasonably be supposed would have been sufficient to prevent fire from being communicated from the outside.

"I have very carefully considered the evidence of the three witnesses, and I have come to the conclusion that in substance the [806] story they tell is a reliable one, and that they are witnesses who were honestly desirous of telling the truth regarding the occurrences at the time of the fire. All the witnesses were subjected to a searching and able cross-examination; and it appeared to me, both from the demeanour of the witnesses and from various statements elicited in cross-examination which must, I think, have been unpremeditated, and which tended strongly to corroborate their story, that they were speaking from an honest recollection of the events as they happened and certainly were not telling a tutored story.

"There are discrepancies, of course, but I think none other than one would expect to find in the evidence of witnesses called on to relate what they remembered of facts which took place two and a half years ago. The precautionary system adopted by the defendant Company has been criticised in respect of three or four matters. It was said that it was improper to keep the staging up after work had ceased for the night, and thus to keep up communication with the shore; and further that, owing to the proximity of native cargo boats with fires on them, it was improper of the commander of the flat to remain where he was, especially as there was nothing to prevent his proceeding further out into the stream so as to avoid the neighbourhood of these native boats.

"I think on the evidence it would be impossible for me to say that there was any negligence in not adopting either of these precautions. The evidence shows that those in command of the flat, I mean the Captain and the serang and the watchman also, were on the evening in question at least alive to the possibility of danger from the proximity of these cargo boats. It is said that there is a serious discrepancy in the evidence of the Captain and the serang with reference to the fires on board these native cargo boats. There is no question that at the time Captain Duncan made his protest he stated that at 7 o'clock, when he went the round of the flat, he saw no fires or lights on any of these boats. Neither does he refer in his protest to a subsequent round which he says he went at 9 o'clock; but I think his evidence is capable of reasonable explanation, in this way, that in the evidence he gave in Court he was referring to a different time from that referred to in the protest. I think it very possible that at seven he saw no lights or did not remember them at the time he made his protest, but I think [807] it clear that at nine he did see the lights. Both he and the serang recollect the circumstances of the fire for cooking purposes on the dinghy nearest the flat. The Captain says he called to the persons on this dinghy to put out the fire, and that so far as he observed they did not do so. The serang, on the other hand, says that about that time he was sent for by the Captain and requested to communicate with those on the dinghy and to insist on their putting out the fire, and he says he did so and the fire was put out.

"The variance in the two stories is, I think, capable of explanation, having regard to the time which has elapsed since it occurred, and I think probably the Captain recollected what he had to do with the matter but forgot that he subsequently asked the serang to intervene. I think it sufficiently appears on the evidence of both the Captain and the serang that at nine o'clock there were fires, but with the exception of the cooking fire on the dinghy, the others were the lights from oil lamps ordinarily to be seen on the native craft of the sort spoken to by the witnesses, and I think there was nothing in that evidence which ought to have led the Captain as a prudent person to anticipate any actual danger from the proximity of these boats, or to suppose that the precautions adopted against accident were insufficient for the purpose. It is to be remembered, having regard to the circumstances connected with the navigation of the Hooghly, that it is not easy for a Captain of a flat to keep himself constantly clear from the proximity of native boats.

"It is also said that the evidence does not exclude the possibility of there having been coolies who had been working on this flat still remaining on board during the night in question in the space allotted to the cargo; but I think the evidence of the Captain and that of the serang also is opposed to the possibility of there being any coolies remaining on the portion allotted to the cargo after work had ceased for the day; and it must be remembered that there was no suggestion made during the cross-examination of the witnesses that that was the case. If it had then been made, it would have been possible for the defendant Company to address themselves to that point; but I think it would be unreasonable, on the evidence as it stands, for me to say that there is any foundation for the suggestion that there were [808] any coolies occupying the portion of the flat reserved for the cargo on the night of the 6th December. Nor, having regard to the evidence, is there any ground for the suggestion that the pumps were not in proper order, or that they were such as were unsuitable for an emergency such as that which occurred. It was the suddenness of the fire and the rapidity with which it spread which prevented communication between the Captain on the one side of the flat and the crew on the other. The pumps were fitted with a hundred feet of hose, and the Captain and the serang have between them sufficiently explained how it was impossible to make effective use of them. On the whole, therefore, I think that the evidence shows that the loss was not occasioned by any negligence or other misconduct on the part of the defendant Company. I think they adopted such precautions for the protection of the goods committed to their care as were reasonable and proper.

"There is no doubt that since this fire, rules of a still more stringent character have been adopted by the Company for securing the safety of the goods delivered to them for carriage; but I see no grounds for thinking that at the time this fire occurred the Company had any reason to suppose that the system they then adopted was insufficient for the purpose.

"It was only to be expected that further precautions, such as experience might suggest, should afterwards be adopted; but it does not follow that there was negligence on the part of the Company in not having adopted these measures before. I think, therefore, the loss falls within the exemption clause of the special contract, and the result is that the suit must be dismissed with costs on scale No. 2."

From this decision the plaintiffs appealed. The appeal was heard on the 14th, 15th and 16th of December 1896.

Mr. Bonnerjee (with him The Advocate-General, Sir G. C. Paul) for the Appellants.—The special contract on which the defendants rely has no meaning, and certainly not the meaning put upon it by the defendants. It would not be generally understood in the sense in which they use it. There is no evidence to show that it was explained to, or understood by, the person who signed it, and the signature is in Nagri. The defendants have not limited [809] their liability with regard to any particular matter. The exemption here sought to be had is in general terms. There is, therefore, no special contract; and consequently the defendants are liable, whether there was negligence on their part or not.

Next, the duties and liabilities of common carriers are regulated by the common law of England. The Carriers Act does not alter the common law,—Irrawaddy Flotilla Company v. Bugwandass (L. R., 18 I. A., 121: I. L. R., 18 Cal., 620), and does not allow a carrier to contract himself out of liability for his own negligence. And a common carrier, by the Act, can only limit his liability; he cannot get rid of it altogether. Nor can he refuse to take goods without a special contract,— Macnamara on Carriers, pp. 24, 27.

The defendants did not take such care of the goods as a prudent man would take. The cargo was so packed against the bulkheads that in the event of an outbreak of fire, the hose could not be brought out; and when at length it was brought out, it was found to be too short to be of any use. And if a proper watch had been kept, the fire could not have broken out. Another instance of negligence was that the Captain of the flat allowed country cargo-boats with fires in them to lie within a few feet of the flat, though there was a strong breeze blowing. Negligence is defined in a variety of terms in Blyth v Birmingham Waterworks Company (11 Exch., 781); Grill v. General Iron Screw Collier Company (L. R., 1 C. P., 600); and Heaven v. Pender (L. R., 11 Q. B. D., 503); but here all the elements of negligence are present.

Mr. Woodroffe (with him Mr. Hill and Mr. Dunne) for the Respondents.—The duty of the defendants is to show that they acted as a reasonably prudent man would. It is not for them to negative negligence; but they must show that it was not their negligence that led to the loss. The defendants must take reasonable care of the goods entrusted to their charge—Greenland v. Chaplin (5 Exch., 243). But they are not called upon to account for the fire. They are required to take precautions to prevent a fire from occurring; they are not required to take the very best steps that may be suggested to put out a fire which they never anticipated, and which they did their best to prevent.

[810] If the forwarding note were meaningless, it would not have been necessary to go into evidence at all. But the plaintiffs themselves did not take that view, for they adduced evidence. The very making of this contract shows that the defendants were not accepting the goods on the responsibility of common carriers.

Mr. Hill (on the same side).—The Carriers Act does impose a liability on carriers, and this contract was made for the express purpose of limiting that liability. The tendency of the Court should be to give to the forwarding note a construction that would not render it devoid of efficacy.

No issue was raised at the trial as to the plaintiffs having entered into this special contract, nor was any evidence given that they did not understand it; nor have they made it a ground of appeal.

It may be, moreover, that the defendants themselves do not know the cause of the fire; it may be impossible for them to ascertain it. But if the evidence is consistent with due care on their part, they have discharged the onus that is on them. That was the ratio decidendi in the case of the Central Cachar Tea Company v. The Rivers Steam Navigation Company (ante, p. 787 note).

Even as regards the boats, the nearest of them was five feet away from the flat; and the wind blew in such a way as not to convey the sparks to the flat. The Captain could only request the boatmen to move away, and he did so. Again, the very precautions taken for the purpose of preventing a fire rendered it more difficult to put out a fire occurring in spite of all precautions. But that fact must not be taken against the defendants.

The precautions required and the measures to be adopted need not be the very best that can be devised; it is sufficient if they are such as a man of ordinary prudence would take, and such as it is reasonable to require without undue inconvenience to the defendants---Fremantle v. The London and North Western Railway Company (2 F. & F., 337); Dimmock v. North Staffordshire Railway Company [4 F. & F., 1058 (1063)]; Scott v. London and St. Katherine Docks Company (3 H. & C., 596).

Mr. Bonnerjee in reply.

C. A. V.

[811] The following judgments were delivered :—

Maclean, C.J.—The plaintiffs are merchants carrying on business at Calcutta and Serajgunge, the defendants are common carriers. Early in November 1893 the plaintiffs delivered to the defendants 432 drums of jute for carriage to Calcutta. The freight was duly paid and the goods were delivered on board the flat Khyber, which arrived in Calcutta about the 17th November 1893. The goods were carried under the terms of an agreement contained in a forwarding note, dated the 14th October 1893. On the 7th December about midnight a fire broke out on the flat, which was then moored in the stream, about 40 feet from the shore, and connected with the shore by a staging which had been erected by the servants of the defendant Company and used for the purpose of discharging the cargo. The construction of the flat is accurately described by the learned Judge in his judgment in the Court below. I need not repeat what he says.

The plaintiffs' jute was destroyed by the fire, and the question arises upon whom the loss is to fall.

Upon this, two questions arise --First, whether, under the terms of the forwarding note, the defendants are exempted from liability, save for negligence or the criminal acts of themselves or their servants, and, secondly, assuming that point in the defendants' favour, whether they have shown that there was no negligence on their part. The first question depends upon the construction of the forwarding note. The plaintiffs contend that it does not relieve the defendants from their ordinary liability as common carriers, that is, the liability of insurers, whilst the defendants, on the other hand, say that the forwarding note limits their liability in the manner provided by the Indian Carriers Act of 1865, and exempts them from all liability except such as under that Act they are prevented from contracting themselves out of. It is conceded by the defendants that the only clause in the document which can relieve them from their liability as insurers is clause 7.

In the view which I take of the second question in this case, it is unnecessary to decide the first, though I feel constrained to add that, having regard to the nature of the contract, one in [812] which the carrier seeks to limit his common law liablity, and to the clear and definite language used, I entertain a serious doubt whether the view of Mr. Justice SALE on the point be correct.

I merely confine myself to saying that that construction cannot be arrived at without doing violence to the language used—language which, read in its ordinary meaning and signification, appears to me to be clear and precise, and used in a clause which is quite consistent with the other clauses of the document, and that the effect of that construction is to import into the contract words which are not there, and to place a forced and unnatural construction upon the words which are there.

Assuming, then, in the defendants' favour that the true construction of the forwarding note is such as they contend for, the remaining question is whether the defendants have discharged the onus which is undoubtedly and admittedly cast upon them of showing that there was no negligence on their part.

Negligence has been defined by Mr. Baron ALDERSON in Blyth v. Birmingham Water Works Company [11 Exch.,781 (784)] in the following terms: "Negligence is the omission to do something which a reasonable man, guided upon those considerations which ordinarily regulate the conduct of human affairs would do, or doing something which a prudent and reasonable man would not do;" and this definition has been subsequently adopted by other Judges.

In the present case, no evidence has been adduced except by the defendants; the plaintiffs apparently could adduce none.

In applying to this case the principle laid down by Baron ALDERSON, it becomes necessary to ascertain, if possible, how the fire originated, and what precaution the defendants had taken to provide against fire, and for extinguishing it. The theory, as to the origin of the fire, put forward by the Captain of the flat and his serang, is that the fire was caused by a spark from the fire in the small native boats which were close to the flat and between it and the shore, from which direction the wind was blowing. This view, however, is not accepted by the respondent's Counsel at the Bar. Looking to the hour at which the fire occurred, to the time when, according to the serang's evidence (between whose evidence [813] and the Captain's there is some discrepancy on this point, the Captain saying that when he turned in at 9 P.M the fires in the native boats were still burning, and the serang saying that they were all then out), the fires in the native boats were out, to the fact of the purdahs on the flat being made of thick canvas, and to the month of the year, when there would likely be a heavy dew on the purdahs, I think it is extremely improbable that the fire so originated. If this view be correct, and it not being suggested that the fire arose from the intervention of any natural agency, for example lightning, the inference is irresistible that it arose within, and was caused from within, the flat itself. If that be so, the question arises whether the mere occurrence of the fire, arising as I think it must be taken to have arisen, from some cause within the flat, which was under the management and control of the defendants or their servants, is, in the absence of explanation by the defendants, per se evidence of negligence. So far as the cases cited before us show, there is no very express authority upon the point; though in the case of Scott v. The London and St. Katherine's Dock Company [3 H. & C., 596 (601)], Chief Justice ERLE says: "When the thing is shown to be under the management of the defendant or his servants, and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendants, that the accident arose from want of care." No doubt, those words were used with reference to an accident different and arising under circumstances different from the present case. If there be no evidence as to the origin of the fire, and no explanation afforded by the defendants, can they be said to have discharged the onus which is admittedly cast upon them of disproving negligence? The defendants contend that if they lay all the evidence they can before the Court, it is for the Court to say whether they had discharged the onus, and reliance was placed on the case of the Central Cachar Tea Company v. The Rivers Steam Navigation Company (ante, p. 787 note) which was decided by this Court on the 4th March 1896, but is not reported. That case, however, decides no question of law applicable to the present: it only [814] decided, first, that there was a special contract, as to which there could have been no reasonable doubt; and, secondly, upon the facts, that negligence was disproved.

The plaintiffs say that not only have the defendants not disproved negligence, but upon their own showing they have been guilty of it. They say that the Captain did not, under the circumstances, take those precautions which a reasonable man, in the position in which he was, would take and ought to have taken. They contend that the appliances for extinguishing fire were absolutely ineffective, and that the watch was insufficient, and that the watchman, an old lascar, upon his own showing, was not doing his duty.

In all cases the amount of care to be taken must be proportionate to the degree of risk likely to be run. Applying that principle to the present case, we find that the cargo was admittedly of a very inflammable nature; and, in my opinion, having regard to the nature of the cargo, the defendants ought to have had at hand at all times proper and effective appliances for extinguishing the fire, should one accidentally arise.

I now come to a consideration of the evidence. There is a discrepancy of some importance in what the Captain stated in his protest and in his subsequent evidence: in the former he says nothing about going on deck at 9 P.M. and seeing the fire in the native boats, some five or ten of which were between the flat and the shore. It is certainly matter for comment that he should have said nothing about this in his protest. But I will take his evidence. He says that he went round the flat at 5-30 P.M. to see if everything was right, and to rig the two pumps, one aft and one forward, which he says he did. One pump is forward of the forward bulkhead and the after pump is abaft the after bulkhead. He says he locked the sliding doors of the bulkheads, that all the fires on the flat were out at 7 P.M., and that everything was then all right. He came up again at 9 o'clock, and he says that all the cargo boats had their fires, and that when he went to bed at 9 o'clock they all had fires. This is not consistent with what the serang tells us. He speaks as if there were then but one fire, which, upon his remonstrance, was put out. The Captain was [815] evidently anxious about the proximity of the fires in the native cargo boats. This is clear from the serang's evidence at pages 64 and 65 of the Paper Book. He says: "It was because the fire on the dinghy was dangerous to the flat that the Captain sent for me. Yes, the Captain did speak to me about the danger. At first when I went up to the Captain, the Captain said to me I was not taking proper care. He abused me and said, "There is fire in the dinghy close by. Go and tell the people to put the fire out. Our flat may catch fire."

The Captain thought there was danger from these fires; his attention was directly called to the risk. Under these circumstances, I think, a prudent man would have made a point of seeing that the pumps on his flat were in a really workable condition. The Captain, however, did nothing, but went to bed.

The fire broke out about 12-30. An old lascar, named Tamizuddin, was the watchman on the starboard side and he came on watch at 12. One Omed

Ali was on the watch on the port side, but owing to ill-health he could not be called. His absence from the witness box is, to say the least, unfortunate. According to Tamizuddin's statement all was well when he came on watch: he came on watch as he tells us, amongst other duties, to guard against fire. He went forward and was looking at the anchor to which some jungle had stuck for some 7 or 8 minutes and then he saw the glare of the fire. He tells us that if he had noticed the fire in time he could have put it out, and the Captain also tells us that when he first saw it, it was not very big. If Tamizuddin had been moving backwards and forwards along the covering board, instead of standing and looking for 7 or 8 minutes at the anchor, for which there could apparently be no necessity, he would, according to his own showing, have seen the fire as soon as it originated when, as he says, he could have put it out. This, I think, is what he means by his evidence that if he had seen it at first he could have put it out. It is not very easy to determine from this witness's evidence whether, at this hour, there were fires in the native cargo boats. He speaks of lights and fires rather indiscriminately: but, as the result of his evidence, I think he means there were lights and not fires.

When he saw the fire he shouted out to Omed Ali and to the [816] Captain, and then went along the covering board on the port side to the stern, and poured water on the burning jute from buckets, and then he makes the significant statement that they tried to put the fire out with the pumps, but the hose did not reach the place where the fire was. In other words the hose was too short. The vessel was about 270 feet long and the place between the bulkheads was about 225 feet. The pumps being behind the bulkheads, each pump ought, in order to command the whole of the cargo space in the event of fire, to have had about 110 feet of hose. There is no evidence what the length of hose was, but it was admittedly not long enough. This is what the Captain says about the pumps at p. 49: "I could not do anything with the pumps single-handed. The pumps were all ready to work in a moment. The pumps would have been of use at the commencement of the fire, that is when the fire was first seen. If both pumps had been in the same place and well worked, they may have put the fire out when I first saw it. But as placed where they were, I don't think they would have been sufficient from where they were. They required 100 feet of hose to each pump." And at p. 56 he says: "No attempt was made by the crew to use the pumps. The pumps would have been of use when the fire was first seen. It had been burning not very long, 2 or 3 minutes."

It appears from this that the pump at the fore part of the flat was useless as there were no men there to work it, and the Captain could not work it single-handed; that in the Captain's view the pumps ought to have been together, and, if so, and properly worked, they probably would have put the fire out, and that the hose was too short. A prudent man, in my opinion, especially when his attention had been so markedly drawn to the danger of fire only a few hours before, would not have left the pumps in practically a useless condition.

The serang's evidence is important. He says at p. 62: "We began to pour in water with the buckets. We did nothing else. Yes, there was a pump on board. There were two pumps, one on the fore part of the vessel and the other on the after part. There was no room for working the pump,"—this, I think, must mean the pump in the after part of the flat—[817] "because the coolies had taken up cargo from the holds and the deck was jammed with the cargo. The throwing of water with the buckets did no good. We did nothing else" At page 63 he says: "The cargo inside was right up to these bulkhead doors. Yes, the doorway was completely blocked up in front of the door from the doorway to the roof. At page 65 he says: "The aft pump which we could not work was situate aft of the aft bulkhead. The whole of the deck was covered with cargo. We have not 100 feet of hose attached to that pump. There were no goods about the pump, but there was the bulkhead against the pump and jute against the bulkhead, so we could not carry in water through the bulkhead and the cargo. The pumps are fixed pumps. They could be removed; they were not permanently fixed. The fire was spreading inside where the cargo was, and it was not possible to pump in water by carrying the hose along the covering board. We tried to work the pump, but we found the hose could not carry the water to where the fire was. We could not remove our boat because there was this staging right over our boat."

That, virtually, is the whole story, and it comes to this: that the pumps were absolutely useless. The aft pump could not be worked through the aft bulkhead doors, because the door was jammed up by the jute which was piled up on the deck; the pump in the fore part could not be worked because the Captain was single-handed and the hose was too short, neither pump could be worked along the covering board because the hose was too short, and it could not be worked from the small boat because the staging was over it, and the boat could not be made available.

Consequently, the appliances for putting out fire were obviously insufficient and ineffective. The Captain must have known this, or any way ought to have known it. It appears to me that any reasonable man, with the danger of fire brought so immediately to his attention as it had been on the night in question, and having regard to the combustible nature of the cargo, would have taken every precaution to see that the pumps were in effective working order. Had they been in proper working order, it is a fair inference to be drawn from the evidence put in by the defendants that the fire in all reasonable probability would have [818] been put out when the Captain first saw it, in which case the loss probably would not have occurred. In my opinion the mere occurrence of the fire, under circumstances such as the present, is evidence of negligence, the flat being under the management of the defendants' servants, and there being no evidence adduced by them to show how the fire originated, and no explanation afforded,--I say no explanation afforded because the suggestion that the fire originated from a spark outside has been abandoned at the bar. Furthermore, the ineffective condition of the appliances on board the flat for extinguishing fire satisfies me that those precautions which an ordinarily prudent man would adopt were not taken by the defendants' servants, and this neglect appears to me to amount to negligence

The defendants, therefore, have not discharged the onus cast upon them by law of showing that there was no negligence, and that being so, the plaintiff is entitled to recover, with costs here and in the Court below. The appeal must be allowed.

Macpherson, J.—If it was necessary to decide whether there was a special contract limiting the liability of the respondent, I should not be disposed to dissent from the construction which Mr. Justice SALE has put upon the 7th clause of the forwarding note. That clause, which must have been intended by the parties to have some meaning, purports to exonerate the Company from any liability with an exception which is broadly but vaguely stated. The intention to be gathered from it is, I think, the intention to limit the Company's liability to the extent allowed by the law then in force, viz., the Carriers Act, although this Act is not specially mentioned.

It may be true that that Act did not subject common carriers to any new liability, although the preamble purports to declare their liability for loss occasioned by the negligence or criminal acts of themselves, their servants or agents. But the Act, while enabling them to limit their liability by special contract, declared that notwithstanding such contract they should still be liable when the loss arose from the negligence or criminal acts of themselves, their servants or agents.

The excepted liability in the 7th clause may, I think, fairly be taken to be the liability there referred to, viz., the liability [819] for negligence, etc.; otherwise the clause has, as Mr. Justice SALE points out, no meaning at all.

It is said that the clause was not explained to the appellant who did not understand it in that sense. No such question was raised before Mr. Justice SALE, and cannot for the first time be raised here. The only question raised was as to the construction of the clause.

But whether there was or was not a special contract, the respondents have, I consider, failed to clear themselves of negligence. The effect of the 9th section of the Carriers Act is to make the loss of the goods evidence of negligence which the carrier must displace. The plaintiff is not required to give any evidence of negligence, and the carrier must account for the loss in such a way as to get rid of the presumption of negligence arising from it.

The respondents account for the loss of the goods by shewing that they were destroyed by fire, but they do not, in any way, account for the fire. They in effect say: "We cannot account for the fire, but as we took and have shown that we took all proper precautions to prevent such an occurrence, it cannot be attributed to any negligence on our part." The answer, I think, is that the fire occurred at a time and under circumstances which, in the absence of any explanation as to its origin, negative the existence of proper precautions, and that it is therefore in itself evidence of negligence of which the respondents must clear themselves. The facts as disclosed are that the flat, which was in the course of being unloaded, was exclusively in charge of the respondents' servants; and the unloaded portion of the cargo, consisting of drums of jute, was for the most part stowed on deck. Soon after midnight, hours after work had ceased, either the jute on the starboard side of the deck about amidships, or the outside canvas purdah in the immediate vicinity of that jute, it is not clear which, took fire, with the result that the cargo was destroyed.

The Captain of the flat suggested that the fire came from outside, and that a spark from a boat near at hand ignited the canvas purdah. This suggestion is not adopted by respondents' [820] Counsel in this Court, and there is no real foundation for it. I do not believe that the fire was so caused, or that the canvas purdah took fire in the first instance. If it was so caused, I should be disposed on the evidence to hold that there was negligence, and that with a proper look-out it might and should have been extinguished. The mere fact that there was a fire near at hand from which sparks might come made it necessary to take extra precautions and use extra vigilance, and the Captain was fully aware of this.

The only other alternative is that the fire originated on the flat; and it is, I think, for the respondents to account for it. They are the only persons who can do so. It is their case that there were not and had not been for hours previously any fires or lights on board the flat from which the jute or purdah could have become ignited; that the part of the deck where the fire occurred was completely shut off from the rest of the deck; and that no one, whether belonging to the crew or from outside, had access to it.

The evidence on the latter point is certainly not exhaustive, and I am not satisfied that no one had access there. The only watchman who has been examined is the man who went on watch on the starboard side shortly before the fire broke out, and we know little of what happened on the port side or in the previous watches. If all the precautions said to have been taken had been taken, it is almost impossible that this fire could have occurred, and that there should have been no explanation of it.

This is not a case in which the Court can point to some particular act or omission in connection with the fire, and say that it amounts to negligence,—and for this reason, that the facts are not fully before the Court, the cause of the fire being unexplained. Great stress has been placed upon the statement of the late Chief Justice in the case of the Central Cachar Tea Company v. The Rivers Steam Navigation Company (ante, p. 787 note) that "when the parties have placed all the evidence on which they rely before the Court, it is for the Court to say upon that evidence whether or not the loss was caused by the negligence of the carriers or their servants." That was a case of a very different kind. There all the facts were fully before the Court, and the Court was in a position to say upon [821] those facts that there was no negligence. What the Chief Justice said had reference, I think, only to the particular circumstances of the case before him.

Treating the fire as evidence of negligence, that evidence has not in my opinion been displaced.

I also agree with the learned Chief Justice for the reasons which he has given that the appliances for extinguishing a fire were ineffectual and insufficient. The appeal must, therefore, succeed.

Trevelyan, J.—The two questions in this case are, first, what is the meaning (if any) of the 7th clause of the forwarding note? and, second, if the construction put upon that paragraph is correct, are the defendants under the circumstances of this case liable for the loss of the jute? As to the first question I am not prepared to differ from the views expressed by Mr. Justice SALE in this case and by Mr. Justice HILL in the case of the Central Cachar Tea Company v. The Rivers Steam Navigation Company (unreported).

The construction which they have adopted seems to me to be the only one which can give any effect to the paragraph in question.

The construction suggested by the appellant is one which renders the paragraph completely nugatory. It can never have been intended by this elaborate paragraph to inform the consignor that the Company's liability was co-extensive with that of other carriers who did not make special contracts. By this paragraph the Company must have intended to guard itself from any liability out of which the law permitted it to contract itself.

It may be, as Mr. Bonnerjee says, that it would be exceedingly difficult to translate this paragraph intelligibly into any vernacular language; but the defendant did not in the original Court deny his understanding of the contract, and no issue which would include this question has been framed The only issue on the subject of the contract is as follows: "Whether, assuming that loss was not due to negligence or misconduct of the defendant Company, is the defendant Company, under the terms of the forwarding note, protected from such liability and loss." This issue [822] only raises the question of the construction of the forwarding note. It is, therefore, necessary to consider the second question.

On this question I have no doubt that under the law it is for the defendant to disprove negligence; that is, to show a state of facts which are inconsistent with negligence on their part.

Section 9 of the Carriers Act provides "that in any suit brought against a common carrier for the loss, damage, or non-delivery of goods entrusted to him for carriage, it shall not be necessary for the plaintiff to prove that such loss, damage, or non-delivery was owing to the negligence or criminal act of the carrier, his servants or agents." In other words, the loss of the goods is primâ facie evidence of the negligence or criminal act of the carrier, his servants or agents, and, therefore, if the carrier seeks to exempt himself from liability, he must negative such primâ facie evidence, that is to say, he must prove that the loss was or must have been occasioned otherwise than by the negligence or criminal act of himself, his servants or agents. It is contended that the late Chief Justice's judgment in the Central Cachar Tea Company v. The Rivers Steam Navigation Company (ante, p. 787 note) has placed a different interpretation upon the law. I am not prepared to say it has. In that case all the facts were apparent; the loss of the ship was caused by an impediment to the navigation, and the only question was whether the Captain was negligent in not avoiding that impediment. Of course, if all the facts are before the Court, and there is nothing to discover or disclose, then the Court has on those facts to say whether there is negligence. But here there is really nothing to show what the cause of the fire was; we can only guess at it.

It remains to be seen whether in this case the defendant Company has disproved negligence, or has placed before the Court a state of facts which is inconsistent with negligence or a criminal act.

They have not really attempted to shew how the fire arose. There is no doubt that in the Court below the defendants put forward the theory that the cargo must have been ignited by a spark coming from the neighbouring boats. This theory has [823] been repudiated by the learned Counsel who represented the Company before us. There is no doubt that it is one which will not bear investigation.

According to the story for the defence there was a thick curtain completely protecting the cargo on the east side of the flat. A spark from one of the fires in the boats, even if there was any fire alight at that time of night, could not have ignited the purdah or the cargo. If it did so, the look-out man, if he was on the watch, must have seen it happening. The defendants' evidence, if it is to be believed, makes it quite clear that the fire could not have originated from outside, at any rate from the shore side. The precautions which are said to have been taken would have been sufficient to ward off the catastrophe.

It being clear from the defendants' own case that the fire could not have originated from the cargo boats or the shore, the only alternative is that the fire owed its origin to the act or negligence of some one on board either the flat itself or the Hafjan. It cannot have arisen from any fire on board of the Hafjan as the wind was blowing off the shore and the fire broke out on the shore side of the Khyber. Even if the fire did break out in consequence of something done by some one on board the Hafjan, the defendants would be responsible. To my mind the evidence shows that the fire must have been started by the design of, or by an accident happening to, some one on board the Khyber. On the evidence I can conceive no other possibility.

The only persons on the Khyber were the servants and agents of the defendant Company. The Company is responsible for their acts.

Having regard to the fact that the fire must have commenced on the Khyber, and that the Khyber was in sole occupation of the defendant Company, I am prepared to go so far as to say that it was the duty of the defendant

Company to prove how it broke out. I do not, for a moment, believe that every man who was then on board that flat is ignorant as to the cause of the fire. Learned Counsel for the appellants suggests that the fire came from outside, i.e., from the adjoining cargo boats. If he is right as to this the defence cannot be accepted.

[824] If these fires on the boats were a source of danger, additional precautions should have been taken, and the watch should have been strengthened. Learned Counsel for the respondents also asserts that the fire came from outside, but he is unable to show us how it so came.

To my mind the defendant Company has omitted to prove any facts which can throw any light whatever upon the origin of this fire.

It seems to me that evidence as to precautions against fire is worth very little, unless it be combined with evidence to show that the fire in question was of a kind which one might reasonably have expected to be avoided by the particular precautions. Lastly I think that the evidence shews that the means provided on this flat for extinguishing fire were wholly inadequate to the occasions which might be expected to arise. As far as I can make out from the evidence, a fire in the Captain's cabin or in the quarters occupied by the crew might have been extinguished by the means available if discovered in time. But very little else could have been done. The actual length of the hose has not been proved, but it was obviously of little practical use to put out a fire in the centre of the ship. I quite realise that elaborate contrivances for the extinction of the fire might, to some extent, impede the operations of loading and discharging cargo; but if a carrier, in order to facilitate his business, omits to provide sufficient apparatus to extinguish fire in all parts of his ship, it can scarcely be said that he has taken reasonable precautions against fire.

I would allow the appeal, order an enquiry as to the damages, and give the plaintiffs their costs in both Courts.

[826] The judgment of the High Court (Maclean, C J, and Banerjee, J.) was as follows —

This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff (appellant) for declaration of his title to, and for confirmation of his possession of, an eight annas share of a certain jote, on the allegation that the said share, which *Appeal from Appellate Decree No 803 of 1895 against the decree of B C. Mittra, Esq, District Judge of Faridpore, dated the 30th of January 1895, affirming the decree of Babu Beni Madhub Roy, Munsif of Goalundo, dated the 28th of December 1892.

† [Sec 53 —Every transfer of immoveable property, made with intent to defraud prior or subsequent transferees thereof for consideration, or co-owners or other persons having an interest in such property, or to defeat or delay the creditors of the transferor, is voidable at the option of any person so defrauded, defeated or delayed

Fraudulent transfer

Where the effect of any transfer of immoveable property is to defraud, defeat or delay any such person, and such transfer is made gratuitously or for a grossly inadequate consideration, the transfer may be presumed to have been made with such intent as aforesaid.

Nothing contained in this section shall impair the rights of any transferee in good faith and for consideration] belonged originally to defendants Nos. 5 and 6, was purchased by the plaintiff from these defendants for Rs. 1,000 on the 18th Pous 1297, (1st January 1891), under a registered deed of sale; that defendant No. 4 having, in execution of a decree held by him against defendants 5 and 6, attached the said share, the plaintiff preferred a claim, but the same was disallowed; and that the property was sold in execution of the decree of defendant No. 4 and purchased by defendants Nos. 1 to 3 on the 21st March 1891. Two other persons were made defendants in the case, but subsequently, at the plaintiff's instance, their names were removed from the record.

The suit was defended by defendants Nos. 1 to 4, and their defence, so far as it is necessary to be considered for the purposes of the present appeal, was a denial of the plaintiff's purchase as a real and bonâ fide transaction.

The first Court found that the purchase of the plaintiff was not a real and bonâ fide transaction, but was merely a nominal one, resorted to with the object of defeating the claim of defendant No. 4, and it accordingly dismissed the suit.

On appeal by the plaintiff, the Lower Appellate Court has found that the plaintiff purchased the property, but not in good faith, and it has accordingly affirmed the decree of the first Court, dismissing the suit. In second appeal it is contended for the plaintiff that the decision of the Lower Appellate Court is wrong in law, because the mere circumstance of the plaintiff having been aware of the fact that the defendant No. 4 had taken out or was going to take out execution against defendants Nos. 5 and 6 was not sufficient to make his purchase one not in good faith, as the Lower Appellate Court has held. It is further contended that the only thing necessary to constitute a purchase in good faith was that the purchase should be real and for value, and a real purchase for value, even if it was with the object of defeating or delaying [827] creditors, would still be a purchase in good faith and entitled to be upheld; and in support of this contention the cases of Wood v. Dixie (7 Q. B., 892), Hale v. Saloon Omnibus Co. (4 Drew., 492), Rambuxun Singh v. Jankee Sahoo (22 W. R., 473), Sankarappa v. Kamayya (3 Mad H. C., 231), Suba Bibi v. Balgobind Das (I. L. R., 8 All, 178), and Sekharam Mahipat v. Dawud Valad Jawabhai (I. L R., 4 Bom., 76 note) are relied upon.

On the other hand, it has been argued for the respondents that the question of good faith is a question of fact, and the Lower Appellate Court having found that the purchase of the plaintiff was not in good faith, it is not open to this Court to interfere with its judgment in second appeal, and in support of this argument the case of Durga Chowdhrani v. Jewahir Singh Chowdhri (I. L. R., 18 Cal., 23: L. R., 17 I. A., 122) is referred to.

Now, the validity of the purchase under which the plaintiff claims is to be determined with reference to section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, which enacts that "every transfer of immoveable property" (we are only quoting so much of the section as is applicable to the present case) "made with intent to defeat or delay the creditors of the transferor is voidable at the option of any person so defeated or delayed." And then, after laying down a rule of evidence, the section further proceeds: "Nothing in this section shall impair the rights of any transferee in good faith and for consideration."

Reading this section as a whole then, what it means, so far as it is applicable to a case like the present, is this,—that where a transfer of immoveable property is made with intent to defeat or delay any creditor of the transferor it is voidable at his option; but where a transferee for value takes the property in good faith, that is without being a party to any design on the part of the transferor to defeat or delay his creditors, his rights shall not be impaired by anything contained in this section.

The words "good faith" have not been defined in the Act; nor is there any definition of the expression in the General Clauses Act of [828] 1868, which was in force when the Transfer of Property Act was passed.

But a consideration of the section, taken as a whole, leads us to the view we have taken, that the object of the last paragraph of section 53 is to protect an innocent transferee for value, notwithstanding that the transferor may be actuated by a desire to defeat or delay his creditors. But there arises a further question,—whether, where a transferee for value has knowledge of an impending execution against the transferor, such knowledge itself is sufficient to vitiate the transfer and make it one not in good faith, notwithstanding that the transferee may not be aware of any intention on the part of the transferor to defeat or delay his creditors, and notwithstanding that he may honestly believe that the sale is resorted to for the purpose of paying the creditors. We are of opinion that mere knowledge of an impending execution against a transferor is not sufficient to make the transferee a transferee otherwise than in good faith, when he does not share the intention of the transferor to defeat or delay his creditors.

This view is fully supported not only by reason but also by authority: see the case of Ramburun Singh v. Jankee Sahoo (22 W. R., 473). We are not prepared, however, to accept as correct the extreme contention urged on behalf of the appellant, that all that was necessary to constitute a transferee in good faith within the meaning of section 53 was that the transfer should be real, and that, although the transferee might share the intention of the transferor to defeat or delay creditors, he would still be a transferee in good faith. It cannot be said that the transferee for value who accepts the transfer for the purpose of helping the transferor to convert his immoveable property into money which can easily be concealed and kept out of the reach of his creditors, and thus defeat or delay the creditors, is a transferee in good faith within the meaning of section 53. We do not think that the cases cited support this view. They are cases under 13 Elizabeth, c. 5; and though that Statute forms in part the groundwork of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, its language is different, and the Indian law goes much further than [829] the English Statute. In the case of Wood v. Dixie (7 Q. B., 892) it was held that a transfer of property for good consideration was not void merely because it was made with intent to defeat the expected execution of a judgment creditor; and the same view was taken in the case of Hale v. Saloon Omnibus Co. (4 Drew., 492); but they do not go so far as the appellant's contention goes. Indeed, it would almost be a contradiction in terms to say that a transferee for value, who takes the transfer with the intention of helping the transferor to convert his immoveable property into money which can easily be concealed, and thus to defeat or delay his creditors, should nevertheless be treated as a transferee in good faith, and the transfer to him should be upheld though section 53 says that a transfer made with such intention is voidable at the option of the creditors. Where the transferee is a creditor of the transferor and accepts the transfer in satisfaction of the debt due to him, though with the knowledge that his doing so has the effect of defeating other creditors of the transferor the transfer may come within the last paragraph of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. But that is not the case before us, and it is unnecessary to say more on this point.

There arises then the question whether the Court of Appeal below has come to a finding that the purchase of the plaintiff was not in good faith, so as to preclude this Court from interfering in second appeal. No doubt, if the Lower Appellate Court has found upon the evidence that the plaintiff was not only aware of the impending execution of decree against his vendors but also shared the intention of his vendors to defeat or delay that execution, the finding would be unassailable in second appeal. But if, after having found that the intention of the vendors was to defeat or delay their creditors, and that the plaintiff was only aware of an impending execution against the vendors and nothing more, the Lower Appellate Court has come to the conclusion that the plaintiff's purchase was one not in good faith, then that conclusion is an inference based upon this view of law, that mere knowledge on the part of the transferee that there is an impending execution, coupled with an intention on the part of the transferor to defeat or delay his creditors—an intention not known to [830] the transferee—necessarily makes the purchase one other than in good faith—a view of the law which, as we have shown above, is erroneous. And, if that be so, the judgment is open to question in second appeal.

In support of this view we may refer to the cases of Lachmeswar Singh v. Manowar Hossein (I. L. R., 19 Cal., 253 : L. R., 19 I. A., 48) and Ram Gopal v. Shamskhaton (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 93 : L. R., 19 I. A., 228).

Now, as we understand the judgment of the learned Judge below, he has not come to any finding that the plaintiff shared the intention of defendants Nos. 5 and 6 to defeat or delay their creditors; but he has come to the conclusion that the plaintiff's purchase was not in good faith, because he found that the plaintiff was aware of the impending execution of decree against defendants Nos. 5 and 6 by defendant No. 4, and of that alone. But, as we have said above, such knowledge may be consistent with good faith in the plaintiff, and the purchase by the plaintiff will not be vitiated on the ground of bad faith, unless it can be clearly proved that the purchaser was a party to a design of his vendors to defeat or delay their creditors. We should add that we do not think that the learned Judge below was right in importing into section 53 the definition of constructive notice given in section 3 of the Act.

In this view it becomes necessary to remand the case to the Lower Appellate Court, in order that it may determine the question whether the plaintiff purchased the property in dispute from defendants Nos. 5 and 6 with the object of enabling them to defeat or delay their creditor, the defendant No. 4, or with the knowledge that they intended to do so.

If it come to an affirmative finding on that question, the suit must be dismissed. If it come to a negative finding the plaintiff will be entitled to a decree.

Costs will abide the result.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY AND MR. JUSTICE HILL.

Ishan Chunder Hazra and others............Plaintiffs

Rameswar Mondol and others............Defendants.*

Ejectment, Suit for—Suit against several defendants—Cause of action.

In a suit for ejectment against several defendants who set up various titles to different parts of the land claimed there is only one cause of action, not several distinct and separate causes of action.

So held, setting aside the decree of the District Judge who had dismissed the suit for misjoinder of causes of action.

THIS was a suit in ejectment by the plaintiffs as reversioners of one Brahmamayi Debi. The defendants set up their respective titles to different plots of the land by purchase from Brahmamayi Debi. The Munsif decreed the suit in part; but on appeal to the District Judge, the judgment and decree were set aside on the sole ground that there were distinct and separate causes of action, and that the suit was bad for misjoinder of them. The plaintiffs appealed.

Babu Nolini Ranjan Chatterjee, for the Appellants, having opened the appeal, the Court called upon Babu Harendro Narain Mitter, who appeared for the Respondents.

He argued that as there was no evidence of combination among the defendants, and as the land was claimed by the defendants under distinct titles, the suit was bad for multifariousness. [O'KINEALY, J.—The decisions in Vasudeva Shanbhaga v. Kuleadi Narnapai (7 Mad. H. C, 290) and Mahomed v. Krishnan (I. L. R, 11 Mad, 106) are against you]. It had been held, in a similar case, that the plaintiff should elect which of the defendants he would proceed against—Narsingh Das v. Mangal Dubey (I. L. R., 5 All., 163); Ram Narain Dut v. Annoda Prosad Joshi [I. L. R., 14 Cal., 681 (687).]

The judgment of the Court (O'Kinealy and Hill, JJ.) was as follows:—

In this case the plaintiffs sued on the ground that they were reversioners on the death of one Brahmamayi Debi for the possession of land, in other words, in ejectment. The cause of action, namely, what the plaintiffs were bound to prove in order to succeed, was that they were the reversioners of Brahmamayi in regard to this property, and that the claim was not barred by limitation. The defendants then could raise any answer they thought fit to get rid of the claim; but the cause of action was one. Even in England, in an action in ejectment, all the parties in possession are joined. We think, therefore, that the decision of the Court below is wrong; and, setting it aside, we remand the case to the lower Court for trial on its merits. Costs to abide the result.

Specific Performance—Joint contractees—Right of one contractee to specific performance against the wish of the others—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), section 16.

Under a single contract to convey land to several persons it is not open to some of the joint contractees to enforce specific performance of the contract if the other contractees refuse to have specific performance

THE defendant No 1 purchased, at an auction sale, certain lands belonging to the other defendants and the plaintiffs. He subsequently agreed to execute separate re-conveyances in favour [833] of each co owner, upon receiving Rs. 500 in addition to the price he had paid for the lands.

The plaintiffs desired performance of the contract ; but the other co-owners did not, and they refused to join the plaintiffs in a suit against the contractor. The plaintiffs accordingly made them defendants.

The Subordinate Judge decreed the suit, and his decision was upheld on appeal to the District Judge

The defendant No. 1 (the contractor) appealed.

Mr. Khundkar and Babu Haro Chunder Chukerbutty appeared for the appellant, and argued that the contract was not one, but many, that the suit was bad for multifariousness, and that, as some of the contractees did not desire specific performance, the suit ought not to have been decreed.

Moulvi Mahomed Mustafa Khan (with him Dr. Rash Behari Ghose) contended that the contract was severable, and that the case fell within section 16 of the Specific Relief Act. If one joint landlord refuse to join the others in a suit for rent, they may sue alone, and the same principle should be applied to the present case.

C A. V.

The judgment of the Court (O'Kinealy and Hill, JJ.) was as follows:—

The defendant No. 1, the appellant, made a joint contract with several persons that, "on receipt of Rs. 500 as profit in addition to the price paid by him for the property," he would execute separate documents in favour of each person.

Some of the parties who entered into that contract with the defendant No. 1 claim specific performance of the contract, making the others, who refused to have the contract performed, defendants.

The question, therefore, is, can some of the parties to a single contract enforce specific performance against their adversary and the other persons who are defendants?

We think, on principle, that they cannot, and that in a suit for the performance of a single contract the parties on each side must be marshalled as plaintiffs and defendants. We therefore decree the appeal, and dismiss the suit with costs in all the Courts.

H. W. Appeal allowed.

[On appeal from the High Court at Calcutta.]

Hindu Law—Will—Construction of Will—Mitakshara family—Principles of construction of operative words in wills and documents—Effect of context upon technical, or clearly disposing, words used—Dispositions in accordance with the law of inheritance—" Putra putrade krame."

There are two cardinal principles in the construction of wills, deeds, and other documents. The first is that clear and unambiguous dispositive words are not to be controlled or qualified by any general expression of intention. The second is that technical words, or words of known legal import, must have their legal effect, even though the testator uses inconsistent words, unless those inconsistent words are of such a nature as to make it perfectly clear that the testator did not use the technical terms in their proper sense. Doe d. Gallini v. Gallini (5 B. and Ad., 621) referred to and followed.

In a Hindu will an heritable and alienable estate is to be understood by the use of the words "shall become malik," unless the context indicates a different intention. The words putra putrade krame have acquired a technical force and are used as meaning an estate of inheritance.

That a testator may have imperfectly understood the words which he has used, or the effects of conferring an hereditary estate, would not justify the giving an interpretation to his words other than their legal meaning.

A will contained the following in favour of the testator's sister's son, viz., that he "becoming my sthuiabishikto (substitute) and becoming malik of all my estate and properties shall . . enjoy, with son, grandson, and so on, in succession (putra putrade krame) the proceeds of my estate." Provisions followed for the maintenance of this nephew's widow, and of his daughter, should he die; and a gift over that "in the absence of the said nephew's son, grandson, great-grandson, and so on, then of the sons born of my sisters . . the eldest, with son, grandson, and so on in succession, shall" receive the ownership. On a claim by the [836] nearest gotraja sapindas of the testator against the nephew for the construction of the will:

Held, that on the true construction of the entire will, the primâ facie legal meaning of the disposing words used was not controlled by the context, so as to establish any contrary meaning by making it clear that the words were not used in their proper sense; that there was no intention expressed to give a succession of life-estates to the nephew and his male issue only—a disposition which would not have accorded with Hindu law; but that an alienable and heritable estate was devised to him.

Specified property was given by the will in trust for the income to be expended for religious and charitable purposes with an express prohibition of alienation of this property. There was also a gift of the testator's estates to Government for charitable purposes in the event of no one entitled to be the testator's sthulabishikto remaining alive. If expressed as to the heritable estate in which the beneficial interest accompanied the gift, the prohibition of alienation would have been merely void, without any effect upon the disposition of that estate. Made, however, as to property given for religious and charitable purposes, it was valid by Hindu law.

No decision as to the effect of the gift over of the secular heritable estate was required, inasmuch as the contingency upon which it was limited to go over had not occurred, and might not occur.

AN appeal, and two consolidated appeals, from a decree (7th July 1893) (Chukkun Lal Roy v. Lalit Mohun Singh Roy, I. L. R., 20 Cal., 906) of the High Court, reversing a decree (2nd February 1891) of the District Court of Hughli.

These three appeals, of which two were consolidated by order of the 20th July 1895, were heard together upon the question of the true construction of the will, dated the 17th September 1865, made by Saroda Pershad Roy, of Chakdigi, in the Burdwan District, who died on the 18th March 1868, having made a codicil on the 16th of the latter month, reciting the will. In 1875 the fact of the execution of the will was contested by his widow, Rajeswari Debi, in a suit against the testator's sister's son Lalit Mohun Roy, then an infant, appearing by his guardian ad litem. That the will had been duly executed was found in the District Court of East Burdwan, and on appeal on the 15th June 1877.

The present suit was filed on the 13th February 1889, after the death in February 1888 of the widow Rajeswari Debi, by the [836] testator's two nearest gotraja sapinda agnates, who were his great-grandfather's descendants in the male line. The defendants were the sons of, or descended from, the testator's sisters, and they relied upon the will. According to the decision of the Court of First Instance, which in the end was held correct, the will gave to the first defendant Lalit Mohun Singh Roy, son of the testator's third sister, an absolute estate of inheritance. The High Court, in the decree from which this appeal was preferred, had declared Lalit Mohun to be entitled only to a life estate, and had decreed in favour of the plaintiffs as reversioners, on the ground of there having been an intestacy, as to all but the life-estate to Lalit Mohun, who was the principal of the present appellants.

The parties were under the Mitakshara, their ancestors having come from the North-West. The will and codicil, which were made before the passing of the Wills' Act, 1870, are sufficiently set forth in the judgment of Mr. Justice CHUNDER MADHUB GHOSE (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 921) on the appeal to the High Court, and their contents are stated in their Lordships' judgment on this appeal. Lalit Mohun Singh Roy was a minor when his mother's brother, Saroda Pershad Roy, died in 1868, without leaving either son or daughter. On the petition of the managers appointed by the will, the Court of Wards took charge of the estate on behalf of the infant. On his coming of age the Court of Wards placed him in possession, in which he continued.

There being in the will an ultimate bequest over to the Government, in case those whom the will benefited should not remain to carry on a certain charity to which the testator devoted some of his property, the Government, by an order of the first Court, made on the 17th August 1889, before the settling of the issues in this suit, was joined as a defendant. Having filed an answer the Government appeared no further.

The principal question now raised was whether the will gave to the appellant, Lalit Mohun, an absolute estate of inheritance; and, in connection with certain gifts over, there were disputed points as to whether the testator's dispositions of his property contravened the rules of inheritance according to Hindu law, and as to the effect of such contraventions, if any.

The plaint alleged that, under the will, neither Lalit Mohun nor any other person had acquired an absolute right to the testator's estate; and that subject to certain bequests for religious and charitable purposes, and such other bequests as might be declared valid, the whole estate vested in the plaintiffs as heirs-at-law according to the Mitakshara. Of this a declaration was claimed.

Lalit Mohun's defence was that, according to the true construction of the will, an absolute estate, heritable and alienable, was conferred upon him; that, at all events, his interest was defeasible only on his dying without leaving male issue; and that the gift over upon that happening was in favour of persons other than the plaintiffs. The heirs-at-law being excluded by ulterior valid bequests, after the bequest to him, could not claim.

Bepin Mohun Roy's defence supported Lalit Mohun, and was that the testator had clearly made known his intention to exclude the plaintiffs from the succession by his having conferred on Lalit Mohun Singh Roy, his sister's son, an absolute estate of inheritance, defeasible in favour of other nephews, as provided in the will, and that upon such defeazance he, Bepin Mohun, would take, and, failing Bepin Mohun, others named were to take an absolute estate.

Priambada filed a statement contending that the will was valid, and that the provisions in favour of himself and his representatives should take effect. The written statement filed for the Government was that the ultimate gift to them, contained in [838] the 13th para. of the will, would be absolute and valid in law, on the contemplated event happening, if it should happen.

The issues raised the principal question, whether the testator died intestate as to any, and what, part of his property, by reason of the will, or part of it, being inoperative, in that it attempted to create a new rule of succession opposed to the Hindu law, or whether the testator had validly disposed of an heritable and alienable estate.

The District Judge (J. Crawford, Esq.), construed the will in his judgment, giving a summary of it, with his own translation of the most material words. In his opinion it was obvious that the testator intended that the will should govern the succession to the whole of his estate, and that he wished to exclude from the succession those descendants who, like the plaintiffs, were descended in the male line from his great-grandfather. They would have been his heirs upon an intestacy, and it was equally clear that it was the testator's will that, in the event of his leaving no issue, an event which had happened, Lalit Mohun, his sister's son, should be the heir, or person principally to benefit by the will. According to this judgment, the fact that the testator expressly provided that the income of the property set apart for religious and charitable purposes was to be so applied in perpetuity, and that he forbade the alienation of such property (while not making either of these directions applicable to the rest of his property) was significant as showing that he meant his successors to take the property not devoted to religious and charitable objects as their own, subject to the provisions of the will.

The District Judge declared that he was not satisfied, in regard to the whole will, that it was the testator's intention to make a scheme of successive representatives to himself. He held, on the contrary, that the gift of the estate to Lalit Mohun was effectually made by apt and appropriate words, which were the words—"he shall be the proprietor (malik) of my estate," these being followed by other words giving to the donee, and his heirs, the income of the property, without any indication that their enjoyment of it was to be limited as to duration. In the Judge's opinion the gift had not been cut down by the provisions of paragraph 9 of the will, of which the language, in his opinion, was [839] only to be regarded as advice in reference to the mode in which the donee was to enjoy the income of the estate. He was further of opinion that, even if the effect of the language of this paragraph was to fix a trust on the donee, as to the disposal of the balance, it was clear that such trust was one which the Court could not enforce. He came finally to the conclusion that the gift to Lalit Mohun was absolute. Part of the judgment was as follows :—

"The gift of the estate itself to Lalit appears to me to have been effectually made by appropriate words. The words 'he shall be the proprietor of my estate,' if they stood alone, would carry an estate of inheritance. Jatindra Mohan Tagore v. Ganendra Mohan Tagore [9 B. L. R., 277 (395) : L. R., I. A., Sup. Vol., 47 (65)] at page 395 of the report, quoted in Bhoobun Mohini Debia v. Hurrish Chunder Chowdhry [I. L. R., 4 Cal., 23 (27) : L. R., 5 I. A., 138 (147).] The position is greatly strengthened when words follow giving the donee and his heirs the income of the property, without any indication that his enjoyment of it is to be of limited duration.

"Next, it has to be considered whether the gift has been cut down by the provisions of paragraph 9. The words 'after deducting his own necessary expenses and the yearly expenses under the will, keeping in hand in the estate sufficient to preserve the estate, shall spend the remaining money in good works in order to increase the honour of the name of my family,' it is contended, reduce the donee to the position of a mere trustee as regards the balance of income. It seems to me very improbable that the testator, who had settled an annuity of Rs. 10,000 a year on his nephew if he did not succeed to the estate, should have wished to limit him to mere necessary expenses if he succeeded to it and had the position of head of the family to keep up ; and I am inclined to think that no trust was intended, but only advice as to the mode in which the donee should enjoy the income. This view is supported by the facts that to the donee is left entire discretion in determining what his own requirements are, that no scale of personal expenditure is enjoined, that no precise directions given as to what good works are to be done, and that the good works are not said to be for the benefit of the testator. The spiritual benefit or merit (dharm) to be gained would accrue to the donee, and the expenditure would in that sense be for his own benefit.

"Supposing, however, that the effect of the expressions used has been to fix a trust on the donee as regards the disposal of the balance, it is quite clear that it is of a nature that the Court will not enforce. It is bad from uncertainty both as to the subject-matter and the object of the trust. The question remains, whether there is any resulting trust in favour of the heirs, as is contended for by the plaintiffs. In support of their contention I have been referred to two cases, Sib Chunder Mullick v. Treepoorah Soondry Dossee [1 Fulton, 98 (108)] [840] and Sandial v. Maitland [1 Fulton, 475 (478—79)] and to the case of Gokool Nath Guha v. Issur Lochun Roy (I. L. R., 14 Cal., 222). In these cases, the Court gave the money, which could not be applied, owing to uncertainty of the purposes of the trust, to the heirs-at-law. The principle is said to be, that the trustee is to hold for the next of kin, if it is clear that he was not himself intended to take the money. In the cases quoted, I understand that the trustee had no beneficial interest. In this case he undoubtedly has, and the extent of his beneficial interest is quite undefined. In the case of Mussoorie Bank v. Raynor (I. L. R., 4 All., 500 : L. R., 9 I. A., 79) the Privy Council held that where the testator intended his wife to use the property according to her requirements, this was equivalent to an absolute estate to the wife. In the present case, that is just what the will does. It gives the donee in the first place (paragraph 4) full liberty to appropriate the whole of the income of the estate. Then (paragraph 9) it tells him to use it for his own requirements and to spend the balance on good works. This seems to be an absolute gift on the authority quoted, but if it be held not to be so, then it seems to me that the donee's beneficial interest is so great that, if the trust which I take to be for his benefit fails, he should take the money to the exclusion of the heir."

"The next questions are whether the testator intended that in the event of Lalit Mohun dying without male issue there should be a defeazance of his estate, and whether the gift over has been effectually made or is invalid.

"The contention on behalf of the plaintiffs has been that the first defendant took only a life-interest in the estate, and that there being a gift over which is bad on the ground that it is not made to any sentient being, but to a class, which is uncertain, and some of whom were incapable of taking at the testator's death, the plaintiffs are entitled to the possession of the estate, immediately on the death of Lalit Mohun. I have disposed of the first part of this contention by finding that the first defendant under the will took an absolute heritable and alienable estate in the property. This being so, it is unnecessary and undesirable that I should decide the other questions, as to whether any defeazance of Lalit Mohun's estate was intended, as to whether this would take place in the event of his dying leaving a son by adoption, and as to whether the gift over to other nephews of the testator, or residual gifts to the Government, were good. All these I leave undecided, as the events, rendering a decision on these points necessary, may never happen. I only wish to say that the testator possibly had in his mind, when stating the case of Lalit Mohun's dying without a son, the event of Lalit Mohun's predeceasing him."

"That the suit be dismissed, and that it be declared that the testator did not attempt to create a scheme of succession contrary to the Hindu law by which he was governed, and that consequently the will and its codicil are not invalid. It does not appear that the testator Saroda Pershad Roy died intestate with respect to any part of his estate. Since the death of Rajeswari Debi, the widow of the testator, the plaintiffs have not become entitled to succeed to the estate of the testator as alleged in the plaint, and they have no right or interest in the same. The defendant No. 1 has an absolute, heritable and alienable interest in the estate of the testator as stated in the 3rd paragraph of his will, subject to the charge on the Government promissory notes in favour of the charities, &c., specified in paragraph 1, and the other bequests made in the will. The plaintiffs have no cause of action, and they are not entitled to maintain this suit. The plaintiffs do pay the costs of all the defendants, and bear their own costs."

From this decree an appeal to the High Court was filed by the plaintiffs. The judgment of that Court, in which the Chief Justice concurred, was delivered by Mr. Justice CHUNDER MADHUB GHOSE, and is reported at length in I.L.R., 20 Cal., at page 921.

They held that the intention of the testator was not to give to Lalit Mohun an heritable and alienable estate, but that the estate which he acquired under the will was only an estate for life; that the gift over was invalid; that the testator had not made any valid disposition of his estate beyond the bequest of the life estate to Lalit Mohun, and certain specific bequests given, and charges created, by his will; and that, subject to such life estate, bequests, and charges, the plaintiffs in the suit, as heirs-at-law of the testator, were entitled to succeed to his estate. The High Court's decree set aside the judgment and decree of the first Court, and declared the construction of the will to the effect last mentioned.

From this decree Lalit Mohun appealed to Her Majesty in Council, as also did Bepin Mohun Roy, Priambada Roy, and Habul Chunder Singh Roy, in the consolidated appeals.

Mr. R. B. Haldane, Q.C., and Mr. A. Phillips, for the appellant Lalit Mohun Singh Roy.—The judgment of the first Court that this appellant took an heritable and alienable interest in the testator's estate, subject to all valid charges, including the charitable trust, was correct. The gift over, also, was well made to take effect on the defeazance of the estate in the event of Lalit Mohun's [842] dying without male issue. The testator gave to sons, and, failing sons, to daughters, an absolute estate of inheritance. If no children should be born, as happened to be the case, then Lalit Mohun, the eldest son of the testator's third sister, was to become sthulabishikto, and malik of all, "enjoying with son, grandson, and so on, in succession, the proceeds of my estate." There was no attempt to create a perpetuity. It was a mistake to suppose that the gift over did not refer to the appellant's own death without leaving male issue; and he had not referred to indefinite failure of male issue at any period, nor was it right to read the will as expressly excluding the legal course of the inheritance by excluding females.

The Appellate Court below had wrongly considered the will as attempting to confer a succession of life estates upon devisees. That Court had construed the will to give, first, an estate for life to the testator's third sister's son, and then to attempt to give estates to his future sons and grandsons, excluding females, with a gift over on failure of issue indefinitely. Had this been a correct construction, the ground would have been laid for the Appellate Court's conclusion that the estate in remainder, after the life-estate to the first taker, would have been undisposed of by the will, and would have devolved, as upon an intestacy as to that remaining estate, upon the testator's right heirs. But the appellant's case was that the High Court's construction was incorrect. It was contended for Lalit Mohun that the words conferring an heritable and alienable estate upon him were clear; and that the bequest to him was not altered, or affected by subsequent gifts over, limited to take effect upon the defeazance of his estate by his being childless, a defeazance which had not yet taken place, and perhaps might never occur. That the words putra putrade krame were apt words for conferring an estate of inheritance was shown by the decision in Ramlal Mookerjee v. The Secretary of State (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 304: L. R., 8 I. A., 46). If the testator had excluded females, which was not the case, and if he had referred to the indefinite failure of male issue by the words "die sonless," which also was not the case, such contraventions of the rules of inheritance of Hindu law would only have involved the invalidity of limitations over and would not have [843] affected the validity of the main bequest to Lalit Mohun. The validity of gifts over as such was shown by Soorjeemoney Dossee v. Denobundoo Mullick (9 Moo. I. A., 123); and Jatindra Mohan Tagore v. Ganendra Mohan Tagore (9 B. L. R., 377: L. R., I. A., Sup. Vol., 47.)

The decision in Tarokessur Roy v. Shoshi Shikhuressur Roy (I. L. R., 9 Cal., 952: L. R., 10 I. A., 51), afforded no guide as to this case, for there the testator prohibited alienation by the devisee, and there the devise did import indefinite failure of issue, with a gift over upon it. Here there were only vague limitations following upon a previous absolute gift, expressed in apt and technical words. Such a gift as was made by the will to Lal Mohun could not be cut down by these subsequent dispositions. There was no reason for withholding the full proprietary right from him, to whom it had been given by clear and direct words. If such a gift could be overborne by words in the context, they must be words admitting of no doubt, but indicating perfectly the testator's intention to act in a manner contrary to his previous expressions.

Regarding the words "die sonless" it was contended that they did not import an indefinite failure of issue in the male line of Lal Mohun. The failure of sons should be construed as importing a defeazance, and as giving, should it operate, an estate over to the other nephews. Bhoobun Mohini Debia v. Hurrish Chunder Chowdhry (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 23: L. R., 5 I. A., 138) was cited.

Mr. A. Phillips (with whom was Mr. H. H. Cozens Hardy, Q.C.), appeared for the appellants in the consolidated appeals.

Mr. A Phillips submitted that there was a reason, on the High Court's own construction of the will, against their view that the gift over, on the defeasance of the estate to Lal Mohun, could not be maintained This was that the gift over was linked with the endowment for religious and charitable purposes This would make the gift over accord with Hindu law

Mr. M. Crackanthorpe, Q C, Mr J D Mayne and Mr J H A Branson, for the respondent Chukkun Lal Roy, contended that the construction put upon the will by the High Court [844] was right The testator s devise of the successive estates for life was invalid By devising these successive estates the will attempted to create a perpetuity Not one of them carried the full beneficial ownership, and such a marking out of proprietorship was not permissible, according to the Hindu law of inheritance The will gave only the income of the estate to the holders who were to take the profits for their lives, This brought the will within the scope of the decision in Shookmoy Chandra Das v Monoharri Dasi (I. L R, 11 Cal, 684, L R, 12 I A, 103) Only the first estate for life could be held good It was true that the words putra putrade krame would, if taken to be unqualified by the context, indicate an estate of inheritance But here there was much in the will to show that neither they, nor the word malik, were unqualified Reference was made to part of the judgment of Sir B PEACOCK, when Chief Justice, at the hearing of the first appeal in the Tagore case [4 B L R, O C, 103 (182)], as showing that the effect of putra patrade, etc might, in some wills, be lessened by words pointing to the testator's intention not to grant an absolute interest Reference was made to Jatindra Mohan Tagore v Ganendra Mohan Tagore (9 B L R, 377 · L R, I A, Sup Vol, 47) and Mahomed Shumsool Hooda v Shewuk Ram (14 B L R, 226, L R 2 I A, 7) As to the word malik Punchoo Money Dossee v. Troylucko Mohiney Dossee (I L R, 10 Cal, 342) was referred to. As to gifts over, or executory bequests, Bissonauth Chunder v. Bama Soonder y Dossee [12 Moo I A, 41 (47)]

As to the gift for religious and charitable purposes, it was not contended that the prohibition to alienate, as it was confined to the property left for those purposes, was invalid The estate conferred upon Lalit Mohun might be regarded as valid for his life, as the High Court had held it to be, but it was followed by dispositions which must be adjudged invalid (as they had been), because they were intended to create estates which must be considered to be inconsistent with the rules of inheritance according to Hindu law That intention was that the estate should pass [845] from male to male, never vesting in a female The gift over to other sister's sons, after the defeazance of the estate given to Lalit Mohun, was also invalid, because it had been made in favour of an uncertain class, and had been made to include persons who would not be capable of taking immediately upon Lalit Mohun s death Reference was made to Venkata Mahapati Surya Rao v Gangahara Rama Rao *, where there had been an ineffectual attempt to control the descent of property It could not be established for the appellants that this case was not governed by the rules contained in the judgment in the Tagore case (9 B L R., 377, L. R, I. A. Sup. Vol., 47), nor did the judgment in Soorjeemoney Dossee v Denobundoo Mullick (9 Moo I A, 123) carry the appellants' case far enough for their purposes, in deciding that gifts over on the defeazance of a prior estate were valid. Tarokessur Roy v. Soshi Shikuressur Roy (I. L. R., 9 Cal., 952; L. R., 10 I. A., 51) was also referred to.

Mr. R. B. Haldane, Q.C., replied.

Afterwards, on the 20th March, their Lordships' judgment was delivered by Lord Davey.- The question on these appeals is the construction of the will of a Hindu gentleman named Saroda Pershad Roy who died on the 18th March 1868 at the age of thirty-three years. The testator was a man of considerable wealth, and, as appears from his will, was of a benevolent and generous disposition, and was also anxious for the maintenance and honour of his family. He left no issue, but left one widow who died in February 1888, about a year before the institution of the present suit. The District Judge held that the testator's nephew, the appellant Lalit Mohun Roy, took an heritable and alienable interest in the testator's estate subject to a charitable gift which will be mentioned presently, but reserved the question whether any defeazance of Lalit Mohan's estate was intended, as the events requiring a decision of that question might never arise. The decree of the District Judge was reversed by the High [846] Court. The Chief Justice Sir W. C. PETHERAM and Mr. Justice CHUNDER MADHUB GHOSE held that the appellant Lalit Mohun Roy has only a life interest in the testator's estate, that the gift over to take effect in the event of the failure of male issue of the appellant in the male line is bad in law and invalid; and that, subject to the appellant's life interest and subject to the bequests, legacies and charges made in favour of religious and charitable institutions, the plaintiffs in the action as heirs-at-law are entitled to succeed to the estate left by the testator. The present appeal is from this decision of the High Court.

There are two cardinal principles in the construction of wills, deeds and other documents, which their Lordships think are applicable to the decision of this case The first is that clear and unambiguous dispositive words are not to be controlled or qualified by any general expression of intention. The second is, to use Lord DENMAN'S language, that technical words or words of known legal import must have their legal effect even though the testator uses inconsistent words, unless those inconsistent words are of such a nature as to make it perfectly clear that the testator did not mean to use the technical terms in their proper sense—Deo d. Gallini v. Gallini(5 B. and Ad. 621).

The will in the present case commences with a preamble containing the following words relied on by the respondent Chukkun Lal Roy as showing an intention to make his estate inalienable:—

"It is very necessary that there should be some special ordination to secure temporal and spiritual welfare; and that suitable means providing that the work so ordained to be done should after my death be carried on without interruption, and that the members of my family should have no trouble, and that, hereafter my sthulabhishikto (persons installed in my place) should not, by destroying the property, &c., at pleasure, extinguish the name of my family and become troublers, &c."

By paragraph 1 the testator provided for the maintenance, out of the income of certain specified putni taluks, of religious foundations established by his garandfather and mother, of a dispensary established by himself, and the permanent support of [847] fifty helpless people in a house he intended to build for the purpose, and he directed that the profits of all these taluks should continue in perpetuity to be expended in the manner prescribed—that the taluks should be inalienable—and that the profits of the properties should not be expended or used for any save the purposes aforesaid. In case of deficiency of the income of the taluks the amount needed was to be defrayed in perpetuity out of the interest of Rs. 2,40,000 Company's paper belonging to the testator.

By paragraph 2 he provided for his own right of control in respect of all the taluks, and that after his death that right should remain with the person appointed to his place.

After reciting in paragraph 3 that he possessed a large property in addition to that which he had appropriated to religious and charitable purposes the testator, in paragraph 4, disposed of his estate in the following words —

"4. If, by the will of God, one or more sons are born to me then after my death, my son or sons shall be the owner (or owners) of my estate, and the charge of managing the deb. shebas and dispensary, and the care of the helpless people to be fed daily, and all other business, shall rest with them What shall remain over from the profits of the estate after the monthly allowances, &c., according to the provisions of the will have been given, shall continue to be spent, as may be necessary, subject to their wishes and those of their successors. If no son is born, but one or more daughters are born, then those daughters shall with sons, grandsons and so on in succession, receiving the ownership of my estate and the management of all the work, viz, of the deb shebas and the dispensary, and the oversight of the helpless people to be daily fed, &c , conduct all the work If no children are born to me that is to say, son or son's son or son's son's son, or daughter or daughter's son, or if, at the time of my death, they are not alive, then the eldest son born of the womb of my third sister Srimati Khiroda, my nephew Sriman Kalit Mohun Roy Babaji, whom since his birth, I have continued to love as a son, and who remaining near me, is pleasing me by good conduct and the learning of good principles whom I have been going on supporting—this nephew Sriman Lalit Mohun Roy Babaji becoming, on my death, my sthulabhishikto, and becoming owner (malik) of all my estate and properties, &c shall, remaining my sthulabhishikto, obtaining the management of the Iswarshebas and the dispensary and the oversight of the people to be daily fed, &c , all affairs as above described, residing in my nij dwelling house in Suria Chakdigi the place of my ancestral abode, keeping the estate intact (lit , in place), enjoy, with son, grandson and so on in succession the proceeds of my estate [848] This nephew is under age If my death should occur whilst he is in a state of nonage, then my wife Srimati Rajeswari Debi and my father's sister's son Sriman Jogendra Nath Roy of Munirambati, becoming the minor's guardians and executors, shall, as long as he has not attained majority, discharge all the duties set down in my will The minor, on reaching majority, shall exercise ownership (malikatwa) over all the properties If he should die sonless, then his wife shall receive a monthly allowance of one hundred rupees as long as she lives If he should die leaving female offspring then that daughter or those daughters shall receive expenses and marriage expenses from my estate In the absence of the said nephew's son, grandson great-grandson and so on, then, of the sons born of the wombs of my sisters Biroda and Khiroda, he who remains the eldest after the exclusion of him who may be devoid of understanding or afflicted with any potit rog (any of those diseases which disqualify a man for the exercise of religious and social rights) shall receive the charge of managing my estate and properties, &c , and he with son grandson and so on in succession, receiving the ownership of my estate and the management of the deb shebas and the dispensary, and the oversight of the people to be daily fed &c , all affairs, shall protect the estate and enjoy the proceeds And he shall take the interest on the Company's papers, and have them renewed, &c., when necessary."

In paragraphs 5 to 7 are contained provisions of a heritable annuity to the appellant if the testator's sons or daughter get the estate, and provisions by way of maintenance and grant of allowances to the testator's sisters and another nephew The only thing noticeable is that the same words are used as occur in the gift over in paragraph 4 "in the absence of son, grandson, great-grandson and so on" In paragraph 5 they may mean death without leaving male issue or issue, and in paragraph 7 they must from the context have that meaning.

Paragraph 9, it was conceded, does not create a trust of the income of the estate but merely imports a pious expression of desire or hope.

Paragraph 13 contains a gift of the testator's estates to Government for charitable purposes in an event expressed in these words :—

"If hereafter on the death of the several persons who I have determined in this will shall be my sthulabhishikto no one whoever it be (entitled) to become my sthulabhishikto should remain alive."

The testator made a codicil to his will dated on the day of his [849] death. It contains a recital of the will which in some respects varies from the actual language of the will, but it does not appear to their Lordships that any light or assistance can be obtained from it on the construction of the will itself even if it be permissible to refer to it for that purpose.

It was not disputed on the part of the heirs-at-law that the son of the testator if there had been one, or his daughter if there had been one, would have taken an absolute, heritable and alienable estate, nor that those to whom the estate is given after the gift to the appellant and his issue would take a like estate. Nor was it disputed that the words of gift to the appellant were such as to confer on him also an heritable and alienable estate. The words "become owner (malik) of all my estates and properties would, unless the context indicated a different meaning, be sufficient for that purpose even without the words "enjoy with son, grandson and so on in succession," which latter words are frequently used in Hindu wills and have acquired the force of technical words conveying a heritable and alienable estate. The respondents, however, contended that the primâ facie legal meaning of the words used was controlled and qualified by the context of the will and they put their argument in two ways. First it was said that there was a general intention expressed in the will to give only a succession of life estates to the appellant and his male issue without power of alienation, and that such general expression of intention was confirmed by the words "keeping the estate intact" and the clause following the gift to the appellant. Secondly, it was contended that the will contained such a sufficiently expressed intention to exclude females from the succession as would cut down the words of inheritance to heirs male and give the appellant only an estate to him and his heirs male which would be void beyond the life estate according to the well-settled principle of Hindu law.

Their Lordships do not find any express prohibition in this will against alienation of the estates, the beneficial enjoyment of which is given to the devisees, as there is of the estates appropriated to religious and charitable purposes. If there were such a clause added to a gift of a heritable estate it would be repugnant and void. This is not like the case of Shookhmoy Chunder Das [850] v. Monohari Dasi (I. L. R., 11 Cal, 684, L. R, 12 I. A., 103) in which it was held independently of the provision against alienation that there was no intention to pass the estate. The gift over to the Government in clause 13 of the will, on which some reliance was placed by the respondents, may be construed either as taking effect on failure of the persons named as substitutes or taking by purchase, in which case it might be valid, but the event has not occurred, or it may be construed as providing for a general failure of heirs in which case it would of course be void. It is possible that a testator may have imperfectly understood the words he has used, or may have misconceived the effect of conferring a heritable estate, but this would not justify the Court in giving an interpretation to the language other than the ordinary legal meaning.

The alternative branch of the argument is more plausible, and appears to be that which mainly found favour with the learned Judges in the High Court.

It was said that the provision for the appellant's widow in case he died sonless and the provision for his daughters was inconsistent with a gift to him and his heirs in legal succession, because in that event, according to the law of the Mitakshara, the widow and daughters would succeed as the appellant's heirs. But the provisions for the widow and daughters of the appellant must be read with the clause which immediately follows and would more accurately precede them. It was decided in Soorjeemoney Dossee v. Denobundoo Mullick (9 Moo. I. A., 123) that a Hindu testator may give property by way of executory bequest (to borrow a term from the law of England) upon an event which is to happen, if at all, immediately on the close of a life in being, and (it has since been explained) in favour of a person born in the testator's lifetime.

Their Lordships do not propose to express any opinion on the construction or validity of the gift over in paragraph 4 of the will before them. They do not find it necessary to do so. The event (whatever it may be) may never occur, and if it does the question will probably arise between parties other than the present litigants. If the event referred to in the clause is the death of [851] the appellant without leaving male issue it makes a consistent and intelligible series of limitations. It would be a gift in fee (to use an English term) to the appellant defeasible in case of his death without leaving male issue, with a provision in that event for his widow and daughters who would be disappointed by the operation of the gift over. It was pressed upon their Lordships that the event referred to is an indefinite failure of issue male. The clause in that event would of course be void but for the purpose of construction and ascertaining the testator's meaning the effect of it on the other provisions of the will must be considered. In the opinion of their Lordships the words of the clause do not indicate any intention to give a succession of life interests to the appellant and his issue male or to vary the terms of the gift to Lalit Mohun Roy: and if it could have effect given to it, the provisions for the wife and daughters would still not be unmeaning. Their Lordships cannot find any sufficient reason for impoiting into the gift to the appellant an implied prohibition against females succeeding as heirs so as to limit the nature or extent of the estate taken by the appellant or confine it by construction to heirs male although his estate may be defeasible if the gift over is valid and the event on which it is to take effect should occur.

Their Lordships, therefore, think that the decree of the High Court should be reversed and the decree of the District Judge be restored in substance. They think, however, to avoid any misapprehension hereafter, the word "absolute" should be omitted, and the following words should be added, viz, "But this Court does not think fit to make any declaration at present as to the construction or validity of the clause of defeasance or gift over annexed to the estate of the defendant No. 1 contained in the testator's will."

Wtih regard to costs, the respondent Chukkun Lal Roy and his deceased brother Shoshi Bhusan Roy whom he now represents (plaintiffs in the action) were ordered to pay the costs of all the appellants by the decree of the District Judge. That decree was reversed in the High Court and the costs of the appellants there in the lower Court and the High Court were given out of the estate. Their Lordships were asked to give the costs of the respondents [852] of this appeal out of the estate, but that would be making the appellants pay the costs of their successful appeal. Their Lordships are not disposed to vary the directions as to costs in the District Court The respondent Chukkun Lal claims not under but against the will, and their Lordships think that the appellants in the High Court ought to pay the costs of that appeal which, in their opinion, ought to have been dismissed, and that Chukkun Lal Roy should pay the costs of Lalit Mohun Roy of his present appeal.

In addition, however, to the principal appeal two other appeals against the decree of the High Court have been presented by persons who may become entitled under the gift over. So far as the respondent Chukkun Lal Roy is concerned their case is a common one with that of the first appellant. If Lalit takes an heritable estate the heirs-at-law have no direct interest in the construction or validity of the gift over, as they are equally excluded whether Lalit's estate is defeasible or indefeasible. The two sets of appellants declined to argue any question between themselves or to ask for any declaration as to the construction or validity of the gift over. As, however, the presentation of those appeals was justified by the form of the decree of the High Court, although in the result they have proved to be unnecessary, their Lordships think they cannot order the appellants to pay any costs to the respondents.

Their Lordships therefore will humbly advise Her Majesty that the decree of the High Court be reversed, and instead thereof the decree of the District Court be varied by the omission of the word "absolute "and by the addition of the words mentioned above, and as varied the decree of the District Court be affirmed and the plaintiffs in the action be ordered to pay the costs of the appeal to the High Court. The respondent Chukkun Lal Roy will also pay to the appellant Lalit Mohun Singh Roy the costs of his present appeal, and there will be no order as to the costs of the two consolidated appeals, or the costs of Bepin Mohun Roy, Priambada, and the son of Priambada, as respondents in the principal appeal. The Secretary of State for India in Council was made a party to the suit and a respondent to this appeal, but he has not put in any case and does not appear. Their [853] Lordships therefore will not make any order as to his costs (if any) of this appeal.

"This case (24 Cal., 834) seems to adopt and apply the same view of the word 'malik' as was taken in the Calcutta case in the 24 W.R., above cited, with the result that in order to cut down the full proprietary rights that the word imports, something must be found in the context to qualify it. Nothing has been found in the context here or the surrounding circumstances or is relied upon by the respondents, but the fact that the donee is a woman and a widow, which was expressly decided in the last mentioned case not tosuffice etc. ", at p. 89. [On appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh].

Minor—Wrongful admission of title against a minor—Suppression of facts by a Manager appointed by the Court of Wards—Order of Settlement Court cancelled.

At a settlement of a district in Oudh a sub-settlement was decreed in conformity with Act XXVI of 1866, which legalizes rules as to claims in respect of subordinate rights to land. The claimant alleged himself to be, in virtue of a birt tenure held by him, under-proprietor of a village within the taluk of a talukdar, then a minor, whose estate was under charge of the Court of Wards, whose representative, the Deputy Commissioner of the District, had appointed a manager of the estate. This manager having reported favourably on the claim, the Deputy Commissioner sanctioned its admission; whereupon a decree for sub-settlement was made on the 30th June 1871. The present suit was brought by the talukdar, after attaining full age, to have that decree set aside as having been obtained by fraud and collusion. That the manager was brother of the alleged birt-holder, and that he was family shareholder with him in the village, facts which the manager had suppressed, were facts proved in this suit. The defendants attempted, but failed, to establish by evidence the existence of the alleged birt.

Held, that the admission in the Settlement Court in 1871 was not binding on the plaintiff, and that, even assuming that the defendants' ancestor had been in some way in occupancy before 1857, the evidence was quite insufficient to show that a grant of a perpetual under-proprietary right had been obtained. The decree of the Lower Appellate Court, cancelling the Settlement Court's order, was therefore upheld.

APPEAL from a decree (3rd July 1891) of the Court of the [854] Judicial Commissioner, reversing a decree (6th January 1890) of the District Judge of Fyzabad.

The plaintiff in this suit, now respondent, was Raja Mahammad Mumtaz Ali Khan, sanad-holding talukdar of Bilaspur in the gonda district including the taluk of Utrauli. Within the latter was situate mouzah Mahammadpur Banjarha, as to which this litigation arose. Of this village Ram Ghulam, son of Jawahir Lal, and grandfather of Ram Autar, the first defendant in this suit, obtained in 1871, at a settlement in progress in the Gonda district in that year, a sub-settlement as under-proprietor within Act XXVI of 1866, the Oudh Sub-Settlement Act. Ram Ghulam alleged at the settlement that he held a birt tenure of the village which had been granted to Jawahir Lal, his father, in the year 1838 by Raja Mahammad Khan Jeo, then the talukdar, who died in 1865.

Jawahir Lal was also father of Salig Ram, the second defendant in this suit, who died while this appeal was pending, and was now represented by his sons, who were substituted for him on this record on the 21st November 1895.

The order, dated 30th June 1871, made by a Deputy Collector as Settlement Officer, was headed" Ram Ghulam v Raja Mumtaz Ali Khan, talukdar," and referred to an ikbaldawa filed on that day by Salig Ram, general agent, manager, as admitting the claim Birt right over the village Mahammadpur was then decreed to Ram Ghulam

The Raja was then an infant aged but a few years. His estate, entered in the lists I and II, prepared under the Oudh Estate Act, 1869, was under charge of the Court of Wards, represented, in conformity with Regulation X of 1793, by the Deputy Commissioner of the district, who appointed a manager of the estate, as that law directs The manager thus appointed was Salig Ram, who had managed the estate under the preceding talukdar This manager, when called on by the Deputy Commissioner to report as to the claim made before the Settlement Officer, reported in favour of it, suppressing the fact that being Ram Ghulam's own brother he was entitled to a fourth share in village Mahammadpur with him The Deputy Commissioner, on the manager's representation, sanctioned the filing of the above admission of the claim.

[856] On this appeal, the principal questions were whether the admission, upon which the decree of the Settlement Court was based, and the decree, were binding upon the Raja It was also in dispute whether the defendants had to discharge the burden of proving that the birt tenure existed, and, if so, whether, or not, they had given sufficient evidence of it

On the Raja s coming of age in 1886, the Court of Wards made over charge of the talukdari estate to him On the 8th March 1889 he brought this suit to have the settlement decree of 1871 set aside, as having been founded on an admission which was false and collusive, and an unproved claim

All the facts appear in their Lordships judgment, as well as the substance of the cases made by the plaintiff and the defendants

The District Judge in his judgment arrived at the conclusion that the Court of Wards had been properly made defendants in the settlement suit of 1871, and that the claim of the plaintiff in that suit had been admitted by an officer having the powers of a Court of Wards and that, therefore, the settlement decree was valid and binding between the parties Referring to the fraud and collusion charged, the Judge said that, no doubt Salig Ram had a direct interest in the sub settlement, and the under proprietary right as birtia being decreed to his brother Ram Ghulam with whom he was co-sharer in estate, and his not having mentioned these facts in his report " told strongly against his bonâ fides in the whole transaction " But, on that ground alone, the Court could not presume that he had been guilty of fraud Under section 111 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, it was incumbent on the appellants to prove the good faith of the transaction But the answer to this was that it was a true claim that had been admitted and not a false one This last proposition was derived from the consideration of the whole of the documentary evidence, upon which the Court found that Ram Ghulam had been proved to be birt-holder The plaintiff's suit was dismissed with costs

The Appellate Court (the Judicial Commissioner and the Additional Judicial Commissioner) reviewed the evidence, finding that the materials on which the Deputy Commissioner, as [856] representing the Court of Wards, sanctioned the admission of the claim in 1871, were meagre and insufficient.

They considered that there had been want of care of the interests of the ward, contrary to the injunctions and intent of Regulation X of 1793, section 16 They referred to the remarks in the judgment in Luchmeswar Singh v. Chairman of the Darbhanga Municipality (I L R, 18 Cal., 99, L. R, 17 I.

A., 90). They decided that in the present suit the defendants had failed to establish a right to an under-tenure such as could be recognized by law (Act XXVI of 1866). They referred to section 2 of that Act, and the rules scheduled as an appendix to it. Also to Drig Bejai Singh v. Gopal Dat Panday (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 218; L. R., 7 I. A., 17). They reversed the decree of the first Court, and decreed the village to the plaintiff.

On the defendant's appeal,—

Mr. A. F. Murison for the appellants argued that there was no sufficient proof of the fraud charged in the plaint. The decree of the Settlement Court had been regularly obtained in 1871, and ought to be regarded as valid. Setting aside the question of the admission and its effect, the evidence in the suit was sufficient to establish a title in Ram Ghulam and his heirs in virtue of the birt. In the judgment of the Judicial Commissioners there had been a presumption of fraud against the manager, which had not been warranted by the evidence, and had been in excess of just inference. The general rule that fraud was not to be presumed had not been kept in view. Again, regard had not been paid to the title of the appellants having been one which was not established by or through the rights of the talukdar, but was, in effect, independent of the title of the latter. This was shewn by the letters of the Government (10th and 19th October 1859), as scheduled in the Act XXVI of 1866, relating to under-proprietary rights, and to sub-settlement with those possessed of subordinate rights of property. Further, it had been shown that, irrespectively of the decree of the Settlement Court of 1871, the appellants were entitled to hold as birtias. and it was submitted that, even if the right of the [857] appellants to sub-settlement had not been established, they were not, in consequence of that state of things, liable to be dispossessed of their holdings. Reference, in regard to the effect of the manager's admission, was made to Muhammad Mumtaz Ali Khan v. Sheoruttangir (I. L. R., 23 Cal., 934; L.R., 23 I. A., 75).

Mr. J. D. Mayne, and Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the Respondent, were not called upon.

Lord Watson.—The respondent Rajah Mahammad Mumtaz Ali Khan succeeded on the death of his uncle the Rajah Umrao Ali Khan to the Bilaspur estate in district Gonda, which includes the taluka of Utraula. At that time the respondent was a mere infant and his estate remained under the charge of the Court of Wards from the end of the year 1865 until October 1886 when he attained majority. In March 1889 he instituted the present suit before the District Court of Fyzabad against Ram Autar, Salig Ram and others, in which he prays for (1) a decree for possession of the entire village Mahammadpur Banjarha which is within taluka Utraula, (2) cancellation of an order passed by the Settlement Court on the 30th June 1871 which decreed the village Banjarha "for birt," to one Ram Ghulam, and (3) a decree for mesne profits.

The appellants are the original or substituted defendants in the suit; and with the exception of one who has acquired by purchase a share in the interest claimed by the others they are the lineal descendants of one Jawahir Lal to whom they allege that a perpetual under-proprietary right in the village was granted in or about the year 1838 by the Rajah Mahammad Khan Jeo, a predecessor of the respondent. Jawahir Lal had four sons, the eldest being Ram Ghulam the grandfather of the said Ram Autar, and the youngest Salig Ram who was an original defendant in this suit. On the death of Jawahir it is said that the members of his family succeeded to his under-proprietary interest in village Banjarha. Ram Ghulam obtained from the Settlement Court in 1871 the order sought to be cancelled as representative and for behoof of the whole of the members of the family. For many [868] years prior to the death of Raja Umrao Khan in 1865, Salig Ram was employed by him as manager of the estate; and he continued to act in the same capacity during the whole period of its administration under the Court of Wards.

The case maintained by the respondent is in substance that Jawahir Lal had no grant of under-proprietary right from his ancestor, and that the defendants have no such interest in village Banjarha; that the decree of the Settlement Court in favour of Ram Ghulam was obtained by fraud and collusion; that no evidence was produced and no inquiry made as to the existence of the right then asserted by Ram Ghulam, and that the latter caused or induced his brother Salig Ram to give an admission on behalf of the Court of Wards in respect of which the decree passed. In their written statement the appellants allege that the original birtpatr of 1838 by Rajah Mahammad Khan Jeo to Jawahir Lal was produced at the summary settlement, but that the file of papers, including that document, had been destroyed during the Mutiny. If so the production of the document in the Settlement Court must have been of an earlier date than 1871. They also denied the respondent's allegations of fraud and collusion, and averred that the admission of Ram Ghulam's claim was made "in accordance with instructions of the manager of the Court of Wards, who had after inquiry given him (i.e., Salig Ram) instructions to admit the same"; and that they and their predecessors had, since 1838, been in possession of the village as proprietors, under the talukdar of Utraula.

Four issues were adjusted by the District Judge for the trial of the cause: (1) Is not plaintiff bound by the decree of 1871? (2) If not, is the present claim barred by limitation? (3) If not barred, are the defendants not entitled to hold the village as birt-holders? (4) If not so entitled, to what relief, if any, is the plaintiff entitled? The learned Judge, in their Lordships' opinion erroneously, laid the onus of establishing the third issue upon the respondent. In the event of its being held that the decree of 1871 was not such as to constitute a bar to the action, the duty of proving their own title aliunde was incumbent upon the appellants. Upon the issue of limitation, both Courts below found against the appellants; and no question has [869] been raised with regard to it in this appeal. The District Judge, on the 6th January 1890, found for the appellants upon the first and third issues; in consequence of which findings, it became unnecessary to consider the fourth issue, and the respondent's suit was dismissed by him, with costs. Upon an appeal by the respondent, the Judicial Commissioner reversed the decision of the District Judge upon the first and third issues, and found upon both of them for the respondent. He accordingly gave the respondent a decree for possession of the village Mahammadpur Banjarha in terms of his plaint. He dismissed the prayer of the plaint in relation to mesne profits, because no evidence had been adduced at the trial in support of the fourth issue; and he deprived the respondent of his costs in both Courts below, because forged interpolations had been made in certain documents put in by him, connected with the Settlement Court proceedings of 1871.

When the judgments delivered by the District Judge of Fyzabad and the Judicial Commissioner are examined, it becomes apparent that the only real difference of opinion between them was in regard to the third issue. The learned Judge of the District Court was of opinion that the appellants would not have been entitled to a finding in their favour upon the first issue, if it had stood alone. But seeing that, in his opinion, they were entitled to have a finding, under the third issue, that they were possessed of a valid under-proprietary right, independently of the decree of 30th June 1871, he appears to have thougt that the decree of 1871 ought to be regarded as sufficient, inasmuch as, in his opinion, Ram Ghulam would have been entitled to, and would have obtained it, if due investigation had been made at the time, instead of its proceeding upon an admission given by Salig Ram, who was himself interested, to the extent of a 5 anna 4 pie share, in the right claimed by his brother Ram Ghulam. The reasoning of the learned Judge does not appear to their Lordships to be altogether satisfactory. If the circumstances attendant upon the granting of the decree of June 1871 were such that it could not be set up by the appellants as a title sufficient to exclude the possession of the talukdar, the finding upon the first issue ought to have been to that effect: and it would not have prejudiced the appellants' defence, in the event of their being able to [860] establish under the third issue, that they had obtained an under-proprietary right from one of the respondent's predecessors.

It does not, in their Lordships' opinion, admit of reasonable doubt that, having regard to the facts disclosed by the proof, the settlement decree cannot be regarded as binding upon the respondent who was at its date a minor under the guardianship of the Court of Wards. The local manager of his estate under the Court of Wards was Salig Ram, for behoof of whom, as well as of himself and of other members of Jawahir Lal's family, the petition of Ram Ghulam was presented. Yet Salig Ram was the only person who appeared in the Settlement Court to represent the Court of Wards, and to protect the interests of the respondent against possible encroachment by Jawahir Lal's descendants It is obvious that the Deputy Commissioner, who was the chief officer of the Court of Wards in that district of Oudh, was induced to sanction the admission of their right, in consequence of representations made to him by his servant Salig Ram, whom he directed to report upon the application. It is hardly conceivable that an official in his position would have entrusted such an inquiry to Salig Ram, or would have acted upon his report, if he had known the reporter's relationship to the applicants, or his personal interest in the success of their application.

Salig Ram, as might naturally have been expected in those circumstances, made a report in all points favourable to his brother's claim. It states that the village Banjarha was birt of Ram Ghulam ; that, in the commencement of 1844, he had cleared and populated the jungle according to the grant previously made by the Rajah ; and that, from and after the time of the grant, he had possession by receipt of haq-i-chaharum, and by payment of the Government revenue to the Rajah ; that, in 1857, settlement of the village was made with him as birtia, on the same terms ; that settlement was again made with him in 1859, recognising his birt tenure , and that, from the time when its administration began, the Court of Wards continued his possession, upon his payment of the Government revenue due for the village, under deduction of one-fourth, as haq-i-chaharum. Acting upon the faith of these representations by his manager, the Deputy Commissioner authorised an admission of the claim, [861] which was duly filed by Salig Ram ; and, in respect of it, the Settlement Court issued its order affirming the under-proprietary right of Ram Ghulam. Notwithstanding the assertion made by the appellants in their written statement, there is no trace of the birtpatr or any similar document having been laid before the Settlement Court either in 1857 or in 1859. On both these occasions, the village was temporarily settled with Jawahir Lal's descendants; but there was no inquiry into the question of their alleged under-proprietary right. These settlements were probably made because they were found in possession, and they may have been facilitated by the fact that Salig Ram was then, as he was in 1871, manager of the estate.

Salig Ram was examined as a witness in his own behalf in this suit, and he explained that, in reporting upon his brother's application to the Settlement Court, "I did not think it necessary to say that Ram Ghulam was my brother, as everyone knew he was my brother," but he does not explain why he failed to communicate the fact that the application was partly made for his personal benefit, and that he had a substantial pecuniary interest in its success. What he does state in evidence amounts to nothing more than this, that those persons who happened to be acquainted with Jawahir Lal's family were aware of his relationship to the petitioner Ram Ghulam. Their Lordships agree with the observation of the District Judge that "this amounts to an admission that he did not report that Ram Ghulam was his brother, and this fact tells strongly against his bonâ fides in the whole transaction." Their Lordships may add that, in their opinion, it is sufficient to justify a suspicion that, in 1871, Salig and his brother Ram Ghulam were not possessed of documents showing the under-proprietary right which they claimed, or at least that they had some good reason for desiring to avoid submitting their documents to the examination of the Settlement Court. Their Lordships must assume that the Deputy Commissioner was kept in ignorance of the facts which made Salig Ram an interested and unreliable adviser. Had he known these facts, his acceptance of Salig Ram's report would, in their opinion, have constituted a grave breach of duty, sufficient in itself to prevent the decree of the Settlement Court from becoming binding upon the respondent.

[862] The only question remaining to be considered is, whether the respondents have succeeded in establishing an under-proprietary right in the village Banjarha, derived from the talukdar of Utraula, before the Mutiny? Upon that point, the learned Judges of the Courts below have come to opposite conclusions

It appears to be the fair result of the evidence, and may be assumed, that Jawahir Lal and his family were in the occupation under some title or other, of the village in dispute, from the year 1838 until the Mutiny. The question between the parties is therefore narrowed to the issue, whether the occupation which they had during that period was attributable to a tenure under the Rajah, of a temporary character or in perpetuity. The respondents, besides leading oral testimony, which is per se inconclusive upon the matter of title, have produced and founded upon a mass of documents, some of which are not proved at all, and others of which are of no value as evidence, in a question with the talukdar, whilst the genuineness of other documents, which bear most directly upon the nature of the appellants' title, is disputed by the respondent.

One main reason which induced the learned Judge of the District Court to come to a conclusion favourable to the appellants upon the third issue, is expressed in the following sentences. "The others (i.e., documents) prove beyond any doubt that one Ram Ghulam held possession of this village as birt-holder from before the Mutiny until 1861; and this is not denied by the plaintiff, but evidence on behalf of the plaintiff has been given to show that the Ram Ghulam who held the village was one Ram Ghulam, Misr, and not the Ram Ghulam who obtained the decree in 1871, who is a Kayesth. The plaintiff when he filed this suit never asserted that the village had been held by one Ram Ghulam, Misr, and it was only on 16th November 1889, when the remarks in Column 16 of the muafi statement for the village in suit were read, that this contention was raised on behalf of the plaintiff. It is perfectly clear to me that the remarks in Column 16 are a clerical error. Another village called Ambawa was held by one Ram Ghulam, Misr, and the clerk who drew up the two statements thought that both the Ram Ghulam of Amhawa and Ram Ghulam of Mahammadpur were one and the same person, hence the error."

[863] Their Lordships see no reason to doubt that the entry in the muafi statement which represents Ram Ghulam of Banjarha as a Misr by caste, was due to an error of the clerk who prepared it. The statement was made up in the year 1861, at a time when the same Ram Ghulam, who subsequently obtained the decree of 30th June 1871, had been placed in temporary possession by the Settlement Court. But they are of opinion that the learned Judge erred in assuming, as he appears to have done, that the respondent had, in the course of the suit, practically admitted that Ram Ghulam must be held to have possessed the under-proprietary title which the appellants claim, if it could be shown that the Ram Ghulam, called a Misr, was in reality a Kayesth. Their Lordships can find nothing in the record to warrant that assumption The muafi statement of 1861, if evidence of title at all, is a mere adminicle of proof, and, per se, inconclusive It is not shown upon whose information it was prepared, or that its terms were known to the Rajah, although they may possibly have been within the knowledge of his manager Salig Ram. The sole object of the evidence led by the respondent to which the learned Judge refers—that of Gupta, the son of Ram Ghulam, Misr —was to show that the document produced in aid of the appellants' title did not support it.

The most important by far of the writings produced and relied on by the appellants are three in number, all of which purport to be documents emanating from the Rajah, and are the only documents of that character which are to be found in the record. As stated by the learned Judges in both Courts below, their genuineness was disputed, and it has not in this appeal been conceded by the respondent. The Judicial Commissioner decided against the appellants upon the assumption, and without deciding, that they were genuine; and their Lordships, upon considering the tenor of the documents, are not prepared to differ from the result at which he arrived.

The first of these documents purports to be a receipt granted to Jawahir Lal, dated in the year 1838, under the seal of the Maharajah Mahammad Khan, for Rs. 141, "on account of birt zamindari of village Mahammadpur alias Banjarha." It also [864] contains these words "Hence this receipt has been executed so that it may remain as a sanad " The document is represented by the appellants to be an acknowledgment by the Maharajah for the sum paid to him by Jawahir Lal as consideration for the grant of a perpetual under-proprietary right to the village. It must be observed, however, that no mention is made in it, either of the conditions of the tenure or of its duration. These are supposed to have been expressed in the deed of grant itself, or birt-patr, which the appellants allege to have been produced at the summary settlement, and to have been destroyed during the Mutiny.

The second document is a lease of 1844 in favour of Jawahir Lal, under the seal of the Rajah Umrao Ali Khan, for clearing jungle in " village Mahammadpur alias Banjarha," the area of which " is one thousand five hundred and five (1,505) bighas, standard." The duration of the lease is thus defined: " He may for seven years enjoy free of rent (khanti bunti) the forest produce and after seven years he shall have to divide (with me) the grain produce at the batai rate prevailing in jungle villages, and he may take his hissa chaharum (¼ share) on account of his zamindari birt, out of his Government revenue."

The third document is a lease, dated in 1850, also under the seal of the Rajah Umrao Ali Khan, and in favour of the same Jawahir Lal. It demises to the latter, for the period of four years, the same village Mahammadpur Banjarha, on a jama of Rs. 282, and it provides that "he (i.e., Jawahir Lal the tenant) should without any anxiety cultivate and bring under tillage (lands), settle, and get others to settle there, and pay the Government revenue year by year, and instalment by instalment, and should take ¼ out of the Government revenue as his zamindari due."

The receipt of 1838 is, in their Lordships' opinion, quite insufficient to show that Jawahir Lal in that year obtained from the Rajah a perpetual grant of an under-proprietary right to the village as the appellants assert. The existence of such a right is inconsistent with the fact that Jawahir Lal subsequently accepted from the Rajah, in 1841 and 1850, leases, for a short period, of [865] the same subjects which, according to the appellants' contention, already belonged to him absolutely and of right as under-proprietor.

Their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm the judgment appealed from and to dismiss the appeal. The appellants must pay to the respondent his costs of this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

[On appeal from the High Court at Fort William in Bengal.]

Riparian owners—Water rights for irrigation where a stream flows through separate estates—Relative rights of upper and lower proprietors on the banks to the use of the water—Issues not raising actual rights.

A riparian owner, where a stream flows in a channel down from a property higher up, is entitled to the flow of water without interruption, and without substantial diminution caused by the upper proprietor, who may for legitimate purposes withdraw so much only of the water as will not materially lessen the downward flow on to his neighbour's land.

In this suit the upper proprietor claimed the right to dam up a stream on his own estate, and to impound so much of its water as he might find convenient for irrigation, leaving only the surplus, if any, for the use of the proprietors below. He has no such right, in the absence of a right obtained by him in virtue of contract with the lower proprietors, or acquired by him as a consequence of prescriptive use. His common law right is to take for the purpose of irrigation so much water only as can be abstracted without materially diminishing what is to be allowed to descend. What quantity of water can be abstracted and used without infringing that essential condition must in all cases be a question of the circumstances, depending mainly upon the size of the stream and the proportion which the water taken bears to its entire volume.

In this suit, the upper proprietor's claim having been put too high, the real question as to the proportion of his share had been omitted. No issue had raised it, and no evidence had been given to determine it approximately. The Court of First Instance and the first Appellate Court had attempted to [866] decree what they considered would be the just proportion, but the High Court had rightly pointed out that there had been no materials before the Courts upon which a right of a more limited kind than that which had been in excess claimed could be decreed to the upper proprietor; and the suit had been rightly dismissed.

APPEAL from a decree (May 19th, 1893) of the High Court, reversing a decree (June 30th, 1891) of the Subordinate Judge of Shahabad, who had affirmed, with a variation of detail, a decree (December 21st, 1889) in favour of the plaintiff made by the Munsif of Sasseram.

The plaintiffs, now appellants, claimed in effect that they were entitled to the unrestricted use for irrigation purposes of the water of a stream, the Kudra, passing through their village Ramgurh in Shahabad, without their right being limited by that of the defendants, who were proprietors of villages lower down the stream.

Ramgurh lay between Chikhuria, a mouzah belonging to the Maharaja of Dumraon, to the south, and mouzahs Hata, Khaja, and Narainpur, belonging to the defendants, to the north The course of the Kudra was from south to north, passing through all these villages. The present plaintiffs, before 1884, made a bandh, or dam, on the stream in Chikhuria above their own land to lead the water of the Kudra into a tal or reservoir, about 150 bighas in area, in their mouzah Ramgurh, for irrigation purposes. This was the occasion of two suits being brought against them in 1884-85 to restrain their keeping up this bandh, one by the Maharaja, and the other by the present defendants. That litigation ended on the 4th November on a decision of the High Court (WILSON and O'KINEALY, JJ.) supporting decrees of the local Courts of Shahabad for the removal of the bandh.

The plaintiffs then made, or attempted to make, another bandh to dam up the Kudra, with the same object, within the limits of their own village, Ramgurh. This having been thrown down by the defendants, the plaintiffs filed this suit on the 9th January 1889.

The plaint stated that, after those suits had been decided, the plaintiffs constructed a bandh across the Kudra within the limits of their own village, Ramgurh, for the purpose of filling the reservoir or tal; that the defendants in September 1888 destroyed this [867] bandh--acts for which the plaintiffs failed to get any redress on their application to the Criminal Courts. This suit was accordingly brought to recover damages for the injury suffered and for a declaration—

"That the plaintiffs are entitled to carry the water to their tal by placing bandhs at any part of the Kudra within the estate of the plaintiffs, and that the defendants have no right to obstruct the plaintiffs in making any bandh on the bed of the river at any place above the defendants' estate."

The plaint added—

"The plaintiffs submit that irrespectively of any decision of any Court, they, as riparian proprietors, are entitled to the fullest use of the water of the river which passes through their estate, and in order thereto they are entitled to construct any bandh across the bed of the river within the limits of their estate, and to cut any channel for the conveyance of the water to the tal at Ramgurh for the purpose of irrigation."

"The defendants as riparian proprietors lower down the river are entitled to such water of it as remains after the plaintiffs' tal at Ramgurh is filled."

In their written statement the defendants objected that for more than a hundred years the water had flowed in an uninterrupted course to the mouzahs Hata, Khaja, and Narainpur, their property below Ramgurh, and that they had acquired a right of user with which the plaintiffs could not lawfully interfere. The principal issues were —

"Has the plaintiffs' right to lead the water from the baha into Ramgurh tal been declared by a competent Court, or have they acquired a right of easement to use the water of the nuddi for irrigation by virtue of long enjoyment for more than twenty years, if so, where? And are they entitled to erect a bandh at a new spot, the former bandh at Chikhuria being stopped?"

"Whether the plaintiffs, as riparian proprietors, are entitled to take the water of the stream to feed their tal at Ramgurh for the purposes of irrigation of the lands of the said village, and does that right of the plaintiffs still subsist?"

"To what damages or relief are the plaintiffs entitled?"

The Munsif dealt with the question as to the plaintiffs' rights, either as riparian proprietors, or under the previous decrees, to divert whatever water they might require to fill their tal without regard to the defendants' requirements. He was of opinion that [868] they had no such right at law, citing many authorities to that effect He was, however, also of opinion that, although the plaintiffs were not entitled to the declaration sought, they were entitled to a fair and reasonable share of the water of the stream' to enable them to irrigate their mouzah, without substantially diminishing the supply of water to the mouzahs below He concluded thus —

"I am of opinion that the plaintiffs are entitled to a fair and reasonable share of the water of the stream to enable them to irrigate their mouzah without substantially diminishing the supply of water to the mouzahs below A careful study of the subject and some experience in these suits relating to water-courses, have convinced me that such an order, unless supplemented by proper instructions, sometimes proves indefinite, often giving rise to much confusion in the Execution Department The order which I now propose to make is that the plaintiffs shall be entitled to a fair and reasonable use and share of the water of Kudra nullah, so as not to interfere with, or substantially diminish the supply of, water to the defendants below At the spot where they propose to make the cut or channel, they may make a permanent or temporary construction some masonry or earthen work, either on the bank or across the bed of the stream or on both, but so as not to completely dam it up, whereby they can get a quantity not exceeding a fourth of the whole volume of the water of the nuddi which comes down to that point If it be necessary, in order to give effect to this order, to shift the position or site of the proposed channel up or down the bank within the limits of Ramgurh, it may be done. If after making an estimate, if it be possible so to do, of the whole volume of water which comes down the hill stream, an abstraction of a fourth would not keep sufficient quantity available for the proprietors below, it can be reduced to a fifth. Other instructions may be issued to the Commissioner who may be selected from among the engineers of the Irrigation Department, as had been done by this Court in some instances, when this order comes to be executed, e g, as varying, altering the width or depth of the stream.

"Should it, however, be impracticable to execute this order at all without putting a bandh all along the bed of the nuddi, it may be done, but there must be an opening or openings in the bandh so as not to wholly obstruct the flow of water down; there may be a diversion to the tal, but it should not even temporarily stop the flow of water

"Till such time as this order is not carried out completely, matters must be allowed to stand as they are Under the circumstances, I would not allow damages to the plaintiffs even if they had sustained any The suit is decreed in the above form Parties under the circumstances would bear their own costs"

Both parties appealed to the Judge's Court The Subordinate Judge modified the Munsif's decree on the ground that the [869] mode of execution prescribed would be difficult to carry out, and expressed his judgment as follows:—

"Having regard to the size of the stream the custom observed by the higher riparian proprietors of throwing up a temporary bandh across this stream to carry water to their lands, and the higher elevation of the plaintiffs tal I am obliged to declare in favour of the plaintiffs, that they are entitled to put up temporarily a dam or bandh across the bed of the stream within the limits of their mouzah, and thus carry the water of the stream through a channel to their lands or if necessary to Ramgurh tal that the bandh may be thrown during the first seven days of every Fusli month and must be removed at the plaintiffs' own expense on the eighth day They will have the free and full flow of the stream during the said period, after which the water will go to the lower riparian proprietors

'The Munsif's order may be theoretically good but it will be impossible so to regulate the flow as to bring only one fourth of the water to plaintiffs and no more and at the same time to keep the flow downwards unimpeded

'I see no reason to allow damages and I will make each party bear his own costs

'With this modification the judgment of the Munsif is confirmed'

Both parties appealed to the High Court, whose judgment (MACPHERSON and BANERJEE, JJ) after a statement of the plaint, and the proceedings in the first Court, continued thus —

'Both parties appealed from that decree and the Lower Appellate Court while affirming generally the view which the Munsif took of the rights of the parties held properly enough, that the decree of the Munsif as to the mode in which the plaintiffs were to get their one-fourth share of the water, was impracticable but in the absence of any other reasonable suggestion as to how the flow was to be regulated he held that the simplest way was to declare as he did do the plaintiffs right to erect temporary dams across the bed of the stream within the limits of their mouzah and to appropriate the whole of the water during the first seven days of every Fusli month and that during the remaining period of the month the bandhs were to be removed and the water was to be allowed to take its full and unchecked course

"Neither Court has in any way explained on what basis it has been found that the plaintiffs are entitled to one fourth of the flow of the water and if the scheme adopted by the Munsif was impracticable, that adopted by the Subordinate Judge is it seems to us, though perhaps simpler, objectionable in many ways and neither party is satisfied with it It is a very rough method of solving a difficulty which undoubtedly exists in this case and in all other cases of the kind and one which, we think could not be adopted otherwise than by consent of parties It is obvious that very great difficulties might arise if the same method were adopted of settling the disputes [870] of riparian proprietors whose lands were situated higher up or lower down It is clear that the right which the plaintiffs sought to establish was the unrestricted right of stopping the flow of this stream for the purpose of utilising the water of it to such an extent as they might think fit at any time, even if the effect of the obstruction was wholly to deprive the defendants of the water. We think that the Courts were undoubtedly right in holding that that was not the plaintiffs' right under the law, and no authority for a contrary conclusion has been shown to us. It was not the plaintiffs' case that failing the establishment of the very broad right which they claimed they were entitled to something less; that they were entitled to put up a bandh of fixed and limited dimensions, which, while giving them a certain amount of water, would leave to the defendants a quantity sufficient for irrigating their lands. There was no alternative right set up, and when the substantial right claimed was not established the Courts, we think, were wrong to go on and determine the more qualified right to which they thought the plaintiffs were entitled. No proper apportionment of the water to be appropriated by the parties to this suit could moreover be made without reference to, and consideration of, the rights of other riparian proprietors both above and below.

"It is contended before us that the plaintiffs were at least entitled to an adjudication of their claim for damages, and that the Courts below have failed to understand the principle upon which that claim was based. It is said that the plaintiffs' cause of action arose from the destruction of the bandh which they had constructed, and that the compensation to which they are entitled is compensation for the damage caused by that destruction and by the loss of the crops which ensued from it. That may be so; but that was not the form in which the claim was advanced either in the first Court or in the Lower Appellate Court. As already stated, the right which the plaintiffs claimed was a right of the very widest description to obstruct the entire flow of the water so as if necessary to divert the whole of it into a channel leading into their tal at Ramgurh. There is nothing in the plaint to show that the bandh which they had erected in 1888, and which the defendants are said to have destroyed, was a bandh which did not wholly obstruct the flow of the water and which left to the defendants as the riparian proprietors down stream a sufficient quantity of water for the purpose for which they were entitled to get it. And the Courts below appear to have considered, and we think, after a perusal of the plaint, very fairly considered, that the bandh which the plaintiffs put up and the defendants are said to have pulled down, was a bandh of the same dimensions as that which the plaintiffs claim a right in the present case to construct. If, therefore, the proper issue was not raised, it was, we think, the fault of the plaintiffs; and it is too late now after this litigation has been going on for a period of upwards of four years, to ask that the case should be sent back and proper issues framed. In our opinion, as the plaintiffs have failed to establish the particular right which they asserted, and to which we have already referred, their suit must be dismissed. It is impossible, in [871] cases of this sort, to define in general words what the rights of the parties are; there are no materials upon which rights of a more limited kind could be determined, and to endeavour to do so would lead to difficulties and complications in the future.

"Without, therefore, deciding what the rights of the plaintiffs as riparian proprietors are, we think it enough to say, that this suit must be dismissed on the ground that they have failed to establish the only right which they asserted, that is, a right to erect a bandh of any size or kind, even if it had the effect of wholly interrupting the flow of water either for a limited or unlimited time."

The plaintiffs having appealed,

Mr. J. D. Mayne, for the appellants, argued that the High Court had not taken the right view in deciding that it was not open to the Court to consider to what alternative relief the plaintiffs were entitled, either under the decree made, or as riparian proprietors. It was contended that they had shown themselves entitled to a modified relief, though their larger claim must have been rejected as untenable. Each party had put their case too high. But the Munsif's impracticable plan, though rightly discarded, had been suggested with a view to the actual law and rights of the parties, viz., that each proprietor was entitled to take such an amount of water as would not be too much. In the plaint there was an excessive claim, but that should not preclude the making a just decree, for the use of so much water as would not interfere with the reasonable right of the lower proprietor. It was submitted that the sections 565 or 566 of the Civil Procedure Code were applicable to such a case as the present—the former section when the evidence on the record should be sufficient to enable the Appellate Court to determine the case—the latter when the evidence should not be sufficient and providing for new issues to be framed for trial of the merits. Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) was also referred to. As to the substantive rights of the parties, reference was made to Miner v. Gilmour (12 Moo. P. C., 156), Orr Ewing v. Colquhoun [L. R., 2 App. Ca., 839 (855).], Perumal v. Ramasami Chetti (I. L. R., 11 Mad., 16).

Mr. A. Phillips, for the respondents, was not called upon.

Lord Watson.—The appellants are the proprietors of mehal Ramgurh, including three mouzahs, through which there runs a hill stream or nullah, there known as the Kudra, its course being from south to north Before entering Ramgurh from the south, the Kudra intersects the adjoining mouzah of Chikhuria, belonging to the Maharaja of Dumraon, and, on the north, it passes from Ramgurh into mouzahs Hata, Khaja and Narainpur, which are the property of the respondents in this appeal

The appellants at one time used, for purposes of irrigation, water diverted from the Kudra, which was stored in a tal or reservoir in Ramgurh, before being distributed over the surface of the land The diversion was made within mouzah Chikhuria, by the erection of a bandh or dam upon the bed of the stream belonging to the Maharaja of Dumraon, from which the water was conducted by a channel or cut, passing at first through the lands of Chikhuria to the appellants' tal. The bed of that channel or cut was on a higher level than that of the surface of the water of the stream in its ordinary flow. Before the end of the year 1884, the appellants made some alterations upon the structure of the dam, in consequence of which two separate actions were brought against them, concluding for its removal, one by the present respondents, and the other by the Maharaja of Dumraon.

These actions depended before the Munsif of Sasseram, who heard the cases together, and made the following order applicable to both : "That a modified decree be passed in both these suits for the removal of the bandh in dispute, it being decided that the bandh is recent, and that the plaintiffs are entitled to have it removed, that both the plaintiffs and defendants in both suits are entitled to irrigate their lands in their mouzahs from the water of the baha; that the channel to Ramgurh tal is also old and the plaintiffs are not entitled to have this filled up, that the defendants and the plaintiffs in suit No. 339 (i.e., the Maharaja's suit) are entitled to erect temporary bandhs at the place in (torn), but not so as to (torn) the flow of water downwards to the detriment of the plaintiffs and other [873] proprietors lower down." Appeals were taken against that decree to the Subordinate Judge of Shahabad, and thence to the High Court, with the result that, as between the parties to this appeal it was affirmed, and, as between the present appellants and the Maharaja of Dumraon, was materially altered, it being finally adjudged that, in a question with him, the appellants have no right to construct a dam within the mouzah Chikhuria for the purpose of diverting the water of the Kudra into the old channel leading to their tal.

These litigations were not finally disposed of until November 1887. Some time thereafter, the appellants placed a dam across the Kudra within their own property, and made a new channel leading through it from the stream to their reservoir. The dam was destroyed by the respondents; and the appellants, in consequence, made an application against them to the Criminal Court, which was rejected on the 5th December 1888, upon the ground that they ought to establish their rights in the Civil Court. The present suit was, in consequence, brought before the Court of the Munsif at Sasseram on the 9th January 1889.

It is necessary to examine the terms of the plaint, because the rights therein asserted, and the remedies craved, from the main grounds of the judgment of the High Court, of which the appellants complain in this appeal.

The plaint, in substance, concludes for a declaration of the appellants' right, in terms which necessarily involve the illegality of the respondents' action in interfering with their dam; and that declaration is followed by a prayer for an injunction against the respondents committing these or similar acts in the future, and also for pecuniary damages in respect of the injury which the appellants have sustained. It contains six conclusions in all. The first, which is the basis of all the rest, is to have it declared "that the plaintiffs are entitled to carry the water of the river to their tal at Ramgurh by placing bandhs at any part of the river within the estate of the plaintiffs, and that the defendants have no right to obstruct and oppose the plaintiffs in the construction of any bandh on the bed of the river at any place above their estate, and the acts of the defendants complained of above are illegal." The second conclusion is for an injunction against any repetition [874] of the respondents' illegal acts. The next two conclusions are for damages, the third being in respect of the injury already occasioned by the destruction of the bandh, and the fourth for loss to be sustained until the appellants shall be enabled, under the sanction of the Court, to convey water from the river to the Ramgurh tal. The fifth is for such other relief "as appears to the Court fit and proper for free flow of water from the river to the tal for irrigation", and the sixth and last relates to the costs of suit.

The right of a riparian proprietor to divert and use water for the purpose of irrigation is certainly not understated in the plaint. The right claimed by the appellants in the first conclusion is not less broadly asserted in the body of the plaint, and is neither more nor less than a right on the part of an upper proprietor to dam back a river running through his land, and to impound as much of its water as he may find convenient for the purposes of irrigation, leaving only the surplus, if any, for the use of proprietors below. In the absence of a right acquired by contract with the lower heritors, or by prescriptive use, the law concedes no such right. The common law right of a proprietor, in the position of the appellants, is to take and use for the purpose of irrigation, so much only of the water of the stream as can be abstracted without materially diminishing the quantity which is allowed to descend for the use of riparian proprietors below, and without impairing its quality. What quantity of water can be abstracted and consumed, without infringing that essential condition, must in all cases be a question of circumstances, depending mainly upon the size of the river or stream, and the proportion which the water abstracted bears to its entire volume.

The plaint contains no statement in regard to the character of the dam which is alleged to have been illegally destroyed by the respondents, or in regard to the quantity of water which it had the effect of diverting from the channel of the Kudra into the Ramgurh tal; and there was no issue adjusted to try the question whether the bandh destroyed was one which the appellants were legally entitled to construct. Yet it is obvious that, until that question had been raised and determined in the appellants' favour, no injunction could issue, and no decree for [875] damages could be made against the respondents. The plaint is likewise silent in regard to the size and character of the bandh or dam which the appellants claim the privilege of erecting within their own lands of Ramgurh, under the sanction of the Court, and as to the quantity of water which by means thereof they would be enabled to divert from the Kudra, without making any provision for its return to the stream. They appear to have ignored the fact that their right to take the water, and the quantity they were entitled to take, were matters inseparably connected with each other and were mainly dependent upon the very considerations which they have omitted to state; and they relied upon a claim of right which, on the face of it, is extravagant. The unfortunate result has been that none of the issues adjusted for the trial of the cause (with the exception possibly of those relating to the law of limitation, for which there does not appear to have been any foundation in fact) can, in the opinion of their Lordships, admit of a satisfactory, if any, answer, without an investigation into facts, which have neither been averred nor made the subject of proof

It is a somewhat singular circumstance that each of the parties should have relied, with equal confidence, upon the decrees obtained in the previous suits with reference to the Chikhuria dam, as res judicatæ in their favour. The decree obtained by the Maharaja of Dumraon is res inter alias, and cannot affect the present case. In the suit at the instance of the present respondents, it was, no doubt, expressly found that both parties to this appeal were entitled to take water from the Kudra for the purposes of irrigation. In neither of these suits does there appear to have been any issue taken, or proof led, in regard to the actual quantity of water diverted into the appellants' tal, by means of the Chikhuria bandh. The appellants can take no benefit from the finding, as supporting the claim put forward by them in this suit, because it was qualified by the condition that they were not entitled to interfere unduly with the flow of the stream, in prejudice of the respondents and other lower proprietors. As for the finding that the respondents were entitled to take water for the irrigation of their lands, it was plainly outside of and irrelevant to the case which the learned Judge was deciding. The existence of their right to take water for such a purpose, and, if existing, its extent, [876] could not be determined, except in a question with proprietors of riparian lands below their mouzahs.

The Munsif, after taking evidence, gave judgment upon the 31st December 1889. He referred to authorities showing that the law of India, in relation to water rights, does not differ from that of England, and he affirmed, in their Lordships' opinion correctly, that a riparian proprietor who desires to use the water of a stream flowing in a defined channel, must not so use it as to destroy or render useless, or materially diminish or affect, the application of the water by riparian owners below. Accordingly, he declined to affirm the first conclusion of the plaint, and did not deal with the injunction or damages craved; but he found that the appellants were "entitled to a fair and reasonable use and share of the water of Kudra nullah, so as not to interfere with or substantially diminish the supply of water to the defendants holding lands below." That finding considered by itself appears to their Lordships to be unexceptionable, although it does not affirm any proposition which is to be found in the appellants' pleadings. The learned Judge then proceeded to make an order in these terms: "At the spot where they (i e., the appellants) propose to cut (the land) or make a channel, they may make a permanent or temporary construction, some masonry or earthwork, either on the bank or across the bed of the stream or on both, but so as not to completely dam it up, whereby they can get a quantity not exceeding a fourth of the whole volume of the water of the nuddi which comes down to that point." To that order, three conditions were attached: (1) that the position of the dam and channel might, if necessary, be shifted within the limits of Ramgurh; (2) that if, after making an estimate, if possible, of the whole volume of water coming down the stream, the obstruction of a fourth would not keep a sufficient quantity available for the proprietors below, it could be reduced to a fifth; and (3) that, when the order came to be executed, instructions might be given to an engineer of the Irrigation Department, selected for that purpose, as to varying and altering the width or depth of the stream, and similar details.

On appeal by the respondents from that decision it was [877] confirmed by the Subordinate Judge of Shahabad, with this modification, that instead of allowing the appellants to take one-fourth or, as it might be, one-fifth of the volume of the Kudra, by means of a permanent bandh, the learned Judge ordained that the appellants should have leave to erect and maintain a temporary dam across the bed of the stream for seven days and no more of each lunar month, carrying the entire water of the stream into the Ramgurh tal during that period, the whole of the free flow being allowed to go to the lower riparian proprietors during the remaining twenty-one days of the month. The learned Judge observed: "The Munsif's order may be theoretically good; but it will be impossible so to regulate the flow as to bring only one-fourth of the water to plaintiffs and no more, and at the same time keep the flow downwards unimpeded."

There is considerable force in the observation of the Subordinate Judge, but it appears to their Lordships that the main objection to the decree of the Munsif consists in this, that the proportion of the entire water of the Kudra which he authorised the appellants to appropriate for irrigation purposes was fixed by him without any evidence and without inquiry. The modification of his order made by the Subordinate Judge is open to the same criticism, and is, from a legal aspect, more objectionable than the order which it qualifies. The legal right of the lower riparian owners is to have the water of the stream transmitted to them continuously and without interruption, and without any substantial diminution in volume, their right being only subject to the qualification that an upper proprietor may, for purposes which the law regards as legitimate, withdraw from the stream as it passes along his lands, so much of its stream as will not materially affect its downward flow, or impair their uses of it.

The appellants and the respondents both appealed against the decision of the Subordinate Judge, and, on the 19th May 1893, a Divisional Court, consisting of Mr. Justice W. MACPHERSON, and Mr. Justice GURU DAS BANERJEE, dismissed the appellant's appeal, allowed the appeal of the respondents and dismissed the suit with costs. Their Lordships cannot hesitate to concur in the judgment of the High Court. The appellants' suit is based upon the assertion of a legal right which is plainly untenable; and [878] unless it were affirmed, they could not obtain the remedies of injunction and damages, which are of the essence of their action. If their right to maintain the bandh had been supported upon the ground that the amount of water which is diverted into their tal did not materially diminish the flow of the stream, and was therefore no more than they were entitled to, the Court might have been enabled to determine what proportion of the water of the Kudra they could legally divert for purposes of irrigation without prejudicing the rights and interests of the respondents; and also in what manner and by what means that amount was to be withdrawn. In the present shape of the record, it is impossible to arrive at a satisfactory decision upon those points, which were dealt with, without evidence or inquiry, by the learned Judges of the first and second Courts.

Their Lordships will, accordingly, humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm the judgment appealed from. The appellants must pay to the respondents their costs of this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

(I. L. R., 22 Cal., 3) and Baroda Churn Ghose v. Gobind Proshad Tewary (I. L. R., 22 Cal., 984) referred to.

[879] That the Court which has granted the review has done so without sufficient reasons is not a valid ground of appeal under section 629.

THE facts of this case, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of this report, are as follows:—

The plaintiff filed his plaint on the 17th August 1895, and after various adjournments, the 8th of April 1896 was fixed as the date for final hearing. On that day the plaintiff applied for postponement which was refused. He thereupon declined to adduce any evidence. The witnesses for the defendant were then examined and the suit dismissed with costs. On the 5th May 1896, the plaintiff made an application for review of judgment, which was opposed by the defendant, but eventually granted on the 18th July 1896. The defendant appealed against this order under section 629 of the Civil Procedure Code on the ground that there was no sufficient reason for granting the review.

Moulvi Mahomed Yusuf and Babu Digambar Chatterjee for the Appellant.

Dr. Rashbehary Ghose and Dr. Asutosh Mookerjee for the Respondent.

Moulvi Mahomed Yusuf discussed the evidence and contended that there was no sufficient reason for granting the review.

Dr. Rashbehary Ghose.—No appeal lies from an order granting a review of judgment except on the grounds specified in section 629 of the Civil Procedure Code, which do not include the ground now urged before this Court. The case of Bombay and Persia Steam Navigation Company v. S.S "Zuari" (I. L. R., 12 Bom., 171) is precisely in point. [TREVELYAN, J.—Is there any case in point in this Court?] The principle of the Bombay case has been followed in Har Nandan Sahai v. Behari Singh (I. L. R., 22 Cal., 3) and Baroda Churn Ghose v. Gobind Proshad Tewary (I.L.R., 22 Cal, 984).

Moulvi Mahomed Yusuf in reply.—If the Court below has admitted the review without sufficient reason, as I contend it has done, it has acted in contravention of the provisions of section 626, para. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code. The case is, therefore, [880] covered by section 629, clause (b) of the Civil Procedure Code.

The judgment of the High Court (Trevelyan and Stevens, JJ.) was as follows:—

This is an appeal from an order admitting a review. The cases in which such an appeal is possible are mentioned in section 629 of the Civil Procedure Code, and there is the express authority of the Bombay High Court in the case of the Bombay and Persia Steam Navigation Company v. S. S. "Zuari" (I. L. R., 12 Bom, 171) that an appeal will not directly lie except on the grounds mentioned in that section. Section 629 of the Civil Procedure Code says that the objection may be made either by way of appeal against the order granting the application, or may be taken in any appeal against the final decree. That would show that in either case, that is, either in an appeal against the order or in an appeal from the final decree only, an appeal will lie on those particular grounds and no others There are two authorities of this Court in Har Nandan Sahai v. Behari Singh (I. L. R., 22 Cal., 3) and Baroda Churn Ghose v. Gobind Proshad Tewary (I. L. R., 22 Cal., 984), which show that the grounds which have been urged in this appeal are not grounds which can be taken in an appeal from the final decree. The same reasoning will apply to the present case. Moreover, both these decisions of this Court approve of the decision of the Bombay High Court to which we have referred, and which is expressly in point. The grounds urged by the learned Vakil for the appellant are not grounds under section 629, and therefore it is not competent for us to consider them.

For this reason we dismiss this appeal with costs.

Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act (XI of 1890), sections 2 and 3—Crabs—Animals—Cruelty to animals.

The provisions of Act XI of 1890 apply to cruelty exercised towards any animal which is either "domestic" or which being feræ naturæ has been "captured" and is in captivity. Crabs are "animals" within the definition of section 2 of Act XI of 1890. If a person exposes them for sale at a public place with their legs broken and with their shells crushed in so as necessarily to cause them pain, he incurs the penalty prescribed by section 3† of the Act.

THE facts of the case appear sufficiently from the judgment of WILKINS, J.

Babu Amarendro Nath Chatterji appeared for the Petitioner.

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (GHOSE and WILKINS, JJ.):—

sale certain crabs, suffering pain by reason of mutilation, on the 20th April 1897 at the New Market." The evidence showed that she had two hundred live crabs for sale, with all their legs pulled off, and the witness Sweeney saw her break the backs of some living crabs with the shell of a dead crab to show purchasers that the living crabs were healthy.

The accused admitted the facts charged, and was convicted under section 3 of the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act (XI of 1890), and she was sentenced to pay a fine of Rs 20, and in default to undergo one month's simple imprisonment.

Before us it has been contended on her behalf that the conviction is illegal, inasmuch as a crab is not an "animal" within the meaning of the Act; that is, that it is not a "domestic or captured animal"

[882] The learned pleader who argued the case before us based this position upon the allegation that the whole course of the special legislation upon this subject, both in England and in India, shows that the Legislature never intended it to apply to any animals other than those which may be described as either "domestic" or "domesticated."

In support of this contention he referred us to Bengal Act I of 1869 (which is not now in force in Calcutta) and to several English Statutes from 2 and 3 Vic. cap 47 to 39 and 40 Vic cap 77, both inclusive, and he relied especially upon the cases of Aplin v. Porritt [L R, (1893) 2 Q. B. D., 57] and Harper v. Marcks [L. R., (1894) 2 Q.B D., 319] Both of these cases were decided under the Cruelty to Animals Acts of 1849 and 1854, viz, 12 and 13 Vic. cap. 92 and 17 and 18 Vic, cap. 60 In the first-named case, the question to be determined was whether certain wild rabbits which had been caught in nets five or six days previously and since kept in confinement were "domestic" animals within the meaning of those statutes, in the second case, the same question had to be decided with reference to certain lions kept in a cage, which had been taught or coerced to perform certain tricks. In both cases it was held that the animals were not "domestic animals" within the meaning of the statutes And indeed neither these statutes, nor any other statutes in force in England (with perhaps one exception which does not affect this case), deal with any animals which, not being domestic, are captured animals such as are described in the Act XI of 1890, which is in force in India.

It was, however, contended by the petitioner's pleader that the course of legislation in England and the cases decided there shewed that the intention of the Legislature in India was to include only two classes of animals within the scope of the law, that is, (1) animals which are domestic in themselves by breed or otherwise, and (2) animals which, though captured in a wild state, had become "domestic," or rather "domesticated," after capture. This contention is, in my opinion, entirely opposed to the very plain and obvious meaning of the words which define "animal" in the Act of 1890. It cannot hold good unless [883] we interpret the word "or" in that definition to mean, not "or," but "and." I think that we should not be justified in so doing. We are bound when interpreting a statute to give to the language of it its plain and obvious meaning, without any assumption as to its having probably been the intention to leave unaltered the law as it existed before—Norendro Nath Sircar v. Kamalbasini Dasi (I.L.R., 23 Cal., 563), so that when we find that the language of Act XI of 1890 has in clear and unmistakable words enlarged the definition of "animal" to an extent not known before, we should not be justified in assuming that this was not deliberately intended by the Legislature. We cannot distort and twist the words of an Act so as to interpret them to mean the opposite of what they obviously purport to mean. Clearly, therefore, the provisions of Act XI of 1890 apply to cruelty exercised towards any animal which is either "domestic" or which being feræ naturæ has been "captured" and is in captivity.

Then it has been urged before us that, if this conviction be upheld, the effect of it will be to put an end to a trade which has been in existence from time immemorial and which furnishes a means of existence to a large body of persons. I fear that this is a consideration which we cannot allow to affect us. It was one for the Legislature to deal with when framing the Act; and for all that we know, it was then dealt with. We have merely to interpret and administer the law as we find it

Finally, it was represented for the petitioner that, in the absence of evidence to show that the crabs suffered pain from the treatment alleged, the conviction could not stand I think it may fairly be assumed, in the absence of proof to the contrary—that to pull the legs off a living crab and to crush in its shell are acts which must necessarily cause it pain.

I would, therefore, discharge the rule.

Ghose, J.—I am of the same opinion. It seems to me that no argument can be derived from the statutes and the decisions in England upon the subject, as has been contended for. If any argument can be deduced, it is rather in favour of the prosecution than against it.

[884] In the statute 12 and 13 Vic. cap. 92 (sec 29) the word "animal" was thus defined

"The word 'animal' shall be taken to mean any horse, mare, gelding, bull, ox, cow, heifer, steer, calf, mule, ass, sheep, lamb, hog, pig, sow, goat, dog, cat or any other domestic animal." And in the later statute 17 and 18 Vic. cap. 60 it was laid down that "the word 'animal,' shall in the said Act (12 and 13 Vic cap. 92), and in this Act, mean any domestic animal, whether of the kind or species particularly enumerated in clause 29 of the said Act, or of any other kind or species whatever, and whether a quadruped or not." So that the operations of these statutes were clearly limited to domestic animals, of whatever species they might be, and whether they be quadrupeds or not. These two statutes were passed in 1849 and 1854, respectively. and we find that in the Act which the Legislature in this country passed on the subject in 1869 (Bengal Act I of 1869) and which evidently followed the English statutes, "animal" was thus defined: "The word 'animal' shall be taken to mean any domestic or tamed quadruped or any domestic or tamed bird." This definition was substantially to the same effect as that in the said statutes, and if we had to deal in the present case with the Act of 1869, the definition of "animal" as given therein would perhaps be an answer to the case for the prosecution, for a crab is neither a domestic or tamed quadruped, nor a domestic or tamed bird. The Bengal Act of 1869 was however superseded by Act XI of 1890, and we find that the word "animal" was therein defined in this wise "'animal' means any domestic or captured animal."

There can be no doubt, looking at this definition, that the Legislature in 1890 meant to bring within the operation of the law the cases of some other description of animals not contemplated by the Act of 1869. And I think we may well presume that the Legislature in this country, when they were engaged in passing an Act applicable to the whole of India, found, as the Judges in England in some of the cases [e.g. Aplin v. Porritt (L.R., (1893), 2 Q B.D., 57), Harper v. Marcks (L. R., (1894), 2 Q B D., 319)] also thought in respect to the statutes in that country, that the law as contained in the Bengal Act of 1869 was not sufficiently wide, enlarged the definition of the word "animal" so as to bring within the operation of the law cases of animals other than domestic or tamed quadruped and bipeds; and they secured that object by using the word "domestic or captured animal." So long as an animal is feræ naturæ, and it is not brought under subjugation and control of man, it stands upon a wholly different ground; but when it is captured or domesticated, the law protects it from cruelty, if such cruelty is practised at a place or in the manner laid down in the Act.

The learned Vakil for the petitioner in the course of his argument incidentally raised the question whether a crab was an animal at all. There can, I think, be no doubt whatever on the point, for the word "animal" ordinarily means an organized or living being having sensation and power of voluntary motion, an inferior or irrational being as distinguished from man.

The crabs which were in the possession of the petitioner were captured animals; they were exposed for sale at a public place, in a mutilated condition, and with their shells broken, so as necessarily to cause them pain, and it follows, therefore, that the petitioner has incurred the penalty prescribed by section 3 of the Act.

The result is that this rule is discharged.

Wrongful restraint—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sections 79 and 341—Mistake of fact—Act done in good faith under belief it is justified by law.

A Court peon accompanied by two of the decree-holder's men (petitioners) went to execute a warrant of arrest against the judgment-debtor M. A palki with closed doors was noticed to be coming out of the male apartment of M's house. The petitioners believing that M was effecting his escape in that palki stopped it and examined it, although the persons accom- [886] panying the palki protested and said there was a lady in it. Admittedly, there was in the palki a pardanishin lady of rank.

* Criminal Revision No. 487 of 1897, made against the order passed by J. Knox-Wight, Sessions Judge of Patna, dated the 3rd May 1897, modifying the order passed by Babu Ramanugrah Narain Singh, Deputy Magistrate of Patna, dated the 16th March 1897.

Held, that having regard to the terms of section 79* of the Penal Code a conviction of the petitioners under section 341† was not right.

THE facts material for this report are stated above.

Mr. P. L. Roy and Mr. K. N. Sen Gupta, instructed by Moulvie M. Ishfaq, appeared on behalf of the Petitioners.

The judgment of the High Court (Ghose and Wilkins, JJ.) was as follows :—

We think, having regard to the terms of section 79 of the Indian Penal Code, that the conviction in this case is not right. The learned Sessions Judge seems to think that there was no mistake of fact when the petitioner took steps to examine the palki. He says that the petitioner "acted on a mere supposition, on the chance that the judgment-debtor might be in the palki." We find, however, that the palki was coming out at the time, not of the female but of the male apartments, and the judgment debtor being in the house in question, the petitioners, in the action they took, naturally thought there was some reason to believe that the judgment-debtor was getting out of the way, (there having been a warrant issued for his arrest) so as to evade the service of such warrant.

The lady who was in the palki has given her evidence in the case; and she says that the whole thing was the work of a moment That being so, we are unable to say that any harm was really intended by the petitioners when they went to examine the palki, since they had some reason to believe, as is apparent upon this record, that the judgment-debtor might be in the palki. We do not think, therefore, that the petitioners in this case should have been convicted of an offence under section 341 of the Indian Penal Code, and we accordingly set aside the conviction and sentence and direct that the fines, if realized, be refunded.

Sale for arrears of revenue—Purchaser at a revenue sale—Act XI of 1859, section 37—" Entire estate"—Estates Partition Act (Bengal Act VIII of 1876), section 123 —"Time of settlement."

A new estate created upon a partition by the Collector comes within the meaning of " entire estate " in section 37 of Act XI of 1859 The words "time of settlement" in that section mean the time when the contract was made with Government, and in the case of a permanently-settled estate mean the time of permanent settlement. A partition by the Collector merely apportions the amount of revenue, there is no settlement of the revenue in any sense at the time of such partition.

THIS was a suit for arrears of rent and cesses in respect of kasht land held by the defendant in mouzah Dulpur Jahanpur in the district of Shahabad. Raja Ram Singh, the former owner of the estate comprising this mouzah, mortgaged it under a deed whereby he assigned the rents over to the mortgagee in 1874. The plaintiffs are purchasers at a revenue sale of a 3 annas 4 dams of the mouzah, which was separated from the parent estate by a partition effected by the Collector in 1884, and numbered on the revenue roll as No. 6856. The rents and cesses claimed were on account of the years 1298 to 1301 F S., a period of four years commencing from 29th September 1890, subsequent to the purchase by the plaintiffs. The defendant pleaded payment under the deed of assignment, and urged, inter alia, that the plaintiff was not a purchaser of an " entire estate " within the meaning of section 37 of Act XI of 1859. that the time of settlement as given in that section was the time when the new estate was formed upon partition ; and that the purchase by the plaintiff was, therefore, not free of the assignment.

The Court of First Instance declined to try the question of [888] incumbrance, as being one which did not legitimately arise in a simple suit for arrears of rent, and dismissed the suit on the plea of payments made to the assignee of the former proprietor. The plaintiffs preferred an appeal to the District Judge, and their appeal was decreed.

The defendant appealed to the High Court

Moulvie Mahomed Yusuf for the Appellant.

Dr Rash Behary Ghose and Babu Satish Chandra Ghose for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Trevelyan and Wilkins, JJ.) was as follows.—

The plaintiffs are purchasers at a sale for arrears of Government revenue. They sue for arrears of rent. The defendants claim that they have paid their rent to persons to whom that rent was assigned by the former proprietor.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No 16 of 1896, against the decree of F. H. Harding, Esq, District Judge of Shahabad, dated the 21st of October 1895, reversing the decree of Babu Mohin Chunder Sircar, Munsif of Arrah, dated the 26th of April 1895.

The sole question before us is whether having regard to the terms of section 37 of Act XI of 1859 the plaintiff is entitled to disregard the arrangement made with the former proprietor.

It has been argued before us that, although the plaintiff has purchased what upon a partition by the Collector has become a separate estate bearing a separate towji number, and charged with a separate amount of Government revenue, he is not the purchaser of an "entire estate" within the meaning of section 37, and also that he only acquires the estate free from the incumbrances which may have been imposed upon it after the separation. We fully agree with the learned District Judge's decision on both these questions and with the reasons which he has given. An estate, the revenue of which is partitioned under the Partition Act, becomes divided into several entire estates, each one becomes wholly independent of the other for all purposes, and is, therefore, an entire, that is, a complete and self-contained estate. As far as we know, it has always been considered that a partition by the Collector has this effect. Section 123 of the Partition Act is to our minds quite clear on this subject. The fact that the Partition Act is subsequent to Act XI of 1859 makes no difference. The only question is whether the new estate created is an entire estate such as was contemplated by Act XI of 1859. It has not been suggested to us that there is a difference of any [889] kind between an estate, the revenue of which has been separated under the Partition Act and of which separate possession has been given, and the entire estates contemplated by Act XI of 1859.

The second question depends upon what is the meaning of the words "the time of settlement" in section 37 of Act XI of 1859 It is clear, we think, from the preamble that the settlement means the contract with Government whenever that may have been made. In the case of a permanently-settled estate it means the permanent settlement In other cases it means the last settlement with Government whenever that may have been. The partition does not alter the amount of revenue payable, it merely apportions that amount. There is no settlement of the revenue in any sense at the time of such partition. We dismiss this appeal with costs.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), section 4—Application to sue in forma pauperis —Refusal of application—Extension of time granted for payment of Court-fee—Payment of Court-fee after period of limitation—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sections 409, 410, 413.

Where an application for permission to sue in formâ pauperis is rejected, and a full Court-fee is paid for a suit for the same relief, the suit must be considered, for the purposes of limitation, to have been instituted only after the payment of the Court-fee, and not at the date of presentation of the petition to sue as a pauper. Section 4† of the Limitation Act does not apply to such a case.

The plaintiff on 26th November 1890 applied for leave to sue in forma pauperis for the recovery of immoveable property. His application was rejected in May 1891, and time was given him to pay the full Court-fee, and his petition was then treated as the plaint in the suit. The period of limitation for the suit had then, however, expired, the cause of action being found to have arisen on 28th November 1878. Held, that the suit was insti-[890] tuted, not when the petition to sue as a pauper was presented, but only on the payment of the full Court-fee, and it was, therefore, barred by lapse of time.

Keshab Ramchandra Deshpande v. Krishnarao Venkatesh Inamdar (I. L. R., 20 Bom., 508), Narain Kuar v. Makhan Lal (I. L. R., 17 All., 526), and Abbasi Begam v. Nanhi Begam (I. L. R., 18 All., 206), followed. Skinner v. Orde (I. L. R., 2 All., 241) distinguished.

FOR the purposes of this report the facts are sufficiently stated in the judgment.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose and Babu Gobinda Chunder Das for the Respondents.

On the 26th November 1890 the appellants presented an application for permission to sue in formâ pauperis.

The application was rejected on the 16th May 1891. The Subordinate Judge, by an order of the same date, allowed them time within which to pay the necessary Court-fee stamps. The stamps were afterwards put in, and †[Sec. 4 :—Subject to the provisions contained in sections five to twenty-five (inclusive), every suit instituted, appeal presented, and application made after the period of limitation prescribed therefor by the second schedule hereto annexed shall be dismissed, although limitation has not been set up as a defence.

Dismissal of suits, &c., instituted, &c., after period of limitation.

Explanation.—A suit is instituted in ordinary cases when the plaint is presented to the proper officer; in the case of a pauper, when his application for leave to sue as a pauper is filed; and in the case of a claim against a company which is being wound up by the Court, when the claimant first sends in his claim to the official liquidator.]

apparently affixed to the original pauper application which was treated as a plaint in the suit.

It is found that the appellant's cause of action in the suit arose on the 28th November 1878, so that the time within which the suit could have been brought expired two days after the application to sue as a pauper had been presented. Both the Courts have now dismissed the suit on the ground that it is barred by limitation, and we think it is quite clear that the decision is right.

Under section 409* of the Code of Civil Procedure, the Court was bound either to allow or to reject the application. If it allowed the application, it was to be numbered, registered and treated as a plaint in the suit. If it was rejected, then, under section 413†, the applicant could not again apply to sue as a pauper in respect of the same right, but he was at liberty to institute a suit in the ordinary manner in respect of such right. Section 4 of the [891] Limitation Act provides that, in the case of a pauper, the suit is instituted when the application for leave to sue as a pauper is filed. That obviously only applies to a case in which the application is granted.

The Subordinate Judge had no power, after the rejection of the application, to give time for the presentation of a plaint or to treat the old application as a plaint in the suit. It seems clear, from the provisions of sections 409, 410‡ and 413 of the Code of Civil Procedure and section 4 of the Limitation Act, that the suit must be taken to have been instituted some time after the application to sue as a pauper was rejected. What that exact time is we need not consider, because in any view of the matter the suit was out of time. The decision of the lower Courts is in accordance with the decisions of the Bombay High Court in the case of Keshab Ramchandra Deshpande v. Krishna Rao Venkatesh Inamdar (I. L. R., 20 Bom., 508), and of the Allahabad Court in the cases of Naraini Kuar v. Makhan Lal (I. L. R., 17 All., 526), and of Abbasi Begam v. Nanhi Begam (I. L. R., 18 All., 206).

The learned pleader for the appellant relied upon the case of Skinner v. Orde (I. L. R., 2 All., 241), but that case is clearly distinguishable, as there was † [Sec. 413.—An order of refusal made under section 409 to allow the applicant to sue as a pauper shall be a bar to any subsequent application of the like nature by him in respect of the same right to sue, but the applicant shall be at liberty to institute a suit in the ordinary manner in respect of such right, provided that he first pays the costs (if any) incurred by Government in opposing his application for leave to sue as a pauper.

Refusal to allow applicant to sue as pauper to bar subsequent application of like nature.

‡ [Sec. 410.—If the application be granted, it shall be numbered and registered, and shall be deemed the plaint in the suit, and the suit shall proceed in all other respects as a suit instituted under Chapter V, except that the plaintiff shall not be liable to any Court-fee (other than fees payable for service of process) in respect of any petition, appointment of a pleader, or other proceeding connected with the suit.]

INSOLVENCY JURISDICTION.

The 24th June, 1897

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE JENKINS.

In the matter of Beer Nursing Dutt, an Insolvent.

Taxation of costs—Discretion of Taxing Officer—Costs of Two Counsel—Insolvency Proceedings—Allegations of improper conduct—Purchaser.

A rule was obtained in certain Insolvency proceedings against the purchaser of property of the insolvent to show cause why such purchase should not be set aside, and alleging improper conduct on the part of the purchaser, who was represented by two Counsel at the hearing of the rule. On taxation of costs of the purchaser, the other parties objected to the costs of two Counsel on behalf of the purchaser being allowed

[892] Held, that having regard to the allegations made, the taxing Officer exercised a right discretion in allowing the costs of two Counsel

THIS was an application by way of objection to the taxation of a bill of costs on the ground that the costs of a second Counsel should not have been allowed to one of the parties, although the said party, who was the purchaser, was charged with collusion and fraud The insolvent, Beer Nursing Dutt, filed his petition in insolvency on 15th November 1895. The mortgagee of certain premises belonging to the insolvent obtained on 23rd January 1896 an order for the sale by the Official Assignee of the said premises which were duly sold and purchased by one Jogendro Nath Bose for and on behalf of his wife Koosom Koomary Dassee for the sum of Rs 6,100, which was paid, and the conveyance of the premises, to which the mortgagee was a party, duly executed and registered. The insolvent refused to give up possession of the premises under the vesting order made on 15th November 1895, and on 1st August 1896 the purchaser obtained a rule, and on 8th August an order that the insolvent do deliver up to the Official Assignee possession of the said house and premises. On the insolvent refusing to comply with the said order, a further rule was obtained by the purchaser on 5th September 1897 against the insolvent to show cause why he should not be committed to jail for contempt of Court in disobeying the order of 8th August 1896, and on 7th September 1896 an order was made, the insolvent not appearing, for a writ of attachment against the person of the insolvent for disobedience to the order of 8th August 1896. In the meantime, on 4th September 1896, a rule was obtained by certain creditors of the insolvent against the purchaser and the Official Assignee to show cause why the sale of the premises of the insolvent, in pursuance of the order of 23rd January 1896, should not be set aside and the premises resold, and the purchaser pay the costs of such sale and of this application; and pending the hearing of this rule the Official Assignee was prohibited from proceeding further with the sale or delivering over possession of the premises to the purchaser. On 19th January 1897, this rule was discharged with costs as against the purchaser and the Official Assignee. At the hearing of the rule the creditors and the Official Assignee were represented by only one Counsel, but the purchaser was represented by [893] two Counsel. On the taxation of the costs of the purchaser, the Taxing Officer, Mr Belchambers, made the following order —

"In this case a house which had been mortgaged by the insolvent was sold by the Official Assignee under an order for sale obtained by the mortgagee. On payment of the purchase money, the purchaser applied for possession An order directing the insolvent to give possession was not complied with The insolvent's attorney on being written to replied that he had been informed by his client that "the premises in question have been in the occupation of Debendro Nath Dutt, the son of the insolvent, for some time past" This was at variance with the statements contained in the 16th, 17th and 18th paragraphs of the insolvent's affidavit, from which it appears that the insolvent was in possession and was withholding possession until an application could be made to set aside the sale Such an application was made, supported by the affidavits of persons who professed to have acted collusively and dishonestly for the purpose of depreciating the value of the property The allegations against the purchaser were disproved, and the application was refused with costs

"Objection is now taken to two briefs and two Counsel being allowed as between party and party on the following grounds —

"(1) That this is a matter in insolvency in which no special directions were given by the Court

"(2) That this is not a matter of importance

"(3) That the applicants engaged only one Counsel and so also did the Official Assignee.

"(1) As to the first ground the absence of special directions shows that it was not intended to affect the discretion of the Taxing Officer

"(2) To the purchaser whom it was sought to deprive of the benefit of the purchase on allegations of improper conduct, the application was of undoubted importance

"(3) The Official Assignee appeared only to watch the proceedings It was, therefore, not necessary that he should be represented by more than one Counsel. It is not denied that the applicants had only one Counsel, but that in itself is not a sufficient reason for refusing to allow two Counsel to the purchaser, who was most affected by the application

"Having regard to the nature and circumstances of the case, I consider that the purchaser was justified in having two Counsel, and that their fees, as moderated by me, and two briefs, ought to be allowed as between party and party"

The creditors of the insolvent, being dissatisfied with this order, filed exceptions on the ground that the costs of two Counsel ought [894] not to have been allowed to the purchaser The exceptions came on for hearing on 24th June 1897

Mr. Zorab for the purchaser

Mr. D. Swinhoe on behalf of the creditors —This is a matter in an Insolvency proceeding. In Insolvency proceedings the costs of only one Counsel are permitted as between party and party If a party wishes to be represented by two Counsel, he should be compelled to pay his own costs for the second Counsel. There is no difference between this and any other Insolvency proceeding. The Official Assignee and the creditors have throughout these proceedings been represented by only one Counsel This Court has power to reverse the order of the Taxing Officer, as he has exercised his discretion wrongly in the matter.

Jenkins, J.—This application is by way of objection to the taxation of a bill of costs on the ground that the costs of a second Counsel should not have been allowed. The case in which two Counsel were employed was in certain Insolvency proceedings and, as I learn from the statement of Counsel, the client by whom these Counsel were employed was charged with collusion amounting to fraud.

In the exercise of his discretion the Taxing Master considered that the case was one in which it was proper to allow the costs of a second Counsel. I have been unable to see in the argument addressed to me anything to lead me to suppose that this discretion was wrongly exercised.

I therefore hold that the objection was ill-founded, and the exceptions will be disallowed with costs.

[895] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 26th March, 1897.

PRESENT.

SIR FRANCIS WILLIAM MACLEAN, KNIGHT, CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Kristodhone Ghose........... Plaintiff

Landlord and Tenant--Suit for enhancement of rent—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), section 29--Enhancement of rent by contract by more than two-annas in the rupee—Void Agreement—Contract Act (IX of 1872), sections 23 and 24.

A contract under section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, to pay an enhanced rent by more than two-annas in the rupee, is void.

THE facts of the case, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of this report, and the arguments, appear sufficiently from the judgment of the High Court.

Sir Griffith Evans and Babu Jasoda Nundan Pramanick for the Appellant.

Babu Nil Madhub Bose and Babu Lal Mohan Ganguly for the Respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and BANERJEE, J.) was as follows:—

Maclean, C.J. (BANERJEE, J. concurring).—This appeal raises a very short point. The plaintiff is a zemindar, the defendant is his tenant. By the kabuliat

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 868 of 1895, against the decree of F. B. Taylor, Esq., District Judge of Moorshidabad, dated the 18th of March 1895, modifying the decree of Babu Kapali Prasanna Mukerjee, Munsif of Kandi, dated the 28th of December 1894.

the defendant agreed to pay the plaintiff an enhanced rent of Rs. 12-12-10. This enhancement exceeds, by more than two-annas in the rupee, the rent previously paid by the tenant. By section 28 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it is provided that "where an occupancy raiyat pays his rent in money, his rent shall not be enhanced except as provided by this Act." By section 29 the money rent may be enhanced by contract, and by sub-section (b) it must not be enhanced so as to exceed, by more than two-annas in the rupee, the rent previously payable by the raiyat. The plaintiff is suing the defendant for the enhanced rent; the latter says the [896] agreement contravenes the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and having regard to sections 23 and 24 of the Contract Act (Act IX of 1872) the agreement is void. I think he is right. But the appellant contends that the contract is severable, and that the good part can be severed from the bad, and a decree given for the good part, that is for so much of the enhanced rent as does not exceed the two-annas in the rupee. I am unable to accept this view. The object of the Bengal Tenancy Act is, I take it, protection of the raiyat. If the appellant's contention be sound, the landlord could enter into an agreement for an enhanced rent far beyond the statutory limit, run the risk of the raiyat subsequently disputing it, and if he did, then ask the Court to give him an enhancement only within the statutory limit. To adopt this view would, in my opinion, be very injurious to the raiyat Here the contract is to pay the enhanced rent, the contract, qua the payment of the enhanced rent, does not consist of two parts. How is the Court in this case to sever the illegal from the legal part of the contract? If it cannot do so the contract is void. If the appellant's argument be well founded, it would have the consequence I have indicated; he, in effect, is asking us to make a new contract for the parties. This view is consonant with those expressed in Pickering v. Ilfracombe Railway Company [L. R, 3 Com Pleas., 235 (250)] and Baker v. Hedgecock (L. R., 39 Ch. Div., 520). As Mr Justice CHITTY said in the latter case, "the Court cannot create or carve out a new covenant for the sake of validating an instrument which would otherwise be void." This view is in accord with that expressed by Mr. Justice RAMPINI in the unreported case of Monmohun Sarkar v. Anath Mondol (Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 365 of 1894) which has been referred to.

In my opinion the District Judge was right in holding that the agreement was void under the sections I have referred to, of the Contract Act and of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In this view it becomes immaterial to go into the question which rested upon the effect of sections 67 and 178 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The appeal must be dismissed with costs

SIR FRANCIS WILLIAM MACLEAN, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE AND MR JUSTICE BANERJEE

Alokeshi Dassi .. Defendant No. 1

Hara Chand Dass .. Plaintiff *

Specific performance—Unsuccessful Denial of Contract by defendant—Dismissal of the suit for non-payment of the balance of the consideration money within the stipulated period—Right of plaintiff to return of deposit of the part of the consideration money paid, where specific performance is refused—Equity and good conscience—Bengal, N-W P and Assam Civil Courts Act (XII of 1887), section 37

In a suit for specific performance of a contract, the defendant denied the contract in toto. The Lower Appellate Court, while finding that there was a contract between the parties, refused to grant specific performance on the ground that the plaintiff failed to pay the balance of the consideration money on the stipulated day but made a decree for the refund of the deposit. On appeal by the defendant to the High Court, Held, that inasmuch as the defendant unsuccessfully denied the contract in toto, and as there was no repudiation of the contract by the plaintiff he (the plaintiff) was entitled to a refund of the deposit made by him

THE facts of the case, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of this report and the arguments, appear sufficiently from the judgments of the High Court.

Babu Boidyo Nath Dutt for the Appellant

Babu Lal Behary Mitter for the Respondent

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and BANERJEE, J) —

Maclean, C.J.—This is a suit by the purchaser for specific performance of a contract to purchase certain property for Rs 525 The defendant No. 1 denied the contract in toto, and said that the plaintiff's case was wholly false. That was his defence

The matter was tried out by the Munsif, who dismissed the plaintiff's suit The Subordinate Judge found that there was a contract between the parties, and disbelieved the defendant's [898] case, but refused to grant specific performance on the ground that the plaintiff was in default in not paying the purchase money upon the stipulated day The agreement was an oral agreement, and there is no finding of fact in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge that the plaintiff ever agreed to pay the purchase money within one month from the date of the contract The Judge finds as a fact that the defendant agreed to execute a conveyance within a month, and he infers from that, and I dare say the inference is well-founded, that there was an agreement on the part of the plaintiff to pay the balance of the purchase money within that period, but there is no distinct finding of fact by the Subordinate Judge on that point. Be that as it may, however, the Subordinate Judge refused to make a decree for specific performance. There is no appeal on that point, so I need say nothing as to that part of the case. The plaintiff, however, had paid by way of deposit, or, as the appellant's Vakil puts it, by way of earnest money, a sum of about Rs. 100. It is found as a fact by the Court below, and the fact is not challenged, nor could it be challenged, that that money was paid by the plaintiff to the defendant. The defendant insists on keeping that Rs. 100. The plaintiff contends that if not entitled to specific performance she, at any rate, is entitled to a return of her deposit. The Subordinate Judge accepted that view and has made a decree for the return of the deposit. The defendant appeals against that decision. The defendant, who, as I have pointed out, set up that there was no contract at all, now insists upon retaining the deposit. I think she is not so entitled. It is admitted that there is nothing either in the Specific Relief Act or in the Contract Act which touches the question. We have, therefore, to consider what is just and equitable, and may fairly consider the law in England upon the subject.

There are, I need scarcely say, various decisions in the English Courts upon the point, but I do not propose to go into them in detail. The learned Vakil for the appellant cited the case of Howe v. Smith (L R., 27 Ch. Div., 89). He cited that case as a decision in his favour, but the facts of that case are so different from the facts of this case that it has very little application. The case, however, is [899] valuable as illustrating what the late Lord Justice COTTON regarded as the principle upon which questions of this class are to be decided—a view which was not dissented from by the other Lord Justices who were members of the Court. At p. 95 of the report Lord Justice COTTON says: "I do not say that in all cases where this Court would refuse specific performance the vendor ought to be entitled to retain the deposit. It may well be that there may be circumstances which would justify this Court in declining, and which would require the Court, according to its ordinary rules, to refuse to order specific performance, in which it could not be said that the purchaser had repudiated the contract, or that he had entirely put an end to it, so as to enable the vendor to retain the deposit. In order to enable the vendor so to act, in my opinion there must be acts on the part of the purchaser, which not only amount to delay sufficient to deprive him of the equitable remedy of specific performance, but which would make his conduct amount to a repudiation on his part of the contract."

In the present case there are no facts found by the learned Subordinate Judge to show that the plaintiff by her delay had lost her right to specific performance, or any conduct on her part such as to amount to a repudiation of the contract. On the contrary, the facts rather point in the opposite direction. In a case such as the present, where the defendant unsuccessfully denied the contract in toto, and where there has been no repudiation of the contract by the plaintiff, but on the other hand an attempt to enforce it, I do not think it would be equitable that the defendant should be allowed to retain the deposit.

On these grounds it seems to me that the judgment of the Court below is correct, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Banerjee, J—I am of the same opinion. It being admitted on both sides that there is nothing either in the Contract Act or in the Specific Relief Act applicable to this case, it must, by sub-section 2 of section 37 of Act XII of 1887, be governed by the rules of justice, equity and good conscience. Now, is there anything in justice, equity and good conscience to entitle the defendant

No. 1 in this case to retain the money that was paid by the plaintiff as part of the consideration money for the sale of immoveable property that was contracted for? The [900] answer to this question must be in the negative. For upon the facts found it is impossible to say that the defendant No. 1 has made out any case to entitle her to retain this money as against the plaintiff. Her defence was not that by reason of any default of the plaintiff she had been damnified and that she was therefore entitled to retain the money. Her defence was an utter denial of the contract, a denial which has been found to be false.

That being so, and the only grounds upon which the plaintiff's prayer for specific performance has been refused being, firstly, that the plaintiff did not tender the balance of the purchase money within the time mentioned in his plaint, and, secondly, that the defendant No. 2 has purchased the property for value in good faith without notice of the contract in favour of the plaintiff, I do not think that there is anything to justify the defendant No. 1 in retaining the deposit.

As to the case cited, Howe v. Smith (L. R., 27 Ch. Div. 89) as pointed out by the learned Chief Justice, that case is no authority for the broad proposition contended for by the learned Vakil for the appellant. That case itself shows that it is not in every case where there is default in performance of a contract that the vendor is entitled to retain the deposit. He is entitled to do so only under special circumstances, none of which exist in this case.

S. C. G. Appeal dismissed.

NOTES.

["It does not necessarily follow from the dismissal of a suit for specific performance that an order for the refund of any part-payment of the purchase-money should also be denied. If any authority as to this be required, we need only refer to the cases of (1896) 21 Bom., 827; (1897) 24 Cal., 897; (1908) 31 All., 68; (1884) 27 Ch. D., 89; (1903) 27 Mad., 380. The plaintiff could, notwithstanding that his suit for specific performance had been dismissed, and no matter on what ground it failed, have brought a suit for the recovery of his deposit. This is, we think, clear from the terms of Sec., 29 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, and the case of (1903) 27 Mad., 380." .– (1912) 17 C.W.N., 100: 15 I.C., 268.]

SIR FRANCIS WILLIAM MACLEAN, KNIGHT, CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Peary Mohun Mookerjee............Petitioner

Ambica Churn Bandopadhya, Chairman of the Municipal Commissioners of Utterparah............Opposite Party.*

Res judicata—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), section 13, Explanation II—Dismissal of suit for want of notice, and also upon the merits—Matter directly and substantially in issue finally heard and decided—Bengal Municipal Act (Bengal Act III of 1884), section 363.

In a suit brought by one A against C for damages for not removing certain offensive matter from his land, the questions raised were, whether there was notice, and whether the defendant was bound to remove the filth from the plaintiff's property. The Court having found that there was no notice [901] which in its opinion was a ground sufficient for dismissal of the suit under section 363* of the Bengal Municipal Act, and also upon the merits, having come to the conclusion that the defendant was not bound to remove the offensive matter from the plaintiff's land, dismissed the suit. In a subsequent suit between the same parties, the plaintiff claiming the same relief as in the previous suit, the defence was that the suit was barred as res judicata.

Held, that inasmuch as the matter directly and substantially in issue in the subsequent suit, was directly and substantially in issue in the previous suit, and as it was finally heard and decided between the same parties, notwithstanding the fact that the previous suit failed by reason of the decision of the Court upon some other matter as well, the subsequent suit was barred as res judicata.

Shib Charan Lal v. Raghu Nath (I. L. R., 17 All., 174) distinguished.

THE facts of this rule and the arguments are fully set out in the judgments of the High Court.

Babu Giris Chunder Chowdhry in support of the rule.

Babu Bhobani Churn Dutt to show cause.

The following judgments were delivered by the Court (MACLEAN, C. J., and BANERJEE, J.): –

Maclean, C. J.—I have had the advantage of reading Mr. Justice BANERJEE'S judgment in this case, and I concur in the conclusion at which he arrives. He has gone so fully into the matter that I purpose to state very shortly the grounds upon which I consider this rule ought to be discharged. The only question we have to decide is, whether the plea of res judicata ought to prevail. Admittedly the present plaintiff, some short time ago, brought a suit against the present defendant claiming identically the same relief as is sought by the present suit, that is to say, damages against the defendant for not removing certain offensive matter from certain property belonging to the plaintiff. This suit failed upon two grounds: (1) want of notice under section 363 of the Bengal Municipal Act: (2) that upon the merits the defendants were not liable. The merits admittedly were gone into in that suit, and the suit was decided against the present plaintiff. The present suit is for the non-removal of the offensive matter over a subsequent period; the issue, however, in dispute is really identical.

The question we now have to decide is whether, having [902] regard to section 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and explanation II to that section, the matter directly and substantially in issue in the present suit was heard and finally decided by a Court of competent jurisdiction in a former suit between the same parties. I think it was. The only ground alleged for the present suit not being barred by the plea of res judicata is that, inasmuch as the Court, in the previous suit, decided that the suit must fail for want of previous notice (I refrain from expressing any opinion as to whether, having regard to the language of section 363 of Bengal Act III of 1884, that and unless such notice be proved, the Court shall find for the defendant.

*[Sec. 363:—No suit shall be brought against the Commissioners of any municipality, or any of their officers, or any person acting under their direction, for anything done under this Act, until the expiration of one month next after notice in writing has been delivered or left at the office of such Commissioners, and also (if the suit is intended to be brought against any officer of the said Commissioners or any person acting under their direction) at the place of abode of the person against whom such suit is threatened to be brought, stating the cause of suit and the name and place of abode of the person who intends to bring the suit;

No action to be brought against the Commissioners or their officers until after one month's notice of cause of action.

Every such action shall be commenced within three months next after the accrual of the cause of action, and not afterwards.

If the Commissioners or their officer, or any person to whom any such notice is given, shall before suit is brought, tender sufficient amends to the plaintiff, such plaintiff shall not recover.]

view is sound), it became unnecessary to go into the other issues, and therefore that the merits cannot be regarded as so gone into in the previous suit as to entitle the defendants to say that the matter of the present suit was "directly and substantially" in issue and heard and finally decided in the former suit. But the answer to that argument appears to me to be that, in point of fact, the question, with the knowledge and assent of both the litigating parties, was gone into, was directly and substantially put in issue, and was heard and finally decided. Why was the question the less directly and substantially in issue, and not heard or finally decided, because the Court also decided another point which, if right, would have decided the suit, but which if wrong would not have done so. The decision upon the merits formed an additional ground for the dismissal of the suit; and both sides invited that decision. The plaintiff might have invited the decision of the Court upon the question of notice alone, and if that were given against him have declined to go into the merits. But he did not adopt that course, he allowed the merits, that is, the question of the defendant's liability, to be gone into, and took his chance of a decision in his favour. Can he turn round now and say they were not gone into or finally adjudicated upon? The question of the liability of the defendant to remove the offensive matter from the plaintiff's property was clearly matter "directly and substantially" in issue in the former suit, and it is the sole question now in issue in the present suit In the previous suit the plaintiff invited a decision upon the question of such liability, and the Court gave its decision upon the matter. The petitioner places great reliance upon the case of Shib Charan Lal v. Raghunath (I. L. R., 17 All, 174). For the reasons given by [903] Mr Justice BANERJEE, I think that case is distinguishable; the facts in the present case are very different. The rule must be discharged with costs.

Banerjee, J.—The petitioner before us, who was the plaintiff in the Court below, asks us under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act to set aside the decree of the lower Court, dismissing his suit for damages against the opposite party, the Chairman of the Municipal Commissioners of Utterparah.

The suit was brought by the plaintiff on the allegation that the defendant had wrongfully refused to remove offensive matter from certain property belonging to him, and that he had consequently been obliged to incur expense for removing the same. The defence was that the defendant was not liable to remove offensive matter from the plaintiff's property, and that the question of the defendant's liability was res judicata by reason of its having been decided against the plaintiff in a former suit brought by the plaintiff in respect of similar damages for a previous period. The Court below has given effect to the plea of res judicata and dismissed the suit, without going into the merits.

The learned Vakil for the petitioner contends that this decision is wrong, and that the judgment in the former suit is no bar to the present, as the decision in that suit upon the issue as to the defendant's liability was not necessary for the disposal of the case, the suit having failed for want of previous notice as required by section 363 of the Bengal Municipal Act; and in support of his contention the case of Shib Charan Lal v. Raghunath (I. L. R., 17 All., 174) is relied upon.

I am of opinion that this contention is not correct. It is true that in the former suit the Court decided, not only the issue as to the defendant's liability, but also that as to notice, against the plaintiff; and it is true also that in the absence of proof of notice, a suit against the Municipal Commissioners for anything done under Bengal Act III of 1884 must be dismissed under section 363 of the Act. But in the first place, it is doubtful whether the former suit came under section 363 when the suit was not for "anything done" under the Municipal Act, but for something left undone which, according to the plaintiff's contention, the [904] Municipality was bound to do. And in the second place, even if that suit came under section 363, it does not follow that, because the suit failed for want of notice, the adjudication of the Court upon the question of the defendant's liability is no bar to its trial in a fresh suit when the question was raised, as it ought to have been, by the parties in the former suit, and the decision thereon formed an additional ground for the dismissal of the suit.

Section 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure enacts that "no Court shall try any suit or issue in which the matter directly and substantially in issue has been directly and substantially in issue in a former suit between the same parties"—I quote only so much of the section as bears upon the question now before us—"in a Court of jurisdiction competent to try such subsequent suit or the suit in which such issue has been subsequently raised, and has been heard and finally decided by such Court;" and explanation II of the section says that "any matter which might and ought to have been made ground of defence or attack in such former suit shall be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in such suit." Now the question of the liability of the defendant to remove filth from the plaintiff's property was clearly matter "directly and substantially in issue" in the former suit, as it is in this, in every sense of the expression; and the question is, was it any the less so in the former suit because that suit failed by reason of the decision of the Court upon some other matter as well?

When more questions than one arise in a suit, according to the circumstances of the case, depending upon the nature of the questions and of the decision arrived at, it may be either necessary to decide them all, or sufficient to decide only some of them, for the disposal of the suit.

The first case presents no difficulty so far as the point raised before us is concerned; but the case we have to consider is not one of that description. In cases of the second class, the Court may either decide only the questions that are found necessary to decide (and in that event no difficulty will arise) or it may decide all the questions raised.

In this latter class of cases again, the Court may either embody the result of its decision upon every question in the decree in [905] the form of a declaration or otherwise (and in that event too no difficulty can arise) or it may not do so.

Cases of this last mentioned description again sub-divide into two classes, in one of which the decree is supported by the decision upon each of the questions determined (and the case we have to consider is one of that description), and in the other it is in spite of the decision upon some of those questions, as, for instance, where a suit fails upon the question of limitation or of some preliminary notice, but the question of title is found for the plaintiff.

The case we are dealing with, not being of this latter description, it is not necessary to consider whether the Full Bench decision in Niamut Khan v. Phadu Buldia (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 319) is good law, or whether it has been in effect overruled by the Privy Council in Run Bahadoor Singh v. Lucho Koer (I. L. R. 11 Cal., 301: L. R., 12 I. A., 23)—a question which may be taken as settled by the cases of Nando Lall Bhuttacharjee v. Bidhu Mookhy Debee (I. L. R., 13 Cal., 17) and Thakur Magundeo v. Thakur Mahadeo Singh (I. L. R., 18 Cal., 647).

The judgment in the former suit, which is here made the basis of the plea of res judicata, determines each of the two questions raised, namely the question of notice and that of the defendant's liability against the plaintiff; and the question of the defendant's liability was raised as directly and substantially in the former suit as it is in this. So that it cannot be said, either that the decision in the former suit upon the question of the defendant's liability was superseded by the decree by reason of the decree being in spite of that decision, or that the question was not a direct and substantial question in the case. If the question of notice had been found for the plaintiff, the question of the defendant's liability would clearly have been a direct and substantial question in the case. Can it then be said that it ceased to be so by reason of the decision upon the question of notice which came to be considered prior to the other question as being prior in point of logical order? Having regard to the language of explanation II of section 13, quoted above, which [906] makes any matter which might or ought to have been made ground of attack or defence come within the description of matter directly and substantially in issue, I find it very difficult to say that this question should be answered in the affirmative. It may no doubt be argued that as the plaintiff could not have taken advantage of any favourable finding in the former judgment on the question of the defendant's liability by reason of the decree being in spite of such finding, he ought not to be held bound by any unfavourable finding on that question. But the answer to that argument is this, that the plaintiff might well have avoided the effect of an adverse finding on the question of liability by asking the Court to determine first the question of notice, and not to go into the question of liability if the question of notice was found against him. If instead of doing that, the plaintiff led the Court and his adversary to go into the whole question of the liability of the defendant, presumably at considerable expense of time to both, it is too late now for him to complain of the result; and we should not be keeping in view the reason for the rule of res judicata which is to give finality to litigation, and to prevent any one from being twice vexed for the same matter, if we were to hold that the decision in the former suit does not operate as res judicata.

There is one other point of view suggested by the language of the former judgment from which the question might be viewed. Though the Court in the previous suit decided the question of notice against the plaintiff, it seems that it came to a somewhat hesitating decision upon that point, and so, to strengthen its conclusion that the suit ought to be dismissed, it went into the question of the defendant's liability as well, and found that no liability was established. If that was so, it could not be said that the decision upon the question of liability was not necessary for the disposal of the suit.

The only authority cited in support of the view contended for by the learned Vakil for the petitioner is the case of Shib Charan Lal v. Raghunath (I. L. R., 17 All., 174). That case is, however, quite distinguishable from the present. For the question for decision in that case was, whether the finding as to title in favour of the plaintiff in a former suit under section 42 of the [907] Specific Relief Act, which was dismissed by reason of the plaintiff being found to be out of possession, and therefore not entitled to ask for a mere declaratory decree, could operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit, and the question was, as it ought to have been, answered in the negative, the decree in the previous suit having been in spite of the finding in favour of the plaintiff upon the question of title, and having, therefore, in effect superseded that finding. That is not, as I said above, the nature of the question in this case. It is true that the learned Judges in their judgment in Shib Charan Lal v. Raghunath (I. L. R., 17 All., 174) observe: "Further if there were two findings of fact, either of which would justify in law the making of the decree which was made, that one of such two findings of fact which should in the logical sequence of necessary issues have been first found and the finding of which would have rendered the other of such two findings unnecessary for the making of the decree which was made, is the finding which can in our opinion operate as res judicata." And these observations no doubt are in favour of the petitioner. But they were not necessary for the decision of the case; and with all respect for the learned Judges who made those observations

I am unable, for the reasons given above, to follow in this case the rule embodied in them. I may add that, though the decision of either of two issues may be sufficient for the determination of a case, and though their logical sequence may be clear, yet where a Court does go into both of them instead of resting its conclusion upon the decision of that one of them which comes prior in point of logical order, it is not always easy or safe to say that the decision of the last mentioned issue alone was in fact necessary, and that the decision upon the other issue was superfluous.

When the law prohibits a second trial, not only of a suit for the same matter, but also of a direct and substantial issue in it, it is impossible to avoid the conclusion arrived at by the lower Court.

For the foregoing reasons, I think that the Court below was right in its decision, and that this rule ought to be discharged with costs.

S. C. G. Rule discharged.

SIR FRANCIS WILLIAM MACLEAN, KNIGHT, CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY, MR JUSTICE TREVELYAN, MR. JUSTICE BEVERLEY AND MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Ramanath Ghose............Plaintiff.*

Compromise of Suit— Recording compromise—Agreement made out of Court, and comprising also matters not the subject of suit—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), section 375.

Held, by the majority of the Full Bench, MACLEAN, C J., and TREVELYAN and BANERJEE, JJ., (O'KINEALY and BEVERLEY, JJ, dissenting) that where the parties to a suit have by an agreement adjusted the subject-matter of the suit, the Court can, by an order made in the suit under section 375 † of the Code of Civil Procedure, direct such agreement to be recorded, and make a decree in accordance therewith, even if one of the parties to the agreement object.

Held (per O'KINEALY and BEVERLEY, JJ) that the Court could not make such an order, the case not being one to which section 375 applied

* Reference to a Full Bench in Appeal from Original Decree No. 18 of 1896.

† [Sec. 375:—If a suit be adjusted wholly or in part by any lawful agreement or compromise, or if the defendant satisfy the plaintiff in respect to the whole or any part of the matter of the suit, such agreement, compromise or satisfaction shall be recorded, and the Court shall pass a decree in accordance therewith so far as it relates to the suit, and such decree shall be final, so far as relates to so much of the subject-matter of the suit as is dealt with by the agreement, compromise or satisfaction.]

Compromise of suits.

Per O'KINEALY, J —The High Court, on its Original Side, exercising the equitable jurisdiction of the High Court of Chancery, would not on a contested motion give a decree of this nature

Per BEVERLEY, J —Section 375 only applies to cases where the adjustment or satisfaction is made in Court, and should not be extended to cases adjusted out of Court

THIS case was referred to a Full Bench by MACLEAN, C.J., MACPHERSON and TREVELYAN, JJ, sitting as a Court of Appeal from decisions of the High Court in its Original Civil Jurisdiction. The reference was in the following terms —

"1. There has been much litigation between the plaintiff and defendant both in the Criminal and Civil Courts Amongst other litigation was the present suit, which was instituted on the 29th June 1893, by which the plaintiff sought an account against the defendant as his agent

"2 By an agreement, dated the 19th May 1894, the defendant agreed 'to consent to a decree for an account now pending in the [909] High Court, Original Side (being suit No 397 of 1893) within a week from date,' i.e, from the 19th May 1894 The suit No 397 is the present suit.

"3 On the 11th June 1894 the defendant instituted a suit to have that agreement set aside on the ground of duress and undue influence and pressure. That suit came on for hearing in due course, and the agreement was held to be valid by Mr Justice SALE, whose decision was recently affirmed on appeal by ourselves It must be taken, therefore, for the present purpose, that the defendant has entered into a valid and binding agreement, and has agreed to consent to a decree for an account in the present suit.

"4 Under these circumstances the plaintiff asks, under section 375 of the Code, to have the agreement recorded, and a decree made in accordance with the above agreement Mr Justice SALE made the decree as asked. The defendant contends that even where there has been an agreement, as in the present case, to adjust the suit, the Court can only act under section 375 upon that agreement if both parties consent, and that if they do not consent the agreement can only be enforced by a fresh suit for specific performance. The defendant relies upon the case of Harasundari Debi v. Dukhinessur Malia (I L R, 11 Cal, 250) The plaintiff relies upon the following cases: — Venkatappa Nayanim v Thimma Nayanim (I L R, 18 Mad, 410), Ruttonsey Lalji v Poori Bai (I L R, 7 Bom, 304), The Goculdas Bulabdas Manufacturing Company v Scott (I L R, 16 Bom, 202), Appasami v Manikam (I. L. R., 9 Mad, 103), and Sami Bai v Premji Pragji (I L R, 20 Bom, 304).

"We are unanimously of opinion that the view urged by the plaintiff and adopted by Mr Justice SALE is the correct one, but as our opinion is at variance with that expressed by the Court in the case of Harasundari Debi v Dukhinessur Malia (I L R, 11 Cal, 250), we refer to a Full Bench the following question Whether, when the parties to a suit have by an agreement adjusted the subject-matter of the suit, the Court can, or cannot, by an order made in the suit, order such agreement to be recorded, and make a decree in accordance with it, if one of the parties to such agreement object"

[910] The agreement of the 19th May was as follows —

"In consideration of your releasing me from arrest in execution of the decree in rent suit No 22 of 1893 of the Second Subordinate Judge of Hooghly, I do hereby agree—(1) to execute in your favour within three days from date a proper document as you might require disclaiming all interest in the properties in Sylhet, the subject-matter of suit No. 82 of 1893, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sylhet, and undertaking not to interfere in any way with your management and peaceable possession of all your zemindaries in Sylhet, the subject-matter of the said suit or otherwise, (2) to consent to a decree for account in the suit now pending in the High Court, Original Side (being suit No. 397 of 1893) within a week from date; and (3) to withdraw within three days from date my application in the execution proceeding No. 9 of 1894 in suit No. 22 of 1893, in the said Subordinate Judge's Court at Hooghly under section 258 of the Civil Procedure Code, to have an alleged settlement recorded.

"I do also agree not to take any steps to disturb the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Sylhet in the said suit No. 82 of 1893, and dated the 26th March last, as well as to abandon my rights, if any, under the said alleged settlement put forward by me in the said application of mine under section 251 of the Civil Procedure Code, in the Court of the Second Subordinate Judge of Hooghly."

Mr. Hill (with him Mr. St. John Stephen) for the appellant.—Section 375 does not apply to this case, but is limited to cases where all parties consent that the compromise shall be recorded. The section refers to a purely ministerial act. Other sections of the Code show that where the parties are seeking in any way to regulate or affect the procedure in a case, provision is made for a judicial inquiry into the existence of the arrangement. For instance, in section 150 there is a provision for parties who desire to control the procedure. In section 151 there is provision made for a judicial inquiry as to the factum of the agreement. By section 523 the parties are given an opportunity of showing why the agreement should not be filed, again indicating that there is a judicial inquiry. So, with regard to payment into Court, before the Court can record anything, provision is made under section 379 that an acceptance of such an amount is not only in part satisfaction of the claim, but there must be a written admission stating the fact, and the statement must be filed.

In the case of payment to a decree-holder out of Court by section 258 the judgment-debtor may certify such payment, yet before the payment or adjustment can be recorded, provision is made for notice on the plaintiff to show cause against it.

[911] No similar provision for any inquiry into the factum of the agreement is made under section 375, therefore if the agreement be not admitted when the Court is asked to record it, the Court must try the question whether such an agreement was come to, under other sections of the Code. The cases cited show that other High Courts adopt that view; and that has been the practice of the Calcutta Court also

Again, other sections of the Code limit the issues to matters arising in the suit; and the Court cannot, at the instance of either party, inquire into matters outside the scope of the suit But the present agreement relates, not only to matters in the suit, but also to the execution of a decree in another suit in the Hooghly Court. It was on such a ground that the Court refused to record a similar agreement under section 375—see Fajalch Ali Miah v. Kumaruddin Bhuya (I L.R, 13 Cal, 170).

However that may be, on a trial of the question as to the factum of the agreement, and as to the relief sought thereon, every ground of defence which would be open to a party denying the agreement would be open to the appellant in this case. [The decision in Harasundari Debi v. Dukhinessur Malia (I.L.R., 11 Cal., 250) was also relied on.]

Mr. Woodroffe and Mr. Dunne for the respondent —It is incorrect to say that recording the agreement under section 375 is a purely ministerial act, for in doing so the Court exercises its judicial functions The construction sought to be put upon the section by the appellant is too limited, and there is nothing in the section itself to warrant such a construction. If the Court is satisfied that the suit was adjusted, wholly or in part, by any lawful agreement, it is bound to record the agreement, even if some of the parties do not consent. The section says nothing about a judicial inquiry; it merely gives a peremptory direction that the Court shall record the compromise. With the exception of the decision in Harasundari Debi v. Dukhinessur Malia (I.L.R., 11 Cal., 250) the authorities in all the Courts have been consistently against the contention now put forward. Counsel relied on the cases referred [912] to in the order of reference and on Karuppan v. Ramasami (I.L.R., 8 Mad., 482) and Appasami Nayakan v. Varadachari (I.L R, 19 Mad., 419).

The following judgments were delivered by the Full Bench :—

Maclean, C.J —The question for our decision is, "whether, when the parties to a suit, have by an agreement adjusted the subject-matter of the suit the Court can or cannot, by an order made in the suit, order such agreement to be recorded and make a decree in accordance with it, if one of the parties to such agreement object." Although the question does not specifically refer to section 375 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is clear from the terms of the reference, and it was admitted, that the question really submitted is whether the Court can make the order under that particular section.

It appears that there has been much litigation between the plaintiff and the defendant in the suit, both in the Criminal and Civil Courts, and ultimately they entered into the agreement, dated the 19th May 1894. By this agreement the defendant agreed (amongst other matters) "to consent to a decree for an account in the suit now pending in the High Court, Original Side (being suit No 397 of 1893) within a week from date," that is, from the date of the agreement, viz., the 19th May 1894. The suit No. 397 is the present suit. The agreement referred to other matters, and so far as the plaintiff is concerned the agreement has been performed on his part. On the 11th June 1894 the defendant instituted an action to have that agreement set aside on the ground of duress and pressure That suit came on for hearing in due course, and the agreement was held to be valid and binding by Mr Justice SALE, whose decision has recently been affirmed on appeal by this Court. It must be taken, therefore, for the present purpose, that the defendant has entered into a valid agreement —by valid agreement I mean lawful agreement— and has agreed to consent to a decree for an account in the present suit.

Under these circumstances the plaintiff asks under section 375 of the Code to have the agreement recorded and a decree made for an account in accordance with the clause of the agreement which I have read.

[913] Mr Justice SALE made the decree as asked, and an appeal was subsequently presented to this Court which has led to the present reference. The appellant contends that, even when there has been an agreement, as in the present case, to adjust the suit, the Court can only act under section 375 upon that agreement if both parties consent, and that if they do not consent, the agreement can only be enforced by a fresh suit for specific performance.

If this view be sound it would practically reduce section 375 to a nullity. The case is clearly within the language of section 375, which says nothing about the agreement being recorded, or the Court passing the decree, only with the consent of the parties at the time.

By this agreement the defendant has already agreed to consent to a decree for an account, and to say that section 375 can only apply, if, after that consent and in addition to it, the parties must again consent or continue to consent before the agreement can be recorded, or the decree made, would, to my mind, have the effect of introducing entirely new words, and an entirely fresh element, into the section, and for which I can find no warrant. It was strongly urged before us that if the section were held to apply, save by consent of both parties, the defendant would be in a worse position than if he were a defendant in a fresh suit for specific performance, as in the latter case he would have a right of appeal, and in the former none owing to the words in section 375 "and such decree shall be final." It may well be that the Legislature considered that if the parties adjusted their suit by agreement, and a decree was passed in accordance therewith, an end should then and there be put to the litigation and that no appeal should lie. But I do not think these words, even if they have the effect for which the appellant contends, can qualify, in the manner necessary to enable the appellant to succeed, the previous words of the section, which appear to me to be plain and clear.

I may point out that no preliminary objection to the appeal lying was taken by the respondents in the present case, and that in the case of Harasundari Debi v. Dukhinnessur Malia (I. L. R., 11 Cal., 250) it was distinctly held that an appeal would lie.

[914] It was urged that the agreement referred to matters other than the settlement of this suit, and that the Court cannot separate them, and consequently cannot make a decree in this suit, but must drive the parties to a further and separate litigation. In this particular case there is practically no such difficulty; the plaintiff has done all he had to do, and all the rest of the agreement has to be performed by the defendant. But in any case before making any decree on the footing of the agreement, the Court would necessarily provide that if anything were to be done by the plaintiff it should be done. In other words, qua the agreement, the Court would see that justice was done between the parties. The Court has equally the power of doing justice on an application to enforce the agreement in the particular suit, as it would have in the case of a new suit.

In my opinion, therefore, the view urged by the appellant is inconsistent with the language of the section, read as it ought to be read, in its natural and ordinary sense, and cannot prevail. The section is a salutary and a useful one. Its object is that, when the parties have by agreement adjusted their differences, effect shall be given to that agreement by the Court in the suit itself as rapidly and with as little expense as is practicable, in lieu of the Court relegating the parties to a fresh suit and to fresh litigation creating, as it necessarily would, further expense and further delay. The language of the section is strong, the agreement "shall" be recorded, and the Court "shall" pass the decree.

In the case of Scully v. Lord Dundonald (L. R., 8 Ch. Div., 669) Lord Justice COTTON said: "The plaintiff's claim has been established, not by trial of the action, but by agreement between the parties, and it would be unfortunate if we were obliged to say that the action must go on to decide what has already been settled by the parties." Those words are very pertinent to the present case.

My view of the construction of the section is, in accordance with what I might almost call a current of decisions, which I need not enumerate, as they have all been cited during the argument, in the High Courts of Madras and Bombay, as with several decisions of various Judges sitting as Judges of first instance in this Court. The only authority against this view is that of the [915] case I have referred to, Harasundari Debi v. Dukhinessur Malia (I. L. R, 11 Cal., 250.)

In that case I am by no means satisfied from the report that there was a concluded and binding agreement; it was apparently contingent upon the sanction of the Court, and before that sanction was obtained certain of the parties withdrew. Here we have a clear, definite and lawful agreement held by two Courts to be binding on the defendant But be that as it may, I am quite unable, for the reasons I have given as to the construction of section 375, to concur in the judgment in that case, which is quite at variance with the other cases to which I have referred. I answer the question in the affirmative.

O'Kinealy, J.—In June 1893 the respondent brought a suit on the Original Side of this Court against the appellant, basing it on an agreement entered into by the parties on the 15th July 1891 for an account of all his dealings with the estate in suit, for delivery of all papers, books, accounts, etc., relating to the estate, and for payment of all sums found due from him. There was also a prayor in the plaint in that suit that the appellant may be restrained by injunction from interfering with or in any way obstructing the management of the estate by the respondent. The suit was based, as I have said before, on an agreement, dated the 15th July 1891.

In answer the defendant objected to the jurisdiction of the Court, and denied that he at any time had acted as manager to the plaintiff or was liable to account. It appears, however, that subsequently, while the suit was pending, the defendant entered into an agreement with the plaintiff, which is dated 19th May 1894, and which is as follows :—(Reads agreement, ante p. 910).

This is an agreement consisting of several clauses. It appears from the order of reference that on the 11th June 1894 the defendant instituted a suit to have this agreement set aside on the ground of duress and undue influence, and upon the hearing of that suit it was held, both by the first Court and by the Court of appeal, that the agreement was valid and binding.

The Judge, who decided the present suit, said that immediately on the case being opened, the Counsel for the plaintiff applied [916] under section 375 of the Code to have the agreement of the 19th May 1894 recorded in the suit, and a decree made in accordance with clause 2 of that agreement. The Counsel for the appellant, the defendant in the Court below, admitted execution of the agreement, but refused his consent to have a decree drawn up in terms of section 375. Furthermore, he raised contentions in regard to the jurisdiction of the Court and the period of limitation applicable. These objections being set aside, the Judge proceeded to enter up a decree under section 375 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In his judgment he referred to the decision of a Divisional Bench of this Court— Harasundari Debi v. Dukhinessur Malia (I. L. R., 11 Cal., 250); and he also referred to some cases decided by the Bombay and Madras High Courts, in which a different view was taken of section 375. He pointed out that a different interpretation of the section from that arrived at in Harasundari Debi v. Dukhinessur Malia (I. L. R., 11 Cal., 250) had been adopted by various Judges sitting on the Original Side of this Court and declared that the practice of the Court had been governed in accordance therewith. He stated that on inquiry he had ascertained that on different occasions Judges of this Court had directed a preliminary issue to be tried as to the fact of an agreement sought to be recorded under section 375, where such agreement had been denied, and he referred to the recent case of Chogemull v. Kuppur Chand (unreported), in which that procedure was followed. He also referred to the case of Krishna Bibi v. Debi Pershad Agarwallah (unreported), in which the question was thoroughly argued and decided, and he recited the opinion that was expressed on that occasion. Under these circumstances the Judge has taken clause 2 out of the clauses of the agreement entered into between the parties, one of which was to be performed by the opposite party, and without discussing its meaning has on motion given specific performance of what is only a part of the agreement. He has further declared that in accordance with the law of this country a decree should be entered up under section 375 of the Code of Civil Procedure —a decree which is final and against which an appeal does not lie.

The defendant appealed, and the Judges before whom the appeal came have referred to us the following question :—

[917] "Whether, when the parties to a suit have by an agreement adjusted the subject-matter of the suit, the Court can, or cannot, by an order made in the suit, order such agreement to be recorded and make a decree in accordance with it, if one of the parties to such agreement object."

From the statement made in the order of reference it would appear that their Lordships were of opinion that by the agreement, dated the 19th May 1894, the defendant consented to a decree for an account in the suit now pending on the Original Side of this Court (being suit No. 397 of 1893) within a week from date, that is, from the 19th May 1894. The suit No. 397 is the present suit. This is quite correct, but subject to the qualification that it was an agreement not merely to consent to a decree, but an agreement in which it was also declared that several other things should be done, and it was not found that the opposite party had performed his portion or even agreed to perform. In paragraph 4 of the reference it is stated that the point is to be decided under section 375 of the Code of Civil Procedure, whether the Judge in the Court below was justified in having the agreement brought in and recorded, and in making a decree for an account in accordance with paragraph 2 of the above agreement. This is subject to the same qualification to which I have just referred, namely, that it was not a single agreement in regard to the suit, but an agreement for many things to be done.

The Judges referring this question agreed in the view adopted by the Court below; they disagreed with the decision reported in Harasundari Debi v. Dukhinessur Maha (I. L. R., 11 Cal., 250), and referred the question to a Full Bench.

It will be noticed that the question referred to the Full Bench does not in so many words refer to section 375 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and it was argued at the bar that it was unnecessary to decide any question in regard to this section so far as this suit is concerned. Looking, however, at paragraph 4 of the reference I think we must take two points into consideration: first, whether the judgment in this case is a judgment under section 375 of the Code, and, secondly, if it is not such a judgment whether it can be supported on any other grounds.

[918] In order to narrow the issue which was raised in this case, it is necessary to review the position which it assumes before us. The real question to be tried is this: Where in a suit for account on a kabuliyat, an agreement to consent to a decree for account is brought in, and the defendant objects to the jurisdiction of the Court and pleads limitation, and admitting execution of the agreement refuses to consent to a decree upon it under section 375, whether the Court can, under that section or any other law in force, decree specific performance of one clause of the agreement, and, furthermore, decree it in such a manner as to make the decree final and not open to appeal. That is the point which arises in this case and nothing else. For I conceive that no question of law could be decided by this Full Bench, unless the Judges considered that it arose in the suit.

In regard to the question referred to the Full Bench it was argued on behalf of the appellant that a final decree under section 375 cannot be made in a suit where there is any contest between the parties as to the agreement or the nature of it. It was further contended on behalf of the appellant that, even if this view of the section be incorrect, a Court acting under it is not empowered to break up the contract between the parties and give a decree upon a portion of it from which no appeal lies, leaving the remaining fragments of the agreement to be enforced or not enforced as the law directs. It was further contended on his behalf that this section had no application where the agreement provided for matters beyond the purview of the suit, and, in the latter case, the parties to the agreement should be left, as they were in similar cases by the High Court of Chancery, to settle the matters in a suit for specific performance.

In regard to the first portion of the argument the appellant asserted that in all cases under the Code, where any question of contest arises, there is a procedure set out by which that contest may be decided, and he referred to sections 150, 150*A*, 151, 153 and 157*A*, as instances. He also pointed out that under section 379, when satisfaction of a decree is entered up, it must be done in a certain manner. From this it was argued that as section 375 does not provide for any contest between the parties, a decree under that section cannot be made, unless the parties or their representatives apply in open Court [919] and submit to the terms of the agreement which should be entered up and recorded in a decree, and that there is a distinction between a consent decree on a compromise out of Court and a decree entered upon a compromise in Court—Ram Sahai Singh v. Dhunookdharee Singh (1 W. R., 266), Aushootosh Chandra v Tarapiasanna Roy (I L R., 10 Cal, 610). He submitted further that it gives no power to a Court to break up an agreement between the parties unless by consent at the time of judgment, and make a decree which would be final in respect of a portion of it, which in this case could not be done even in a suit for specific performance.

On the other side it was argued that there is no such limitation in the words of the section, that it applies equally well in cases of compromise out of Court or in Court, for litigants may at any time enter up a consent decree; that the Code must be construed as any other document—Bank of England v. Vagliano Brothers [L. R., (1891) A. C., 107], that the words "lawful agreement" show that the Court must have some means of determining whether an agreement is lawful or not, and that even when the engagement contains a number of items, whether they all refer to the suit or not, the Court can pick out any one of them and give a decree for it alone under section 375. It was further argued that even if section 375 did not apply to this case still under the equity procedure of this Court on the Original Side, the Court has the power to decide the case on motion.

It is conceded by both parties that the equitable jurisdiction of this Court on its Original Side is that of the High Court of Chancery in England. Neither party contends that the additional powers given to the Supreme Court of Judicature in 1873, or afterwards by Statute, has any application to this case, and this is of importance, because I think it will be seen that in most of the cases decided under section 375 the Judges were greatly influenced by the idea that the Courts in India, from the highest to the lowest, had all the powers of the Supreme Court of Judicature in England.

Section 375 of the Code, as is pointed out in Harasundari Debi v. Dukhinessur Malia (I. L. R., 11 Cal., 250), is only a modification of section [920] 98 of Act VIII of 1859. The relation of that section to the previous law and the old Regulations has been pointed out in the case of Konnapalen Uthatchadayan Haji v Perotta Meloden Ramen Nambiar (4 Mad. H. C., 422) which will be referred to hereafter.

Section 98 runs as follows: "If a suit shall be adjusted by mutual agreement or compromise, or if the defendant satisfy the plaintiff in respect to the matter of the suit, such agreement, compromise or satisfaction shall be recorded, and the suit shall be disposed of in accordance therewith. On the application of the plaintiff reciting the substance of such agreement, compromise or satisfaction, the Court, if satisfied that such agreement, compromise or satisfaction has been actually entered into or made, shall grant a certificate to the plaintiff authorizing him to receive back from the Collector the full amount of stamp-duty paid on the plaint, if the application shall have been presented before the settlement of issues, or half the amount if presented at any time after the settlement of issues and before any witness has been examined.

Provided, however, that no such certificate shall be granted, if the adjustment between the parties be such as to require a decree to pass on which process of execution can be taken out."

The latter portion of section 98 was modified by Act X of 1862, section 26, and by section 9 of Act XLII of 1860. Act X of 1862, section 26 runs as follows: "In modification of so much of section 98 of the Code of Civil Procedure as declares that on the application of the plaintiff reciting the substance of any agreement, compromise or satisfaction in accordance with which a suit is adjusted and disposed of, the Court, if satisfied that such agreement, compromise or satisfaction has been actually entered into or made, shall grant a certificate to the plaintiff, authorizing him to recover back from the Collector the full amount of the stamp-duty paid on the plaint, if the plaint shall have been presented before the settlement of issues, or half the amount if presented at any time after the settlement of issues and before any witness shall have been examined, it is enacted that if such application shall have been presented before the suit is called for the settlement of issues, or in suits in which [921] the summons to the defendant shall be for the final disposal of the suit, as directed in section 41 of the same Code, and in section 9 of Act XLII of 1860 (for the establishment of Courts of Small Causes beyond the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Supreme Courts established by Royal Charter) before the hearing of the suit has commenced, the Court, if satisfied that such agreement, compromise or satisfaction has been actually entered into or made, shall grant a certificate to the plaintiff authorizing him to receive back from the Collector half the amount of the stamp-duty paid on the plaint. Provided that no such certificate shall be granted if the adjustment between the parties be such as to require a decree to pass, on which process of execution can be taken out, or in any appealed suit"

The first question necessary to decide is what was the view which the Judges took of section 98 of Act VIII of 1859. Did it apply to agreements out of Court or in Court; whether it covered a contest or not; whether it justified, as has been contended in the present case, the Court in entering up a decree under that section, on one clause of an agreement which related to several matters, some of which were and some were not connected with the suit in question; what was the practice in entering up a decree.

The earliest decision I can find on this point is the case of Bishtoo Chunder Roy Chowdhry v. Parbutty Debia (Marsh., 274). In that case both parties filed, according to the well-known practice of the Courts in the Mofussil, petitions of compromise, and the only question was as to the amount of stamp duty to be refunded. The decision is of little importance except as a guide to what was then the practice—See Luchmun Ram v. Watson & Co. [W. R. Gap. No. (1864) 146].

The next case is that in 1 Madras High Court Reports, 127. In that, too, the compromise effected was after suit brought and in open Court.

Following this is the decision in the case of Konnapalen Uthatchadayan Haji v. Perotta Meloden Ramen Nambiar (4 Mad. H. C., 422), to which I have already referred. That was a decision of BITTLESTON and INNES, JJ., one, if not both, having been Judges of the Supreme [922] Court. Their interpretation of the section was as follows: "That section provides that, if a suit shall be adjusted by mutual agreement or compromise, such agreement or compromise shall be recorded, and the suit shall be disposed of in accordance therewith, and the question is whether this suit was adjusted by mutual agreement or compromise, so that it could be disposed of in accordance therewith. We think that what is meant by this language is, that the parties should agree upon some terms respecting the subject-matter of the suit which are capable of being embodied in a decree whereby the suit would be disposed of. In the present case there certainly was no such agreement, but only an agreement that, if the defendants should do certain things, a decree should be passed in favour of one party, and if they should fail to do those things then in favour of the other party, so that what decree should be passed would depend upon the result of an inquiry, whether subsequently to the agreement certain acts had or had not been performed. The suit was not adjusted by the agreement, and the decree which was passed was admittedly not a decree by consent. It was a decree passed against the strong objection and protest of the third defendant, the present appellant, and we think that having been given without any investigation of the merits and not in accordance with any procedure sanctioned by law, it must be set aside, and the case restored to the file of the Principal Sudder Amin for investigation on the merits."

In this case the compromise was filed in Court.

This decision was considered in 1879 by the Madras High Court in the case of Vasudeva Shanbog v. Naraina Pai (I. L R., 2 Mad., 356), and the view taken in it was confirmed. In that case the Judges said:—

"After the Code of Civil Procedure became law, the Regulation (III) of 1802 was repealed by Act X of 1861; and, alluding to this fact, the High Court ruled that the sections relating to the settlement of suits by oath, when the parties mutually consent to that mode of settlement, being repealed, the Courts no longer possess the power of following that procedure, though there is nothing to [923] prevent the Courts, if they have the means, from facilitating a settlement of this nature by the parties by satisfying themselves that the necessary conditions are fulfilled. The proper procedure under this proviso was to examine the parties concerned after the oath is taken, to see that if the consent, originally expressed conditionally, was still adhered to, and then to pass a judgment by consent; but if the consent was then withdrawn, the Courts had no alternative, as held in Konnapalen Uthatchadayan Haji v. Peiotta Meloden Ramen Nambiar (4 Mad., H.C., 422), but to dispose of the case in the regular way."

The same decision was followed in Muhammad Zahur v. Cheda Lal (I. L. R., 14 All., 141). In that case the Judges decided that no decree could be entered up under section 375 of the present Code, where something else had to be done, such as examining a witness.

This too explains the remark of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of Her Majesty in Council in the case of Abdool Ali v. Mozuffer Hossein Chowdhry (16 W. R., P. C., 26), in which they say: "If there really had been an honest compromise made, the practice of the Courts is quite plain as to how that compromise ought to have been carried out; it ought to have been carried out by proper deeds and filed in Court, particularly where infants were concerned, so as to have had the assent of the Court at the time instead of its being totally concealed from them."

In short, the whole course of decisions under section 98, Act VIII of 1859, show without dissent that a compromise should under the proper practice be made by two deeds called a razinama and satinama and recorded in Court. But when parties did not enter into any such documents, but appeared in Court and consented to a compromise, the Judge could record it and give a decree thereon, though this was irregular. Further still, if the consent was withdrawn or something required to be done by the Court, the suit must be decided as a contentious suit. Further still, if the agreement contained terms giving relief in the alternative or referred to matters outside the suit, it did not fall within the section. I may add that the last view has been taken by a Division Bench of this Court in the case of Fajaleh Ali Meah v. Kamaruddin Bhuya (I. L. R., 13 Cal., 170) that section 375 of the present Code refers [924] only to a compromise which adjusts a suit wholly or in part, and not to one which goes beyond the suit. If this view be correct, it is clear that the compromise in the present case cannot be enforced under section 375 of the present Code.

And the reasons for these decisions are, I think, obvious. Act VIII of 1859 was an Act to simplify the procedure of the Civil Courts in the Mofussil, and did not apply to Courts established by Royal Charter, so Judges, considering that no change in the law was intended, followed the decision of the Sudder Dewani of 1851 in regard to compromises in Courts where agreements could not be enforced by motion. It was not till the High Court was established that Act VIII of 1859 affected the Original Side of this Court, and even then section 98 did not apply—Barrow v. Pollock (1 Hyde, 149).

In the case referred to, Mehadi Ali v. Kunwar Ram Chunder (unreported) four Judges of the Sudder Dewani decided as follows: "We are of opinion that, at any time before deeds of adjustment, withdrawal of claim, or the like which may have been filed in a Court by petition, have been brought before the Court for its order and decree in the case, a plaintiff is at full liberty on his own responsibility to recall any application which may have been made by the petition for the passing of a judgment by the Court in pursuance of such deeds, and to move the Court for an investigation of the merits of the suit. Any application preferred by a plaintiff can be withdrawn by him before the Court has taken it up and passed an order on it. It is the duty of a Court to investigate and decide on plaints laid before it, and it cannot refuse to perform that duty and hold the plaintiff bound by an arrangement which has never been completely carried out by sanction of the Court, and which for the purposes of the suit he repudiates. It is a distinct question whether the plaintiff can obtain any benefit from a decree should he gain one in his suit. Another suit may be brought against him by the adverse party to stay the execution of such a decree as well even under different circumstances, as to enforce damages against him on the ground of his being legally liable under agreements into which he may have entered. But this is matter separate from the plaintiff's right to have at [925] his own option an inquiry and award on his original plaint. Nothing can deprive him of that right, but his own act of withdrawal perfected by his acknowledgment of it in the face of the Court, and by the Court's sanction and adoption of it."

Act VIII of 1859 was repealed by Act X of 1877. It is described as an Act to consolidate and amend the laws relating to the procedure of the Court of Civil Jurisdiction. Section 98 of Act VIII of 1859 became section 375 of Act X. It ran as follows: "If a suit be adjusted by any lawful agreement or compromise, or if the defendant satisfy the plaintiff in respect to the matter of the suit, such agreement, compromise or satisfaction shall be recorded, and the Court shall pass a decree in accordance therewith so far as it relates to the suit, and such decree shall be final." This Act was repealed by Act XIV of 1882, in which section 375 runs as follows: "If a suit be adjusted wholly or in part by any lawful agreement or compromise, or if the defendant satisfy the plaintiff in respect to the whole or any part of the matter of the suit, such agreement, compromise or satisfaction shall be recorded, and the Court shall pass a decree in accordance therewith so far as it relates to the suit, and such decree shall be final so far as it relates to so much of the subject-matter of the suit as is dealt with by the agreement, compromise or satisfaction."

A comparison of these sections with section 98 of Act VIII will show how small is the difference between them, and even that difference does not refer to procedure but only to the scope of the section.

I do not feel any difficulty in dealing with the case of the Bank of England v. Vagliano [L. R., (1891) A. C., 107]. In the middle of page 145 of the report Lord HERSCHELL says that he is far from asserting that resort may never be had to the previous state of the law for the purpose of aiding in the construction of a provision of doubtful import, or where words have acquired a technical meaning. This latter remark, I think, applies to the word "compromise" under section 98 of Act VIII of 1859. Nor does it seem to me that any argument can be based on the words "lawful agreement."

[926] This was the law even before Act VIII of 1859 was in existence, as may be seen from the case of Gregory v. Cochrane (2 Moore, 181).

I will now turn to the cases referred to by the Judge in the Court below. Two classes quite distinct in their nature appear to have arisen—one where an agreement is set up and there is a defence which goes to show that the suit as laid in the plaint should be dismissed; the other, like the present case, where an agreement is brought into Court and performance is given of it in whole or in part.

The judgment in Fajaleh Ali Miah v. Kamaruddin Bhuya (I. L. R., 13 Cal., 170) appears to show that the Judge in the Court below is under a mistake in supposing that WILSON, J., ever held that one clause of the agreement, such as there is in this suit, could be brought in and specifically performed under section 375. Nor does the decision of Mr. Justice TREVELYAN support the present judgment. In a suit for partition, the parties agreed to divide the property in a certain way, one of them receded from the agreement, and Mr. Justice TREVELYAN, though considering the decision in Ruttonsey Lalji v. Poori Bai (I. L. R., 7 Bom, 304) good law, decided the case on the authority of Pryor v. Gribble (L. R., 10 Ch. App., 534). I concur in that decision. The case of Chogemull v. Kuppur Chand (unreported), I understand from Counsel at the bar, was settled out of Court. With reference to the Court-minute which porports to be an expression of the opinion of the Judge in the case of Krishna Bibi v. Debi Pershad Agrwallah (unreported) I am not aware what was the result of that case or whether any decree was entered up. I am inclined to think, although with some hesitation, that a Court-minute of the Judge's opinion is not a judgment. Neither the decree nor the nature of the suit is given

I now turn to the cases in the other Courts. The first case relied on is to be found in Ruttonsey Lalji v. Poori Bai (I.L.R., 7 Bom., 304).

In that case the suit was brought to restrain the defendants from building a projected house in such a way as to interfere with the plaintiff's enjoyment of light and air. While the suit was pending a compromise was entered into outside the Court between the plaintiff and the first defendant in regard to the suit, and also in [927] regard to the rights of the parties to a lane close by. When the decree was to be entered up, the plaintiff declined. A rule was taken out calling upon the plaintiff to show cause why the compromise should not be entered up under section 375 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and on the rule coming on for hearing the Judge said that he had not been able to find any instance of the application of this section. He dealt with it as a case of first impression, and looking to the powers given by Statute to the Supreme Court of Judicature in England, he thought that section 375 should be interpreted largely, the result of which would be to give the Mofussil Courts in this country even greater powers than the High Court of Judicature in England possessed. With great respect to the Judge I think the statutory powers given to the Supreme Court of Judicature in England is not a safe basis on which to interpret section 375 of the Code. No Advocate in this Court would argue it. One thing also seems to have been forgotten in that case, namely, that whether an agreement is enforced by suit or by motion in England, the result is not the same as in this country. If section 375 applies to any contested matter, the result is that the decree is final and the losing party has no relief. The history of this section was not discussed, and the Judge thought it was the outcome of the Act of 1873 in England, whereas I think it was an application of the very limited powers given to the Mofussil Courts to the Original Side of the High Court.

Let me put this point in another way. So long as the Supreme Court existed, an applicant could not appeal to Act VIII of 1859, for that Act was only an Act to simplify the procedure of the Civil Courts in the Mofussil and had no application to the Supreme Court. The High Court in administering the equitable jurisdiction of the Supreme Court possesses no more powers than those of the Supreme Court, and can do no more than that Court could. It cannot appeal to Act VIII of 1859. When by the Act of 1877 the modified section of Act VIII of 1859 was made applicable to the High Court, the Court exercising the equitable jurisdiction of the Supreme Court could not appeal to it any more than the Supreme Court could. The two systems of procedure were separate and perfectly distinct. The High Court could proceed on one or the other, but could not mix them up.

[928] The next case is that of The Goculdas Bulabdas Manufacturing Company v. Scott (I.L.R., 16 Bom., 202). In that case the same line of argument was followed. Several decisions under the statutory powers given to the Supreme Court of Judicature in 1873 were referred to, and it was considered that the Legislature in this country had given all the Courts in India larger powers than the Legislature in England had given to the Supreme Court, and that the Court could enforce by motion an agreement entered into out of Court and give a decree under section 375 from which there lay no appeal. Following those decisions the Bombay High Court in the case of Samibai v. Premji Pragji (I. L. R., 20 Bom., 304) decided that section 375 applied to a suit where the case had been submitted to arbitration and an award arrived at. I confess that I should have some difficulty in holding that an agreement and a judicial decision such as an award falls within the terms of section 375

I now turn to the decisions of the Madras Court. In the case of Karuppan v. Ramasami (I. L. R., 8 Mad., 482), the plaintiff sued the defendants to compel them to execute a conveyance of certain lands. The defendants pleaded that the matter in dispute had been settled by agreement executed by the plaintiff to the effect that he transferred the lands to the defendants and undertook to have the suit dismissed on a petition for withdrawal. The Munsif held that as the defendants had performed their part of the agreement, the plaintiff must be held by the agreement, and dismissed the suit. The District Judge reversed the decree on the ground that as both parties did not consent in Court, it could not be looked upon as a compromise. The High Court, following the case of Ruttonsey Lalji v. Poori Bai (I. L R., 7 Bom., 304), held that the Judge should try whether the engagement should be entered up and then apply section 375 of the Code. In that case the defendants set up a document destructive of the cause of action set forth by the plaintiff, and I can see no connection between that suit and the present, but, as at present advised, I do not think it was a case under section 375.

A much more important case is that of Appasami v. Manikam (I. L. R., 9 Mad., 103) decided by the same Judges. In that case their Lordships [929] dissented from the view taken in the case reported in Harasundari Debi v. Dukhinessur Malia (I. L. R., 11 Cal., 250), and considered that such portion of the judgment as referred to section 375 was an obiter dictum as the case could have been decided on other grounds. I am not aware of any authority, except this case, which says that where several reasons are given in a judgment for disposal of a suit, and each and every one of those reasons supports the decree, a Judge can pick out any one of those reasons more than others and say it is an obiter dictum. Since the decision of Her Majesty in Council in the case of Run Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer (I. L. R., 11 Cal., 301 : L. R., 12 I. A., 23) it appears to me difficult to support any such contention. ' Their Lordships then seek to deal with the case very much on the lines of the Bombay case. They point out that the English Courts have certain powers, and say that, in their opinion, section 375 has given larger powers to the Courts in this country. Their Lordships refer to the fact that section 375 is a modification of section 98 of Act VIII of 1859; but I cannot find that any reference has been made in their judgment to the numerous cases decided under that section or to the history of it.

The next case is that of Venkatappa Nayanim v. Thimma Nayanim (I. L. R., 18 Mad., 410). In that case a suit was instituted for partition of a zemindari and an agreement was filed providing for the settlement of the dispute and many other things. The first Court decided the case under section 375. In the High Court the Judges approved of the decision arrived at in the case of Ruttonsey Lalji v. Poori Bai and divided the case into two parts allowing the appeal as to so much of the agreement as did not refer to the suit but not as to the other portion. Their Lordships disagreed with the ruling of WILSON, J., in Fajaleh Ali Miah v. Kamaruddin Bhuya (I. L. R., 13 Cal., 170).

I have already pointed out what the invariable practice was under section 98 of Act VIII of 1859. Not one of the cases decided either by the Madras or Bombay High Court has dealt with that question. The grounds of decision in those cases were greatly based upon the powers given by Statute to the English Courts. They do not seem to have realised that originally the section only [930] applied to Mofussil Courts where motions were unknown, and they do not take notice of the fact that, although the Supreme Court of Judicature could enforce an agreement by way of motion, still it was not bound to do so, and that if it did so by way of motion the judgment would not be final. According to the interpretation they have put upon section 375, the Judge has in a contested case no option but to give a decree, and that decree is final. I regret to say that I am not prepared to agree in that conclusion. It appears to me that their Lordships have combined two distinct forms of procedure which have come down from different Courts and created a third which never existed in any Court. In my opinion section 375 does not apply to such a case.

The reference, however, is not expressly confined to a discussion as to whether the Court can enter up such a decree under section 375 of the Code. It is to the effect that whether, when parties to a suit have by an agreement adjusted the subject-matter of the suit, the Court can or cannot, by an order made in the suit, order such agreement to be recorded and make a decree in accordance with it, if one of the parties to such agreement objects. I think that question depends upon the powers given to this Court under the Letters Patent. There are several cases both in this High Court and the High Court in Madras, decided by Judges who were Judges of the Supreme Court, in which it has been held that where the Code does not provide for a matter arising in a suit the Court must adapt the procedure of Courts of Equity, and that, in the present case, means that they must follow the procedure of the High Court of Chancery in England, Suroop Chunder Hazra v. Troyloko Nath Roy (9 W. R., 230); Clark v. Ruthnavaloo Chetti (2 Mad. H. C., 296); Kistnasamy Pillai v. Municipal Commissioners for Madras (4 Mad. H. C., 120).

The power of that Court is set out in the judgment of JAMES, L. J., in Pryor v. Gribble (L. R., 10 Ch. App., 534), and amounts to this, that as a matter of practice where the agreement is simply in regard to the subject of the suit and nothing more, the Court would enforce it by motion.

My answer then to the question is: 1st.—That this is not a [931] case under section 375 of the Civil Procedure Code at all. 2nd.—That the High Court on its Original Side exercising the equitable jurisdiction of the High Court of Chancery would not, on a contested motion, give a decree of this nature Trevelyan, J.— I agree with the judgment delivered by the Chief Justice.

Beverley, J.—Assuming that the question referred to the Full Bench is restricted to the case of an order which purports to be made under section 375 of the Code, I am of opinion that the question should be answered in the negative.

With all due respect to the learned Judges of this Court and of the High Courts of Madras and Bombay, who have taken a contrary view, I am inclined to think that the case of Harasundari Debi v. Dukhinnessur Malia (I. L. R., 11 Cal., 250) was rightly decided.

Section 375, in my opinion, applies only to a case in which the adjustment or satisfaction is made in Court, and cannot and ought not to be extended so as to specifically perform agreements made out of Court.

Apart from the considerations which have been discussed in the judgment of Mr. Justice O'KINEALY (a judgment in which I fully concur) it seems to me that there are three main reasons why this view of the section is to be preferred.

(1). In the first place the section makes no provisions for any inquiry in a case in which one of the parties resiles from an agreement which he has made out of Court. Assuming that the section applies to such a case, if the agreement is brought into Court, the Court must under the strict language of the section record it as a matter of course and make a final decree upon it. It seems to me to follow that the section was not intended to apply to cases in which an inquiry would be admittedly necessary.

(2). In the next place the agreement made out of Court may refer (as in the present case) to other matters besides that of the adjustment of the suit, and it is difficult to believe that the Legislature ever intended such an agreement to be specifically performed by a final decree in respect to one of its provisions, [932] while the parties were left to enforce the other provisions by a separate suit.

(3). Lastly the fact that the decree to be made upon the adjustment is to be final shows to my mind that the Legislature contemplated that the parties to the adjustment should be assenting parties to the decree at the time it is made

The word "adjusted" in this section means in my opinion adjusted in Court. If the intention was that an agreement made out of Court might be brought into Court to be converted into a final decree, the language of the section would I conceive have been worded very differently It would then have run in some such form as this :—

"If the parties agree that a suit shall be adjusted, etc" The use of the words "if a suit be adjusted" convey to my mind the idea that the adjustment must be by consent at the time of the decree.

Banerjee, J.—The question referred to us for decision is, "whether when the parties to a suit have by an agreement adjusted the subject-matter of the suit the Court can, or cannot, by an order made in the suit, order such agreement to be recorded and make a decree in accordance with it, if one of the parties to such agreement object." The question is asked evidently with reference to section 375 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the answer to it in my opinion should be this, that the Court can under section 375 of the Code of Civil Procedure order the agreement to be recorded and make a decree in accordance therewith, if after hearing the objection raised it disallows the same.

Examining the language of the section, as we must in the first instance do in construing it (see Norendra Nath Sircar v. Kamalbasini Dasi, I. L. R., 23 Cal., 563), I find it very difficult to take this case out of its scope. The question put to the Full Bench assumes that the suit has been adjusted by a lawful agreement, and if that is so, the case comes within the section unless there is anything in the context or in reason to show that the section is not intended to apply to any case in which one of the parties to the agreement objects to its being recorded. Mr. Hill for the appellant contends that there are reasons suggested by the letter of the section as [933] well as by its spirit why the section should be limited in its application to cases in which both parties consent to the agreement being recorded. The reasons urged by him may be shortly stated thus :—

In the first place, the section only provides that the agreement, compromise or satisfaction shall be recorded, but it contains no provision such as we find in certain analogous sections of the Code, namely, sections 150, 151 and 523 for notice to parties or determination of these objections, and this shows that section 375 was intended to apply only to cases where all parties consent to the agreement, compromise or satisfaction being recorded.

In the second place, the section directs the Court to pass a decree in accordance with the agreement so far as it relates to the subject-matter of the suit, thus indicating that in making the decree the Court may have to split the agreement into parts and give effect to only one of such parts, namely, that which relates to the subject-matter of the suit, a mode of dealing with agreements which is neither usual nor just; and this shews that the section is intended to be limited to cases in which all parties consent to the decree being made.

In the third place, the section makes the decree passed in accordance with a compromise final, and this shews that a decree under this section is intended to be made only when all parties consent. For if it were otherwise, the determination of the objections raised by the non-consenting party, which may involve difficult and intricate questions of fact and law, would not have been made final.

In the fourth and last place, if this section were to have the operation contended for by the respondent, the party who is sought to be bound by the agreement will lose the benefit of the discretion which the Court might have exercised in his favour in not decreeing specific performance, if a suit for specific performance of the agreement had been brought.

These points have been considered to some extent in Harasundari Debi v. Dukhinessur Malia (I. L. R., 11 Cal., 250) cited for the appellant, and very fully in Goculdas Bulabdas Manufacturing Co. v. Scott (I. L. R., 16 Bom., 202) relied upon by the respondent.

[934] I do not think that much weight should be attached to the first mentioned reason. If the absence of any provision in the section for the determination of objections suggests an inference that the section is intended to apply only to cases where no objection is raised, the strength of the inference must be very slight, seeing that there is room for a contrary inference, namely, that where the Court is directed to pass a certain order, it has by implication power to determine all necessary matters to enable it to pass that order. And in the present instance the strength of the inference sought to be raised is wholly counter-balanced by the fact that the Court must in any case determine at least one question, namely, whether the agreement or compromise is lawful.

The second reason is no doubt entitled to more consideration. Where an agreement or compromise involves many and complicated matters, some only of which relate to the suit which is sought to be disposed of in accordance with it, and one of the parties does not consent to a decree being made upon it, the Court may have to perform a difficult and delicate task in passing a decree under section 375. But is the difficulty of the task a reason why it should not be performed? And is the difficulty removed by requiring the party seeking to enforce the agreement to bring a fresh suit? No doubt in such fresh suit the Court may deal with the entire agreement, but so may it do in the suit which is sought to be determined in accordance with the agreement; and if it finds that the agreement is such that it will be inequitable to deal separately with that part of it which relates to the suit, while other parts of it remain to be performed by the opposite side, it may either refuse to make a decree in the suit on the ground that the suit has not been actually adjusted, but there has been only an agreement to adjust it, or it may make a conditional decree relating to the subject-matter of the suit to be carried into execution only upon the other side performing his part of the agreement. The second reason too does not therefore stand in the way of our adopting the view I take.

Nor is the third reason of any greater effect in controlling the scope of the section. Finality under section 375 attaches to [936] the decree as pointed out by TELANG, J., in the case of Gokuldas Bulabdas Manufacturing Co. v. Scott (I. L. R., 16 Bom., 202), only so far as it is in accordance with the agreement, compromise or satisfaction, an appeal being allowed so far as questions such as whether there has been any agreement, compromise or satisfaction, whether the same is lawful or not, and whether the decree is in accordance therewith or not are concerned, upon the same principle as that upon which appeals have been allowed in cases in which decrees are made under section 522 — see Joy Prokash Lall v. Sheo Golam Singh (I. L. R., 11 Cal., 37).

With reference to the fourth and last reason relied upon by Mr. Hill, in addition to what has been said by TELANG, J., in Gokuldas Gulabdas Manufacturing Co. v. Scott (I. L. R., 16 Bom., 202), I may observe that the Legislature might have thought it unnecessary to leave the enforcement of an agreement by which a pending suit is adjusted in the discretion of the Court in the same way as the granting of a decree for specific performance of an ordinary agreement is left, for this simple reason that an agreement to adjust a pending suit is less likely to be entered into without full realisation of its consequences and without legal advice than any other agreement.

While thus the main reasons urged in favour of the limited construction of section 375 are insufficient and inconclusive, the reasons in support of the opposite view appear to me to be far more cogent. I have already observed that the language of the section is entirely in favour of that view. If the object of section 375 had been simply to authorize the Court to make decrees by consent of parties, the Legislature could very easily have said so in a few plain words, instead of employing what in that view was mere periphrasis, and omitting altogether to use the words "by consent of parties." Again, while provision is made in the Code for the adjustment or satisfaction of a decree made out of Court, being recorded by the Court at the instance of either party, notwithstanding that the other party may not consent (see section 258), there would be no provision for recording the adjustment of a suit before decree if section [936] 375 is to receive the limited construction put on it by the appellant. This, I think, would be an unreasonable view. It is said that there can be nothing wrong in this, as the party seeking to enforce the agreement or compromise can always bring a separate suit for that purpose. But what is the advantage gained by that procedure? The pending suit will have to be stayed until the suit brought for enforcement of the compromise is disposed of, and then if the latter suit is decreed, the former will have to be decreed separately in terms of the compromise. The construction I adopt leads to the same result and avoids multiplicity of suits.

That construction has been invariably adopted by the High Courts of Bombay and Madras as the cases cited in the referring order show, and also by this Court on the Original Side as is shown by the unreported cases cited in the argument.

Upon reason and authority, therefore, I think the construction contended for by the respondent is correct, and I would respectfully dissent from the decision in Harasundari v. Dukhinessur Malia (I. L. R., 11 Cal., 250) so far as it takes the contrary view.

The C P.C. 1908, O 23, r 3 gives effect to decisions like this by substituting these words, "where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that a suit has been adjusted", etc.

II. "The cases in (1902) 26 Bom, 76, (1897) 24 Cal., 908, (1901) 24 Mad., 316 are clear authorities for the proposition that a private reference to arbitration in a pending suit followed by a lawful award is a lawful agreement, compromise and adjustment under sec. 375, and effect ought to be given to such an adjustment in the suit so far as the award relates to the suit. There are certain remarks in the nature of obiter dicta by BEAMAN, J., in (1909) 33 Bom, 69. 10 Bom. L R., 366 tending to throw doubts on the validity of the reasoning in the above three decisions, but we need only remark that we are unable to take the view that the reasoning of the learned Judge has displaced their authority. Whether a mere agreement to refer to arbitration will in itself be an adjustment under Section 375 so that a decree might be passed under the section referring the suit to arbitration as per the agreement (as distinguished from a mere order of reference under section 506 C.P.C., 1882, on application of the party) is a doubtful question though the Privy Council has accepted such a decree as a proper decree and as putting an end to the suit (see 33 All, 743; and also the observations of HILL, J, in (1903) 30 Cal, 218) but it is unnecessary to go into that point in this case where an award has followed the reference" —(1912) 23 M.L J, 290]

Modhu Sudan Singh... . .Plaintiff

E. G. Rooke .. .. .Defendant.

Landlord and Tenant—Recognition of an under tenure by the Zemindar—Result of his receiving rent in respect of it—Deposit of rent by tenure-holder under Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), section 61, and acceptance by Zemindar—Hindu widow, Lease granted by, while in possession of widow's estate.

A widow in possession of her widow's estate in a zemindari made a grant of a putni tenure under it to a lessee at a rent In this suit brought by the reversionary heir, on her death, with the object of having the grant set aside as invalid as against him, the putni lease was not proved to have been made with authority or from necessity justifying the alienation by the widow.

Held, that the putni was on the death of the widow only voidable, and not of itself void; so that the plaintiff, the next inheritor of the zemindari, might then elect to treat it as valid.

The plaintiff had done so He had accepted rent in respect of the tenure, as that tenure was specified in a petition which accompanied the putnidar's deposit of the rent in a Court, under the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), section 61 This was primâ facie an admission that the putni was still subsisting In the absence of evidence to put a different construction upon the plaintiff's act, and to negative its effect, there was a sufficient primâ facie case of an election to affirm the validity of the putni.

APPEAL from a decree (17th August 1894) of the High Court, reversing a decree (25th February 1893) of the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan.

[2] The plaintiff, now appellant, was the zemindar of the Pandra raj estate in Manbhoom, which he inherited as collateral heir to Raja Sagar Narain Singh, who died in 1847, leaving a widow, Rani Hingun Kumari, upon whose death in 1881 the plaintiff inherited the zemindari. The defendant, Mr. Rooke, was holder of a putni tenure in two villages granted to him by the widow on the 26th January 1864, at a rent of Rs. 475 a year, and for a premium of Rs. 2,525 Both the Courts below had found this grant to have been made by the widow without authority, or legal necessity. The first Court, for this reason, had set aside the grant, and decreed the claim for khas possession in favour of the plaintiff. The High Court, on appeal, had, however, decided that the suit must be dismissed, as the defendant had become tenant to the plaintiff from year to year to the end of each year, and no notice had been given terminating the relation between the parties.

The question on this appeal was whether by reason of the plaintiff's having taken out of Court and accepted rent from the defendant for the year 1887-1890, the plaintiff had recognized and admitted the putni lease, so as to disentitle himself to contest its validity.

The succession to the Pandra estate was regulated by the customary law, whereby the eldest son in the eldest branch succeeded, excluding others.

Their Lordships' judgment states all the facts of this case.

The widow was engaged in litigation from 1849 to 1853 against her late husband's brothers, resulting in her obtaining a decree for her widow's estate in half the zemindari. The present appellant on succeeding to the zemindari defended the suit –Periag Singh v. Modhusudan Singh, decided in 1888 by the High Court in favour of the present appellant, who maintained his title in proceedings which lasted from March 1882 to April 1887. In that case the Court considered whether Pandra was by custom an impartible zemindari, and whether it was by custom inheritable according to lineal primogeniture, deciding in the affirmative. A Receiver had been appointed during the litigation.

The respondent on the 10th September 1890, under the [3] Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), section 61, paid Rs. 1,043 into Court as rent for the Bengali years 1295 and 1296 with cesses from 1294, stating in his petition that the rent had not been received, but acceptance of it had been refused by the zemindar. This sum was taken out of Court by the appellant on the 24th September following. The petitions in this matter are set forth in the judgment on this appeal.

On the 11th March 1892 the appellant's plaint was filed for possession of the two villages held by Rooke under the grant from Rani Hingan Kumari, and for two years' mesne profits. His plaint referred to the suit brought by Periag Singh, stating that until the final decision of the High Court he was not aware of the particulars connected with the villages now in dispute, and that when he attempted to take possession of them he was prevented by the defendant who claimed title under the putni. The plaint also contained an account of the deposit and withdrawal above stated, averring that the plaintiff had not thereby admitted any right of the defendant.

The defendant filed a written statement, in which he denied the plaintiff's title as reversionary heir, asserted that Rani Hingan Kumari had an absolute estate, and not merely that of a Hindu widow, and, in the alternative, that she had executed the putni under circumstances of necessity which made it binding on the estate. He also alleged that he had received no sufficient notice to quit, and relied on the receipt of rent by the Receiver and the plaintiff as barring the suit by estoppel.

The issues raised all these defences.

On the 25th February 1893, the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan decreed in favour of the plaintiff. In his judgment he found that the plaintiff was the true heir to the estate; that Rani Hingan had no greater right than that of an ordinary Hindu widow; that there was no evidence of any facts which would make the putni binding on her successor, and that it was invalid as against the plaintiff. He also found that the plaintiff had not recognised or ratified the putni by taking out the deposit. As regards the question of notice he held it to be immaterial.

On an appeal by the defendant to the High Court, a Division Bench (CHANDRA MADHUB GHOSE and GORDON, JJ.) reversed the [4] decree of the Subordinate Judge. In giving their reasons they referred to the receipt of the rent deposited by the defendant as due in respect of the putni in September 1889; and referred to the previous payment by the Receiver though recognition of the putni was beyond his power. They stated that there was nothing on the record explaining on the part of the plaintiff the circumstances under which he had received the rent; deciding that this receipt operated as a recognition of the defendant's right as tenant constituting in him some kind of tenancy which would require a notice to quit before it could be determined. As to the legal effect of the recognition of a tenant by receipt of rent, they referred to Betts v. Jamie Shaik [(1875), 23 W. R., 271], Bunwari Lal Roy v. Mahima Chandra Knuall [(1870) 4 B. L. R., Ap., 86], Chatuni Singh v. Makund Lal [(1881) I. L. R., 7 Cal., 710], Kali Krishna Tagore v Golam Ali [(1886) I.L.R., 13 Cal., 248], Sonet Koer v. Himmut Bahadoor [(1876) I.L R., 1 Cal, 391. L R, 3 I A., 92], Drobomoyi Gupta v. Davis [(1887) I. L. R., 15 Cal, 323], Unhamma Devi v. Vaikunta Hegde [(1893) I. L. R., 17 Mad, 218]. They said that in all these cases it seemed to have been held that the receipt of rent from a person, "after his lease had expired," operated as a recognition of his right as a tenant, and constituted in him some kind of tenancy.

In their view, and according to the plaintiff's case, the defendant's putni came to an end with the life of Rani Hingan Kumari. But the Receiver who was in charge of the estate, and afterwards the plaintiff himself, for several years received rent from the defendant After such receipt of rent, the defendant could not be treated as a trespasser The recognition of the defendant's tenancy was at least a recognition of a tenancy from year to year. The plaintiff was bound to show that by having given due notice he had determined that tenancy. He had not done so, and his cause of action was not complete. Reference was made to Doe d. Lord v. Crago [(1848) 6 C. B., 90] and the judgment concluded thus:—

[5] "In the present case, the plaintiff has not proved the circumstances under which he received the rent deposited by the defendant, and in the absence of any such proof, we should think that the plaintiff meant to treat the defendant as a tenant upon the property No doubt, the tenancy was not, in its inception, a tenancy from year to year, but we should think that, after the expiry of the lease, upon the death of the life-tenant Rani Hingan Kumari, it was quite competent to the plaintiff either to treat the tenancy as having come to an end, or to treat the defendant as a tenant of the property, and we are of opinion that the combined acts of the Receiver and the plaintiff are such as to constitute in the defendant some kind of tenancy, at least a tenancy from year to year, which required a legal determination before the plaintiff could be entitled to eject As already mentioned, the defendant, in the circumstances which have transpired, could not be regarded as a trespasser, and he could not certainly be called upon, for the reasons which have been so fully explained by NORMAN, J., in the case of Bunwari Lal Roy v Mahima Chundra Knuall (4 B. L. R., Ap., 86), to quit the property in the middle of the year. And in this connection we might refer to section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), which requires six months' notice to be given expiring with the end of the year of the tenancy.

"For these reasons we are of opinion that the suit must fail upon the ground that, upon the date of the suit, the plaintiff had no valid cause of action.

"In the view that we have just expressed, it is unnecessary to express any opinion upon any other questions that have been raised in this case; but if we were called upon to decide the question whether the putni granted by Rani Hingan Kumari is valid and binding upon the plaintiff, or whether it has been ratified by him, we should be prepared to say that the defendant has not proved, the onus being entirely upon him, that the Rani was justified in granting the putni in question, that there was no ratification of the putni by the plaintiff, and it is not therefore binding upon him.

"The result is, that the suit must be dismissed and this appeal allowed; but, under the circumstances of the case, without any costs."

The plaintiff having appealed, Mr. M. Crackanthorpe, Q.C., and Mr. J. D. Mayne, for the appellant, argued that the decree of the High Court was not sound in law, and that the decree of the original Court should be restored. Neither of the Courts below had attributed to the appellant's act of withdrawing the money deposited under Act VIII of 1885, the effect of having been a recognition of the putni tenure. The High Court had considered that act to have been a recognition of a tenancy from year to year. The deposits, however, had been made expressly in [6] reference to the putni lease, and because, as stated in the petition, the respondent had refused to accept rent from the appellant, or to give him dakhilas. The appellant had taken the money out of Court without doing any act that would prevent his afterwards claiming his right to have the putni lease set aside, for the reason that he was entitled to take that money out of Court as payment due to him for the use and occupation of his land by the respondent. The drawing the money by the appellant should be considered as having taken place in pursuance of the latter right. There were no facts before the High Court which would have justified it in finding that the appellant had recognized the putni lease. Nor was there any ground for finding that the respondent was in possession as tenant from year to year. There had been a demand of immediate possession, the appellant's right having accrued on the death of the widow, and his cause of action was complete. Reference was made to the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), section 106; Doe d. Lord v. Crago [(1848) 6 C. B., 90]; Dugald v. McCarthy [(1893) L. R., 1 Q. B., 736].

Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the respondent, argued that the High Court was right in dismissing the suit, but submitted that there was evidence of ratification by the appellant of the putni in his act on the 24th September 1890 in accepting the rent. Upon this ground the suit might have been dismissed. The cause of action was, however, not complete when this suit was commenced, no legal notice to quit having been given, whether the putni was to be supported or not; and either according to the view that the putni subsisted or that the defendant was tenant on the terms found by the High Court, the suit could not succeed. The petition filed by the defendant on the 11th September 1890 showed that the rent was paid into Court from a tenant claiming to hold a putni right. This rent having been accepted, ratification should have been held to have taken place.

Mr. M. Crackanthorpe, Q.C., replied.

Afterwards, on the 7th April, their Lordships' judgment was delivered by Sir R. Couch.—The suit in this case was instituted to recover possession of two villages part of the zemindari of the [7] Pandra Raj in the district of Manbhoom. The appellant is the heir of Raja Sagur Narain Singh, the former owner of it, who died in May 1847, leaving his widow Rani Hingan Kumari and two brothers. The right of the widow to succeed him was disputed by the brothers, and she had to bring a suit to recover possession of an 8 annas share of the zemindari. In this she was successful, and, having obtained possession of the estate, she remained in possession of it till her death in December 1881. The appellant then took possession, and in March 1882 a suit was instituted against him by the younger of the brothers claiming as the heir of Raja Sagur Narain Singh. It was dismissed by the District Court in April 1887, and this decree was confirmed by the High Court on the 25th June 1889. In July 1882 a Receiver was appointed to take charge of the estate, and he continued to be in charge of it until the 3rd of May 1887, when he was discharged.

On the 26th January 1864, the widow granted a putni lease or settlement of the two villages to the respondent at an annual rent of Rs. 475, and upon receipt of a bonus of Rs. 2,525. The appellant in his suit asked to have this putni set aside on the ground that the widow had no legal reason or necessity for making it. This was the subject of one of the issues which has been found in the appellant's favour by the District Court and the High Court. The question upon which the Courts have differed arises from the receipt of rent by the appellant after the widow's death. For three years the rent was paid to the Receiver. The important payment is of the rent due for the native years 1295 and 1296 (1887-1890) after he was discharged.

On the 10th of September 1890 the respondent presented a petition in the Court of the Munsif of Ranigunge under Act VIII of 1885 in a rent suit in which the respondent is called "First Party" and the appellant "Second Party." It is as follows: "The representation of Mr. E. G. Rooke of Jore Janoki * * * is this: That I am in possession on putni right of mouzah Naharjore and mouzah Ainkura in thana Assensole, purgunnah Pandra, under the said second party at an annual rent of Rs. 475. My officer repeatedly went to pay the aforesaid rent for the years 1295 and 1296, amounting to Rs. 950 [8] and Rs. 93 cesses from the year 1294 to the year 1296, in all Rs. 1,043, into the mal catcheri of the said second party at Poddardihi in due time, but the rent was not received and dakhilas were refused. Therefore I deposit the said rent in Court, praying that it may be credited in the name of the second party, and that orders may be passed to serve a notice on him." On the 21st of September the Raja executed a vakalutnama by which he appointed four pleaders by name in order to file a petition and other papers and argue the case on his behalf in the rent suit and authorised them to sign his name and file petitions, etc., and take vouchers for monies in deposit. And on the 24th the following petition was filed in the rent suit--"The representation of the second party in the above case is this: My tenant, the said first party, has deposited Rs. 1,043 rent due to me. The said first party has not deposited interest, etc., and I shall take steps for the same hereafter. A voucher for Rs. 1,043 in deposit may be given for the present." None of the pleaders was called to explain how the money came to be drawn out, or to prove that there had been a mistake in doing it. There is no evidence in the case upon this matter but these documents.

In considering their effect it must be observed that the putni was not void; it was only voidable; the Raja might elect to assent to it and treat it as valid. Its validity depended upon the circumstances in which it was made. The learned Judges of the High Court appear to have fallen into the error of treating the putni as if it absolutely came to an end at the death of the widow. After referring to six or seven cases in the Indian Courts they say: "In all these cases it seems to have been held that the receipt of rent from a person after his lease has expired operates as a recognition of his right as a tenant and constitutes in him some kind of tenancy which would require a notice to determine." Also they speak of the expiry of the lease upon the death of the life-tenant. And they hold that a receipt of rent was at least a recognition of a tenancy from year to year which required a notice to quit. The real question does not appear to have been considered by them or properly by the Subordinate Judge, who says that in the petition for the withdrawal of the rent deposit the status of the plaintiff as putnidar was not recognized, but [9] takes no notice of the petition depositing the money. The taking rent which was in that petition stated to be due under the putni was prima facie an admission that the putni was still subsisting, an election by the Raja to treat it as valid If it could have been shown that the receipt of the rent ought not to have that effect evidence bearing upon that point ought to have been adduced by the Raja. In the absence of such evidence their Lordships think there is a sufficient prima facie case of an election by the Raja to affirm the validity of the putni, and they will humbly advise Her Majesty to dismiss the appeal and to affirm the decree of the High Court which in their opinion is right, although not for the reasons given by the Court. The appellant will pay the costs of this appeal. Appeal dismissed.

NOTES.

[I. EXPLANATION BY THE PRIVY COUNCIL—

In discussing the question of limitation, the Privy Council gave this explanation of their decision in this case —

As regards the Article of Limitation to be applied, the question "is not answered by merely saying that the ijara was voidable only and not void In the case before this Board cited by the learned judge (25 Cal , 1) the question was whether the acceptance of rent payable under the patni and other circumstances afforded evidence of an election by the Raja to confirm the patni and treat it as valid If it was ipso facto void it could not of course be confirmed, and the acceptance of rent would be evidence only of the creation of a new tenancy. A Hindu widow is not a tenant for life, but is owner of her husband's property subject to certain restrictions on alienation and subject to its devolving upon her husband's heirs upon her death But she may alienate it subject to certain conditions being complied with. Her alienation is not, therefore, absolutely void, but it is prima facie voidable at the election of the reversionary heir. He may think fit to affirm it, or he may at his pleasure treat it as a nullity without the intervention of any Court, and he shows his election to do the latter by commencing an action to recover possession of the property This is, in fact, nothing for the Court either to set aside or cancel as a condition precedent to the right of action of the reversionary heir It is true that the appellants prayed by their plaint, a declaration that the ijara was inoperative as against them, as leading up to their prayer for delivery to them of khas possession But it was not necessary for them to do so, and they might have merely claimed possession, leaving it to the defendants to plead and (if they could) prove the circumstances, which they relied on, for showing that the ijara or any derivative dealings with the property were not in fact voidable, but were binding on the reversionary heirs. Their Lordships are of opinion that the article in the Schedule to the Limitation Act applicable to this case is Article 141 "—per Lord DAVEY in Bijoy Gopal v. Krishna Mahishi, (1907) 34 Cal , 329 P C , reversing (1903) 30 Cal , 990, see also (1905) 33 Cal., 257.

II. VOIDABILITY—

1. This was applied in (1901) 28 Cal., 532 5 C.W.N , 279.

2. As regards election, see also (1908) 13 C W N., 201· 8 C.L.J., 458 ; 27 Cal., 156; 34 Cal., 329.

3. It was inferred from 25 Cal., 1 and 34 Cal , 329 that the reversioner's right of election is not personal to him and that a transferee from him can exercise the right :—(1912) 16 I. C., 634 (Cal.).]

4. Being voidable, at the election of the reversioner, the alienee can recover possession from a stranger without being required to prove legal necessity, until the reversioner decides to avoid it :—(1914) 18 C.W.N., 940, see also (1914) 26 M.L.J., 600.

5. In (1910) 35 Mad., 177. 20 M.L.J., 371 it was held that the alienation by the manager of a joint Hindu family, when in excess of powers, is void and not merely voidable as is the case when the alienation is by the widow ; and so, it could not be ratified, as in the latter case · (1904) 31 Cal., 698.]

[On appeal from the Court of the Recorder of Rangoon]

Mahomedan law Will—Right of childless widow—Administration of the estate of a Shiah Mahomedan under his will—Alleged gift—Claims as between his childless widow and the estate—Rights of the widow - Legacies chargeable on one-third only of the estate

A Mahomedan of the Shiah sect, dying without issue, left a widow She as his childless widow was entitled to one fourth of his estate other than land

In the administration of his estate the following matters arose, and were decided —

The handing over, with formal words of gift by the testator to the widow, of deposit receipts, with intent afterwards to transfer the money into her name at the Bank, which transfer was not effected, would not constitute a gift

[10] A commission of three per cent on the proceeds of the sale of the testator's property, directed by his will, was bequeathed to the executor This was by way of remuneration, but was in no sense a debt. As a legacy it was payable only out of one third of the estate which passed by the will.

A Mahomedan widow is not entitled to maintenance out of the estate of her late husband, in addition to what she is entitled to by inheritance, or under his will—Hedaya, Book IV, chap. 15, section 3 ; Baillie's Mahomedan Law, Imamia, p 170, referred to

No contract could be implied that this widow should pay an occupation rent on account of her having continued to occupy a house belonging to the testator's estate, for eleven months after his death. Her occupation was referable to her position and no notice was given to her that rent would be charged

A Mahomedan childless widow is not by Shiah law entitled to share in the value of land forming the site of buildings that belonged to her husband's estate Her one-fourth includes, as was admitted, a share in the proceeds of sale of the buildings The text quoted in Book VII, chap. IV., p. 293 of Baillie's Mahomedan Law, Imamia, is not to be construed as referring only to agricultural land APPEAL and cross-appeal from a decree (14th September 1893) of the Recorder of Rangoon.

The suit, commenced on the 30th March 1891, was for the construction of the will, and for the distribution of the estate, of Hadji Hoosain Bindanim, who, at his death, on the 20th February 1890, owned land, with buildings on some of his land, and other property, in Rangoon. He had no issue but left a widow, Koolsom Beebee (the plaintiff-respondent in the principal appeal and cross-appellant in the other), and some collateral relations, children of a deceased half-brother, among whom was the defendant-appellant, Aga Mahomed Jaffer Bindanim, whom the deceased by his will appointed his sole executor. Probate to this executor was delivered on the 21st March 1890

The principal dispositions made by the will appear in their Lordships' judgment.

The suit was originally brought by one Abdul Razak against the executor, with whom the widow was made a co-defendant. The widow filed in her defence a written statement of her claims against the estate. The suit of the then plaintiff was dismissed on the 5th February 1892, and this was affirmed on appeal on the 10th March 1894 in Abdul Razak v. Aga Mahomed Jaffer [11] Bindanim [(1893) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 666: L. R., 21 I. A., 56]. Before that final order she was, on her own petition, made a plaintiff instead of a defendant.

On the 14th September 1892 the executor filed his accounts. To these the widow objected, and on the 5th December following she filed a petition stating, as plaintiff, all her claims and contentions, which were to the same effect as in her former written statement. She stated that the bequests in the will of her husband, as a Shiah Mahomedan, could only be valid so far as they could be payable out of one-third of his estate; that she was entitled to sums amounting to Rs. 30,000 held in fixed deposit by a Bank on her late husband's account, they having been assigned by him to her as a gift; that she was entitled to have her one-fourth share, as widow, assessed upon the value of land on which houses belonging to the estate were built, as well as on the houses, which latter had been admitted to be subject to her share; that she was entitled to maintenance for one year from her husband's death; that she had been wrongly debited with rent as due from her to her husband's estate on account of her having occupied a house of his till it had been sold—a period of eleven months.

On the 21st November 1892, the Recorder gave judgment on the widow's claim relating to her right to share in the proceeds of the sale of the land as follows: –

"The plaintiff in this case is the childless widow of a Mahomedan belonging to the Shiah sect, and I have to decide now whether she is entitled to a share in the land on which certain houses belonging to her husband's estate are built. It is admitted that she is entitled to one-fourth of the pure personalty and to one-fourth of the value of the houses apart from the land. The authorities seem to me to make it perfectly clear that she is not entitled to share in the land. The law is thus stated by Baillie, Imamia, p. 295: 'Where the wife has had a child by the deceased she inherits out of all that he has left; and if there was no child she takes nothing out of the deceased's land, but her share of the value of the household effects and buildings is to be given to her. It has been said, however, that she is to be excluded from nothing except the mansions and dwellings; while Moortuza (may God be pleased with him) has expressed a third opinion to the effect that the land should be valued and her share of the value assigned to her. But the first opinion is that which appears to be best founded on traditional authority.' The correctness of this translation was impeached in Asloo v. Umdutunnissa [(1873) 20 W. R., 297], and another translation [12] was made by the Court interpreter, the material portion of which is this: 'If there be no child she inherits nothing of the land, but her share of the value of goods and buildings will be given to her.' AMEER ALI, J., in "The Personal Law of the Mahomedans," says: 'But when she has no child, or when a child was born to her, but died before the decease of her husband, then she is entitled to a fourth share in the personal estate only including household effects, trees, buildings, etc.' She takes no interest in the real estate. And in the Tagore

Lectures, 1874, the rule is thus stated : 'If there is no such child she takes nothing out of the deceased's land (arz), but her share of the household effects (alat) and buildings is to be given to her.' I think, therefore, that the widow is not entitled to share in the land."

On the 24th January 1893 the Recorder gave judgment restricting the source of the three per cent. commission bequeathed to the executor (on the ground that it was no debt, but a legacy) to a one-third part of the testator's estate. He added :—

"The law is perfectly clear that a Mahomedan cannot by a testamentary disposition deprive his lawful heirs of their share in the inheritance, nor dispose of more than one-third of his estate. It was argued that the khoom is a debt, and that an executor is entitled to sell as much of the estate as is necessary in order to defray debts. But the answer to this argument appears to me to be this that if a Shiah died intestate or leaving a will without a provision as to khooms there would be no one who could legally enforce the payment of money on this account, and I find in Mr. Justice AMEER ALI'S recent work on Mahomedan Law the statement that a bequest is lawful for, among other objects, 'Koum' so that he does not treat it as a debt."*

Upon the question whether this widow was entitled to one year's maintenance, in addition to her share by law, the Recorder on the same date adjudged her to be so entitled on the authority of the passage in the Koran translated by Mr. Justice AMEER ALI in his work on the "Personal Law of the Mahomedans," Vol. II, 1894, containing the law relating to "Succession and Status," where it is said that several jurists have, in consequence of that passage, held that a widow has a right to maintenance, independently of any share that she may obtain in the property left by her husband.

As to whether this widow had been properly charged by the executor for the use and occupation by her of her late husband's house after his death till the sale of it under his will, the Recorder [13] found no authority for holding that an heir was so chargeable; and he therefore answered the question in the negative.

On the 2nd March 1893, after taking evidence as to the alleged gift of the money deposited in the Bank, the Recorder found against the gift having been made, both because he disbelieved the evidence and because he held "that the mere possession of the receipts was not enough to enable the plaintiff to exercise the right of property over the money in the Bank." He was of opinion that, even assuming the plaintiff's statement to be true, she could not succeed : and upon the facts, also, he could not find that the gift was made.

On the same date the Recorder made a decree for an account to be taken on the basis of the previous decisions. The executor filed his account on the 10th July following according to the above principles. On the 24th July, then next, the widow filed further objections, upon which the Recorder, delivering another judgment, gave his opinion that the "only way of ascertaining the share of the rents is by ascertaining the value of the land, and of the houses, separately, and apportioning the amount received as rent ; and this has been done." He added :—

"As regards the moneys invested it is admitted that the widow would not have been entitled to share in the immoveable properties if they had remained unsold, and I do not think that she can be allowed to share in the proceeds."

"The final decree, dated the 14th September 1893, so far as it related to the points disputed in this appeal, was as follows : —

"It is ordered and declared that : 1. The plaintiff is not entitled to share in the land on which the testator's houses stood, but her share in such house property is a one-fourth share of the value of the buildings on such land. 2. The directions in the will of the deceased that the executor shall be allowed to charge three per cent. commission, and that he shall deduct one-fifth for khooms, are only valid as bequests out of one-third of the testator's estate. 3. The plaintiff is not entitled to the amounts of the fixed deposits. 4. The plaintiff is entitled to share in the income arising from the rents of houses until her share has been fully paid to her 5 The plaintiff is entitled to be paid maintenance out of the estate of the testator, at the rate of Rs 150 a month for twelve months. 6. The executor is not entitled to charge the plaintiff for the use and occupation of one of the testator's houses after his death."

* The word khoom is given in Wilson's Glossary of Indian Terms as vernacular for khaum, meaning people, tribe, &c.

From this decree both parties appealed

[14] Mr. J. D. Mayne for the executor, appellant.—In reference to the commission of three per cent. payable under the will to the executor, the decision of the Recorder should have been that the whole estate was chargeable with this money. It was a remuneration directed to be paid by the will on account of the duties to be discharged by the executor, and it should not have been dealt with as a legacy of which payment was to be made out of one-third only of the testator's estate The one-fifth share allotted for khooms by the will should also be taken as payable out of the whole estate. This might be regarded as a direction for the management of the estate, and the commission also. Next to be disputed was the allotment to the widow of Rs. 1,800, as money for a year's maintenance, over and above her share as one of the heirs. It was a rule founded on principle that a widow should have no maintenance after her husband's death The main authority was to be found in the Hedaya (as translated by Hamilton), Book IV, chapter 15, section 3, where it was plainly declared that maintenance is not due to a woman after her husband's decease according to law, forasmuch as the husband's right in his property ceases on his decease. Reference was also made to Baillie's Mahomedan Law, Imamia (1869), at pp 170, 171. The contention was that the widow took only her share by inheritance, or under the will, by Mahomedan Law.

The Court below had also erred in its judgment that the widow was not to be charged rent for the months during which she had remained in occupation of the premises of which a sale had been directed by the will. At the death of the testator the property passed to his heirs, and if the widow remained in possession of what had become their house, the executor was right in charging her with an occupation rent. There were no grounds for the widow's cross appeal. The Court below had been right in rejecting the claim to a gift effected by the handing over of the deposit receipts.

That Court had also been right in deciding that the childless widow of a Shiah Mahomedan could take no interest by inheritance in any land that had been her husband's.

Mr. J. H. A. Branson, for the widow, respondent and cross-appellant. –The widow's right, according to Mahomedan Law, [15] was to inherit a one-fourth share of the estate of her husband, as a share fixed under all circumstances; and this could not be reduced by any directions in the will of her husband. Her right to that share arose immediately on the death of her husband, and she was entitled to all profits to the amount of her share Her right to a proper maintenance for twelve months after her husband's death was supported by the text quoted in the "Personal Law of the Mahomedans," 1894, by Mr. Justice AMEER ALI, which text was the highest authority He referred to chapter X relating to the "rights and duties of the married parties," section 1, p. 369. The passage from the Koran was: "Such of you as shall die and leave your wives ought to bequeath to them a year's maintenance." This was understood by several jurists, as stated by Mr. Justice AMEER ALI, to be a maintenance independent of any share she might obtain.

Next, the widow was not chargeable with the occupation rent, and the Recorder's judgment on both this and the above points should be maintained. In her cross-appeal, however, she contended that the Recorder's decision was wrong in declaring her disentitled to the fixed deposits, and to a share in the land on which the houses belonging to the estate had been built. As to the latter claim, the authority cited by the Recorder from Baillie's Imamia might refer to land not built upon The opinions which negatived the widow's right to a share in the land of her husband might refer, on a proper construction of them, to land other than the sites of houses, and not refer to land which went with a building, as part of the whole tenement It was difficult to see how the value of the house separately from that of the ground could be estimated unless a ground rent had been fixed He referred to the passage quoted in Baillie's Imamia Law, Book VII, chap IV, from the Shura-yul Islam, discussed and re-translated in Asloo v Umdutunnissa [(1873) 20 W. R., 297].

Mr J D Mayne replied, contending that in the calculation of the widow's share, it was necessary to deduct both the proceeds of the land sold, and the rental value of the sites of all rent paying houses belonging to the estate

[16] Lord Davey.—This appeal and cross appeal from the Court of the Recorder of Rangoon deal with questions which have arisen in the administration of the estate of Hadji Hoosain Bindanim, a Mahomedan of the Shiah sect The testator died in February 1890, leaving one widow Koolsom Beebee (respondent in the principal appeal and appellant in the cross appeal) and no children

The contents of the will so far as material may be shortly stated The testator appointed his nephew Aga Mahomed Jaffer Bindanim (the appellant in the principal appeal) his sole executor and trustee, and directed him to sell his property and deduct from the proceeds of sale all costs and charges and a commission of three per cent He devoted one fifth part of the remainder (called khooms) and a sum of Rs 3,000 to religious purposes, and directed his executor and trustee to divide the remainder, after deduction of the said sum of Rs 3,000 and Rs 2,500 due to his wife Koolsom Beebee for dower, into three equal shares and to retain a one third share and divide the remaining shares between his heirs who were his said wife and brother Aga Abdul Hadee Bindanim in the shares and proportions in which they would be entitled to the same according to Mahomedan law, and made a particular provision of the reserved one-third share The testator declared that his executor and trustee should have power to charge a commission of three per cent on the proceeds of sale of his property real and personal and cash

Part of the testator's property consisted of land with buildings on it

Several questions were raised on taking the accounts of the executor, four of which are submitted for decision in these appeals —

1st—Whether the commission of three per cent to the executor and trustee is payable out of the entire estate or only out of the one-third which alone the testator could bequeath by his will?

2nd.—Whether the widow was entitled to maintenance for any and what period after the testator's death?

3rd.—Whether she ought to be charged with an occupation rent for the time during which she continued to reside in the testator's house after his death?

[17] 4th. Whether the widow can by Shiah law take any share by inheritance in the land on which the buildings stand as well as in the value of the buildings.

The widow also claimed adversely to the estate to be entitled to a sum of Rs. 30,000 owing to the testator on deposit notes of the Bank of Bengal which she alleged the testator had given to her on the Monday preceding the Friday on which he died.

To deal with the last-mentioned question first. The deposit notes signed by the agent of the Bank are in the form of receipts from the testator of the sum mentioned in them as a deposit bearing interest at the rate mentioned to remain till notice of twelve months on either side expires. They contain in the margin the words "not transferable," and are not in a form which would entitle the bearer of the notes to the debts created thereby as transferee thereof. The respondent Koolsom Beebee in her evidence stated that on the day in question the testator being then indisposed (but not apparently in contemplation of his early death) handed her the notes with certain formalities, and added "after taking a bath I will go to the Bank and transfer the papers to your name." Her story to this extent is confirmed by two witnesses who said they were present. The testator never did transfer the notes in the Bank, or do any act to complete Koolsom Beebee's title.

The learned Recorder has expressed doubts as to the truth of the story told by Koolsom Beebee and her witnesses, but he has also held that even if her evidence be accepted the gift was incomplete, and that she is not therefore entitled to the money on deposit.

As their Lordships entirely agree with the Recorder on the latter point, it is unnecessary for them to express any opinion on the value of the evidence. It is quite clear that the effect of handing the notes was not to transfer the debts or to give the widow the dominion over them or enable her to recover the money secured by the notes. At most the evidence shows an intention to make such a transfer, but the gift is incomplete and no legal effect can be given to it. There is no question here of a donatio mortis causâ in the English sense, even if such a mode of passing property were known to the Mahomedan law.

[18] Their Lordships also agree with the learned Recorder that the executor's commission can be paid only out of the one-third part of the testator's estate which passed by his will. It is given no doubt by way of remuneration, but it is a gratuitous bequest and nothing more than a legacy to the executor, and certainly not in any sense a debt.

The learned Recorder has decided that the widow is entitled to maintenance at the rate of Rs. 150 per mensem for one year after the testator's death, and he has done so on the authority of a passage of the Koran quoted by Mr. Justice AMEER ALI in his work on the Personal Law of Mahomedans, on which the text writer makes the observation that several jurists have held that a wife has a right to be maintained out of her husband's estate for a year independently of any share she may obtain in the property left by him. Unfortunately the writer does not give any references in support of his statement, and Counsel have not been able to furnish their Lordships with any. On the other hand, the Hedaya (Book IV., Ch. XV, sec. III) says expressly: "Maintenance is not due to a woman after her husband's decease," and gives reasons for so holding. The Imamia (Baillie, p. 170) after saying that it would seem that after the death of her husband the widow has no right to a residence except in the single case of her being pregnant, says: "A widow has no right to maintenance, even though she be pregnant."

Their Lordships on these authorities must hold that a Mahomedan widow is not entitled to maintenance out of her husband's estate in addition to what she is entitled to by inheritance or under his will. They do not care to speculate on the mode in which the text quoted from the Koran, which is to be found, Sura II. vv. 241-2, is to be reconciled with the law as laid down in the Hedaya and by the author of the passage quoted from Baillie's Imamia. But it would be wrong for the Court on a point of this kind to attempt to put their own construction on the Koran in opposition to the express ruling of commentators of such great antiquity and high authority.

The executor in his accounts charged the widow with an occupation rent for the period of eleven months during which she continued to occupy the testator's house after his death. She [19] objected to the charge on the ground that she had never contracted to pay a rent, and the learned Recorder has decided in her favour. Their Lordships do not disagree with the Recorder. It is quite true that when one occupies the house of another with his permission there is prima facie an implied contract to pay an occupation rent. But this implication may be rebutted by showing the circumstances under which possession was taken, e.g., that the house was lent to the occupier, or that he was a caretaker. In this case the widow's occupation is referable to the previous occupation by her husband and herself, and as one of the heirs and one of the residuary legatees she had an interest in the house (apart from the land). No notice appears to have been given her that she would be charged a rent, and their Lordships think that in the circumstances of the case they cannot imply a contract on her part to pay a rent, but they must treat her as having occupied the house until sale on behalf of herself and the other parties interested as caretakers.

There only remains the question raised on the widow's behalf that she is entitled to share in the land on which the buildings stand as well as in the value of the buildings themselves. The argument urged by Mr. Branson was that the text from Baillie's Imamia, p. 295, quoted by the learned Recorder refers only to agricultural land, and that a childless widow is, according to the proper construction of that text entitled by Shiah Law to share in land forming the site of buildings. The argument is characterized by novelty and boldness. It is unsupported by any authority, and is contrary to the accepted doctrine on the subject. Their Lordships have no hesitation in agreeing with the learned Recorder in rejecting it.

Their Lordships, therefore, will humbly advise Her Majesty that the final decree of the learned Recorder dated the 11th September 1893 be reversed so far as it decrees "7. That the plaintiff Koolsom Beebee is entitled to be paid maintenance out of the estate at the rate of Rs. 150 per month for twelve months," and instead thereof it be declared "that the plaintiff Koolsom Beebee is not entitled to maintenance out of the estate after the date of the testator's death," and in other respects that the decree be affirmed. As the appeal of the appel-[20]lant Aga Mahomed Jaffer Bindanim has partly failed and partly succeeded there will be no order as to the costs of that appeal. The appellant Koolsom Beebee must pay to Aga Mahomed Jaffer Bindanim the costs of her appeal. The other respondents in each appeal have not appeared and there are no costs.

In 'Mahomedan jurisprudence,' I Edn (1911) p 45, Mr Abdur Rahim makes these remarks on the passage —'But it would be wrong for the Court on a point of this kind to put their own construction on the Quran in opposition to express ruling of commentators of such great antiquity and high authority ' He says " It was apparently not brought to the notice of the Committee that the verse of the Quran which was relied on had been repealed by another verse ' Also, he observes on the italicised words —" The significance of the Board's emphasis 'on a point of this kind has to be understood not only with reference to what has just been mentioned, but also to what it had laid down previously, with reference to the application of rules relating to certain forms of disposition of property in the Muhammadan Law. The extreme limit to which deference to the opinions of Muhammadan jurists has been carried in determining the Muhammadan Law governing a question relating to family relations is illustrated in a case reported in 12 W R , 460 where divorce pronounced upon compulsion from threats was held to be effective * * As to the mode in which Muhammadan law is to be applied in questions relating to alienation of property, there seems to be a gradually increasing tendency on the part of the Courts, and notably of the Privy Council, to assert a greater freedom of interpretation ' citing 2 Cal , 184 , 11 All 460 , 35 Cal,, 1 , 25 All , 236 , 22 Cal , 619

II MAINTENANCE —

The widow (unlike a divorced wife) has no right to maintenance out of her husband's estate during iddat apart from what she may be entitled to as deferred dower or under the law of inheritance —This is regarded by Sir ROLAND K WILSON as applicable equally to Sunnis, citing texts, Wilson's Anglo Muhammadan Law, III Edn , (1908) p 185

Sir ROLAND K WILSON in his Anglo Muhammadan Law (1908) III Edn p 438 says, 'In the last case (25 Cal 9) it was unsuccessfully contended that the text from Baillie referred only to agricultural land not to the sites of buildings It would seem to follow from this that a childless widow governed by Shiah Law cannot retain possession of her husband's agricultural lands until her claim for dower is satisfied, unless she has obtained possession lawfully, on some other grounds than that of heirship but the contrary was incidentally assumed in (1907) 35 Cal , 120

Jurisdiction of Criminal Court —Criminal Jurisdiction along the Railway through Indian Independent States —Locality of crime—Illegal arrest on lands occupied by the Hyderabad State Railway

The authority for the exercise of criminal jurisdiction by the Government of India upon lands within the limits of the Hyderabad State Railway is derived from a grant to that Government in 1887 by His Highness the Nizam as ruler of the territory. The railway lands remain part of his dominions.

The grant of civil and criminal jurisdiction contained in the correspondence of that year between the Nizam's Minister and the Resident at Hyderabad is expressed to be " along the line of railway as is the case on other lines running through Independent States."

This jurisdiction, notwithstanding any words in the Notification of the Government of India of the 22nd March 1888 (which could not of itself give any authority, or add to that granted by the Nizam), does not justify the arrest on the lands of the Hyderabad State Railway of a subject of the Nizam under the warrant of the Magistrate of a District in British India, on a charge of a criminal offence committed in British India, and unconnected with the Hyderabad Railway administration.

The mere presence of the accused on the railway lands, over which criminal jurisdiction had been granted as above, was no legal ground for his arrest under the warrant of the Court in British India, his offence, if committed at all, not having been committed on those lands, and not having been connected with the railway.

[21] APPEAL from an order (17th February 1896) of the Chief Court as a Court of Criminal Revision.

The question raised on this appeal was whether or not the jurisdiction conferred by His Highness the Nizam of Hyderabad upon the Government of India along the line of the Hyderabad State Railway had been exceeded by the arrest of one of his subjects, on the lands of that railway, under a warrant of the Magistrate of a District in British India, upon the charge of having committed a criminal offence within that Magistrate's District.

The appellant, Sayad Muhammad Yusuf-ud-din, a Hyderabad subject, and a talukdar, or District Officer, in the service of the Nizam, was arrested on the 28th November 1895, under a warrant of the Magistrate of Simla in the Punjab, on a charge of having abetted at Simla the offer of an illegal gratification to a public servant, the Record-keeper of the Foreign Department of the Government of India, contrary to sections 116/161 of the Indian Penal Code.

Of the substantive attempt to bribe Mr. Schorn on the 12th and 13th June 1895, the attempt not having succeeded, one Gopalchunder was convicted by the District Magistrate of Simla, Captain Beadon, on the 8th July 1895 In the course of that trial it appeared that Gopalchunder, who kept an hotel at Simla, had acted at the request of a person, then staying in the hotel, known as a Sirdar of Hyderabad

On the 18th September 1895 the District Magistrate, on application made from Hyderabad, signed and issued to the Resident at Hyderabad a warrant for the arrest of the appellant In issuing this instead of a summons, the Magistrate recorded his reason, in conformity with section 90 of the Criminal Procedure Code (that being one of the reasons there specified), and he added the following note:-

"N.B.—In handing this warrant over to the Thagi and Dakaiti Department, I have explained that it cannot be executed outside British India, except through a Political Agent. If the accused is in Foreign Territory, the Resident who applies for the warrant, and is Political Agent for Hyderabad, must decide whether he can be made over to the British Courts under the Extradition Law."

[22] The warrant on reaching Hyderabad was endorsed by the second Assistant Resident to the Magistrate Superintendent of Railway Police, and by him endorsed for execution by the chief constable of Railway Police, who executed it by the arrest of the appellant within the limits of the Hyderabad State Railway at one of the stations, on the 28th November 1895. On the 30th of the same month the accused was released and held to bail to appear to the charge at Simla. This he did on the 11th December. The case was adjourned, and in the end fixed for hearing at Amballa, an order having been made, upon consent, by the Chief Court, transferring the case to that District, where it was postponed. Meantime, on the 22nd January 1896, the appellant petitioned the Chief Court to cancel the warrant under which he had been arrested, and the order for its issue. Among other grounds, he alleged that the issue of this warrant by the Simla Magistrate for execution in Hyderabad territory was contrary to law, and that his arrest in that territory was illegal. His petition was that the proceedings taken should be set aside, and that further proceedings should be stayed, pending the orders of the Court. On the 17th February 1896 this petition was dismissed by the Chief Court, FRIZELLE and P. C. CHATTERJI, JJ.; and against this order of dismissal the present appeal was afterwards preferred.

On the 7th April following the charge against the appellant came on to be heard by Captain Parsons, Magistrate of the Amballa District, the accused being present. A commission was issued for the examination of some witnesses at Hyderabad, and their examination took place. But on the 11th May 1896 the proceedings in the Amballa Court were stayed, the accused, on a petition preferred by him to Her Majesty in Council, having obtained special leave to appeal.

The following is the material part of the Government Notification of the 22nd March 1888, published in the Gazette of India of the 24th idem, upon which the judgment of the Chief Court proceeded, without other evidence before them showing the jurisdiction granted by the Nizam :—

"Fort William, 22nd March, 1888. Whereas His Highness the Nizam of Hyderabad has granted to the British Government full jurisdiction within the [23] lands which are occupied, or may hereafter be occupied, by His Highness the Nizam's Guaranteed State Railways Company, by the Great Indian Peninsular Railway, by the Madras Railway, and by the Southern Mahratta Railway respectively (including the lands occupied as stations, outbuildings, and for other railway purposes); in exercise of this jurisdiction, and of the powers conferred by sections 4 and 5 of 'The Foreign Jurisdiction and Extradition Act, 1879' and of all other powers enabling him in this behalf, the Governor-General in Council is pleased to issue the following orders :—

"Part 1. The provisions, so far as they may be applicable and as amended for the time being by subsequent enactments of the Acts mentioned below, are hereby extended to the aforesaid lands, namely, Act XLV of 1860 (the Indian Penal Code), Act V of 1861 (for the Regulation of the Police), Act VI of 1864 (the Whipping Act), Act I of 1871 (the Cattle Trespass Act), Act X of 1882 (the Code of Criminal Procedure) &c., &c.

"Part 2. For the purpose of the exercise of criminal jurisdiction within the aforesaid lands, the Governor-General in Council is pleased to make the following arrangements: 1. There shall be a Railway Magistrate who shall be the second Assistant to the Resident at Hyderabad. 2. The Railway Magistrate shall have the powers of a District Magistrate as described in the Code of Criminal Procedure."

Act XXI of 1879, called "The Foreign Jurisdiction and Extradition Act, 1879," referred to in the above, contains in chapter II the following :—

"Powers of British officers in places beyond British India. Section 4. The Governor-General in Council may exercise any power or jurisdiction which he for the time being has within any country or place beyond the limits of British India and may delegate the same to any servant of the British Indian Government in such manner and to such extent as the Governor-General in Council from time to time thinks fit: Section 5. A Notification in the Gazette of India of the exercise by the Governor-General in Council of any such power or jurisdiction, and of the delegation thereof by him to any person or class of persons, and of the Rules of Procedure or other conditions to which such persons are to conform, and of the local area within which their powers are to be exercised, shall be conclusive proof of the truth of the matters stated in the Notification."

Section 6 relates to the appointment, powers and jurisdiction of Justices of the Peace. Section 7 confirms the powers of existing officials as to jurisdiction under this Act, which in that section extends the criminal law of British India to British subjects, European and native, out of British India, subject as to procedure to such modifications as the Governor-General in Council from time to time may direct.

"The main ground of this petition is that the Magistrate of Simla had no jurisdiction to issue a warrant of arrest for execution in the Hyderabad State for an offence committed at Simla against sections 116 and 161 of the Penal Code by a subject of the Hyderabad State, contrary to the Extradition Treaty with His Highness the Nizam, which exempts the subjects of His Highness from surrender; and that it never should have been executed. This objection would have had more force had the warrant been issued for execution, or been executed, at a place in the Hyderabad State over which the British Government has no jurisdiction. But it was executed at a place over which full jurisdiction is possessed by the British Government under the Notification already quoted, and to which the whole of the Criminal Procedure Code was extended by that Notification, and in my opinion a warrant so executed was as legal as if it had been executed in any district in British India. If it had been executed or intended to be executed in Hyderabad territory, in which no such jurisdiction had been ceded, I think exception might have been more properly taken than, as the case stands, to both its issue and execution. But it was not carried out, or apparently issued with a view to its being carried out, at a place within the Nizam's jurisdiction. It was addressed to the Resident of Hyderabad, and its manner of execution expressly left to him. He, it may be observed, has under the Notification jurisdiction for all purposes connected with the administration of criminal justice within the limits therein specified."

The Judge further said:—

"Had there been an addition to sections 1 and 82 of the Criminal Procedure Code that this Act extended to the whole of British India, and any territory over which jurisdiction was ceded under section 4 of Act XXI of 1879 (under which the Notification was issued), and that a warrant of arrest may be executed at any place in British India, or any place over which jurisdiction had been ceded under the last-mentioned Act, the case would have been perfectly clear. To my mind the Notification had exactly the same purport and effect as if this addition had been made to the Criminal Procedure Code. It expressly extended the whole of that Code to the lands specified, and this involved the extension of the limits mentioned in section 82 and made section 83 applicable, under which the District Magistrate of Simla could have sent the warrant to the Railway Magistrate of Hyderabad. The latter Magistrate was bound to treat the warrant in the same way as any other Magistrate, subject to the Procedure Code, would have been bound to treat it, and did accordingly execute it in the manner laid down in section 83.

[25] "That the petitioner is a subject of the Hyderabad State does not affect the matter. Full jurisdiction in the place where he was arrested was ceded over Hyderabad subjects as well as British subjects. The Notification contained no exception or reservation, and petitioner was, within those limits, equally liable to arrest as he would have been at Simla itself, or in any other district in British India."

CHATTERJI, J., who concurred said in the course of his judgment:

"The petitioner must be presumed, for the purposes of this case, to be a subject of His Highness the Nizam, as stated in his affidavit, there being no averment to the contrary, but his alleged offence was committed at Simla, and is triable there, and there is no question of his exemption from the jurisdiction of the Simla Court on the ground of his being a foreign subject."

The Judge further said:—

"It was admitted by the learned Counsel for the petitioner that the jurisdiction exercised by the Governor-General in Council over the lines of railway extended to all classes of persons found within their limits, whether subjects of the British Government or of the Hyderabad State. Indeed this seems perfectly clear from the preamble to the Foreign Jurisdiction and Extradition Act, 1879, as well as from the terms of the Notification above quoted. The contentions of the petitioner against the warrant are divisible into two heads—(1) illegality of the warrant as issued from the Simla Court; (2) illegality of its execution within the line of railway in the Hyderabad territory.

"The legality of the warrant is attacked on the grounds—(1) that it was intended to be executed in foreign territory, as shown by its being directed to the Resident at Hyderabad, and its description of the petitioner; and (2) that the Code of Criminal Procedure gives no authority to British Indian Magistrates to issue warrants executable outside British India. In my opinion the conclusion does not seem to follow from the premises."

He further said :—

"In so far, therefore, as the argument proceeded upon the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure or on general principles, it does not appear to be sound: but it is not necessary to discuss this part of it any further, as the warrant does not appear to have been intended by the District Magistrate of Simla to be executed outside British India. The mere fact that it was addressed to the Resident at Hyderabad does not prove that it was so intended. On the contrary, Captain Beadon's order, dated 18th September 1895, clearly shows that he was fully aware of the provisions of section 82. His views about extradition may be mistaken, but they are not sufficient to shew that he asked for the execution of the warrant contrary to law.

"Executions of warrants of British Courts within the railway lines in Hyderabad territory, and of warrants of the Railway Magistrate of such [26] territory in British India, must be of constant occurrence, for the object of acquiring the British jurisdiction within the railway limits is to obviate the dangers and inconveniences of the difference and clashing of jurisdictions. A contention like the present, though possibly not yet raised, can be raised in scores of cases, and, if it is correct, must nullify the whole arrangement, and leave matters where they were before the special jurisdiction was acquired."

In conclusion, the Judge summarized his reasons as follows :—

"The Notification extends the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure to the territory occupied by the railways, 'so far as they may be applicable.' These provisions have, therefore, to be applied with modifications suited to the circumstances and conditions under which such territory is administered. Bearing in mind the object in acquiring jurisdiction over these tracts, and in order to give effect to it and to avoid the inconveniences which would necessarily result from adopting a different construction, we must, I think, read sections 1 and 82 of the Code as in force there, as if words specifying such lands were inserted after the words 'British India' in those sections, and the word 'warrant' in Chapter VI, understood to include warrants issued by Criminal Courts in British India as well as by such Courts within the lines of railway. If this construction is correct, as I hold it is, the warrant in this instance could be and was lawfully executed at Lingampally."

Pursuant to leave obtained by him as above mentioned, the accused appealed to Her Majesty in Council.

While his appeal was pending, copies of a correspondence between the Governments of India and of Hyderabad were added in a supplemental record, showing the grant of civil and criminal jurisdiction made by the Nizam in 1887. The letters included one of the 10th September 1887, from the Nizam's Minister to the Resident, stating that His Highness acceded to the request of the Government of India that such a jurisdiction should be granted, "as is the case on other lines running through Independent States." The contents of this are stated in their Lordships' judgment.

Mr. H. H. Asquith, Q. C., and Mr. J. H. A. Branson, for the Appellant.—The arrest was illegal for want of jurisdiction in the Court which issued the warrant, and for absence of lawful authority to execute it at the place of the arrest. The Simla Magistrate had no jurisdiction to order the execution of the warrant in Hyderabad territory. The accused was not a British subject, nor was he resident in British India. He was a subject of the Nizam, within whose territories he was when arrested.

[27] That the place of arrest was a station on the Hyderabad State Railway within the lands occupied by the Railway, as referred to in the Notification of the 22nd March 1888, did not render the arrest any the more lawful This was the appellant's case

The judgment of the Chief Court was erroneous in holding that the sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure enacted for British India relating to the warrant of arrest and its execution, had obtained force, in virtue of a grant of criminal jurisdiction from the Nizam to the Government of India over the railway lands in Hyderabad territory, as much as if those lands were a district in British India No jurisdiction so extensive as to render possible such a state of things had been granted by the Nizam The authority which he had, in fact, granted was contained in the letter from the Nizam's Minister to the Resident of the 10th September 1887, which showed the jurisdiction of the British Indian Magistrate to be exerciseable for the maintenance of order along the lines of railway in Hyderabad, as in other Independent States, upon the lines running through them In so far as the Notification exceeded the terms of that grant it had no effect The railway station where the arrest was made was, no doubt, within the limits specified in the Notification But the lands occupied by the Railway Company were not in any sense British territory The plan of cession of territory for the purpose of administering justice on the lines of railway in Independent States at one time followed, had been abandoned as inexpedient, and the grant of a jurisdiction, civil and criminal, over the lands comprised within railway limits, had been made at the request of the Indian Government This, however was not a general jurisdiction for the repression of crime in India, but for maintaining order in connection with railways in Independent States The Notification purported to extend the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure "so far as they may be applicable" to railway lands in Hyderabad It was submitted that they could not be applied for the purpose of arresting an offender in the circumstances of the accused The argument however, for him did not rest only on the construction of these words The character of the offence charged, taken in connection with the place of its commission, if committed at all, showed that the [28] criminal jurisdiction along the line, as granted by the Nizam, could have no application to this offence That criminal jurisdiction comprehended only offences that had a local, or some other, connection with the Hyderabad State Railway, its good order and regulation a connection that did not exist in the present case The Notification purported to extend the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure "so far as they may be applicable to railway lands in Hyderabad It was submitted that they could not be applied for the purpose of arresting an offender in the circumstances of the accused The argument, however did not rest only on the construction of these words The character of the offence charged, taken in connection with the place of its commission, if committed at all, showed that this jurisdiction, as granted by the Nizam, could have no application It was applicable only to offences that had local, or some other, connection with the good order and regulation of the Hyderabad State Railway, a connection that did not exist in this case.

Mr. A. Cohen, Q C, and Mr J D Mayne submitted the following as their principal points—The jurisdiction over the railway lands depended, not upon any legislation, but upon powers acquired by agreement with the State through which the railway was made, the Government of India, in the exercise of the rights of the Crown delegated to them, accepting the authority conferred by the Nizam. There were several kinds of extra-territorial jurisdiction exercised by the Governor-General of India in Council over lands in Independent Indian States. Some of these were referred to in the Act XXI of 1879. The Indian railways, especially in the west and central parts of India where Indian States and British Indian territory were interlaced, had been found to require the exercise of this jurisdiction, to secure the administration of justice. Different jurisdictions at short intervals a along line of railway could not have worked effectively to repress crime and maintain order. Therefore it had been conceded that there should be one jurisdiction only, which should be that of the paramount Power. This, at one time, as stated already had been secured in some States by obtaining an actual cession of territory. The same result was now generally secured by obtaining only a grant of civil and criminal jurisdic-[29] tion over the lands comprised in the railway. There was no difference on this point between the Hyderabad State Railway and railways in other Indian States, from which, as would be found, by reference to " Aitchison's Treaties, etc., " a considerable number of grants had been obtained by the Government of India.

The question here was how far the grant made by the Nizam went in regard to criminal procedure. Reference was made to the official letter, from the Nizam's Minister to the Resident, dated 10th September 1887. After that grant of jurisdiction, the Notification of the 22nd March 1888 was published by the Government of India in the Gazette. From that time this jurisdiction, as well in Hyderabad as on other States, had been exercised on the understanding that the railway lands along the lines were, for all purposes of criminal process, in the same relation to the judicial system of the Government of India as if they formed part of the territories under the administration of that Government. The jurisdiction has been used for executing on railway lands the process of the British Indian Codes with a complete understanding between the two Governments. Taking the proceedings in their order, they were legal before the Simla Magistrate who acted correctly in issuing the warrant. Next came the arrest in an exceptional part of foreign territory, where the warrant of a British Indian Court was permitted to have force by the grant of criminal jurisdiction to the Indian Government. If there had been irregularity, when the accused appeared, as he had done, on the 11th December 1895, in the Simla Court, no ground for staying the proceedings against him was afforded.

Again, it was apparent that the Chief Court Judges, upon whom an Act of the Indian Legislature was binding, had no choice but to comply with section 5 of the Foreign Jurisdiction and Extradition Act XXI of 1879, which required them to accept the Notification as conclusive. However, the contention for the respondent now was that the letter of the 10th September 1887 had conceded sufficient powers to justify this arrest. The Government of India had the right under this grant to entrust the exercise of the jurisdiction on railway lands to such officers to be carried out in such manner, and with such procedure as [30] that Government might consider suitable, employing such officers as it might choose for the purpose. Lastly, the Chief Court had been right in holding that the jurisdiction granted by the Nizam was not limited to persons of any one nationality, and that it included his own subjects.

Reference was made to the Foreign Jurisdiction and Extradition Act, 1879, and to the Statute of 1890, the 53 and 54 Vic., Chap. 37.

Counsel for the appellant was not called upon to reply.

Their Lordships' judgment was then delivered by—

Lord Halsbury (Lord Chancellor).—In this case their Lordships are called upon to pronounce their opinion as to whether the arrest of Yusuf-ud-din, a native of the Nizam's State, was lawfully executed by a warrant issued by a Magistrate at Simla.

The alleged offence for which the accused was arrested was the abetment in British territory of the offence which we may call compendiously bribery. Their Lordships have nothing to do with the question whether or not, if the accused had been found within British territory, he could have been lawfully tried and convicted of that offence, because the question reserved for their Lordships here to consider is whether or not the arrest of the man, while he was at the station on a railway which is locally situated within the dominions of the Nizam, was a lawful arrest; nor, except for the purpose of his particular case, have their Lordships anything to do with the consequences of that arrest being lawful or otherwise The one question which they have to determine is whether the arrest was lawful.

Now, the offence which was charged against the accused was an offence committed, if committed at all, in British India, and subject to what is said hereafter, their Lordships are of opinion that the territory on which the railway is locally built has been, and has continued to be, part of the dominions of the Nizam. It is important to observe this, because crime is in its essential nature local, and if the accused had been arrested in British territory there is no doubt that the British authorities would have ample jurisdiction to try and punish him for crime. But their [31] Lordships are of opinion that the railway territory has never become part of British India, and is still part of the dominions of the Nizam. The authority, therefore, to execute any criminal process must be derived in some way or another from the Sovereign of that territory, and the only authority relied on here is the authority given in the correspondence, which constitutes the cession by the Nizam of jurisdiction to the British Government. It is important to observe that the Notification upon which the learned Judges in India appear to have relied could itself give no such authority. Even if in more extensive terms than in fact are included in the Notification it had purported to give jurisdiction, as the stream can rise no higher than its source, that Notification can only give authority to the extent to which the Sovereign of the territory (the Nizam) has permitted the British Government to make that Notification. Their Lordships are not prepared to differ from the construction which has been placed by the learned Judges in India on the Notification, if the Notification was itself the source of authority, but the Notification is not the source of authority. The authority, of which this is only the Notification, is derived from the Sovereign Power of the Nizam himself. It becomes therefore necessary, as there is no express treaty and no words which in themselves precisely define the amount of jurisdiction intended to be conveyed by the Nizam, to revert to the correspondence which passed between those representing the two Governments—to see in the first place what was asked for and what was ultimately conceded.

Now, the authority which was asked for was the authority to exercise civil and criminal jurisdiction over the railway lands and premises , and if there is one thing manifest in the course of the correspondence more than another, it is that the Nizam jealously refused anything in the nature of a cession of territory such as would confer by itself local jurisdiction. It is the one thing which all through the correspondence appears to have been refused. The result is that one must look and see what was ultimately conceded, and when one comes to look at that which was asked for and that which was granted it seems to be very plainly set forth in the additional papers, which their Lordships understand not to have [32] been placed in the hands of the Chief Court, whose judgment is appealed from.

On the 28th March 1887 the British Resident stated that the thing desired by the Government of India was sufficient power "over the railways" to enable a Magistrate and Police Officer, recently appointed with the Nizam's assent, to perform their duties; that at present their action was irregular because the Nizam had never formally transferred to the Government of India "full jurisdiction over the railways," and that "a few laws of British India which are necessary for the ordinary administration of criminal and civil justice should be regularly applied to the railways." Upon these grounds he suggested a transfer of "full criminal and civil jurisdiction over the railway lands."

He pointed out that the thing asked involved no sort or degree of encroachment on the Nizam's prerogative or independence; that it was only doing formally what had been done practically ever since the commencement of the railway, and what had been done by every other Native Chief as railways were made. He ended by writing: "The jurisdiction is not assumed by the British Government in its own right, but is conceded by His Highness of his own free will for the sake of legal and administrative convenience over an area limited by the railway fences in which the difficulties that may occur are likely to be occasioned by Europeans."

The Nizam's Minister demurred even to this limited proposal lest it should encroach on his Sovereignty, and he made a counter-proposal to pass by his own authority such British Indian laws as are necessary for the ordinary administration of civil and criminal justice.

These objections were met by the Resident by pointing out that he had not asked for the cession of any territory, and that the Nizam could hardly intend to assert "that the grant of the means for carrying on a small piece of administration in a more legal and efficient mode than has hitherto been found possible, can possibly be viewed as a 'commencement of annexation of large tracts in His Highness's dominions' by the English Government." And he concluded thus: "I hope that this letter will serve to 'clear the air' a little about what really is only a matter of administrative convenience, and is absolutely free of any such [33] far-reaching consequences or designs as the draft letter would seem to prognosticate from it."

The concluding letter, No. 21 of the additional papers, is from the Nizam's Minister: "In reply to your letter, dated the 6th instant, I beg to state that His Highness's Government is willing to accede to the wishes of the Government of India regarding the civil and criminal jurisdiction along the line of railway as is the case on other lines running through Independent States." If that is the only jurisdiction which is given, and there is no evidence of any other jurisdiction whatsoever given by treaty or usage or otherwise, it is manifest that the jurisdiction conferred is a criminal and civil jurisdiction "along the line of railway as is the case on other lines running through Independent States." The only question therefore that remains is whether the act complained of in this case was one which can in any sense be regarded as coming within the jurisdiction "along the line of railway." It is not suggested that the particular offence charged was committed on the railway, or that it was in any way connected with the administration of the railway. What is suggested is that in another part of India (at Simla) an offence was committed in British territory, and because the appellant was physically present on a portion of that line of railway over which jurisdiction is given for the purpose of criminal and civil jurisdiction, he was open to criminal procedure for an offence committed elsewhere. Their Lordships are of opinion that there is no foundation for any such claim, that the arrest was illegal, and that the petition therefore ought to have been granted, and that the judgment of the Chief Court of the Punjab ought accordingly to be reversed. Their Lordships will therefore recommend to Her Majesty that the warrant and arrest and proceedings thereon should be set aside. There will be no order as to costs

Appeal allowed.

Second appeal—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sections 104, 106, 108—Special Judge under the Bengal Tenancy Act—Appeal from the decision of the Special Judge

Under the terms of section 108 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), a second appeal lies from the decision of the Special Judge on questions with regard to the prevailing standard of measurement, area of lands in the possession of tenants, and the liability of the tenants to pay rent on account of any excess lands in their possession.

Babu Saroda Charan Mitter and Babu Mukund Nath Roy for the Appellants.
Babu Promotho Nath Sen for the Respondents.

THE judgment of the High Court (Macpherson and Ameer Ali, JJ.) was as follows :—

This is an appeal against the decision of the Special Judge under section 108 of the Tenancy Act, and a preliminary objection is taken that no appeal lies, as the proceeding in which the decision was given was one under section 104, and not a proceeding in which a dispute within the meaning of section 106 was decided. It appears that in the course of a proceeding for the preparation of a record of rights, the landlords applied for a settlement of the rent. alleging inter alia that the tenants were holding land in excess of what they paid rent for, and that the rod of 18 inches to the cubit was the standard rod of measurement.

The defendants put in written statements, alleging that the standard rod was one of 20 inches to the cubit. They denied that they held any excess land, and stated that they held their holding at a consolidated rent.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2239 of 1895, against the decree of K. N. Roy, Esq., Officiating District Judge of Pubna and Bogra, dated the 30th of August 1895, affirming the decree of Moulvi Abdul Mahammad, Settlement Officer of Pubna, dated the 29th of April 1895.

The Settlement Officer proceeded to deal with these allegations of the parties treating the application of the landlords as a plaint [35] and the proceeding as one in which the landlords were plaintiffs and the tenants defendants. Issues were framed, three of which were (1) as to the prevailing standard of measurement; (2) as to whether the defendants held their holdings at a consolidated rent; and (3) as to whether the excess land, if any, could be assessed. He dealt with and decided those issues, and then there was an appeal by the plaintiff to the Special Judge, in which the correctness of his decisions was questioned.

It is difficult to say, having regard to the confused terms of sections 104 to 106, under what precise section the proceeding was held. There are cases in this Court in which it was held that there could be no dispute, and no decision of a dispute, under section 106 until the draft record was prepared, as, until then, there was no entry with reference to which a dispute could be said to arise. These cases were made the subject of a reference to a Full Bench, and it was substantially decided that the exact point of time at which the dispute arose was immaterial, and that a dispute within the meaning of section 106 might arise with reference to an entry which the Settlement Officer proposed to make in the draft record of right, although no such record had been prepared [(1897) Dengu Kazi v. Nobin Kissori Chowdhrani (I. L. R., 24 Cal., 462)]. In this case we find the landlords on one side, and the tenants on the other, making certain conflicting allegations as to the area of the land, the standard of measurement, and the liability of the tenants to pay any rent on account of the alleged excess area, and we find the Settlement Officer laying down issues on those points and deciding them. It would, we think, be difficult to conceive anything more nearly approaching a dispute and the decision of a dispute to which section 106 would be applicable. The appeal does not raise any question as to what the fair and equitable rent is, but it does raise questions as to matters which must be decided before the Settlement Officer could settle the amount of rent payable, and we must hold that under the terms of section 108 a second appeal does lie on those questions from the decision of the Special Judge.

Turning to the appeal itself, the objection of the appellants, who are the landlords and the plaintiffs in the proceeding, is that the Special Judge has not decided but ought to have decided the [36] length of the measure used in measurement, whether the defendants hold excess land, and whether they are liable to pay rent for the same. The Settlement Officer, we may add, decided that the measure was one of 18 inches to the cubit, but that the plaintiffs had failed to prove that the defendants were in possession of any land in excess of what they had been paying rent for, and he also found that they held at a consolidated rent. The Special Judge declined to go into those questions, considering that they were not properly raised in the plaint of the plaintiffs, which did not state what the original area of the holding of the tenants was, and the excess area in respect of which they wanted additional rent. The landlords in their original application under section 104 distinctly asserted that the tenants had been found by the survey then made with the measure of 18 inches to the cubit to be in possession of excess lands which ought to be assessed with the rent. If it was necessary to get from them any particulars as to the original area of the holdings or other matters, this might have been done, or if additional evidence was required it might have been called for.

The questions were raised, put in issue, and decided by the Settlement Officer; they were the material questions, and the Special Judge was bound, we think, to decide them one way or the other. We, therefore, set aside his decision in so far as it relates to the matters referred to above, and the case must go back in order that he may dispose of them The costs will abide the result.

Shama Churn Mitter and others Plaintiffs

Wooma Churn Haldar Defendant

Landlord and tenant —Notice to quit —Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885)— Suit for ejectment —Notice including some land of which the defendant is found to be not in possession

A notice to quit is not bad in law simply because of a small error in the statement in such notice of the area of the land in consequence of which [37] it included some land which the defendant was found not to hold under the plaintiff

THE facts of the case, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of this report, appear sufficiently from the judgment of the High Court

Babu Taruck Nath Palit for the Appellants

Babu Nilmadhub Bose for the Respondent

The Judgment of the High Court (BANERJEE and STEVENS, JJ) was as follows —

Banerjee, J —This appeal arises out of a suit for ejectment upon a notice to quit The defence was limitation, denial of the plaintiffs right, denial of the notice, and a plea that a part of the land in dispute belonged to the defendant and had been held by him for twelve years, and that the defendant had acquired a right to the whole of the land in dispute by twelve years' adverse possession.

The first Court found for the plaintiffs upon all the questions raised, except one, namely, that as to the defendant's title by adverse possession to 1¾ cottahs of land out of the land in dispute, and it accordingly gave the plaintiffs a decree for the land in dispute excepting 1¾ cottahs

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No 1884 of 1895 against the decree of Babu Shyam Chand Dhur, Subordinate Judge of 24 Pergunnahs, dated the 8th of August 1895, reversing the decree of Babu Hur Mohun Bose, Munsif of Diamond Harbour, dated the 31st of August 1894.

Against this decree of the first Court the defendant preferred an appeal, and the plaintiffs a cross-appeal. The Lower Appellate Court has dismissed the plaintiffs' cross-appeal, holding that they have failed to make out their title to 1¾ cottahs in regard to which their claim had been disallowed by the first Court, and it has decreed the defendant's appeal on the sole ground that the notice is bad in law, that is to say, bad because it includes some land which the defendant is found not to hold under the plaintiffs.

In second appeal it is contended for the plaintiffs-appellants that the decision of the Lower Appellate Court, so far as it decreed the defendant's appeal, is wrong in law, and that the notice, notwithstanding the defect found in it, was not so bad as to disentitle the plaintiffs to maintain a suit in ejectment upon the basis thereof.

We are of opinion that the plaintiffs' contention is sound. The notice requires the defendant to give up possession of 1 bigha [38] and 5 chittacks of homestead land with tank, situate in the Bazar of Diamond Harbour, Pergunnah Mooragacha, Zillah 24-Pergunnahs, held under the plaintiffs as tenant-at-will. The notice does not set out the boundaries of the land. The only defect that has been found in the notice is that, whereas it states the area of the defendant's holding to be 1 bigha and 5 chittacks, the true area is 1¾ cottahs less. And the question is, whether that is a defect in the notice sufficient to justify our holding that the notice is bad in law. Considering that the error is only one in relation to the area, and is a very small error, and considering that the defendant never took any objection that he was misled by reason of this defect in the notice, we think it would be wrong to hold that a defect like this is sufficient to vitiate the notice. To hold that any trifling error in the statement of the area vitiates a notice to quit, would be to throw an unnecessary difficulty in the way of parties seeking ejectment upon service of notice, and to require them to measure their lands and to set out the areas with a degree of accuracy which the ordinary purposes of life do not render it necessary for them to observe. As was remarked by Mr. Justice PATTESON in Doe d. Williams v. Smith [(1836) 5 A. and E., 350] it is not required that a notice should be worded with the accuracy of a plea. The view we take is supported also by the cases of Doe d. Cox [(1803) 4 Esp. 185; 6 Revised Rep., 850] and Doe, Lessee of Rodd v. Archer [(1811) 14 East. 245; 12 Revised Rep., 509].

The judgment of the Lower Appellate Court is, upon the question of the validity of the notice, therefore, in our opinion, wrong in law, and must be set aside, and the case sent back to that Court in order that the other questions raised in the appeal of the defendant before that Court may be disposed of. Costs will abide the result.

High Court, Jurisdiction of—District Judge, Jurisdiction of—Appeal—Appeal withdrawn from the District Court—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), section 25.

An appeal, the subject-matter of which was over Rs. 5,000 in value, was wrongly presented and filed in the District Judge's Court, and was subsequently upon application by the appellant withdrawn by the High Court under section 25 of the Civil Procedure Code, and registered as an appeal to that Court. The order of withdrawal left it open to the respondent to raise objection on the score of want of jurisdiction of the District Court at the time of hearing of the appeal.

Held, that when an appeal is transferred under section 25 of the Civil Procedure Code it must be heard subject to all the objections which could be taken before the Court from which it has been transferred. The High Court, therefore, had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal.

Peary Lall Mozoomdar v. Komal Kishore Dassia [(1880) I.L.R., 6 Cal., 30] and Ledgard v. Bull [(1886) I.L.R., 9 All, 191 L. R., 13 I. A., 131], referred to.

THE facts material to this report sufficiently appear from the judgment of the High Court. The only question argued was whether the appeal could be heard by the High Court.

Mr. Jackson and Babu Lalmohan Das for the Appellant.

Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee, Babu Saligram Singh, Babu Lakshmi Narayan Singh and Babu Debendra Chandra Mallik for the Respondents.

Mr. Bonnerjee, on behalf of the respondent, took a preliminary objection to the hearing of the appeal. He argued that the case transferred was the appeal to the District Judge, but the Judge had no jurisdiction to try the appeal. The High Court could not, therefore, hear the appeal -Peary Lall Mozoomdar v. Komal Kishore Dassia [(1880) I. L. R, 6 Cal., 30], Ledgard v. Bull [(1886) I. L. R, 9 All, 191: L. R., 13 I. A., 131].

[40] Mr. Jackson for the Appellant.—The case was not transferred; properly speaking the records were transmitted, and the appeal is one properly before this Court. The Judge in his order says that the appeal should be brought before the High Court; he should not have admitted it at all. The cases cited do not apply, and this Court has jurisdiction to hear the appeal. The learned Counsel then discussed the effect of the order of BEVERLEY and AMEER ALI, JJ., and cited Aukhil Chunder Sen Roy v. Mohiny Mohun Dass [(1879) 4 C.L.R., 491, (496)].

In this case an objection has been taken by the learned Counsel for the respondent to the hearing of the appeal. He contends that as the Court in which the appeal was originally filed had no jurisdiction, the value of the appeal being in excess of Rs. 5,000, this Court, in which the same appeal is, by virtue of an order made under section 25 of the Civil Procedure Code, now pending, cannot hear it. It is with extreme regret that we find ourselves compelled to give effect to this objection

The facts shortly stated are these Two suits were decided at the same time by the Subordinate Judge of Mozufferpore This case, which was an appeal from the judgment in one of those suits, was filed on the 3rd of September 1894 in the Court of the District Judge of Tirhoot The appeal in the other suit was filed here, and has been heard by a Division Bench of this Court. When this appeal was filed in the District Judge's Court an officer of the Court made the following note " Filed value of claim is not mentioned in the memorandum, but it appears from the certified copy of the decree filed along with the memorandum that the value of claim amounts to Rs 9,855 Thus this appeal should be filed in the High Court" We may mention here that it is admitted by the learned Counsel for the appellant that as a matter of fact the subject of the dispute in this appeal was over Rs 5,000 in value, and that the appeal was filed in the wrong Court But he contends that it was so [41] filed in consequence of an error which we will refer to hereafter. On the 4th September 1894, that is a day after the appeal was filed, there was an order made by the District Judge in these words "Admit, as an application will be made for the transfer of this appeal to be tried along with the analogous appeal about to be filed in the High Court No date need be fixed" That order was signed by the District Judge and also by Pitamber Chatterjee, the pleader for the appellant, who signed the memorandum of appeal It does not, however, really matter, for the purpose of our decision, whether Pitamber Chatterjee, the pleader for the appellant, at that time knew that the value of the claim really was over Rs 5,000, and that the District Judge of Tirhoot had no jurisdiction in the matter because, as we shall presently point out, the question as to how far the mistake made by the appellant is capable of being remedied has already been dealt with by a Division Bench of this Court on an application in this particular appeal The next event which happened was that on the 10th January 1895, a Division Bench of this Court issued a rule at the instance of the appellant calling upon the respondent to show cause why this appeal should not be transferred to the file of this Court and be heard and disposed of by this Court with appeal from Original Decree No 275 of 1894 now pending in this Court and with which it is analogous The terms of the rule are in accordance with the prayer of the petition of the appellant The word "transfer" is used It has been said that if the terms of the Procedure Code had been strictly followed the word ought to have been "withdrawn." The application could have been made only under one section, namely, section 25 of the Civil Procedure Code, which authorises the High Court and the District Court to allow the parties to withdraw a suit whether pending in a Court of First Instance or in a Court of Appeal subordinate to such High Court or District Court, as the case may be, and try the suit itself or transfer it for trial to any other such subordinate Court competent to try the same It does not matter whether "transfer" was the proper word to use in the rule or not. The meaning of the rule is obvious It was a rule to show cause why an order should not be made under section 25 withdrawing the appeal from the lower [42] Court and empowering the High Court to try it This rule came on for hearing on the 9th August 1895 before a Division Bench consisting of PRINSEP and GHOSE, JJ They made the rule absolute, but in their judgment they left it open to the parties at the hearing of the appeal to raise the objection which was then raised before them, and which was to the effect that the District Judge had no jurisdiction to try the appeal. Thus the making of that rule absolute has no effect upon the right of the respondent to raise this objection now.

One of the chief difficulties in this case arises from an application which was presented to this Court on the 16th September 1895, and was moved on the 25th November 1895. That application was based upon the fact that the appellant's Vakil, Babu Lalmohan Dass, for the first time on the 9th August 1895, when the rule came on for hearing, discovered that the appeal ought to have been valued at more than Rs. 5,000; and the petition goes on to submit that "the facts and circumstances stated above constitute sufficient cause for admitting the said appeal after the prescribed period," and asks "that the aforesaid memorandum of appeal (that is the one filed in the District Judge's Court) be admitted in this Court and be duly registered, or such further order made as to the Court may seem meet" That really, as far as we can see, is an application made under section 5 of the Limitation Act for the admission of the appeal after time, but with this difference, that instead of a fresh memorandum of appeal being put in, it is asked that the same memorandum of appeal be allowed to be used in this Court. Upon that application a rule was issued calling upon the other side to show cause why the memorandum of appeal should not be registered as an appeal to this Court. The rule came on for hearing on the 19th January 1897 before a Division Bench consisting of BEVERLEY and AMEER ALI, JJ. They discharged the rule. First of all they say in their judgment: "This is not an application for the admission of an appeal after time which is being presented in proper form to this Court There is no fresh memorandum of appeal now before us. What we are asked to do is to treat an appeal which was presented to the District Judge and which was called up for trial to this Court, as an appeal to this Court direct, [43] and that in the face of the order of the Division Bench which called up the appeal for hearing We are of opinion that we cannot do that. The appeal as presented to the District Judge has been called up to this Court, and is now an appeal to this Court numbered 304 of 1895, and we are at a loss to see how we can interfere in any way with the order made as regards that appeal." The learned Judges then consider that if they were to make an order in terms of the application, they would be interfering with the order which transferred to this Court an appeal pending in another Court. Their reason, as we understand it, was that there could not be on the file of the same Court two appeals from the same judgment, one on the footing that this Court had jurisdiction, and the other on the footing that the other Court had no jurisdiction. That, as far as we understand it, is what the learned Judges meant. They go on to say that even supposing that a fresh memorandum of appeal had been presented, they could not admit it because of the delay in its presentation, and they give other reasons, that is, they treat the application as if it were one under section 5 of the Limitation Act, and as if the memorandum of appeal was ready to be filed Whether the learned pleader offered to file a fresh memorandum of appeal it does not appear; but the learned Judges go into the question whether, if a fresh memorandum was filed, it was competent to them to admit the appeal, and, considering that no good reason was shown for the delay, they come to the conclusion that they could not admit it, and they discharge the rule. These are all the facts which are now before us.

On the appeal being called on, Mr Bonnerjee for the respondent contended that we have no power to hear it. There is no doubt that this Court can only hear appeals which are properly before it, and the only way in which appeals can be brought before it are by a memorandum of appeal being filed in this Court in accordance with the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, or when an appeal has been brought up to the file of this Court by an order made by this Court in the exercise of its powers under section 25 of the Civil Procedure Code. So far as section 25 is concerned, there can be no doubt that we cannot help the appellant. When a case is transferred to this Court under that section, it must be heard [44] subject to all the objections which could be taken if the case had been heard in the Court from which it has been transferred. The jurisdiction given by section 25 does not clothe this Court with greater powers than that which the lower Court had so far as the question of jurisdiction is concerned. If the lower Court had no jurisdiction to try the case, be the defect in jurisdiction with reference to the value or with reference to the situation of the property in dispute or with regard to any other matter which concerns jurisdiction, this Court could have no jurisdiction. Although the cases cited, namely, Peary Lall Mozoomdar v. Komal Kishore Dassia [(1880) I. L R., 6 Cal., 30], and the case of Ledgard v. Bull [(1886) I. L. R., 9 All., 191: L. R., 13 I. A., 134], are not on all fours with the present case, still we think that the reasons given there are applicable. If this Court could not try a suit which was transferred from a Court which had no jurisdiction to try it, it is difficult to see how it can hear an appeal transferred from a Court which had no jurisdiction to hear such appeal. It is admitted that the District Judge's Court had no jurisdiction to hear this appeal Therefore we think it follows that we cannot hear the appeal as an appeal which has been withdrawn from that Court and placed on the file of this Court by the order to which we have referred.

With regard to the other question it is contended that the appeal is now on the file of this Court, and we can hear it as an appeal to this Court. As we have pointed out we could only hear it as an appeal to this Court, if it had been filed here, and this has not been done. We think it is quite clear, having regard to what has taken place, that it would be incompetent to us to allow a memorandum of appeal to be filed now. It might happen in many cases that an Appellate Court, on finding that the parties have erred as to jurisdiction, would under section 5* of the Limitation Act allow the appeal to be filed. But here we are precluded from assenting to such an application, even if a memorandum of appeal had now been tendered to us. We may assume for the purposes of argument that the appellant is willing to tender a fresh memorandum of appeal As a matter of fact the learned Counsel for the [45] appellant says his client is willing to do so. The Division Bench of this Court in this case held that the 16th of September 1895 was a date too late for an application under section 5 of the Limitation Act. It, therefore, follows that the 20th of July 1897 is very much too late. No fresh fact has intervened. In our opinion the decision of the Division Bench is binding upon us. It is a decision really upon section 5 of the Limitation Act in the same case, where a Division Bench has declined to act under that section; it is not competent to any other Bench of this Court to act under it either at the hearing or at any other time. The only way in which that decision could be got rid of would be by review or by appeal. An appeal does not lie to this Court and no application for a review has been made.

It has been contended that these observations of BEVERLEY and AMEER ALI, JJ., are mere obiter dicta. But they were observations directed expressly to the application made by the appellant; and although it may have been competent to the Court to stop short at the expression of its opinion to which we have first referred, still their decision on the other matters do not amount only to an obiter dictum. It is an express decision upon a matter which they were invited to decide by the appellant.

We conclude, as we began, by expressing our regret that we are obliged to give effect to the objection of Mr. Bonnerjee to the hearing of this appeal.

We are in the same position as the District Judge would have been if the appeal had not been withdrawn from his file. He had no jurisdiction; we must hold we have none.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Preliminary objection allowed. Appeal dismissed.

Sale in execution of decrees—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sections 15, 285—Sale in execution by inferior Court of property already under an attachment by a superior Court—Jurisdiction—Preferential right of purchasers in execution-sale—Concurrent execution of decrees.

A obtained a decree against B in the Court of the Munsif of Jamui, and in execution thereof attached B's property on the 16th March 1891, the property was sold on the 20th April 1891 and purchased by C who obtained possession of it on the 3rd of August 1891, and then sold his interest to the plaintiff. At the same time the defendant R had a decree for costs against B and his heirs in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr, and in execution thereof attached the same property on the 4th February 1891, and sold it on the 24th August 1891, i.e., about four months after the sale of the property by the Munsif. plaintiff sued for possession on the ground that, having purchased the property of B before the second sale by the Subordinate Judge, she was entitled to the property. The defendant contended that the sale by the Munsif of the property under attachment by a Court of a higher grade was absolutely void, and the Munsif had no jurisdiction to sell the property under section 285 * of the Civil Procedure Code

Held, that the sale by the Munsif was not without jurisdiction, and that it conveyed to the plaintiff a valid title to the property.

Section 285 of the Civil Procedure Code is merely a section for procedure to prevent different claims arising out of the attachment and sale of the same property by different Courts.

The judgment of the High Court (O'Kinealy and Hill, JJ.) was as follows —

In this case the property in dispute was held in zarpeshgi by Ramdhan Singh, father of the defendants Sib Shewak Singh and Sadu Shewak Singh. In December 1874, Dhanpat Singh, the defendant No 17, purchased the right of the mortgagor, Koer Ganpat Singh, and he brought a suit against the zarpeshgidars in the Court of the Munsif of Jamui for arrears of rent, attached the property on the 16th March 1891, and sold it on the 20th of April of that year It was purchased by Puran Singh, who obtained possession of it on the 3rd August 1891, and then sold his interest to Rani Mina Koery, the plaintiff in this case At the same time one Raja Ram Narain had a decree for costs against the same Ramdhan Singh and his heirs in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr, and in execution of it he attached the property on the 4th February 1891, and sold it on the 24th August 1891 The plaintiff sued for possession of the property on the ground that, having purchased at an auction sale the right of Ramdhan Singh and his heirs before the second sale, which took place in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr, she was entitled to the property

It was urged in the Court below that under section 285 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the sale by the Munsif of the property under attachment by the Subordinate Judge, which was a Court of a higher grade, was absolutely void or in other words, that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to sell the property.

This question came before this Court in the case of Bykant Nath Shaha v. Rajendra Narain Rai [(1885) I L R, 12 Cal, 333] in which all the cases of the different High Courts were reviewed It was there pointed out that the object of that section was to prevent a confusion in the execution of decrees and where the execution sale has been held by an inferior Court at the instance of the decree-holder, the Court itself, the decree-holder, and the auction-purchaser

* [Sec 285 —Where property not in the custody of any Court has been attached in execution of decrees of more Courts than one, the Court which shall receive or realize such property and shall determine any claim thereto and any objection to the attachment thereof, shall be the Court of highest grade, or, where there is no difference in grade between such Courts the Court under whose decree the property was first attached.]

being without any information of any objection to the exercise of a jurisdiction [48] which that Court would ordinarily be competent to exercise, and the sale had been confirmed without any objection raised, it gives a valid title.

In the case of Dwarka Nath Dass v. Banku Behari Bose [(1891) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 651] the same property was attached by the Courts of the first and second Munsifs, and it was contended that the sale by the second Munsif was absolutely void, inasmuch as the property had been attached by the first Munsif. The Divisional Bench following the case of Bykant Nath Shaha v. Rajendra Narain Rai [(1885) I. L. R., 12 Cal, 333] decided that this was not so.

All these cases have been reviewed in the case of Patel Naranji Morarji v. Haridas Navaliram [(1893) I. L. R., 18 Bom., 458], and there it has been held that neither the language of the section, nor the object with which it may be supposed to have been introduced, made it necessary to hold that the sale by the second class Subordinate Judge was a nullity, when the property sold had been attached by a Court of a superior grade in execution of a decree before the actual sale took place.

So far as we can see section 285 is merely a section for procedure to prevent different claims arising out of the attachment and sale of the same property by different Courts. If we look at section 15 of the Code and consider the words regarding the Courts in which suits shall be instituted, we find that the words there are as strong, if not stronger, than the words of section 285, and yet that section from the very beginning has been held to be only a section regarding the procedure of the Courts and not affecting the jurisdiction.

We think the decision of the Court below is right and we dismiss the appeal with costs

Declaratory decree, Suit for—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), section 42—Suit for declaration that the defendant is a mere benamdar for the plaintiff—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Schedule II, Articles 95 and 120—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), section 244.

A suit brought by A to obtain a declaration that a decree originally obtained by B against C and another, which had been purchased in the name of D, had really been purchased by the plaintiff for his own benefit, the cause of action alleged being the wrongful execution of the decree by D, is not a suit for relief on the ground of fraud within article 95† of schedule II of the Limitation Act; but is governed by article 120 ‡ of that schedule. Under the circumstances the suit was held not to be barred by limitation.

Such a suit was held not to be barred by section 244, clause (c) of the Civil Procedure Code, as the question raised was not one arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, or their representatives, but one that arose between two parties each of whom claimed to be the representative of one of the parties to the suit, viz., B, the party in whose favour the decree was passed.

Held, further, that inasmuch as it was not necessary to ask for an injunction, the suit was not barred by the proviso to section 42 § of the Specific Relief Act.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1859 of 1895, against the decree of Babu Beni Madhub Mitter, Subordinate Judge of Hooghly, dated the 14th of June 1895, affirming the decree of Babu Raj Krishna Banerjee, Munsif of Howrah, dated the 14th of September 1893.

THE facts of the case for the purpose of this report are sufficiently stated in the judgment of the High Court.

Babu Sharat Chunder Roy Chowdhry, for the Appellants.

Babu Mohendra Nath Roy, for the Respondents.

Banerjee, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by one Dinonath Karmokar to obtain a declaration that a decree originally obtained by the defendant No. 4 against the defendants Nos. 2 and 3, which had been purchased in the name of defendant No. 1, had really been purchased by the plaintiff for his own benefit.

[50] The plaintiff, in his plaint, stated that execution had been taken out by him in the name of his benamdar, the defendant No. 1, but that subsequently a dispute having arisen between him and the defendant No. 1, the latter wrongfully, against his consent, took out execution in the year 1892, and that this was his cause of action for bringing the present suit.

There was a further relief asked for relating to certain immoveable property, but that was subsequently given up, and the suit proceeded only with reference to the first mentioned relief, namely, the relief by way of a declaration that the decree in question had been purchased by the plaintiff in the name of the defendant No. 1.

The defence was that the suit was barred by limitation, that it was barred also by section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that the defendant No. 1 was not a benamdar for the plaintiff.

The first Court found for the plaintiff upon all the questions raised in the case. Upon appeal by the defendant No. 1 or rather, I should say, by the purchasers of his interest, the objection under section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure seems not to have been pressed, but an objection under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act was substituted in its place; and the other two objections—the one of limitation and the other on the merits raised in the first Court—were again urged before the Lower Appellate Court.

The learned Subordinate Judge decided all the three points, against the defendants-appellants, and confirmed the decree of the first Court.

In second appeal, it is contended for the defendants-appellants, first, that the Courts below were wrong in holding that the suit was not barred by limitation, whereas they ought to have held that it was so barred, secondly, that the Court of Appeal below ought to have held that the suit was barred by section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and, thirdly, that the Court of Appeal below ought to have held that the suit was barred by the proviso to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act.

Upon the first point we are asked to hold that the suit is governed by article 95 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act, and that if that article applies, article 120 of that schedule which has been applied by the Lower Appellate Court cannot [51] have application. On the side of the respondents it is contended that article 95 does not apply to this case, and it is further contended, that, having regard to the facts found by the first Court, no question of limitation can arise in this case, as the suit was brought within three years from the date of the cause of action alleged in the plaint, that cause of action being the wrongful execution of the decree by the defendant No. 1 in the year 1892, the earlier execution proceedings being found by the Munsif to have been taken out really by the plaintiff, though in the name of his benamdar, the defendant No. 1.

The finding of the Munsif upon this question has not in any way been interfered with by the Lower Appellate Court; but then it is open to the appellants to contend that the Appellate Court has not confirmed the view of the first Court, it having overruled the plea of limitation on the ground that the suit was governed by article 120, and was not barred by limitation, as it was brought within six years of the date of the institution of the first execution proceedings.

If it was not clear that article 120 applied to the case, then perhaps it would have been necessary to send the case back to the Lower Appellate Court. But in our opinion the Lower Appellate Court was quite right in holding that the case was governed by article 120, because we think that article 95 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act, the only other article under which it has been contended, and it could possibly have been contended, that the case can come. has really no application to this case. Article 95 applies to a suit to set aside a decree obtained by fraud, or for other relief, on the ground of fraud. The present suit is not one to set aside a decree obtained by fraud The question is whether it is one for other relief on the ground of fraud.

We are clearly of opinion that this question ought to be answered in the negative.

As has been pointed out by the learned Vakil for the respondents, the plaintiff is entitled to the relief he asks for, namely, a declaration that he was the real purchaser of the decree, and that the defendant No. 1 was only a benamdar for him, quite irrespective of any fraud on the part of the defendant. This suit [52] cannot, therefore, be said to be one for relief on the ground of fraud. That being so, article 95 cannot have any application to this case. As that article does not apply, and as no other article expressly provides for this case, article 120 must apply to it.

We may here notice a case which was relied upon by the learned Vakil for the appellant, namely, the case of Chunder Nath Chowdhry v. Tirthanund Thakoor [(1878) I. L. R, 3 Cal, 504]. That case really goes against the appellant's contention; for it shows that article 95 does not apply to every case in which fraud enters as an element in the conduct of the defendant, but it is limited in its application to cases where relief is claimed on the sole ground of fraud.

As to the second contention, it is enough to say that the question raised in this case is not one arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, or their representatives, but is one that arises between two parties, each of whom claims to be the representative of one of the parties to the suit, namely, the party in whose favour the decree was passed.

That being so clause (c) of section 244 does not cover this case. And this appears clear upon a reference to the last paragraph of section 244, which relates to a case in which the question arises as to who is the representative of a party for the purpose of this section. In such a case as provided by the section the Court may either stay execution of the decree until the question has been determined by a separate suit, or may itself determine the question by an order under this section.

It is not suggested that the Court of execution was ever called upon to decide the question that is now raised, and therefore there can be no doubt that a separate suit would lie for the determination of that question.

As to the last point, the question was not raised in the first Court. If it had been raised in the first Court, and if the objection was well founded, the plaintiff could have amended the plaint by asking for an injunction which, it is suggested in the appellant's argument, the plaintiff ought to have asked for. It is true that the question was allowed to be raised by the Lower Appellate [53] Court, but that Court decided the question against the defendants-appellants. If the objection had been well founded, we should have followed the course that was followed by the Bombay High Court in the case of Sardar Singji v. Ganpat Singji [(1889) I.L.R., 14 Bom., 395]. But we do not think it necessary to take that course for two reasons: In the first place, we do not think that the objection is well founded. We do not think that any injunction was necessary to be asked for in this case. The plaintiff's case is that he is the real purchaser of the decree, and that the defendant No. 1 was merely a benamdar for him. If he succeeds, as he has succeeded in the Court below, in obtaining a declaration that he is the real purchaser of the decree, no further proceedings can be taken in execution, and no multiplicity of proceedings can arise for the avoiding of which a prayer for an injunction might have been needed, because an application by him to the Court of execution to place him on the record as the real representative of the decree-holder, will have the effect of putting an end to all further proceedings antagonistic to him.

The learned Vakil for the appellant, in support of his contention that, in cases like this, a prayer for an injunction ought to be made, relied upon the case of Kunhamed v. Kutti [(1891) I. L. R., 14 Mad., 167]. That case was of a very different nature from the one now before us. There the plaintiff asked for a declaratory decree that a certain decree had been obtained against him by fraud, and it was held that the plaintiff ought to have prayed for a perpetual injunction restraining the decree-holder from executing his decree. In that case, the prayer for an injunction was necessary, because it was by an injunction only that the plaintiff could really protect himself from execution proceedings being taken against him by the decree-holder, who had obtained the decree by fraud. Here, as I have pointed out above, it was open to the decree-holder to put an end to all further execution proceedings by an application under section 232 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

But granting that there was any difficulty in obtaining a cessation of execution proceedings by an application for substitution under section 232 of the Code, there is a second reason why, as I said, it was unnecessary to remand the case after giving leave [54] to the plaintiff to amend the plaint. This is the position of affairs. The defendant did not raise any objection under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act in the first Court; if he had done that, the plaintiff might have prayed for such amendment of his plaint as was then necessary. As matters now stand, it appears on the appellant's own showing that the rights of the plaintiff have become vested in the defendant No. 2, one of the judgment-debtors under the decree, the purchase of which has given rise to this litigation.

If then it is declared that originally the plaintiff was the real purchaser of the decree, and not the defendant No. 1, the result would be this that the decree would now, in the course events have taken, be transferred to defendant No. 2, one of the judgment-debtors, and by section 232* of the Code of Civil Procedure, clause* (b) of the proviso, it cannot be executed against any of the other

* [Sec. 232:—If a decree be transferred by assignment in writing, or by operation of law, from the decree-holder to any other person, the transferee may apply for its execution to the Court which passed it, and, if that Court thinks fit, the decree may be executed in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as if the application were made by such decree-holder.

Application by transferee of decree.

(b) where a decree for money against several persons has been transferred to one of them, it shall not be executed against the others.]

judgment-debtors. Thus, even if the objection of the appellants had been well founded, having regard to the change in the circumstances, we do not think that there would have arisen any necessity for remanding the case after giving the respondents leave to amend their plaint. The grounds urged before us, therefore, all fail, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

MR. JUSTICE SALE.

Omrita Nath Mittor

Administrator-General of Bengal.

Interest Act (XXXII of 1839), section 1 Certificate of the Administrator-General registering a debt—" Written instrument" —Administrator-General's Act (II of 1874), section 35- -Right of creditors to immediate payment in full if assets sufficient—" Rateable payment," Meaning of- Meaning of " shall be liable to pay "—Succession Act (X of 1865), section 282—Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), section 104.

A certificate of the Administrator-General admitting a debt to be due is not such a " written instrument" as is contemplated by the Interest Act [55] (XXXII of 1839), because the amount mentioned therein is not payable by virtue of the certificate which merely purports to certify the registration of the amount of the admitted debt for the purpose of convenience in administering the estate.

In a suit by a creditor if his demand be uncontested or proved and the executor admits assets, the plaintiff is entitled at the hearing to an order for immediate payment without taking the accounts. The admission of assets for the payment of a debt is also an admission of assets for the purposes of the suit and extends to costs if the Court thinks fit to give them. There is nothing in section 35 of the Administrator-General's Act (II of 1874) which qualifies or restricts or otherwise interferes with the right of a creditor to demand immediate payment of his claim in full when the realizable assets in the hands of the Administrator-General are sufficient for the immediate payment of all claims in full. The " rateable payment " referred to in the above section, as well as in section 282 of the Succession Act (X of 1865), and in section 104 * of the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), is rateable payment out of the assets; it is nowhere provided that it shall be made out of the nett income of the estate or any other specific part of the assets.

The language ("shall be liable to pay the costs)" used in clause 1 of section 35† of the Administrator-General's Act (II of 1874) shows that it was intended not to impose upon a creditor to whom the condition of exemption was inapplicable, an absolute obligation to pay the costs of the suit, but to leave a discretion to the Court to relieve him of the obligation if the circumstances of the case required it. James v. Young [(1884) L.R., 27 Ch. D., 622] referred to.

THE facts of the case appear fully from the judgment.

Mr. Palit and Mr. J. G. Woodroffe for the Plaintiff.

The Advocate-General (Sir Charles G. Paul) and Mr. Henderson for the Defendant.

Sale, J.—Kumar Indra Chundra Singh of Paikparah died on the 14th of May 1894, leaving a will whereof he appointed the Administrator-General of Bengal the executor, and leaving also a very large estate valued for the purposes of probate duty at over 38 lakhs of rupees. It appears that at the time of his death the testator was indebted to the extent of about 14 lakhs of rupees, a very large portion of this sum, viz., 12 lakhs, being due to Maharajah Doorga Churn Law, a secured creditor.

On the 30th June 1894 the Administrator-General obtained probate of the will of the testator and has since been engaged in the administration of his estate. On the 2nd October 1894 the [56] plaintiff gave notice to the Administrator-General of a claim against the estate for principal and interest due on a promissory note executed in his favour by the testator dated the 2nd April 1892. The principal sum secured by the note is Rs. 50,000 carrying interest at the rate of 7½ per cent. per annum. The plaintiff, however, claimed that, under an oral arrangement come to with the testator, he was entitled to interest at 9 per cent. A correspondence ensued between the plaintiff and the Administrator-General as to the rate of interest chargeable, and eventually an arrangement was come to, and, as appears from the Administrator-General's certificate dated the 8th June 1895, the plaintiff's claim was admitted and registered for the sum of Rs. 55,988-14-8 carrying interest on Rs. 50,000 at 8 per cent. per annum from the 1st June 1895.

The Administrator-General then, out of the income of the estate, as it was realized, proceeded to declare dividends in favour of the creditors who had registered their claims and tendered the proportion payable to the plaintiff in part satisfaction of his claim. The first of those dividends was declared on

But the executor or administrator shall pay all such debts as he knows of, including his own, equally and ratably, as far as the assets of the deceased will extend.]

† [Sec. 35:—If any suit be brought by a creditor against any Administrator-General in his representative character, the plaintiff shall be liable to pay the costs of the suit down to and including the decree, unless upon proof by affidavit or otherwise that not less than one month previous to the institution of the suit he had applied in writing to the Administrator-General, stating the amount and other particulars of the claim, and supporting the same by such evidence as, under the circumstances of the case, the Administrator-General was reasonably entitled to require, and that the Administrator-General had refused or neglected to register the claim according to the practice of his office. (Creditors' suits against Administrator-General.)

If in any such suit judgment is pronounced in favour of the plaintiff, he shall, nevertheless, be only entitled to payment out of the assets of the deceased equally and rateably with the other creditors.]

the 30th June 1895, and the last on the 20th of January 1897, and the total sum thus set apart for payment of the plaintiff's debt and which the Administrator-General now holds for this purpose amounts to Rs. 52,144-14-7. The plaintiff declined to accept payment of his debt by instalments and claimed to be paid the whole amount due to him in one sum with interest on the entire principal sum. The Administrator-General, on the other hand, insisted that the plaintiff was bound to accept payment of his debt by instalments, and denied that the plaintiff was entitled to interest on the dividends tendered to him and set apart to his credit.

It appears that in the year 1895 the Administrator-General proposed to raise a sufficient sum to pay off the creditors of the estate by selling a portion of the estate; but the beneficiaries under the will of the testator were opposed to any scheme of payment which would necessitate either a sale of any portion of the estate or even a fresh charge being created for that purpose. In the course of that year two suits were instituted in this Court against the Administrator-General, one by Sreemutty Saraswati, the daughter, and the other by Sreemutty Mrinalini, [57] the widow, of the testator, praying for administration of the estate. In the one suit the plaintiff Saraswati asks that the Administrator-General may be restrained from raising a loan to pay off the creditors, while in the other suit the plaintiff Mrinalini seeks to restrain the Administrator-General from resorting to a sale of any portion of the estate for the purpose of satisfying the debts due thereon.

On the 6th of December 1895 the plaintiff gave notice in writing to the Administrator-General that he would claim interest at 8 per cent. on the sum of Rs. 55,988-14-8, being the sum admitted to be due to him by the certificate of the 8th of June 1895, including interest due on the principal sum up to the 1st of June 1895.

On the 7th of December 1896 the plaintiff instituted the present suit against the Administrator-General claiming payment of the following sums :—

(1) Rs 62,055-9-4, being the sum of Rs 55,988-14-8 representing the original registered claim, and a further sum of Rs. 6,066-10-8 representing interest at 8 per cent. per annum calculated on the principal amount of the debt from 1st June 1895 to the date of the institution of the suit,

(2) Rs. 599, being the interest at 8 per cent. calculated on the sum of Rs. 5,988-14-8 from the 6th of December 1895, and

(3) Rs. 300, representing the damages alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff by reason of his having been put to proof of his original claim. The last of these claims has not been pressed and it is not necessary therefore to refer to it further.

As regards the claim to interest on the sum of Rs. 55,988-14-8 the plaintiff relies on the provisions of section 1 of the Interest Act (Act XXXII of 1839). It is suggested that the sum of Rs. 55,988-14-8 is a sum "payable by virtue of a written instrument" within the meaning of the section, inasmuch as it is the total sum admitted to be due by the certificate of the 8th June 1895. But in my opinion the certificate of the Administrator-General is not a "written instrument" such as is contemplated by the Act, because the amount mentioned therein is not payable by virtue of the certificate which merely purports to certify the [58] registration of the amount of the admitted debt for the purposes of convenience in administering the estate. In any case the sum claimed represents interest upon interest, and as such ought not I think to be allowed under the discretionary powers vested in the Court,

The main object of the suit is, however, to establish the plaintiff's right to immediate payment of his claim with interest on the entire principal sum from the 1st of June 1895.

The general principle applicable to a creditor's suit against an executor is clear. If the plaintiff's demand be uncontested or proved, and the executor admits assets, the plaintiff is entitled at the hearing to an immediate order for payment without taking the accounts, and, moreover, the admission of assets for the payment of a debt is also an admission of assets for the purposes of the suit, and extends to costs if the Court thinks fit to give them--Williams on Executors, 9th Edition, Vol. II, pp. 1892-93.

The term "assets," thus employed, has a wide signification, and means the property of a deceased person chargeable with and applicable to the payment of his debts An admission of assets in this sense therefore means an admission of the sufficiency of the realizable property of the deceased available for the immediate payment of his debts. An admission of assets may be made by the executor or proved against him in various ways: Seton on Judgments and Orders, 5th Edition, Vol. II, p. 1253. In the present case there is no question, but that the assets in the hands of the defendant are and have always been amply sufficient to pay in full all the debts of the deceased. Nor is it suggested that a sufficient portion of these assets could not immediately be realized and applied in satisfaction of the entire amount of the liabilities of the estate.

The difficulties that exist in the administration of the estate are created only by the beneficiaries who object to any portion of the estate being charged or sold for the immediate payment of the creditors' claims. But as between the beneficiaries and the creditors, the rights of the creditors to immediate payment, if the assets are sufficient for the purpose, are paramount. It is clear from the defendant's written statement that, though there were sufficient realizable assets in his hands for the payment in [59] full of all the creditors of the estate, the course he proposed to adopt in the administration of the estate was to pay the creditors rateably out of the surplus income of the estate.

"Kumar Indra Chundra Singh in the plaint mentioned was at the time of his death heavily indebted—his debts amounting to nearly 14 lakhs of rupees, and the income of the estate not being sufficient to enable the defendant thereout to pay all the debts at once, he proposed to sell off a portion of the estate.

In the 6th paragraph there is this statement. "From time to time, the defendant out of the surplus income of the estate available for the payment of debts declared dividends rateably in respect of the creditors of the estate whose claims had been duly registered."

As regards the 8th paragraph of the written statement it would seem at first sight that it was denied that the realizable assets of the estate were sufficient for the immediate payment of the claims of all creditors in full. The paragraph runs thus:—

"It is not the fact that the defendant is in possession of ample means for the immediate discharge and satisfaction of the amount due to the plaintiff for principal and interest, and of all other claims against the said estate as alleged in the 12th paragraph of the said plaint. So far as funds belonging to the said estate have been available for the payment of debts, the defendant has always been ready and willing and has offered to make payments from time to time by way of dividends as aforesaid to the plaintiff in respect of the amount due to him equally and rateably with the other creditors."

Comparing these allegations with those made previously and with what follows in a later paragraph, and with the allegations contained in the correspondence between the parties which has been read, it is quite clear, and it has not been otherwise suggested in argument, that the insufficiency referred to in the 8th paragraph is the insufficiency, not of the realizable assets, but of the annual surplus income. The equal and rateable payment which the defendant offered to make to the plaintiff, and which is referred to in this paragraph, is rateable payment out of the surplus income.

It is only necessary to refer to one other paragraph of the written statement.

[60] In the 12th paragraph the defendant says: "If this Court should be of opinion that the defendant is not bound to accept payment of the amount due to him by instalments or by way of dividends, the defendant states that by reason of the institution of the said administration suits he is unable to pay and discharge the amount so due to the plaintiff, but that he is willing to pay the same in the ordinary course of administration."

What I understand the defendant to convey by this paragraph is that his refusal to accede to the plaintiff's demand for immediate payment of his claim in full has been occasioned, not by the insufficiency of the realizable assets in his hands, but solely by the conduct of the beneficiaries who object to the debts being paid out of the corpus of the estate.

It has been shown that the annual nett income of the estate is very large, amounting to two lakhs of rupees or thereabouts, and this would be sufficient in the course of time to provide for the payment of all claims, and no doubt the Administrator-General was acting in the interests of the estate in endeavouring to pay off the claims by instalments out of surplus income, but the question is whether there is any legal warrant for thus postponing the rights of creditors. No real difficulty I apprehend exists or is created by reason of the institution of the two administration suits by beneficiaries. These suits have, I understand, been amalgamated and are now pending, but no order has been obtained restraining the defendant from raising a sufficient sum by sale of a portion of the assets for the purpose of paying off the creditors. Moreover, in the event of a decree for administration being made, the Court would, in the usual course, after proof of claims if a sufficient fund be not then available for payment of the debts in full, direct the required amount to be raised by a sale of a sufficient portion of the assets.

It is contended, however, that section 35 of the Administrator-General's Act has placed a restriction on the rights of creditors, and that the effect of the section is to give the Administrator-General the right to insist that creditors of estates in his hands shall accept payment of their claims by instalments out of nett income although there may be ample realizable assets available for immediate payment of all debts in full.

"If in any such suit (i.e., a creditor's suit against the Administrator-General) judgment is pronounced in favour of the plaintiff, he shall nevertheless be only entitled to payment out of the assets of the deceased equally and rateably with the other creditors."

A similar provision was contained in section 33 of the Administrator-General's Act of 1867. The right of creditors to rateable payment is also defined in section 282 of the Succession Act and section 104 of the Probate and Administration Act.

Section 282 of the Succession Act provides: "Save as aforesaid (i.e., as provided by section 281) no creditor is to have a right of priority over another, by reason that his debt is secured by an instrument under seal or any other account. But the executor or administrator shall pay all such debts as he knows of, including his own, equally and rateably, as far as the assets of the deceased will extend."

Section 104 of the Probate and Administration Act is, excepting the omission of a clause which is immaterial for the present purpose, in precisely similar terms.

Now the "rateable payment" referred to in all these sections is rateable payment out of the assets. It is nowhere provided that rateable payment shall be made out of the nett income of the estate, or any other specific part of the assets. These sections deal with the creditors' rights as regards the general assets of their deceased debtor, and apart from any question of lien, the object is to prevent any one creditor obtaining an advantage over another in respect of the payment of his debt, and to provide for the payment of all claims proportionately out of the assets of the estate. The language of these sections shows that the Legislature was dealing with cases where the general assets or the realizable assets were or might be insufficient for the payment in full of the claims of all the creditors. It would be unnecessary and meaningless to provide for proportionate or rateable payment when the realizable assets are amply sufficient for the immediate payment in full of all claims, nor could in such a case the payment of one creditor in full in any way prejudice or postpone the [62] rights of other creditors There is, in my opinion, nothing in section 35 of the Administrator-General's Act which qualifies or restricts or otherwise interferes with the right of a creditor to demand immediate payment of his claim in full, when the realizable assets in the hands of the Administrator-General are sufficient for the immediate payment of all claims in full.

It could not have been intended by this Act any more than by the Succession Act or the Probate and Administration Act to give representatives of deceased persons the power, where assets are admittedly sufficient, to postpone indefinitely the payment of debts. It appears to me that my view of the section is in accordance with the authorities bearing on the question.

In Hanmabalu Sannappa v. Cook [(1883) 6 Mad., H. C., 346] property had been attached before judgment, and the Administrator-General before judgment took out letters of administration and was made a party to the suit in the place of the widow, the original defendant, and it was held under section 33 of Act XXIV of 1867 that under the decree obtained by the plaintiff he was only entitled to rank with other creditors. It does not appear in this case that there were any assets available for distribution amongst the general body of creditors beyond the fund which had been attached before judgment and which was admittedly insufficient to pay all the creditors in full.

In Nilkomul Shaw v. Reed [(1872) 12 B. L. R., 287], it was held that when a person obtains a decree against an executor or administrator he is entitled to have his decree satisfied out of the assets of the deceased, and that section 282 of the Indian Succession Act does not interfere with that right.

In the case of Alliance Bank of Simla v Hoff (which is unreported) execution was issued against the executor of a judgment-debtor for the full amount of the decree, although the testator's estate was not sufficient to pay the full amount of his debts.

The last case is that of Remfry v. De Penning [(1884) I. L. R., 10, Cal., 929,] where the defendant having died after judgment a rule was obtained [63] against the Administrator-General as representing his estate to show cause why the decree should not be executed against him. The course pursued in the case of Alliance Bank of Simla v. Hoff was followed, and it was observed by PIGOT, J., that "section 35 of the Administrator-General's Act is limited to the express purpose for which it was enacted, and there is nothing in that Act or in the Civil Procedure Code to change the position of the Administrator-General or to place him in a better position than an ordinary suitor."

It has been contended next that in any case the plaintiff must bear the costs of this suit, and reference is made to the 1st clause of section 35.

That clause provides that "if any suit be brought by a creditor against the Administrator-General in his representative character, the plaintiff shall be liable to pay the costs of the suit down to and including the decree, unless he is able to show that not less than one month previous to the institution of the suit he had applied to the Administrator-General to register his claim, and that the Administrator-General refused or neglected to do so."

Now, I think the clear object of a provision of this character is to prevent the costs of a suit being unnecessarily incurred by a creditor, who is desirous of proving his claim, and accordingly a creditor who institutes a suit without first submitting his claim to the Administrator-General as provided in that section, renders himself "liable to pay the costs of the suit down to and including the decree."

It is to be observed that what the section says is that a creditor is under certain circumstances to be liable to pay the costs of the suit, not that he shall pay the costs. In my opinion the language used shows that it was intended not to impose upon a creditor to whom the condition of exemption was inapplicable an absolute obligation to pay the costs of the suit, but to leave a discretion to the Court to relieve him of the obligation if the circumstances of the case required it.

So, where under section 136 of the Civil Procedure Code it is provided that under certain circumstances a party, if a plaintiff, shall be liable to have his case dismissed, or if a defendant to have his defence struck out, this Court has invariably exercised a [64] discretion as to whether the penalty shall in any given case be imposed or not.

And again in the case of James v. Young [(1884) L. R., 27 Ch. D., 652] NORTH, J., in considering the meaning to be attached to the words "shall be liable to forfeiture" occurring in a certain statutory enactment, made the following observations:—

"It is said that under that section, as soon as there is any default in working under the rules or any non-compliance with the rules, there is an absolute forfeiture, which cannot be got rid of, so that at the end of the five years the gales came to an end without the exercise of any discretion by the gaveller or any other person. But in the first place if the Legislature had intended that, I think it would have said so. Nothing would have been easier than to have said 'it shall be forfeited and come to an end.' I say nothing about the construction of those words if they had been there, but when the words are not shall be forfeited but shall be liable to be forfeited, it seems to me that what was intended was not that it should be an absolute forfeiture, but a liability to forfeiture which might or might not be enforced."

The present suit is in no sense an unnecessary one. The object of it is not to prove the plaintiff's claim, but to establish his right to immediate payment of the entire sum with interest thereon, which right the defendant has refused to recognise This is not, therefore, a case where the penalty as to costs provided by the section should be enforced. The result is that there must be a decree in favour of the plaintiff for payment of the sum of Rs. 62,055-9-4, together with further interest at the rate of 8 per cent. on the principal sum of Rs. 50,000 from the date of institution of the suit to the date of the decree

The plaintiff is also entitled to the costs of this suit, which, together with the decretal amount, the defendant must pay out of the assets in his hands belonging to the estate of Kumar Indra Chandra Singh

The defendant may also retain his costs as between attorney and client out of the estate, both sets of costs to be taxed on scale No 2

[65] TESTAMENTARY JURISDICTION.

The 14th August, 1897.

PRESENT

MR JUSTICE SALE

In the goods of Courjon, Deceased

Will—Executor—Administrator-General's Act (II of 1874), sections 15, 26, 27, 29, 52, 54—Commission—Collection of assets, Meaning of

When a testator has omitted to appoint an executor under his will, the Court will appoint as executor the person whom it would appear from the tenor of the will the testator contemplated should be executor

In the goods of Punchard [(1872) L. R, 2 P & D 369] and In the goods of Adamson [(1875) L. R, 3 P & D 253], followed Under section 54 * of Act II of 1874 the Administrator-General is entitled to charge commission on the collection and distribution

* [Sec 54 —The Administrator General shall be entitled to reimburse himself for any payments made by him in respect of any estate in his charge which a private administrator of such estate might have lawfully made, but save as aforesaid, the commission to which the Administrator General of each of the said three Presidencies shall be entitled is intended to cover, not merely the expense and trouble of collecting the assets but also his trouble and responsibility in distributing them in due course of administration

What expenses &c commission is to cover

It is therefore enacted that one half of such commission shall be payable to and retained by such Administrator General upon the collection of the assets, and the other half thereof shall be payable to the Administrator-General who distributes any assets in the due course of administration, and may be retained by him upon such distribution

How payable

The amount of the commission lawfully retained by an Administrator-General upon the distribution of assets, shall be deemed a distribution in the due course of administration within the meaning of this Act

Commission retained to be deemed a distribution

Explanation.—The carrying of assets to separate accounts in the books of the Administrator General notified as hereinbefore provided, and the transfer of assets to the Official Trustee, shall each be deemed to be a distribution within the meaning of this section.]

of all assets. "Collection of assets" implies the doing of some act in connection with such assets.

Where part of the estate consisted of a zemindary of which the testator had granted a putni lease subject to payment of a fixed rental, and part of the zemindary had been acquired for public purposes, the compensation money being by arrangement divisible between the estate and the putnidar in certain proportions:

Held,—That the Administrator-General was entitled to charge commission on the rents actually collected by him, and on the amount apportioned to the estate, but not on the corpus of the Zemindary estate.

In the goods of Simpson [(1863) 1 Mad., H. C., 171] followed.

ON 20th January 1896 Eugene Courjon, of Chandernagore, died at Paris in the Republic of France, leaving a will, dated 31st May 1895, and two codicils, dated, respectively, 4th of June 1895 and 7th June 1895. By his will the testator appointed his niece Marie Isoline Domitilla Courjon universal legatee to enjoy the usufruct of the estate during her life-time and bequeathed to his nephew Charles Achille Edmond Courjon the corpus of the estate, together with the usufruct at the death of his niece; whereby the niece took a life-interest in the residuary estate of the testator, and his nephew took a vested interest in remainder to take effect in possession on the determination of the life-interest of the niece.

[66] In March 1896, his niece, the petitioner in this matter, being then in France, the Administrator-General of Bengal at the request of the testator's nephew applied for and obtained on 19th March 1896 letters of administration in a limited form to the estate of the deceased for the purpose of collecting the assets and paying the debts.

On 2nd May 1896 this grant to the Administrator-General was extended to enable him to pay the legacies mentioned in the will.

The petitioner now contended that according to the true construction of the will and codicils, the functions of executrix, viz., the collection of assets and the payment of general and testamentary expenses and debts and of the legacies bequeathed by the said testator devolved upon her under the will and codicils, and that she was executrix according to the tenor thereof, and accordingly asked the Court to grant to her probate of the said will and codicils.

The assets of the estate within the jurisdiction of this Court at the date of the grant in limited form to the Administrator-General consisted of—

(1) An 8 annas share in certain property leased in perpetuity by the testator at a yearly rent of Rs. 45,000, the estimated value of which at 16 years' purchase was Rs. 7,20,000.

This was, however, subject to a mortgage of Rs. 3,50,000.

(2) Deposited in the Delhi and London Bank, Ld., a sum of Rs. 3,98,726-12-3.

The petitioner contended that the Administrator-General was only entitled to charge commission in respect of the said limited grant at the rate of 1½ per cent. upon the amount of his realization in cash, and that he was not entitled to charge upon the corpus or value of the 8 annas share in immoveable property.

The will and two codicils were as follows:—

" In my quality of Frenchman residing in France I am bound to make my testament according to the French laws. The holographic form being mostly used and the most expeditious I give it the preference—

"I undersigned Courjon (Eugene Joseph) have made my testament as follows:—

[67] " I appoint as my universal legatees: 1st—For the usufruct during her life-time and to the day of her death my niece Isoline Courjon.

"2nd—And for the real property to join to it the usufruct at the death of Isoline Courjon my nephew Charles Achille Edmond Courjon.

"I give and bequeath consequently to my niece Isoline the usufruct and enjoyment, and to my nephew Charles Achille Edmond Courjon the real property of all goods, chattels and immoveables, which will belong to me or will form part of my estate on the day of my death, as well in France as in foreign countries.

"The whole subject to the following private legacies:—

"I give and bequeath to Miss Anna Ferrec a life annuity of 6,000 fcs. (six thousand francs) payable quarterly on the 1st January, April, July and October of each year in Paris, or in such other chief town which it will please her to designate.

"I give and bequeath to Madame Horteuse Paillard a life annuity of 2,400 fcs. (two thousand four hundred francs) payable quarterly at the same periods.

"I give and bequeath to Charles Achille Edmond Courjon my nephew for his maintenance untransferable, non-distrainable, an annuity of Rs. 36,000 payable also quarterly at the same periods.

"In the event of the death of Mrs. Paillard prior to Miss Anna Ferrec the annuity of the latter will be increased by 2,400 fcs. (two thousand four hundred francs) and brought to 4,800 fcs. (four thousand eight hundred francs) yearly.

"I appropriate especially to the guarantee of the strict and regular payments of the annuities and pensions abovesaid the immoveable properties which I possess in British India, on which a second mortgage will be written as surety for the annuities or pensions according to the laws which apply to those immoveables.

"In the event of sale or expropriation or alienation by whatever means it be of those properties, a sufficient capital will have to be set aside out of the proceeds of such sales, expropriation or alienation to secure in rentes on the French Government the payment of the said annuity or pensions. The stocks thus acquired will have to be registered so as to ensure the execution of my will.

"I express a formal will that the annuities and pensions bequeathed as aforesaid by me shall be paid strictly on due dates, and that in case of delay the amount of each term due shall be increased by a sum equal to 24 per cent. (twent-four per cent.) of the term unpaid from the due date to the payment effective.

"I give and bequeath -

"To my assistant Ernest Berthet the sum of four thousand rupees (4,000 rupees).

"[68] To Madame Berthet his mother the sum of 2,000 rupees (two thousand rupees).

"To Ashruff Ali (khansama) my servant the sum of 1,000 rupees (one thousaud rupees).

"To my two servants Altapali and Shama the sum of 1,000 rupees (one thousand rupees) to be divided between them equally.

"I give and bequeath to Madame Horteuse Paillard residing at Baulagnesur Seine Grande Rue No. 101 the sum of rupees 8,000 (eight thousand rupees) and my dog Rajah.

"I give and bequeath to Miss Anna Ferrec the sum of 14,000 rupees (fourteen thousand rupees).

"All these legacies will be taken off first from the funds which I have in deposit in the Delhi and London Bank at Calcutta, and which amount actually to 50,000 rupees (fifty thousand rupees) plus the interest.

"I give and bequeath to Miss Anna Forrec one half of the rights, which may revert to me in the inheritance of Madame Fizeaux de la Martel, my sister (which rights amount to a total of about 50,000 fcs. (fifty thousand francs), excepting the jewellery belonging to that estate and the share which may belong to me in sums of which Miss Isoline Courjon my niece may be indebted towards that estate either of one's own account or on account of her father, as I intend to remit fully and entirely to my niece Isoline my share of what she may be owing to that estate.

"I give and bequeath to my niece Isoline the share accruing to me of the jewellery of the estate of Madame Fizeaux de la Martel. I bequeath to my watcher Leon Rabbufault the sum of 1,000 fcs. (one thousand francs) which will be paid to him by Miss Anna Ferrec as soon as she will be placed in possession of the advantages which I bestow on her by the present testament.

"I bequeath my two dogs Niran and Chailane to Miss Anna Ferrec. Finally I give and bequeath to Miss Anna Ferrec all the furniture, furnishing, moveable articles, carriages, pictures, jewels and works of art which may be found at the time of my death either at Paris in my apartment, Avenue de Jourville No. 26, or at Versailles Rue de la Bonne Aventure No. 4. In this legacy are not included the jewellery of the estate of Madame Fizeaux de la Martel, which moreover are not in my possession. All the costs and mutation dues or others occasioned by all the private legacies aforesaid (annuity, pensions, money, furniture) will be borne by my estate. The several legacies which I have made and to which I affect the money in Calcutta amounting to only 30,000 rupees (thirty thousand rupees), the sum which will remain added to the half share which I leave to my niece of my rights in the estate of my sister Madame Fizeaux de la Martel are more than sufficient to meet amply the charges.

[69] "If my brother Edmond Courjon, Zemindar d'Allinagov, does not nullify the renunciation which he made verbally in my favour of his rights in the estate of Madame Fizeaux de la Martel, I bequeath that share to Miss Isoline Courjon my niece.

"Finally I wish to declare that I possess in my house no values either in papers, either in money which may be seized as being a part of my goods; my only jewels are a ring emerald surrounded by four diamonds which I received from my brother Alfred Courjon deceased and a watch in galutcha (shark skin).

"I entrusted that ring to Miss Anna Ferrec who will have it remitted to my nephew Charles Achille Edmond Courjon, to whom I give it in remembrance of his father.

"I give him also the watch aforesaid. I revoke expressly all prior testaments. Made in Paris the thirty-first May One thousand eight hundred and ninety-five.

1st CODICIL.

"As my lands, said zemindaries and my house at Chandernagore represent a value far superior to the mortgages by which they are each encumbered, I do not intend that my universal legatees will relieve those mortgages by prejudicing the legacies which I confer by my testament above.

"The sum which will remain in the Delhi and London Bank at Calcutta (after the payment of the private legacies) added to the proceeds of the rich furniture which furnish my house at Chandernagore must exceed by far the mortgages which encumbers that house. Even if it be differently, such consideration will have no weight (considering the value of the house, itself) before the formal will which I express to indemnify my private legatees before my creditors who are already covered by their mortgages. For the payments to be made the order of classification which I give hereafter will be in consequence strictly observed.

"1*st*—Miss Anna Ferrec and Madame Horteuse Paillard must first receive their legacies of 14,000 rupees and 8,000 rupees each of them (fourteen thousand rupees and eight thousand rupees each of them), and that with the shortest delay possible.

"2*nd*—Mr. Ernest Berthet will then be indemnified.

"3*rd*—His mother.

"4*th*—My servants.

"My object being to place Miss Ferrec and Madame Paillard in a position to provide their personal requirements, also the care they must take of my poor dogs, I insist earnestly that they may be provided with the means to do so in the shortest delay.

"Further on will be found the list of my debts in France. Beside the [70] obligation I contracted towards Monsieur Paittevin whose Villa of the Rue de la Bonne Aventure No. 4 I rented for a period of three years, I have no others. The lease runs from the month of October 1894 to October 1897.

"On those three years the two last terms were enforced and paid in advance, and the two first have been paid on due date. My niece will therefore be debtor to Monsieur Paittevin of the sum of 5000 fcs. (five thousand francs) and for the dues of mutation on the private legacies which I have made. These debts which I impose on her will be easily met with the share which I leave for her in the estate of Madame Fizeaux de la Martel.

"The advantages very distinct which I confer to my niece are in the difference which exists between the amount of revenue of my lands and the several charges imposed on her as well for reason of the mortgages than of the annuities which she will have to serve to the three persons named in this testament. These advantages must increase as the legacies will become extinct.

"I declare, however, that in the event of Miss Ferrec not having received within the six months which will follow my death the 14,000 rupees (fourteen thousand rupees) to be taken out of the funds which I have in Calcutta, my house at Chandernagore and all the furniture it contains will devolve on her in full right as well as that half of my rights in the estate of my sister Madame Fizeaux de la Martel which I have at first destined to my niece Isoline and which I bequeath to her only under that express condition that she will comply with the wish which I express with regard Miss Ferrec and Madame Paillard. It depends altogether with my niece to avoid any diminution of her inheritance by complying loyally to my last will.

"I forbid my niece to dispose of my house and its contents before she is liberated towards Miss Ferrec and Madame Paillard.

"About six years ago my revenues being much delayed I was obliged to have recourse to my cousin Peter Joseph Dilanney, known by the nickname of Foxy, for a small loan of twelve thousand rupees, which were destined to complete the amount necessary for the purchase of a large property which I wished to acquire.

"It is necessary that my legatees should know that that loan did not succeed, and that the receipt which I have sent in anticipation was never returned to me, no doubt by forgetfulness.

* * * * *

"I maintain all the other dispositions of this will.

"Made and written with my own hand the present codicil at Paris on the fourth of June one thousand eight hundred ninety-five.

2nd CODICIL.

"I want and order by the present codicil that the private legacy which I [71] made in favour of Miss Anna Ferrec by my will above dated thirty-first May one thousand eight hundred ninety-five, be paid in preference to all others.

"This refers to the donation in money as well as to the annuity.

"I declare that the above testament, dated thirty-first May one thousand eight hundred ninety-five, also the codicils following, were made and written with my own hand in double original, of which one has been deposited by myself in an iron chest belonging to Miss Ferrec (my iron chest being at Versailles) and the other entrusted to the kind care of my notary Monsieur Collin.

Paris the seventh June one thousand eight hundred ninety-five.

(Signed Eugene Courjon)."

The Advocate General (Sir C. Paul) for the petitioner.—There was no actual appointment made under the will of an executor. But according to the tenor of the will and codicils, especially the codicils, the niece of the testator must be regarded as the executrix. She is universal legatee with remainder to the nephew. The will was executed in France, and the testator claims to be a Frenchman. By French Law, section 109 of the Code Napoleon, she would be the executrix. That this was the testator's intention also appears from the terms of the will. She is entitled to have the grant to the Administrator-General revoked under section 26 of Act II of 1874 (Administrator-General's Act).

As regards the commission of the Administrator-General he is only entitled to charge on the rents he has received, but not on the corpus of the estate. In the goods of Simpson, (1863) 1 Mad. H. C., 171.

Mr. Garth for the Administrator-General.—The petitioner ought to have applied for revocation of the grant to the Administrator-General within six months under section 26 of the Administrator-General's Act II of 1874. Besides, there is not sufficient indication in the will that the testator intended her to be the executrix. As regards the commission of the Administrator-General he his entitled to commission at the usual rate on all sums which he has collected. He has reduced the putni lease into possession. Certain of the land in this 8 annas share was to be taken up by the Government, and he has fought this question, and arranged the amount of compensation to be taken in cash. In the case of In the goods of Simpson, (1863) 1 Mad. H. C., 171, the Administrator-General of Madras [72] was allowed commission at the rate of 2½ per cent. on all assests he had collected. Here the Administrator-General may be said to have collected the lease.

Sale, J.—It appears that at the request of a nephew of the testator the Administrator-General applied for and obtained letters of administration with a copy of the will and codicils of the testator annexed "limited" for the purpose of collecting the assets and paying the debts and charges of the interment of the deceased. Subsequently he applied to the Court and obtained also authority to pay the legacies given by the will and codicils. This application for an extension of his authority was made at the request of the present petitioner, who, as universal legatee and executrix according to the tenor, is now applying that the letters of administration granted to the Administrator-General may be revoked, and that probate be granted to her. I think there are sufficient indications in the codicils that the testator intended that the petitioner should administer his estate, and accordingly on the authority of the cases In the goods of Punchard, (1872) L. R., 2 P. and D., 369, and In the goods of Adamson, (1875) L. R, 3 P. and D., 253, the petitioner is entitled to probate as executrix according to the tenor, and she is also entitled to an order for revocation of the letters of administration granted to the Administrator-General. It appears to me that the period of limitation created by the proviso to section 26 of the Administrator-General's Act does not apply to the circumstances of the application.

A question also arises as to the commission which the Administrator-General is entitled to charge. The grant of letters of administration to the Administrator-General, though limited, does not come within the provisions of section 18 of the Act. The question as to the commission payable is therefore governed not by that section but by sections 27 and 52 read together with section 54.

Section 27 provides that if any letters of administration granted to the Administrator-General be revoked, the Court may order the whole or any part of the commission which would [73] otherwise have been payable under the Act to be paid to or retained by the Administrator-General out of any assets belonging to the estate.

The rule laid down by section 52 is that the Administrator-General of each of the Presidencies shall be entitled to receive a commission at the following rates, respectively, namely, the Administrator-General of Bengal at the rate of 3 per centum, and the Administrator-General of Madras and Bombay, respectively, at the rate of 5 per centum upon the amount or value of the assets which they respectively collect and distribute in due course of administration. Section 54 provides that the commission to which the Administrator-General of each of the said three Presidencies shall be entitled is intended to cover, not merely the expense and trouble of collecting the assets, but also his trouble and responsibility in distributing them in due course of administration.

Accordingly, it is enacted "that one-half of such commission shall be payable to, and retained by, such Administrator-General upon the collection of the assets, and the other half thereof shall be payable to the Administrator-General, who distributes any assets in the due course of administration, and may be retained by him upon such distribution."

The term "assets" means and includes "property of a deceased person chargeable with and applicable to the payment of his debts and legacies." It would, therefore, include immoveable property. But the commission chargeable under this section is in respect of the collection and distribution of assets.

What then is meant by "collection of assets."

This question was considered by the Madras High Court in the case of In the goods of Simpson, (1863)1 Mad. H. C., 171. The view of SCOTLAND, C. J., was that the words "collection of assets" as used in sections 26 and 29 of the Administrator-General's Act (VII of 1855) did not necessarily mean realization by sale or by actual receipt or possession, yet, on the other hand, they implied the doing of some act in connection with the assets, whereby the Administrator-General incurred trouble or expense or responsi- [74] bility. In the present case the testator was entitled to a certain zemindary property which he had leased in perpetuity. The lessee or putnidar is in possession, and has all the rights of ownership subject to the payment of a fixed rental. This rent was payable to and has been collected by the Administrator-General, and these collections are of course chargeable with commission. Moreover, a part of the zemindary estate has been acquired for public purposes, and the compensation money now in deposit in the Bank of Bengal is, under an arrangement made by the Administrator-General with the putnidar, divisible between the estate and the putnidar in certain proportions. The Administrator-General is, therefore, entitled to commission upon the amount apportioned to the estate. But as regards the rest or corpus of the zemindary property, the Administrator-General has not, it would appear, done any act which would constitute it an asset collected by him. Applying, therefore, the rule laid down by SCOTLAND, C.J., no commission is properly chargeable in respect of this portion of the estate. The deduction claimed in respect of probate duty will be dealt with by the Registrar in the usual way. There will be an order for revocation of the letters of administration granted to the Administrator-General and for the issue of probate to the petitioner as prayed. The Administrator-General may retain his commission out of the estate, subject to the directions already indicated, together with his costs of this application.

Goburdhone Saha and another............Plaintiffs

Karuna Bewa and others............Principal Defendants, Nos. 1 to 4.*

Landlord and tenant—Notice to quit—Non-occupancy raiyat—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sections 44 and 45—Suit for ejectment by a lessor against another holding over after expiry of his lease.

Certain land was let by the zemindar to the defendants on lease for a term of eight years. After the expiry of the lease the plaintiffs obtained a lease of the land, and, giving a month's notice to quit to the defendants, who had continued in possession after their lease expired, brought a suit to eject them.

Held, that the defendants could not be considered as trespassers, but that section 45 of the Bengal Tenancy Act applied to the case, and that the plaintiffs, not having complied with its provisions, the suit was rightly dismissed for want of proper notice to quit.

THE facts of the case are shortly these: The plaintiffs brought a suit on 6th Pous 1301 (20th December 1894) against the defendants for ejectment, on the allegation that the land in dispute was formerly chakran land of the landlord, and that he resumed it, and afterwards it was settled with the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 on the 15th Falgoon 1292 (26th February 1886) for a term of eight years; that after the expiration of the term, the landlord's agent let the said land to the plaintiffs on the 24th Sraban 1301 (8th August 1894); and that they were prevented by the defendants from taking possession of it. The plaintiffs served a notice on the defendants on the 15th Assin 1301 (13th September 1894), asking them to quit the land within one month. The defence, inter alia, was that the suit was not maintainable, as the notice was defective and not valid according to law. The Munsif dismissed the suit of the plaintiffs, holding that the notice was not a legal one, not being in accordance with the provisions of section 45 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge in upholding the decision of the Munsif said:—

[76] "In my opinion the view taken by the Munsif is correct. Supposing that the defendants held the lands as chakran, they no doubt held them on payment of rent from the latter end of the year 1292. If it be conceded that they were admitted to occupation as raiyats on 15th Falgoon 1292, they were undoubtedly non-occupancy raiyats, whose tenancy could be terminated only on one of the grounds mentioned in section 44 and not otherwise. There is no suggestion that clauses (a), (b) and (d) apply to this case; only clause (c) can apply: but then a notice to quit served not less than six months before the expiry of the year 1300 was an essential requisite, and it was also necessary that the suit should have been instituted within six months from the expiry of the year 1300. Neither of these conditions having been fulfilled in this case, the plaintiffs had no right to obtain khas possession by ejecting the defendants.

"It was, however, very strongly pressed in this Court that, as the zemindar had obtained khas possession after the expiry of the term, the case is not governed by sections 44 and 45 of the Tenancy Act. It is not necessary to determine what would have been the legal consequences of such possession because such a case was not set up in the Court below, and the defendants had not any opportunity of meeting such a case. In the plaint in one place we find only the statement that after the expiration of the term the lands became khas; meaning evidently that the lands became khas in the eye of the law, and not actually; and that this is the correct view is further evidenced by the fact that in the next paragraph the plaintiffs say that the defendants had no right to retain possession after the expiration of the term. So the case set up by the pleader of the appellants was not set up in the Court below; and the evidence that was read out to me does not prove that the zemindar had ever khas possession."

From this decision the plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose, Babu Amarendra Nath Chatterjee, and Babu Bidhu Bhusan Ganguli, for the Appellants.

Babu Boidya Nath Dutt for the Respondents.

The following judgments were delivered by the Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and BANERJEE, J.):—

Maclean, C.J.—On the first question as to whether the land, possession of which is sought to be recovered in this suit, is khamar land or not, there was no issue framed as to that before the Munsif, nor was that question gone into as a question of fact before the Subordinate Judge. Under these circumstances I think it is too late to raise it now.

Upon the other point, as to whether the case falls within sections 44 and 45 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, I see no reason to differ, notwithstanding the ingenious arguments and criticisms of [77] Dr. Rash Behari Ghose upon the language of those sections, from the conclusion at which the learned Subordinate Judge has arrived in the matter. I think that the construction that he has put upon these sections is sound and is the right one. I agree both in the conclusion at which he has arrived and in the reasons for that conclusion. I think the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Banerjee, J.—I am of the same opinion. I only wish to add a few words with reference to the second contention raised in the appeal, namely, that section 45 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not apply to this case, because there is nothing to show that the defendants were tenants of the plaintiffs after the expiry of the term of their lease. It was argued that before section 45 could apply to the case, it must be shown that the defendants were non-occupancy raiyats of the plaintiffs, and this could not be the case unless it was shown that the plaintiffs acquiesced in the defendants' holding over upon the expiry of their lease. No doubt it is an intelligible view of things that a person who enters upon the land of another under a lease for a limited term should be treated as a trespasser the moment the lease expires, unless he obtains his lessor's consent to his holding over. But that does not appear to be the view which the Legislature has taken of the matter when it has provided, as it has done under section 45, that for the ejectment of a non-occupancy raiyat upon the expiration of the term of his lease, there must be a notice to quit, and not only a notice to quit, but a notice served on the raiyat not less than six months before the expiration of the term. That shows that in order that the landlord may give effect to the condition that the tenancy should come to an end on the expiry of the term, he must not only not acquiesce in the tenant's holding over, but before the time for such acquiescence can arrive, and whilst the term is yet outstanding, serve a notice on his tenant. The provisions of section 45, therefore, in my opinion, contain a sufficient answer to the argument advanced by the learned Vakil for the appellants.

The 12th and 14th May and 3rd July, 1897.

PRESENT:

LORD HOBHOUSE, LORD MACNAGHTEN AND SIR R. COUCH.

Sham Chand Pal.........Defendant

versus

Protap Chandra Pal ....Plaintiff.

Onus of proof—Deeds of gift between joint brothers of part of the family estate —Subsequent partition between them of the residue.

Two brothers, the only members of a joint Hindu family, executed and registered mutual deeds of gift to one another of their interests in specified portions of their family estate. In after years the younger brother sued the older for partition of the estate excepting so much of it as had already been the subject of the above gifts. The older defended on the ground that the deeds of gift had not been intended to operate, not representing any real transaction. To negative their effect, the burden of proving that the transaction was not real, but only a pretence, was laid upon the defendant, who failed to adduce that proof.

APPEAL from a decree (28th June 1894) of the High Court, reversing a decree (13th June 1892) of the Subordinate Judge of the Hughli District.

This suit was brought on the 11th April 1891 by the present respondent against his brother, now appellant, for a partition of the undivided property belonging to them both as a joint Hindu family. The plaint stated that the claim to partition did not include seven lots of house property in Calcutta, already dealt with by two deeds of gift, executed by the brothers to each other on the 30th August 1880, and registered. By one of these deeds (dan-patro) the plaintiff had given up to the defendant his interest in one of the seven houses, and by the other, the defendant had made over to the plaintiff his interest in the remaining six.

The defence of Sham Chand Pal in his written statement, admitting the execution and registration of the deeds of gift, but attempting to avoid their effect, is stated in their Lordships' judgment, as well as the purport of the deeds, and all the facts of the case.

The question raised by this appeal was whether each of the [79] two members of the joint family held the house property mentioned in the deeds of 1880 in severalty, this depending on whether the transaction was real, or pretended, as the defendant alleged it to have been.

Having fixed issues as to whether the deeds were bonâ fide and operative or not, and taken the evidence, the Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit. He found that Sham Chand Pal had never delivered his deed of gift to the plaintiff; that the consideration of natural affection stated in the deeds did not exist, as the brothers were not on good terms; and that there was no consideration given. As to the possession of the six houses, he accepted the defendant's assertion that they continued to be treated as joint property down to 1294, or 1887. Separate collections having taken place after that date, demands for partition ensued, which were made on both sides in 1890. On the whole case his view was that Sham Chand Pal was induced to make a dan-patro in favour of the plaintiff in case none of his (Sham Chand's) wives should bear a male child. When sons were born to him he changed his mind. The gift of the six houses was treated as invalid for want of transfer of possession, and therein it was held that the whole suit must fail, as some important properties were not included in it.

Against this decision the plaintiff appealed to the High Court, whereof a Bench (TREVELYAN and AMEER ALI, JJ.) reversed the decree of the original Court, and directed a partition of all the property, except such as was comprised in the two deeds of 1880. In their judgment the Court pointed out that, at all events, there should have been a decree for a partition of all the properties which had been admitted to be joint. They considered that the two deeds were executed to carry out an arrangement for the interests of the family, and that there was nothing unreal in the transaction. They were also of opinion that possession was sufficiently given on each side in accordance with the documents

The defendant, therefore, obtained leave from the High Court to prefer this appeal.

Mr. M Crackanthorpe, Q. C., and Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the appellant, argued that the Subordinate Judge's decision was correct, and that the High Court had not given due weight to material [80] facts which showed, when considered, that the plaintiff had not established his claim No exclusive possession of the property mentioned in the deeds of gift had followed their execution and registration. The deed executed by the defendant had, after having been registered, remained with the defendant since 1880. No exclusive possession of the property to which either deed referred had passed to the donees. The defendant had put forward a valid reason for his having executed the deed in favour of his brother, that it was to prevent the donor's widows from getting possession of the six houses on his death. The just inference was that no transaction of gift was intended, and that the gift was in suspense —a state of things resulting in no gift. The burden of proof was thus shifted from the defendant to the plaintiff. Registration gave the donee neither actual, nor constructive, nor symbolical, possession. The plaintiff thus had failed to establish his case. They cited Dagai Dabee v. Mothura Nath Chattopadhya, (1883) I. L. R., 9 Cal., 854, Vasudev Bhat v. Narayan Daji Damle, (1882) I.L.R., 7 Bom., 131, Kishto Soondery Dabea v. Kishtomotee, (1863) Marshall, 367, Kilpin v. Ratlay, (1892) L. R., 1 Q. B. D., 582, Cochrane v. Moore, (1890) L. R, 25 Q. B. D., 57, Standing v. Bowring, (1885) L. R, 31 Ch. D, 282.

Mr. J. D. Mayne, for the respondent, argued that the High Court were right in deciding that the object of the two deeds of 1880 was to carry out a transaction then considered to be for the interests of the family, and that the gifts were, as they were intended to be, operative between the parties. To prove what the defendant alleged, viz., that the deeds were not executed and registered as representing a real transaction, but were intended for another purpose, and designed to prevent widows from obtaining possession of the property, was a burden cast upon the defendant, and he had not discharged it. Of the deed of gift executed by the defendant there had been an actual delivery in the act of registering it, and how it had come into his possession [81] had not been satisfactorily explained. Of the house property given by the members of the joint family, inter se, which was the severance of undivided interest, the possession had been enough when accompanied by the declaration of the donor. This accorded with what was said in the judgment in Appoovier v. Rama Subba Aiyan, (1866) 11 Moo. I. A., 75; 8 W.R.P.C., 1. Reference was also made to the judgment of WEST, J., in Ibhram v. Suleman, (1884) I. L.

R., 9 Bom., 146, regarding the general principles of delivery upon gift, where the donee was in prior possession.

Mr. C. W. Arathoon replied.

Afterwards, on the 3rd July 1887, their Lordships' judgment was delivered by Lord Macnaghten.—The question at issue in this appeal arises in a partition suit in which the respondent was plaintiff and the appellant, who is the respondent's full brother and an older man by about three years, was defendant.

The two brothers, who were for some time engaged in a yarn or twist business on their joint account, had, it seems, acquired a considerable amount of property while they were living together as members of an undivided Hindu family. The plaintiff's case was that part of the joint property consisting of certain houses in Calcutta was divided in 1880 under two instruments described as deeds of gift, both dated the 30th of August in that year, and both duly registered on the following day. He now claimed partition of the rest of the property as specified in a schedule to the plaint.

The defendant in his written statement alleged that the arrangement appearing on the face of the deeds was not a real or bona fide transaction. His story was this: There was, he said, some dissension in the family owing to quarrels between his two wives. The result was that his second wife, together with his mother and the plaintiff, left the house No. 16, Baranasi Ghose's Street, which had been the joint residence of the family up to that time. He was very ill himself and he had no male child, and so, fearing lest in the event of his death half the property comprised in the two deeds would fall into the hands of his wives and be wasted, he executed the deed of gift in favour of his brother, and at [82] the same time, in order to give colour to the transaction, the plaintiff executed the other deed in his favour. The property, however, still remained in the joint possession of his brother and himself, and he kept the deed of gift which he had executed in his brother's favour. He had now two sons born to him, and he wished to have the whole property partitioned.

The two deeds which, of course, must be regarded as parts of the same transaction, were both in the same form. Each referred to the other. By the one the defendant purported to give to the plaintiff out and out a moiety of six houses stated to be valued in their entirety at Rs. 25,250. By the other the plaintiff purported to give to the defendant a moiety of No 16, Baranasi Ghose's Street, which was stated to be valued in its entirety at Rs. 3,500. Both the deeds contained a declaration that the parties would continue to own jointly the rest of their joint property, and that if it became necessary to make a further partition the rest of the property should be divided in equal shares, and that neither of the parties should then claim anything or raise any objection on the ground of inequality of valuation in respect of the gifts comprised in the two deeds of August 1880.

The only question at the hearing was whether the transaction of August 1880 was a reality or a pretence.

As the deeds were duly executed and duly registered the burden of proving that the transaction was not real lay upon the defendant.

Their Lordships agree with the High Court in thinking that the defendant failed in the proof.

The defendant's case rested merely upon his own testimony. In his examination-in-chief he repeated in substance the story told in his written statement, varying it slightly by stating that the deed of gift in favour of the plaintiff was executed simply to prevent all of his properties from falling after his death into the hands of his two wives in case he died of the disease from which he was then suffering. He said he executed the instrument "only in name," and for that reason he had kept it in his possession.

In his cross-examination, however, he set up a very different case. "Before I signed the deed of gift," he said, "no proposal [83] thereof was made to me and I did not know a bit of it. The plaintiff and Punchanun Banerji"—Punchanun was their manager and received their rents—"having taken me to the registration office when I was out of my senses made me sign the deed of gift. Before I was taken to the said office nobody told me I should have to sign a deed of gift" This story, as the learned Counsel for the appellant admitted, was an absolute falsehood. The story told by the defendant in his examination-in-chief seems hardly more worthy of credence. It is wholly uncorroborated. On the face of it it is extremely improbable. The defendant had only to make a will in order to carry out his alleged intentions. There seems to have been no reason for concocting such an elaborate piece of deception, and it is difficult to understand why the plaintiff should have been a party to the scheme at a time when it is common ground that the two brothers were not on good terms. It was suggested by the learned Counsel for the appellant that the deed which he executed was not a mere pretence, but that it was intended to be operative in the event of his having no male issue. But there is nothing in the deed or in the evidence to support that suggestion. Nor does it account for the execution of the deed of gift in his favour.

It is undisputed that the defendant was a man of dissipated life and extravagant habits, and that he spent a large amount of the joint property on his vices. The plaintiff's case was that his brother's conduct led to remonstrances and reproaches from his mother and from an uncle who is now dead as well as from the plaintiff himself, and that ultimately the defendant was prevailed upon to come to the arrangement embodied in the two deeds with the view of making some amends and saving the family property.

The fact that the deeds themselves contain a detailed statement as to the values of the respective lots is a circumstance certainly more consistent with the plaintiff's story than with the defendant's. Accept the plaintiff's story and the difference in value is seen to be an important element in the arrangement and one which would naturally find a place in deeds intended to carry it into effect. On the other hand, if the deeds were a mere blind and false in all other respects, why should they contain this one [84] unnecessary truth, the record of which seems only calculated to provoke inquiry and to suggest grounds for attacking the arrangement.

The only part of the defendant's case which seems to be true is that he had possession of the deed of gift which he executed in favour of the plaintiff. It is not very clear how he came to have that deed. The plaintiff was the only person who could have obtained it from the Registry Office. He says he took it to No. 16 and left it with his brother for safe custody. That may be so, if the defendant is correct in saying, as he does, that the plaintiff continued to live on at No. 16 for about eight months. But after all it is not very material what became of the deed, seeing that it was duly registered.

As regards possession of the property comprised in the deeds of 1880 it is quite clear that the defendant was left in occupation of No. 16 without any interference on the part of the plaintiff, and he has not succeeded in proving that after the execution of the deeds he ever received any portion of the rents of the property comprised in the deed of gift in favour of the plaintiff. The plaintiff avers that that property remained in his sole possession, and that he executed repairs and made additions and improvements to it out of his own monies. There is no evidence to disprove or contradict that assertion.

The Subordinate Judge found in favour of the defendant. The High Court reversed his decision, and their Lordships have no difficulty in affirming the decree of the High Court. The decree as it stands only applies to the property specified in the schedules. Before their Lordships the appellant suggested, and the respondent admitted, that the partition should go to the whole of the undivided property if there be any other property now undivided.

Their Lordships, therefore, will humbly advise Her Majesty that the decree of the High Court with this slight variation ought to be affirmed and the appeal dismissed.

The appellant will pay the costs of the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Right of suit—Suit to set aside sale for arrears of Road and Public cesses—Appeal to Commissioner—Act XI of 1859, section 33—Public Demands Recovery Act (Bengal Act VII of 1880), section 2.

A suit to set aside a sale for arrears of road and public cesses will lie, although no previous appeal to the Commissioner has been made under section 33† of Act XI of 1859. Such a sale is not one for "arrears of revenue or other demands realizable in the same manner as arrears of revenue are realizable" within the meaning of that section.

THE facts material to the report in this case appear from the judgment.

The defendant appealed to the High Court.

Moulvie Mahomed Yusuf and Moulvie Serajul Islam for the Appellant

Babu Baikanth Nath Das for the Respondent was absent.

This was a suit to set aside a sale for arrears of road and public work cesses on the ground that no notice had been served under section 10 of Bengal Act VII of 1880, and that no sale proclamation had been published on the land, and that the property had been sold for a very inadequate price. The findings of fact arrived at by the Lower Appellate Court are in favour of the plaintiff.

The only question before us is whether such a suit would lie without a previous appeal to the Commissioner from the order of the Collector.

It has been contended that section 33 of Act XI of 1859 applies to cases like the present. Section 2, Bengal Act VII of 1880, says: "This Act, so far as is consistent with the tenor thereof, shall be construed as one with Act XI of 1859."

[86] We think that this contention is not correct. Arrears of road cess are recoverable under section 98 of Bengal Act IX of 1880, "by any process provided by any law for the time being in force for the realization of public demands;" and it is provided by that section that such arrears "shall be deemed to be a public demand under such law." The law under which public demands are recovered is Bengal Act VII of 1880, and under the provisions of that Act, such demands are realized by the certificate procedure. Section 19 of the Act provides that a certificate under the Act, "may be enforced and executed by all or any of the ways and means mentioned and provided in and by the Code of Civil Procedure for the enforcement and execution of decrees for money."

It thus appears that the sale in the present case for the realization of the arrears of cesses was not a sale for "arrears of revenue and other demands realizable in the same manner as arrears of revenue are realizable" within the meaning of section 33 of Act XI of 1859, and therefore the provisions of section 33 can have no application to the sale with which we are concerned.

We therefore dismiss this appeal without costs, the respondent's pleader not being present.

S. C. C. Appeal dismissed.

Execution of decree—Adjustment or satisfaction of decree— Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sections 257A, 258—Sanction of Court to agreements for satisfaction of decree - Payments by judgment-debtor under void agreement—Effect of uncertified payments to decree-holder.

A sum paid under an agreement void under section 257A of the Civil Procedure Code cannot be acknowledged or recognised in execution of a decree under section 258† of the Code, unless it has been certified within the proper time.

Agreements for the satisfaction of a judgment-debt not sanctioned under section 257A of the Civil Procedure Code are void; but, if sanctioned, they may be carried out in execution.

[87] Gajapati Narayana Devu v. Chath Venkataramanaya [(1890) 1 Mad. Law Journal, 332] and Chedumbara Pillai v. Ratna Ammal [(1881) I. L. R., 3 Mad., 113] referred to.

THE decree-holders obtained two decrees for rent, and in execution thereof had the tenure of the judgment-debtor attached and advertised for sale; upon that, on the 2nd of September 1893, the judgment-debtor, with the consent of the decree-holders, presented a petition to the Subordinate Judge, who passed the decree, praying for time, and stating in the petition that the decree-holders had agreed to allow him time in consideration of his agreeing to pay interest at 12 per cent. per annum from the date of the institution of the suits, i.e., at a higher rate than what was allowed in the decrees; and the Court thereupon ordered that "the case be struck off;" and it was further ordered that "the sums paid by the judgment-debtor to the decree-holders on account of the decretal debt in each of the two execution cases respectively be noted in the register." On the 10th of May 1894 the decree-holders again applied for execution, without mentioning the fact of the aforesaid agreement for payment of excess interest, and the tenure of the judgment-debtor was again attached; on which the judgment-debtor filed another petition on the 2nd July 1894 with the decree-holder's consent, praying that a further time of six months be allowed him, and the case struck off, as the decree was going to be satisfied amicably. †[Sec. 258 :— If any money payable under a decree is paid out of Court, or the decree is otherwise adjusted in whole or in part to the satisfaction of the decree-holder, or if any payment is made in pursuance of an agreement of the nature mentioned in section 257A, the decree-holder shall certify such payment or adjustment to the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree.

Payment to decree-holder.

The judgment-debtor also may inform the Court of such payment or adjustment, and apply to the Court to issue a notice to the decree-holder to show cause, on a day to be fixed by the Court, why such payment or adjustment should not be recorded as certified; and if, after due service of such notice, the decree-holder fails to appear on the day fixed, or having appeared fails to show cause why the payment or adjustment should not be recorded as certified, the Court shall record the same accordingly.

No such payment or adjustment shall be recognized by any Court unless it has been certified as aforesaid.]

that the Court made the following order: "Case struck off as per judgment-debtor's petition filed with the consent of the decree-holders. Attachment to subsist."

On the 14th of April 1896 the decree-holders applied for the third time for execution, to which the judgment-debtor objected, stating that the sums of money paid to the decree-holders as excess interest (the receipts of which had been admitted by the decree-holders) over and above the interest payable under the decree, should be deducted from the decretal amount, as the agreement entered into by the parties with respect to the payment of the excess interest was not sanctioned by the Court as provided by section 257A of the Civil Procedure Code, and that the said sums should be applied to the satisfaction of the judgment-debt.

[88] The decree-holders contended that as payment of the aforesaid sums was not certified to the Court under section 258 of the Civil Procedure Code, the Court executing the decree could not recognize that payment.

The Subordinate Judge observed that when the judgment-debtor applied for time, the Court simply struck off the execution case without directing its attention to the provision, in the judgment-debtors' petition, for payment of the excess interest, and it did not pass any order with respect to it, nor did it consider whether that provision was reasonable or not; and he held that the agreement for payment of the excess interest was therefore void, as it did not receive the necessary sanction of the Court under section 257A of the Civil Procedure Code. He further held that the contention of the decree-holders was not a valid one, inasmuch as the provisions of section 258 of the Code had no application to any payment made in pursuance of an invalid agreement not sanctioned by the Court; and he ordered, relying upon the last clause of section 257A of the Code, and also upon the case of Gajapati Narayana Deou v. Chath Venkataramanaya, (1890) 1 Mad. Law Journal, 332, that the money paid to the decree-holders as excess interest be credited in payment of the decretal amount.

From this order the decree-holders appealed to the High Court.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose and Babu Nalini Ranjan Chatterjee for the Appellants.

The Advocate-General (Sir Charles Paul) and Babu Karuna Sindhu Mookerjee for the Respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (O'Kinealy and Rampini, JJ.) was as follows:—

This is an appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan, dated the 1st August 1896; and the question we have to determine is whether a sum paid under an agreement void under section 257A of the Code of Civil Procedure, can be acknowledged or recognised in execution of a decree under section 258, unless it has been certified within the proper time.

Section 257A refers to two kinds of agreement, (1st) "agree-[89]ments to give time for the satisfaction of a judgment-debt," and (2ndly) "agreements for the satisfaction of a judgment-debt." If the Court does not sanction them they are void. If the Court sanctions them they may be carried out in execution. For the section states that "any sum paid in contravention of the provisions of this section," that is any sums paid under agreements void, "shall be applied to the satisfaction of the judgment-debt; and the surplus, if any, shall be recoverable by the judgment-debtor."

The agreement in this case is an agreement between the parties, and its force depends upon the sanction of the Court. It was not sanctioned and is void.

Section 258 says: "If any money payable under a decree is paid out of Court, or the decree is otherwise adjusted in whole or in part to the satisfaction of the decree-holder, or if any payment is made in pursuance of an agreement of the nature mentioned in section 257A, the decree-holder shall certify such payment or adjustment to the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree." Then the section goes on to say that, "unless such payment or adjustment has been certified as aforesaid, it shall not be recognised as a payment or adjustment of the decree by the Court executing the decree."

The learned Advocate-General argues that the Judge in the Court below was right in saying that the agreement referred to in section 258 is a "valid agreement;" but the section itself makes no reference to validity, and section 257A provides for agreements null and void. We are unable therefore to agree with the construction placed upon section 258. The case of Gajapati Narayana Devu v. Chath Venkataramanaya, (1890) 1 Mad. Law Journal, 332, cited to us seems to militate against the reasons given in the decision of the case of Chedumbara Pillai v. Ratna Ammal, (1881) I. L R, 3 Mad., 113.

We think the view taken by the Court below is wrong, and we set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge with costs in both Courts, and direct that the money allowed by him under that agreement be not allowed in execution of the decree the Evidence Act (I of 1872). An entry made therein of the name of a tenant in possession is not admissible in evidence under that section.

Mohi Chowdhry v. Dhiro Misrain, (1880) 6 C. L. R., 139, referred to.

THE plaintiffs in this case claimed to recover possession of a plot of land on the allegation that they took a settlement of it in 1296 and paid rent to the landlords till 1300, when a butwara having been effected the land fell to the share of one of them, and rent was paid since then to that person; that in consequence of certain criminal proceedings at the instance of the defendants, plaintiffs' crops were put under attachment and finally the plaintiffs were forcibly dispossessed from the lands. The defendant No. 1 contested the claim as regards the southern portion only of the plot in question; he admitted that he had no concern with the northern portion, and that that portion belonged to the plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 2 and 3. Defendants 2 and 3 confessed judgment.

The Munsif decreed the claim, and one of the reasons on which his judgment was based was stated by him as follows:—

"The copy of the khasra of the butwara measurement of 1891 also shows that the land in suit was then measured in the name of the plaintiffs. This would never have been done unless the plaintiffs were then in possession of it."

On appeal by the defendant the District Judge set aside the [91] decree of the Munsif, and held, with reference to the khasra, that that paper was not admissible in evidence.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Babu Jogendra Chandra Ghose for the Appellants.

Babu Karuna Sindhu Mukerjee and Babu Lalmohan Ganguli for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Rampini and Stevens, JJ.) was as follows:—

This is a suit in which the plaintiffs seek to establish their title to and to recover possession of certain land. The Lower Appellate Court has given them a decree for the northern half of the land in suit, but has dismissed their claim to the southern half of it.

The plaintiffs now appeal to this Court, and on their behalf it has been urged that the Lower Appellate Court has erroneously excluded from evidence three documents, the first being a plaint, the second, an application for the execution of a decree, and the third, a butwara khasra. The first two of these documents are said to be admissible in evidence under the provisions of section 32, clause 7, of the Indian Evidence Act read in connection with section 13, clause (a) inasmuch as it is said that they contain statements by one Gulzar, who is dead, to the effect that the plaintiffs' land is to the west of Gulzar's land and is bagar land. It must here be noted that the statement of the land being west of Gulzar's land, and being in possession of the plaintiffs, is only to be found in the second document, the application for execution of a decree. In the other document, the land is merely described as bagar land.

Now, the learned District Judge has rejected these documents and has excluded them from the evidence in the case on the ground that, although Gulzar may be dead, yet these documents do not come within the provisions of section 13, clause (a), of the Evidence Act, as they are not transactions in which any right of the plaintiffs has been recognised or asserted. We certainly agree with the learned District Judge in this view of the case. There is no recognition of the plaintiffs' right in any land in these documents, and even if there were any such recognition, [92] we do not see how they could have any weight. Such admissions made by a third party as Gulzar was, could have no weight at all.

The third document, which the learned District Judge has excluded from evidence, is a butwara khasra prepared under the provisions of section 54 of the Bengal Act VIII of 1876, that is, the Estates Partition Act. It is contended that this document is admissible in evidence under the provisions of section 35 of the Indian Evidence Act, and certain rulings have been cited before us, both for and against this contention, namely, the rulings in the cases of Gopal Chunder Shaha v. Madhub Chunder Shaha, (1873) 21 W. R., 29, Mohi Chowdhry v. Dhiro Misrain, (1880) 6 C. L. R., 139; Govindrao Deshmukh v. Ragho Deshmukh, (1884) I. L. R., 8 Bom., 543, and Taru Patui v. Abinash Chunder Dutt, (1878) I. L. R., 4 Cal., 79.

The only rulings which we think are applicable are Govindrao Deshmukh v. Ragho Deshmukh, (1884) I. L. R., 8 Bom., 543, and Mohi Chowdhry v. Dhiro Misrain, (1880) 6 C. L. R., 139. But the former case is not on all fours with the present case, inasmuch as it relates to statements by Survey Officers contained in an extract from a village register of lands. The document referred to in that case is not of the nature of the butwara khasra in dispute here. The other case, however, namely, the case of Mohi Chowdhry v. Dhiro Misrain, (1880) 6 C. L. R., 139, seems to us to be exactly in point, and it lays down that measurement papers prepared by a butwara Amin deputed by the Collector to make a partition do not come within section 35 of the Evidence Act.

Applying this ruling to the present case, it is clear that this butwara khasra has been rightly excluded from evidence by the learned District Judge, and independently of that ruling we think that the butwara khasra in question cannot come within the provisions of section 35, inasmuch as it is not an official book, register, or record, such as is referred to in that section. The "record," it is clear, must be ejusdem generis, or of the same class, with the "official book" and "register" referred to immediately before, and we do not think a butwara khasra is such a [93] record as is contemplated by section 35 of the Indian Evidence Act. Moreover, it would also appear that even if it was a record, the entry as to the possession of the plaintiff is not an entry which the Amin had to make under the provisions of section 54 of Bengal Act VIII of 1876, because all that the Amin, or rather the Deputy Collector, who is referred to in this section, is authorised to make is the measurement of the land comprised in the estate to be divided and a rent roll; but the section, as far as we can see, does not authorize him to make any entry as to the names of the parties in possession of the land which he measures.

For these reasons, then, we think that the learned District Judge has not committed any error in law in excluding these three pieces of documentary evidence, and we accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

[94] (4) That the case came under clause (a) of section 76 of the Act, and the present suit did lie under the provisions of section 77.

THE facts of this case appear sufficiently from the judgment of the High Court. The plaintiff asked for a decree directing that a deed of sale executed in her favour by the defendant be registered under the provisions of section 77 of the Indian Registration Act. The Subordinate Judge, before whom the case was brought, held that the suit did not lie, as the case was not one of denial of execution, and the plaintiff in applying under section 73, instead of appealing under section 72, mistook her remedy, and virtually did not go to the Registrar as the law required her to do before proceeding under section 77.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Dr. Asutosh Mukerjee for the Appellant. The original order was one under section 35, and a proper order under that section. The order should be construed to be a refusal on the ground of denial of execution. Non-appearance in this case comes within the meaning of denial of execution in sections 35 and 73, and the present suit was properly brought under section 77. Luckhi Narain Khettry v. Satcowrie Pyne, (1888) I.L.R., 16 Cal., 189, and Radhakissen Rowra Dakna v. Choonee Lall Dutt, (1879) I. L. R., 5 Cal., 445, were cited.

Moulvie Mahomed Mustafa for the Respondent contended that there was no denial in this case, and that the cases cited were not in point. This case really came under section 72. The Sub-Registrar was the person who passed the order and not the Registrar; sections 76 and 77 would not apply. All the remedies provided for in the Registration Offices were not here exhausted, and the present action should fail.

Dr. Asutosh Mukerjee in reply.

The judgment of the High Court (TREVELYAN and STEVENS, JJ.) was delivered by Stevens, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit under section 77 of the Registration Act. Registration was in the first instance refused by the Sub Registrar under the following order: "Eight months from the date of execution have passed. Although summons was [95] issued against the executant to appear, she did not appear to admit execution. I refuse registration under section 35 of Act III of 1877, paragraph 159 of the 'Registration Manual.'" The plaintiff (now appellant) who was the party interested in the deed in question, then presented a petition under section 73 of the Registration Act to the District Registrar of Mozufferpore, praying that an order for the registration of the document might be made after taking of evidence. The Registrar made over this application to the Special Sub-Registrar for the necessary action and report. The Special Sub-Registrar passed the following order: "This deed, dated the 24th November 1894, was presented by Mahomed Hossein, agent of Kudrathi Begum, before the Sub-Registrar of Mozufferpore on the 18th March 1895. The executant Najibunnessa did not appear either personally or by her authorized agent within eight months from the date of execution. The Sub-Registrar refused registration under paragraph 159 of the 'Registration Manual' on the 26th July 1895. The appeal does not lie under section 73 of Act III of 1877. I reject the application accordingly." It was in consequence of this order of the Special Sub-Registrar that the present suit was instituted under section 77 of the Registration Act.

The learned Subordinate Judge has held that the suit does not lie. He takes the order to be equivalent to an order of the Registrar, which is apparently the correct view, looking to the provisions of section 7 of the Registration Act, and the first of the rules made by the Inspector-General under the provisions of section 69 of the Act. Under that rule the Sub-Registrar at the head-quarters of a district, whose office has been amalgamated with that of the Registrar, is authorised to act as the working deputy of the Registrar exercising, as a matter of routine, all the functions of a Registrar, except the powers of supervision and control under section 68, and that of hearing appeals from orders refusing to register under section 72. He is authorised to deal with applications under section 73 of the Act as a matter of course.

The ground on which the learned Subordinate Judge has held that no suit lies in this case is that registration had been refused on a ground other than the denial of execution, and therefore [96] the proper remedy of the plaintiff was an appeal to the Registrar under section 72 against the order of the Sub-Registrar refusing to admit the document to registration, and not an application under section 73. He says: "When plaintiff ought to have appealed to the Registrar under section 72, but mistaking her remedy she made an application under section 73, it is the same as if she did not at all go to the Registrar. It is thus abundantly clear that the plaintiff has not complied with the provisions of the Registration Act. She is therefore out of Court."

The attention of the learned Subordinate Judge does not appear to have been directed to the case of Luckhi Narain Khettry v. Satcowrie Pyne, (1888) I. L. R., 16 Cal., 189, and the case of Radhakissen Rowra Dakna v. Choonee Lall Dutt, (1879) I. L. R., 5 Cal., 445, where it has been held that a wilful refusal or neglect to attend and admit execution is equivalent to a denial of execution within the meaning of the Registration Act; and that where such refusal or neglect occurs a suit will lie under section 77 of the Act for the purpose of having the document registered. In paragraph 146 of the rules made by the Inspector-General, the latter case and another case, In re Abdul Aziz, (1887) I. L. R., 11 Bom., 691, are referred to as authority for that proposition, and it is stated that as soon as such refusal or neglect is proved before him, a registering officer may record his refusal to register the document under section 35. It is remarked that an appeal, by which is apparently meant an application, will then lie to the Registrar under section 73, who will make inquiry and pass orders under sections 74 and 75 just as if execution had been specifically denied. We think that in accordance with the rulings to which we have referred and the practice of the Registration Department, the plaintiff did not mistake her remedy in applying in the present case to the Registrar under section 73. The original order of refusal was on the face of it an order passed under section 35 of the Act, and it was passed in consequence of the neglect of the executant to attend and admit execution. Taking the order of the Special Sub-Registrar on the application under section 73 as equivalent to an order of the Registrar, the case comes under [97] clause (a) of secion 76 of the Act, and, therefore, the plaintiff had a right of suit under the provisions of section 77.

The decree of the lower Court must be set aside, and the case remitted to that Court for disposal on the merits.

The appellant will get the costs of this appeal.

Judgment—Form of judgment on appeal—Judgment not in conformity with law—Dismissal of appeal—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sections 551, 574, 584.

The Lower Appellate Court, in disposing of an appeal from a decree of the Munsif, recorded the following judgment. "Suit laid at Rs. 180, value of buffaloes. Appeal rejected under section 551 † of the Civil Procedure Code."

Held, that this was not a judgment in conformity with law.

The dismissal of an appeal under section 551 of the Civil Procedure Code by a Court, whose decision may be the subject of an appeal, does not relieve the Court from the necessity of writing a judgment which, according to the provisions of section 574‡ of the Code, should show the points raised, the decision upon those points, and the reasons for deciding them.

FOR the purposes of this report the facts and points for decision are sufficiently stated in the judgment.

The judgment of the High Court (Macpherson and Ameer Ali, JJ.) was as follows:—

The judgment of the Lower Appellate Court in this case is: "Appeal rejected under section 551 of the Code of Civil Procedure"

It is contended that this is not a judgment in conformity with law, and that there is an error of procedure, which brings the case under section 584.

[98] The dismissal of an appeal under section 551 by a Court, whose decision may be the subject of an appeal, does not, we think, relieve the Court from the necessity of writing a judgment which, according to the provisions of section 574, should show the points raised, the decision upon those points, and the reasons for deciding them. There was an appeal before the Court, and the judgment disposing of that appeal must, we think, be in conformity with the provisions of the Code. The judgment of the High Court (Macpherson and Ameer Ali, JJ.) was as follows –

The appellant brought this suit to eject the defendant as a trespasser. The defendant contended that the plaintiff had no right to bring the suit, as he is a mere benamidar of Guru Churn Dutt, under whom and others the defendant admits that [99] he is a tenant. Both the Courts have found that the appellant is a mere benamidar of Guru Churn Dutt, and that he cannot maintain the suit. This is quite in accordance with the decision of this Court in Hari Gobindo Adhikari v. Akhoy Coomar Mozoomdar, (1889) I. L. In this case it was held on appeal, reversing the decision of the lower Courts, that under the circumstances the purchaser was not liable for the deficiency.

THE facts of the case sufficiently appear from the judgment of the High Court.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty for the Appellant.

Babu Tara Kishore Chowdhry for the Respondent.

The judgment of the Court (Macpherson and Ameer Ali, JJ.) was as follows:--

The appellant having purchased a share of a taluk at an execution sale failed to pay the balance of the purchase-money, and there was a resale at which the price realised was much smaller than the price realized at the first sale. Both Courts have held that the appellant must make good the deficiency according to the terms of section 293 of the Procedure Code. The decree-holder is the person seeking to enforce the payment and the respondent in the appeal.

A preliminary objection is taken that no appeal lies, but there is a current of decisions in this Court dating from 1865, showing that an appeal does lie, and we feel bound to follow them. The cases are Sree Narain Mitter v. Mahatab Chand, (1865) 3 W. R., 3; Soorug Buksh Singh v. Sree Kishen Doss, (1866) 6 W. R., Mis., 126; Joobraj Singh v. Gour Buksh Lall, (1867) 7 W. R., 110; and Baij Nath Sahai v. Moheep Narain Singh, (1889) I. L. R., 16 Cal., 535. No decision to the contrary has been cited, although the question has been raised in several other cases but not decided. The first three cases were under the Code of 1859 as amended by Act XXIII of 1861, but there is in this respect no substantial difference between the old Code and the present Code. The Madras Court has taken [101] the same view in Amir Baksha Sahib v. Venkatachala Mudali, (1895) I. L. R., 18 Mad., 439. The Allahabad Court took a different view in Deoki Nandan Rai v. Tapesri Lal, (1892) I. L. R., 14 All., 201, and held that there was no appeal. But it may be noticed that Mr. Justice STRAIGHT dissented, and Mr. Justice KNOX seems to have held that an appeal would lie from an adjudication in proceedings to enforce an order under section 293.

In all the cases in which it was held that an appeal lay the question was regarded as one under section 244 of the present Code, or the corresponding section of the old Code, so that if there is an appeal at all there is no doubt as to the right of second appeal. It seems that before the resale the appellant applied to have the first sale set aside under section 313 of the Code on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property. It was found that what was sold was the judgment-debtor's interest in a shikmi taluk called Radha Govind Biswas with a rental of Rs. 890 odd, and comprising certain mouzahs, kismuts and paras, whereas what was advertised and put for sale was his interest in a shikmi taluk called Ram Govind Biswas with a rental of Rs. 495, but comprising the same mouzahs, kismuts and paras. The first Court refused to set aside the sale, holding that the misdescription was immaterial, as the judgment-debtor had no other shikmi taluk in those mouzahs, and that the appellant, who was his co-sharer, must have known this and understood quite well what he was buying. The order rejecting the application was upheld by the Appellate Court on the same grounds. The property was put up at the first sale, realised Rs. 3,200, the next highest bidder being the decree-holder, and when put up at the second sale under precisely the same description, it realised Rs. 850. The decree-holder had obtained leave to bid at the second sale, provided he did not bid less than Rs. 3,100.

The appellant resisted the attempt to make him liable on three grounds: first, that there was no such property as the one sold; second, that the decree-holder and judgment-debtor had made false representations to him as to the property which was being sold, and, third, that the purchaser at the second sale was a mere benamidar of the decree-holder. His objections were overruled by both [102] Courts without any inquiry, and an order was made for the realization of the deficiency by the process prescribed for the execution of decrees We cannot, of course, interfere with the order under section 313, or with the order confirming the second sale, which it appears has been confirmed, but the question is whether on the facts as stated above the appellant is liable for the deficiency, and we must hold that he is not in any view of the case

Before the defaulting purchaser can be made liable under section 293, it must appear that the property which is the subject of the two sales is the same in every respect If the Courts were right in holding in the proceeding under section 313 that, notwithstanding the misdescription, the property sold on the first occasion was the judgment debtor's share in shikmi taluk, Radha Govind Biswas, bearing a rent of Rs 890, it is clear that is not what was put up for sale on the second occasion, ostensibly at least It may be said that the same property was really sold, but that there was a misdescription on both occasions Assuming this to be so, it makes no difference If there was a misdescription on the first occasion the decree holder was aware of it, and he ought not to have had the property again proclaimed for sale under a description which he knew to be wrong Having done that he cannot make the defaulting purchaser answerable for the deficiency

It is not necessary to consider what would have happened if the property, which the Courts considered was the property sold on the first occasion, had been rightly described on the second, as we must deal with the facts as they are Possibly in that case the decree holder might have found himself in a difficulty in attempting to realize from the defaulting purchaser any deficiency in the price He cannot, however, be allowed to evade that difficulty by having the property proclaimed for sale under a description which he knew to be wrong

We set aside the order of both Courts The application of the decree-holder fails and must be rejected The appellant will get his costs in this Court

Hindu law—Will—Executor—Position of an executor under a Hindu will before the Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870) came into force—Difference in position between an executor under a Hindu will and an executor under an English will—Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), sections 2, 4 and 90.

An executor under a Hindu will, before the Hindu Wills Act came into force, is not in the same position as an English executor under an English will, and the property does not vest in him; he holds it only as manager.

THE facts of this case are shortly these: One Tituram Haldar died in the month of July 1857, leaving behind him his widow and three daughters. He executed a will on the day of his death, and appointed his widow Rani Kumari Debi and his son-in-law executors. On the 21st January 1864 the executors of Tituram Haldar's will conveyed the property in dispute to one John Bayley, from whom it passed by subsequent assignments until the defendant Troilucko Nath Basu obtained it under a mortgage decree. The plaintiffs, who now represent the entire estate of Tituram Haldar, brought this suit to recover possession of the property sold to John Bayley on the allegation that Tituram Haldar's executors were not competent to give an absolute title. Bhupendra Nath Basu was joined as a defendant because he lived with his brother Troilucko Nath Basu. The Court of First Instance gave the plaintiffs a decree, holding that the executors did not hold any higher position than that of an ordinary manager; they had not the same power as an executor in England had, and that they could give a title only under circumstances in which an ordinary manager could do so. On appeal, the District Judge of 24-Parganas reversed the decision of the first Court. The material portion of his judgment was as follows:—

"The plaintiffs raise the question of the validity of transfer to John Bayley [104] and whether the plaintiffs are entitled to dispute it. It will therefore be necessary here to set down an abstract of the provisions of the will.

Paragraph 1.—Testator's wife Ram Kumari Debi is to remain in possession of and enjoy during her life-time all the testator's moveable and immoveable properties; she shall manage the same as executrix, take care of the testator's daughters, be entitled to institute and defend suits. Testator's son-in-law Umesh Chunder Bandopadhaya, husband of Kadambini, is vested with the same powers as Ram Kumari Debi. Both shall manage with equal rights and with each other's consent. If the son-in-law causes devastation, the testator's widow will henceforth act as sole executrix.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2267 of 1895 against the decree of J. Pratt, Esq., District Judge of zillah 24-Parganas, dated the 16th of September 1895, reversing the decree of Babu Purna Chandra Shome, Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of that District, dated the 30th of August 1894.

Paragraph 2.—On the decease of the testator's widow the property shall be equally divided between testator's three daughters; but none of the property is to be alienated for the payment of debts that may be incurred by the testator's daughters or their successors.

Paragraph 3.—Testator's wife with the consent of their son-in-law is empowered to pay off the testator's debts by sale, but no transfer shall be valid unless effected with the consent and signature of both of them; and none shall have authority to transfer any property for any reason other than that mentioned above.

Paragraph 4.—During the lifetime of the testator's widow, their three daughters and also the husbands of the two younger ones shall be maintained out of the testator's estate.

Paragraph 5.—Specifies a legacy to testator's nephew.

Now it appears to me clear that the executors had an estate under the will, and they were fully empowered to sell in order to pay off the testator's debts. The sale to John Bayley was made ostensibly for that very purpose. On the principle enunciated in In re Tanqueray Willaume, (1882) L. R., 20 Ch D., 465, the sale conveyed a good title, and it was neither necessary nor prudent for the purchaser to inquire whether there were any subsisting debts. That this principle holds good may be deduced from certain observations of Mr. Justice PHEAR in the case of Rooploll Khettry v. Mohima Chunn Roy, (1870) 10 B.L.R., 271 note.

From this decision the plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Sir Griffith Evans, Babu Girish Chunder Chowdhry, and Babu Horendra Nath Mookerjee for the Appellants.

Mr. C. P. Hill, and Babu Sarada Churn Mitter, for the Respondents.

[105] Maclean, C J. In my opinion the learned Judge in the Court below has made a mistake in law In point of fact he holds that an executor under a Hindu will, before the Hindu Wills Act came into force, is substantially in the same position as an English executor under an English Will, in the sense that the property vests in him, and that this is his view is clear from the fact that he relied upon the well-known case of In re Tanqueray Willaume, (1882) L.R., 20 Ch. D, 465, decided in the English Courts, which shows that he regarded the property under the will as vested in the executor. I think it is clear from the authorities that have been cited that an executor under a Hindu will is not in that position which the learned Judge in the Court below seems to think, but he practically holds the property as manager, as is stated by Mr. Justice MARKBY in the case of Kherodemoney Dossee v. Doorgamoney Dossee, (1878) I.L.R., 4 Cal., 455, where he says "It has been frequently held that, the mere appointment of a person as executor to a Hindu does not cause any property to vest in him at all; and that if as executor he is entitled to hold the property, he holds only as manager." I think that view of the law is correct as applied to the executors appointed under the particular will in this case; but that does not dispose of this point. Mr. Hill argued ingeniously that, having regard to the provisions of sections 2 and 4 of the Probate and Administration Act V of 1881, the property vested in these executors under the effect of section 2 of that Act, which says that section 4, amongst others, is to apply to the case of every Hindu dying before the 1st April 1881, which is the date on which the Act came into operation. Admittedly, in this case, the testator did die before that date, and Mr. Hill's contention is that, having regard to the language of sections 2 and 4, the effect of those sections is to vest in these executors, who were appointed, so far back as 1857, under a Hindu will, which it was then not obligatory to prove, the property of the testator. This argument does not commend itself to me as sound; one must look to the whole purview and intention of the Act. If we look to the preamble of the Act, it is there stated that the Act is intended to provide for the grant of probates of wills and letters of administration to the estates of [106] deceased persons, in cases to which the Indian Succession Act does not apply, that is the object of the Act—the grant of probates of wills and letters of administration. The Act did not come into force until April 1881, and to my mind it would be a very strong conclusion to draw from the words of section 2 "dying before the 1st April 1881" that it was intended —this Act having been passed for the purpose which I have stated above—that section 4 should have a retrospective operation, so as to vest in an executor appointed under a Hindu will an estate which but for that section would admittedly not otherwise vest in him. I think sections 2 and 4 read together mean that in the case of a Hindu dying before April 1881, where the estate is unadministered, if any one desire to come in and prove the will and get the benefit of the Act in that sense, he may have the opportunity of doing so, and the effect would be that the estate from that time would vest in such executor under section 4. That view to my mind is strengthened by the consideration that section 4 comes in under Chapter II of the Act, and the heading is "of grant of Probate and Letters of Administration,' which to my mind indicates strongly that the vesting was only to follow upon the grant of probate of the will in the one case or grant of letters of administration in the other. That view is further strengthened by the consideration that the section applies, not only to executors, but to administrators who obtain letters of administration under the Act.

But assuming that view of sections 2 and 4 of the Act to be wrong, it appears to me that Mr Hill does not carry his case much further by reason of the provisions of section 90 of the Act, which says that the 'power of an executor to dispose of immoveable property so vested in him" under the will "is subject to any restriction that may be imposed by the will appointing him." Now, in this case, the will distinctly states that there was to be no sale and no alienation other than an alienation for the payment of debts. Mr Hill tries to get out of this difficulty by contending that, once concede that the estate is vested in the executor, the cases in the English Courts show (amongst others that to which I have referred) that where an executor, in whom the estate is vested has a power to sell for debts, the purchaser need not inquire as to the existence of those debts or the necessity for the [107] sale. But I doubt if the principle of these English cases can apply in the face of the clear statutory provision of section 90. However, as in my view no estate was vested in this executor, the point becomes immaterial. I think the Judge was wrong on this point of law.

That being so, it appears to me that we must remand the case, and must remand it because the Judge in the Court below has not, as a matter of fact, gone into the question of whether this sale was effected for the purpose of paying the testator's debts. I desire, however, to point out, I hope for the assistance of the learned Judge in the Court below when the case is retried on this remand, that it is not necessary, as a condition precedent to the validity of this transaction, that the defendants should make out the real existence of the necessity for raising this money. Beyond that he will doubtless give every due effect to the lapse of time, which has occurred in this case, for the sale is 30 years old, to the fact that the original vendee is dead, and can give no account of the transaction, to the long possession and enjoyment of which the defendants have had of this property, and to that which looks prima facie something like acquiescence on the part of the plaintiffs, and especially to the recital on the face of the kobala itself that "according to the provisions of the will made by the deceased Tituram Haldar, we, to clear the debts and liabilities of his estate, have sold to you the said land with buildings and all interests for a consideration of Rs. 3,000; you are vested this day with the right to dispose of the said property by sale or gift, etc."

Now in the case of Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Mundraj Koonweree, (1856) 6 Moo. I.A., 393 (419)—the passage which I am about to read is at page 419—the Privy Council say: "It is to be observed that the representations by the manager accompanying the loan as part of the res gestæ and contemporaneous declarations of an agent, though not actually selected by the principal, have been held to be evidence against the heir; and as their Lordships are informed that such prima facie proof has been generally required in the Supreme Court of Calcutta between the lender and the heir, where the lender is enforcing his security against the heir, they think it reasonable [108] and right that it should be required." In the present case there was a clear representation by the executors that they were selling the property to clear the debts and liabilities of the estate, and that, in the opinion of the Privy Council, is prima facie evidence as to the necessity for the loan. It is, in fact, an admission; it is an admission by a Hindu executor as to the object and necessity for which the money was being raised. We must, therefore, ask the learned Judge to consider whether on the face of these recitals there is not prima facie evidence in favour of the defendant's case, and, if so, that would be sufficient to shift the onus and throw it upon the plaintiffs to show that there was no necessity for raising this loan. In remanding this case, we remand it upon the terms that neither party is to be allowed to go into fresh evidence, but the case is to be decided upon the evidence already adduced. Having regard to the length of time during which this case has been going on, we direct that the lower Court should dispose of this matter as soon as conveniently can be. The costs will abide the result.

Banerjee, J.—I am of the same opinion. I only wish to add one word with reference to Mr. Hill's argument based upon section 2 read with section 4 of the Probate and Administration Act. It is quite true that section 2 of that Act makes chapters II to XIII, both inclusive, applicable to the case of every Hindu dying before, on, or after, the first day of April 1881; and if the words of the section are to be taken in an unrestricted sense, section 4, which occurs in chapter II of the Act, would apply to this case, and would have the effect of vesting in the executor in this case the property of the testator. But the provisions of the Act must be taken to be controlled by the preamble of the Act which is very significant, and which runs in these words: "Whereas it is expedient to provide for the grant of probate of wills and letters of administration to the estates of deceased persons in cases to which the Indian Succession Act 1865 does not apply, it is hereby enacted as follows." The Act then is passed with a view to provide for the grant of probates and letters of administration to the estates of deceased persons in cases to which the Indian Succession Act does not apply, and any provision of the Act which is said to be applicable to [109] the case of a Hindu dying before the 1st September 1870, in which the taking of probate is optional [See Krishna Kinkur Roy v. Raj Mohun Roy (1886) I.L.R., 14 Cal., 37; and Moosa v. Essa (1884) I. L. R., 8 Bom., 241] must be taken to be applicable to his case only in the event of the Act being resorted to for the purpose of obtaining probate or letters of administration But where the Act is not availed of for the purpose of obtaining probate or letters of administration, for the granting of which it was passed, I do not think it would be right to hold that the provisions of the Act would apply to such a case.

Granting, however, that section 4 of the Act was applicable to this case, and that the property of the testator was, therefore, vested in the executor, that would not affect the result, because by sub-section 2 of section 90 the power of the executor to dispose of immoveable property so vested in him is subject to the restriction imposed by the will. The question would still remain whether the power of sale was exercised in this case within the limits prescribed.

S. C. G. Appeal allowed, case remanded.

NOTES.

[I. DICTA IN THE CASE—

The question in 25 Cal. 103 was as to the validity of a sale made by an executor under a Hindu Will in the year 1864 long before the Probate and Administration Act was passed. It was contended on behalf of the alienee that the acts of the executor were as valid as if they had been done after Act V of 1881 had come into force * * * There are no doubt observations to be found in the judgment of these learned Judges which would show that in the case of a Hindu dying before 1881 if the executor or administrator should wish to get the benefit of sec. 4 of the Act he should come in and prove the Will and take out Probate or Letters of Administration * * * The inference is apparently drawn that a party could obtain the benefits of the provisions of the Act only on obtaining Probate or Letters of Administration but this inference so far as the decision is concerned is expressly limited to the case of a Hindu dying before April 1881. We cannot assume that the learned Judges would have taken the same view with respect to wills made by a person who died after 1881. If the learned Judges had taken the view which we do that no executor could before 1881 claim powers which were for the first time given by that Act they would probably not have considered it necessary to rest their decision on the ground that a person who did not take out probate of the Will of a testator who died before 1881 could not claim the benefit of any of the provisions of the Act.—(1912) 23 M. L. J. 306.

II. POWERS OF EXECUTORS—

Before the Statutory provision in the Hindu Wills Act, The Probate and Administration Act, the position of the executor of a Hindu Will was that of a mere manager whose acts were subject to the restrictions in 6 M. I. A. 393.—(1905) 32 Cal. 861 : 1 C. L. J. 270.

In (1912) 23 M. L. J. 306 it was held that the executor of a Hindu Will after 1881 could sell without obtaining probate.

The position regarding executors of a Mahomedan Will is the same in principle.—(1910) 37 Cal. 839 : 15 C. W. N. 183 : 8 I. C. 453.

III. ONUS—

Representation of the debt is sufficient to shift the onus to the person who impeaches the debt or alienation.—(1910) 21 M. L. J. 593.]

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Schedule II, Art. 179—Meaning of the words "date of the decree"—Execution of decree—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), sections 205 and 235.

The words "date of the decree" in schedule II, art. 179 of the Limitation Act mean the date the decree is directed to bear under section 205 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that is the date on which the judgment was pronounced. Therefore an application to execute a decree, if not made within three years from the date when the judgment was pronounced, is barred by limitation.

* Appeals from Order Nos. 134-135 of 1896 against the order of Babu Bulloram Mullick, Subordinate Judge of Khulna, dated the 21st of December 1895, affirming the order of Babu Ashutosh Mitter, Munsif, 3rd Court at Satkhira, dated the 29th of October 1895.

[110] Bani Madhub Mitter v. Matungini Dassi, (1886) I.L.R., 13 Cal., 104, referred to.

THE facts of the case for the purposes of this report appear sufficiently from the judgment of the High Court.

Babu Nuná Lal Sarkar for the Appellants.

No one appeared for the Respondents.

Maclean, C.J.—In my opinion these appeals are not susceptible of serious argument. It is clear that the period of limitation began to run from the date of the decree, and the date of the decree was the 14th September 1892. It is quite immaterial on what date the Judge signed it. The appeals must be dismissed but without costs, as the respondents have not appeared.

Banerjee, J.—I am of the same opinion. The question for decision in this case is what is the meaning of the words "date of the decree" in clause 1 of article 179 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act. Do they mean the date that the decree is by section 205, of the Code of Civil Procedure directed to bear, or do they mean the date on which the Judge actually puts his signature to the decree? I am of opinion that they must mean the date the decree is directed to bear under section 205, and that is the date on which the judgment was pronounced: and if time runs from that date, this application was clearly out of time. It was argued by the learned Vakil for the appellant that the words in question should be construed to mean the date on which the Judge put his signature to the decree, and the only reason assigned in support of this contention was that otherwise the decree-holder would not have the full period of three years allowed him by law for making an application for execution, because it was said that he was required by section 235 of the Code of Civil Procedure to insert certain particulars in his application for execution, which particulars could be given only after the decree was drawn up. Granting that some of the particulars required by section 235 could be given only after the decree was drawn up, that does not deprive the decree-holder of the benefit of the full period of three years, if the [111] words in question mean the date that the decree is required by section 205 to bear. He must have known the date on which judgment was pronounced in his favour, and he could have made all necessary preparations for making an application for execution from that date, and thus he can avail himself of the full period of three years. An extreme case might be put, where the decree is not actually prepared until after the expiry of three years from the date of the judgment. Practically that is an extremely unlikely case. But if such a case were to happen, there would be nothing to prevent the successful party in the suit from making the application for execution within three years, without such of the details required by section 235 as could not be given by reason of the decree not being ready, representing to the Court that the application was made in that imperfect form to save it from being barred

I may add that the decision of a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Bani Madhub Mitter v. Matungini Dassi, (1886) I. L. R., 13 Cal., 104 fully supports the view we take. There the learned Judges had to construe the words "the date of the decree" occurring in article 152 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act; and Sir COMER PETHERAM in delivering the judgment of the Court, after referring to section 205 of the Code of Civil Procedure, observed: "It is provided by that section that the decree shall bear date the day on which judgment was pronounced, and when the Judge has satisfied himself that the decree has been drawn up in accordance with the judgment, he shall sign the decree, so that whatever may be the day on which the actual signature is made, the date of the decree for all purposes is to be the date on which the judgment was pronounced." If then the words "the date of the decree' in article 152 bear that meaning, there is no reason why those same words occurring in another article of the same schedule should not bear the same meaning

Will —Construction of will—Administration Suit —Chancery practice "Living," Meaning of—Trust for religious purposes— Perpetuities, Rule as to

A testator by his will devised certain house property, first for the celebration of pujahs and the worship of an idol and then that his children with their families should be allowed to live there One of the sons used the premises for the purpose of his business as a kabiraj, which was objected to by the other sons as being contrary to the terms of the will. One of the defendants also contended that before the Court could construe the terms of the will to ascertain the meaning of the testator it was necessary to bring a proper administration suit Held that considering the character of the consequential relief sought the Court could construe the will without an administration suit

That questions between trustees and beneficiaries and between trustees and strangers requiring the construction of provisions in a trust deed have been determined without the Court being asked to undertake the entire administration of the trust

To ascertain the meaning intended to be applied to a particular phrase, it is necessary first to consider the words of the will and next the surrounding circumstances, which may affect the testator's meaning Soorjeemoney Dossee v Denobundoo Mullick, (1857) 6 Moo. I. A, 526 (535)

If there is a valid dedication of premises for religious purposes, this is not invalid merely because it transgresses against the rule forbidding the creation of perpetuities.

Under Hindu law an idol, as symbolical of religious purposes, is capable of being endowed with property, but no express words of gift to such idol in the shape of a trust or otherwise are required to create a valid dedication

GUNGA PROSAD SEN, a kabiraj of considerable repute for several years prior to his death, lived with the plaintiff, his eldest son, the defendant Gooroo Prosonno Sen, his youngest son, and another son, who had since died, and their wives and families, in premises Nos. 16 and 17, Kumertolli Street, and carried on and practised his profession as a kabiraj in another house belonging to him on the opposite side of the street, No. 9/1, Kumertolli Street, where he had established a dispensary. On 9th December 1895 Gunga Prosad died leaving him surviving the plaintiff, his eldest son, the defendant Gooroo Prosonno Sen, his youngest son, and the infant defendants Birressur Prosad and Ramessur Prosad, the sons of his second and predeceased son Hurry Prosad Sen. He also left a will, whereby he appointed the plaintiff, his nephew, the defendant Nishi Kanto Sen, and his brother, the defendant Annoda Prosad Sen, executors, and purported to deal with his family residence as a religious endowment dedicated in perpetuity to the worship of certain thakurs, which he had established therein and to other religious purposes, reserving only in favour of his sons and grandsons with their respective families a right of residence therein. His other three residences were specifically devised to his two surviving sons and the children of his deceased son respectively. The testator trained all his sons for the profession or business of a kabiraj, and it was admitted in the course of the suit that the plaintiff and his second son Hurry Prosad had started dispensaries on their own account with their father's help; the former in Chitpore Road, and the latter in Burtollah Street. Previous to the testator's death, the plaintiff and the defendant, Gooroo Prosonno Sen, had quarrelled and had separated in mess, and the testator, for the last two or three years of his life, messed alternatively with them. Shortly after the testator's death, fresh disputes broke out between the two surviving sons. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant Gooroo Prosonno Sen had, after the testator's death and contrary to the wishes of the testator, and in breach of the trust created by his will, taken exclusive possession [114] of two of the rooms on the ground floor of the family residence, and, after making certain structural alterations therein, had established there a dispensary and was practising his profession there as a kabiraj to the inconvenience and annoyance of the testator's family. This defendant, while admitting that he had established a dispensary there and was practising his profession as a kabiraj, denied that he had done so contrary to the wishes or directions of the testator, but alleged that the dispensary was started in the lifetime of the testator and with his express sanction and consent.

The plaintiff instituted this suit to have it declared that the defendant Gooroo Prosonno Sen was not entitled to establish a dispensary or practise as a kabiraj at the family residence and to restrain him from so doing by a perpetual injunction. The plaintiff also asked that as far as it might be necessary for the purposes of the suit the testator's will might be construed and the rights of all parties thereunder in this behalf ascertained and declared. No relief was asked against the infant defendants or the other executors; although by their written statement the infant defendants supported in the main the case for the defendant Gooroo Prosonno Sen.

The terms of the will were as follows.—

This Instrument of will is executed by (me) Sri Gunga Prosad Sen, kabiraj, inhabitant of No. 17, Kumertolli, Town of Calcutta to the following effect. I am far advanced in age and am now attacked with such a disease that it is likely to prove fatal. I have a small ancestral property and I having by my own acquisitions acquired various immoveable and moveable properties have been in possession (thereof). I have several things in contemplation, as specified below, and I desire that all the said contemplated things being mentioned in a permanent way my ancestral and self-acquired properties, etc., shall be divided among and received by my heirs as per paragraphs below.

Paragraph 1. I endow my house Nos. 16 and 17, Kumertolli Street, for the celebration of Durgotsub every year, and for the worship of the thakurs existing in the said house. In the said house the thakurs established by me shall for ever remain, and in accordance with the undermentioned rule their worship shall be carried on; and Sri Sri Issur Durga Pujah shall be annually celebrated in accordance with the undermentioned rule and every year the annual shrad of my issur thakur in heaven (deceased father) shall be performed and on such occasions Brahmins and people of other castes shall [115] be fed, and every year the Dolejatra festival shall be celebrated. Besides these my sons and grandsons (son's sons) with their respective families shall live in the said house. In case of disagreement among them the person who would be the cause of disagreement shall leave the said house with his family. I endow (make urpon) this house for all these purposes. With regard thereto no right of my heirs shall exist or accrue. They shall simply live (therein) as mentioned above. My furniture, etc., which exist in the said house shall be used for the worship, etc., of the said idols; my heirs shall get nothing whatever of the same. The said house and the said furniture shall never be partitioned amongst any persons.

Paragraph 2. I give my house No. 9/1 Kumertolli Street and the land thereto appertaining to my eldest son Sriman Bhuggobutty Prosonno Sen in absolute right, that is he being vested with right to make gift and sale shall remain in enjoyment and possession thereof down to son, grandson, etc., in succession. I give my house No. 21, Bonomally Sircar's Street and the land thereto appertaining to my youngest son Sriman Gooroo Prosonno Sen in absolute right, that is, he being vested with right to make gift and sale shall remain in enjoyment and possession thereof down to son, grandson, etc., in succession. I give to two persons Sriman Bissessur Prosad Sen and Sriman Ramessur Prosad Sen, the sons of my son Hurry Prosonno Sen, deceased, No. 10, Schalch Street or Kumertolli Street, and the land thereto appertaining in equal shares in absolute right, that is they being vested with right to make gift and sale shall remain in possession and enjoyment down to son, grandson, etc., in succession.

Paragraph 3. There is at present a Shib thakur in the house which I have at Kashidham (Benares). My executors shall cause a good temple to be built (for it) making an expenditure up to two thousand rupees out of my estate.

Paragraph 4. I give my house No. 179 Chitpur Road, and the land thereto appertaining to my eldest son Sriman Bhuggobutty Prosonno Sen in absolute right, that is he being vested with right to make gift and sale shall remain in possession and enjoyment thereof down to son, grandson, etc., in succession.

Paragraph 5. My executors shall realise the rent of my house and lands Nos. 162 and 164, Harrison Road, and out of the same pay at first the tax revenue and cost of repairs of the said house and tax revenue and cost of repairs of my aforesaid house Nos. 16 and 17, Kumertolli Street, and then spend 100 (one hundred) rupees per month for the worship of Shib thakur at Kashidham (Benares) aforesaid and for feeding (there) charity at least 10 persons (and) for preserving the said house and temple and for employing servants and others for performing all the acts in respect of the same, and after that my executors shall spend 16 (sixteen) rupees per month for the worship of the thakurs established in my aforesaid house Nos. 16 and 17, Kumertolli Street, and for daily recitation of chundipath in my aforesaid [116] house. Afterwards out of the said rents (the executors) shall every month save (literally hold in deposit or lay aside) 250 (two hundred and fifty) rupees per month, and thus secure every year 3,000 (three thousand) rupees in a lump and (with the said money secure in a lump) Durgatsub and Dolejatra shall every year be celebrated in my aforesaid house Nos. 16 and 17, Kumertolli Street, out of the same 2,500 (two thousand and five hundred) rupees shall be spent on Durgatsub and 500 (five hundred) rupees on Dolejatra. Afterwards out of the said rent 500 (five hundred rupees) shall be annually spent for the annual shrad of my Issur Pita Thakur (deceased father) and for feeding Brahmins and persons of other castes on the occasions of these shrads. The balance left after paying the expenses, specified in this paragraph, out of the rent of this house (these houses) shall be divided in the mode stated below.

Paragraph 6. Out of my estate, that is out of the general estate 10,000 (ten thousand) rupees shall be spent on my first shrad, and the said expenditure shall be made through (by) my eldest son Sriman Bhuggobutty Prosonno Sen, and out of my general estate my executors shall on my demise pay the costs of (taking out) probate of this will and 5,000 (five thousand) rupees for the marriage of my grand daughter (by son) Sremutty Indoobala 6,000 (six thousand) rupees to my youngest brother Sriman Annada Prosad Sen and my oldest son Sriman Bhuggobutty Prosonno Sen's 7,000 (seven thousand) rupees which is in deposit with me.

Paragraph 7. My remaining properties and goods and effects that may remain and the remaining rent of my aforesaid houses Nos. 162 and 164, Harrison Road, shall be divided into three equal parts. My eldest son Sriman Bhuggobutty Prosonno Sen shall get one of these parts and my youngest son Sriman Gooroo Prosonno Sen the other one part and my two grandsons (by son) Sriman Bissessur Prosonno Sen and Sriman Ramessur Prosonno Sen the remaining one part in equal parts.

Paragraph 8. I appoint my eldest son Sriman Bhuggobutty Prosonno Sen and nephew (brother's son) Sriman Nisikanta Sen and my brother Sriman Annoda Prosad Sen as executors of this my will. When my eldest son Sriman Bhuggobutty Sen is not available (i.e. dies) my youngest son Sriman Gooroo Prosonno Sen shall become executor of this my will. Be it further declared herein that after the acts of the executors of this will have been finished, that is after all my other properties and things, &c., excluding the properties which I have endowed for the worship of the above-named idols, and have been partitioned among the above named persons, the entire charge and authority for collecting the rent of the said houses Nos. 162 and 164, Harrison Road, and for paying out of the same the expenses specified above in paragrrph 5, and of giving by division the remaining rent thereof, and of performing the worship of the idols mentioned in the said paragraph and doing other acts, &c., shall be revived by and devolve on the person who might be senior in age among my lineal descendants and heirs following the Hindu religion.

[117] Paragraph 9. Out of my general estate my executors shall pay 2,000 (two thousand) rupees to my youngest son Sriman Gooroo Prosonno Sen. Finis. Dated the 8th December 1895.

Mr. Hill (Mr. Jackson, Mr. Bonnerjee and Mr. P. L. Roy with him), for the Plaintiff.—It is not necessary that before the will in this suit is construed, an administration suit should be brought to have the whole will construed and the rights of parties thereunder ascertained. The Court can construe this will to see if defendant should not be restrained from carrying on business in the family residence. That position is not warranted by the practice of this Court. It is an old practice of the Courts of Chancery in England. It is an attempt to get rid of this suit on a mere technicality as to the procedure. In re Wilson, (1885) L. R., 28 Ch. D., 457; In re Davies, (1888) L. R., 38 Ch. D., 210. If the right exists the jurisdiction this Court has is that given by section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Under the will the defendant had only a right of living. What is the meaning of the word "living." There may be an occupation of the house by a tenant; Mannox v. Greener, (1872) L. R., 14 Eq, 456 (461); Rabbeth v. Squire, (1859) 4 De Gex and Jones, 406 (412). Again, he may live and carry on business at two separate places. The word "living" does not contemplate the carrying on of a business for the purpose of obtaining a livelihood. Ex parte Breull, In re Bowie, (1880) L. R., 16 Ch. D., 484. There the word "reside" is defined. The plaint discloses a good cause of action and the right to live does not involve the right to practise as a medical man. This was never contemplated by the testator.

The Advocate-General (Sir C. Paul) with him Mr. Mitter and Mr. Stephen for Defendant No. 1.—The right to live includes right to carry on a business and earn a living. It is a part of the man's life. "Living" cannot mean only eating, drinking and sleeping. It is not alleged that I am carrying on a nuisance. "Living" cannot exclude a man from carrying on his profession on the premises. If he was a lawyer could it be said that he was precluded from seeing clients in his study. If the defendant [118] wishes to see two patients there per day, it is said the terms of the will preclude him from doing so.

The plaintiff is not competent to sue for the construction of the will without bringing an administration suit--Williams on Executors, p. 1810. The practice which prevails in England now of a suit on an originating summons does not extend to this Court. This Court must be guided by the old Chancery Court practice Annual Practice, 1897, p. 998. We have nothing like the originating summons here, but the old Equity practice is retained.

Further, the intention of the will here is to make a perpetuity and tie up the property, which the testator could not do. Bhuttacharjee's Commentaries on Hindu Law, p. 604. Sonatun Bysack v. Juggutsoondree Dossee, (1859) 8 Moo. I. A., 66 (83). The testator granted the property first for the celebration of pujahs, then for the worship of an idol, and then that the residence should be occupied by the children. Who was the owner of the house? They would say the idol; but under what words? Where is the grant to the idol? There is a difference between a grant to the idol and a grant to trustees for the benefit of the worship of an idol. The testator would, by this means, be creating a perpetuity and making a permanent provision for the benefit of the children, which he cannot do. Promotho Dossee v. Radhika Persaud Dutt, (1875) 14 B.L.R., 175, Shibchunder Doss v. Sibkissen Bonnerjee, (1856) 1 Boul., 71. This is not a proper debutter property, the property has not passed out of the heirs-at-law to any one else They are still tenants in common. If so the defendant is acting lawfully in carrying on his business. Jacobs v. Seward, (1872) 5 Eng. & Ir. App., 464 (474). In Fillingham v. Bromley, (1823) 1 Turn. & Russ., 530, the words "live and reside" were held to be incapable of definition.

Mr. J. G. Woodroffe (Sir G. Evans with him), for the Infant Defendants.--As regards the preliminary issue dealing with the maintainability of the suit, the Court will not allow the construction of the will to be carried out piecemeal. If there is a suit which illustrates the evil of partial construction and partial administration, it is this. The meaning of the words [119] "live in the house" depends on whether the clause in which they occur gives a proprietary interest in the house or not. If a beneficial interest is taken by the heirs, a heavy onus will lie on the other side to establish a forfeiture. The clause with regard to disagreement is ancillary to the partition clause. There is besides no warrant or precedent for bringing an action of this kind. It is for the plaintiff to satisfy the Court that it ought to adopt the same practice as in England. Before the system of an originating summons was introduced it was only in a proper administration suit that questions such as those could be dealt with. There is no ground for following the practice under an originating summons in this Court. Say v. Creed, (1844) 3 Hare., 455.

Can it be contended that the decision in this matter will set aside all questions between the parties hereafter If the plaintiff withdraws the question relating to the shebait in this suit, it still leaves an important question undecided. This does not come within the purview of cases brought on an originating summons in England. In re Wilson, (1885) L. R., 28 Ch. D., 457 (461); In re Lofthouse, (1885) L. R., 29 Ch. D., 921, (932).

Sale, J. (after stating the facts, continued).—The first objection, which has been urged against the suit, is that it is not maintainable as framed. The objection is thus stated in the 1st paragraph of the written statement of Gooroo Prosonno Sen :—

"This defendant submits that the suit as framed cannot be maintained, inasmuch as it is not competent to the plaintiff to sue for the construction in part only (and not as a whole) of the will of the testator Gunga Prosad Sen, nor for the administration or execution of part only (and not of the whole) of the trusts of the said will, nor for the relief claimed, otherwise than in a suit for general administration of the estate of the said testator."

The argument is that the course which this Court ought to adopt as regards the present suit is the course which the Court of Chancery would have followed in a like case before the practice was introduced of determining on an originating summons isolated questions arising in the course of administration of an estate without taking the accounts of the estate or making a [120] general order for administration. The old and new practice as regards the question of the necessity of making an administration order before dealing with any point arising in the course of the administration of the estate are contrasted by PEARSON, J., in In re Wilson, (1885) L.R., 28 Ch. D., 457 (460). In showing how the practice as to administration actions was changed by the rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, the learned Judge makes the following observations :—

"There were formerly in the Court of Chancery numbers and numbers of cases in which an administration suit was necessarily instituted, not because the parties desired the administration of the estate generally, but because there were certain questions—they may have been minute, they may have been limited, they may have been very important—over which the Court would have had no control, without the existence of an administration action. There were no means according to the old practice of bringing isolated questions under a will before the Court for its determination except by an administration suit. It was felt that that very often involved parties in an amount of expense which was unnecessary and which they ought to be relieved from."

Accordingly, in order to avoid this expense, power is expressly given to the Court by the rules of 1883 to determine any question without making a judgment or order for the administration of a trust or of the estate of a deceased person, if the question between the parties can be properly determined without such judgment or order. This power is not confined to cases which can, under Order LV, rules 3 and 4, be raised by originating summons, but under Order LV., rule 10, the Court has this power, whether the question arise on summons "or otherwise," and it extends to administration actions commenced before, but tried after, the rule came into operation Williams on Executors, 9th Edition, Vol. II, 1810-1811.

The question then is whether the Court of Chancery in England would have declined to grant the relief sought in this suit, except in a suit framed for the general administration of the estate of the testator on the ground that it involved the partial construction of the testator's will. This is a question which it [121] is admitted does not affect the jurisdiction of this Court. It is a question of the practice of the Court, and that only. It is undoubtedly the fact that before the Court can determine whether the plaintiff is entitled to the main relief which he seeks, the testator's will must be construed; for upon the construction of the will of the testator must depend the question whether the trust in fact exists, the breach of which is charged against the defendant Gooroo Prosonno Sen. There is therefore a question of the construction of the testator's will, which arises necessarily, though incidentally in form, in this case. But then this question has not been raised as an aid to the administration of the testator's estate, nor is the Court being asked to take upon itself the execution of the trusts or the administration of the estate.

The plaintiff claims to be a trustee, who is entitled to ask the Court's assistance in preventing a breach of trust. Is there any reason why in a suit of this character, where all the parties interested in the question of construction are before the Court, the Court should refuse to construe the will of the testator simply because this is not an administration suit?

I have not been referred to any authority, nor am I aware that any such authority exists which establishes the proposition that this Court ought not under any circumstances to consider any question involving the construction of a will or deed of trust, except in a suit for the administration of the trust or for the administration of the estate of the testator. Circumstances might, no doubt, exist which would render it undesirable or improper that the Court should make a mere declaratory order based on a partial construction of a will, or that it should declare the rights of parties at all except in an administration suit. But I am unable to say that any such circumstances exist in the present case.

In the first place it is no mere declaratory decree or order that is sought. The plaintiff seeks consequential relief of a very special kind, and he bases his claim on a cause of action which exists only as against the defendant Gooroo Prosonno Sen, although it indirectly affects the infant defendants as heirs of the testator and beneficiaries under his will.

[122] In the next place there seems to be no reason why the question, whether there has been a valid declaration in perpetuity of the family dwelling house for religious purposes, should not be dealt with in this case separately and apart from any other questions which may arise in the course of the administration of the testator's estate. Assuming, although this is not admitted, that the estate is still unadministered in full, it is said that the infant defendants are interested in the question of the dedication of the house, and that it is inconvenient that this matter in which they are concerned should be disposed of without at the same time disposing of other questions as to their rights under the will of the testator which remain for determination. They complain that the plaintiff has deprived them of certain accommodation in the family dwelling house to which they are entitled under the will. It is difficult to see how the question of the amount of accommodation, to which the infants may be entitled to in the family dwelling house, depends in any sense on the question whether there has been a valid dedication of the house for religious purposes, or on the question whether the defendant Gooroo Prosonno Sen should be restrained from exercising his profession on the premises. The causes of action in the two cases are distinct and exist, if they exist at all, against different individuals, and no good or convenient purpose would be served by insisting on both being joined together and dealt with in one suit.

Moreover, assuming that the old practice of the Chancery Court as regards administration suits is binding on or ought to be rigidly followed by this Court, it is not clear to my mind that in accordance with that practice the Court of Chancery would have declined to entertain this suit. Having regard to the consequential relief sought it seems impossible that it could be said that the question of construction, which is raised in this case, is a question over which (to use the words of PEARSON, J.) the Court "would have no control without the existence of an administration suit."

On the contrary, questions between trustees and beneficiaries, and between trustees and strangers, necessitating often, it may be presumed, the construction of certain provisions of the trust-[123] deed have been entertained and determined by both Courts of Law and Equity, without the Court being asked to undertake the entire administration of the trust. The case of Re Weall, (1889) L.R., 42 Ch. D., 674, may be cited as an illustration. See also Lewin on Trusts, 9th Ed., p. 246, and also at p. 290, where there occurs this passage: "A trustee is called upon, if a breach of trust be threatened, to prevent it by obtaining an injunction, and if a breach of trust has been already committed, to bring an action for the restoration of the trust fund to its proper condition, or at least to take such other active measures as with a due regard to all the circumstances of the case may be considered the most prudential."

In view of all these considerations, it appears to me that the objection that the present suit cannot be maintained is not sustainable.

The next objection is that the plaint discloses no cause of action. The argument on this point is put in this way. The plaint, it is said, discloses no facts or circumstances which would justify the Court's interference to prevent the defendant Gooroo Prosonno Sen from carrying on his dispensary business and otherwise following and practising his profession as kabiraj at the premises Nos. 16 and 17, Kumertolli Street. Admittedly the defendant Gooroo Prosonno Sen has a right under the will to live in the premises, and, if he has a right to live there, he has a right, it is argued, to carry on his profession there as a means of livelihood, so long at least as he does not interfere with the rights of the other beneficiaries.

This contention involves, it is obvious, the question of the construction of the will of the testator.

What is included in the right of living in the premises which the testator has reserved to his sons and grandsons and their families? Or to put the question in another way, is the carrying on the business or profession of a kabiraj on the premises in question inconsistent with the disposition which the testator has made of the property, so as to constitute the action of the defendant Gooroo Prosonno Sen, a breach of a valid trust created by the testator?

[124] A great deal has been said as to what is the proper definition of the word "living," and as to what are the rights which are comprised within the right of living in any given place. It seems to me impossible to lay down a strict hard-and-fast definition of the word, which shall be applicable under all circumstances. The meaning must vary according to the circumstances under which the word is used, or the purpose or object for which it is employed. It may have a very extended meaning from the point of view of International Law as indicating the country where a son is entitled to exercise all the privileges of a subject or citizen. On the other hand, it has a much restricted meaning when used in Statutes for the purpose of defining the personal jurisdiction of a particular Court. The cases which have been decided in this country under clause 12 of the Charter, or under section 16 of the Civil Procedure Code, or under the Insolvent Debtors' Act, and also in England under the County Courts' Acts, show in what different senses the words "living," "residing" or "dwelling" and similar expressions may be used, and that sometimes a very narrow and artificial meaning is applied to them. The question to my mind to be asked in this case is—What is the meaning which the testator intended the word should bear?

Now, when the testator's meaning has to be discovered, the well-known ruling of the Privy Council in Soorjeemoney Dossee v. Denobundoo Mullick, (1857) 6 Moo. I. A., 535, lays it down that primarily the words of the will are to be considered, and next the surrounding circumstances, when the testator's meaning may be affected by them. I turn first to the will itself.

The first question which suggests itself is what was the testator's real object and purpose in dealing with the family residence? Did he really mean to make an absolute dedication of the property to religious purposes, or was this purpose colourable only, and did he really intend to secure to his family a permanent beneficial interest of the nature of a perpetuity?

The right of living, which the testator reserved to the members of his family, must, as the one or the other was the true [126] purpose of the testator, receive a wide or a restricted interpretation. Was there then a valid dedication of the premises for religious purposes? If there was this intention on the part of the testator, the dedication will not be invalid merely by reason of its transgressing against the rule, which forbids the creation of a perpetuity. Mayne's Hindu Law, 4th Edition, paragraph 395.

By paragraph 1 of the will the testator declares that he endows (or as the defendants suggest assigns) his house Nos. 16 and 17, Kumertolli Street, for certain specific purposes. These purposes are as follows: For the residence and worship for ever of the Thakurs established by him. Next, for the celebration in the house annually of the Sri Sri Issur Durga Pujah and the Dolejatra festival. Thirdly, for the performance of the annual shradh of the testator's father, and for the feeding on such occasion of Brahmins and people of other castes.

After describing these religious purposes for which he desired to dedicate the house, the testator proceeds: "Besides these my sons and grandsons (son's sons) with their respective families shall live in the house. In case of disagreement among them, the person who would be the cause of disagreement shall leave the house with his family. I endow (or make over or assign) this house for all these purposes. With regard thereto no right of my heirs shall exist or accrue. They shall simply live (therein) as mentioned above. My furniture, etc., which exist in the said house shall be used for the worship, &c., of the said idols. My heirs shall get nothing whatever of the same. The said house and the said furniture shall never be partitioned amongst any persons." By this clause of the will the testator prescribes the particular uses to which the house is to be put, and except in the manner expressly provided the testator declares that his heirs shall have no beneficial interest in, or enjoyment of, the property.

Moreover, the testator makes express pecuniary provision for the permanent maintenance of the endowment which he has created. He does not contemplate that the property shall ever be rent-producing, for he provides by paragraph 5 of the will that "tax revenue and cost of repairs" of the house Nos. 16 and 17 are to be [126] paid out of the rents realized by his executors of the testator's house and lands in Harrison Road. The testator then proceeds:—

"My executors shall spend Rs. 16 per month for the worship of the Thakurs established in my aforesaid house, Nos. 16 and 17, Kumertolli Street, and for daily recitation of Chandipat in my aforesaid house. Afterwards, out of the said rent (i.e., the rent of the property in Harrison Road) the executors shall every month lay aside Rs. 250 per month, and thus secure every year three thousand rupees in a lump and (with the said money secured in a lump) Durgatsub and Dolejatra shall every year be celebrated in my aforesaid house Nos. 16 and 17, Kumertolli Street. Out of the same Rs. 2,500 shall be spent in Durgatsub and Rs. 500 in Dolejatra. Afterwards out of the said rent Rs. 500 shall be annually spent for the annual shrad of my Ishur Pita Thakur (deceased father) and for feeding Brahmins and persons of other castes on the occasion of the shrads. The balance left after paying the expenses specified in this paragraph out of the rent of these houses (i.e., the Harrison Road property) shall be divided in the mode stated below."

By paragraph 7 the testator provides that the residue of his property, including the balance of the rent of the Harrison Road properties, shall be divided into three parts, and given to his two sons and the sons of his pre-deceased son. The testator having thus provided for the permanent dedication of his family residence for certain particular purposes, and having created a charge on the Harrison Road properties for the maintenance of this endowment, proceeds to say that the person who shall collect the rents of the Harrison Road properties and carry out the trusts created for religious worship, and the celebration of the festivals in the house dedicated for this purpose, shall be the senior in age among his lineal descendants and persons, following the Hindu religion.

It is said that there are no express words of gift in favour of the idol, and that failing such words of gift there is nothing more than a trust for worship created by the will, and that subject to such trust the beneficial interest in the property passes to the heirs of the testator or falls into the residue. But no express words of gift to the idol either directly or indirectly in the shape of a trust are required to create a valid dedication; see [127] the remarks of WEST, J., in Manohar Ganesh Tambekar v. Lakhmiram Govindram [(1887) I. L. R., 12 Bom., 263].

Under the Hindu law an idol as symbolical of certain religious purposes is capable of being endowed or vested with property. But it is not an essential condition of a valid endowment that it should take the form of an express gift to an idol. All that is necessary is that the religious purposes or objects of the testator should be clearly specified, and that the property intended for the endowment should be set apart for or dedicated to these purposes.

In the present case the language of the will shews that the testator intended that the dedication or endowment that he was making should operate so as to cover the whole of the beneficial interest he had in this property. There is no reservation of any proprietary or pecuniary right or interest in the property in favour of his family which could be attached in execution in satisfaction of their debts. His heirs as such are excluded in express terms from all rights to the property. The right of living, which is reserved in favour of his sons and grandsons and their families, is rather of the nature of a personal privilege which the testator intended to continue to certain persons who were in the enjoyment of it, by his permission, during his life-time. It is noteworthy that the language employed by the testator in making this reservation seems to exclude the idea that he intended to create a heritable right. The words used for sons and grandsons in the vernacular do not convey the idea of a line of succession of heirs, and in this respect this clause of the will differs from the subsequent clauses which deal with the specific gifts to his sons and grandsons. Moreover, the testator himself by his will has drawn a marked distinction between the dedication or endowment of a property and a charge or trust to provide for the expenses of religious worship. Paragraph 1 deals with the case of a dedication of property and paragraph 5 with a charge or trust for religious purposes.

In these respects the case seems distinguishable from the cases of Sonatun Bysack v. Juggutsoonderee Dossee [(1859) 8 Moo. I. A., 66] and of Ashutosh [128] Dutt v. Doorga Churn Chatterjee [(1879) I. L. R., 5 Cal., 438: L. R., 6 I. A., 182]. I hold therefore that there has been a valid perpetual endowment or dedication effected by the testator of the premises Nos. 16 and

The question still remains whether the testator, in reserving to his sons and grandsons and their families the right of living in the premises dedicated by him for religious purposes, intended to exclude his sons or grandsons from carrying on or practising therein the business or profession for which they had been or were being trained.

There are certain indications of the testator's mind derivable from the will itself, which are not without a bearing on this question. It is to be remembered the testator himself had kept his place of business separate from his family residence, at all events ever since the premises Nos. 16 and 17, Kumertolli Street, became the family residence. The testator then provides for his family continuing to reside in the same place and proceeds to devise to each of his sons and to his grandsons a separate house suitable (so far as one can judge) for business purposes, and in so doing it seems not improbable that the testator contemplated that his sons and grandsons would carry on their separate businesses in these different houses. Moreover, it is clear that the testator insisted that those of his descendants who chose to live together in the residence he had provided for them should do so amicably and peaceably. If, therefore, the testator was anxious so to arrange that his descendants should live together harmoniously, it seems inconsistent to suppose that he at the same time contemplated the possibility of different members of the family carrying on rival businesses in the common residence, because it is difficult to imagine a state of things which would be more likely to introduce friction and discord. It is reasonable on the other hand to suppose that the testator would be specially anxious to exclude all such disturbing elements as might be likely to induce disputes amongst his heirs in connection with a property he desired should be maintained as a perpetual religious endowment.

Apart from the expressions contained in the will itself, I [129] think the case is one where the surrounding facts and circumstances may be fairly looked to, for the purpose of obtaining an indication as to the testator's meaning in respect of the clause in question. I think it may be said that the testator intended that the privilege of living in the family dwelling house should be interpreted with regard to his sons and grandsons after his death in the same way as he interpreted it during his life-time; that, in other words, his sons and grandsons should use the premises in the same manner and for the same purposes as he used them, or permitted them to be used, in his life-time. If then this is a test which may be fairly applied for ascertaining the testator's meaning, it is necessary to inquire as to what the mode of living was which the testator adopted during his life-time for himself and the members of his family at the premises Nos. 16 and 17, Kumertolli Street, from the time it became the family residence.

All these facts taken together indicate I think very clearly that while the testator did not object to his youngest son using his baitakhana at No. 17 in a certain limited way for the purposes of his profession as a physician, he did object to the regular business of a medical dispensary being started and carried on in the house in which he and the other members of his family were living.

Another circumstance which may, I think, have affected the testator's meaning is the effect which the carrying on of the business of a medical dispensary at the family dwelling house might be expected to have on the state of comfort and enjoyment which the various members of the family had been previously accustomed to in living together. A large body of evidence has been adduced on the question as to the actual inconvenience occasioned to the female residents of the family dwelling house by the carrying on of the dispensary business by the defendant Gooroo Prosonno. I do not think it is necessary to examine this evidence in detail, because I am not prepared to say that the plaintiff has succeeded in showing that the effect of the defendant's action amounts to a nuisance or such an interference of the rights [130] of the plaintiff or his family which, apart from the prohibition to be implied from the testator's will, would justify the issue of an injunction. But on the other hand I think there is sufficient evidence to show that the natural and ordinary incidents connected with the carrying on of a medical dispensary business in accordance with the Ayurvedic system at the family dwelling house, such as the supply of gratuitous medical relief to poor and needy patients, the preparation, storing and sale or other distribution of drugs, and the condition of publicity which must result from all these things cannot but interfere sensibly and appreciably with that condition and state of comfort and enjoyment and privacy of family life in which the testator maintained the members of his family during his life, and which, it may reasonably be supposed, the testator would, as an orthodox Hindu of wealth and position, be anxious to secure to them so long as they chose to live together in the residence which he provided for them.

All these considerations lead me to the conclusion that the defendant Gooroo Prosonno's action in opening and carrying on the business of a medical dispensary at the premises, Nos. 16 and 17, Kumertolli Street, is contrary to the wishes and intentions of the testator, and is opposed to the disposition which the testator has made in respect of those premises, and amounts to a breach of the trusts created by his will, and that the plaintiff is entitled to have the defendant restrained by the injunction of this Court from continuing so to act in breach of these trusts.

The claim for the relief sought in clause (c) of the prayer of the plaint has not been pressed, and as regards clause (d) the result of the evidence as to the structural alterations in the premises alleged to have been effected by the defendant Gooroo Prosonno Sen since the testator's death is not sufficiently clear to warrant the issue of the mandatory order which the plaintiff seeks.

The result is there will be a decree in terms of the 1st and 2nd paragraphs of the prayer in the plaint, but I think the declaration and injunction therein prayed for should be limited to the dispensary business now carried on in the premises, Nos. 16 and 17, Kumertolli Street, by the defendant Gooroo Prosonno Sen.

The defendant Gooroo Prosonno Sen must pay the plaintiff's [131] costs of this suit, including the costs of the commission, to be taxed on scale 2. The other defendants must bear their own costs.

SIR FRANCIS WILLIAM MACLEAN, KNIGHT, CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Mokbul Hossain............Plaintiff

Ameer Sheikh............Defendant.*

Landlord and Tenant—Suit for ejectment—Service tenure—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sections 89 and 181.

Service tenures are excepted from the operation of section 89 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

THE plaintiff brought a suit for recovery of possession of certain land, on the allegation that the land in dispute had been held by him and his ancestors as halshahanas of the zemindars; that the zemindars had no right to dismiss him, and that they aided the defendants to oust him. The defence was that the plaintiff had no title to the land in dispute, that he held the land in lieu of wages only, and as he was dismissed for neglect of duty, the land was resumed, and was given to the defendant who was appointed in his place. The Munsif dismissed the suit holding that the plaintiff had failed to prove that the land in dispute was held by him or by his ancestors as chakran land, and that the zemindar had a right to resume it. On appeal, the District Judge confirmed the decision of the Court of First Instance. From this decision the plaintiff appealed to the High Court, mainly on the grounds that, having reference to the provisions of section 89 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, he was not liable to be ejected except in execution of a decree; and not without a reasonable notice.

Babu Pramatha Nath Sen, for the Appellant.

Babu Karuna Sindhu Mookherjee for the Respondent.

Maclean, C. J.—I think the appeal fails on both grounds. The first ground is, that, under section 89 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the plaintiff could not be ejected except in execution of a decree. But this tenure admittedly is a service tenure, and looking at section 181, I think upon the construction of that section service tenures are excepted from the operation of section 89. If the section does not mean that, I feel a difficulty in appreciating what it does mean. It has been found as a fact in this case that liability to dismissal at the will of the zemindar was incidental to the service tenure in question.

The second point is, that the plaintiff can only be ejected after reasonable notice.

That point was not raised in the Court of First Instance, but it was raised for the first time in the Lower Appellate Court. There is nothing, however, in the findings of fact in the Court below which enables us to say whether or not there was reasonable notice. On both points the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Banerjee, J.—I am of the same opinion. I only wish to add one word with reference to the first of the two contentions raised before us. The contention was that the plaintiff was not liable to ejectment except in execution of a decree as provided by section 89 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. I am of opinion that the application of that section to service tenures must be taken to be limited by section 181 of the Act, which enacts that nothing in this Act shall affect any incident of a ghatwali or other service tenure. ? It has been found as a fact that liability to dismissal at the will of the zemindar is an incident of the particular service tenure now under consideration. That being so, the question is whether, notwithstanding that that is an incident of this service tenure, and notwithstanding that section 181 enacts that nothing in the Act shall affect any such incident, it is still open to the plaintiff to claim the benefit of section 89. I think the question must be answered in the negative. For if, notwithstanding all this, section 89 is to have operation, then section 181 would become so far nugatory, and that could not have been intended by the Legislature.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), section 244—Question in execution of decree—Order absolute for sale—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) section 88—Question arising as to the order absolute for sale.

When an order absolute for sale of mortgaged property has been made, any question that arises as to that order absolute for sale is not a question relating to the execution of the decree within the meaning of section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

THE facts of this case were shortly these --

An application was made by the decree-holders Roop Lal Das and another, on the 10th August 1895, for an order to make absolute the mortgage decree which they obtained against one Golam Mowlah Saheb, after substitution, on the death of the judgment-debtor, of his heirs, viz, his widow Manjura Banu Bibee, his minor sons, and his daughters, in his place. The application was granted, and the Subordinate Judge through inadvertence passed an order making the decree absolute, without making the heirs parties to the case by substituting their names in the place of the deceased judgment-debtor, and without any summons served on the heirs who had attained majority, but only appointing a guardian ad litem of the heirs who were minors. On the 18th [134] January 1896 another application was made by the decree-holder to the effect that as the decree was made absolute without all the representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor being made parties to the case, and as there were other defects, the previous order making the decree absolute be cancelled, and a fresh order for a decree absolute be made after substituting the heirs of the deceased judgment-debtor. The previous order was cancelled and summonses were issued to the representatives. Some of them objected to the decree being made absolute, on the grounds, amongst others, that notices should issue to all the defendants, that the minors were not the legal representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor, and that Akikunnissa Bibee was owner of a 4-annas share of the properties which Golam Mowlah mortgaged as his own. The Subordinate Judge overruled all the objections, and made the decree absolute.

From this decision the judgment-debtor, Akikunnissa, appealed to the High Court, mainly on the grounds that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that in the present proceedings it was not necessary to decide any dispute as to the representation of the deceased judgment-debtor, and also that the present application of the decree-holder was not an application in execution of the decree, and the question as to the rights and status of the legal representatives ought not to be decided in these proceedings.

Babu Lal Mohun Das, Babu Jogendra Chunder Ghose, and Babu Satis Chunder Ghose for the Respondents.

Maclean, C. J.—The question we have to decide is whether, when an order absolute for the sale of mortgaged property has been made after an ordinary decree in the mortgage suit has been made, and any question arises as to that order absolute for sale, it is a question relating to the execution of the decree within the meaning of section 244 of the Code. The point is not res nova in this Court. The cases of Ajudhia Pershad v. Baldeo Singh, (1894) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 818 (823), [135] Tiluck Singh v. Parsotein Proshad, (1895) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 994; Tara Prosad Roy v Bhobodeb Roy, (1895) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 931, (934), and that of Ranbir Singh v. Drigpal, (1893) I. L. R., 16 All., 23, are to the effect that this question should be answered in the negative. I agree in that view. Two other cases in the Allahabad High Court, the cases of Kedar Nath v. Lalji Sahai, (1890) I. L. R, 12 All., 61, and Oudh Behari Lal v. Nageshar Lal, (1891) I. L. R, 13 All., 278, are authorities the other way. I prefer, however, to follow the previous cases, three of which are in this Court. In matters of procedure, and this is a matter of procedure, it is to my mind very important that the decisions of the various Benches of the High Court should, if possible, be in harmony. Otherwise confusion is created in the minds of the suitors and practitioners, and even of the Judges in the lower Courts who, if they find a conflict of view upon a question of practice in the decisions of the High Courts, are placed in a difficulty as to which course to adopt. I hold that this question is not one relating to the execution of a decree within the meaning of section 244 of the Code.

Then it is urged by the appellant that before the decree for sale is made absolute, the Court should inquire into the validity of the claim of the appellant to a 4-anna share in the so-called mortgaged property. The appellant is the sister of the deceased mortgagor. He has died pending the suit, and she is brought upon the record as party to the suit as one of his heirs. Being brought before the Court, she claims a 4-anna share of the mortgaged property in her own right, and contends that the Court below ought to have gone into that question in this suit, and not have left her to bring another separate suit to establish her right. But I think a claim such as this ought to be raised and decided in a separate suit, and not in the mortgage suit. If the 4-anna share really belong to the appellant, I think she should assert that right in a separate suit, and that the present suit, in its present stage, ought not to be further delayed in order that this [136] entirely fresh issue may be decided. There is nothing to prevent the appellant bringing such fresh suit.

Then it is said that the Court below was wrong in allowing both the minor sons of the deceased mortgagor and the present appellant and a daughter of the mortgagor to be placed upon the record as the heirs of the deceased mortgagor. But the position is this. The plaintiff does not know who are the heirs. The guardians for the minors allege that the minors are: the appellant alleges the minors are illegitimate, and that the appellant and the mortgagor's daughter are the heirs. Under the circumstances the plaintiff, to make himself secure, brings both of these contending parties before the Court. If either of them consider they are unnecessary parties, they can disclaim any interest in the property, disclaim any right or title to the heirship and thus be dismissed from the suit. In the meantime, in the face of these conflicting claims, I consider the plaintiff was justified in the course he has taken.

In my opinion this appeal fails, and must be dismissed with costs.

Banerjee, J.—I concur.

In a previous suit brought by the predecessor in title of the plaintiff against the defendants for rent, one of the questions raised was, whether the land, in respect of which rent was claimed, was mal or lakhiraj and that question was decided in favour of the defendants. In a subsequent suit by the [137] plaintiff against the same defendant for khas possession of certain land, the defence was that the land in dispute was their lakhiraj land, and that the judgment in the previous suit operated as res judicata.

Held, that though the previous suit was one for rent, yet the issue upon the question whether the land was mal or lakhiraj was raised directly in that suit, and therefore the subsequent suit was barred as res judicata.

THE facts of the case and the arguments for the purposes of this report appear sufficiently from the judgment of the High Court.

Babu Akhoy Kumar Banerjee for the Respondents.

Banerjee, J.—The only question raised in this appeal is, whether the Courts below are right in holding that the suit is barred under section 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The suit was one for khas possession of certain plots of land. The former suit, the judgment in which is made the basis of the plea of res judicata, was brought by the predecessor in title of the present plaintiff against the present defendants for rent, and one of the questions raised in the case in the first Court, and the only question upon which the decision of the case was made to rest finally in the Appellate Court, was whether the land, in respect of which rent was claimed, was the mal land of the plaintiff, or the lakhiraj land of the defendants. That question was determined by the Appellate Court against the plaintiff, and his suit was dismissed. The Lower Appellate Court has held that the judgment in the former suit operates as res judicata upon the question raised in this case, namely, whether the land in dispute is the mal land of the plaintiff or the lakhiraj land of the defendants. There is no dispute here that the question raised in this suit was in issue in the former suit, and [138] was heard and determined in that suit, and the only ground upon which the learned Vakil for the plaintiff (appellant) asks us to hold that the judgment in the former suit does not operate as res judicata is that, though the matter now in dispute was in issue in the former suit, it was not directly and substantially in issue in that suit within the meaning of section 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure, because the former suit was one for rent, and the primary question for decision in that suit was whether the relationship of landlord and tenant subsisted between the parties And, in support of this contention, the cases of Run Bahadoor Singh v. Lucho Koer, (1885) I. L. R., 11 Cal., 301 : L. R., 12 I. A., 23, and of Srihari Banerjee v. Khitish Chandra Rai, (1897) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 569, are relied upon.

No doubt there are certain observations in the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Run Bahadoor Singh v. Lucho Koer, which apparently lend some support to the plaintiff's contention; but then a subsequent decision of the Privy Council in the case of Radha Madhub Holdar v. Monohur Mukerji, (1888) I. L. R., 15 Cal., 756 : L. R., 15 I. A., 97, clearly shows that the mere fact of the former suit in which the question of title is determined being a rent suit, does not prevent that determination from operating as res judicata in a subsequent suit brought for the establishment of title. Their Lordships in the last mentioned case observe: " Radha Madhab now comes to redeem; but the right to redeem rests on precisely the same ground as the right to rent was rested. In each case the question is equally—who is the true representative of Matangini? Therefore, their Lordships conceive that the matter was expressly decided by the High Court in the rent suit." That being so, we do not think that the plaintiff's contention can be supported to the extent to which it goes.

As for the case of Srihari Banerjee v. Khitish Chandra Rai, (1897) I.L.R., 24 Cal., 569, the facts there were very different from those of the present case. There the issue tried in the former suit was, what was the share of the rent to which the plaintiff was entitled; whereas the issue raised in the subsequent suit was, what was the [139] share of the property to which the plaintiff was entitled; and, as is pointed out in the judgment, the two questions were not identical. "And the judgment," the learned Judges in that case say, "of the Court of Appeal rested upon considerations based on the provisions of the Land Registration Act, and on the fact of the purchase of the present plaintiffs being subsequent to that under which the present defendant No. 1 claimed—considerations which were necessary and sufficient for the determination of the rent suit, but which are not conclusive in a suit like the present, which is for determination of title to land as distinguished from title to recover rent, and in which the plaintiffs claim a preferential right, notwithstanding that their purchase was subsequent to that of the defendant No. 1 by reason of that purchase being in satisfaction of a decree on a prior mortgage. Section 78 of Bengal Act VII of 1876, and s. 60 of Act VIII of 1885, bar inquiry in a rent suit into any question of title independently of the Land Registration Record, while clause (a) of section 89 of the former Act reserves the right to obtain a declaration of title independently of such record by a regular suit."

These then were the grounds upon which it was held that the decision in a rent suit did not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit brought for establishment of title. But these considerations have no application to the facts of this case.

It remains then to consider whether there is anything in the circumstances of this case which would warrant our holding that the question heard and determined in the former suit, namely, that relating to the question of mal or lakhiraj, was not directly and substantially in issue in that suit.

Now the Code of Civil Procedure does not define the expression "matter directly and substantially in issue." The only explanation of the expression that is given is in explanation II of section 13 of the Code: and that relates to cases where a matter is to be held to have been directly and substantially in issue constructively, though it was not directly and substantially in issue actually. Here there is no question that the matter was in issue actually, and not merely constructively. The only question is whether the matter was directly and substantially in issue. "Substantially," [140] evidently, signifies what was indicated by the phrase, "in effect though not in express terms," in Lord HARDWICKE'S statement of the doctrine of res judicata in the case of Gregory v. Molesworth, (1747) 3 Atkyns., 626), which is cited with approbation by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Soorjo Monee Dayee v. Suddanund Mohapatter, (1874) 12 B. L. R., 304: L. R., I. A., Sup. Vol., 212: 20 W. R., 377. In the present case there can be no question that the issue now raised was raised substantially in the former case within the meaning assigned to that word in the cases just referred to. Here the matter was not merely in effect, but also in express terms decided.

Then there remains the question whether the matter was directly in issue. The word "directly" seems to have been used in contra-distinction to the words

"incidentally" and "collaterally" made use of in the statement of the opinion of the Judges in the Duchess of Kingston's case, (1776) 2 Smith's L. C. (9th Ed.) 812 (814).

Without attempting to lay down any hard and fast rule for determining when an issue should be considered to have been directly raised, and when incidentally or collaterally, we think it enough, for the purposes of the present case, to say that, whatever meaning may be assigned to the term "directly," it is impossible to avoid the conclusion that the issue upon the question of mal and lakhiraj was raised directly in the former suit, quite as much as it is in this suit. On referring to the final judgment of the Appellate Court in that suit we find that the learned District Judge, after setting out the previous proceedings in the case, observes: "For the plaintiff appellant it is urged that his evidence in the lower Court fully established that the land was mal and not lakhiraj and that the Munsif erred in holding otherwise. This then is the point for determination." And then, after discussing the evidence at some length, the learned Judge concludes with these words: "The point for determination is found against the appellant, and the appeal will be dismissed with costs." It appears clear from this that even if the decision in the former suit, which was one for rent, might have been made to rest upon grounds [141] other than that upon which it is actually made to rest, after the first Court had distinctly found the issue upon the question of mal or lakhiraj against the plaintiff, the plaintiff, who was the appellant, thought it fit to rest his case before the Appellate Court upon the sole ground that he was entitled to succeed because the land was proved to be his mal land, and not the lakhiraj land of the defendant. It is, therefore, impossible to say that, upon any view of the meaning of the term 'directly,' the issue tried in the former suit, as to whether the land was mal or lakhiraj, was anything but a direct issue in the case. The decision in the former case, therefore, has, in our opinion, been rightly held to operate as res judicata in this case. That being so, the only contention raised by the appellant fails, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal—Arbitration—Validity of Award—Judgment in accordance with an award—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), sections 521 and 522.

An appeal will lie against a decree given in accordance with an award under section 522 of the Code of Civil Procedure, when the award upon which the decree is based is not a valid and legal award.

Debendra Nath Shaw v. Aubhoy Churn Bagchi, (1883) I.L.R., 9 Cal., 905; Joy Prokash Lall v. Sheo Golam Singh, (1885) I.L.R., 11 Cal., 37; Bindessuri Pershad Singh v. Jankee Pershad Singh, (1889) I. L. R., 16 Cal., 482; Lachman Das v. Brij Pal, (1884) I. L. R., 6 All., 174; and Venkayya v. Venkatappayya, (1892) I. L. R., 15 Mad., 348, referred to.

A Court is justified in holding that an award is not valid and binding upon the defendant, when the arbitrator was the retained pleader of the plaintiff, and no disclosure of this fact was made, before the arbitrator was appointed, to the defendant who was consequently unaware of it.

[142] THE facts of the case are shortly these: The plaintiff brought a suit for arrears of rent against the defendants. The matter was referred to arbitration. The arbitrator made his award, but the defendants took exception to it on certain grounds. The Subordinate Judge, before whom the matter came on for hearing, overruled the defendants' objection, and passed a decree in accordance with the award. An appeal was preferred against this decision to the District Judge by the defendants. A preliminary objection was taken to the hearing of the appeal on the ground that no appeal lay to him. The learned District Judge overruled this objection, and upon the merits held that the award was not valid and binding and set aside the decision of the first Court.

From this decision the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Babu Sarada Churn Mitter, and Babu Harakumar Mitter for the Appellant

Dr. Rash Behary Ghosh, and Dr. Ashutosh Mookerjee for the Respondent.

Maclean, C.J.—In this case there was a litigation between the plaintiff and the defendants. The matter was referred to arbitration. The questions submitted to arbitration were inquired into by the arbitrator, who made his award. The defendants objected to that award, and applied to have it set aside. The matter came before the Subordinate Judge who heard the parties and rejected the application to set aside the award, and decided practically in favour of the plaintiff and made a decree in accordance with the award. The defendants, dissatisfied with the ruling of the Subordinate Judge, presented, an appeal to the District Judge. Upon the matter coming before the District Judge objection was taken by the plaintiff, the then respondent, that, having regard to the last sentence of section 522 of the Code of Civil Procedure, no appeal lay from the decree of the Subordinate Judge. Those words are these: "No appeal shall lie from such a decree except in so far as the decree is in excess of, or not in accordance with, the award." The plaintiff contends that those words mean that inasmuch as in this case the decree is not in excess of, [143] but in accordance with, the award, no appeal can lie. But on the other hand the defendants contend that the award there spoken of must be taken to be an award which has been regularly and properly arrived at by the arbitrator who has been appointed arbitrator: in other words it must be a valid and legal award.

In my opinion the contention of the defendants upon this point is sound. The matter has been practically dealt with in various cases. It is sufficient if I refer to the case of Joy Prokash Lall v. Sheo Golam Singh, (1885) I. L. R., 11 Cal., 37, where it was held that the question under section 522 of the Code of Civil Procedure whether an appeal will lie against a decree in accordance with the award depends upon whether the award upon which the decree is based is a valid and legal award. There are several other cases which have been referred to in the course of the argument, cases not only in this Court, but in the High Courts of Madras and Allahabad, which appear to me consistent with the view laid down in the case which I have just cited. It appears to me that, if one were to hold the contrary view, the result would be rather startling. It is not difficult to conceive cases, in which the award may be obviously invalid, and where the Judge of First Instance, either through misapprehension of the facts, or of the law, has yet made a decree affirming the award. In these cases is there to be no appeal? I think there ought to be, and I concur in those decisions which lay down that there is. In my opinion, therefore, an appeal does lie.

That being so, we have to consider the second point, namely, whether assuming that an appeal lies, the District Judge was correct in his opinion that the award was not valid or binding upon the plaintiff. In my opinion it was not binding upon him, and I base that conclusion upon one fact, and one fact alone, in the case. It is admitted that the arbitrator in this case was the retained pleader of the plaintiff. It is proved that the defendants were not aware of that most important fact until after the proceedings had terminated before the Subordinate Judge. It is equally clear that the fact was not disclosed to the defendants. What then is the position of matters? You have a gentleman appointed as arbitrator who had been admittedly retained as the pleader of the plaintiff: you have the fact that there is no dis-[144] closure of that fact made by the plaintiff or by the arbitrator himself, to the defendant, and that the defendant goes to arbitration in ignorance of that fact. To my mind that circumstance alone is sufficient to justify the Court in holding that the award is not valid and binding upon the defendant. In cases of arbitration where a person is appointed by two parties to exercise judicial duties there should be uberrima fides on the part of all the parties concerned in relation to his selection and appointment, and every disclosure, which might in the least affect the minds of those who are proposing to submit their dispute to the arbitrament of any particular individual, as regards his selection and fitness for the post, ought to be made, so that each party may have every opportunity of considering whether the reference to arbitration to that particular individual should or should not be made. In my opinion, there was such concealment in this case on the part of the plaintiff as to vitiate the award, under the provisions of section 521 of the Code; and holding that view, and that there was a right of appeal, the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Banerjee, J.—I am of the same opinion. The question raised before us is, whether an appeal lay to the Lower Appellate Court. The learned Vakil for the appellant contends, that as the decree of the first Court was made in accordance with the award of an arbitrator, an appeal from that decree was barred by section 522 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section, no doubt, provides that where judgment is given according to the award pronounced by an arbitrator, " no appeal shall lie from such decree except in so far as the decree is in excess of, or not in accordance with, the award." But these words have been held in a series of cases in this Court, and in the High Courts of Allahabad and Madras, to refer to a decree made in accordance with a legal and a valid award. See the cases of Debendra Nath Saw v. Aubhoy Churn Bagchi, (1883) I. L. R., 9 Cal., 905; Joy Prokash Lall v. Sheo Golam Singh, (1885) I. L. R., 11 Cal., 37; Bindessuri Pershad Singh v. Jankee Pershad Singh, (1889) I.L.R., 16 Cal., 482, Luchman Das v. Brij Pal, (1884) I. L. R., 6 All., 174, and Venkayya v. Venkatappayya, (1892) I. L. R., 15 Mad., 348.

[145] If it were necessary to refer to any reason in support of a view which is so amply supported by authority, I should say that it would be unreasonable to hold that the Legislature intended to make a decree final on the ground of its being in accordance with an award when the validity of the award itself is called in question. What the Legislature meant to declare to be final was the decree, supposing the award to be unassailable on the ground of illegality or invalidity for any of the reasons referred to in section 521 of the Code of Civil Procedure, such as corruption or misconduct on the part of the arbitrator, or fraudulent conduct on the part of either party. But though the correctness of the award, and therefore of the decree based upon it, may not be open to question by appeal, it does not follow that the validity of the award, and the decision of the Court touching the objections to the same as contemplated by section 521 are intended to be matters beyond question by appeal. It is difficult to suppose that a decision upon such grave and important matters was intended to be final when orders upon comparatively less important matters, such as those referred to in section 518, are made appealable by section 588, clause 26.

It was argued by the learned Vakil for the appellant that the decisions, which I have referred to above, are intended to apply only to cases where an award was a nullity as distinguished from cases in which the award was liable to be set aside upon some one or other of the grounds mentioned in clauses (a), (b) and (c) of section 521. I am unable to appreciate the force of this argument. If, as was admitted in the argument, and as has been held by the Privy Council in Har Narain Singh v. Chaudhrani Bhagwant Kuar, (1891) I.L.R., 13 All., 300: L. R., 18 I. A., 55, an award that is made after the expiry of the period allowed by the Court is an invalid award, and a nullity, as provided by the last paragraph of section 521, it is difficult to see why an award which is made in contravention of an order superseding the arbitration, as contemplated by clause (c) of section 521, should be regarded as being of a different character, so far as the present question is concerned, or why an award which a party has succeeded in obtaining by fraudulent concealment of facts should be viewed in a different light.

[146] Then, as regards the question, whether in the present case the award was really valid or not, I do not think it necessary to say anything in addition to what has been said in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice.

The award here, upon the facts found, was clearly invalid under clauses (a) and (b) of section 521 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

For these reasons I think that the award in the case was invalid, and that, therefore, an appeal lay to the Lower Appellate Court.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sections 103, 104, 143—Rules framed under section 189 of the Bengal Tenancy Act—Whether proceedings under section 103 of the Bengal Tenancy Act are suits between landlord and tenant—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882)—Review of judgment—Second appeal—Settlement of fair and equitable rent.

Proceedings under section 103 of the Bengal Tenancy Act are suits between landlord and tenant within the meaning of section 143, by virtue of the rules framed under section 189 of that Act ; therefore the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to review of judgment are applicable to such proceedings.

No second appeal lies to the High Court from a decision of a Revenue Officer settling rents under section 104 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

THE facts of the case and the arguments appear sufficiently, for the purpose of this report, from the judgments of the High Court.

Dr. Ashutosh Mookerjee, and Babu Janendra Nath Bose for the Appellants.

Mr. Jackson, Babu Baikanto Nath Pal, and Babu Devendra Nath Ghose, for the Respondents.

Maclean, C.J.—I think we can dispose of these appeals, considering the very full arguments which have been submitted to us by both sides. The real point we have to decide lies in a somewhat narrow compass, and is whether or not the present proceedings are a suit within the meaning of section 143 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1852 of 1895, against the decree of J. Pratt, Esq., District Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 22nd of August 1895, modifying the decree of Babu Jatindra Nath Gupta, Settlement Officer of Baraset, dated the 21st of August 1894.

The facts are as follows: There were certain proceedings taken under section 103 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the practical object of which, as I understand them, was to have a fair and equitable rate of rent in respect of certain premises fixed. It was a question admittedly between landlord and tenant. The matter came before the Settlement Officer at Baraset, who, on the 21st August 1894, decided, in effect, that the rent was not enhanceable. There was an appeal from that decision to Mr. Pratt, the Special Judge under the Act, and he, in the first instance, confirmed this decision of the Settlement Officer and dismissed the appeal. This was on the 30th of May 1895. The plaintiff subsequently applied for a review of the judgment of Mr. Pratt, and on the 22nd of August 1895 that learned Judge heard the review, and, without admitting any fresh evidence, but upon the old evidence, arrived at the conclusion that he had on the former occasion come to a wrong decision in the matter, and he practically reversed his previous judgment and held that the rent was enhanceable. Whether the present appellants did or did not appear on that occasion before Mr. Pratt is, perhaps, not very clear; at any rate they had notice of the application, and might have appeared and raised the point that they now raise, but they did not do so. The present appeal is then presented, and the main contention of the appellant is that Mr. Pratt had no jurisdiction to review the previous judgment he had delivered. That turns upon whether the proceedings are a suit within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act. This point was not taken when the matter was before Mr. Pratt; it is taken for the first time in this Court; but in the view I take of the real question on this appeal I do not propose to express any opinion as to whether or not the point can now be raised, nor to express any opinion as to whether this appeal is maintainable, [148] having regard to the language of section 584 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Both these points are to my thinking of no practical importance, as in my opinion the appellant fails on the real merits of his appeal. If these proceedings be a suit within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act, then the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure would admittedly apply, and Mr. Pratt would have had the power of doing that which he did, viz., reviewing his previous decision.

Is this proceeding then a suit within the meaning of that Act? The documents themselves in the proceedings are such as are usual in a suit. In the paper-book there is a note "Date of institution of suit." There is a plaint, a written statement of the defences, which indicate that it has been treated as a suit, and one to which the Code of Civil Procedure would apply as if it were an ordinary suit.

The sections of the Bengal Tenancy Act which bear upon the matter are these. But before I refer to them, I ought, perhaps, to state what is the argument of the learned Vakil who appears for the appellants. His argument is that this proceeding is not a suit, but is a mere application under the Act, and being a mere application under the Act, the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure do not apply to it. That argument is based to a great extent upon the terms of sections 143 and 144 of the Act in question, and also of sections 107 and 108. Section 143 of the Act is in these terms: "The High Court may, from time to time, with the approval of the Governor-General in Council, make rules consistent with this Act, declaring that any portions of the Code of Civil Procedure shall not apply to suits between landlord and tenant as such, or to any specified classes of such suits, or shall apply to them subject to modifications specified in the rules."

If we stop there it is obvious that the High Court may, with the approval mentioned in that section, make rules, the effect of which might be to limit the operation of the Code of Civil Procedure to a certain class of suits. Then it goes on, "subject to any rules so made, and subject also to the other provisions of this Act, the Code of Civil Procedure shall apply to all such suits." In section 144 there is no doubt a distinction drawn between the term "suit," in the first part of that section, and the term " applica-[149]tion " in the second part of that section. But there is another section in the Act, which, to my mind, materially bears upon the question we have to decide, and that is section 189. Section 189 says that "the Local Government may from time to time by notification in the Official Gazette make rules consistent with the Act (1) to regulate the procedure to be followed by Revenue officers in the discharge of any duty imposed upon them by or under this Act, and may by such rules confer upon any such officer (a) any power exercised by a Civil Court in the trial of suits," and other powers.

What has happened is this. In pursuance of that section, the Local Government has made rules, and there are certain rules which apply to cases of such a class as are now before the Court, and rules 27 and 32 of those rules so apply. Rule 27 says: "If within the period fixed and notified under rule 16, the landlord applies for a settlement of a fair rent (which was the case here) he shall be considered as plaintiff and the tenant as defendant, and the proceeding shall be dealt with as a suit under the Act." Rule 32 is to the same effect. The Legislature then seems to have told us that if a landlord applies for a settlement of a fair rent his proceeding shall be dealt with as if it were a suit under the Act. If then it is to be dealt with, quâ procedure, as a suit under the Act, it is a suit within the meaning of section 143, and the Code of Civil Procedure would apply, and if so Mr. Pratt would have power to review his judgment. If the Code of Civil Procedure do not apply, what procedure is to apply? Under what procedure is that, which is to be dealt as a suit, to proceed? It is urged that we are not to take this extremely reasonable view because section 144 shows a distinction between applications and suits, but as the rules say this is, quâ procedure, to be dealt with as a suit. I fail to appreciate any real force in the argument.

Then it is urged that sections 107 and 108 of the Act are inconsistent with this view. It is urged that, inasmuch as section 108 specifies a particular procedure to be followed, that is inconsistent with the procedure to be followed being that used in the Code of Civil Procedure. I fail to see the inconsistency. It may be superfluous, but I cannot see any inconsistency between the two. Those responsible for the Bengal Tenancy Act may have [150] thought it advisable to make it clear that an appeal was to lie, and not leave that point open and resting upon the construction of various sections of the Code. They thought it advisable to make that quite clear. In my judgment, it would be a very narrow construction to place upon this Act, and the rules framed under it, if we were to say that this proceeding is not a suit within the meaning of the Act. Were we to so hold, there would be no procedure applicable to such a proceeding. That practically disposes of the appeal.

The other point is a very small matter. It is said that under sub-section 3 of section 104, the Judge in the Court below ought to have presumed, until the contrary was proved, that the existing rent was fair and equitable. I don't know how that may be, or whether the Judge really did not do so, but it is pretty clear that having regard to section 106 the appeal will not lie to this Court on that point. The appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Banerjee, J.—I concur with the learned Chief Justice in thinking that this appeal ought to be dismissed with costs. It arises out of certain proceedings instituted under section 103 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Upon the proceedings being instituted the Revenue Officer found that the tenants were tenure-holders holding at fixed rates of rent, and he, accordingly, recorded a declaration to that effect. Upon appeal to the Special Judge, that officer in the first instance held that the tenants were occupancy-raiyats, but on the question of fixity of rent he confirmed the decision of the first Court. But upon an application for review of judgment being made, he granted the application, modified his former decision, and came to the conclusion that the defendants were occupancy-raiyats holding at a rent that was enhanceable, and he directed that the rent should be assessed at a certain rate per bigha

Against this last mentioned decision the present appeal has been preferred, and it is contended, on behalf of the appellants, that the decision of the Court below is wrong in law, first, because the learned Special Judge had no power to review his former judgment, and, secondly, because he was wrong in enhancing the rent without assigning any definite reasons, when under sub-section 3 of section 104 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, he was [151] bound to presume, until the contrary was proved, that the existing rent was fair and equitable.

Before dealing with the first of these two grounds, it becomes necessary to consider two questions raised by the learned Counsel for the respondents, namely, first, whether it is open to the appellants to raise the first contention when they did not take any objection in the Court below as to its not having any jurisdiction to entertain the application for review of judgment; and, secondly, whether the ground upon which we are asked to interfere is a ground that comes within the scope of section 584 of the Code of Civil Procedure which governs second appeals

As to the first question, I do not think that the mere fact of the appellants not having objected in the Court below to the lower Courts entertaining the application for review of judgment, precludes them from raising the objection now before us, if it is a valid objection. In this view I am supported by the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Minakshi Naidu v. Subramanya Sastri, (1887) I.L.R, 11 Mad, 26 · L.R. 14 I. A., 160. It was there held by their Lordships that where there is an inherent incompetency in the Court below to deal with the question before it, no consent would have conferred upon the Court below that jurisdiction which it did not possess. Here there was no consent, there was merely an absence of objection. Assuming that the contention of the appellants is right, that the Lower Appellate Court had no power to grant the application for review, the mere fact of their not having raised that point in the lower Court, ought not, in my opinion, to prevent them from raising it now.

Then, as to the second question, I do not think that the ground raised on behalf of the appellants is outside the scope of section 584 of the Code. A second appeal is allowed by that section on this, amongst other grounds, namely, that the decision is contrary to some specified law or usage having the force of law; and "specified," as explained by the Judicial Committee in the case of Durga Chowdhrani v. Jewahir Singh, (1891) I. L. R., 18 Cal., 23, means specified in the memorandum of appeal. The decision that is appealed against in this [152] case is the decision of the 22nd August 1895. It is one and the same decision that holds that the application for review ought to be admitted, and holds, in modification of the former judgment, that the defendants ought to be recorded as raiyats with rights of occupancy, holding at enhanceable rates. The correctness of that decision is called in question on the ground of its being contrary to law, that is, contrary to law for this reason, that the decision, in so far as it grants the application for review, is in contravention of the law regulating the procedure on this subject, and is in excess of the power of the Court. That being so, the two preliminary questions raised on behalf of the respondents ought, in my opinion, to be decided in favour of the appellants.

It becomes necessary then to consider the first ground of appeal on its merits. The contention of the appellants is that the Code of Civil Procedure, subject to certain modifications, applies only to suits between landlord and tenant under the provisions of section 143 of the Bengal Tenancy Act; that proceedings under section 103 of that Act are not suits, but are initiated by applications; and that a distinction is made between suits and applications in the Act as will appear from section 144. It is further contended that sections 107 and 108, which make the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure applicable to proceedings under Chapter X of the Act, such as the one out of which this appeal has arisen, make them applicable only to a limited extent, that is, as regards the trial in the first Court, the appeal to the Special Judge, and a second appeal to this Court. And it is argued that the inference to be drawn from these several provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, is that the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to review of judgment do not apply to proceedings like these.

On the other hand, it is contended, in the first place, that every Court has an inherent power, unless there is any express provision of the law to the contrary, to correct its own errors by review of judgment; and in support of this contention reference is made to certain decisions of this Court and of the Judicial Committee. It is further contended that proceedings under Chapter X, at any rate, in certain cases, and the present case is one of them, should be treated as suits under the Bengal Tenancy Act, as provided by [153] paragraphs 27 and 32 of the rules made by the local Government under section 189 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The question has been very fully discussed on both sides; and after giving my best consideration to the arguments advanced, I am of opinion that the appellant's contention is not sound, and that the view contended for by the learned Counsel for the respondents that proceedings like these should be regarded as suits is correct.

The local Government is, by section 189 of the Act, given authority to make rules to regulate the proceedings to be held by Revenue Officers in pursuance of any duty imposed upon them under this Act. Chapter X of the Act, under which this proceeding was instituted. relates to proceedings to be conducted by Revenue Officers under this Act; and in regulating their procedure, the local Government has, under the provisions of section 189, made the two rules to which reference has just been made, which provide that the proceeding shall be dealt with as a suit under this Act. If, then, as regards procedure, and the question before us is one of procedure, the proceeding is to be dealt with as a suit under this Act, is there any reason why the proceeding should not be treated as a suit within the meaning of section 143 of the Act, and therefore governed by the Code of Civil Procedure? It was argued that if the Legislature had intended the Code of Civil Procedure to apply to proceedings under Chapter X, the language of section 143, instead of being qualified as it is, would have been to the effect that the Code of Civil Procedure shall apply to suits and proceedings between landlord and tenant under this Act.

I do not think that this argument is valid. These proceedings could not have been treated as suits, and could not, so far as this ground of decision goes, have been treated as governed by the review provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, if the local Government had not thought it fit, in the exercise of the power vested in it by section 189 of the Act, to declare that they should be dealt with as suits. The Legislature, in enacting section 143 in the way it has done, has left it to the local Government to say, whether certain proceedings which are by the Act to be initiated by applications, should be treated as suits or not. In this parti-[154] cular case, the local Government has determined to say that these proceedings should be treated as suits. In the absence then of any definition of the term "suit" anywhere in the Act, I think it is only right and proper to hold that a proceeding like this comes within the description of a suit between landlord and tenant under section 143 of the Act.

I may add that it would have been somewhat anomalous if it had been otherwise; for then we should have had the Code of Civil Procedure governing the proceedings down to final judgment in the first Court, and the same Code of Civil Procedure governing the case so far as the first appeal and also the second appeal were concerned, but not so far as an application for review of judgment went. Proceedings like these are not summary proceedings. Decisions passed in them have the force of a decree. An appeal and a second appeal are allowed against those decisions. But if no power of correcting its error by review of judgment were given to the Court, then notwithstanding the provisions as to appeal, grave and irremediable injustice might sometimes result. I think, therefore, that it is consistent with reason and justice to hold that these proceedings ought to be treated as suits within the meaning of section 143 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and if they are to be so treated, the Code of Civil Procedure applies to them, and there can be no objection to the Judge entertaining an application for review.

As to the second point, it is enough to say that no second appeal is allowed by section 108 of the Bengal Tenancy Act upon a point like this. For sub-section 3 of section 108 of the Act allows an appeal to this Court from the decision of a Special Judge only in cases coming under section 106, and this last mentioned section relates only to disputes arising as to the correctness of any entry, not being an entry of a rent settled under Chapter X, and evidently the second objection relates to an entry of the rent so settled in this case.

SIR FRANCIS WILLIAM MACLEAN, KNIGHT, CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Mahomed Hamidulla............Decree-holder

Tohurennissa Bibi and others...........Judgment-debtors.*

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), section 108—Ex parte Decree—Effect of a decree set aside at the instance of some only of several defendants against whom the decree passed was ex parte—Meaning of the words " the decree."

The words " the decree " in section 108 of the Code of Civil Procedure mean the whole decree made in the suit. Therefore, in a case where a decree has been passed ex parte against some only of several defendants, the effect of its being set aside on their application under section 108 of the Code of Civil Procedure is that the whole decree made in the suit is set aside, notwithstanding that some of the defendants had entered appearance at the original hearing.

THIS was the hearing of a rule granted to show cause why an order of the Munsif of Alipore setting aside a decree on the application of some only of the defendants against whom it had been made ex parte [sic]. The facts of the case and the arguments, for the purposes of this report, appear sufficiently from the judgments of the High Court

Dr. Ashutosh Mookerjee, in support of the rule

No one appeared to show cause.

Maclean, C. J.—I am for my own part not satisfied that this case comes within section 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure , but in the view I take of the construction of section 108 of that Code, to which I will advert in a moment, it becomes unnecessary for me to decide that question. The question we have to decide arises under these circumstances . A suit was brought against two sets of defendants upon a promissory note which had been made by two persons, one of whom died before the suit was brought The suit was brought against the surviving maker of the note and the heirs of the other maker of the note who had, as I have said, died [156] in the meantime. Two of these heirs were purdanashin women, and it appears that the necessary summons was not served upon them, and that the decree as against them was made ex parte in these terms " In the result a decree for Rs. 468 be passed in plaintiff's favour together with costs at ex parte scale. The liabilities of the defendants 1 to 3 shall be to the extent of the property inherited by them from the deceased debtor."

The two defendants against whom the decree had been made ex parte made an application under section 108 of the Code to have the decree set aside. The application was granted, and the decree not only as against the applicants but also as against the other defendants who had appeared and defended was set aside. The question is whether it ought to have been set aside as against all the defendants, or only as against the applicants, the purdanashin women, against whom admittedly the trial had proceeded ex parte. Apparently the point was not mentioned to the Munsif; any way he has not referred to it.

The question turns upon the true construction of section 108 of the Code, the language of which is, perhaps, not so clear upon the point as it might be. The first clause of the section somewhat favours the present applicant's contention, but then the latter clause, after stating that the applicant must satisfy the Court that he was not properly served, goes on to say, "the Court shall pass an order to set aside the decree" * * * The language is imperative, "shall set aside the decree." Now what does "the decree" mean? It must, I think, mean the decree, the whole decree, made in the suit. It does not say part of the decree: it does not say that part of the decree which affects the interest of the applying defendant alone, but it uses the words "the decree." Read according to their ordinary signification and natural meaning the words must mean, I think, that the Court shall set aside the whole decree, and that view is strengthened, I consider, by the last words of the section, viz., "and the Court shall appoint a day for proceeding with the suit." The suit would appear to mean the whole suit, not merely the suit as against or so far as it affected the particular defendants making the appplication, but the whole suit. There seems to me reason in this view of the section If the original decree was allowed to stand as against the original [157] defendants who had appeared and defended the suit, and the suit were only allowed to proceed on the second hearing, if I may call it so, as against the defendants against whom in the first instance the decree had been made ex parte, I can conceive cases in which complications and possibly injustice might result. And it may well be that the Legislature, seeing that difficulties might ensue from making in suits in which there were several defendants a decree against them piecemeal, may have deemed it better that the decree should not be set aside partially, but that the whole decree should be set aside. And I may point out that the plaintiff can hardly be heard to complain, for when the suit came on for hearing he knew perfectly well that he was proceeding against some of the defendants ex parte, and that he was incurring the risk—a fairly certain risk—of having his decree set aside, if he knew, as he must be taken to have known, that he was proceeding against certain of the defendants who had not been served. Nor can the defendants who appeared be heard to complain. They must have known that the other defendants were not in Court to defend, and a very little inquiry would probably have satisfied them that they had not been served. If then those defendants had pointed out to the Court that their co-defendants were not present, and that it was qustionable whether they had been served with the requisite summons, and that they were purdanashin women, it is highly probable that the Court would have adjourned the case to give the other defendants an opportunity of being present or at any rate of being duly served. If, then, the whole decree be set aside, I do not think that either the plaintiff or the other defendants have much real ground for complaint.

Holding this view, on the best construction that I am able to place on the language of the section, I think that the Judge in the Court below arrived at a right conclusion, and that the rule must be discharged.

Banerjee, J.—I also am of opinion that this rule ought to be discharged. We are asked to reverse an order of the Court below made under section 108 of the Code of Civil Procedure, setting aside an ex parte decree, so far as that order relates to the two defendants who had entered appearance, and against whom it is contended the original decree was not an ex parte decree.

[158] Two questions arise for consideration: First, whether the application to this Court comes properly within section 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and, secondly, whether the order made by the Court below is a right order or not.

If the contention of the learned Vakil for the petitioner, viz., that the order made by the Court below was wrong, were correct, I am inclined to think that the case would come under that clause of section 622 of the Code, which authorizes this Court to interfere in cases in which a Subordinate Court has exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law. For the contention raised on behalf of the petitioner is this, that the Court below, by section 108 of the Code, was authorized to set aside only that part of the decree which was passed ex parte; and if, in making the order that it has made, it has set aside also that part of the decree that was not passed ex parte, I think that the petitioner may contend that it has, in so doing, exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law. This view is in accordance with the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Brij Mohun Thakur v. Rai Umanath Chowdhry, (1892) I. L. R., 20 Cal., 8: L. R., 19 I. A., 154, and with the decision of this Court in Jogodanund Singh v. Amrita Lal Sircar, (1895) I. L. R., 22 Cal, 767.

But, then, is the decision of the Court below wrong, or was the Court below right in reversing the entire decree as it has done, notwithstanding that some of the defendants had entered appearance? Section 108 of the Code says: "In any case in which a decree is passed ex parte against a defendant, he may apply to the Court by which the decree was made, for an order to set it aside, and if he satisfies the Court that the summons was not duly served," as was the case here, "the Court shall pass an order to set aside the decree upon such terms as to costs, payment into Court, or otherwise, as it thinks fit, and shall appoint a day for proceeding with the suit."

The section, therefore, evidently contemplates the setting aside of the decree made in the suit, and it directs the Court to appoint a day for proceeding with the suit.

It was argued that the decree in this case should be treated as a [169] decree partly ex parte and partly not an ex parte decree, and that the section authorizes the Court to set it aside only so far as it was an ex parte decree. The section, however, makes no such distinction, and as pointed out in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice, there may be very good reason why the section did not make any such distinction. It may often happen that the setting aside of the decree as regards some of the defendants renders it necessary in the interests of justice that the whole decree should be re-opened; and the present case is an instance in point. Here, of the two parties who entered appearance, one was one of the executants of the promissory note on which the suit is based, and the other was one of the three persons who are now sued as the legal representatives of another executant of the note, now deceased; and if the decree were to stand as against the defendants who entered appearance, and be set aside only as regards the defendants who did not enter appearance, then, in the event of the suit being dismissed as against the latter, the result would be obviously hard as against the defendant who is sued as one of the heirs of the deceased executant of the note and who had entered appearance at the original hearing. It is to avoid complications like this that the Legislature may have thought it fit to allow a decree made ex parte as against some of the defendants to be set aside in its entirety upon their application, if the requirements of section 108 of the Code are satisfied.

Two cases were relied upon by the learned Vakil for the petitioners—Doorga Pershaud Ghose v. Greesh Chunder Bose, (1864) 1 W. R., 222, and Brojonath Surmah v. Anund Moyee Debia Chowdhrain, (1867) 7 W. R., 237, as lending support to his contention. They were cases under Act X of 1859, and section 58 of that Act, which corresponded to section 108 of the Code, contained this provision, that if the petitioner "shall show good and sufficient cause for his previous non-appearance and shall satisfy the Collector that there has been a failure of justice, the Collector may, upon such terms and conditions as to costs or otherwise as he may think proper, revive the suit and alter or rescind the decree according to the justice of the case."

That, I think, was different from the provision in the law now [160] under consideration, which is imperative, and requires that the Court shall pass an order to set aside the decree upon such terms as to costs, etc., as it shall think fit, and shall appoint a day for proceeding with the suit. I, therefore, think that decisions under Act X of 1859 cannot be in point in cases coming under section 108 of the Code, and the view I take receives some support from the decision of this Court in the case of Dookhee Khan v. Rajessuree Ranee, (1871) 15 W. R., 371, in which it was held that it was competent to the Judge of the Small Cause Court, on hearing the objections by one of the several defendants, to set aside the decree as to all, "if justice seems to require it; as, for instance, if the objection is one which is common to the case of all." . . .

Cases may arise in which a decree, though nominally one, really consists of several decrees against different parties, the relief granted against each being separately specified. In such cases the contention urged by the petitioner's Vakil may hold good. But here the decree is one and undivisable, and I think that the Court below was right in setting it aside in its entirety under section 108 of the Code, notwithstanding that some of the defendants had entered appearance at the original hearing.

The 28th June, 1897.
PRESENT.
SIR FRANCIS WILLIAM MACLEAN, KNIGHT, CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Eshan Chunder Mitter, Chairman of the Hooghly and Chinsurah Municipality.... . . ....Defendant
versus
Banku Behari Pal... .. ..Plaintiff*

Bengal Municipal Act (Bengal Act III of 1884), section 204—Projection caused by restoring a portion of an old building which has been pulled down with the object of its being rebuilt—Meaning of the words "which may have been so erected or placed"—Metropolis Management Amendment Act 1862 (25 & 26 Vict., c. 102), section 75.

[161] Section 204 of the Bengal Municipal Act (Bengal Act III of 1884) does not apply to the case of a projection forming part of a building which is merely in substitution for an old building, which has existed upon the same site before the date on which the District Municipal Improvement Act, 1864, or the District Towns Act 1868 or the Bengal Municipal Act, 1876, as the case may be, took effect in the Municipality.

The words "which may have been so erected or placed" in section 204 mean erected or placed for the first time.

THIS appeal arose out of a suit brought by the plaintiff for a declaration that the order passed by the Municipal Commissioners of Hooghly, directing the plaintiff to pull down a verandah which projected over a public road, was ultra vires, illegal, and without jurisdiction. The allegation of the plaintiff was that the verandah in question existed from time immemorial, that he pulled down the verandah in Choitra 1298 B. S. (April 1892), and in the place of the old beams on which the verandah stood he affixed three brackets for reconstructing the verandah upon them, that the new verandah was to be of the same dimension as the old one, that a notice to remove the brackets having been served upon him, he moved the Chairman of the Municipality, who directed an investigation; that, notwithstanding the report of the investigation being in his favour, the Municipal Commissioners at a meeting passed a resolution ordering the brackets to be removed, that thereupon he removed the brackets, protesting against the order of the Commissioners, and hence the suit was instituted by him.

The defence (inter alia) was that the plaintiff had no cause of action; that under the provisions of the Bengal Municipal Act the suit was not maintainable in the Civil Court, that the projection was to be regarded as a new one, and it was pulled down about ten years ago, and as the plaintiff proceeded to erect the new one without the permission of the Municipal Commissioners they were legally competent to order its removal.

The Munsif found all the facts in favour of the plaintiff and decreed the suit. On appeal to the Subordinate Judge, he confirmed the decision of the first Court, but as to costs the decree was modified. From this decision the defendant appealed to the High Court.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1797 of 1895, against the decree of Babu Beni Madhub Mitter, Subordinate Judge of Hooghly, dated the 5th of August 1895, modifying the decree of Babu Khetra Mohan Mitter, Munsif of Hooghly, dated the 30th of April 1894.

[162] Babu Lal Mohun Das and Babu Lal Behary Mitter for the Appellant.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose and Babu Shib Prosanna Bhattacharjee for the Respondent.

Maclean, C.J.—On the 17th December 1892, the Vice-Chairman of the Hooghly and Chinsurah Municipality wrote and sent to the plaintiff in this suit the following notice :—

"SIR,—By a resolution of the Commissioners at a general meeting held on the 9th September last your prayer to allow the sajah to be made was disallowed. I therefore request that you will be good enough to remove the iron brackets put up against your house within eight days from the date of receipt of this letter, otherwise necessary steps should be taken for their removal."

I understand and I have specially asked the question that no other notice was sent by the defendants to the plaintiff.

The first question which we have to decide is whether, having regard to the terms of section 204 of Bengal Act III of 1884, the Municipality were justified, under the circumstances of this case, in giving a notice, which admittedly the above document purported to be, under that section. The Municipality admit that they considered they were entitled to act, and that throughout they have purported to act, under the statutory powers vested in them under that section. I may say, before I refer to the section, that I have entertained grave doubt whether the plaintiff has not been premature in bringing this suit, inasmuch as beyond sending the above notice, the Municipality have done nothing. When he instituted the suit he had suffered no damage. If he had good reason to believe that if he did not remove the brackets, the Municipality would do so, his proper course, to my mind, would have been to have come to the Court and asked for an injunction to restrain them from so acting, upon the ground that their threatened action was ultra vires. In such a suit the question of ultra vires could have been decided. If the plaintiff's view were correct, the service of the notice was a mere brutum fulmen, and he might have put it behind the fire. Inasmuch, however, as in both the [163] lower Courts the Municipality have allowed the question to be fought out upon its merits, and both parties desire to have the decision of this Court upon the point of law involved, by putting, perhaps, a somewhat liberal construction upon section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, I think that, as the parties desire it, the case ought now to be decided upon its merits, and that exception ought not now to be taken as to whether or not the plaintiff was premature in bringing this suit, or as to its form.

Now section 204, so far as it is material for the purposes of our decision, provides as follows : "The Commissioners may give notice in writing to the owner or occupier of any house requiring him to remove or alter any projection, encroachment or obstruction erected or placed against or in front of such house which may have been so erected or placed after the date on which the District Municipal Improvement Act, 1864, or the District Towns Act, 1868, or the Bengal Municipal Act, 1876, as the case may be, took effect in the Municipality."

The contention of the plaintiff is, that if the projection be only caused by restoring a portion of an old building, which has been pulled down with the object of its being rebuilt, section 204 does not apply, and that section 204 only applies to cases of a new erection causing a new projection and not to the case of a projection which is merely a substitution for a projection previously existing

Now the findings of fact in the Court below, so far as they are material for the present purpose, are these : The Subordinate Judge, as to the second point, which was whether the projection which the defendant ordered to be removed was a new one or is to be regarded as such, says this: "I am of opinion that the plaintiff has proved by his own deposition, as well as by the evidence of most of his witnesses, that the old verandah of the plaintiff's house existed for a period of more than thirty years, and it was pulled down about two years ago in order to rebuild it in its former position on iron brackets, and that the iron brackets were affixed in the same month." Again, he says in another part of his judgment: "I am of opinion that the plaintiff has proved that the old and new projections respectively were [164] exactly of the same dimensions, and that the old sajah was 11 feet and 6 inches in length, and 3 feet 6 inches in breadth;" and again he finds as a fact: "It has been already shown that it has been proved by the evidence of the witnesses of both sides that the projection in question existed since long before any Municipal Act came into operation in this town, and it has been proved by the evidence of the plaintiff's witnesses that the old sajah was pulled down about two years ago, and that the iron brackets were affixed within one month from the time the old sajah was pulled down for the purpose of rebuilding it in its former position, so the projection was not a new one."

Upon these findings of fact, we, sitting here on second appeal, must take it that the brackets which the Municipality claimed to have removed were placed for the purpose of supporting a new verandah in substitution for the old verandah which had been in existence long before any Municipal Act came into operation affecting this district, and that it was intended to be of the same dimensions as the old verandah

The point, then, which we have to decide is whether section 204 applies only to the case of a projection which is caused by a building which is new, that is, erected after the passing of the Acts referred to in the section, or whether it applies to the case of a projection forming part of a building which is merely in substitution for an old building which had existed upon the same site before the passing of the Acts mentioned in the section. In my opinion it would be too narrow a construction of the section to hold that it applied to the case of a new building erected in substitution for an old building, which was in existence before the date of the Acts mentioned in the section. If, in point of fact, the new projection is, as in this case, part of a new building erected in the place of an old building which admittedly was in existence before the date of the Acts mentioned in the section, and merely in substitution for that old building, I do not think that the case comes within section 204 of the Act. I think the words "which may have been so erected or placed," must mean erected or placed for the first time.

This view, I consider, receives support from the provision made [165] in section 233 of the same Act, which provides for compensation being made in the case of a projection ordered to be pulled down by the Municipality in those cases where the projection existed before the coming into operation of the Municipal Acts referred to in that section. Though I am not prone in construing Acts of the Indian Legislature to refer to cases decided in the Courts of England upon the construction of certain English Acts of Parliament, I feel that the view I entertain upon this case receives support, so far as the principle is concerned, from the case of Lord Auckland v. Westminster Local Board of Works [(1872) L. R., 7 Ch. App., 597], which, as I understand that decision, in effect decided that the powers conferred by the 75th section of the Metropolis Management Amendment Act which, in principle, is more or less akin to the sections I have referred to of Bengal Act III of 1884, did not apply to the case of a new building which was merely a substitution for an old building, which had previously existed upon the same site. The authority of that case is not, in my judgment, impaired by the more recent case of the London County Council v. Pryor [L. R., (1896) 1 Q. B. D. 330]. The two cases are quite reconcilable.

Upon these grounds I think that the judgment of the Court below was right. There is something in that judgment about "a prescriptive right." I say nothing about that. I do not at present appreciate its bearing upon the question we have to decide. The appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs, but I think the decree—the precise form of which has not been given to us,—ought to be confined to a declaration that the Municipality are not entitled under section 204 of the Act to require the plaintiff to pull down the brackets in question, and that the plaintiff is entitled to re-erect the same. I understand the plaintiff's claim for damages has been abandoned.

Banerjee, J.—I am of the same opinion. The question raised before us is, whether the order passed by the Municipal Commissioners upon the plaintiff to pull down a verandah which projected over a public road was illegal and ultra vires.

[166] The facts found are, shortly, these—that the verandah in question had been in existence for upwards of thirty years; that it was pulled down by the plaintiff for the purpose of building a new verandah in its place, and that the verandah intended to be rebuilt was exactly of the same dimensions as the old verandah. And it was admitted in the course of the argument that the Commissioners in issuing notice on the plaintiff had proceeded under section 204 of Bengal Act III of 1884. That being so, the question reduces itself to this, namely, whether the projection in question was one that was erected or placed in front of the plaintiff's house after the dates mentioned in section 204 by reason of such projection being the re-erection of an old projection on the site of the old projection. There is no dispute that the old verandah had been in existence from before those dates, but the contention on behalf of the appellant has been that, as the old verandah had been taken down and a new one was going to be erected in its place after the Bengal Municipal Act had come into operation, the case must be held to come within the scope of section 204.

I do not think that this contention is sound Though, literally speaking, the new projection was put up after the dates mentioned in section 204, reading section 204 with sections 206 and 233 of the Act, I think that the law makes a clear distinction between a new projection or a projection put up for the first time after the dates mentioned in section 204, and a projection which had been in existence from before, and which was being reconstructed.

In the case of old existing projections, the law in sections 206 and 233 makes provision for the award of compensation, whereas in the case of projections put up after the dates mentioned in section 204, no such provision is made; and the intention of the Legislature seems, from a comparison of the three sections to which I have just referred, to be to limit the power conferred upon the Municipal Commissioners under section 204 to cases where projections are put up for the first time.

In making this observation I must guard against its being supposed that a projection erected on the site of an old one should [167] always be treated as a continuation of it, notwithstanding that the interval that may have elapsed between the removal of the old structure and the erection of the new one was long enough to raise a presumption that the old structure had been intended to be finally removed, and any intention to rebuild had been abandoned completely at the time.

But it is unnecessary to say more upon this point, because no question as to the abandonment of an intention to rebuild could arise in the present case, it having been found by the Court below that the new structure was put up shortly after the old one had been taken down for the purpose of being rebuilt.

The view I take receives some support from the case of Lord Auckland v. Westminster Local Board of Works [(1872) L. R., 7 Ch. App., 597].

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Schedule II, Article 121—Encroachment by a trespasser—Incumbrance—Adverse possession—Purchaser at sale of taluk for arrears of rent.

Adverse possession is an incumbrance within the meaning of article 121†, schedule II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877).

Description of suit	Period of limitation.	Time from which period begins to run.
To avoid incumbrances or under-tenures in an entire estate sold for arrears of Government revenue, or in a patni taluq or other saleable tenure sold for arrears of rent	Twelve years	When the sale becomes final and conclusive.]

situated within the taluk against a trespasser who [168] alleged to have held the disputed land adversely, the period of limitation would begin to run from the date when the sale becomes final and conclusive.

THE facts of the case and the arguments, for the purposes of this report, appear sufficiently from the judgments of the High Court.

Babu Sreenath Das, Dr. Rash Behary Ghosh, and Babu Saroda Prosonno Roy for the Appellants.

Sir Griffth Evans, Babu Lal Mohun Das, and Babu Kishori Lal Goswami for the Respondents.

Banerjee, J.—This was a suit to recover possession, together with mesne profits, of a tract of alluvial land, which is alleged to have re-formed on the original site of the plaintiffs' putni taluk Turuf Sagoona, a taluk which the plaintiffs have purchased at certain sales, some of which were held under Regulation VIII of 1819, and some in execution of decrees for arrears of rent. The defendant raised the plea of limitation, and various other objections not necessary to be noticed in detail for the purposes of this appeal.

The plaintiffs sought to get over the plea of limitation in two ways, first, by showing that as auction-purchasers of the putni taluk, or rather taluks, at sales in satisfaction of arrears of rent, they were entitled to reckon time from the dates of the auction sales which were all within twelve years before the date of the institution of the suit, and, secondly by showing that the disputed land became fit for cultivation within twelve years before the institution of this suit.

The Court below has held that the plaintiffs are not entitled to reckon limitation from the date of their auction purchase,— first, because they were not purchasers of the putni tenures free of all incumbrances within the meaning either of Regulation VIII of 1819 or of Bengal Act VIII of 1869, and, secondly, because even if they were entitled to claim the position of auction-purchasers of the putni taluks free from all incumbrances within the meaning of those enactments, their right, as such auction-purchasers, had become extinguished by reason of the arrange-[169]ment that they entered into with the zemindars under the ikrarnamas filed in this case, which had the effect of creating new putni tenures in their favour. It has further held that the plaintiffs failed to show that the disputed land became fit for cultivation within twelve years before the suit. And, accordingly, without going into the question of title, the Court below has dismissed the suit as barred by limitation.

Against that decision of the lower Court, the two plaintiffs preferred this appeal. At the hearing it was intimated to the Court that one of the two plaintiffs, Bipro Das Pal Chowdhry, had settled the case between himself and the defendant, and that the appeal, so far as he was concerned, should be dismissed, but without costs, the defendant (respondent) not pressing for his costs.

The appeal, therefore, proceeds at the instance of one of the two plaintiffs only, viz., Nuffer Chandra Pal Chowdhry, and it has been contended on his behalf that the Court below was wrong in holding that the plaintiff is not entitled to claim the benefit of the law relating to an auction-purchaser of a putni taluk for arrears of rent under article 121 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act, and to reckon limitation from the date of the auction sale, the several putni taluks purchased by the plaintiffs being distinct taluks though they relate to undivided shares in one turuf, and the ikrarnamahs referred to by the Court below not having the effect attributed to them.

On the other hand, it has been contended by the learned Counsel for the respondents, in the first place, that it is difficult to say that an encroachment by a trespasser is an incumbrance within article 121 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act, and that, in the second place, even if an encroachment by a trespasser can be treated as an incumbrance, the plaintiffs were not auction-purchasers of a putni taluk within the meaning of the article just referred to, as several of the sales at which the plaintiffs made their purchase were not of any of the putni mehals in their entirety as originally created, but of portions only of those putnis. And it was further contended that the ikrars had really the effect which has been attached to them by the Court below.

[170] Before dealing with the question of limitation, it becomes necessary, therefore, to consider how the facts stand. Turuf Sagoona was let out in putni under five different engagements, each relating to a different share; and the result was that there were the following five putnis created: One by Nocoor Moni Debi, comprising one-third of the zemindari; a second, by Bama Sundari Debi, comprising a one-sixth, a third by Tincowrie, comprising one-twelfth; a fourth by Annoda Prosad Banerjee, comprising a one-fourth; and the fifth and last by Kali Das Banerjee comprising the remaining one-sixth.

Of these five putnis, the three that appertained to the shares of Bama Sundari, Tincowri and Annoda and covered a moiety of the entire estate, were admittedly sold in their entirety. In regard to the remaining moiety belonging to Nocoor Moni and Kali Das, the sales at which the plaintiffs, or rather their predecessors, purchased were not in respect of the entire shares of one-third and one-sixth. The putni of the one-third share of Nocoor Moni had subsequently become sub-divided into two equal parts of one-sixth each, one of which was acquired by the plaintiffs at a sale under the putni Regulation VIII of 1819, and the other at a sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent under Bengal Act VIII of 1869. And the putni of the one-sixth share of Kali Das was sold at three sales under Regulation VIII of 1819, and purchased separately by the predecessors of the plaintiffs.

I should add here that, in regard to the putni of Tincowrie's one-twelfth share, a question was raised as to whether the plaintiffs had acquired any right to the same by the disclaimer of the son and heir of Ram Bux Chetlangi, the auction-purchaser, the disclaimer being of a date subsequent to the date of the institution of the suit. As the question raised is one that relates to the title of the plaintiffs, it should be left to the Court below to determine it after the remand which we propose to direct in this case.

This being the state of the facts, let us now see how the law is applicable to the case as it stands. If the plaintiffs can make out their position as auction-purchasers of a putni taluk at a sale [171] for arrears of rent, with a right to avoid incumbrances, it must, I think, upon the authorities, be held that they are entitled to reckon limitation from the date of their auction purchase, either under article 121 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act, adverse possession against the defaulting putnidar being regarded as an incumbrance, or under article 144, the possession of the defendant being regarded as becoming adverse to the plaintiffs only from the date of the auction-purchase.

Article 121 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act no doubt speaks of suits to avoid incumbrances or under-tenures in an entire estate sold for Government revenue, or in a putni taluk or other saleable tenure sold for arrears of rent; but it has been uniformly held in a series of cases in this Court that an encroachment by a trespasser comes within the meaning of an incumbrance, and that the cause of action for a suit by an auction-purchaser, at a sale for arrears of Government revenue or for arrears of rent, dates from the time of the auction purchase. The earliest of these cases that I shall refer to is the case of Lukhmeer Khan v. Collector of Rajshahye [S. D. A. (1851), 116]. That was, it is true, a case of an auction-purchaser of a zemindari at a sale for arrears of Government revenue; but the principle of the decision in that case applies equally to this.

The next case, and the most important one upon the present question, is that of Womesh Chunder Goopto v. Rajnarain Roy[5] [(1868) 10 W. R., 15]. That case was decided in 1868, and was the case of an auction-purchaser of an under-tenure suing to recover possession of land claimed to be part of the under-tenure, which had been encroached upon by a trespasser, and it was held by a Bench of three Judges of this Court that limitation ran from the date of the auction purchase. The reasons for the decision are fully set forth in the judgment of Sir BARNES PEACOCK. This case was followed in Khanto Moni Dasi v. Bijoy Chand Mohatab Bahadoor [(1892) I. L. R, 19 Cal., 787] in which a purchaser at a sale under Regulation VIII of 1819 was held to be unaffected by any adverse possession of land [172] appertaining to the putni mehal which had been encroached upon. And the same view was taken in the case of Karmi Khan v. Brojo Nath Das [(1895) I. L. R, 22 Cal, 244].

It is unnecessary for us to state at length the reasons for holding that the case should be governed by article 121, or in other words, that an encroachment by a trespasser should be regarded as an incumbrance, and that even if article 121 did not apply, and the case came under article 144, the possession of the defendant became adverse to the plaintiffs only from the date of the auction sale of the putni. The reasons in support of this view, as I have already observed, are fully set out in Sir BARNES PEACOCK'S judgment in Womesh Chunder Gupto v. Rajnarain Roy [(1868) 10 W R, 15], and we do not think that the grounds urged by the learned Counsel for the respondent are sufficient to justify our declining to follow the decisions cited above, which have uniformly held that limitation in such cases should be reckoned from the date of the auction purchase.

That being so, the next question is whether the plaintiffs are auction-purchasers of a putni taluk with the right to avoid incumbrances. So far as the putni taluks which were originally created by Bama Sundari, Tincowrie and Annoda are concerned, there can be no question that the plaintiffs are auction-purchasers with the right to avoid incumbrances The only question is whether they can be regarded as occupying the same position with regard to the putni taluks that were originally created by Nocoor Moni and Kali Das.

Now, in regard to the putni taluk that was originally created by Nocoor Moni, the plaintiff cannot claim the benefit of article 121, nor can they treat the possession of the defendant as having become adverse to them only from the date of the auction purchase because what was purchased at the two sales relating to that putni was in neither case an entire putni taluk, the sale in each case being that of a share in the putni taluk

As regards the putni that was originally created by Kali Das, although the sales at which the plaintiffs or their predecessors [173] purchased were three different sales, at which Kali Das's share of one-sixth was sold in three different shares, the learned Vakil for the appellant contended that the plaintiffs should be held to be purchasers of an entire putni taluk free of all incumbrances, because the three shares were all sold on one and the same day, and were purchased by one and the same person We do not think that the fact of the sale having been held on one and the same day and the purchaser having been one and the same person makes any difference

The sales were sales of the original putni in different shares and not in its entirety The purchaser at none of these three sales can therefore be considered to have purchased a putni taluk free of all incumbrances. That being so in our opinion the benefit of article 121, or the right to disregard adverse possession against the defaulting putnidar, can be claimed only so far as the eight annas share, made up of the shares of Bama Sundari, Tincowrie and Annoda, is concerned But as regards the remaining 8 annas, the suit must be held to be barred, unless the second ground is made out, viz., that the land became fit for cultivation within twelve years of suit

It remains now to consider the effect of the ikrarnamas referred to in the judgment of the Court below Though in certain respects the terms on which the putnis had been originally created were altered by these documents, we do not think that had the effect of extinguishing the right of the plaintiffs as auction-purchasers of the putni mehals to avoid incumbrances or to recover possession of lands belonging to the putnis which had been encroached upon.

The terms of the ikrarnamas which were most strongly relied upon by the learned Counsel for the respondents as having the effect of extinguishing the rights under the original putni, are those relating to the abatement of rent, and to the condition that the lands reformed on the original site of the old putni, upon being recovered, should have a new rent assessed upon them , but although that is so, the ikrarnamas contain a further condition that the auction-purchasers should institute [174] suits to recover possession of these lands which had been encroached upon, and that if they neglected to institute such suits, the condition relating to the abatement of rent should be cancelled. The terms of the ikrar, considered as a whole, do not, therefore, in our opinion, affect the right of the auction-purchasers to avoid incumbrances or recover possession of lands reformed on the original site

As to the second ground upon which the plaintiffs in the Court below sought to get over the plea of limitation, viz , that the lands reformed or became culturable within twelve years of suit, the learned Vakil for the appellants has very properly exercised his discretion in not going into the evidence in detail, as he thought he was not likely to be able to induce us to arrive at a conclusion different from that come to by the Court below

The result then is, that as regards an eight-anna share of the entire mehal, Turuf Sagoona, the suit must be held not to be barred by limitation But, then a new issue arises for determination by reason of the withdrawal of one of the plaintiffs from the suit, the share of that plaintiff not being admitted. The Court below must therefore determine what the share of Nuffer Chandra Pal Chowdhry is in putni mehal Turuf Sagoona, and then, if he succeeds in establishing his title to the lands in dispute, he will be entitled to recover possession to the extent of one-half of the share which he has in the putni mehal, his claim in respect of the other half being barred by limitation. The case will, therefore, go back to the Court below for the determination of the other issues raised in it, together with the additional issues indicated above, as to the extent of the share of Nuffer Chandra Pal Chowdhry, and also as to whether the plaintiff has acquired the interest of Rambux Chetlangi.

Maclean, C.J.—I agree with the view expressed by Mr Justice BANERJEE, and I have but little to add

Practically the only question we are asked to decide is, whether the suit is barred by the Statute of Limitations. We must take it in the face of the decision in the case of Womesh Chunder Goopto v. Rajnarain Roy [(1868) 10 W R, 15] which is now nearly thirty [175] years old, and which has been since followed by other decisions of this Court, that the period of limitation in a case such as the present only begins to run from the date of the sale becoming final and conclusive. That being so, the plaintiff's suit is not barred by the Statute. This view, however, only applies to the auction-purchases by the plaintiff or his predecessors in title of the putni tenures, which were sold in their entireties.

It will have to be ascertained what the interest of the now sole appealing plaintiff really is.

With reference to the ikrarnamas, I cannot regard the effect of those documents as putting an end to the putni tenures. They modify some of its provisions, but proceed upon the footing of its continuance. This seems to me pretty plain when one reads the documents. If so, the plaintiffs, as the auction-purchasers of the putni tenures, are still entitled to avoid the incumbrance on the tenure.

With this intimation of our opinion upon the point of the Statute of Limitations, the case must go back to the Court below to ascertain what the precise interest of the present appellant now is, and to try out any other issues of fact which have to be tried.

PRESENT:

SIR FRANCIS WILLIAM MACLEAN, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Doyamoyi Dasi........Judgment-debtor No. 5

versus

Sarat Chunder Mojumdar and others ....Decree-holders.*

Second appeal—Order refusing to confirm a sale—Subsisting decree—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), sections 588, 316, 244.

A second appeal lies to the High Court against an order passed by a Judge refusing to confirm a sale, on the ground that there was no subsisting decree at the date when the confirmation of the sale was applied for, the order being not one provided for by section 588 of the Code of Civil Procedure, [176] and the question raised in the case being a question relating to the execution or satisfaction of the decree within the meaning of section 244 of the Code.

Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kalidas Sanyal [(1892) I L. R, 19 Cal, 683: L R., 19 I. A., 166] referred to.

THE facts of the case are shortly those: One Koilash Chunder Bose obtained an ex parte decree against one Doyamoyi Dasi and others on the 26th July 1893. One of the judgment-debtors (Doyamoyi Dasi) on the 17th December 1894 applied for a rehearing, and on the 12th January 1895 the application was granted, and the ex parte decree was set aside. Under the ex parte decree a certain property of the judgment-debtors was sold, and was purchased by a third party. The auction-purchaser applied to have the sale confirmed. The judgment-debtors as well as the decree-holder were made parties to the application. The judgment-debtors objected to the confirmation of the sale on the ground that as on the date when the application was made there was no subsisting decree, the sale could not be confirmed. The Munsif refused to confirm the sale and rejected the application of the auction-purchaser. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge set aside the decision of the first Court, and confirmed the sale. From this decision the judgment-debtor No. 5 appealed to the High Court.

* Appeal from order No. 155 of 1896, against the order passed by Babu Debendra Lal Shome, Subordinate Judge of Backergunge, dated the 10th of December 1895, reversing the order of Babu Kalipada Mookerjee, Munsif of Patuakhally, dated the 16th of March 1895.

Babu Lal Mohun Das for the Appellants.

Babu Jyoti Prosad Sarvadhicary for the Respondents.

Babu Jyoti Prosad Sarvadhicary took a preliminary objection to the hearing of the appeal, on the ground that no second appeal lay to the High Court.

Babu Lal Mohun Das for the appellant contended that the question raised in the case being a question relating to the execution or satisfaction of the decree within the meaning of section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, a second appeal would lie to the High Court, and he referred to the case of Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal [(1892) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 683: L. R., 19 I. A., 166]. As to the merits he contended that though the ex parte decree was set aside at the instance of one of the judgment-debtors, the whole decree was set aside, and therefore no [177] decree was subsisting at the date when application for confirmation of the sale was made, and the sale could not be confirmed.

Babu Jyoti Prosad Sarvadhicary contended that the decree being set aside at the instance of one of the judgment-debtors only, the effect of it was that there was a subsisting decree, and the sale ought to have been confirmed.

Maclean, C.J.—I think that a second appeal lies in this case upon the short ground that the question to be decided is a question between the parties to the suit relating to the execution of the decree and possibly to the satisfaction of the decree within the meaning of section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure. I arrive at this conclusion upon the ground that a sale has been ordered, the sale has been effected, and effected for the purpose of satisfying the decree. If the sale be held to be bad, that is a question which affects the decree-holder, and affects the judgment-debtor, both of whom are parties to the suit. This is a question between the parties to the suit, and the person claiming here is the judgment-debtor; the decree-holder is made a party to the appeal and also the auction-purchaser. The case, therefore, is within section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and seems to me to come within the principle laid down by the Privy Council in the case of Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal [(1892) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 683: L. R., 19 I. A., 166]. It is conceded that if the case be within section 244 a second appeal will lie.

Then as to the merits. The Judge in the Court below proceeded upon the ground that there was a decree, a subsisting decree, in a suit for rent. It was admittedly an ex parte decree. Under that ex parte decree the property was put up for sale, and sold, but one of the parties against whom the exparte decree had been made was successful in inducing the Court to discharge that decree under section 108 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the effect of which was, according to a recent decision of this Court - Mahomed Hamidulla v. Tohurennissa Bibi (Ante, p. 155)—to [178] discharge the decree, not only in favour of the particular applicant, but as against all the defendants to the suit in which the decree was made. Therefore, when the ex parte decree was discharged, no decree in the suit remained. There was no decree existing in the suit, and if there were no decree, it is difficult, to my mind, to see how there could be any sale which could be confirmed when the decree under which it was made had ceased to exist; when the decree was discharged, the sale which purported to be made under that decree fell to the ground. The point arises upon an application to the Munsif to confirm the sale, which he refused to do, upon the ground that he should not confirm a sale under a decree which was not subsisting. The latter words of section 316 of the Code of Civil Procedure tend to show that the sale cannot be confirmed, if the decree under which it was effected has ceased to exist. In my opinion, the Munsif was right and the Subordinate Judge was wrong, and this appeal must be allowed with costs.

Banerjee, J.—I am of the same opinion. Upon the question whether or not a second appeal lies to this Court, I think it will be enough to say that this is not a case provided for by section 588 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the order complained of not being one of those that that section contemplates. The order here was an order refusing to confirm a sale, on the ground that the decree, in execution of which the sale took place, was not subsisting at the date when the confirmation of the sale was applied for. Then, I think, the question that was raised in this case may fairly be considered to be a question relating to the execution or satisfaction of the decree within the meaning of section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Having regard to the observations made by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal, (1892) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 683: L. R., 19 I. A., 166. I think that the order complained of comes under section 244, and is therefore a decree as defined by section 2 of the Code; and so a second appeal lies.

Then upon the merits, the appellant contends that the Munsif was right in refusing to confirm the sale, while for the respondent it is said that there is no express provision in the Code directing [179] the Court not to confirm a sale when, at the date when such confirmation is applied for, the decree in execution of which the sale took place, ceases to be a subsisting decree. But the provisions of section 316 of the Code go to show that the Court ought not to confirm a sale, when at the time such confirmation is asked for, the decree had ceased to be a subsisting decree. In the present case, the decree, which was an ex parte decree, had been set aside by an order under section 108 of the Code. That being so, and there being no subsisting decree, the first Court was quite right in refusing to confirm the sale; and the Court of Appeal below was wrong in holding that the first Court was bound to confirm it.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

The 14th and 18th May, and 3rd July, 1897.

PRESENT:

LORDS HOBHOUSE AND MACNAGHTEN, AND SIR R. COUCH.

Moti Lal............Defendant

versus

Karrabuldin and others............Plaintiffs.

[On appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh.]

Sale in execution of decree—Rights of Purchasers—Two judicial sales of the same property, each in execution of a separate decree—Conflicting claims thereunder—Purchase, pendente lite.

The same property having been sold in execution of two different decrees, the result was that the two purchasers at the respective sales afterwards contested title to the property. The sale to the first purchaser was confirmed in November 1882 The sale to the second, who upon it obtained possession, took place in October 1884, the property having been attached under the second decree in March 1883. The first purchaser on the 29th July 1884 brought a suit, to which the second purchaser was not a party, to have that attachment declared invalid. By a decree of the 14th November to that effect the second purchaser was bound as a purchaser, pendente lite, and his possession was of no avail to him.

Held, that the attachment of March 1883, although it had preceded the institution of the first purchaser's suit of 1884, afforded no support to the second purchaser's claim, attachment under chapter XIX of the Civil Procedure Code merely preventing alienation, and not giving title.

Moreover, after the first sale in 1882 there had been no interest left to be sold to another purchaser, so that, without there having been the decree [180] of 1885, the second purchaser would still have had no title against the first There was no occasion for the setting aside the second sale within the meaning of articles 12 and 13 of schedule II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), nor was it set aside That sale was held not to affect the right of the first purchaser, there being a wide difference between setting aside a sale and deciding that a plaintiff's right was not affected by it.

APPEAL from a decree (26th May 1891) of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, reversing a decree (24th March 1890) of the District Judge of Lucknow.

The suit, out of which this appeal arose, was brought on the 29th June 1889 by the late Nawab Mulka Mukhaddara Usma Badshah Mahal Sahiba, the ex-Queen of Oudh, who died on the 3rd April 1894, and who was now represented by her grandson Mirza Karrab-ul-Din, her daughter Dilhand Begum, and her executor the Administrator-General of Bengal.

The issues, and this appeal, raised the question,—which of two purchasers who had each purchased at a separate judicial sale, was entitled to the proprietary possession of village Para Kuru in the Barabanki District The purchaser at an execution sale, in whose right the plaintiff, and, after her death, her representatives now respondents, claimed this property, was one Hakim Mahomed Masih, the ex-Queen's judgment-debtor, by a money decree, whose estate she had after his purchases caused to be attached in execution. The rival purchaser was Moti Lal, now appellant, who had purchased the same village at a sale in execution of another decree, that sale having taken place after the one at which Masih had bought.

On the 2nd November 1880, Mussamat Sahib-un-Nissa obtained a money decree against Ashgar Ali, who was the original owner and mortgagor of village Para. The subsequent charges and decrees, which affected that village, are mentioned in their Lordships' judgment, with all the other facts necessary to be known in this case. In satisfaction of Sahib-un-Nissa's decree, village Para was sold on the 21st August 1882, for Rs. 18,600 to the above mentioned Masih, on whose title, thus obtained, rested the claim of the present respondents. Masih obtained an order under section 318 of the Civil Procedure Code. But the proceedings of the second purchaser of Para interfered with him at this point.

[181] On the 3rd March, Para was attached in execution of a decree held by the heirs of Agha Hossein Khan, mortgagee, under one of the incumbrances above referred to; and Masih on the 21st July 1884 brought his suit against them to have it declared that the village was not subject to the attachment so obtained. While Masih's suit was pending, the heirs of Agha Hossein obtained, under the attachment of March 1883, an order for the sale of the village; and it was sold, on the 22nd October 1884, for Rs. 2,400, to the defendant Moti Lal, now appellant, who obtained possession. Masih's suit was dismissed in the Court of First Instance, but, on appeal, his heirs, he having died, obtained a decree, made by the Judicial Commissioner on the 4th November 1885, declaring the validity of the sale of the 21st August 1882 to Masih.

The prayer of the plaint in the present suit was for a declaration that the sale of the 22nd October 1884 was invalid as against Masih, and his heirs, through whom the plaintiff made title; also for a declaration that the possession held by the defendant Moti Lal was illegal; also, for a declaration that according to the decision of the 4th November 1885, between Masih, on the one side, and the heirs of Agha Hossein on the other, the village Para was the property of Masih; and that it was liable to attachment and sale in execution of the decree held by the plaintiff in this suit, in which execution the village had been attached on the 28th December, 1887, as such property.

Defences, amongst others, were that the property could not be claimed by the plaintiff upon Masih's title, as the sale of it to Moti Lal on the 22nd October 1884 had never been set aside, and could not by this suit be set aside with regard to the law of limitation; and that in effect the suit was barred by articles 12 and 13 of schedule II of the Limitation Act XV of 1877.

The District Judge upheld this defence, and dismissed the suit.

The Judicial Commissioner, with the Additional Judicial Commissioner, heard an appeal which was preferred by the representatives of the plaintiff from the decree of the District Judge, whose decision they reversed. They granted the decree claimed. In their judgment the suit was not barred by limitation, but was maintainable, without there having been any necessity for any [182] order, or any decree, setting aside the sale to Moti Lal. The main reason for this was that nothing had passed to him as a purchaser at that sale. In their opinion also (both of them delivering separate judgments on these points) the Judicial Commissioner's decree of the 4th November 1885, with regard to the date of the second sale, after the commencement of the suit in which that decree was made, was binding upon Moti Lal as a purchaser pendente lite. The principle was applicable here that a purchaser of the property contended for in a suit pending at the time of his purchase should not be free from the effect of the decision.

Kashibai, (1886) I. L. R., 10 Bom., 400; Janki Das v. Badrinath, (1880) I. L. R., 2 All., 698; Gobind Chunder Roy v. Guru Charan Kurmokar, (1887) I. L. R, 15 Cal., 94; and Saroda Churn Chuckerbutty v. Mahomed Isuf Meah, (1885) I. L. R., 11 Cal., 376.

On this appeal by the representatives of the plaintiff,—

Mr. J. H. A. Branson, for the Appellant, argued that the purchase by Moti Lal on the 22nd October 1884 ought to have been held in the Court below to have carried the title to the purchaser. Masih's title was already not enforceable when the plaintiff in this suit attached the village as his property on the 28th December 1897. This was so in virtue of article 13 of the schedule II of Act XV of 1877, no suit having been brought to set aside the sale of the above date within one year. It had been decided below that, as a purchaser pendente lite, Moti Lal had been bound by the decree of 1885 in Masih's favour. But the distinction between voluntary alienation pendente lite and involuntary alienation, or transfer in due course of law, during the pendency of a suit, should be observed. He referred to the judgment in Sedgwick v. Clerland (1838) 7 Paige, New York Ch. Rep, 287, and to Turner v. Wight, (1841) 4 Beav., 40; [183] Story's Eq. Pleading, Chap. VII, para. 351; Mitford on Pleading by Jeremy, 73. But, even if it should be considered that the appellant's right was affected by the decree of the 4th November 1885, notwithstanding that he had not been made a party to it, still the appellant could rely on the attachment of March 1883, which was anterior to the commencement of Masih's suit in July 1884. Regarding articles 12 and 13, sched. II, Act XV of 1877, reference was made to Sadagopa v. Jamuna Bhai Ammal, (1882) I. L R., 5 Mad., 54; Mahomed Hossein v. Purundur Mahto, (1885) I. L. R., 11 Cal. 287. As to a suit to establish a right being distinct from a suit to set aside a sale, Ayyasami v. Samiya, (1884) I. L. R., 8 Mad., 82, and Shivaji Yesji Chavan v. The Collector of Ratnagiri, (1886) I. L R, 11 Bom, 429, were referred to. Regarding limitation generally in a suit by a purchaser at an execution sale—Anundo Moyee Dossee v. Dhonendro Chunder Mookerjee, (1871) 14 Moo., I A., 101 : 8 B. L. R., 122. As to attachment—Kishory Mohun Roy v. Mahomed Mujaffar Hossein, (1890) I. L R., 18 Cal., 188.

Mr. J. D. Mayne, and Mr. A. Phillips for the Administrator-General, Respondent, were not called upon.

Afterwards, on 3rd July, their Lordships' judgment was delivered by Lord Hobhouse.—The plaintiff in this cause, now dead and represented by the respondents in the appeal, was formerly Queen of Oudh; and she sued to assert her right to a village in Oudh called Para Kuru. The Court of the Judicial Commissioner has maintained her suit, reversing the decision of the District Judge who dismissed it. The village has been the subject of almost incessant litigation, and of numerous judicial orders, during some twenty years, and its legal history is very complicated. But though it has been necessary to examine all the previous proceedings in order to ascertain the true effect of the orders and transactions which now govern the case, it will be sufficient for this judgment to touch only on a few of them.

In the year 1870 a Mahomedan gentleman named Asghar, being then the sole recorded proprietor of the village, mortgaged [184] it to one who in this discussion has been called Agha. Asghar afterwards granted the village by way of gift to his nephews Yusuf and Nasim, who again mortgaged it to Agha.

In the year 1879 one Sahib-un-Nissa filed a plaint against Agha and Yusuf, claiming to be a creditor of Asghar and to have a charge on the village for her debt: and on the 22nd of November 1880 she obtained a decree to that effect. Under that decree a sale took place, at which Hakim Mahomed Masih purchased the right and interest of the judgment-debtor, who according to the heading of the sale-certificate was Asghar. Nasim was not made a party to the suit. This sale was effected on the 24th August and was confirmed on the 14th November 1882. On it the plaintiff founds her claim. Her right to recover the village if it was, and remained, the property of Masih, is not disputed. What the defendant contends is that Masih's title was destroyed by events subsequent to 1882.

On the 20th March 1883 Agha obtained a decree against Yusuf and Nasim on the mortgage effected by them; and he went on to enforce execution. On the 19th June 1883 Masih put in a claim which, being disallowed in execution, he had to enforce by suit Accordingly on the 28th July 1884 he instituted a suit against the heirs of Agha who was dead, and against Yusuf and Nasim. He prayed for a decree in these terms:—

"That a decree entitling and declaring the proprietary right of the plaintiff to the village Para Kuru ' ' ' be granted to the plaintiff to the effect that the village aforesaid is not liable to attachment and sale in the decree of Agha Haidar Husain deceased, dated the 20th March 1883, as the property of defendants Nos. 4 and 5, and that the defendants be made to pay the plaintiff's costs."

On the 4th November 1885 the Judicial Commissioner made an order by which a decree of the District Judge was reversed, and the plaintiff's appeal and original claim were decreed. Masih was then dead, but the suit had been continued by his heirs.

In the meantime the heirs of Agha had prosecuted their proceedings in execution of his decree of 20th March 1883. On the 22nd October 1884 the village was put up for sale, and was purchased by the defendant Moti, who either was then in [186] possession or obtained it afterwards. It is contended by the defendant that this sale must be set aside before the plaintiff's right can be established.

It may be as well here to dispose of a very extraordinary contention set up for the defendant. He bought whatever interest belonged to the heirs of Agha who were mortgagees, and to Yusuf and Nasim who were mortgagors. But three months before he bought, Masih had instituted his suit against those very persons to establish his title against them, and it was established by the decree of November 1885. Is it possible for the defendant to allege that, as against Masih or his heirs, the heirs of Agha or Yusuf or Nasim had any interest to convey to him? The District Judge holds that the defendant is free from the decree because he was no party to the suit, and because the transfer to him was made prior to the decree. If that were law, it is difficult to see in what cases a pending suit would be any protection; and Mr Branson very properly declined to argue in support of that view. But then he could not assign any reason for avoiding the force of the decree except that Agha's attachment was prior to Masih's suit. Attachment, however, only prevents alienation, it does not confer title; and even if it did, the interest so acquired would be that of Agha or his heirs, who were defendants in Masih's suit. It is too clear for argument that the decree of November 1885 binds the interests of Agha, Yusuf and Nasim, and of all persons claiming under them by transfer subsequent to the 28th July 1884.

After Masih's death litigation broke out among his heirs, and an order in execution proceedings was made for placing one of them named Amina in possession of one-third of the village. Under colour of that order she disturbed the possession of Moti, and he applied in the execution proceedings to protect it. The District Judge by order, dated 1st November 1886, allowed Moti's application, saying that the decree of 1885 was not binding on Moti "at any rate in the present execution proceedings in a suit between heirs." His language, though elliptical, points to a sound ground for his decision. It was obviously irregular and illegal for Amina to use an order made as between her and her co-heirs, for the purpose of dispossessing one who was a stranger to Masih's [186] estate and to the litigation between his heirs. The decree of 1885 had nothing to do with the matter.

The cause was heard first before the District Judge who decided adversely to the plaintiff. First he held that the suit is one to set aside the order of November 1886, and that so it falls within article 13 of the Limitation Act and, not being brought within a year of the order is barred by time. But the suit does not pray, and the plaintiff need not pray, any relief of that sort. The order remains wholly unaffected. It was quite right to hold in November 1885 that Amina had wrongfully disturbed Moti's possession; but the right of Masih or of anybody claiming under him to bring a suit within any time allowed by law for suits to recover property was quite unaffected by that.

Then the learned Judge holds that the suit is barred by article 12 of the Limitation Act, because it is, or ought to be, one to set aside the sale of 22nd October 1884. But the suit is founded on the fact that prior to that sale a valid sale of the same interests had been made to Masih, and that Moti took nothing because nothing was left to pass to him. The sale is not set aside, but is found not to affect the rights of the plaintiff derived from Masih. The sale does not purport to pass the rights of Masih or of the plaintiff, but those of the mortgagee Agha and the mortgagors Yusuf and Nasim, against whom Masih established his prior rights. Between setting aside a sale and holding that the plaintiff's rights are not affected by it, there is a wide difference.

The Judicial Commissioner and Assistant Judicial Commissioner have concurred in holding the District Judge's views to be erroneous, and as their Lordships are of the same opinion they will humbly advise Her Majesty to dismiss the appeal. The appellant must pay the costs of the Administrator-General of Bengal who defended this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Privy Council, Practice of—Cause of respondents—Printed cases—Ex-parte hearing.

The respondents in four appeals, which were consolidated and heard as one, filed their printed case, and did not appear at the hearing, which was ex-parte.

Held, that the respondents, notwithstanding their non-appearance, were, on the dismissal of the appeal, entitled to the costs thereof up to, and including the filing of their printed case; and also to the cost of applying for those costs.

FOUR consolidated appeals from four decrees (13th September 1890) of the High Court, affirming four decrees (31st December 1887) of the Subordinate Judge of Cuttack.

The questions arising in all the four suits were identical, and in the order of the High Court admitting the last three appeals it was recorded that the plaintiff (appellant) undertook that the decision of them would depend upon the orders passed in the first appeal.

The suits were filed by the same appellant, on dates from 1886 to 1891, to establish his right to the possession of the estate of Bonomali Mahapatra, who died in 1863, the husband of Srimati Surjamoni Dei. Litigation after his death as to that estate took place, and a suit was dismissed, which is reported in L. R. I. A. Sup. Vol. 212, and 12 B. L. R., 205.

In these suits the allegation was that Bonomali, on the day of his death, gave an oral authority to Surjamoni to adopt a son, and that she adopted Sumbhu Nath; but that she afterwards without right made sales of the family estate. The respondents in the last three suits were alleged purchasers of portions.

The three principal issues, relating to the authority to adopt, and the fact of adoption, were treated by the Courts below as questions of fact, and they concurred in holding that the affirmative had not been proved in any one of them.

[188] On this appeal, which was heard ex parte, Mr. C. W. Arathoon appeared for the Appellant.

The respondents had filed their printed case, which, among other defences, submitted that there was nothing to take the appeal out of the ordinary rule as to the effect of concurrent judgments on questions of fact, and referred to section 596 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The appeals were dismissed.

Afterwards, Mr. Herbert Cowell, for the Respondents, applied, on notice to the appellant, that the costs of the printed case should be borne by the appellants. He cited O'Shanassy v. Joackim, (1876) L. R., 1 App. Ca. (H. L.) 82 (90).

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by Lord Morris.—In this case appeals have been lodged on the part of the appellants although there have been concurrent findings of two Courts in India, the District Court and the High Court, on matters of fact. There were three questions submitted. First whether the widow Srimati Surjamoni Dei was the donee of a power of appointment by her husband, Bonomali Mahapatra, to adopt a son; second whether she had adopted a son (that of course was on the assumption that she had a power to adopt, for it must have been a valid appointment); and, thirdly, whether she had treated the appellant as her adopted son. Both Courts have found there was no power of adoption granted by her husband. The alleged power to adopt was said to have been given orally, and the witnesses were examined in support of that allegation, but they were not believed, and consequently it must be taken that the widow had no power. The contentions Nos. 2 and 3 of themselves can give no estate to the appellant, because if this lady had no power to adopt she could not validly adopt. As to the further contention attempted to be raised namely, that by the lady having treated the appellant for a great many years as an adopted son she is, as it is alleged, estopped from disputing that he is her adopted son and that she had a valid power of adoption—whatever value it may have as regards the question whether she did adopt as a matter of fact, it is no [189] evidence at all to show that she had been entrusted by her husband with a power of adoption; that depended on evidence entirely outside the question of her acts. Otherwise any widow could, by a system of treating an alleged adopted son as such, validate a transaction which she had no power of entering into.

Now at the bar it has been urged that the widow has treated Sumbhu Nath Santra in such a manner that she should be considered during her life to have placed him in her own position as the owner of this property. Supposing it would be so considered (upon which they refrain from giving any opinion) there has been no such allegation made in the plaint. There is no such question indicated either before the District Judge or in the Court of Appeal and therefore the question cannot be raised here.

Their Lordships must therefore humbly advise Her Majesty that these appeals should be dismissed with the costs of the respondent Srimati Surjamoni Dei up to and including the lodgment of the case, and the appearance of Mr. Cowell on this occasion to ask for those costs.

Appeals dismissed.

PRESENT:

LORDS HOBHOUSE, MACNAGHTEN AND MORRIS, AND SIR R. COUCH.

Dharam Chand Lal............Plaintiff

versus

Bhawani Misrain and another............Defendants.

[On appeal from the High Court at Fort William in Bengal.]

Privy Council, Practice of—Concurrent judgments on fact—Hindu Law—Alienation by one of two co-widows—Want of legal necessity.

Two widows of the same husband, each having inherited her undivided share in the inheritance, disputed as to their rights therein. They then settled their dispute by a compromise, in which it was agreed that each had obtained "absolute proprietary right" in her share as a co-widow, and that division had been made between them. Having no power by this to affect the rights of the successor to the estate, on their deaths, each was entitled to her share for her widow's estate only. Upon a mortgage made by the elder widow before her death, the mortgagee now claimed, not only the interests of [190] both the widows, and thus to deprive the younger who had survived the other, of her interest during her life, but also claimed a charge on the estate of inheritance in the land mortgaged.

Against the competency of the elder widow to charge the estate of both and to bind the reversioner, both Courts below had decided. They had found that there had been no justifying necessity established by the evidence for the mortgage.

These concurrent findings having been accepted by the Judicial Committee as correct in regard to the absence of necessity for the mortgage, they saw no occasion to say anything about any other questions, as to the competency of the elder widow to mortgage the whole estate in the way in which she did.

APPEAL from a decree (13th June 1893) of the High Court, affirming a decree (26th November 1891) of the District Judge of Purneah.

The appellant, a mahajan in Purneah, brought this suit on the 13th April 1891 against Keswanand Misser, executor under the will of Mussamat Saraswati Misrain, who died in 1890. A co-defendant with this executor was Bhawani Misrain, co-widow with Saraswati, of their late husband Sobh Nath Misser, who died in 1870. Keswanand did not appear in this suit, which was defended by Bhawani alone; and she was now sole respondent. After the death of Sobh Nath, who left land in Purneah chiefly held in putni tenure, the two widows, disputing as to their rights, were litigants as to whether Saraswati had once borne to her husband a son, who lived but a short time, or not. In the former case, as heir to her son, Saraswati would have taken a life-estate in the whole of her husband's property. In the latter case, which was decided upon by decree on a compromise between them, the widows took shares in the family estate. This was agreed to, while the suit between them was pending in the High Court, which made a decree, in accordance with the terms arranged between the parties, on the 2nd May 1871, Saraswati taking a ten-anna and Bhawani a six-anna share. Each in her share, as far as their agreement could declare, was to have complete proprietary right. Their agreement on this point is set forth in their Lordships' judgment, where all the facts appear.

On the 12th May 1884, Saraswati executed, and presented for registration by her nephew and agent Bansi Lal Jha, a mortgage [191] bond, securing repayment of Rs. 7,000 to Dharam Chand Lal in one year with interest at 12 per cent. mortgaging specified lands of the estate. Again, on the 6th May 1885, she executed a similar mortgage to him for Rs. 4,000. These in identical terms recited the necessity of paying off, out of the money so to be raised, the rent of putni mehals for the second period of the Bengali year 1291, and to pay off debts due to mahajans at higher rates of interest.

Saraswati, who died in 1890, had made a will appointing Keswanand Misser her executor. After her death there was a contest between Bhawani Misrain, who, as surviving widow, claimed administration of the share that had belonged to Saraswati, and Keswanand, who claimed it under the will, as part of the estate of Saraswati. This was decided in the District Court of Purneah in a suit brought by Bhawani against Keswanand, which ended in a decree in Bhawani's favour, dated the 25th April 1891. It was decreed that Bhawani was entitled by right of survivorship to succeed to what might be left of the estate that had devolved from their husband Sobh Nath in Saraswati's possession at her death, his property having been inherited by the two widows for their lives. It was also decreed that Bhawani was entitled to a grant of administration of the property left by Saraswati.

In 1891 the plaintiff brought the present suit against Keswanand and Bhawani to enforce his claim for Rs. 22,748, against the property which Saraswati had purported to mortgage. Bhawani Misrain, who alone appeared, filed a written statement, in which she alleged, among other defences, that there were no circumstances of necessity to justify Saraswati's mortgages of her deceased husband's estate.

The issues are stated in the judgment on this appeal.

The District Judge dismissed the suit. He rested his judgment on three grounds: First, that the mere existence of a debt would not justify a loan binding the reversionary estate, without evidence of a necessity properly justifying it, or of inquiries made, and representations offered, in which such a case had been put forward and believed. Secondly, that the terms of the bonds did not indicate any intention by Saraswati to pledge any estate beyond her own Thirdly, that no act by one widow, with-[192]out the consent of the other, could defeat the survivorship of that other.

On the appeal of Dharam Chand Lal against this decree, the High Court (O'KINEALY and AMEER ALI, JJ.) affirmed the judgment of the Court below, finding as a fact, in concurrence with that Court, that there had been no evidence of any legal necessity, nor of any inquiries by the plaintiff as to the existence of such necessity for the loan.

Dharam Chand Lal appealed.

Mr. A. Phillips and Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the appellant, contended that the evidence showed that in advancing the mortgage money the mortgagee had, on reasonable grounds, given credit to the assertion that the money was wanted by the widow Saraswati for one of the recognised necessities, justifying a mortgage by a widow, which therefore became binding on the whole estate mortgaged. The estate of Bhawani for her life was chargeable in respect of any sums that might be found to have been used, after having been raised on Saraswati's mortgages, for paying off rent due on her share of the putni tenures, and joint liabilities having been satisfied, the life-estate of Bhawani Misrain was chargeable.

At the conclusion of the argument for the appellant, their Lordships, without calling on Mr. J. D. Mayne, who appeared for the respondent Bhawani Misrain, affirmed the judgment of the High Court.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by Sir R. Couch.—The facts in this case are that one Sobh Nath Misser died about twenty years ago—the precise date of his death does not appear—and left two widows, one Saraswati Misrain and the other Bhawani Misrain. After his death disputes arose between the widows as to their rights, and a compromise was come to, the terms of which are stated in a previous judgment which is set out in the proceedings and which seems to have been taken admittedly as correct. The statement is this: "And in respect of our respective shares each party has obtained absolute proprietary right of every sort and division has been made and will be made as below, and, except in respect of the matter noted [193] below, neither party has any claim against any other." This compromise could only apply to the shares to which the two widows were entitled as widows. They had no power, by a compromise between themselves, to affect the rights of the successor to the estate on their death, and so far under the compromise they simply were entitled to their shares as for what is called the widows' estate.

Saraswati died in 1890, and the suit is brought against her executor and the surviving widow Bhawani upon two mortgage bonds amounting together to Rs. 11,000, but the amount now claimed, including the arrears of interest, being Rs. 22,748. The prayer of the plaint is that an order may be given that if the defendants do not pay within a certain time, the properties mortgaged and pledged in the bonds may be sold, seeking to charge, not only the interest of the widows who made these mortgages, but the whole estate, and to affect the right of the persons who on the death of the surviving widow would be entitled to the estate, and also to deprive Bhawani, the surviving widow, of her interest during her life.

The issues were framed raising expressly the two important questions in the case. The first was whether the bonds were duly executed, as to which there was no question. The second and third raised the real questions: "Do the bonds, by reason of legal necessity or other cause, bind the estate of the late Sobh Nath Misser, or only the personal estate of the executant? Is Mussamat Bhawani Misrain liable for the claim, and to what extent?" Upon these issues the District Judge found very expressly. He says: "Here plaintiff fails to show that there was any real necessity for the advances or that any one told him that there was such real necessity, and that the tenures could not be saved without the loans" Upon that finding he dismissed the suit as against Bhawani and made a decree against the executor of Saraswati, and if Saraswati left any property it may be available to pay the claim of the plaintiff.

From that decree there was an appeal to the High Court, and in their judgment, after saying that it had been urged that legal necessity had been fully established, from which it is plain [194] the learned Judges had that present to their minds, they say: "There is nothing to show that at the time these sums were borrowed there was no money in the coffer or what had become of the large amount Saraswati had admittedly received upon the death of their husband." Then they go on to consider the question whether an inquiry had been made by the plaintiff, and they find that he did not make the inquiry which it was necessary for him to make in order to establish his right to recover the money in case there had been in fact no necessity. Both questions are distinctly found by the High Court against the plaintiff, and the decree of the District Judge dismissing the suit is affirmed.

That disposes of the whole of the questions in the case. It is unnecessary to say anything about any other question that might arise with regard to the competency of Saraswati to mortgage the whole of the property in the way in which she did. The case is clearly one in which upon the material questions of fact both Courts concur in finding against the plaintiff and very properly dismiss the suit.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise Her Majesty to dismiss the appeal, and the appellant will pay the costs of it.

Appeal dismissed.

[On appeal from the High Court at Fort William in Bengal.]

Land Acquisition Act (X of 1870), sections 13, 24, and 25—Valuation of land acquired for public purposes—Time of acquisition—Award of compensation.

When land has been acquired, under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, 1870, changes in its condition, between the time of such acquirement and that of the actual conclusion of the award of compensation, are not to increase, or lessen, the valuation.

[195] The provision in section 25 points to ascertaining the value at the time when the land is acquired, the right to compensation being simultaneous with the right to the land attaching to the Government.

At the time when, according to the claim, the right to certain plots of land attached to the Government, the sub-soil had no market value, because the surface was in use for public roads, having been so for about half a century.

Held, that, even if the claimants had proved a title in themselves to the sub-soil of the plots underneath the roads, still no market value had been shown to belong to that sub-soil within the meaning of sections 13 and 24 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1870, at the time of the right therein attaching to the Government for a public purpose: therefore, compensation had been rightly disallowed.

APPEAL from a decree (8th May 1895) of the High Court, reversing a decree (22nd March 1893) of the First Subordinate Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs.

This suit was brought by the plaintiffs, appellants, upon the refusal by the Commissioner to order compensation to them for four plots of land acquired by the Government under the Land Acquisition Act, 1870, in 1886, for part of the area occupied for the docks at Kidderpore. The defendants, respondents, were: (1) the Government, under their statutory title, and (2) the Commissioners for making improvements in the Port of Calcutta. The plots aggregating 19 bigahs, 9 cottahs, and 3 chittacks, were alleged by the plaintiffs to have originally been part of their mouza Dakhin Sherpur, within their zemindari, and within the revenue-paying lands thereof, settled with their ancestor at the Permanent Settlement, they having succeeded to the zemindari under the will of their grandfather. With the exception of about 68 bighas the whole of the mouza had been acquired by the Government for the construction of the docks. The notification issued in 1886, under the Land Acquisition Act, 1870, apparently included the plots now in question. But the surface of these plots at the time of their being thus acquired for the above purpose, had, for at least about fifty years, and one of them for a longer period, formed part of four public roads respectively, viz., of the Sonye, the Jola, the Taligunge, and the Budge-Budge roads. Thus the surface of the plots had been in the possession of the Government. Two [196] or more of them had been in recent years made over to the Suburban Municipality.

In the Courts below, questions of (1) limitation, (2) of the original title in the zemindar to the plots, and (3) of the value to the plaintiffs of the soil under the roads, were raised. On this appeal the principal question was whether the sub-soil had any value or had no value at the time of the acquisition by the Government, who were then already possessed of the surface in use for roads. And the decision of this in the negative rendered it unnecessary to decide the other questions.

On the 15th October 1890, the Commissioner finally rejected the claim for compensation in respect of all the four plots. The plaint, filed on the 4th November 1891, claimed Rs. 11,210 as the value of the land, with Rs. 3,340 for interest.

The answer of the first defendant put the plaintiffs to proof of their titles; and stated that the Sonye, Jola, and Taligunge roads were "Ferry Fund Roads" from an early date in British administration; and had been made over to the Suburban Municipality about the year 1864. That the Budge-Budge road was made about 1835 40 All the plots were handed over to the Port Commissioners between 1886 and 1888. Act XLII of 1850 was referred to as a defence.

The Port Commissioners answered that possession was given to them of the plots, having been public thoroughfares, for fifty years. The plot in the Taligunge road had never been part of the zemindari. They referred to the general law of limitation, and to Acts XLII of 1850 and Bengal Act III of 1890.

The issues related to limitation, title, and value. Those now material were—"Was the Collector under Act X of 1870 justified in refusing compensation,"—and another relating to compensation "for the value of the land."

The Subordinate Judge decreed in favour of the plaintiffs, allowing compensation in respect of the plots in the Sonye and Jola roads only. He was of opinion that the suit was not barred by the general law of limitation, and that the claim in respect of the land in the Budge-Budge road was [197] barred by sections 9 and 10 of Act XLII of 1850, providing that "when any land has been or shall be taken by the Government for any public work otherwise than according to Regulation I of 1824, such land, after the lapse of five years, without any claim preferred for the recovery thereof in any competent Court, or under the said Regulation I of 1824, or this Act, shall vest absolutely in the East India Company, freed and discharged from all other claims thereto." As regarded the plot in the Taligunge road the Subordinate Judge held that it had not been shown to lie within the plaintiffs zemindari. In this finding the High Court concurred. As to the other plots, he decided that only the one in the Budge-Budge road had been brought by the evidence within the Act of 1850, and that, therefore, in respect of the plots in the Sonye and Jola roads there must be a decree for the plaintiffs. The amount he assessed at Rs. 4,112-1-4 being at the rate of Rs. 20 a cottah.

The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the plaintiffs as zemindars of Dakhin Sherpur had a primâ facie title to all the land in that mouza, and that the presumption was that it was mal, or revenue-paying land, part of the assets of the zemindari. As to this he cited Perhlad Sein v. Durga Pershad Tewari, (1869) 12 Moo. I. A., 275; 2 B. L. R., P. C., 111. This case, however, the High Court pointed out, had no application here, relating to a question of intermediate title. On the question as to the property in the soil underneath a highway, the Subordinate Judge pointed out that the decisions were that it remained in the zemindar after the dedication of the surface for public rights of way. He referred to the English cases on this subject (Smith's L. C., 6th ed., 136), and also to those decided in India, which are mentioned below in the argument on this appeal.

From this decree the defendants appealed, on the ground that the entire claim should have been dismissed. The plaintiffs cross-appealed on the ground that their claim as to the plot in the Budge-Budge road should have been decreed, as well as for a larger area in respect of the plots in the Sonye and Jola roads.

On the defendant's appeal, a Division Bench of the High Court [198] (MACPHERSON and BANERJEE, JJ.), dismissed the suit with costs, dismissing the cross-appeal.

Their judgment stated the facts, and continued as follows:—

"The settlement proceeding has not been put in, and there could of course be no evidence as to the possession of the plaintiff's or any one else, for public roads were constructed on the land at a time unknown, but certainly not less than forty or fifty years ago.

"The plaintiffs were put to strict proof of their title, and on the above ground alone their case must fail as regards the whole of the land. It is unnecessary, therefore, to consider the other and more difficult questions raised.

"Assuming, however, that the land is not lakheraj, it is by no means clear, in the absence of any proof of the time when the roads were constructed, that the land forms part of the plaintiffs' permanently-settled estate. The survey map of 1841 shows that the three roads were then in existence. There is nothing to show when, by whom or under what circumstances, the Sonye and Jola roads were constructed. The correspondence put in shows that the Budge-Budge road was part of the main line of communication between Calcutta and Cuttack, the construction of which was sanctioned in 1826, and that the part of the road from Calcutta to Budge-Budge, which was then in existence, was to be utilized. For all that is known, all the three roads may have been constructed as public roads by the ruling power before the Decennial Settlement; and, if so, the mere circumstance that the land lies within their mouza, is in itself an insufficient foundation for the assumption that it forms part of their permanently-settled estate. The case might be different if it was proved that the roads were constructed after the Decennial Settlement, or if we knew what the settlement was. The questions whether the plaintiffs have lost their title to the land, and whether the land, when it ceased to be used as a road, would revert to them, only arise when it is determined that they had a title. It is unnecessary, therefore, to discuss the meaning and effect of sections 9 and 10 of Act XLII of 1850, and the application of the cases cited. If, however, those sections apply to the Budge-Budge road, it is difficult to see why they should not also apply to the other roads. The difference between them appears to be, that the Budge Budge road has for many years been what may be called an Imperial road, maintained out of Imperial revenue, while the other roads are what may be called local roads maintained out of local funds : but what they were when constructed it is impossible to say.

"Even if the plaintiffs had succeeded in establishing their title to the land, we should have held that the sum allowed as the value of it was excessive. The Subordinate Judge has valued it at the price fixed for some of the adjoining land. The land as road land had no separate market value; at [199] least no value is proved. The value of the adjoining land was undoubtedly enhanced from its vicinity to the roads, and in that enhanced value it may fairly be considered the plaintiffs have obtained the value of the road land.

"Taking the adjoining land and the road land as one plot, it would be difficult to say that the value of the two together was greater than the value of the former alone, and that the value of the one was not included in that of the other.

"We need not, however, in the conclusion at which we have arrived, consider what the value would be."

The plaintiffs appealed.

Mr. J. Graham, Q. C., and Mr. J. D. Mayne, for the appellants, argued that the decision of the High Court against their title was wrong. That Court had also erred in dating the roads from the early period assigned by them; and in throwing upon the plaintiffs, who had shown title as zemindars to the mouza Dakhin Sherpur, the burden of proving that the plots were an asset of the zemindari, taken by them by devise from their ancestor. The presumption was that the plots were originally part of the permanently-settled lands of the zemindari, and the suggestion that the roads, one or some of them, might have existed before the Decennial Settlement, was not supported by any sufficient evidence. The ground taken by the Subordinate Judge should be supported, at all events, as to the conclusion that, as there was no date established for the making of the roads, there was a presumption of a dedication to public use by the original owner; and that when the land was used for purposes other than those of highways, the ownership of the plots reverted to the successors of the grantor. Thus the plaintiffs would be entitled, when this suit was brought, to compensation, the roads having been, at the time of its being awarded in respect of the adjoining land, already broken up, and the plots having been set free from the original dedication. Compensation, refused in the ordinary course, was claimable in this suit, and had been rightly assessed in the first Court, at the same average value as that of the adjoining land. It had been rightly adjudged in the first Court that he who dedicates to the public a way for their use retains to himself the land below the surface, unless the property is vested by some [200] enactment in another person—The Mayor of Tunbridge v. Baird, (1896) L. R., 4 Ap. Ca., H. L., 434, and in the Court below, 2 Q. B., 867, 883. Reference was also made to Vestry of St. Mary Newington v. Jacob, (1872) L. R., 7 Q. B., 47; Vestry of St. George the Martyr v. Roll, (1880) L. R., 14 Ch. D., 780; Nihal Chand v. Azmat Ali Khan, (1885) I. L. R., 7 All., 362; Tota v. Sardul Singh, (1888) I. L. R., 10 All., 553; Chairman of Naihati Municipality v. Kishori Lal Goswami, (1886) I. L. R., 13 Cal., 171.

Mr. A. Cohen, Q.C., and Mr. A. Phillips, for the respondents, supported the decree of the High Court, relying mainly on the construction of the Land Acquisition Act (X of 1870) as to the assessment of compensation upon the value of the property acquired under it. That value should be the market value of such land at the time of the acquisition of the plots. The question was raised by the issues. The value was not to be taken from what the property might have been worth at a date subsequent to its acquirement by the Government, but at the period when the surface was still in use for roads. Of that subsoil, according to the evidence, there was no market value; and, therefore, no compensation could be assessed thereupon. In order to make good their claim, as laid by them, the appellants should have shown that before the acquisition under Act X of 1870, the public use of the roads had been abandoned, so as to have set free, from the dedication of the surface to the use of the public, their original title to the subsoil. There had been no evidence of this having happened before the acquisition. The Act on a true construction of sections 24 and 25 provided for compensation based upon value at the time of the acquisition, but whatever was done, in the way of the change the mode of using the plots, was done after they had been acquired by the Government. Reference was made to Stebbing v. The Metropolitan Board of Works, (1870) L. R., 6 Q. B., 37.

Mr. J. Graham, Q. C., replied.

Afterwards on the 24th July their Lordships' judgment was delivered by [201] Lord Hobhouse.—The question raised in this appeal is whether the appellants, who were plaintiffs below, are entitled to compensation for land taken by the Government of India for the purpose of making a dock. The land consists of three plots, being respectively portions of three public roads within the ambit of a mouza belonging to the plaintiffs. A large quantity of the plaintiffs' land in the mouza has also been taken and their compensation awarded. The land now in question is less than 20 bighas. The evidence shows that the roads were in use, two about fifty years ago, and one about 70; how much longer is left to conjecture.

The Subordinate Judge decided partially against the plaintiffs and partially in their favour. As to some 7 bighas in the Budge-Budge road, he held there was evidence to show that it was "taken" by the Government within the meaning of Act XLII of 1850, and that the title of the Government became indefeasible five years after the taking. As to the remaining 13 bighas in the two other roads, he held there was no such evidence, and that they formed part of the assets of the village included in the settlement with the plaintiff's predecessors. He further held that as there is no evidence of the origin of the roads, there must have been a dedication of the land by the owner for the purpose of a highway; and that theory has been supported at this bar by the plaintiffs' Counsel. From that he infers that when the land was otherwise used, viz., for the purpose of a dock, it reverted to the grantors, and that they are entitled to recover possession as in fact they ask by their plaint. His decree, however, is not for possession but for the money equivalent of the land. That he assessed at Rs. 4,112, being the same average value as that of the adjoining land, of which the plaintiffs had full enjoyment.

Both parties appealed to the High Court; the plaintiffs in respect of the Budge-Budge road, and the defendant in respect of the two other roads. The High Court thought that, as there is no evidence that the roads were made subsequently to the Permanent Settlement, the plaintiffs had shown no title, and the speculation of the Subordinate Judge as to dedication and reverter of the land had no foundation. They also held that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in his valuation; that the land as road [202] had no separate market value, or at all events that none was proved. Reversing the decree, they dismissed the suit with costs.

Their Lordships think the High Court so clearly right on the questions of value that they do not enter into the questions affecting the plaintiffs' title. The land was taken for a public purpose under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, 1870, and the plaintiffs' right is not to recover the land but to claim compensation for it. By sections 13 and 24, the market value of the land at the time of awarding compensation is to be taken into consideration. It is not suggested that there is any market value of these lands as roadways.

Mr. Graham argues that when the compensation was awarded in this case the roads had been broken up, and therefore the Subordinate Judge rightly valued the land as belonging absolutely to the plaintiffs, free from the burden of the roads and capable of being used for any purpose. In their Lordships' opinion that would be a very unreasonable construction of the Act. There is an express provision in section 25 that the Assessor shall not take into consideration any increase to the value of the land acquired likely to accrue from the use to which it will be put. That points to the time when the land is acquired as the time for ascertaining its value. Independently of that provision it would lead to very strange and capricious results if changes in the condition of the land between the time when it was taken and the actual conclusion of the award were to increase or to lessen its value. The time of awarding compensation must be construed as meaning the time of compensation, the time at which the right to compensation attaches. At that time these plots of land were roadways; and the plaintiffs are claiming for a supposed loss of value which had no existence when the ownership of the land was changed.

Their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[203] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 1st May, 1897.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE TREVELYAN AND MR. JUSTICE STEVENS.

Pryag Singh............Decree-holder

versus

Raju Singh and others............Judgment-debtors.*

Limitation—Application for ascertainment of mesne profits—Decree for possession and mesne profits—Effect of striking off application for execution—What are proceedings and orders "in execution of decree."

An application for delivery of possession of land decreed and for ascertainment of mesne profits was made in 1892, more than three years after a previous application for the same purpose, and was "struck off" for non-service of notice. On a fresh application for ascertainment of mesne profits in 1895,

Held, that that portion of the proceeding or order of 1892 which related to mesne profits was not one "in execution of decree;" that under the circumstances the present application was not barred by that proceeding or order ; and that the application was not barred by limitation, although the claim to possession was barred.

Puran Chand v. Roy Radha Kishen, (1891) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 132, followed; Bunsee Singh v. Nusuf Ali Beg, (1874) 22 W. R., 328, distinguished.

THIS appeal arose out of a decree for possession of land and mesne profits finally confirmed by the High Court on the 10th August 1886. The first application for delivery of possession and mesne profits made on the 27th November 1888 was rejected. The next application was found to have been made on the 21st August 1892 more than three years after the previous one was made. This application, however, was "struck off" for want of proof of due service of notice on the judgment-debtors. The last application was for ascertainment of mesne profits only, and was made on the 20th August 1895. The judgment of the District Judge on appeal was as follows :—

[204] "It seems to me that the application is out of time. The decree-holder admittedly never got possession of the land for which mesne profits are claimed. It is urged for the judgment-debtor that until possession is obtained the application cannot be entertained—Bunsee Singh v. Nusuf Ai Beg, (1874) 22 W. R., 328, and that the decree-holder no longer had a right to obtain possession. I think this contention is sound. It appears that on the 21st August 1892, the decree-holder applied for possession as well as for mesne profits, and that the application was dismissed. This order for dismissal is final."

The decree-holder appealed to the High Court.

Babu Uma Kali Mookerjee for the Appellant.

Dr. Asutosh Mookerjee for the Respondents.

The facts necessary to narrate for the determination of this case are not many. A suit was brought for possession of a certain property, and a decree was made on the 10th August 1886 giving a right to obtain possession of 1½ bighas of the property claimed and mesne profits. On the 27th November 1888 an application for execution was made, and on the 21st August 1892, according to the facts found by the Court below, the next application was made. That was an application for possession and for an inquiry as to mesne profits. Our decision must in reality turn on what took place on that application. A notice was issued and rightly so, inasmuch as more than a year had expired since the date of the decree, and inasmuch as the defendant was entitled to notice of an application for an inquiry as to mesne profits. This application, we may observe, was partly an application in execution of decree, that is to say, in so far as it sought for possession of the property. But as pointed out by the decision of the full Bench in Puran Chand v. Roy Radha Kishen, (1891) I. L. R. 19 Cal., 132, so far as regards wasilat, it is not an application for execution, but an application in the suit, not in execution of the decree but in pursuance of the decree. A proceeding in execution is a proceeding enforcing a decree made requiring a party to do or to abstain from doing some particular thing. It may be that the decree provides for possession or the payment of money. A proceeding in execution means a proceeding to enforce an order [205] already made. The order made in this case was not an order to do a particular thing, as a result of the decree, but an order in the suit directing an inquiry into the mesne profits. That is not a proceeding in execution of the decree. To that extent, therefore, the application was not an application in execution of the decree. The order was as follows : "Notice could not be served on account of want of identifier ; no further step is taken. The case is, therefore, struck off."

It is a common practice in the Courts in the districts, when no steps are taken in execution proceedings, to strike off the case from the file. It is necessary in each case to see what is meant by an order striking off the case. If the object is only for the convenience of the Court's work and to ascertain the number of pending cases by taking the case off the list, then such order does not prevent a fresh application. But, on the other hand, if the intention of the Court was thereby to determine a matter in issue between the parties, then it might be that the effect of striking off the case would be to prevent further proceedings. As far as we can see the District Judge has treated this matter as if it was entirely a proceeding in execution of decree, and did not realize the distinction between the two portions of the claim, and that there was one portion which was not a proceeding in execution.

If that was so, it was not his intention to determine the question between the parties. The question remains whether this would operate as a bar to further proceedings in regard to the inquiry into mesne profits. In our opinion it does not. If there had been anything approaching to a determination of the question, then the removal of the case from the file might have operated to prevent a re-consideration of that question ; but, in our opinion, in this case nothing of the kind was done.

A further application was made for the ascertainment of mesne profits on the 20th August 1895. It is quite clear that, having regard to the decision of the Full Bench in Puran Chand v. Roy Radha Kishen, (1891) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 132, this application is not barred by limitation.

The learned Vakil for the respondent says that we ought not [206] to accept a construction of law which would result in keeping alive such applications for an indefinite time. But, unless there is any limitation provided by the law, it is not for us to make one. There might be, apart from the limitation which has been contended for, a limitation applicable to a case of this kind. At any rate, it is quite clear that the Court would have power to prevent the abuse of its processes. Every Court has the power to do that. Following the decision of the Full Bench in Puran Chand v. Roy Radha Kishen, (1891) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 132 we hold that this application was not barred. That disposes of the main portion of the argument.

The learned District Judge has acted on a decision of PHEAR and MORRIS, JJ.—Bunsee Singh v. Nuzuf Ali Beg, (1874) 22 W. R., 328,—and has held that the application could not be made because the applicant has lost his right to possession to the property. That was a decision upon a section of Act VIII of 1859, section 196, which differed from the terms of section 211 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which is the law now in force. Section 196 of Act VIII of 1859 is in these terms : "When the suit is for land or other property paying rent, the Court may provide in the decree for the payment of mesne profits or rent on such land or other property from the date of the suit until the date of delivery of possession to the decree-holder with interest thereupon at such rate as the Court may think proper."

The law on the subject now in force, section 211 of the Code of Civil Procedure, runs thus : "When the suit is for the recovery of possession of immoveable property yielding rent or other profit, the Court may provide in the decree for the payment of rent or mesne profits in respect of such property from the institution of the suit until the delivery of possession to the party in whose favour the decree is made or until the expiration of three years from the date of the decree (whichever event first occurs) with interest thereupon at such rate as the Court thinks fit ;" so that as matters stand at present, the plaintiff cannot obtain mesne profits for more than three years after decree. PHEAR and MORRIS, JJ., after referring to the words they had used in the case of [207] Fuzeelun v. Keramut Hossein, (1874) 21 W. R., 212, say this: "And applying these words to the present case, it is plain that the steps for the estimating or assessing or adjusting of mesne profits, from the date of suit up to the date when the plaintiff obtained possession, could not have been instituted until that possession was obtained; that is, could not have been instituted until the 18th January 1870. And the application of the 8th November 1872 was not even three years distant from this date." The reasons for this decision are inapplicable to the present law.

The result of the argument in this case would be that, because a defendant refuses to obey an order of the Court and deliver over possession to the plaintiff, the plaintiff must lose his right to mesne profits. We cannot say that this argument commends itself to us.

In the result we are of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to an enquiry in accordance with the decree, as to mesne profits, and we decree the same.

The appellant is entitled to his costs in this appeal. In the lower Court each party will pay his own costs.

APPELLATE CRIMINAL.

The 6th July, 1897.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE GHOSE AND MR. JUSTICE WILKINS.

Kashi Nath Naek...........Appellant

Forgery—Abetment of forgery by writing out the deed—Unregistered document purporting to be a valuable security—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sections 109, 114, and 467.

The accused was not only the writer but also took an active part in the preparation of a document, the alleged executant of which was dead before the date of the document, and the person who really had an interest under the document was convicted under section 82 of the Registration Act (III of 1877). But evidence was wanting to show that the accused took any part in the forgery of the name of the alleged executant.

[208] Held, that the accused could not be convicted of the offence of forgery under section 467 of the Penal Code. There being nothing on the record to show that the accused was a party to, or took any part in, the actual forgery of the document, or that he was present on the occasion when it was forged, the proper section to convict him under would be section 467/109 that is of abetment of forgery and not section 467/114.

An unregistered document, though it may not be a valuable security until the registration is completed, still "purports" to be a valuable security within the meaning of section 467 of the Penal Code.

Queen-Empress* v. Ramasami [(1888) I. L. R., 12 Mad., 148], approved of.

THE facts of the case for the purpose of this report sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Babu Sarat Chunder Rai Chowdhry, for the Appellant.

The Officiating Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Abdur Rahim) for the Crown.

The appellant before us, Kashi Nath Naek, has been convicted by the Sessions Judge of Midnapore of offences under sections 467 and 467/114 of the Indian Penal Code, and section 82, clause (d) of the Registration Act. The document which is said to have been forged is a Kobala, bearing date the 16th March 1896, purporting to have been executed by one Khetter Nath Das in favour of a certain lady, the wife of one Kashi Nath Das. The deed was presented for registration to the Sub-Registrar ; but he, suspecting something wrong, refused registration. It is said, however, that the appellant before us made certain representations before the said Registrar in regard to the person who presented the document for registration, and asked that officer to register the document, saying that it was all right. A prosecution was afterwards started against Kashi Nath Das and the appellant, Kashi Nath Naek ; and it would appear from the record that Kashi Nath Das, the person who really had an interest under the document in question, was convicted by the Magistrate under section 82 of the Registration Act. As regards the appellant, Kashi Nath Naek, after certain proceedings had been taken against him by the Magisterial authorities, he was committed [209] to take his trial before the Sessions Court for offences to which we have already made reference, and he was convicted accordingly. It seems to be perfectly clear upon the evidence in the case that the alleged executant of the document, Khetter Nath Das, was dead before the date of the document in question ; and there can also be no doubt that the appellant, Kashi Nath Naek, was not only the writer of it, but was also the person who took an active part in the preparation of the document ; but the evidence is wanting to shew that he took any part in the forgery of the name of Khetter Nath Das, the alleged executant of the document ; and we are of opinion that it is almost impossible to convict the appellant before us, upon the materials upon the record, of the offence of forgery. It appears to us, however, at the same time that whoever the forger of the document might have been, Kashi Nath Naek abetted the act of forgery ; and in that view of the matter we think that he ought to be convicted under section 467/109 of the Indian Penal Code, namely, that he abetted the offence of forgery of the document. As we have already observed, there is nothing to indicate that the appellant was a party to, or took any part in, the actual forgery of the document ; nor does it appear that he was present upon the occasion when the document was forged. We, therefore, think that section 114* of the Indian

*[Sec. 114 :—Whenever any person, who, if absent, would be liable to be punished as an abettor, is present when the act or offence for which he would be punishable in consequence of the abetment is committed, he shall be deemed to have committed such act or offence.] (Abettor present when offence is committed.)

Penal Code has no application to the present case; and that the proper section to convict him under would be section 467/109 of the Indian Penal Code.

As regards the offence said to have been committed by the accused under section 82, clause (d), of the Registration Act, the evidence, to our mind, is doubtful. The Sub-Registrar, who is a respectable and responsible officer of Government, distinctly swears that the appellant did not take that part at the time the document was presented for registration which has been attributed to him; and in the conflict of testimony which exists in this case, we think it would be unsafe to convict him under clause (d), section 82 of the Registration Act. We, therefore, set aside the conviction under the Registration Act, and convict him under section 467/109 of the Indian Penal Code only.

In the circumstances, we think that the justice of the case will be amply met, having regard to the terms of the section [210] of the Penal Code under which we convict him, by sentencing the appellant to two years' rigorous imprisonment.

We might add that a point was raised before us by the learned Vakil for the appellant to the effect that section 467 of the Indian Penal Code had no application to the present case; because the document, which was a kobala, was not actually registered, and, therefore, it could not possibly operate as a valuable security within the meaning of that section. We are, however, unable to accept this contention as correct; because the section in question runs thus: "Whoever forges a document which purports to be a valuable security or a will," and so on. The words are "which purports to be" and not "which is" a valuable security. The document may not be an effectual document so as to pass title until it is registered; but so soon as it is registered it takes effect from the date of execution thereof; and although it may not be a valuable security until the registration is completed, still it "purports" to be valuable security within the meaning of the section. We find that the Madras High Court in the case of Queen-Empress v. Ramasami, (1888) I. L. R., 12 Mad., 148, referring to the case in 2 East's Pleas, p. 955, took very nearly the same view which we have just expressed; and although the facts of the case were somewhat different from those of the present case, still the principle which is laid down therein equally applies to this case.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 14th July, 1897.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON AND MR. JUSTICE AMEER ALI.

Gyannessa and others............Plaintiffs

versus

Mobarakannessa and others...........Defendants.*

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), section 118—Exchange—Partition—Evidence Act (I of 1872), sections 21 (3), 11 (2)—Admissibility of petition and written statement filed in a previous proceeding.

Some of the co-owners possessing an undivided share in several [211] properties took by arrangement a specific property in lieu of their shares in all the properties.

Held, that this transaction was not an "exchange" within the meaning of section 118† of the Transfer of Property Act, but the completed transaction amounted to a "partition" which is not required by law to be effected by an instrument in writing.

Frith v. Osborne [(1876) L. R., 3 Ch. D., 618] referred to.

Where the plaintiffs and some of the defendants were co-owners of certain properties, the question at issue being whether there was a partition between them, and whether under that partition the defendants came to be in possession of a specific property in lieu of their shares in all the properties, a petition and a written-statement filed by the defendants in certain previous suits admitting the partition and the exclusive acquisition of the specific property were put in, but objected to as inadmissible in evidence:

Held, that the documents were admissible against those defendants under sections 11 cl. (2) and 21 cl. (3) of the Evidence Act.

Naro Vinayek v. Narhari [(1891) I. L. R., 16 Bom., 125] relied upon.

THE facts of the case fully appear from the judgments of the High Court.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose and Babu Upendra Nath Mitter for the Appellants.

Mr. C. Gregory and Moulvie Mahomed Mustafa Khan for the Respondents.

The following judgments were delivered by the Court (MACPHERSON and AMEER ALI, JJ.):—

Macpherson, J.—The plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 3 and the defendants Nos. 2 to 4, being the descendants of one Naffar Mahomed, were the owners of the jote which is the subject of this suit and other properties. In June 1888, they entered into a written agreement called a solenama, by which the plaintiffs took a two-third share and the defendants a one-third share of the jote. The solenama is not before us, and we are not acquainted with its precise terms, but it is said to have effected a settlement of the disputes relating to all the family properties and to have provided for a partition of them. One provision admittedly was

*Appeal from Appellate Decree, No.147 of 1896, against the decree of R. R. Pope, Esq., District Judge of Dinajpur, dated the 7th November 1895, reversing the decree of Baboo Kali Prasanna Mukerjee, Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 27th of June 1895.

† [Sec. 118:—When two persons mutually transfer the ownership of one thing for the ownership of another neither thing nor both things being money only, the transaction is called an "exchange".

"Exchange" defined.

A transfer of property in completion of an exchange can be made only in manner provided for the transfer of such property by sale.]

that, in the event of a partition, the defendants should take the whole jote as representing their share of all the properties.

[212] The plaintiffs claim a two-third share of the jote alleging a dispossession by the defendants in March or April 1892. The first defendant claims to have purchased the entire jote from the other defendants after the partition contemplated by the solenama had been made. The facts in issue are: (1) Whether a partition in accordance with the terms of the solenama had been effected; (2) whether after partition the first defendant had purchased the jote from the other defendants. The Lower Appellate Court deciding both those issues in favour of the defendant reversed the first Court's decree and dismissed the suit.

It is now contended that the transaction by which the vendee defendants obtained the jote being one of "exchange" under section 118 of the Transfer of Property Act, could only be effected by a registered instrument and that there was no valid transfer of the jote to them. Also, that the District Judge in finding a partition has improperly relied upon two documents which were irrelevant and not evidence against the plaintiffs.

The solenama, it may be observed, was registered, but there was no subsequent writing giving effect to the partition.

The learned pleader for the appellant relies upon the case of Frith v. Osborne, (1876) L. R, 3 Ch. D, 618, as showing that the transaction referred to was in substance an "exchange" as defined in section 118. There, an undivided moiety of lands was vested in A, B and C as trustees of a settlement, which expressly authorized a partition, and the other moiety was vested in D, E and F as trustees of a settlement with power to sell or exchange, and a partition deed was executed by the trustees of the two moieties. The question arose as to whether the power of sale and exchange given to D, E and F authorized a partition, and that involved the further question, which was then doubtful, of the power of tenants in common to effect an exchange of their respective moieties of the land held in common before they had made a partition. The Master of the Rolls held that such an exchange could be made, and that the power of exchange was properly exercised by a partition. In deciding a question such as that now raised, we must avoid getting involved in the intricacies of the law of England relating to real property.

[213] Assuming that there was what amounted to an "exchange" within the words of section 118 between the vendor defendants and the plaintiffs, the undivided interest of the former in all the other properties being exchanged for the undivided interest of the latter in the jote, the Transfer of Property Act does not apply to the transaction. The exchange was intended to and did effect a partition. The completed transaction was the partition by which the parties held in severalty the lands which had been before held in common. The law does not require a partition to be effected by an instrument in writing, and the right of partition being an incident of property held as this property was, the right is not, according to the second section, affected by any of the provisions of the Act. The Act, moreover, does not profess to deal with partitions or the way in which they are to be effected.

Treating, therefore, the transaction as a partition, although it may have been effected in a way which involved, as between the co-owners, a transfer of the ownership of parts of the undivided property amounting to an exchange, I hold that it does not come under section 118, and that it was not necessary to complete it by a registered instrument.

The documents objected to are Exhibits 9 and 43, the former being a petition, and the latter a written statement, put in by the vendor defendants in certain suits, and they contain statements of those defendants that they were in possession of the entire jote. The District Judge says they were objected to before him as containing admissions made by the defendants which could not be proved on their behalf, and that is all we know about them.

The vendor defendants, who are charged in the plaint with colluding with the vendee, the first defendant, put in a verified written statement denying the partition and the sale, and one of them, it is said, was examined as a witness for the plaintiff. It is clear that they were supporting the plaintiffs' case, and I think the statements which went to show that there had been a partition and that they had changed their attitude could be proved as against them. The reference to section 157 is probably a mistake, but I think the Judge was right under the circumstances of the case in holding that the statements were admissible under section 21 (3) and section 11 (2) of the Evidence Act.

Ameer Ali, J.—I am of the same opinion. Two questions were raised in this appeal: (1) That the District Judge was wrong in relying on certain documents referred to in his judgment as they were inadmissible in evidence against the plaintiffs; and (2) that, as the transaction by which defendants 2 to 4 are alleged to have acquired the property in suit was or amounted to an "exchange," under the provisions of section 118 of the Transfer of Property Act, it ought to have been effectuated by a registered document, and not having been so done, the defendants 2 to 4 could not acquire any title thereto or convey any title by their sale to the first defendant.

As regards the first point, it must be remembered that the question at issue in the case was whether or not there was a partition between the heirs of one Naffar Mahomed, viz., the plaintiffs and defendants 2 to 4, and whether under or in consequence of that partition, defendants 2 to 4 had acquired an exclusive right to the property in suit. The defendants 2 to 4, from whom the first defendant purchased the jote, denied in their written statement that they had exclusively acquired or were in exclusive possession of the property. They denied also the fact of the sale to the first defendant. It appears that the second defendant was examined on commission on behalf of the plaintiffs. Under the circumstances, therefore, it is clear that the defendants 2 to 4, though placed in the category of defendants, were exactly in the same position as the plaintiffs, and that their interests were more or less identical. The two documents objected to are a petition and a written statement filed in some previous proceeding or proceedings, in which the defendants 2 to 4 admitted the partition, and the exclusive acquisition by them of the jote in suit. These documents were, therefore, clearly admissible against them. But I go further and hold that, having regard to the position of the parties, the statements contained, in these documents are admissible generally in corroboration of the first defendant's allegation. The plaintiffs and defendants 2 to 4 were co-owners of certain property, and the fact in issue in the present case is, as already stated, whether there was a partition between them, and whether under that partition the defendants 2 to 4 acquired or came to be [215] in possession of a specific property in lieu of their shares in all the properties. Any act done or statement made by any of the co-owners which tends to corroborate the fact of partition would be relevant to the inquiry and consequently admissible in evidence. In Naro Vinayek v. Narhan, (1891) I.L.R., 16 Bom., 125, statements such as we find here were held to come under the provisions of section 11 of the Evidence Act. I am, therefore, of opinion that the petition and written statement, to the admissibility of whcih objection has been taken in this Court, are facts which by section 11 are relevant as they make the existence of the partition, which is the fact in issue, highly probable, and that no error has been committed by the District Judge in relying on them.

As regards the second point the grounds of decision have been so clearly stated by my learned colleague that I have very little to add. I only wish to observe that English cases are of much assistance in elucidating genera principles and construing enactments when the Acts of the Indian Legislature happen to be in pari materia with English Statutes. But it would be dangerous, I think, to introduce into this country the complicated principles or incidents of the English law relating to real property. The question, however, is whether section 118 of the Transfer of Property Act is applicable to a transaction of the nature alleged, and found by the Judge to have taken place between the plaintiffs and the defendants 2 to 4. Section 118, in my opinion, is not applicable to cases where some of the co-owners possessing an undivided share in several properties take by arrangement a specific property in lieu of their shares in all. Section 118, as its language shows, refers to cases where two persons owning two specific properties transfer or convey their respective ownership one to the other.

In this country a partition between co-owners does not require to be effectuated or evidenced by a written document, and there is nothing in the Act or in the phraseology of section 118 to warrant the suggestion that the Legislature intended to make any alteration in the recognized law on the subject.

For these reasons I agree in dismissing the appeal with costs.

B. D. B. Appeal dismissed.

Sale for arrears of rent—Application to set aside sale—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), section 174, clauses (1) and (2)—Deposit of decretal amount incorrectly calculated by ministerial officers of Court—Effect of deposit without a prayer in express terms to set aside the sale—Challans—Practice.

The judgment-debtor, within thirty days from the date of sale of his holding for arrears of rent, deposited in Court under section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the decretal amount by a challan endorsed by the chief ministerial officer of the Court executing the decree. Subsequently it was discovered that the amount was short by 9 pies, which the judgment-debtor forthwith paid in, making up the deficiency, and presented a petition, praying that

Per AMEER ALI, J.—The fact of his depositing the amount was a sufficient indication of his intention to seek the relief.

Per MACPHERSON, J.—The challan which sets out the purpose of the deposit may be regarded as a sufficient application.

Syud Shamsul Huda for the Appellants.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose and Babu Jasoda Nandan Paramanik for the Respondent.

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (MACPHERSON and AMEER ALI, JJ.) :—

Ameer Ali, J.—It appears that on the 6th of January 1896 the holding of the appellant, who is a raiyat, was sold in execution of a decree obtained by his landlord, respondent in this Court, for [217] arrears of rent, and was purchased by the latter on the 3rd of February. The appellant deposited in Court, under the provisions of section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the amount recoverable under the decree, with costs and a sum equal to five per cent. of the purchase-money. On the 7th of February the decree-holder presented an application to the Munsif, stating that the judgment-debtor had deposited 9 pies too little, and praying that the sale be confirmed, whereupon the Court ordered that the judgment-debtor might apply to have the sale set aside. The Court did not express any opinion whether the statement made in the decree-holder's petition that the amount deposited was short by 9 pies was correct or not. From the form of the order it would seem that the Munsif did not consider it well founded. However that may be, on the same day, presumably in order to be on the safe side, the judgment-debtor presented the following petition to the Court:—

"That on account of the claim in the above case together with costs and damages a sum of Rs. 52-9-15 gds. was deposited on the 3rd February, but upon a calculation it has been found that the said amount of claim has been deposited less by 3 pice (15 gds.). It is therefore prayed that the Court may be pleased to allow the said deposit of 3 pice to be deposited and to declare the execution case as finally closed."

This petition does not appear to be dated, but the impression of the seal of the Court bears date the 7th of February. The 9 pies was thus brought into Court on the 7th of February, and was ordered to be received on the 10th of February by a challan of that date.

The lower Courts have refused to set aside the sale of the appellant's holding, on the sole ground that as he made no application it could not be set aside. The District Judge, in affirming the order of the Munsif, says that "subsequently on the 10th February the judgment-debtor deposited in Court the 9 pies necessary, but made no application to set aside the sale." It seems to me that the learned Judge is in error on both points; the 9 pies was brought into Court on the 7th of February at the latest and not on the 10th, and the judgment-debtor did apply by the petition of that day to have the sale set aside. No other meaning can reasonably be attached to the prayer of that petition.

The Courts below have rejected the appellant's application to [218] set aside the sale of his holding, apparently on the ground that under the law the judgment-debtor is bound to apply for that purpose in express terms.

Section 174 of the Tenancy Act, which gives to the raiyat the right of having the sale of his holding set aside, runs as follows :—

(1) "Where a tenure or holding is sold for an arrear of rent due thereon, then, at any time within thirty days from the date of sale, the judgment-debtor may apply to have the sale set aside on his depositing in Court, for payment to the decree-holder, the amount recoverable under the decree with costs, and, for payment to the purchaser, a sum equal to five per centum of the purchase-money.

(2) If such deposit is made within the thirty days, the Court shall pass an order setting aside the sale, and the provision of section 315 of the Code of Civil Procedure shall apply in the case of a sale so set aside."

The remainder of the section is immaterial for the purposes of the present case. The Act nowhere provides how or in what mode the judgment-debtor is to apply. There is nothing to compel the judgment-debtor to apply by a mukhtear or pleader, and in fact it is conceded that he might have applied verbally and in person. But it is said that the words "may apply" indicate that some sort of application is necessary. Suppose the judgment-debtor happens to be a dumb person, would he be debarred from having the benefit of this section, or would he be compelled to employ a proxy in the shape of a pleader or mukhtear? Surely this could hardly be the intention of the Legislature. In my opinion the fact of his depositing the amount is a sufficient indication of his intention to seek the relief which the law provides. He brings in the money with what object? Surely for no other reason but to have the sale of his holding set aside. And I think the provisions of sub-section 2 clearly support this view. It declares that if the deposit is made, the Court shall pass an order setting aside the sale. It shows that when the amount is deposited, it becomes the duty of the Court to set aside the sale. In my opinion the appellant did, as a matter of fact, apply to set aside the sale, and even if he did not, having deposited the amount he is entitled [219] to have the sale set aside, and the Court is bound (under sub-section 2 of section 147) to make an order to that effect.

This, as I have already stated, was the sole ground on which the lower Courts have refused to set aside the sale. In this Court it was urged that as the amount deposited by the appellant on the 3rd of February fell short by 9 pies, the sale ought not to be set aside. This point does not appear to have been pressed in either of the Courts below, for there is not the smallest reference to it in their judgments. And I do not feel disposed to entertain it in this Court. Nor are the circumstances of the case such as to induce me to do so. The auction-purchaser, who is admittedly the landlord decree-holder, incurs no loss: he seeks to tie the appellant down to the strict letter of the law. In that case he ought to have pressed the point in the Courts below.

So far as the question raised here is concerned, the present case is exactly similar to the case of Ugrah Lall v. Radha Pershad Singh, (1891) I.L.R., 18 Cal., 255, decided by PETHERAM, C.J., and myself. In that case also the raiyat, judgment-debtor, deposited within the month a certain amount which was found afterwards to be short of the exact sum required by a trifling amount, which was subsequently paid up. And we held that the Munsif had acted rightly in setting aside the sale

Assuming that the decree-holder, in a case like this, is entitled to urge the point here, I think that as the materials on the record are sufficient to enable the Court to form an opinion whether it is well founded or not, it would only cause harassment to the judgment-debtor to remand the case for further inquiry. Ordinarily a judgment-debtor has no idea of the amount of costs and the additional sum payable by way of damages or compensation, which is calculated on the basis of a percentage on the purchase-money. As a matter of well known practice the calculation is made in the office of the Judicial Officer executing the decree; and the aggregate amount is then entered in a challan or order to the Treasury Officer to receive and credit the same.

These challans contain three parts: The first part is to be filled in by the payer, the second is to be filled in by the Court [220] or under its orders, and the third part is to be filled in at Court by the cashier or the Treasury Officer. The first part of the challan, dated the 3rd February 1896, given to the appellant, runs thus:—

Name of person or persons on whose behalf the money is tendered.	Name of person or persons to whose credit the amount is to be placed in the Court's Book	Number of suit or date of judicial decree or order (if any) the amount is tendered.	Particulars of Receipts.	Amount tendered.	Remarks, if any.
1	2	3	4	5	6
Abdul Latif Munshee. Judgment-debtor.	Jadub Chunder Mitter. Decree-holder.	Rent Decree. No. 882 of 1895.	Mention in the sale proclamation. Rs. As. P. 48 15 5 Sale fee 1 1 10 Damages 2 7 0 52 7 15	Rs. As P 52 7 9	Fifty-two rupees seven annas and nine pies only.

(Not legible.)
Signature of Chief Ministerial officer.

Abdul Latif.
Signature of the person tendering the money.

It bears the endorsement of the chief ministerial officer, presumably to vouch the accuracy of the amounts entered in the 4th column; otherwise his endorsement would be meaningless.

The second part runs thus:—

Registered Number.	Registered Date.	Account to be credited whether Civil Court deposit fines or forfeitures, stamp duty and penalties, or miscellaneous or petty receipts.	As per Court's challan register.
1	2	3	4
1161	3rd Feb. 1896.	C. Deposit.

[221] and contains the following order to the Treasury Officer, Dinajpur :—

To *
The Treasury Officer, Dinajpur.

(Not legible.)
Receive and credit the above if tendered to you before 3 P.M. to-day.
Signature of the Accountant, District Judge's Court, dated 3rd February 1896.
(Not legible)
Signature of the Judge in charge.

This order is signed by the Judicial Officer in charge, and is counter-signed by the Accountant of the District Judge's Court.

Part third runs thus :—

Received Notes. Received silver and copper.	*	*	*	Treasury Officer entered here number of notes.
Received Total Rupees...	52	7	9

Signature (not legible) 3rd February 1896. Cashier of the Court, &c. (not legible) Accountant of the Treasury

It will be seen from the above that the amount which the appellant deposited was checked in the sherishta or office of the Judicial Officer executing the decree ; its accuracy is vouched by the chief ministerial officer; it is then placed before the Judicial Officer, and receives his sanction. With all those guarantees for accuracy the appellant goes and deposits the money. It can hardly be said under the circumstances that the appellant, a raiyat, is responsible for a mistake in calculation made in the office. He did what under the law he was required to do, viz., to obtain a challan for the amount that he had to deposit, for without the necessary challan he could not have paid the amount With that document he goes to the Treasury [222] and deposits the sum of money stated therein. The decree-holder (purchaser) then discovers the deficiency of three farthings, and as soon as the judgment-debtor comes to know of it he pays in that also.

To my mind it would be grievous under the circumstances to hold that he is disentitled to have the sale of his holding set aside.

For all these reasons, I would decree the appeal and set aside the orders of the Courts below, and would direct that the sale of the 6th of January 1896 be set aside with costs in this Court. We allow the appellant no costs in the Courts below.

Macpherson, J.—I agree that a separate and formal application for the setting aside of the sale under section 174 is not essential, and that if the necessary amount is deposited in due time the Court must set aside the sale. The challans, by which the amount is deposited with the Court's permission and which sets out the purpose of the deposit, may be regarded as a sufficient application. The decision of the lower Courts cannot, therefore, be supported on the ground on which it rests.

That being so, I am not prepared to dissent from the conclusion of my learned colleague, that the case is practically governed by the case to which he has referred.

B. D. B. Appeal allowed.

F. C. K. Butt...........Respondent.

Practice-- Divorce-- Withdrawal of petition for dissolution of marriage— Costs of petitioner, on what scale allowed —Divorce Act (IV of 1869), sections 7, 35 and 45.

The petitioner on the 2nd June 1896 presented her petition, in which she prayed for the dissolution of her marriage with the respondent on the grounds of adultery and cruelty. A commission was issued at her instance to examine witnesses in England on the charges of adultery and cruelty, and the result of their evidence was that the petitioner was satisfied that [223] the charges brought by her against her husband were wholly unfounded, and she on the 2nd September 1897 applied for leave to withdraw her suit, and for payment of her costs by the respondent. She contended that her costs should be paid by him as between attorney and client The respondent submitted he ought to pay costs as between party and party. Held, that the petitioner's costs, including costs of this application, be taxed as between party and party it being open for the attorney for the wife to sue the husband for the rest of the costs.

ON the 2nd June 1896 the petitioner Kathleen Mary Butt presented her petition, in which she prayed for the dissolution of her marriage with the respondent Frank Charles Kernot Butt on the grounds of adultery and cruelty, or in the alternative for a judicial separation and for the custody of her child. Subsequently a commission was issued at the instance of the petitioner to examine certain witnesses in England. Upon the return of the commission executed the petitioner found that the evidence taken thereunder did not support the charges made by her in her petition, and determined to withdraw her suit.

On the 2nd September 1897 she applied by petition for liberty to withdraw her suit, and for an order that the respondent should pay her costs of the suit to be taxed on such scale as the Court might direct.

Mr. Garth for the Petitioner.—The Petitioner withdraws her petition. The only question now before the Court is what the scale of costs should be. The respondent contends that he ought to pay costs as between party and party, whereas the petitioner's contention is that he ought to pay her costs as between attorney and client. The withdrawal of the petition is no reason why the solicitor should be deprived of his costs. The Court assumes the wife has nothing, and the solicitor is entitled to be paid his costs in full, and that would be costs as between attorney and client. In Robertson v. Robertson, (1881) L. R,. 6 P. D., 119, it was held that the costs of the wife payable by the husband were not limited to the amount paid into Court or secured by the husband for that purpose. Otway v. Otway, (1888) L. R., 13 P. D., 141, and Holt v. Holt and Fleming, (1858) 28 L. J., P. and M., 12, also support this contention. The Court would not allow the solicitor to lose costs due to him from his client, and the client under the circumstances is in reality the husband.

[224] Mr. J. G. Woodroffe for the Respondent.—There is express authority that the costs should be as between party and party; it was so held by the old Ecclesiastical Courts, and the same rule has been followed after the passing of the Matrimonial Causes Acts of 1857 and 1858. In an ordinary suit the costs would be as between party and party, costs as between attorney and client being allowed only when it is expressly provided for, as in a mortgage. The general rule, therefore, is that costs should be allowed as between party and party. There is nothing in matrimonial causes to take them out of the general rule. Sections 7, 35 and 45 of the Indian Divorce Act (IV of 1869) are the only sections which apply to costs, and they seem to indicate that the Courts in India should act on the principles of the English Courts of Divorce. The general principles of taxing costs against a husband in a matrimonial cause are the same as in other cases,—Browne on Divorce, 5th edition, p. 361. In England formerly the wife was allowed costs as between party and party up to the setting down of the case for trial,—Browne on Divorce, 5th edition, p. 342. Can it be said that the principle is different after the case is set down for trial as to the recovery of costs reasonably incurred by the wife? [See Browne on Divorce, 5th edition, pp. 359 and 360—Ottaway v. Hamilton (1878, 3 C. P. D., 393)]. The Matrimonial Causes Acts of 1857 and 1858 do not contain provisions for costs as between attorney and client. That shows that the costs should be taxed as between party and party. If a case can be made out with reference to the other costs so as to bring them in as necessaries, then the remedy is by suit properly framed; those costs cannot be proved before the taxing officer—Allen v. Allen and D'Arcy, (1860) 2 Sw. & Tr., 107, Stocken v. Pattrick, (1873) 29 L. T., (N. S.,), 507. There is no doubt on the English authorities that the scale of costs should be as between party and party. The only authorities in the Indian Law Reports are P. v. P. (1872) 9 B. L. R., Ap., 6, and Natall v. Natall, (1885) I. L. R., 9 Mad., 12. They appear at first sight to be against this contention; but in the first case the point was not alluded to in the judgment, and in the second case the point was not raised.

[225] Ameer Ali, J.— This was a wife's petition for dissolution of her marriage on the ground of the respondent's cruelty and adultery. A commission was taken out to examine witnesses in England, and the result of their evidence is that the petitioner is satisfied that the charge of adultery brought by her against the husband was wholly unfounded. She therefore applied to withdraw the suit, and by consent an order was made to that effect on the 2nd September instant. I, however, reserved for consideration the question of the principle on which the petitioner's costs to be paid by the respondent should be taxed. On her side it has been argued that the costs should be taxed as between attorney and client. On the respondent's side it has been urged that they should be taxed as between party and party. So far as can be gathered from the reports this is the first case in which the question has been expressly raised in this country, and as it involves a principle of some importance it is necessary that it should be carefully and fully considered.

The Indian cases cited at the bar do not afford much assistance. In the case before MACPHERSON, J., in P. v. P. (1872) 9 B. L.R.,Ap., 6, the prayer was that the petitioner, who was the attorney for the wife, should have his costs taxed as between attorney and client. The learned Judge, after dealing with the facts and circumstances of the case, made the following order:—

"Therefore, although I shall order the petitioner's costs to be taxed and to be paid by the respondent to her attorney (he being substantially entitled to such an order), her attorney must personally bear his own costs of this application. The petitioner's costs will be taxed on scale 2."

There is in the ordering part no reference to the prayer in the petition that the costs should be taxed as between attorney and client. The inference is that that portion of the prayer was not acceded to.

In Natall v. Natall, (1885) I. L. R., 9 Mad., 12, it was directed that the costs of the wife should be taxed as between attorney and client, but it does not appear that the point was argued or considered.

[226] The Indian Divorce Act (section 7) provides: "That subject to the provisions contained in this Act, the High Courts and District Courts shall, in all suits and proceedings hereunder, act and give relief on principles and rules which, in the opinion of the said Courts, are as nearly as may be conformable to the principles and rules on which the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes in England for the time being acts, and gives relief."

Section 35 deals with the question of costs, but does not lay down any rule regarding the mode in which the costs of the wife should be taxed. Section 45 declares that "subject to the provisions herein contained, all proceedings under this Act between party and party shall be regulated by the Code of Civil Procedure."

Under these circumstances I must, having regard to the provisions of section 7 of the Act, look for guidance to the English cases.

Mr. Garth for the petitioner has contended that as the husband has to pay the wife's costs, it follows that he must pay what she is liable for to her attorney, and he has referred to Robertson v. Robertson, (1881) L. R., 6 P. D., 119. This was an appeal from the judgment of the Divorce Court, and one of the questions raised was whether the costs of the wife payable by the husband were not to exceed the amount paid into Court or secured by him. It was held that such costs were not limited to the amount paid into Court or secured by the husband, and the conclusion come to is thus expressed by the Master of the Rolls at p. 123:—

"It appears to me, therefore, that when the defence is fairly and reasonably conducted the solicitor ought to be paid in full his costs, that is his costs properly incurred."

In Otway v. Otway, (1888) L. R., 13 P. D., 141, a similar question came up for consideration. In that case the wife was found guilty of adultery, and the question was whether the husband was liable to pay the costs reasonably incurred by her in the Appellate Court, and it was held that he was. No question as to the mode of taxation was considered or decided in either of those two cases.

[227] The cases cited for the respondent bear more directly on the question. In Stocken v. Pattrick, (1873) 29 L. T., (N. S.) 507, the solicitor brought an action at common law for the recovery of his costs from the husband, and Chief Baron KELLY, in dealing with the questions raised before him expressed himself in terms which clearly indicate the principle on which I ought to act in this Court. The husband, who was the defendant in that action had taken various objections to the suit of the solicitor, and in dealing with one of them, the Chief Baron says at p. 509:—

"Then there is another defence set up on behalf of the defendant which Mr. Griffiths argued with much earnestness and considerable ability. He says, and says truly, that where a suit of this nature is instituted by a wife against her husband, it must be carried on through the medium of an attorney, and the attorney may, under certain circumstances, call for his costs from day to day. That is the rule in the Divorce Court having jurisdiction over causes of this nature, and no doubt he is entitled to claim his costs from day to day. Moreover, if the suit is proceeded with and the result is a decree, he may claim the costs in that suit, if the suit has terminated in favour of the wife. No doubt it is in the discretion or judgment of the Court to allow them and decree to the wife the costs of the suit; but whether the plaintiff shall recover and so be held entitled to the costs of suit, or whether, as it may be, the suit may be found against her and no costs are allowed,—if the costs are allowed, no doubt the attorney may obtain these costs, but only costs between party and party, and they have nothing to do with the costs as between attorney and client any more than in any action of debt in this Court. The attorney may recover those costs. He is nevertheless entitled to sue his client on whose behalf he has carried on the suit for the extra costs between attorney and client, and recover them subject to the deduction of any money he may have received on account."

This shows that in the Matrimonial Court the wife's costs are taxable as between party and party, and that the attorney may recover the rest of the costs in an action at law against the husband.

Another case Ottaway v. Hamilton, (1878) L. R., 3 C. P. D., 393, bears still more distinctly on the subject. There also the wife's attorney had brought an [228] action for his extra costs not covered by the taxation in the Matrimonial Court. The nature of the claim is thus stated by the Judge in the first Court: "The costs of the wife against the defendant as between party and party had been taxed upon the application of the wife, but the costs for which the plaintiff sued defendant in this action had been disallowed, and the plaintiff sought to recover them as costs which would be properly allowed as between attorney and client, and as such being necessaries supplied to the wife." And holding that they were necessaries the Judge decreed the plaintiff's claim.

On appeal by the defendant, Lord Justice BRAMWELL observed as follows: "I cannot see that because the plaintiff has obtained from the Divorce Division such sums as are allowed upon taxation, he is to be debarred from recovering the extra costs by an action against the husband."

The rule applied to taxation in the Divorce Division is indicated here, but it is more clearly expressed in Lord Justice THESIGER'S judgment at p. 401. He says:—

"I now come to the question whether, under the Divorce Acts, taxation is the only remedy which the wife or the solicitor appointed by her has for the recovery of extra costs. If it could have been established that these statutes provide for the taxation of a wife's costs against her husband as between solicitor and client, there would have been great force in the argument that the remedy to be adopted is the use of the process of the Divorce Division to obtain payment of them. At all events the contention would have been well founded that where a wife, or a solicitor employed by her, applies to the Divorce Division to tax the costs, there would be such an election as to prevent either of them suing subsequently in an action at law." Then, after referring to section 51 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 20 and 21 Vict., Chapter 85, he proceeds: "These words seem to confer only the power of giving costs as between party and party, and in many cases the jurisdiction of the Court ought to be thus confined, for it has to deal, not only with husband and wife, but also with other parties, at least where the husband is the petitioner."

I may here observe that the power over costs contained in the Code of Civil Procedure is given to the Matrimonial Jurisdiction [229] of this Court by section 45 of the Indian Divorce Act, and that this section is thus in effect similar to section 51 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, and points to the same conclusion.

Lord Justice THESIGER also refers to Allen v. Allen and D'Arcy, (1860), 2 Sw. & Tr., 107, as showing that the Matrimonial Courts tax the costs of the wife payable by the husband between party and party.

In this case it was taken for granted that the wife's costs are taxed as between party and party, but the Judge Ordinary pointed out that in applying the rule a liberal construction should be put upon it. He says: "This taxation must certainly be reviewed. The question of the principle on which costs are to be taxed in matrimonial suits has not yet been settled, but I apprehend that I must adopt, as far as I can, the principles on which the Ecclesiastical Courts proceeded. I am informed that the principle of taxation in those Courts was as between party and party; but that term had a very different construction from that put upon it in Common Law Courts, because there they only allow the costs of such issues as are found for the persons who are to receive costs." He then proceeds to state the grounds on which a liberal construction should be put on the rule.

The result is, that I must follow the English rule, which seems clear. It will be open to the attorney of the wife to sue the husband for those costs which may not be allowed as between party and party. My direction is that the petitioner's costs, including the costs of this application, be taxed as between party and party, but liberally according at [to ?] the meaning put upon the scale in Allen v. Allen, (1860) 2 Sw. & Tr., 1071. The conclusion at which I have arrived is, I find, in accordance with the practice followed in this Court. Mr. Belchambers, the Taxing Officer, has at my request furnished a note, in which he says · "The wife's costs in a matrimonial suit are taxed as between party and party on a liberal scale, full costs properly incurred being allowed." See note at pp. 291 and 292, Belchambers' "Rules and Orders."

The 23rd September, 1897.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE AND MR. JUSTICE WILKINS.

Ali Fakir............Appellant

Charge to Jury—Misdirection by the Judge—Erroneous verdict owing to misdirection—Failure of justice—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), sections 418, 423 (d) and 537.

On a charge of rape the Judge in his charge to the jury said: "You will observe that this sexual intercourse was against the girl's will and without her consent, &c.," instead of saying, as he ought to have done, "you will have to determine upon the evidence in this case, whether the intercourse was against the girl's will, &c.," and the charge went on in the same style of stating to the jury what had been proved instead of leaving it to them to decide what in their opinion was proved. In the concluding sentence of the charge the Judge said: "You have seen the witnesses, and I have no doubt that you will return a just verdict."

Held, that such a charge amounted to a clear misdirection, and that the verdict was erroneous owing to such misdirection. Even the concluding sentence did not satisfy the requirements of a proper charge.

The provisions in section 423 (d) and section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code do not require that the Court is to go through the facts and find for itself whether the verdict is actually erroneous upon the facts.

THE accused in this case was charged under sections 376 and 354 of the Penal Code. The jury returned a verdict of guilty, and the Judge accepting the verdict sentenced the accused to transportation for life. The accused appealed against this finding and sentence on the ground that there was misdirection to the jury, and that the verdict was erroneous in consequence of such misdirection, and also on the ground of severity of sentence.

No one appeared for the accused.

The Officiating Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Abdur Rahim) appeared for the Crown.

The judgment of the High Court (Banerjee and Wilkins, JJ.) was as follows:—

[231] The appellant in this case was tried by jury before the Sessions Court of Dacca on charges of rape and assault to outrage female modesty, punishable under sections 376 and 354 of the Indian Penal Code. The jury returned a verdict of guilty, and the learned Sessions Judge accepting the verdict has sentenced the accused to transportation for life. Against this finding and sentence the accused has appealed; and the appeal lies on a matter of law only (see section 418 of the Code of Criminal Procedure) and also on the question of the severity of the sentence which, as the section just referred to provides, is to be deemed a matter of law. Clause (d) of section 423 further provides: "Nothing hereinafter contained shall authorize the Court to alter or reverse the verdict of a jury unless it is of opinion that such verdict is erroneous owing to a misdirection by the Judge or to a misunderstanding on the part of the jury of the law as laid down by him." Therefore, before a verdict can be interfered with, we must be satisfied that such verdict is erroneous owing to a misdirection by the Judge or a misunderstanding on the part of the jury as to the law laid down by him. In the present case, the law has been clearly laid down by the Judge, and no question can be raised as to the law laid down by him being misunderstood by the jury. The question, therefore, which really arises for our consideration here is whether the verdict is erroneous owing to a misdirection by the Judge; and that question resolves itself into two other questions, first, whether there was any misdirection by the Judge in this case, and, secondly, if there was any misdirection by the Judge, whether it can be said that the verdict was erroneous owing to such misdirection, or, in other words, whether within the meaning of section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code the misdirection has occasioned a failure of justice.

With reference to the first question, we observe that the learned Judge's charge to the jury is vitiated by this material misdirection, that it never once tells the jury that it is for them to consider whether upon the evidence adduced in the case the offences are established as a matter of fact. After having explained the law to them, the learned Judge says to the jury: "You will observe that in this case the sexual intercourse was against the girl's will [232] and without her consent, or, at any rate, with only such consent as she gave under fear of the accused's threats of violence to her," instead of saying, as he ought to have done, "you will have to determine upon the evidence in this case whether the sexual intercourse was against the girl's will, etc.," and the charge goes on in that same style of stating to the jury what has been proved, instead of leaving it to them to decide what, in their opinion, is proved. This amounts to a clear misdirection. The view taken upon this point is fully supported by the case of the Queen-Empress v. Bepin Biswas, (1884) I. L. R., 10 Cal., 970, where the learned Judges observe: "It was certainly open to the Judge to express his own opinion regarding it" (that is, the evidence), "and he did so when he stated that he was unable to attach any weight to it. He should, however, have been careful to add that it was for the jury to form their own opinion on this evidence;" and we may add that the same view is taken by PHEAR, J., in the Queen-Empress v. Raj Kumar Bose, (1873) 10 B. L. R., Ap., 36

Our attention was called by the learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer to the concluding sentence of the charge, in which the learned Judge says: "You have seen the witnesses, and I have no doubt that you will return a just verdict." Even that does not in our opinion satisfy the requirements of a proper charge. The learned Judge there does not tell the jury to form their own opinion upon the evidence. The passage just quoted in our opinion means no more than this, that the learned Judge expects the jury to return a verdict which, in his opinion, as indicated throughout the charge, was the just verdict, or, in other words, a verdict of guilty.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the first question, namely, whether there has been any material misdirection by the Judge, must, in this case, be answered in the affirmative.

Then there remains the question, whether, owing to such misdirection, the verdict is not erroneous, or, in other words, there has not been a failure of justice. On this point the view we take is this, that both clause (d) of section 423, and section 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, require that before the verdict of a jury [233] can be reversed on the ground of a misdirection by the Judge, this Court must be satisfied that the misdirection was of a nature such that it may reasonably be supposed that the verdict was erroneous by reason of such misdirection; or, in other words, that there has been a failure of justice by reason of such misdirection. But the two provisions of the law just referred to do not in our opinion require that this Court is to go through the facts, and find for itself whether the verdict is actually erroneous upon the facts. The view we take on this point is in accordance with that taken by this Court in the case of Wafadar Khan v. Queen-Empress, (1894) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 955.

Having regard to the nature of the misdirection pointed out above, it is impossible for us to say that the verdict has not been erroneous, that is, is not vitiated, by reason of the misdirection. We must, therefore, set aside the finding and sentence and order the case to be retried.

Revision—Power of Interference by the High Court —Test as to whether case is of exceptional nature or not—Practice in Criminal Case.

The High Court will not interfere in a case during its pendency in a subordinate Court unless it is of an exceptional nature, and one test of its being of such a nature is that a bare statement of the facts of the case without any elaborate argument should be sufficient to convince the High Court that the case is a fit one for its interference at an intermediate stage. Chandi Persad v. Abdur Rahman [(1894) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 131] discussed.

THE accused in this case was charged with having committed criminal trespass. He moved the High Court to set aside the proceedings of the Deputy Magistrate, including the charge framed, on the ground that upon the facts stated by the com-[234]plainant the trespass complained of was not criminal but civil trespass.

Mr. Sinha and Babu Dasarathi Sanyal for the Petitioner.

Mr. P. L. Roy and Babu Romesh Chunder Bose for the Opposite Party.

The judgment of the High Court (Banerjee and Wilkins, JJ.) was as follows :—

We are asked to set aside the proceedings in this case including the charge that had been framed against the petitioner, on the ground that upon the facts stated by the complainant, the trespass, which is the offence complained of, was not criminal trespass, and could only be civil trespass, if trespass it could be called; and in support of the contention that we ought to interfere in this case, three cases have been referred to, namely, Ishur Chunder Karmokar v. Seetul Dass Mitter, (1872) 17 W. R., Cr. 47, Shumbhu Nath Sarkar v. Ram Kamal Guha, (1883) 13 C. L. R., 212, and Chandi Pershad v. Abdur Rahman, (1894) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 131.

The first question that arises for consideration is whether we ought to interfere at this stage of the case. The learned Counsel for the petitioner contends upon the authority of the last mentioned case that we ought to interfere.

No doubt we have the power to interfere in any case and at any stage of it; and we quite assent to the proposition enunciated in the case of Chandi Pershad v. Abdur Rahman that "there can be no doubt whatever that we have the power to interfere at any stage of the case, and when it is brought to our notice that a person has been subjected to harassment of an illegal prosecution, it is our bounden duty to interfere." But whilst on the one hand it is our bounden duty to prevent the harassment of parties by illegal prosecutions, on the other hand it is our duty to allow proceedings in the subordinate Courts to go on and take their natural course, unless there is any exceptional ground for our interference; because if the rule was not limited in this way, the result would be, that it would be open to every person accused of an offence before a subordinate Court to come up [236] to this Court at any stage of the case, and as often as he likes in the course of the trial, and ask us to put a stop to further proceedings. Such a thing the Legislature could never have intended by any provision in the Code of Criminal Procedure, and such a thing would seriously impede the speedy administration of justice. The learned Counsel for the petitioner very properly concedes that the cases for our interference during their pendency in the subordinate Courts must be of an exceptional nature. The question then is, what should be the practical test to apply, to determine whether any particular case is of that exceptional nature. Without meaning to lay down any hard and fast rule, which it is impossible as it is undesirable to do upon a question like this, we think we may say that one safe practical test would be this, namely, that a bare statement of the facts of the case without any elaborate argument should be sufficient to convince this Court that it is a fit one for its interference at an intermediate stage. The learned Judges who decided the case of Chandi Pershad v. Abdur Rahman thought in the exercise of their judicial discretion that the case before them was of a nature such that their interference was justified. In the present instance, without prejudging it in any way, and without pronouncing any opinion upon its merits, we must say that the case does not fulfil this test. The contention of the learned Counsel that upon the facts alleged by the complainant the offence of criminal trespass is not at all made out, may be perfectly sound; but as we have said above, we do not think it necessary for us at this stage of the case to go into that question, if it has to be determined upon any lengthy or elaborate argument.

In this view of the case, and for the reasons stated above, the rule must be discharged.

The 14th January, 1897.
PRESENT :
SIR FRANCIS MACLEAN, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY, AND MR. JUSTICE TREVELYAN.

Mohendra Lall Mitter and another............Plaintiffs
versus Anundo Coomar Mitter and others...... .....Defendants.*

Letters Patent, High Court, 1865, clause 15—Order refusing application to commit for contempt—Appeal—Judgment.

An appeal lies from an order refusing an application to commit for contempt of Court.

THIS was an appeal against a decision of Mr. Justice SALE, made in suit No. 522 of 1882 on the 13th August 1896. The JUDGMENT was as follows :—

SALE, J —"I think the circumstances clearly show that this is not a case where the Court ought to commit the parties on whom the rule was served for contempt.

The rule was obtained on these grounds, that the Receiver was in possession of the estate of Durga Churn Mitter, and that in 1895 his possession had been interfered with by the persons named in the rule, and that that interference amounted to a contempt.

The parties on whom the rule was served have appeared to show cause "why they should not be committed to jail for contempt for interfering with the possession of the Receiver of this Court and Receiver appointed in this suit of the zemindaries belonging to the estate of Durga Churn Mitter, deceased, in the pleadings in this suit named."

The whole question is whether, on the materials before me, I am prepared to say that it has been proved that the parties showing cause have been guilty of contempt. The affidavit which has been filed on behalf of the persons showing cause places a complexion on the case very different from that which it bore when the rule was obtained.

The decree in the suit was made so far back as 1884. By it the Receiver was appointed Receiver of the estate of Durga [237] Churn Mitter. There was a very long delay in completing the decree. That was not done until 1889, and no steps appear to have been taken by the parties to the suit to put the Receiver in possession till June 1895, and it is quite clear that the Receiver has never succeeded in getting complete possession of the estate. He found what one would have expected him to have found after all these years of delay, that the parties to the suit had been busy in transferring their shares to outsiders, and that these outsiders denied all knowledge of the appointment of the Receiver, and claimed that they had paid good consideration for leases executed in their favour, and insisted on their right being recognised. The result was that there was a struggle between the Receiver on the one side and the lessees on the other; and the assistance of the Criminal Courts appears to have been invoked by both sides. Now, while it is very difficult to say that the Receiver has succeeded in obtaining possession of the estate, it is beyond doubt that he is entitled to possession; and if the usual steps had been taken in the proper time, I should have given him every assistance in obtaining possession.

It seems to me he would have been well advised if, instead of going to the Criminal Courts, he had applied to this Court for its assistance and for an order for possession against the persons who dispute his title. It is impossible, in a proceeding of this kind, finally to determine the question whether or not these transfers set up are valid or merely benami, and executed for the purpose of resisting the Receiver. But having regard to the nature of the dispute and the steps taken for the purpose of ousting the lessees, it seems to me it would be an injustice to visit the lessees with the punishment for contempt. In order that the Court should exercise its powers of punishment for contempt, it must first be shown clearly that the Receiver is entitled to possession of the property, and next that that possession is interfered with by some person who has no bonâ fide claim to a superior title. That is not the sort of case which, under all the circumstances, can be fairly said to have been established here.

The rule must be discharged with costs. I have been asked to make an order for possession as against the lessees If the rule served on them had called on them to show cause why such [238] an order should not be made, I should, as at present advised, have been inclined to make the order; but I cannot do so now, as they have not been called on to show cause against any such order. They are here merely to show cause why they should not be committed to jail."

Mr. T. A. Apcar and Mr Chowdhry for the Appellants.

Mr. Dunne and Mr Avetoom for the Respondents.

Mr. Dunne raised the preliminary objection that there could be no appeal from such an order as this. There can certainly be no appeal under the Civil Procedure Code; if there be any appeal it must be under the Charter. But the order is not a 'judgment' within the meaning of clause 15 of the Charter. The persons sought to be committed are not parties to the suit, and there is no final decision as to any right or liability. There can be no appeal from such an order as the present one because it is the mere exercise of a discretion. Mohabir Prosad Singh v. Adhikari Kunwar, (1894) I. L R, 21 Cal, 473, 475; Kishen Pershad Panday v. Tiluckdhari Lall, (1890) I. L. R., 18 Cal, 182; Lutf Ali Khan v. Asgar Reza, (1890) I. L. R, 17 Cal., 455 The case of The Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v The Oriental Gas Company, (1872) 8 B. L. R., 433, shows what a "judgment" is, and that case has always been followed. [O'KINEALY, J., referred to Achaya v. Ratnavelu (1885,) I. L. R., 9 Mad., 253 to In re Rajagopal (1886,) I. L R., 9 Mad, 447 and to Banno Bibi v. Mehdi Husain (1889,) I. L. R., 11 All., 375.] Section 591 of the Code prohibits an appeal in such a case as this. And in England it has been held that no such appeal will lie, Ashworth v. Outram, (1877) L. R., 5 Ch. D., 943.

Mr. T. A. Apcar for the Appellants.—According to the usual practice of this Court, this question has never been considered arguable. The cases cited by Mr. Dunne were all under the [239] Code this is not. It is a matter falling within the general jurisdiction of the Court, and the Court is invested with all the powers of the Queen's Bench Division and Chancery Division in England—Martin v. Lawrence, (1879) I. L. R., 4 Cal., 655. In Jarmain v. Chatterton, (1882) L R, 20 Ch. D., 493, it was held that there is an appeal from a refusal to commit, as it is not purely a matter of discretion, and that decision was followed in Bristow v. Smyth, (1885) 2 Times L. R., 36.

The term "judgment" must be liberally construed, as in DeSouza v. Coles, (1868) 3 Mad. H. C., 384; and if the decision determines a question of right or liability, as this does, it is appealable, The Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v. The Oriental Gas Company, (1872) 8 B. L. R., 433. An appeal lies from an order for committal for contempt because contempt is a kind of offence; and it is difficult to see why an appeal should not lie from an order refusing to commit.

Mr. Dunne in reply.

The Court (Maclean, C. J., O'Kinealy, J. and Trevelyan, J.) were of opinion that the order was appealable, and they accordingly heard and dismissed the appeal. [The rest of the decision, however, is immaterial for the purposes of this report.]

PRESENT:

SIR FRANCIS MACLEAN, KNIGHT, CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY, AND MR. JUSTICE TREVELYAN

The Secretary of State for India in Council............Defendant

Rajlucki Debi and another...... .....Plaintiff and Defendants.*

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), section 424—Suit against the Secretary of State for India in Council - Notice— Public Demands Recovery Act (Bengal Act VII of 1880), sections 8, 9, 20—Sale for default in payment of costs of realising Government revenue— Common ground of appeal—Code of Civil Procedure, section 544.

Section 424 of the Civil Procedure Code provides that "No suit shall be instituted against the Secretary of State in Council, or against a public [240] officer in respect of an act purporting to be done by him in his official capacity, until the expiration of two months next after notice in writing has been in the case of the Secretary of State in Council, delivered to, or left at the office of, a Secretary to the Local Government or the Collector of the District" etc.

The plaintiff had instituted a suit against the Secretary of State for India in Council to set aside a certain sale of the plaintiff's property (possession of which had been given to the purchaser), but had not given him the notice prescribed by section 424 of the Civil Procedure Code. The first Court (AMEER ALI, J.) gave the plaintiff a decree.

Held, on appeal (reversing the decision of AMEER ALI, J.) that whether or not the words "in respect of an act purporting to be done by him in his official capacity" relate only to a public officer and not to the Secretary of State, no suit whatever is maintainable against the Secretary of State, unless the notice prescribed by section 424 of the Code of Civil Procedure has been given and that therefore the present suit could not be maintained.

A SUM of Rs. 4-1-0 was due from the plaintiff to the Collector of the 24-Pergannahs, by way of process fees incurred in the realisation of income-tax from the plaintiff. The plaintiff declined to pay that amount; and certain land of hers was sold by the Collector in default of payment, and purchased for Rs. 2,600 by the defendant Radharomon Shaw, who was put into possession. The plaintiff subsequently brought a suit against the defendants, in which she prayed, inter alia, that the sale certificate, and the sale and all proceedings connected therewith, might be set aside, and that the defendants, or one of them, might be ordered to pay the costs of the suit.

The suit was tried by AMEER ALI, J., who made a decree in favour of the plaintiff, directing that the sale certificate should be cancelled, that the purchase-money should be returned to the purchaser, and that the defendants should pay the costs of the suit. He held on the authority of The Midland Railway v. Local Board of Wellington, (1883) L. R., 11 Q. B. D., 788; Waterhouse v. Keen, (1825) 4 B. and C., 200; Davies v. Mayor of Swansea, (1853) 8 Exch., 808 : 22 L. J. Exch., 297; Wilson v. Mayor and Corporation of Halifax, (1868) L. R., 3 Ex. 114; Flower v. Local Board of Low [241] Leyton, (1877) L. R., 5 Ch D., 347, and Bhau Balapa v. Nana, (1888) I. L. R., 13 Bom., 343, that the qualification "in respect of an act purporting to be done by him in his official capacity," in section 424 of the Civil Procedure Code, related to the Secretary of State for India in Council, as well as to a public officer, and that in actions of tort no notice was necessary.

The Secretary of State appealed

Mr. Dunne (with him The Advocate-General Sir Charles Paul) for the appellant.—Notice of action as prescribed by section 424 of the Civil Procedure Code is essential. The qualification with regard to acts done in an official capactiy is not referable to the Secretary of State. The section is an absolute prohibition of a suit against the Secretary of State, without notice, whatever the nature of the suit may be. But in any event the sale, if it can be said to be the act of the Secretary of State at all, was an act done in his official capacity. In Act X of 1877, section 424, the words "in respect of an act purporting to be done by him in his official capacity" were not present; they were introduced by Act XII of 1879. But this latter Act also introduced the same qualification into two other sections, viz., 428, 429, showing that it had reference only to a public officer; for section 428 relates only to a public officer, and in section 429 the Secretary of State is differentiated from a public officer. The case of Bhau Balapa v. Nana, (1888) I. L. R., 13 Bom., 343, was a totally different case; it was not a suit against any one in his official capacity, but only against the Collector as guardian of a minor's property.

Mr. Hill for the purchaser, Radharomon Shaw, supported the argument of Mr. Dunne, and urged that the sale could not be set aside, unless the certificate of sale also was set aside, so that the purchaser could only be made a party if the plaintiff sought to set aside the sale as well as the certificate.

The plaintiff did not appear on the appeal either in person or by Counsel.

The following judgments were delivered by the Court (MACLEAN, C. J., and O'KINEALY and TREVELYAN, JJ.):—

[242] Maclean, C. J.—It is unfortunate that in this case we have not had the advantage of the plaintiff being represented by Counsel, so that we might have heard from him the arguments by which he sought to maintain the judgment of the learned Judge in the Court below. The point which we have to decide is a very short one, nor does it strike me as one of any real difficulty.

The suit was instituted by the plaintiff against the Secretary of State for India and another gentleman, who is the purchaser under a certificate of sale following a decree under which certain property was put up for sale, and sold to meet the claim of the Government in respect of certain moneys due from the plaintiff, to set aside that sale.

An objection is taken by the Secretary of State in Council that he has not been served with the necessary notice under section 424 of the Code of Civil Procedure to which he submits he is entitled before an action can be instituted. The question to my mind depends upon what is the true construction and effect of that section of the Code. The section runs as follows :—

"No suit shall be instituted against the Secretary of State in Council, or against a public officer in respect of an act purporting to be done by him in his official capacity, until the expiration of two months next after notice in writing has been, in the case of the Secretary of State in Council, delivered to, or left at the office of, a Secretary to the Local Government or the Collector of the District, and in the case of a public officer, delivered to him or left at his office, stating the cause of action," and so forth.

It is admitted that no such notice was given. In his defence the Secretary of State raised the point that such notice ought to have been given, and that in the absence of such a notice the action is not maintainable.

It was contended before the Court below, and it is contended here, that upon the true construction of section 424 the words "in respect of an act purporting to be done by him in his official capacity" do not apply to the case of the Secretary of State in Council. Looking, if one may look, at the punctuation of the section and at the section grammatically, I incline to take the view so submitted as the correct construction, but it is not really [243] material for the purpose of this decision, for it is clear that what was done in this case by the Secretary of State in Council was done and must be regarded as having been done by him in his official capacity. Therefore, whether the view suggested that those words do not apply to the Secretary of State in Council, but only to public officers, be sound or not, becomes immaterial.

Now, the language of that section, read according to its ordinary and natural meaning, is precise and clear It is a section dealing with procedure. We are asked to cut down the ordinary meaning of the words, and to hold that they mean something quite different from that which in their ordinary acceptation they do. The section says : "No suit shall be instituted." We are told we ought to confine the words to a particular class of suits, that is, to suits founded on tort, and claiming damages. I am unable to see why the section should be cut down as suggested.

A variety of cases were cited in the Court below,—English cases based upon English Acts of Parliament in which the language and the subject-matter is different. Upon this it is not out of place to refer to what has been said by Lord MACNAGHTEN in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee in a very recent case, Narendra Nath Sircar v. Kamalbasini Dasi, (1896) I. L. R., 23 Cal., 563 : L. R., 23 I. A., 26. It is true that in that case the Judicial Committee was dealing with the question of the construction of a will having regard to a particular section of the Indian Succession Act.

The judgment runs. "The learned Judges of the High Court have taken the line which was approved in the House of Lords. The Subordinate Judge followed exactly the opposite course. His judgment, with much display of learning and research, is a good example of the practice which Lord HERSCHELL condemns, and the mischief which the Indian Succession Act, 1865, seems designed to prevent. To construe one will by reference to expressions of more or less doubtful import to be found in other wills, is for the most part an unprofitable exercise. Happily that method of interpretation has gone out of fashion in this country. To search and sift the heaps of cases on wills which cumber our English law reports, in order to understand and interpret wills of people speaking a different tongue, trained in different habits of thought and [244] brought up under different conditions of life, seems almost absurd."

It seems that substituting "English Acts of Parliament" for "wills" the observations of the Privy Council may be usefully applied to this case. In lieu of reading section 424 by the light of the decisions of the English Courts in cases under various English Acts of Parliament, where the language and in most cases the objects of the Acts are different, I prefer to read the section itself and try to arrive at a conclusion from the language used as to what the Legislature actually meant. But even if the true principle be that the statutory notice is only requisite in cases of tort, as I understand is the principle of Mr Justice AMEER ALI'S judgment, the plaintiff's suit in this case is based upon an alleged tort on the part of the Secretary of State, namely, in wrongfully selling the property, and asking for costs against him on the footing of such wrongful act.

If the object of such a section as 424 be that the notice is given so that, before an action is brought, the Secretary of State may have breathing time so as to enable him to determine whether reparation ought not to be made,—if that, I say, be the object,—I fail to see why the principle does not apply to the present case; if so, the notice was requisite. There is a short reference in the judgment to a decision of the late Master of the Rolls (Sir GEORGE JESSEL) in Flower v. Local Board of Low Leyton, (1877) L.R., 5 Ch. D., 347, to the effect that notice cannot be necessary where the object of the action is to restrain an immediate and irreparable injury. The materials before us do not enable us to say how far the present case comes within the principle laid down in the decision of Sir GEORGE JESSEL, though I notice that no injunction is asked for against the Secretary of State. It would appear, therefore, that he, at any rate, could not be described, and was not regarded by the plaintiff, as doing any immediate or irreparable injury, which necessitated, as against him, an immediate interlocutory order for an injunction. For these reasons it appears to me that upon the preliminary point the judgment of the Court below is erroneous, and I think the appeal must succeed with costs.

[245] O'Kinealy, J.—I agree in the judgment just delivered by the learned Chief Justice, because reading section 424 of the Procedure Code, I find that it declares that no suit can be instituted against the Secretary of State "until the expiration of two months next after notice in writing has been delivered to or left at the office of a Secretary to the local Government," and I can find no indication that any limitation has been put upon the word "suit."

Trevelyan, J.—I think it quite clear that the Secretary of State was entitled to notice of this suit for the reasons given by the learned Chief Justice.

Mr. Hill.—The purchaser is entitled to his costs against somebody, and in the view of this Court the Secretary of State certainly ought not to have been made a party. [MACLEAN, C.J.—Do you ask to have the suit dismissed as against the purchaser?] Yes: for, although he is only the respondent, he is entitled to take a ground common to all the defendants. The question of notice is common ground. Notice must be given in order that the suit may lie against the Secretary of State, and as the suit has been dismissed as against him, it should be dismissed as against the other defendant also. By the dismissal of the suit, the sale certificate is allowed to remain, and the purchaser's title is complete. If the suit is not to be dismissed as against the purchaser, the Court would be bound to direct the Secretary of State to refund. But it cannot do that, because, by the present decision of the Court, there is no suit against the Secretary of State. [MACLEAN, C.J.—Is that a ground of defence common to you both within section 544 of the Code?] Yes, because it goes to the entire suit of the plaintiff.

Maclean, C.J.—The result of the judgment of the Court is that the suit is dismissed, not only against the Secretary of State for India in Council, but also against the defendant Radharomon Shaw with costs both in the Court below and in this Court.

We make no order as to the costs of the Appeal No. 23 of 1896.

Attorney for the Appellant: The Government Solicitor (Mr. W. K. Eddis).

[246] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 5th May, 1897.

PRESENT:

SIR FRANCIS WILLIAM MACLEAN, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Sarala Dasi and others............Plaintiffs

versus

Jogendra Narayan Basu and another............Defendants.*

Interest—Mortgage—Construction of Mortgage—Post diem interest, where none is stipulated for in the deed.

Where a mortgage-deed contained a covenant for payment of principal and interest at a fixed rate in two years, and further covenants not to transfer the mortgaged property until payment of principal and interest, and also on failure of payment of interest for "one year" to treat the amount after the lapse of that year, as principal.—

Held, upon the construction of the mortgage deed, the parties intended that if the principal were not paid by the stipulated date, interest should continue to run at the rate mentioned in the deed, and that the mortgagee was entitled to recover the principal with interest at the stipulated rate to the date of the decree of the first Court, and at the rate of 6 per cent. thereafter.

THIS appeal arose out of an action brought by the plaintiff upon a mortgage bond, dated the 25th Falgoon 1292 B. S. (8th March 1886). The bond amongst others, contained the following covenant:—

"We shall pay interest on the said amount at the rate of 1 per cent. per mensem, until the said principal and interest thereon are paid up; we shall not sell or make a gift of the said mehal or any way prejudice our rights . . . If we fail to pay the interest of one year, then, after the lapse of one year the said amount of interest will be considered as principal and we shall pay interest on it at the above mentioned rate. We shall repay the whole amount together with interest thereon in the month of Chaitra 1294 B. S. (March 1888) the time fixed for the payment of the same. If we cannot repay the principal amount together with the interest thereon within the fixed time, then you shall institute a suit against us and realize the whole amount by sale of the mortgaged properties; and if the whole sum fails to be realized by this means, then you shall realize it by the sale of our other moveable and immoveable properties standing either in our names or benami."

The only question material for the purposes of this report [247] was, what was the rate of interest (if any) the plaintiff was entitled to after the due date. The Subordinate Judge on this question observed:—

"I am of opinion that, although there is no express stipulation in the bond for payment of interest after the due date, still the plaintiff is entitled to claim damages for breach of contract from the defendants, from the due date to the date of the institution of this suit. Had the defendants paid the amount due to the plaintiff on the due date, then the plaintiff would be able to lend that amount to some other person and get interest from him. It has been already shown the defendants did not pay the amount due to the plaintiff on the date on which it was due, and caused the plaintiff to refrain from instituting a suit by their entreaties. Under such circumstances the plaintiff is entitled to get damages in the shape of interest, after the due date, at a rate at which moneys are lent with security. Neither party has adduced any evidence to prove the rate of interest of mortgage bonds in the locality at the time the due date expired. Under these circumstances I think the Court ought to allow simple interest in lieu of damages to the plaintiff after the due date at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum."

From this decision the plaintiff appealed to the High Court, on the ground that, upon the construction of the mortgage bond, the Subordinate Judge ought to have allowed interest after due date at the stipulated rate.

Babu Sarada Churn Mitter and Babu Haro Kumar Mitra for the Appellants.

Babu Nil Madhub Bose and Babu Shib Chunder Palit for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and BANERJEE, J.) was as follows:—

Maclean, C.J., (BANERJEE, J., concurring).—The appellants complain that the Judge in the Court below has not given them the interest to which they are entitled on the mortgage created in their favour by the defendants, the realisation of which security was the subject matter of the present suit. The questions we have to decide are first, whether, upon the construction of the mortgage deed, the plaintiffs as mortgagees are entitled to post diem interest at the rate stipulated for in the deed.

If upon the construction of the deed, we arrive at a conclusion adverse to the plaintiffs, the appellants, then a further question would arise whether the plaintiffs are entitled to any and [248] what interest upon the mortgage money up to the date of payment.

In the view we take of the construction of the deed the second question does not arise. In my opinion, there is, though not an express, an implied, stipulation that post diem interest is to be paid and to be paid at the rate stipulated for in the deed. We can only determine the intention of the parties upon the question of interest from the terms of the deed itself. One deed cannot be construed by reference to the construction judicially put upon another deed, but it is impossible to avoid noticing the marked resemblance between the terms of the deed in this case and those in the deed in the case of Mathura Das v. Narindar Bahadur Pal, (1897) I. L. R., 19 All., 39: L.R., 23 I. A., 138, a case which has been much commented upon in the course of the present argument. But I refer to and rely upon that case, not by reason of the similitude of language between the deed in that and in the present case, but with reference to the arguments upon which, in construing the deed in that case, the Privy Council relied and based their conclusion. The reasoning in that case appears to me to be very pertinent to the present. Looking at the provisions of the deed in this case, I think it was the intention of the parties,—and in a simple mortgage transaction it is not an unusual intention,—that if the principal money be not paid by the stipulated time, interest should continue to run, and run at the stipulated rate. Such a construction is consistent with the ordinary intention of mortgagor and mortgagee in an ordinary mortgage transaction.

I will now consider certain of the provisions of the deed itself. At the top of page 21 of the Paper Book, we find this, "we shall pay interest on the said amount at the rate of one per cent. per mensem." I pause there for a moment. There is nothing there confining the payment of interest only until the time stipulated for payment off of the principal. As regards time the payment of interest is unlimited. The deed then proceeds: "Until the said principal and interest thereon are paid up, we shall not sell or make a gift of the said mehal, or in any way prejudice our rights in the same." The "said interest" in that clause refers of necessity to the interest [249] mentioned in the preceding clause,—interest, as I have pointed out, unlimited as to the period over which it was to be payable.

Now I find, in the case to which I have referred, an almost similar provision in the deed in that case I find in that deed this clause: "Until the payment in full of this amount, principal and interest, I shall not transfer, either directly or indirectly, the mortgaged property to any one else, and if I do, such a transfer should be deemed false and inadmissible." Now what do their Lordships of the Privy Council say upon such a condition as that—"If it be true," they say, "that covenants not to transfer till principal and interest be paid are sometimes inserted, when the intention is only to secure interest for a single year, such intention must be gathered from other parts of the deed itself. If such a covenant, not being controlled by other parts of the deed, does not mean that interest is to run till payment, it is very difficult to say what it does mean." I may also rely upon the reasoning of their Lordships at page 145 of the report (I. L. R., 19 All., at p. 49), as applying with equal force to the present case.

There are other provisions in the deed which appear to me to support our present view. For instance there is the provision that, if the mortgagors fail to pay interest for "one year," then, after the lapse of that year, the amount was to be treated as principal. The time stipulated for repayment of the principal was at a date between one and two years from the date of the mortgage. This reference to the failure to pay one year's interest appears to me to indicate that it was in the contemplation of the parties that interest was to be paid until the principal was repaid, and that the transaction was not to be closed when the day fixed for payment of the principal arrived. Then the provision for sale in default of repayment of the principal sum "together with interest" thereon, the provision for realising "the whole amount," the reference to the non-realisation of "the whole sum," are expressions which appear to me to indicate that the interest referred to in the deed is interest up to the time of realisation. As I have pointed out before, such construction is in accordance with the usual intentions of parties to such a transaction. In my opinion, therefore, upon the construction of the mortgage deed the parties intended that if the principal were not paid by the stipulated [250] date, interest should continue to run at the rate mentioned in the deed. Being of that opinion I think the Court below was in error as to the amount of interest allowed to the plaintiff, and the decree must be varied by directing that the plaintiff be entitled to principal with interest, at the rate mentioned in the mortgage-deed, up to the date of the decree in the first Court, and after that date at the rate of six per cent. per annum until payment. The appeal must be allowed with costs in proportion to the amount decreed and disallowed respectively. The costs in the Court below will be increased proportionately by the additional sum to be recovered on the security.

Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), section 98—Act VI of 1889, section 15, Amending Act V of 1881—Construction of Act—Meaning of the words "an account."

The provisions of section 98 of the Probate and Administration Act, that an executor shall within one year from the grant of probate or letters of administration "or within such further time as the Court may from time to time appoint, exhibit an account of the estate," mean that one account is to be exhibited, and not a series of accounts from time to time; the words "from time to time appoint" relating to an extension of the period within which an account is to be exhibited.

THE facts of the case, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of this report, appear sufficiently from the judgments of the High Court.

Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee and Babu Horendra Narayan Mitter for the Appellants.

Mr. C. P. Hill and Babu Basanta Kumar Bose for the Respondent.

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J. and BANERJEE, J.).

[251] Maclean, C. J.—The point we have to decide is a short one, viz., as to the true construction of section 98 of the Probate and Administration Act V of 1881. The facts of the case lie within a narrow compass. The testator made a will on the 17th of July 1884, and the two appellants and the respondent, who is represented by Mr. Hill, were appointed executors. The testator died on the 14th September in that year leaving an adopted infant son, and on the 1st of June 1885 probate was granted to the appellants alone. On the 31st of January 1887, the appellants filed, I presume under the section I have referred to, their accounts from 16th September 1884, a day or two after the testator's death, to 30th September 1886. On the 10th of June 1887, by what I may call a somewhat short cut, the respondent's name was inserted into the probate as one of the executors, the other executors not objecting.* In 1888, the respondent brought a suit against the appellants for an account of the executorship, alleging that he was not allowed by his co-executors to interfere in the management of the estate. However, on the 8th of January 1889, the respondent withdrew that suit and admitted that the accounts were correct. In 1891, another suit, on behalf of the infant beneficiary was instituted by the mother, as his next friend, against the appellants for accounts from September 1884 to April 1891. I understand that the respondent in this appeal was not a party to that suit. I do not understand how an administration suit could be regarded as properly framed, one of the executors not being a party. Be that as it may, on the 31st of December 1891 that suit was compromised, the compromise being declared by the Court to be for the benefit of the infant. Matters rested thus until the 9th of September 1895 when the respondent applied to the District Judge of Dacca under section 98 of the Act to which I have referred, asking for accounts from the appellants from the 1st of December 1886 to the 31st December 1896. That application was resisted by the appellants, but on the 15th of January 1897, the learned Judge ordered the appellants to give accounts for the period which I have mentioned ; hence the present appeal.

These being the facts, the question turns upon the true construction of section 98 of the Probate and Administration Act, the [262] question admittedly being, whether the Court can under that section go on from time to time directing executors to deliver accounts, or whether, according to the true meaning of that section, that power can only be exercised once. The section has been read and I need not read it again ; but to my mind the language is reasonably clear It says first, that "the executor or administrator shall within six months from a certain date, or within such further time as the Court, which granted probate or letters of administration, may from time to time appoint, exhibit an inventory," and so on. Stopping there, I think it is clear that the words "from time to time appoint," relate to an extension of the period within which the inventory is to be exhibited, and if this be so, these words so used in this part of the section throw considerable light upon the meaning of the same words used in the subsequent part of the section The words "from time to time appoint," cannot mean, in the earlier part of the section, that the Court can go on, again and again, calling on executors to furnish an inventory. One inventory would be sufficient, but as, say in the case of a large estate, it might not be practicable to furnish that inventory within the time specified in the section, the Court is empowered to extend that period from time to time.

I now come to that part of the section dealing with the executor's account. The material words are, "and shall in like manner within one year from the grant, or within such further time as the said Court may from time to time appoint, exhibit an account [263] of the estate showing the assets," and so forth. The language used is identical in both parts of the section, and I am of opinion that the words in the latter part of the section "from time to time appoint"

* Section 98 (as amended by section 15 of Act VI of 1889), so far as is material to this report, is as follows:—

"An executor or administrator shall, within six months from the grant of probate or letters of administration, or within such further time as the Court which granted the probate or letters may from time to time appoint, exhibit in that Court an inventory containing a full and true estimate of all the property in possession, and all the credits, and also all the debts owing by any person to which the executor or administrator is entitled in that character, and shall in like manner, within one year from the grant, or within such further time as the Court may from time to time appoint, exhibit an account of the estate showing the assets which have come to his hands, and the manner in which they have been applied or disposed of."

relate to an extension of time for putting in the account, and does not authorize the Court to go on calling upon the executors to exhibit accounts from time to time, as often as the Court thinks fit. This view is emphasised by the consideration that the section speaks of "an account," that is one account, not a series of accounts. As I have pointed out there are good reasons for giving the Court a discretionary power of extending the time both for the inventory and the account. In the case of a large estate it might not be possible for the executors to exhibit an account of the assets within the time fixed. The Legislature, therefore, empowers the Court to extend that period. I see nothing in the language of the section, read in its ordinary sense and signification, to authorize the Probate Court to go on from time to time ordering executors to go on exhibiting their accounts. With respect to the suggestion that the respondent's contention, if successful, would have a useful result in ensuring that an estate is properly administered, the answer to that is, that the ordinary Civil Courts are the proper tribunals to which to apply if the parties interested are under the impression that the executors are not properly doing their duty.

Upon these grounds I think that the construction which the learned Judge has put upon the section is erroneous, and that the appeal must succeed, and be decreed with costs; and the appeal succeeding, it is admitted by Mr. Bonnerjee, who obtained the rule, that the rule becomes unnecessary That being so, the rule will be discharged with costs

Banerjee, J.—I am of the same opinion. Section 98 of Act V of 1881, so far as it is necessary to refer to it for the purposes of this case, enacts that "an executor or administrator shall within one year of the grant of letters of administration, or within such further period as the said Court may from time to time appoint, exhibit an account of the estate showing the assets which have come to his hands and the manner in which they have been applied or disposed of," and that means, evidently, that there [254] is to be a filing of accounts, and that is to be within one year from the granting of the probate or letters of administration, or within such further time as the Court granting probate or letters of administration may from time to time appoint. The section does not say that the filing is to be first within one year of the order, and then again within such further time as the said Court may from time to time appoint; but it speaks of the time of filing being within one year from the time of the probate or letters of administration being granted, or within such further time as the said Court may from time to time appoint. What is spoken of as taking place from time to time is not the filing of a series of accounts, but the appointment of the time within which the filing of the account is to take place; or, in other words, the clause relates merely to the extension of the time within which the filing of the account must take place

Hindu Law—Inheritance—Letters of Administration—Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881)—Prostitute—Succession to property of degraded woman.

In the absence of any local custom or usage to the contrary, a woman of the town is no heir to her deceased sister, who was also a woman of the town.

Sivasangu v. Minal, (1889) I. L. R., 12 Mad., 277, distinguished.

A woman of the town, who is a Hindu by birth, does not cease to be a Hindu by reason of her degradation, and succession to her property is governed by Hindu law.

THE facts of the case, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of this report, and the arguments, appear sufficiently from the judgment of the High Court.

Babu Golap Chunder Sarkar, and Babu Gobind Chunder Deb Roy for the Appellant.

[255] Babu Ram Chunder Mitter for the Respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (Maclean, C.J., and Banerjee, J.) was as follows :-

This appeal arises out of an application for letters of administration to the estate of Sahachari Bewa by the appellant, who claims to be her sister and only heir. The application was opposed by the Secretary of State for India, who alleged that the deceased Sahachari Bewa was a woman of the town, that the petitioner was not her heir, and that the estate of the deceased had escheated to the Crown.

The Court below has disallowed the application, holding that the sister was no heir to the property of a woman under the Bengal School of Hindu law, and that the evidence was not sufficient to prove that the petitioner was the sister of Sahachari.

The petitioner has preferred this appeal against that decision, and it is contended on her behalf, first, that the learned Judge below is wrong in holding that the sister is no heir to a woman's property; and secondly, that the learned Judge below is wrong in holding that the evidence is insufficient to prove the relationship set up.

It is conceded, as it must be, that if the Hindu law governs this case, it must be the Hindu law of the Bengal School, and that according to the law of that School the sister is no heir. But the learned Vakil for the appellant seeks to make out the right of his client upon two alternative grounds.

In the first place, he argues that as the deceased Sahachari was a woman of the town, and the petitioner also belongs to the same class, the ordinary Hindu law does not apply to this case, and that it is governed by those principles of natural justice not inconsistent with the Hindu law, according to which the sister, as a near consanguineal relation, should be held to be in the line of heirs; and in support of this argument he relies upon the definition of "heritage" in the Dayabhaga, Ch. I, para. 5, according to which the right of inheritance depends upon relationship with the former owner, and also upon the cases of Myna Boyee v. Ootaram, (1861) 8 Moo I A., 400; S.C. in High Court after remand (1864) 2 Mad. H. C., 196; Sivasangu v. Minal, (1889) I. L. R., 12 Mad., 277; Narasanna v. Gangu, (1890) I. L. R., 13 Mad., 133; and Tara [256] Naikin v. Nana Lakshman, (1890) I. L. R., 14 Bom., 90. And in the second place he contends that Sahachari Bewa should be considered as a person who was not a Hindu within the meaning of section 331 of the Indian Succession Act, that succession to her property should be held to be governed by that Act, and that her sister should therefore be held to be her heir.

The first branch of this argument is ingenious, but not sound. The passage of the Dayabhaga (Ch. I, 5) relied upon only shows at the most that every right to inherit is created by relationship with the former owner; but it does not establish the converse proposition that every relationship with the former owner creates the right to inherit. Moreover, it would be a strange anomaly, that though the sister is no heir to a female proprietor under the Bengal School of Hindu law, if they remain undegraded, yet if they both lapse into prostitution, the one becomes an heir of the other, quite apart from custom. The rule that of the ordinary heirs to a woman, those who remain undegraded are not competent to inherit her property, if she becomes degraded by leading the life of a prostitute, which has been laid down in several cases of which I may mention one, namely, In the goods of Kaminey Money Bewah, (1894) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 697, is based upon the principle that by her degradation the tie between her and her undegraded relations becomes severed; and this principle is unaffected by Act XXI of 1850, which only removes the disqualification by degradation of the person claiming the right to inherit. But that rule cannot help the petitioner in this case; for here there is no question of competition between a degraded and an undegraded relation; the question being whether the petitioner is an heir of the deceased at all. Nor is there any question here as to whether the petitioner is by custom an heir to the deceased, no custom being pleaded or proved. Of the cases cited, Myna Moyee v. Ootaram, (1861) 8 Moo. I. A., 400; S.C in High Court after remand (1864) 2 Mad. H.C., 196, has only a remote bearing upon the present case. In that case certain persons being the illegitimate sons of a Christian father by Hindu mothers, were brought up as Hindus, and lived as members of a joint Hindu family, and one of the questions raised was whether [257] any one of them could claim as heir the property of his uterine brother. The Courts in this country having answered the question as a point of Hindu law in the affirmative, their decision was reversed by the Privy Council, and the case was sent back for further inquiry, especially with reference to local custom or usage. After the remand, the Madras High Court re-affirmed the original answer, the learned Judges "feeling satisfied" as they said "that all the analogies of Hindu law and the plain rules of equity and justice are in favour of the evidence of heritable blood between the illegitimate sons." Whether this view is correct or not it is unnecessary for us now to consider. It will be sufficient to say that accepting it to be correct, it does not help the appellant before us, because in the case cited the party claiming to be the heir, the uterine brother of the deceased, was certainly his heir under the ordinary Hindu law, but for the stain of illegitimacy on the relationship between the parties, and all that the Madras High Court decided was that that stain did not affect the heritable right of the plaintiff; whereas in the present case the appellant is no heir to the deceased under the ordinary Hindu law of the province, and what she has to make out is that the stain of degradation creates a new heritable right in her.

As for the other three cases relied upon, Sivasangu v. Minal, (1889) I. L. R., 12 Mad., 277, Narasanna v. Gangu, (1890) I. L. R., 13 Mad., 133, and Tara Naikin v. Nana Lakshman, (1890) I. L. R., 14 Bom., 90, they and other similar cases, of which there are several in our reports, are based more or less upon local custom and usage. It was ingeniously argued upon the authority of a text of the Skanda Purana cited in the Mitakshara in its Commentary on Yajnavalkya, Ch. II, v. 290 (see Sanskrit, Mitakshara, Bombay Edition, p. 265, Grish Chunder Tarkalankar's Translation, p. 231) which treats prostitutes as forming a fifth class or caste, that prostitutes belong to one caste or community all over India, and that if a degraded sister of a prostitute is her heir in Madras as has been held in Sivasangu v. Minal, (1889) I. L. R., 12 Mad., 277, the same rule should be held to be true for Bengal. One simple answer to this argument [258] is that in the case just mentioned, the deceased and her degraded sister lived jointly, and this circumstance is relied upon in the judgment, whereas in the case before us the appellant and her deceased sister lived in widely distant places, and did not since their degradation meet each other more than twice or thrice in the course of nearly a quarter of a century. And we need hardly add that a custom obtaining amongst any caste in Madras or Bombay cannot, in the absence of evidence, be assumed to govern the same class in Bengal.

The second branch of the argument advanced by the learned Vakil for the appellant is clearly untenable. The deceased Sahachari was clearly a Hindu by birth, and it is neither shown nor even suggested that she ever abjured Hinduism. By lapsing into prostitution she became an outcaste, but did not cease to be a Hindu. The passage of the Mitakshara referred to above fully supports this view. The Indian Succession Act cannot therefore apply to this case.

In the view we take that assuming the appellant to be the sister of the deceased, still she is no heir to her, it becomes unnecessary to consider the question whether the relationship set up has been proved.

The result then in our opinion is that the appeal fails, and must be dismissed with costs.

S. C. G. Appeal dismissed.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Article 179, schedule II, clause 3—Execution of decree—Order allowing amendment of a decree—Review of judgment—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), sections 623, 624 and 206.

An order granting an application for amendment of a decree under section 206 of the Code of Civil Procedure is an order passed upon review of [259] judgment within the meaning of article 179,† schedule II, clause (3) of the Limitation Act; therefore an application for execution of a decree within three years from such an order is not barred by limitation.

Kishen Sahai v. The Collector of Allahabad, (1882) I. L. R., 4 All., 137, referred to.

THE facts of the case for the purposes of this report appear sufficiently from the judgments of the High Court.

Babu Horendra Narayan Mitter for the Appellants.

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (MACLEAN, C. J., and BANERJEE, J.)

Maclean, C. J.—On the 18th November 1891, judgment was given in this case by the Subordinate Judge on an appeal to him. The effect of that judgment was to dismiss the suit against the defendants (the present appellants) with costs in that Court and in the Court below. It subsequently transpired that the decree drawn up, although it gave the defendants their costs before the Subordinate Judge, did not give them their costs before the first Court, and in consequence of that error the present appellants, on the 3rd of March 1894, made an application under section 206 of the Code of Civil Procedure to have the decree amended and made to harmonise with the judgment, and on the 10th March 1894 that application was granted. On the 26th February 1896, the appellants, who had thus obtained a judgment in their favour for their costs, took proceedings in execution for the purpose of recovering them. Their right to do so was disputed by the judgment-debtor, and disputed upon the ground that article 179 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act was a bar to their claim. The question we have to decide is whether his right to execution is or is not barred.

The question to my mind is not free from difficulty, but as the result of the argument we have heard I am of opinion that the appellants ought to succeed and to succeed upon the ground that the order of the 10th March 1894 was substantially an order passed upon a review of judgment within the meaning of article 179 of the second schedule to the Limitation Act, and that being so, the period would run, not from the 18th November [260] 1891, the date of the judgment, but from the 10th of March 1894, the date of the decision passed on the review. I have indicated what was the nature of the application, which resulted in the decree being amended on the 10th March 1894, and looking at sections 623 and 624 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it would appear that the terms "review of judgment" or "review of the decree" are applicable, not only to cases where there is something faulty in the judgment itself—I mean the actual judgment pronounced as opposed to the decree—but the cases where there is any mistake or error on the face of the record or any clerical error apparent on the face of the decree. This shows that the term "review of judgment" is not confined merely to cases where the judgment itself was to be reviewed. This, in my opinion, is the sense in which the term "review of judgment" is to be read under the above sections of the Code, and, if so, it is not unreasonable to suppose that the Legislature in the Limitation Act used the same term in the same sense, that is, in the sense in which it is used under the Code. I do not think that in this view I am placing too wide or too comprehensive a construction on these words as used in the Limitation Act. My opinion gains support from that expressed by the Allahabad High Court in the case of Kishen Sahai v. The Collector of Allahabad, (1882) I. L. R., 4 All., 137, where the Judges say this: "We consider that the proceedings under this application," which was an application practically similar in its nature to that made in this case in March 1894, "were substantially of the nature of a review of judgment, and will, under article 167, schedule II of Act IX of 1871, at the time in force, give a period from which limitation will run in respect of the subsequent application for execution which will therefore be within time."

Upon these grounds I think the appeal must succeed, and must be allowed with costs.

Banerjee, J.—I am of the same opinion. The question raised in this case is whether the application for execution of decree is barred by limitation. The Courts below have answered that question in the affirmative, and it is contended on appeal before us by the learned Vakil for the decree-holders that the Courts below are [261] wrong in holding that the application for execution is barred by limitation, because in the first place limitation should be reckoned in this case from the date of the amendment of the decree upon the application under section 206 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and in the second place, even if that contention fails, the decree-holders should be allowed to reckon time from the date of the application for amendment of the decree under clause 4 of article 179 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act.

In my opinion the second contention is not tenable, because the application that was made was not one to take some step in aid of execution of the decree within the meaning of clause 4 of the said article, the decree itself not having been such as it ought to have been, and the application really being one not for having any step taken in aid of execution, but for having the decree amended, so as to make it fit for execution by the decree-holder. But upon the first contention I think, though not without some hesitation, that the view which the learned Vakil for the appellants asks us to adopt is the correct view.

The date of the decree must, no doubt, be taken to be the date of the judgment; and it is difficult to say that the date of the decree here was the date on which the amendment was made, when the date of the judgment remained unaltered. But, then, there was here an application for amendment of the decree, and for amendment on a most material point, the point being that the costs of the first Court should be made recoverable by the appellants before us. According to the directions contained in the judgment, the appellants before us were entitled to those costs. By some error in the preparation of the decree, this part of the direction in the judgment was left out of the decree. Was the amendment of the decree then a review of judgment within the meaning of the third clause of article 179? If it was, then the decree-holders are entitled to reckon time from the date of the decision passed on the review, and that date is within three years from the date of the application for execution. The expression "review of judgment" is not defined anywhere in the Limitation Act, and evidently the Legislature used that expression in the Limitation Act in the sense in which it is used in the Code of Civil Procedure. Now, in the Code of Civil Procedure, on referring to sections 623 and 624, [262] I find that the expression "review of judgment" is used interchangeably with the expression "review of decree," that is an amendment of the decree that does not necessitate any alteration in the judgment. If that is so, there seems to be good reason for thinking that a case like the present was intended to be covered by the third clause of article 179. It is not likely that the Legislature did not provide for a case like this, where a decree is substantially altered, although the procedure adopted for having the alteration effected was by way of an application under section 206, and not by way of an application under section 623 of the Code. There being no reason for taking the expression "review of judgment" in any limited or narrow sense, I think we may take it in a sense such as would include a case like the present; and this view receives some support from the case of Kishen Sahai v. The Collector of Allahabad, (1882) I. L. R., 4 All., 137.

S. C. G. Appeals allowed.

NOTES.

[In the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, Art. 182, clause 4, was added to the effect that (where the decree has been amended), the date of amendment should be the starting point of limitation. APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 10th and 21st December, 1896.

PRESENT:

SIR FRANCIS MACLEAN, KNIGHT, CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON, AND MR. JUSTICE TREVELYAN.

Gouri Sunker Panday............Plaintiff

Execution of decree—Charge—Attachment without sale—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sections 67, 99, 100—Res judicata.

The plaintiff, a judgment-creditor, had in the High Court obtained a decree against the defendant, whereby it was ordered that the defendant should pay to the plaintiff a sum of Rs. 1,68,123, and that the said sum should be a charge on certain immoveable properties situated in the mofussil and specified in a schedule to the decree. In August 1894 the plaintiff obtained an order for transfer of the decree to a mofussil Court, and sent a copy of the decree for execution there. He obtained in that Court an order for attachment and sale of the property, but that order was reversed on appeal in May 1895, the High Court holding that the properties could not be sold in execution of the decree, but that a separate suit must be brought under [263] section 67 of the Transfer of Property Act†. The plaintiff then applied to the Court that passed the decree for an order for transmission of the decree to the mofussil Court with a view to execution. That application was refused by SALE, J., who held that the decision of May 1895 was conclusive as to the plaintiff's right to attach the property as distinct from a sale, or to sell it except after a suit under section 67 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Held, on appeal (reversing the decision of SALE, J.) that the application was not res judicata.

Held, also, that an order for attachment only as distinct from a sale could be made.

Aubhoyessury Dabee v. Gouri Sunker Panday, (1895) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 859, explained. Chundra Nath Dey v. Burroda Shoondury Ghose, (1895) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 813, referred to.

UNDER a decree of the High Court in its Original Jurisdiction, the plaintiff was the judgment-creditor of the defendant; and the decree directing payment also gave the plaintiff a charge on certain immoveable property belonging to the defendant, and situated in the mofussil. On the 22nd September 1893, the plaintiff obtained an order for sale; but that order was set aside on appeal. On the 7th August 1894 he obtained an order and sent a certified copy of the order to the mofussil Court for execution. The defendant put in objections, which, however, were disallowed, and an order was made for execution. An appeal was preferred from that order, and a rule was obtained on the 13th March 1895 to stay execution pending the appeal. On the 27th May 1895 the High Court (NORRIS and GORDON, JJ.) reversed the order for execution.† The plaintiff then applied to the High Court in its Original Jurisdiction for an order for transmission of the decree with a view to attachment of the property. The order was refused, SALE, J., holding that the matter was concluded by the decision of NORRIS and GORDON, JJ.

* Appeal from Order No. 9 of 1896, against the decision of Mr. Justice SALE, dated the 3rd March 1896 in suit No. 41 of 1892.

The JUDGMENT of SALE, J., was as follows:—

This is an application for transmission of the decree of this Court for execution to a mofussil Court, that is to say, the Court [264] of the Judge of the 24-Purgannahs; and the application raises the question as to whether the plaintiff is entitled to proceed by way of execution for the purpose of realizing the amount due under the decree. Mr. Apcar has referred to section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, and he has contended that that section contemplates the precise right which he says he desires to exercise—the right to attach the properties. The effect of the decree is to charge certain properties with the decretal amount, and it is admitted that the present application is a step in the procedure to enable the applicant to attach certain of the properties charged under the decree. Section 99 does not in terms give, nor was it intended thereby to give, to a person who has obtained a mortgage decree, a right to attach the mortgaged properties. The right to proceed by way of attachment must be dependent, I think, on the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. The object of section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act is (in those cases where mortgaged property has been attached) to prevent the judgment-creditor from proceeding to sell that property, except in a particular way, viz., under section 67 of the Act; and it may be, as Sir Griffith Evans has suggested, that the section was framed in view of the practice which, though not recognized in this Court, certainly prevails in the mofussil, whereby mortgagees who have obtained money decrees are allowed to attach the mortgaged property. The same question was raised between the parties in the cases of Aubhoyessury Dabee v. Gouri Sunkar Panday, (1895) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 859.

Mr. Apcar has contended that that case does not conclude him on the point as to whether he has the right to attach. It is said that the case only decides that the plaintiff has not the right to proceed to sale of the property. And Mr. Apcar contends that he is entitled to put himself in the position contemplated by section 99, and that for that purpose he is entitled to an order for attachment.

But the order appealed against was in effect an order directing the attachment to issue against a portion of the property charged by the decree. The order was that the property, the subject-matter of the attachment, should be sold after attachment, which must mean that the property should be attached in the first [265] instance; there could be no sale in execution till after attachment. That order the Appellate Court said should be set aside. At page 864 of the report the learned Judges say: "If the plaintiff wishes to sell the properties charged, he must bring a suit." That seems to me to be a ruling to the effect that no step in execution can be taken for the purpose of realizing any portion of the money due under the decree. That being so, I have no option but to refuse the present application with costs.

Mr. Hill (with him Mr. Stephen) for the Appellant.—The question for the Court is whether the plaintiff is entitled to have the decree transmitted. The matter is not res judicata. The Court has put an erroneous construction on the Transfer of Property Act, and the plaintiff is entitled to show that, and to ask for transmission of the decree. There is nothing in section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act prohibiting an attachment of this kind, nor is it necessary to bring a separate suit—Chundra Nath Dey v. Burroda Shoondury Ghose, (1895) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 813. Section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act does not apply to a charge created by a decree of the Court; it refers only to charges created by the parties or by operation of law. But this charge was created by the decree of the Court, and not the less so because that decree was a consent decree. It is submitted that the decision in Aubhoyessury Dabee v. Gouri Sunkur Panday, (1895) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 859 is wrong. For the decree is something higher than any agreement between the parties; and it was not the agreement but the decree that created the charge. [MACPHERSON, J.—At present the effect of such an order is that you cannot execute the decree at all.] That is so. That decision is merely a precedent; and the decree in this case is a subsisting decree. [MACPHERSON, J.—Had the learned Judge any authority to say whether the mofussil Court could or could not attach these properties?]. I submit not. All that he was asked to do was to transmit the decree. We confessed that the object of the application was to attach with a view to sale; and because [266] he said that object could not be attained, he refused to make the order.

Mr. Woodroffe and Mr. S. R. Dass for the respondent.—The Court has declared that the decree made in this suit was a charge on the property. [MACPHERSON J.—Taking that order at its highest, all that it holds is that the Court would not attach and sell. It does not hold that the Court could not attach. Is that res judicata ?] Yes,—Ram Kirpal Shukul v. Rup Kuari, (1883) I. L. R., 6 All., 269: L R., 11 I. A. 37. In the present case, the appellant applied for a review of the decision of NORRIS and GORDON, JJ.; it was refused, and he has never appealed against it. He concedes that he cannot attach and sell the property, and the Court will not make an order which it knows will be of no effect. There is no such step known to the law as merely sending a decree from one Court to another; the sending is always for the purpose of executing the decree [MACPHERSON, J.—He could possibly benefit under section 295 of the Code by such an order.] That section applies only to the execution of decrees for money. This is not a money decree, it is a mortgage decree, and the execution of mortgage decrees is regulated by the Transfer of Property Act. The decree-holder cannot bring the property to sale otherwise than by a suit under section 67 of the Act,—Jaduh Lall Shaw Chowdhry v. Madhub Lall Shaw Chowdhry, (1893) I. L R., 21 Cal, 34; Matangini Dassee v. Chooneymoney Dassee, (1895) I. L R, 22 Cal., 903, Azim-Ullah v. Najm-un-nissa, (1894) I. L. R., 16 All., 415. If he does, the sale is invalid—Durgayya v. Anantha, (1890) I. L. R., 14 Mad., 74.

Whenever real property is to be dealt with in execution proceedings under the Code, sale is to be preceded by attachment. Thus, in sections 244 and 266 attachment and sale are treated as one process. In Denonauth Ruckit v. Mutty Lall Paul, (1863) Hyde, 158 it is laid down that the words "attachment and sale" are to be taken together, and not read distributively. Therefore, if an order for attachment be made, and the attachment effected under section 274, the Court may,—and 'may' in section 274 is declared in [267] Kashi Nath Roy Chowdhry v. Surbanand Shaha, (1895) I. L. R., 12 Cal.. 317 to mean 'shall'—order the sale of the property. Leaving aside prohibitory orders, which are clearly distinguishable, there is no provision in the Code, with respect to immoveable property, for attachment not to be followed by sale.

It is res judicata that the appellant is in the position of a mortgagee; he cannot now be allowed to contend that he has a mere money decree. [TREVELYAN, J.—Suppose a mortgagee has a decree on a claim entirely apart from the mortgage—say a decree in respect of work done—cannot he attach the mortgaged property without selling it?] No, because section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act says he shall not, whether the claim arises on the mortgage or not. [TREVELYAN, J.—Then he is in a worse position than any other person by the very reason that he is a mortgagee of the property.] Nor can he come in under section 295 of the Code, unless he has a mere money decree.

And as a sale of the property is barred by section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, the Court will not issue a useless order for attachment merely.

Mr Hill in reply.—An order refusing execution does not make the matter a res judicata—Delhi and London Bank v. Orchard, (1877) I. L. R., 3 Cal., 47 : I. L. R., 4 I. A., 127; Hurrosoondary Dassee v. Jugobundhoo Dutt, (1880) I. L. R., 6 Cal., 203.

In the argument before NORRIS and GORDON, JJ., it was conceded that the attachment, without the order for sale, could go. It does not follow that, because a sale cannot be had without attachment, therefore an attachment must necessarily be followed by a sale. There are various sections in the Code which recognise an attachment apart from a sale; and this is intended for the protection of the judgment-creditor as against both the judgment-debtor and third persons. See, for instance, sections 235 (j), 274, with Form No. 141,—and the Forms are by section 644 of the Code made of statutory obligation. So in section 260 where the attachment of the property is put in the same category as imprisonment of the person, i.e., as a means of exerting pressure [268] on the debtor. So, again, sections 275 and 284 show that a subsequent order is contemplated if a sale is desired.

Further, this decree is not a mortgage decree. It is a money decree combined with a charge created by the decree. But the fact that it is a money decree and something more does not make it cease to be a money decree; and it is recognised as such by NORRIS and GORDON, JJ. There are many advantages in having an attachment, whether the plaintiff is a first mortgagee or a subsequent incumbrancer. The judgment in Aubhoyessury Dabee v. Gouri Sunkur Panday did not decide that we could not have an attachment, but only that we could not sell. The learned Judge in the Court below is wrong in supposing that it did so decide Section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act clearly points to a recognition of the right to attachment quite apart from the right to sell.

C. A. V.

The following judgments were delivered by the Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and MACPHERSON and TREVELYAN, JJ.) :—

Maclean, C.J.—This case has been very elaborately argued, and many cases have been cited, and various sections of the Code and Acts of the Legislature referred to; but in my opinion the case is reduced to a short, and I do not think a really difficult, point.

The plaintiff is a judgment-creditor of the defendant, and the decree directing payment also gave him a charge upon certain property of the defendant I purposely refrain from expressing any opinion as to whether the plaintiff is a mortgagee within the meaning of section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act; in the view I take of this case it is immaterial to say anything as to that. Having obtained his judgment he not unnaturally wishes to obtain the fruits of it. He has made two unsuccessful attempts to do this. On the 22nd September 1893 he obtained an order from this Court for the sale of the property, but that order was reversed on appeal. On the 7th August 1894 he obtained an order to send a certified copy of the decree to the Judge of the Assam Valley Districts for execution, and then applied in that Court, for a sale after attachment of the property, to the Judge [269] of that Court, and on the 2nd March 1895 the Court made the order, notwithstanding the objection of the defendants, who urged that the properties could not be sold in execution of the decree, unless and until the plaintiff had instituted a suit for sale under the conjoint operation of sections 99 and 67 of the Transfer of Property Act.

It is clear that the point raised, discussed, and decided in the Court at Dhubri was, whether or not the property could be sold unless and until a fresh suit for sale had been brought under section 67 of the Transfer of Property Act. There is nothing in the judgment as to mere attachment as opposed to a sale. The judgment did not deal with that point in any way. The judgment-debtor appealed, and the appeal was heard before Justices NORRIS and GORDON, and their judgment was given on the 27th May 1895. It is quite clear from what is stated in that judgment that the point really argued on the part of the judgment-debtor was that no order for the sale of the properties could be made, until the plaintiff had instituted a suit under section 67 of the Transfer of Property Act. That was Sir GRIFFITH EVANS'S contention. The contention of the plaintiff, as stated in that judgment, is perfectly consistent with this view. He contended that the decree was tantamount to an agreement by the debtor that the properties should be sold in default of payment of the instalments. I have looked at the report of this case in I.L.R, 22 Calcutta series, page 859, and there is not a suggestion in the arguments on either side that the question whether a mere attachment could not issue as opposed to a sale was ever raised. The head-note of the case tends to show that the judgment was intended to deal only with the question of a right to a sale.

The learned Judges themselves say: "We are of opinion that Sir GRIFFITH EVANS'S contention must prevail." I have shown what his contention was. Again they say: "Unless the construction of the decree is such as Mr. Hill contends for, it is clear that the plaintiff cannot sell without bringing a suit." But for the somewhat loose expressions at the end of the judgment, the point would have been in my opinion quite unarguable. I will read the sentence.

"As the decree stands, the plaintiff can realize the instalments [270] by execution by sale and attachment of any property of the defendant's, but if he wishes to sell and attach the properties charged, he must bring a suit." I do not quite understand what is meant by the expression "by execution by sale and attachment," and the expression "to sell and attach."

Those expressions appear to me to put the cart before the horse. I could understand them if they were "attachment and sale," or "attach and sell." In my opinion these words "and attachment," "and attach," have slipped into the language of the judgment by mistake: they are at variance with the arguments in the case, and with the reasons given for, and with the previous portions of, the judgment and with the terms of the order as drawn up; and I do not think that by the use of those somewhat ambiguous phrases the Judges ever meant to decide, or that they ever did decide, that under the circumstances an order for attachment, as opposed to an order for sale, could not be made. In my opinion, by that judgment all that the Judges intended to decide and did decide was, that if the plaintiff wished to sell he must institute a suit.

In this state of circumstances, the judgment-creditor applied to the Court below that the case might be transmitted to the Court of the 24-Pergunnahs for execution by way of attachment. Mr. Justice SALE refused the application, holding that Justices NORRIS and GORDON had held, in the judgment I have criticised, that an attachment could not issue; that upon that point the matter was res judicata, and that therefore the Court would not transmit the case, as there would be no object in so doing if an attachment could not issue. Hence the present appeal It is clear from the case of Chundra Nath Dey v. Burroda Shoondury Ghose, (1895) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 813, (817), that the property could be attached; and it is clear to my mind from the various sections of the Code which have been referred to that certain advantages do accrue to a judgment-creditor from obtaining such attachment.

Mr. Woodroffe contends that attachment and sale constitute one step only in the path of execution. I am quite unable to accept that view. Attachment is one thing, sale is another. [271] There may be an attachment, not of necessity to be followed by sale, and there may be a sale not necessarily the result of an attachment. But the respondents urge, as they did in the Court below, that the matter is res judicata by reason of the judgment of Justices NORRIS and GORDON. I am by no means satisfied that, looking at what is now asked, and what was asked before Justices NORRIS and GORDON, the question of res judicata is not disposed of against the respondent by a mere comparison of what the two applications were, and that the question of res judicata ought not properly to have been left for decision, when, if at all, an application is made in the mofussil Court for an attachment. However, the point has been argued and decided in the Court below, and I will deal with it.

I need not lay down at this time of day what is necessary to constitute a res judicata, nor need I refer to section 13 of the Code. The principle is now, I think, well established. The only difficulty is as to its application to the particular circumstances of each particular case. The question here is, did the learned Judges intend to decide, and did they in fact decide, that an attachment, as opposed to a sale, could not issue? I have stated before what I think the real point before them was, and what they really decided and intended to decide. They were asked to direct a sale "after attachment," and they refused to do so; they were never asked merely to make an order for attachment. So far as I am aware no such application has ever been made in this Court. In my opinion the case is not one of res judicata. I think that Mr. Justice SALE has misapprehended the true purport and effect of the judgment of Justices NORRIS and GORDON, that his conclusion was consequently erroneous and that this appeal must be allowed with costs.

Macpherson, J.—I agree. The decision of the Division Bench of this Court does not, I think, prevent the plaintiff from attaching this property in execution of his decree. There was in that case an order for sale after attachment. The appeal was against the order for sale, and the contention before the Court was that as the present appellant had, by the decree which he sought to execute, a charge upon the property attached, he could not sell it without instituting a suit under section 67 of the Transfer of Property [272] Act. The contention prevailed, but I see nothing in the judgment to indicate that the Court considered or dealt with the appellant's right to attach the property under his decree as distinct from his right to sell it. There is certainly one loose expression at the end of the judgment, in which it is said "if he wishes to sell and attach the properties charged he must bring a suit," but the circumstance that the sale is referred to before the attachment indicates, as is apparent from the rest of the judgment, that the right to sell after attachment was the question which the Court was considering.

The question which the Court had to determine in the present case was whether the decree should be transferred to the District Court for execution under section 223 of the Civil Procedure Code. If the plaintiff has the right to attach the property within the jurisdiction of the Court to which he wishes the decree to be transferred, the Court was, I think, bound to make the order for transfer. Whether, having made the attachment, he can proceed further or can get anything out of the attachment, is a matter for the Court executing the decree to decide, and this may possibly to some extent depend upon events which may yet happen.

I see nothing in the law to prevent an attachment in execution of the money decree, even if before the property could be sold in pursuance of the attachment it is necessary for the appellant to take further proceedings.

Trevelyan, J.—I agree that this appeal should be allowed, and that the respondent should pay to the appellant the costs of the application and of the appeal.

There are two questions—(1) whether this application is barred by the law of res judicata ; (2) whether, if it be not so barred, the plaintiff is entitled to an order which can apparently lead to an attachment only, and not be followed by an order for sale.

On the first question I think that the right to an attachment per se has not been judicially determined between the parties.

The only question which arose in the matter which eventually came up on appeal before NORRIS and GORDON, JJ., was whether the judgment-creditor was entitled to obtain an order for sale. [273] This is, I think, clear from the memorandum of appeal and from the judgment. The whole judgment is directed to a consideration of the right to a sale, and it is only an expression at the end of it which can give any handle to the contention that the question is now barred.

There is no discussion in the judgment as to the right to an attachment independently of the right to a sale, and this right cannot be said to have been directly or substantially in issue, or to have been finally or at all decided. I read the judgment and the order as setting aside the attachment, only because it was ancillary to the sale.

I would, therefore, hold that the matter of the present application is not res judicata.

As to the second question I am exceedingly doubtful whether Mr. Justice SALE had any power to determine the question as to whether land situate outside the limits of the original jurisdiction was capable of being attached under this decree. It is not necessary to determine this question here; but it is capable of contention that the duty of the Judge transmitting the decree is confined to determining whether there is a bonâ fide application to transmit a live decree, and whether the conditions contained in section 223 of the Civil Procedure Code have been fulfilled.

Assuming that he had power to decide this question, I cannot agree with the view which he has taken of it.

An attachment and a sale are not so indissolubly wedded as never to be capable of separation. It is true that, as a rule, a sale is the ordinary consequence of an attachment, but a mere attaching creditor has certain rights apart from his right to a sale; for instance, he has a right to participate in the proceeds of sale under section 295 of the Civil Procedure Code, and he has a right to redeem the property under the Transfer of Property Act. The Code of Civil Procedure itself deals with an attachment as a proceeding separate from a proceeding to sell (see sections 235, 274, and 284). I am not prepared to say that if there is no right to sell there cannot, under any state of circumstances, be an attachment.

[274] Whether in this particular case the Court should allow an attachment is, in my opinion a matter to be determined only by the Court to which the decree is sent for execution. I would allow the appeal.

Appeal allowed.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), section 183—Resistance to attachment—Lawful authority—Village Chaukidari Act (Bengal Act VI of 1870), section 26, section 27 and section 34.

Where a village chaukidar, without the preparation and publication of a list of defaulters, and without any written authority as required by section 26 and section 27 of the Village Chaukidari Act (Bengal Act VI of 1870), attached some property for levying the amount of arrears, Held, that resistance to such attachment was not an offence under section 183 of the Penal Code.

REFERENCE by the Sessions Judge of Mymensingh under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code in respect of a conviction and sentence under section 183 of the Penal Code by the Joint Magistrate of Mymensingh. The material portion of the letter of reference was as follows:—

"The petitioner has been convicted by the Joint Magistrate of Mymensingh under section 183 of the Indian Penal Code for offering resistance to a chaukidar, who was attaching a drum for chaukidari tax, and has been sentenced to a fine of Rs. 15, or in default to fourteen days' rigorous imprisonment.

"I think this conviction is illegal because the chaukidar had no "lawful authority" to take the petitioner's property. By the Chaukidari Act, section 2, the authority could only be in writing signed by the collecting member of the Panchayet. Moreover, by section 26 this distraint could only be made after [275] the preparation and publication of the list of defaulters. The Joint Magistrate finds there was no written authority to distrain and no publication of a list of defaulters. In my opinion section 34 of the Act has not the force the Joint Magistrate gives it. It is intended to protect the Panchayet and persons acting under his authority from prosecution or suit, except as therein provided for any act which is technically illegal. It does not, as I take it, render all irregular acts legal, so as to debar those who are affected by them from resisting them."

No one appeared in support of the reference.

The judgment of the High Court (Banerjee and Wilkins, JJ.) was as follows:—

Upon the facts found by the Joint Magistrate himself, the provisions of sections 26 and 27 of the Village Chaukidari Act (Bengal Act VI of 1870), had not been complied with, and the chaukidar had no authority to attach the property in question. Resistance to the attachment by him cannot, therefore, we think, constitute an offence under section 183 of the Indian Penal Code. This view is to some extent supported by the case of Abdool Gaffur v. Queen-Empress, (1896) I. L. R., 23 Cal., 896).

We, therefore, set aside the conviction and sentence, and order refund of the fine if it has been realized.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), section 283—Obstruction in a public way.

The accused was charged generally with obstructing a public way, no danger, obstruction, or injury being alleged to have been caused to any person nor was there any clear evidence that the way was a public way. Held, that the conviction under section 283 of the Penal Code could not be sustained.

REFERENCE made by the Officiating Sessions Judge of Pubna and Bogra under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code in respect of a conviction and sentence passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Serajgunge on the 22nd of July 1897.

[276] The material portion of the letter of reference was as follows:—

"It appears that a road passed by the west of the petitioner's house which he blocked up ten years ago by building a house on it, and his brother Hem Chandra Chakravarti brought thereupon a suit in the Civil Court to have the road opened out. The case resulted in a compromise by which the petitioner agreed to deviate the road by his bahirbari or outer apartment, and he has now attached a gate to his deviated road, and is said to have caused obstruction to it. It is said that the petitioner keeps the gate open during day but closes it at night. The case originally arose from a complaint of some of the villagers and was supplemented by a report of the chaukidar who could not pass through the road at night on his round. It ultimately went to the Chairman of the Shahazadpore Union, the substance of whose report was that there was a road to the west of the petitioner's house from a very long period, that he constructed a house upon it about ten years ago and deviated the road through a portion of his outer apartment, which he has now blocked up by a gate.

"The Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Serajgunge, having treated those reports as complaints, and without proceeding under section 133 and the cognate sections of the Criminal Procedure Code, has convicted the petitioner under section 283 of the Indian Penal Code for obstructing the road, and has sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 50, and in default to undergo simple imprisonment for one month. He has also passed an order that the road must be cleared and left two cubits wide within three days.

"In order to sustain a conviction under section 283 of the Indian Penal Code it should in the first place be shown that some particular person or persons have been obstructed by the accused, and the accused cannot be charged generally with obstruction in a public way. In the present case the chaukidar, who is said to have been obstructed, has not been examined, none of the ladies said to have been obstructed has been examined, and all the witnesses speak of the general obstruction of the road, not of their personal case. I submit that under the circumstances the conviction cannot be sustained under section 283 of the Indian Penal Code. This has been clearly held in the matter of Empress v. Ram Singh, (1882) 11 C. L. R., 462, and in the case of Queen v. Khader Moiden, (1881) I. L. R., 4 Mad., 235. In the second place it must be shown that the road is a public way. The compromise petition by which the petitioner granted a deviation of the road to his brother is on the record. It does not show that the road in question was a public one. The road was granted by one brother to another only ten years ago, and, as it passed through the petitioner's outer apartment,

* Criminal Reference No. 246 of 1897, made by K. N. Roy, Esq., Officiating District Judge of Pubna and Bogra, dated the 30th of August 1897.

unless there be very good evidence it cannot be said that it is a public thoroughfare. In the report of the Chairman of the Union the road is not described as a public way. All that is said is that nearly [277] all the villagers pass through it to a bil, and its obstruction has caused inconvenience to the public and specially to the ladies of the Hindu families who have no other road to go to the ghat. The evidence of Sub-Inspector Bama Charan Sen is that the females of the village use the road from a long time for going to the ghat. Though, therefore, there can be no doubt that the road in question has been very much in use by the women of the village, I have doubts whether it was thrown open entirely to the public. The long use by the women of the village cannot make the road to be a public way—See Sham Soonder Bhuttacharjee v. Monee Ram Doss, (1876) 25 W. R., 233. Applying also the tests of Mr. Justice WILSON in the Full Bench case of Chuni Lall v. Ram Kishen Sahu, (1888) I. L. R., 15 Cal., 460, it is doubtful whether this road can be held to be a public way. The proper course for the Sub-Divisional Magistrate was to take proceedings under section 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code and the cognate sections, and give the benefit of a jury to the petitioner with regard to the question whether the road was public or private. The order directing the widening of the road could not be passed except under these sections. I, therefore, recommend that the conviction of the petitioner as well as the order directing the clearing of the road be quashed."

No one appeared in support of the reference.

The judgments of the High Court (Banerjee and Wilkins, JJ.) was as follows:—

We think the view taken by the learned Sessions Judge in this case is in the main correct. The accused has been convicted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Serajgunge of an offence punishable under section 283 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 50, and he has been ordered to remove within three days the obstruction complained of. But all that the learned Magistrate in his judgment has found against the accused is that he has blocked up altogether by a gate a road which, in his opinion, is a public road. This finding is not in our opinion sufficient to sustain the conviction. To warrant a conviction under section 283 of the Indian Penal Code for causing obstruction in a public way, it must be established that the act of the accused has caused "danger, obstruction, or injury" to some person; see Empress v. Ram Singh, (1882) 11 C. L. R., 462, and Queen v. Khader Moidin, (1881) I. L. R., 4 Mad., 235. But there is no finding to that effect in the [278] judgment of the Magistrate. Then, again, though the learned Magistrate in effect finds that the road in question is a public road, what the evidence shows is, to quote the words of the judgment, "that a road passed by the west of the accused's house which he first blocked up by building a house on it, and then deviating it over his bari blocked up altogether by a gate." The four witnesses examined for the prosecution all say, either expressly or in effect, that the road which has been obstructed is not the old road but the road passing through the bahirbari, or the compound of the outer house of the accused, which the accused opened after having closed the old road by building his house over it. The evidence leaves it very doubtful whether the way is a public way within the meaning of section 283 of the Indian Penal Code.

For these reasons we set aside the conviction and sentence and the order for removal of the obstruction complained of, and direct that the fine, if realized, be refunded.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), section 133 and 137—Reference by Sub-Divisional Magistrate to a second class Magistrate—Bonâ fide question of title—Jurisdiction of Magistrate—Public nuisance.

A Sub-Divisional Magistrate having made a conditional order under section 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) against a person to remove an obstruction on a public thoroughfare, or appear and show cause before a second class Magistrate, the said person appeared as directed, and the order was made absolute under section 137. In revision, the High Court held that, having regard to the penultimate paragraph of section 133, the order was not illegal, on the ground that it was made absolute by a Magistrate with second class powers other than the Magistrate who made the conditional order. In re Narasimha, (1886) I. L. R., 9 Mad., 201, approved of.

[279] When a question of title is bonâ fide raised, the Magistrate ought not to make an order under sections 133 and 137 of the Criminal Procedure Code, but should allow the party an opportunity for the determination of the question by a Civil Court. The claim of title must, however, be bona fide and not a mere pretence to oust jurisdiction ; and it is for the magistrate to say whether the claim is a bonâ fide one or a pretence. Luckheenarain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar Mukherjee, (1888) I.L R., 15 Cal., 564), and Queen-Empress v. Bissessur Sahu, (1890) I. L. R , 17 Cal., 562, followed

Although no length of enjoyment can legalise a public nuisance—See Municipal Commissioners of Calcutta v. Mahomed Ali, (1871) 7 B.L.R , 499,—yet the long possession or enjoyment of what is said to be a nuisance may give to the objection of the person so possessing or enjoying it the character of a bonâ fide dispute as to title such as might have the effect of ousting the jurisdiction of the Magistrate under sections 133 and 137 of the Code, and making the question a proper one for the Civil Court.

THE petitioner moved against the order of a second class Magistrate passed under section 137 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), making absolute an order under section 133 passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate for the removal of certain obstructions in a place alleged to be a public thoroughfare upon the grounds: (1) That the Magistrate who made the conditional order absolute had no authority to do so as he was a Magistrate with second class powers ; and (2) that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction inasmuch as there was a bonâ fide claim of private right as regards the land in dispute,

This is a rule calling upon the Magistrate of the district to show cause why the order complained of in this case should not be set aside upon the ground that the Magistrate who made it had no authority to investigate the matter and to make the conditional order passed by the Sub-Divisional Officer absolute.

---

* Criminal Revision No. 623 of 1897 against the order of Babu Mano Mohan Chatterjee, Sub-Deputy Magistrate of Jehanabad, dated the 11th of August 1897.

The order complained of is one passed by a second class Magistrate under section 137 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, [280] making absolute an order under section 133 passed by the Sub-Divisional Officer for the removal of certain obstructions caused by the petitioners in a place which was alleged to be a public thoroughfare.

The grounds upon which we are asked by the learned Vakil for the petitioner to set aside the order are: first, that the Magistrate who made the conditional order absolute under section 137 of the Code of Criminal Procedure had no authority to do so as he was a Magistrate with second class powers; and, secondly, that he had no authority to make the conditional order absolute in this case as there was here a boná fide claim of private right raised by the petitioners as regards the land in dispute.

As to the first ground, the penultimate paragraph of section 133 of the Code distinctly provides that the Magistrate who makes the order under the section may direct the person against whom it is issued "to appear before himself or some other Magistrate of the first or second class at a time and place to be fixed by the order, and move to have the order set aside or modified in manner hereinafter provided." The section itself, therefore, clearly authorizes a second class Magistrate to hear the objections of the party against whom an order under the section is made. It is quite true that clause (b) of section 135 provides that, where a party against whom an order under section 133 is issued applies for the appointment of a jury to try whether the order is reasonable and proper, such application is to be made to the Magistrate by whom the order under section 133 was passed; but the express mention of "the Magistrate by whom it" (i.e., the order) "was made" in clause (b) itself goes to show that it is only when the party against whom the order is issued wants to avail himself of the alternative of having a jury appointed that his application must be made to the Magistrate by whom the original order was issued. Section 137, however, under which the order now complained against was made, does not require that the Magistrate who is to hear the objections and take evidence must be the Magistrate by whom the original order was made, but simply provides that if the party against whom the order is made appears and shows cause against the order, "the Magistrate shall take evidence in [281] the matter." That, in our opinion, evidently means the Magistrate to whom the proceedings may be referred under the penultimate paragraph of section 133; and, as that section distinctly provides that the case may be referred to a Magistrate of the second class, we think the mere fact of the Magistrate who made the order under section 137 being a second class Magistrate, does not show that he had no authority to make the order complained against. We may add that this view is in accordance with the decision of the Madras High Court in the case of In re Narasimha, (1886) I. L. R., 9 Mad., 201.

It remains then to consider the second ground upon which our interference is asked. The learned Vakil who appears to show cause contends that it is not open to the petitioner to raise the second ground, having regard to the terms of the rule. No doubt the matter is open to argument; but we are inclined to think that the rule, as it stands, is broad enough to admit of the second ground being urged. We may add that our taking this view cannot be said to have any prejudicial effect, as the learned Magistrate of the district who has shown cause in the explanation submitted by him, entered into matters relevant to the second ground as well as those concerned with the first.

Now, the law on the subject is laid down in a series of cases of which we need only refer to two, viz., Queen-Empress v. Bissessur Sahu, (1890) I. L. R., 17 Cal., 562; Luckheenarain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar Mukherjee, (1888) I. L. R., 15 Cal., 564). It is this, that when a question of title is bona fide raised, the Magistrate ought not to make an order under sections 133 and 137, but should allow an opportunity for the determination of the question by a Civil Court. The claim of title must, however, be bona fide and not a mere pretence to oust jurisdiction; and it is for the Magistrate to say whether the claim is a bona fide one or a pretence.

In the present case the Magistrate who made the conditional order absolute under section 137 has not considered the question whether the claim of title raised is a bona fide claim or a mere pretence. He has, it is true, found that the land in dispute is part [282] of a public thoroughfare; but that finding does not dispose of the question whether the dispute raised by the petitioners before us was or was not a bona fide dispute as to title; and one reason which induces us to take this view is that, although one of the petitioners urged that he had raised the embankment for over twelve years and had been in undisputed possession of it since then, and so the question of obstruction could not arise now, this is all that the learned Magistrate says with reference to this objection: "The last argument, however, cannot stand in the face of the ruling in The Municipal Commissioners of Calcutta v. Mahomed Ali, (1871) 7 B. L. R, 499, where it is laid down that no length of enjoyment can legalize a public nuisance." The Magistrate does not find that the allegation about the petitioners' enjoyment for twelve years and upwards is a mere assertion without any foundation for it; but he simply says, whether that was true or not would not affect the question. We are of opinion that he should have gone into the question and seen whether the fact of long possession did not give to the objection of the petitioners the character of a bona fide dispute as to title such as should have the effect of ousting the Magistrate of his jurisdiction under sections 133 and 137.

As the Magistrate has not considered the case from this point of view, we think the proper course to take in this case would be that taken by this Court in the case of Queen-Empress v. Bissessur Sahu, (1890) I. L. R, 17 Cal., 562, to which we have already referred; and we accordingly set aside the order under section 137, and direct that the Magistrate, after notice to both parties, do investigate the case de novo. If he is satisfied that the contention of the petitioners that the way is not a public way is a bona fide one, he should set aside the conditional order If, however, he finds upon proper reasons that the contention is not bona fide, he should affirm that order.

The 13th August, 1897.

Public Demands Recovery Act (Bengal Act VII of 1880), sections 2 and 20—Limitation—Act XI of 1859, section 34—Execution of decree annulling sale—Decree of Privy Council—Decree for costs—Rate of exchange.

Section 2 of the Public Demands Recovery Act (Bengal Act VII of 1880) does not make the provision of limitation in section 34 of Act XI of 1859 applicable to the execution of a decree annulling a sale under section 20 of Bengal Act VII of 1880

In converting into Indian currency the amount of costs expressed in sterling in an order of Her Majesty in Council, the rate of exchange is the rate which prevailed at the time when the order was made.

THE facts material to the report in this case appear from the judgment of the High Court.

Sir Griffith Evans, and Dr. Asutosh Mukerjee, for the Appellant.

Babu Lal Mohan Das and Babu Nalini Ranjan Chatterjee, for the Respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (TREVELYAN and STEVENS, JJ.) was delivered by Stevens, J.—This is an appeal from an order of the District Judge of Tirhoot, disallowing an objection by the judgment-debtor to the execution of the decree in respect of costs awarded against him by an order of Her Majesty in Council. The case in which those costs were awarded was one for the setting aside of a sale under the certificate procedure, Bengal Act VII of 1880. The contention was that, inasmuch as section 2 of Bengal Act VII of 1880 provides that that Act shall, as far as is consistent with the tenor thereof, [384] be construed as one with Act XI of 1859 passed by the Governor-General in Council and Act VII of 1868 passed by the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal in Council, the provisions of section 34 of Act XI of 1859 apply to the present case. That section provides that "if a sale made under this Act" (i.e., Act XI of 1859) "be amended by a final decree of a Civil Court, application for the execution of such decree shall be made within six months after the date thereof, otherwise the party in whose favour such decree was passed shall lose all benefit therefrom." Admittedly in the present case the application for execution was made more than six months after the date of the decree, and it is contended that under the provision of law which we have just quoted the decree-holder has lost all benefit from his decree.

We think that section 2 of Bengal Act VII of 1880 cannot have the effect of making the provisions of section 34 of Act XI of 1859, which relates to a decree annulling one class of sales, applicable to such a decree as is referred to in section 20 of Act VII of 1880, that is a decree setting aside a sale of another kind. We think that this is apparent from the fact that section 20 contains separate provisions applicable to the case of decrees setting aside sales in execution of certificates, those provisions not being consistent in some respects with the corresponding provisions of section 34 of Act XI of 1859 relating to a decree for the setting aside of a sale under that Act.

Another question which arises in this appeal is as to the time when the rate of exchange is to be calculated on the costs expressed in sterling in the order of Her Majesty in Council. Those costs have been estimated by the decree-holder at the rate of exchange which prevailed at the time when execution was applied for. It is contended that they should have been estimated at the rate which prevailed at the time when the order was made. In support of this contention a ruling of this Court, Dakhina Mohan Roy Chowdhry v. Saroda Mohan Roy Chowdhry, (1896) I. L. R. 23 Cal. 357, has been cited. This is a matter relating to the practice of the Court, and we think that we ought to follow that ruling, unless we were clearly of opinion that the point ought to be referred to a Full Bench. We must, therefore, vary the order of the Court below to this extent, that [285] the costs awarded in sterling by Her Majesty in Council must be converted into Indian currency at the rate of exchange for the time being fixed by the Secretary of State for India in Council at the time when the order of Her Majesty in Council was made. Subject to this variation of the order under appeal, the appeal is dismissed The appellant must pay the respondent's costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sections 121 and 140—Suit for compensation for illegal distraint—Non-joinder of parties in an action on tort—Joinder when too late—Objection of non-joinder not duly taken, Effect of—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), section 22.

A suit for compensation for illegal distraint under section 121 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885) was brought by one of two persons jointly entitled to the crops distrained. Objection being taken by the defendant at a late stage of the case on the ground of non-joinder of a party, that party was, on his own application, added as a plaintiff, but his claim was then barred by limitation Held—

(1) Section 140 of the Bengal Tenancy Act did not exclude a suit of this kind.

(2) The rule that persons having the same cause of action must sue jointly does not apply to actions on tort in every case in which persons have been damnified by the same tortious act.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 704 of 1896, against the decree of Babu Madhub Chandra Chuckerbutty, Subordinate Judge of Shahabad, dated the 19th of December 1895, affirming the decree of Babu Mohim Chunder Sircar, Munsif of Arrah, dated the 21st of June 1895.

(3) If the objection of non-joinder of party in an action of tort be not taken at the time and in the way provided by law, the defendant is liable to such portion of the damages only as have been incurred by the plaintiff who originally brought the suit.

(4) The whole suit was not barred by limitation in consequence of the provisions of section 22 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877).

THE facts and arguments of pleaders material to the report in this case appear from the judgment of the High Court.

Babu Umakali Mukerjee, and Babu Makhan Lall for the Appellant.

[286] Dr. Asutosh Mukerjee for the Respondent.

In the suit out of which this appeal arises, the plaintiff Padarath Ahir sued to recover Rs. 304-12-9 dams, which he had to pay into Court, in order to obtain the release of his crops from attachment, together with Rs. 7-0-9 dams, the costs alleged to have been incurred in making the attachment. The plaintiff's case was that the principal defendant Jagdeo Singh had wrongfully caused the crops to be distrained under colour of section 121 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, as the crops of the second defendant Anarath Rai, falsely alleging that the latter was the tenant of the plaintiff's holding on which the crops had been grown Both the Courts below have found in favour of the plaintiff on the facts

The plaint was filed within one month of the date when the attachment was made, but for some reason, which has not been explained to us, there appears to have been very great delay in disposing of the suit, and at a very late stage of the trial, some fourteen months after the filing of the plaint, a supplementary written defence was filed, in which for the first time the plea of defect of parties was taken. It was urged that inasmuch as Padarath's brother Kirtarath had an interest in the holding, he should have joined in bringing the suit. The obvious reply to this plea was that under section 34 of the Code of Civil Procedure it was not admissible at that stage of the proceedings, but the plaintiff unfortunately for himself attempted to cure the defect to which objection had been taken, and what was done was that Kirtarath applied with Padarath's consent to be added as a co-plaintiff. This was done with the result, which might have been expected, that a fresh plea of limitation, based upon section 22 of the Limitation Act, was at once taken by the defendants. That plea was allowed by the Court of First Instance so far as the interest of Kirtarath was concerned, and a decree was given only for one-half of the amount claimed, excluding the sum alleged to have been paid as the costs of the deposit, which was disallowed as not proved.

The defendant Jagdeo Singh appealed, and Padarath also [287] appealed in respect of the moiety disallowed as the share of Kirtarath, but both appeals were dismissed by the Lower Appellate Court.

The defendant Jagdeo Singh only has come up to this Court in second appeal. The grounds which have been argued before us are, first, that the plaintiff had no right of suit, and, secondly, that the whole of the claim ought to have been held to have been barred by limitation.

A preliminary objection was taken for the respondent that no second appeal lies in the case, inasmuch as it is in reality not a suit for compensation for illegal distress such as is contemplated by article (35) (j) of the second schedule of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, but is merely a suit for the recovery of the amount which the plaintiff-respondent had had to pay in order to procure the release of his crops from attachment. We think that objection is untenable, because the claim was not only for the recovery of the sum paid, but also for damages, namely the cost alleged to have been incurred in paying it. It is therefore a suit for compensation.

We proceed to deal with the appeal.

It is contended in the first place that the suit will not lie at all because such a suit can be brought only under the provisions of section 140 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and under that section a suit for compensation, where property has been distrained on an application made under section 121 of the Act, lies only in a case in which such an application is not permitted by the latter section. It is contended that in the present case the distraint was made on an application made under section 121 and permitted by the section. We think that there is nothing in section 140 to exclude an action of this kind in a case like that before us in which the landlord is found to have abused his power of distraint by distraining the crops which belong to the tenant on the pretence that they belong to another person in collusion with himself. There has been an invasion of the rights of the tenant for which he is entitled to a remedy, and if the case is not one of the kind contemplated by section 140 he is not, so far as we can see, deprived by the provisions of that section of the ordinary right of action [288] which any person who suffers from a tortious act has against the tortfeasor We may observe that this objection appears to have been taken for the first time in this Court.

With reference to the question of limitation we have first to see whether the addition of Kirtarath as a co-plaintiff was, in the circumstances of the case, legally made, looking to the provisions of section 34 of the Code of Civil Procedure. No doubt the objection taken by the defendants for want of parties was inadmissible under that section, as not having been made before the first hearing The difficulty is that that objection was not made in the proper manner, as we have already noticed, but Kirtarath made an application, with the consent of the original plaintiff Padarath, to be added as a co-plaintiff. Under the provisions of section 32 this could be done at any time, and we think that the validity of the act of the Court, which was done at the instance of Kirtarath and Padarath, cannot be affected by the fact that in moving the Court to do it they are influenced by the defendants having made an objection which was not sustainable and which Padarath might have successfully resisted on that ground. The addition of Kirtarath was perfectly legal in itself, and we think that Padarath and he are bound by their own act in causing it to be made.

The contention for the appellant on the point of limitation is that the two brothers had a joint cause of action upon which they could only sue jointly, and therefore the bar against Kirtarath's claim must apply to that of Padarath also. No provision of law has been cited in support of this argument, but we have been referred to the following reported cases, several of which appear to have been cited in the Courts below. Obhoy Churn Nundi v. Kritartha Moyi Dossee, (1881) I. L. R., 7 Cal., 284, Ramsebuk v. Ramlall Koondoo, (1881) I. L. R., 6 Cal., 815; Ramdoyal v. Junmenjoy Coondoo, (1887) I. L. R., 14 Cal, 791, Imamuddin v. Liladhar, (1892) I. L. R., 14 All., 524: Jibanti Nath Khan v. Gokool Chunder Chowdry, (1891) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 760, 764, and Kalidas Kevaldas v. Nathu Bhagvan, (1883) I. L. R., 7 Bom., 217.

[289] None of these cases seems to us to be in point. No doubt there are certain classes of cases in which persons having the same cause of action must sue jointly, such as suits upon a contract; but we are not aware of any authority for the application of this rule to actions on tort in every case in which several persons have been damnified by the same tortious act.

The non-joinder of a plaintiff in an action for wrong independent of contract may be a ground for insisting on the person being joined as plaintiff; but if that objection be not taken at the time and in the way provided by law, the defendant is liable for such portion of the damages as have been incurred by the plaintiff alone.

We do not think that there was anything to prevent Padarath in the present case from suing alone for compensation for the illegal distraint, as far as he was injuriously affected by it, and in this view his claim, which was certainly brought in time, would not be barred by the subsequent addition of Kirtarath as a co-plaintiff.

We dismiss this appeal with costs.

Landlord and tenant—Suit for rent—Deposit of rent by a tenant through the transferee of the holding from him, whether valid—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), section 61

A deposit of rent, though not made by a tenant himself, but made on his behalf by a transferee of the holding from him, is a valid deposit within the meaning of section 61 of the Bengal Tenancy Act

THE facts of this case are sufficiently stated in the judgment of the High Court.

[290] Babu Norendro Chunder Bose, for the Respondents

The following judgment was delivered by the High Court (BANERJEE and WILKINS, JJ.)

Banerjee, J.—In this appeal, which arises out of a suit for arrears of rent, the question is whether the deposit of rent set up in the defence of the tenants-defendants was a valid deposit under section 62 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The grounds upon which the learned Vakil for the plaintiffs-appellants asks us to hold that deposit to be invalid in law are, first, that the preliminary tender which was necessary in this case was not a valid tender as it was not made by the recorded tenants, but was made by the transferees from them; secondly, that the deposit was made in respect of rent which had not fallen due at the time; and, thirdly, that the deposit was made, not by the tenant as required by law, but by the transferee from him.

The first objection is, in our opinion, concluded by the finding arrived at by the Lower Appellate Court, which is to the effect that the tender was made by two of the defendants, that is two of the recorded tenants.

As to the second objection, it does not appear to have been raised before either of the Courts below; and as it involves the determination of a question of fact, namely, whether at the date of the tender the amount tendered had or had not fallen due, we do not think we ought to allow the objection to be raised at this stage of the case, as it would necessitate a remand and protract the litigation.

As to the third objection, it is quite true that section 61 enacts that "the tenant may present to the Court having jurisdiction to entertain a suit for the rent of his tenure or holding, an application in writing for permission to deposit in the Court the full amount of the money then due." But the question is whether the law requires that the tenant must present the application to the Court in person. We do not think that it would be a reasonable construction of the section to hold that it requires that the tenant must present the application in person.

The application here was made on behalf of the tenant though it was presented on his behalf by the transferee of the holding from him.

[291] The Bengal Tenancy Act does not make any provision as to how applications, other than those in suits, are to be made by or on behalf of parties in a case like this. Neither section 115 nor section 183 applies to cases of this description. That being so, we think the view taken by the Lower Appellate Court, that an application, such as the one that was made in this case for the deposit of rent, was in substantial compliance with section 61, is a reasonable view.

The objections urged against the validity of the deposit all fail; and this appeal must consequently be dismissed with costs.

Maintenance, Order of Criminal Court as to—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), section 488—Imprisonment for default of payment of Maintenance—Warrant of commitment—Procedure.

An order of commitment to prison for default in payment of a wife's maintenance allowance cannot be made without proof that the non-payment was due to wilful neglect of the person ordered to pay. Sidheswar Teor v. Gyanada Dasi, (1894) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 291, followed.

The law contemplates a single warrant of commitment in respect of the arrears due at the time of its issue. Where six months' arrears were due, an order for separate warrants of commitment awarding a separate sentence of imprisonment of one month on each warrant, was therefore held to be bad in law.

As to the mode of computing the term of imprisonment the case of Allapichai Ravuthar v. Mohidin Bibi, (1896) I. L. R., 20 Mad., 3, followed.

THE facts of this case, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of this report, appear from the judgment of the High Court.

No one appeared at the hearing of the reference.

[292] The judgment of the High Court (Hill and Stevens, JJ.) was as follows:—

The order of the Magistrate of the 15th September last committing Bhiku Khan to prison for five months for making default in the payment of his wife's maintenance allowance cannot be maintained. It was decided in the case of Sidheswar Teor v. Gyanada Dasi, (1894) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 291, that before such an order can be made it must be proved that the non-payment was due to wilful neglect of the person ordered to make the payment. No evidence directed to this point has been taken by the Magistrate. This is the reason given by the Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur for his recommendation that the order should be set aside.

But it appears to us that the order of the Magistrate is in another respect also contrary to law. The petition of Zahuran, dated the 30th January 1897, relates to the arrears of her maintenance for the six months from the 1st July to the end of December 1896. The Magistrate states that he directed Bhiku Khan to be imprisoned in the first instance for the arrears only of the month of July 1896. This order was made on the 18th June last. The next order in the matter is of the 12th July, and directs the issue of a notice to Zahuran requiring her to state whether she had been paid for any of the five remaining months of the year 1896. Zahuran made no answer to this requisition, and on the 17th July the following order appears in the order sheet: "File she is absent."

* Criminal Reference No. 308 of 1897, made by F. B. Taylor, Esq., Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur, dated the 11th November 1897.

About this time it appears that Bhiku Khan was released from prison as a "jubilee prisoner." "Hence," the Magistrate states in his letter of explanation to the Judicial Commissioner, "I have now taken action on Zahuran's petition mentioned above" (the petition, that is, of the 30th January 1897) "for the five remaining months' balance separately for each." The "action" to which reference is here made is disclosed by the order of the 15th September 1897, the order that is which has been brought to our notice by the letter of the Judicial Commissioner. The order is in these terms: "As the defendant won't pay, he will go to prison on each of the five warrants for five months in all, one month in each case."

[293] This order was passed apparently without notice to Bhiku Khan, and, as has been already mentioned, it was made without any evidence having been taken to support it.

Leaving these considerations out of view, however, we think that the law contemplates a single warrant of commitment in respect of the arrears due at the time of its issue, and that for this reason as well as that already mentioned the order of the 15th September is bad in law. It was not, we think, intended that a person against whom an order for maintenance has been made under section 488 of the Code should be subject, when arrears have been allowed to accumulate before the aid of the Court is invoked, to a series of separate terms of imprisonment in respect of the arrears of each month, preceded, as all imprisonment under the section ought to be, by a separate inquiry and warrant of distress in each case.

The procedure contemplated by the Legislature in such a case seems to us to be that the Magistrate should in the first place satisfy himself by evidence that the non-payment complained of has been due to wilful neglect on the part of the person bound by the order. He should then issue his warrant for the levy of the whole amount due in the manner prescribed by the section. If after this course has been taken any part of the aggregate amount due remains unsatisfied, the Magistrate may sentence the defaulter to a proportionate term of imprisonment.

The mode of computing the term seems to us to have been correctly indicated by the High Court of Madras in the case of Allapichai Ravuthar v. Mohidin Bibi, (1896) I. L. R., 20 Mad., 3, where it is said: "The procedure contemplated by the Code appears to be to deduct the sum levied from the sum due, and then to ascertain how many months arrears the balance represents. The maximum imprisonment that can be imposed will then be one month for each month's arrears, and if there is a balance representing the arrears for a portion of a month a further term of a month's imprisonment may be imposed for such arrear."

These principles, we may remark, relate to the computation of the maximum term of imprisonment which may be awarded [294] under the section. It ought perhaps to be unnecessary to point out that before he inflicts the highest penalty of which the law allows, it is the duty of a Magistrate to satisfy himself judicially that the case is one in which the defaulter ought to be dealt with with marked severity. The Magistrate, however, in the present case does not appear to have given the question any consideration whatever, and indeed upon the materials before him any conclusion at which he might have arrived would have been of little value.

We set aside the order of the 15th September committing Bhiku Khan to prison and direct that he be set at liberty.

B. D. B. Order set aside.

Inspection of Documents—Practice—Inspection by agent of a party.

When under an order giving liberty to a party to a suit, his attorneys and agents, to inspect and peruse the documents produced by the opposite party, inspection by an agent is contemplated, the order should be read in such a way as would give the Court some control over the persons to be appointed to inspect the documents. Such an order contemplates that the agent will be a person standing in the position of the party for the purposes of the suit.

Held, therefore, that the Court ought not to permit a person formerly in the service of the defendant to inspect as the plaintiff's agent the defendant's books, which had been in his charge.

THIS was an application, adjourned from Chambers, that the defendant should allow the presence of Abdul Jubbar, accountant, as the plaintiff's agent, at the inspection of documents under an order dated the 20th February 1897.

The plaintiff and the defendant owned a joint business, and the defendant also had a separate business: and the plaintiff now sought to have the assistance of Abdul Jubbar at the inspection of the [295] books of the joint business in respect of a period when the books were under the supervision of Abdul Jubbar.

The defendant alleged, in answer to the application, that in 1893 the books of the separate business were also under Abdul Jubbar's charge, and that he had subsequently dismissed Abdul Jubbar. The statement as to the dismissal was denied on affidavit by Abdul Jubbar. The application was adjourned into Court.

Mr. Jackson showed cause against the application.—It would be in the highest degree objectionable that a person who, according to the defendant, has been dismissed from his service for making away with his books, should be allowed to take inspection of the defendant's books on the plaintiff's behalf. The plaintiff wants Abdul Jubbar to make the inspection, or at least to be present at the inspection, because the books of accounts were kept under him while he was in the defendant's service.

This is not a mere objection of sentiment; it is a personal objection. While in the defendant's employment, Abdul Jubbar was giving the plaintiff information as to matters in this suit. If this application be granted, it will be open to a party to a suit to authorise any person whomsoever to inspect documents on his behalf. Even an independent professional accountant is not an agent for this purpose unless a special case is made out to justify his appointment—Bonnardet v. Taylor, (1861) 1 J. & H., 383. Draper v. The Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Railway Co., (1861) 3 De G. F. & J., 23; Bartley v. Bartley, (1852) 1 Drewry, 233: and Dadswell v. Jacobs, (1887) L. R., 34 Ch. D., 278, were also cited.

Mr. Dunne in support of the application.—The rule which is said to apply in England has never been applied in India, and it is not possible for it to apply here. One of the most ordinary modes of inspection in this country is inspection by some person on behalf of the party. Suppose, for instance, there are accounts between an English firm and a Marwari one, and the accounts, or some of them, are in Nagri, who could inspect the Nagri accounts on behalf of the English firm? From the very nature of the case the English firm would have to appoint some agent familiar with the [296] Nagri language to inspect the books on their behalf. Dadswell v. Jacobs, (1887) L. R., 34 Ch. D., 278 was not a case of inspection properly so called; for there a firm sought to compel their agent to produce certain documents relating to their business to the person who was a rival of that agent, and the only question was whether the defendant's objection to giving inspection of his books to a rival trader was a reasonable one. And whatever the case of Bonnardet v. Taylor may decide, there is in this country no rule that an agent pro hac vice may not be appointed to inspect documents. If such a rule were laid down in India, inspection would become impossible, and suits would never be ready for hearing. Besides, in Bonnardet v. Taylor, (1861) 1 J. & H, 383 it was sought to appoint a professional accountant to ransack the other party's books. That is not the case here. In this case the plaintiff will inspect the books; all he wants is to have Abdul Jubbar to sit by him and give such assistance as he can.

The case of Draper v. The Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Railway Co., (1861) 3 De G F. & J, 23, is distinguishable; for there it was sought to appoint the accountant of a rival company to inspect the books. The cases cited against the plaintiff, therefore, have no real bearing on the present case.

Abdul Jubbar has filed an affidavit denying that he was dismissed from the defendant's service. He is certainly in the plaintiff's employment now, and is therefore entitled, under the order, to inspect the books on the plaintiff's behalf. He was in the plaintiff's service before the date on which inspection was sought, and the plaintiff offers to agree to any terms the defendant desires for the protection of his books.

The rule laid down by this Court is, that where there is any difficulty in the way of inspection, the proper place for inspection is the Court: let the books, therefore, be produced in Court.

Sale, J.—This is an application by the plaintiff for an order that the defendant, Ekramul Huq, to allow Abdul Jubbar, the plaintiff's agent, to be present at the inspection directed by the order of the 20th February 1897.

[297] The material portion of the order is as follows: "And the applicant, his attorneys and agents, are to be at liberty to inspect and peruse the documents so to be produced and left, and to take copies and abstracts thereof and extracts therefrom as the applicant shall be advised."

It is contended, on the part of the plaintiff, that the words of the order leave the Court no discretion, and that Abdul Jubbar is a person who answers to the description of the word "agent" as used in the order.

It is admitted that Abdul Jubbar was originally a servant of the defendant Ekramul Huq, and that he continued in his service until some time after the date of the order for inspection, and that up to his discharge some time in 1897 he was employed as an accountant and had charge of the books of the defendant Ekramul Huq. It appears to me that the words "attorneys and agents," as used in the order for inspection, should be read in such a way as would give the Court some sort of control over the persons taking part in the inspection of documents directed by the order. I think it is clear from the authorities cited that similar words are interpreted by the Courts in England in a restricted sense which permits the exercise of such control.

In accordance with these authorities the words "attorneys and agents" should be read as referring either to the applicant himself or to persons who stand in his position with reference to the suit generally. It is to be observed that in allowing a party to inspect, the Court gives him a privilege of a very important character, and it is the duty of the Court to see that the privilege is not exercised so as to operate prejudicially against his opponent.

It is said that to read these words in the exclusive sense contended for would render it impossible for inspection to be conveniently obtained in this country; but I think the Courts in this country, in permitting servants or agents of parties, other than those strictly falling within the words of the order, to take part in the inspection, would be disposed to exercise a reasonable discretion and would not prevent a party from employing a servant for the purposes of the inspection unless it was shown that there was some sufficient ground of objection as against him.

[298] It appears to me that the person whom it is proposed to employ in the present instance does not come strictly within the words of the order, and that the Court would be entitled to exercise a discretion in permitting him to act for the plaintiff in the matter of the inspection.

That being so, the question is whether the objection made as regards Abdul Jubbar is a reasonable one. It is, I think, something more than a mere sentimental objection. It is to be remembered that serious allegations are made against this person by the defendant Ekramul Huq; and, though I say nothing as to the truth of these allegations the admitted circumstances under which he left the service of the defendant and entered the service of the plaintiff are such as would expose him to a strong temptation to take undue advantage or make improper use of the knowledge he had gained while in the defendant's employ if he is permitted to take part in the inspection.

I think, therefore, I ought not to compel the defendant to admit Abdul Jubbar to the inspection, and the present application must be refused with costs.

Vendor and Purchaser—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), section 55, sub-section 2- -Implied covenant for title—English Conveyance Act of 1881, 44 and 45 Vic., ch. 41, section 7.

[299] In the absence of any contract to the contrary there is under section 55, sub-section 2 of the Transfer of Property Act, an implied covenant for title on the part of the vendor.

THE facts of this case, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of this report, are fully set out in the judgments of the High Court.

Dr. Ashutosh Mookerjee, and Babu Mohendra Nath Bose, for the Appellant.

Babu Purno Chunder Shome, for the Respondent.

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and BANERJEE, J):—

Maclean, C J.,—This appeal raises a short point of law, and the point of law is, whether, having regard to sub-section (2) of section 55 of the Transfer of Property Act, a vendor of immoveable property must be, in the absence of any contract to the contrary, taken to covenant for title. The facts in this case lie within a very narrow compass. The plaintiff bought a small piece of land of the defendant in the year 1295 B.S. (1888) and the consideration money was thirty rupees. A conveyance was duly executed and registered. It appears that subsequently, after the conveyance to the plaintiff had been executed and registered, a question arose as to the title of the defendant, and certain proceedings were taken in which it was virtually decided that the defendants had no title. I may here remark that, in his defence in the present suit, the defendant does not allege that he has a title to the property in question.

Under these circumstances the plaintiff sues the defendant, and asks, amongst other things, for the recovery of his purchase money and interest.

No doubt the plaintiff based his case in a great measure, if not entirely, upon allegations of fraud, which view has not been adopted by either of the Judges in the Courts below. But although he has so based his case, to my mind he is entitled to urge before us that, even if he cannot sustain a case of fraud, as a matter of law he is entitled to succeed upon the ground that there was a covenant for title on the part of the vendor. The learned District Judge has decided that in this case "the doctrine [300] of caveat emptor applies, and that therefore the plaintiff is not entitled to succeed." But it does not appear that the section of the Transfer of Property Act to which I have referred was called to the learned District Judge's attention. In my opinion, and having regard to that section, there was a covenant on the part of the vendor that the interest which he professed to transfer to the plaintiff subsisted, and that he had power to transfer the same. I have two or three times invited the learned Vakil to say what his answer was to that section, but my invitation was not accepted. This section is to some extent analogous to section 7 of the English Conveyance Act of 1881, and in my opinion, in the absence of any contract to the contrary, which is not suggested in the present case, sub-section 2 of section 55 * of the Transfer of Property Act must be taken as incorporated into the present contract between the plaintiff and the defendant, which in effect is tantamount to a covenant for title on the latter's part. I do not appreciate what that section can mean unless it means what I have indicated above. I think, therefore, that quite apart from the question of fraud, there was a covenant for title in this case on the part of the vendor, and that, in that respect, the learned District Judge has miscarried. The appeal must therefore succeed.

We think that the proper order to make as to costs is this: Inasmuch as the appellant launched and argued his case on the question of fraud in the Courts below he will get no costs (except the institution fees) in those Courts, but he must have his costs of this appeal.

Banerjee, J.—I am of the same opinion. The question that arises in this appeal is whether the effect of sub-section 2 of section 55 of the Transfer of Property Act is to imply a covenant for title in the absence of any contract to the contrary. I think that the question ought to be answered in the affirmative and in favour of the appellant who was the plaintiff in the Court below, and who brought this suit to recover compensation owing to the title of his vendor, defendant No. 1, having been found to be wanting in reference to the property conveyed to him.

The only grounds upon which the learned Vakil for the re-[301]spondent sought to meet the appellant's contention were, first, that the suit was based upon fraud, as to which the Courts below have found against the plaintiff; and, secondly, that having regard to the fact found by the first Court that the plaintiff knew, or was expected to know, all about the property conveyed to him, he is not entitled to succeed in a suit like this.

As to the first answer, though no doubt the plaint makes several allegations imputing fraud to the defendant No. 1, still the main fact now relied upon by the learned Vakil for the appellant is also alleged, viz., that it was found in a suit brought by the plaintiff against one Janadolla, a suit to which the present defendant No. 1 was also made a party, that the present defendant No. 1 had no title to the property in dispute. Having regard to that fact, and having regard to the absence of any allegation by the defendant No. 1 that he had a title to the property, we do not think that the first answer can avail the respondent.

As to the second answer, the only way in which it could possibly have availed the defendant was by showing that there were circumstances in the case from which a contract to the contrary might have been implied—a contract, namely, that the plaintiff took a conveyance with all defects in the vendor's title. We do not think that there has been any finding to that effect, and the second answer must in my opinion therefore also fail.

There can be no doubt as to the meaning of sub-section 2, section 55 of the Transfer of Property Act Its effect is clearly to imply a covenant for title somewhat in the same way as such covenants are implied according to the provisions of section 7 of the English Conveyance Act of 1881, 44 and 45 Victoria, Chapter 41

Landlord and tenant—Encroachment by a tenant—Effect of such encroachment—Position of such tenant—Trespasser.

When a tenant encroaches upon the land of his landlord he does not by such encroachment become the tenant in respect of the land encroached upon against the will of the landlord.

THIS appeal arose out of an action brought by the plaintiffs to recover possession of certain land by ejectment of defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3, as well as for apportionment of rent The allegation of the plaintiffs was that they held the disputed land under an amalnama dated 6th Baisak 1299 B S. (17th April 1892), and a pottah dated 7th Kartic 1299 B.S (22nd October 1892), granted by the present zemindar-defendant No 4, Peary Mohun Roy, and that they were dispossessed by the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3, by a proceeding under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which was decided in favour of the said defendants The defence of defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 was that they were in possession of the disputed land by virtue of a pottah granted on the 14th Baisak 1256 B S. (25th April 1849) by the previous zemindars, known as the Biswases They impugned the plaintiffs' lease as being one set up in collusion with the zemindar-defendant, and they also pleaded limitation. The zemindar-defendant supported the plaintiffs' case, but pleaded that no apportionment of rent could be allowed to them.

The Subordinate Judge, holding that the land in dispute was included within the lease set up by the defendants, and that the plaintiffs' claim was barred by limitation, dismissed the suit as against the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3, but allowed apportionment of rent as against the zemindar-defendant. On appeal by the plaintiffs, and on cross-appeal by the zemindar-defendant, to the [303] District Judge, he reversed the decision of the first Court, and decreed the suit as against defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3, but disallowed apportionment of rent.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 197 of 1896, against the decree of J. Pratt, Esq., District Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 22nd of October 1895, reversing the decree of Babu Hara Krisna Chatterjee, Additional Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 27th of September 1894.

From this decision the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 appealed to the High Court.

Babu Nil Madhub Bose, and Babu Shib Chunder Palit, for the Appellants.

Babu Saroda Churn Mitter, and Babu Hara Kumar Mitter, for the Respondents

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and BANERJEE, J.) :—

Maclean, C.J.—In this case the plaintiffs sue to recover from the defendants certain plots of land, a portion of which is covered with water. The defence was that these plots and expanse of water were included in a certain lease from the zemindar who is a defendant in the case, and who is a common lessor both of the plaintiffs and the defendants. It has been found as a fact by the lower Court that these plots of land and expanse of water are not included in the defendants' lease. That being so, the defendants fall back upon the contention that these plots belonged to their zemindar, the zemindar who was their lessor; that they have encroached upon these plots of their landlord, and that having so encroached upon his lands they are entitled to be treated as between themselves and their landlord as his tenants, not only of the land originally included in the lease, but also of this land and expanse of water upon which they have encroached.

That no doubt is their present contention, although that is not the contention they set up in their written statement. This contention is doubtless suggested by the exigencies of the appellants' case, the Court below having found that the plots in question were not included in the appellants' lease. What we have to consider is, whether, in point of law, such contention can prevail. I think not, and I do not think I can do better than adopt, as I do, the language of Sir RICHARD GARTH in the case of Nuddyar Chand Shaha v. Meajan, (1884) I. L. R., 10 Cal., 820 in which, in delivering the judgment of the Court, he [304] says: "It would indeed seem strange if, as a matter of law, a tenant were allowed, without his landlord's permission, to appropriate any land which adjoins his own tenure, and then when his landlord complained of the trespass, and required him to give the land up, he were allowed to take advantage of his own wrong, and insist upon retaining possession of it until the expiration of his tenure." Now, although the zemindar in this case is not the plaintiff, he is a defendant, and he supports the case of the plaintiffs who are tenants of the land in dispute, under the lease granted to them.

Reliance has been placed by the learned Vakil for the appellant upon the law as laid down in the case of Gooroo Doss Roy v. Issur Chunder Bose, (1874) 22 W. R., 246. I think the rule is laid down there too broadly, and I gather that the Court in the case of Nuddyar Chand Shaha v. Meajan, (1884) I.L.R., 10 Cal., 820 was also of that opinion. In fact the Judges who decided the latter case seem to have been so much impressed with the effect of that ruling that they apparently consulted Mr. Justice MITTER, who was one of the Judges who decided the case of Gooroo Doss Roy v. Issur Chunder Bose, (1874) 22 W. R., 246, for I find this passage in the judgment of the Court (I. L. R., 10 Cal., p. 882): "We have consulted our brother Mitter as to this," that is as to the ruling in the case of Gooroo Doss Roy v. Issur Chunder Bose (1874) 22 W. R., 246, "and we find that it was by no means the intention of the Court in that case to lay down the rule thus broadly." As regards the case of Gooroo

Doss Roy v. Issur Chunder Bose, (1874) 22 W. R., 246 I am quite unable to agree with what the Court there lays down as to what is the rule of English law in cases of encroachment by a tenant. I allude to the passage in which Mr. Justice MARKBY says: "The true presumption as to encroachments made by a tenant during his tenancy upon the adjoining lands of his landlord is that the lands so encroached upon are added to the tenure and form part thereof, for the benefit of the tenant so long as the original holding continues, and afterwards for the benefit of his landlord, unless it clearly appeared by some act done at the time that the tenant made the encroachment for his own [305] benefit." If that be intended to lay down the rule of English law upon the point I respectfully dissent from it. The rule as there laid down is applicable to cases where the encroachment is upon waste land or land of third parties, but I am not aware of any authority in the English Courts which lays down that rule as applicable to the case of an encroachment by a tenant on other lands of his own landlord, or that if such encroachment be made the tenant can by that encroachment consitute himself the tenant of his landlord of the land he has encroached upon. It strikes me as an odd result that a tenant of plots A and B can by encroaching on plot C which also belongs to his landlord successfully claim by that action on his part to be entitled as between himself and his landlord to be treated by the latter as the tenant of the plot C; in other words by his own wrongful act to force himself upon his landlord nolens volens as tenant of plot C. I am aware of no authority for such a proposition, nor do I regard the proposition as in accordance with law. The appeal on this point of law fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Banerjee, J.—I am of the same opinion. I only wish to add this, that where a tenant encroaches upon the land of his landlord, though the landlord may, if he chooses, treat him as a tenant in respect of the land encroached upon, the tenant has no right to compel the landlord against his will to accept him as a tenant in respect of that land. No authority has been cited in support of the contention that the tenant has such a right, and it would be contrary to reason and common sense to hold that a tenant has that right.

1. "An encroachment made by a tenant from the adjoining waste of his landlord is prima facie made by him in his character as tenant; but it is open to the landlord to repudiate the relation, to treat him as a trespasser, and to evict him as such; on the other hand, it is open to the tenant to indicate at the time he encroaches, that he intends to hold the encroached lands for his own exclusive benefit and not to hold them as he held the lands to which they are adjacent; in this event, the landlord though willing to treat him as a tenant may be driven, by an assertion of a hostile title, to a suit to eject him as a trespasser: — per MOOKERJEE, J., in (1905) 2 C.L.J., 128. Voluntary payment—Contract Act (IX of 1872), section 69—Arrears of rent—Payment made to save the putni taluk from sale—Payment made by a mortgagee.

[306] The plaintiff, who was the mortgagee of a certain putni taluk, obtained a consent decree for Rs. 35,000, on his mortgage bond, on the 13th August 1888. In the solenamah it was stipulated that if the decretal amount were not paid within a certain date, it was to be increased to Rs. 52,000. On the 14th March 1891 the plaintiff applied for execution of that decree and claimed the larger amount, as admittedly the smaller amount was not paid within the stipulated period. The Subordinate Judge allowed the plaintiff's claim. The defendant appealed to the High Court, and on the 31st September 1891, the order of the Subordinate Judge was reversed, and an inquiry was directed as to the conduct of the plaintiff in the matter. On the 31st August 1892, the Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff had been guilty of misconduct and that the decree had been fully satisfied. The plaintiff appealed from this order to the High Court, and on the 4th January 1894 the appeal was dismissed, and he preferred an appeal to Her Majesty in Council. In the meantime, on the 13th May 1892, the plaintiff had paid a certain sum of money to protect the putni taluk from sale for arrears of rent due to the landlord. In a suit brought to recover from the defendant the amount so paid:

Held, that the payment was not a voluntary payment, and that the plaintiff was interested in the payment of the money, and therefore he was entitled to recover it.

THE facts of the case, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of this report and the arguments, appear sufficiently from the judgment of the High Court.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose, and Babu Akshoy Kumar Banerjee, for the Respondent.

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and BANERJEE, J.)

Maclean, C. J.—The question we have to decide upon this appeal is whether the plaintiff in this suit is entitled to recover a sum of Rs. 383 odd under the following circumstances. The plaintiff was the mortgagee of a putni tenure; the defendants were the mortgagors. On the 13th August 1888, the mortgagee having instituted a suit to enforce his mortgage security, a consent decree was made. The decree was for Rs. 35,000, but it went on to provide that, if that sum were not paid within a certain date which was mentioned in the solenamah which was embodied in the decree, the amount was to be increased to Rs. 52,000, which [307] the defendants were to be held liable to pay. On the 14th March 1891 the plaintiff applied for execution of that decree upon the footing that the smaller amount had admittedly not been paid within the stipulated period, and consequently that the larger amount was due to the plaintiff.

The Subordinate Judge of Backergunge, who heard that application, made an order on the 14th March 1891, disallowing the defendant's objections, and in effect allowing the present plaintiff's claim. That order was appealed from, and, on the 31st September 1891, the High Court reversed that order and directed an inquiry as to the circumstances under which, as it was alleged, the plaintiff had prevented or obstructed the sale of certain property, and an inquiry as to the conduct of the plaintiff in the matter.

On the 31st August 1892 the Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff had been guilty of misconduct and that the decree had been fully satisfied.

The present plaintiff appealed from that order to the High Court, and on the 4th January 1894 it was heard by this Court and dismissed. I understand from what has been said at the bar that that order is now under appeal to Her Majesty in Council.

In the meantime, on the 13th May 1892, the plaintiff had paid a sum of Rs. 318 odd to prevent the sale by the superior landlord of the putni interest which was included in his mortgage. That payment was made on the very day fixed for the sale, and it had the effect of stopping the sale. Admittedly the defendants were not in a position to make the payment, and if it had not been made, the sale would have gone on. If the auction sale had not been stayed the plaintiff, assuming he were entitled to the larger of the above sums, in other words that his contention was correct, would have lost the benefit of his security for the balance due to him, and the defendants their interest in the equity of redemption. The payment was for the benefit of the defendants. But it is contended that, inasmuch as the effect of the judgment of the High Court on the 4th January 1894 was that the plaintiff must be taken to have been paid in June 1891 all he was entitled to, he had no interest whatever in the payment of this money; that it was a voluntary payment, and therefore the defendants cannot be required to [308] repay it. This does not appear to me to be a very equitable contention, when the result of the payment was to benefit the defendants by saving their equity of redemption from being sold. It has not been suggested in argument before us that at that time the equity of redemption was of no value, or that it was not for the benefit of the defendants that the sale should be stopped. Can it be said that at the time the payment was made, the plaintiff was not interested in the payment of the money? The position was this. The Subordinate Judge in the first instant had decided in his favour. When the payment was made, no doubt an inquiry had been directed by the High Court by their order of the 31st September 1891, which inquiry was still pending. But the litigation was going on, the plaintiff was contending that he was entitled to the larger sum owing to the default of the defendants, and until the point which was then sub judice was decided, it can scarcely be said that he was not interested in the payment of this money. The point at issue was whether the plaintiff was entitled to the larger or to the smaller sum. If entitled only to the smaller sum, it is not contested that he had been paid off in June 1891. I am not prepared to hold that because after he had paid the money the judgment of the Court was against him he was not interested in the payment at the time he made it. I think he was interested in the payment of this money within the meaning of section 69 of the Indian Contract Act. If the decision had been, as yet possibly it may be, in his favour, the effect of the payment was to preserve his security. This view appears to me consistent with the law as laid down by the Privy Council in the case of Dakkhina Mohan Roy v. Saroda Mohan Roy, (1893) I.L.R., 21 Cal., 142, and also consistent with the case of Nobin Krishna Bose v. Mon Mohun Bose, (1881) I. L. R., 7 Cal., 573.

On these grounds I am of opinion that the view taken by the learned Judge in the Court below was correct, and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Banerjee, J.—I am of the same opinion. The question raised in this appeal is shortly this, namely, whether the plaintiff who was the mortgagee of a putni tenure belonging to the [309] defendants, and who had paid a certain sum of money to save the putni tenure from sale under Regulation VIII of 1819, and to protect the interest he was then claiming as mortgagee, can recover that sum from the defendants, notwithstanding that it has since been found by the Court that the mortgage debt had been satisfied before the date of the payment.

Having regard to the facts of the case, I think this question ought to be answered in the affirmative. The provision of the law that governs this case in my opinion is section 69 of the Contract Act which says "A person who is interested in the payment of money which another is bound by law to pay, and who, therefore, pays it, is entitled to be re-imbursed by the other."

There can be no question that the defendants were bound to pay the putni rent. In fact if they had not paid that money, the putni tenure would have been sold and lost to them The only point that is disputed before us is, whether the plaintiff can be said to have been, at the time of the sale, a person interested in the payment of the putni rent. It is argued that as upon the finding of the Court ultimately arrived at in the proceedings in execution of the mortgage decree which were then pending, it appears that the mortgage debt had been satisfied before the date of the payment by the plaintiff, we must take it that he was not interested in the payment of the money. Now, the circumstances under which the Court ultimately came to the finding that the mortgage debt had been satisfied, were of a somewhat peculiar nature. The compromise decree upon the mortgage bond provided that if a certain sum was paid within a certain time, the decree would be satisfied, but if that amount was not paid within that time, a larger amount would be recoverable by the mortgagee. As a matter of fact the smaller amount was not actually paid within the stipulated time; but what was found was this, that by reason of the acts and conduct of the mortgagee, decree-holder, either in not helping the mortgagor, judgment-debtor, or in actively opposing him, in selling the mortgaged property with a view to realize money for the payment of the mortgage debt, the decree-holder had become disentitled to recover the larger amount; and it was by reason of this decision, arrived at some time after the payment now in question, that the [310] learned Vakil for the appellants contends we must hold that the mortgagee, plaintiff, was not interested in the payment of the money at the time when he paid it. I am not prepared to say that this contention is sound.

If the case had rested upon the determination of the simple question of fact as to whether the amount had or had not been paid within the stipulated time, the case might have stood on a different footing; but here, if we were to hold that the mortgagee was not interested in the payment of the money, because it was eventually found that the debt had been satisfied before the date of such payment, we must not only hold that the mortgagee knew the facts that led to the adverse decision in the proceedings in execution of the mortgage decree, but we must further hold that he was bound to anticipate the conclusion of the Court upon a mixed question of law and fact that was ultimately arrived at. I do not think that that would be a right view to take of the matter. It is clear that there was a disputable question awaiting the determination of the Court with reference to the rights of the mortgagee; and, so long as that question remained undetermined, it cannot be said that the mortgagee was not interested in the payment of the money which was necessary to be paid to protect the interest which he was claiming as mortgagee.

The view I take is amply supported by the decision of this Court in the case of Nobin Krishna Bose v. Mon Mohun Bose, (1881) I. L. R., 7 Cal., 573, and by the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Dakhina Mohan Roy v. Saroda Mohan Roy, (1893) I. L. R, 21 Cal., 142. Some reliance was placed upon the case of Ramtuhul Singh v. Biseswar Lal Sahoo, (1875) 15 B. L. R., 208: L. R., 2 I. A., 131: 23 W. R., 305, as shewing that the mere fact of a payment going to benefit the defendant would not be sufficient to entitle the party making the payment to recover it from the defendant. The facts of that case were very peculiar, and very different from those of this case. Here the defendants not only had the benefit of the payment made, but they would, as a matter of fact, have lost their property were it not for that payment.

[311] That being so, I think upon the provisions of section 69 of the Contract Act, as well as on general principles of justice, equity and good conscience, the decree made in favour of the plaintiff is right and ought to be affirmed with costs.

Mortgage—Decree absolute for foreclosure—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sections 87 and 88—Whether time to redeem would run from the date of the preliminary decree, or from the date of the decree of the Appellate Court, when it simply confirms the decree of the first Court.

Where, in a suit on a mortgage, the decree of the Appellate Court simply dismisses the appeal, leaving the decree of the first Court untouched, the time for redemption would run from the date of the decree of the first Court.

*Appeal from Order No. 368 of 1896, against the order of B. G. Geidt, Esq., Additional District Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 26th of June 1896, reversing the order of Babu Mati Lal Haldar, Munsif of Alipur, dated the 13th of March 1896.

THE facts of the case, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of this report, and the arguments, appear sufficiently from the judgments of the High Court.

Babu Golap Chunder Sircar for the Appellant.

Babu Nilmadhub Bose, and Babu Shib Chunder Palit, for the Respondent,

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and BANERJEE, J.)

Maclean, C J.—This is a suit to enforce a mortgage security. On the 8th September 1893, the usual preliminary mortgage decree was made, giving the defendant three months' time within which to redeem, the three months to run from the date of that decree. On the 24th of July 1894 an appeal by the defendant against that decree was heard and dismissed, thus leaving the decree untouched. On the 30th of July 1894, an application was made by the plaintiff for foreclosure absolute, and notice [312] of that application was served on the 8th of August of the same year on the mortgagor, the present appellant. On the 15th September in the same year the foreclosure was made absolute. No objection was then made by the defendant. It appears that the Court was satisfied that notice had been served upon him; this appears upon the face of the order of the 15th September 1894. On the 16th November 1894, possession was given to the plaintiff by the Court, and on the 8th of April 1895 satisfaction was entered up by the Court, which practically terminated the suit. Sometime in April 1895, the defendant made an application to the Munsif to set aside his own foreclosure order absolute of the 15th September 1894, and the ground for his application was that the three months given for payment under the decree of the 8th September 1893 run, not from the date of that decree, but from the date of the Appellate Court's decree of the 24th July 1894. The Munsif acceded to that view and set aside his own order. An appeal was taken to the District Judge, who reversed the order of the Munsif. Hence the appeal to us.

To my mind it is not necessary for us to go into the question whether the three months for redemption run from the date of the original decree or from the date of the appellate decree. In my judgment, if the defendant desired to raise that point, the proper time to raise it was when the matter came before the Munsif upon the application by the plaintiff for foreclosure absolute. He ought then to have raised it; he ought then to have invited the Court to hold that the three months for payment ought to run from the 24th July 1894, and not from the 8th September 1893, and that as that period had not expired, the foreclosure ought not to be made absolute. He did nothing of the sort. To my mind it is too late for him to raise the question now. I have been at a loss to appreciate, and I invited the learned Vakil for the appellant to assist me, upon what ground, or perhaps I should say upon the exercise of what jurisdiction, the Munsif had the power to discharge the order of the 15th September 1894, having regard to the circumstances under which that order was made. Upon that point the learned Vakil has not been able to afford me any assistance. In my [313] opinion, the Munsif had no such power. In this view of the case it becomes unnecessary, as I said before, to discuss the question as to the period from which three months for payment commenced to run, though it is not to be inferred from my silence that I do not concur with the view upon that point of the Court below.

There is one other fact to which I ought to refer, namely, that there was an application by the present appellant to the Munsif to review the order of the 15th September 1894. That application was unsuccessful.

I think the Court below was quite right, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Banerjee, J.—I am of the same opinion. I only wish to add that if it were necessary to go into the question raised, namely, whether the time for redemption should run from the date of the first Court's decree, or from the date of the decree in appeal, I should not have felt much hesitation in answering it in favour of the respondent, and saying that the time should run, having regard to the terms of the decree in the Appellate Court, from the date of the decree of the first Court. No doubt, as there was an appeal here, the final decree in the case is the decree of the Appellate Court. But the decree of the Appellate Court simply dismisses the appeal, leaving the decree of the first Court untouched, and I find very great difficulty in understanding how it can be said that, although the decree of the first Court, which is thus left untouched, provided that, if payment was not made within three months from the date thereof, the mortgage should be foreclosed, the mortgagor, by simply preferring an unsuccessful appeal, and without obtaining any order from the Appellate Court to that effect, gets, necessarily, and by the mere fact of the appeal, an extension of time, namely, three months from the date of the Appellate Court's decree.

Great reliance was placed upon the decision of this Court in the case of Noor Ali Chowdhuri v. Koni Meah, (1886) I. L. R., 13 Cal., 13, as showing that the time in such cases should run from the decree of the Appellate Court, notwithstanding that that decree merely confirms [314] the first Court's decree. But the case just referred to depended upon the construction of section 52 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869. That section enacts that "in all cases of such suits for the ejectment of a ryot or the cancelment of a lease, the decree shall specify the amount of the arrear, and if such amount, together with interest and costs of suit, be paid into Court within fifteen days from the date of the decree execution shall be stayed." The provision for stay of execution upon payment of arrears forms no part of the decree; it is a provision contained in the Rent Law; that law enacts that if payment is made within fifteen days from the date of the decree, execution should be stayed; and the Court held that the date of the decree there meant the date of the final decree in the case. That may be so; but there is no reason why a decree for foreclosure should be taken subject to any similar limitation. Here the time has to be fixed by the decree itself. The first Court's decree fixed a certain time, namely, three months from the date thereof. The decree of the Appellate Court left that decree untouched, and merely dismissed the appeal. There is no reason then for saying that the mere fact of the appeal being preferred has the effect of extending the time for redemption.

Another case was relied upon, namely, the case of Daulat v. Bhukandas Manek Chand, (1886) I. L. R, 11 Bom., 172, but there the learned Judges based their decision upon what they presumed to have been the intention of the decree of the Appellate Court. There being no indication here in the Appellate Court's decree of any intention to alter or extend the time fixed by the first Court, and there being nothing in sections 86 and 87 of the Transfer of Property Act, which governs this case, to show that the time allowed is other than that expressly and definitely fixed by the Court, I do not see any reason for holding that the time in this case runs from any date other than that of the decree of the first Court.

The law makes ample provision for preventing hardship. The Court which makes the decree is authorized by section 87 of the Act to enlarge the time upon good cause being shown. Here, [315] as has been pointed out in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice, far from any good cause being shown, no cause whatever was shown, nor even was any application made, for extension of time, before the decree absolute was made. I, therefore, think the order appealed against is quite right, and should be confirmed with costs.

Execution of decree—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), sections 223 and 649—Bengal, North-Western and Assam Civil Courts Act (XII of 1887) section 13—Redistribution of local areas, Effect of—Jurisdiction of Munsif.

A obtained a decree against B in the Court of the first Munsif of Howrah After the decree, the local area, within which the cause of action arose, and the judgment-debtor resided, was transferred from the first to the second Munsif On an application by A for the execution of his decree in the Court of the second Munsif which allowed execution

Held, that the second Munsif had no jurisdiction to entertain the application and allow execution, and that the application ought to have been made in the Court of the first Munsif which passed the decree.

THE facts of the case, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of this report, and the arguments, appear sufficiently from the judgment of the High Court.

Babu Mohendra Nath Roy for the Appellant.

Babu Purna Chunder Shome for the Respondent.

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and BANERJEE, J.)

Maclean, C.J.—This suit was instituted before the first Munsif of Howrah, and was a suit for an account in which eventually a money decree was given in favour of the plaintiff.

[316] I will assume for the purposes of this judgment that the local area within which the cause of action arose and the judgment debtor resided was transferred from the first to the second Munsif. The decree-holder applied for execution to the second Munsif, who directed execution to issue. From that order an appeal was taken to the District Judge, who held that the Court of the first Munsif was the one which ought to have made the order, and that the Court of the second Munsif had no jurisdiction to make it. Hence the present appeal.

* Appeal from Order No. 112 of 1897, against the order of J. F. Bradbury, Esq., District Judge of Hooghly, dated the 8th of December 1896, reversing the order of Babu Probodh Chunder Dutt, Munsif of Howrah, dated the 12th of September 1896.

The appellant relies mainly upon the latter portion of section 649 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which says that, "where the Court which passed the decree to be executed has ceased to exist or to have jurisdiction to execute it, the Court which, if the suit wherein the decree was passed were instituted at the time of making the application for execution of the decree, would have jurisdiction to try such suit," would be the Court which would have jurisdiction to execute the decree. Now, it is clear that in order to enable the appellant to succeed under that portion of section 649 which I have read he must make out one of two alternatives—either that the Court which passed the decree to be executed has ceased to exist, or that it had ceased to have jurisdiction to execute it. It is quite clear that the Court has not ceased to exist, and I have heard no argument from the learned Vakil who appears in support of this appeal to induce me to hold that the Court had no jurisdiction to execute it. On the other hand, I think it clear that that Court had jurisdiction to execute it.

But then it is said that if that be so, although that Court may have had that jurisdiction, it did not follow that the Court of the second Munsif had not also that jurisdiction, and reliance is placed upon sub-section (3) of section 13 of the Bengal, North-Western and Assam Civil Courts Act (XII of 1887). But in my judgment that section does not give the Court of the second Munsif of Howrah the jurisdiction for which the appellant contends.

All that that section says is, if I may paraphrase it, that when there has been a certain distribution of civil business by the District Judge, any decree or order passed by the Subordinate [317] Judge or by the Munsif shall not be invalid only by reason of, practically, that distribution. That section does not appear to me to confer upon the Court of the second Munsif in this case the jurisdiction which the appellant claims. In my opinion the proper Court to execute this decree, even assuming that there has been that fresh distribution of civil business by the District Judge, since the date of the decree, was the Court of the first Munsif. Upon these grounds, I think that the judgment of the Court below is correct, and that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Banerjee, J.—I am of the same opinion. Two points have been pressed before us by the learned Vakil of the decree-holder, appellant: first, that the Court of Appeal below is wrong in holding that the second Munsif of Howrah had no jurisdiction to entertain this application for execution of a decree passed by the first Munsif of that place, when, by reason of a redistribution of local areas between the first Munsif and second Munsif, the first Munsif had ceased to have jurisdiction in the case and under section 649 of the Code of Civil Procedure the second Munsif had acquired jurisdiction over the same; and, second, that even if section 649 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not cover this case, the Court of Appeal below was wrong in holding that the second Munsif of Howrah had no jurisdiction to entertain this application for execution, when it ought to have held that he had such jurisdiction under the provisions of sub-section 3 of section 13 of the Bengal, North-Western and Assam Civil Courts Act (XII of 1887).

The decree was passed by the first Munsif of Howrah. It was a decree for a certain sum of money due on an account, and the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction of the first Munsif of Howrah, and, admittedly, within the local area that was assigned to the first Munsif of Howrah. The decree under the provisions of section 223 of the Code of Civil Procedure could, therefore, be executed by the Court of the first Munsif of Howrah which passed it, or by any other Court if it was sent to such other Court for execution under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure.

There was no transfer of the execution case by the Court [318] which passed the decree; so no question arises here as to whether the second Munsif had or had not acquired jurisdiction by reason of the transfer of this particular execution case.

The ground, however, upon which the learned Vakil for the appellant contends that it was the second Munsif's Court at Howrah, and that Court alone, which had jurisdiction to entertain this application for execution, is that, by reason of a redistribution of local areas between the date of the decree and the date of the present application for execution, the local area within which the cause of action arose which led to the suit, has now been assigned to the second Munsif of Howrah, and that consequently the first Munsif of Howrah ceased to have jurisdiction to execute the decree, and the Court of the second Munsif of Howrah has acquired jurisdiction to execute it, as it is the Court in which the suit should have been instituted if it had been instituted at the present day; and in support of this argument, paragraph 2 of section 649 of the Code is relied upon.

There is nothing in either of the judgments of the Courts below to show that there has been this redistribution of business that is referred to in the argument, though there is a remark in certain reasons recorded as additional reasons by the learned District Judge, which goes to show that there has been such a redistribution. Assuming then that there has been such a redistribution, is it clear that section 649 applies to this case, and gives to the second Munsif of Howrah the jurisdiction he is said to have acquired?

In my opinion this question ought to be answered in the negative. For the two contingencies that paragraph 2 of section 649 contemplates are: first, that the Court which passed the decree should cease to exist; and, second, that it should cease to have jurisdiction to execute the decree. In the present case the Court which passed the decree has clearly not ceased to exist. There is still a Court of the first Munsif of Howrah. Nor has the Court ceased to have jurisdiction to execute the decree that it made, notwithstanding that there has been a redistribution of areas. For on reference to section 13 of Act XII of 1887, under the second sub-section of which this redistribution must have been [319] made, I find that the third sub-section enacts that, "when civil business arising in any local area is assigned by the District Judge under sub-section (2)" (I quote only so much of the section as bears upon the present argument) "to one of two or more Munsifs, a decree or order passed by the Munsif shall not be invalid by reason only of the case in which it was made having arisen wholly or in part in a place beyond the local area, if that place is within the local limits fixed by the local Government under sub-section (1)" and that in the present case the cause of action arose within the local limits fixed by the local Government under sub-section (1) is not disputed. Sub-section (1) enacts that "the local Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, fix and alter the local limits of the jurisdiction of any Civil Court under the Act." It is, then, the local limits fixed by the local Government under sub-section (1) of the section that determine the jurisdiction of the Court, the distribution of business by reference to local areas made by the District Judge under sub-section (2) having relation merely to the convenience of transaction of business. That being so, the re-distribution of local areas referred to in the argument could not affect the jurisdiction of the first Munsif to entertain this application, when he had full jurisdiction under sub-section (1) of section 13.

The first Munsif's Court, therefore, not having ceased to have jurisdiction to execute the decree, within the meaning of section 649 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the first point urged before us must fail.

Then, as to the second point, the contention is, that the second Munsif had jurisdiction, as the third sub-section of section 13 says, "a Munsif having jurisdiction in any case under sub-section (1) can make a valid order in the case, notwithstanding that the case in which it is made had arisen wholly or in part in a place beyond the local area assigned to him." But I do not see how that can help the appellant's contention. Sub-section (3) saves the jurisdiction of each of two Munsifs having jurisdiction within the same local limits, only where their area is, for the convenience of transacting business, divided by an order of the District Judge. It does not, however, give to either of two Munsifs having jurisdiction over [320] the same local area, power to pass an order, when his competency to pass that order is affected, not by virtue of any order or distribution made by the District Judge, but by virtue of some provision of the law; and here there is a clear provision of the law in section 223 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which declares that the Court which has jurisdiction to execute this decree is the Court which passed it, or some other Court to which it may be sent for execution. The second Munsif, therefore, not having any jurisdiction to execute the decree by reason of the provisions of section 223 of the Code, sub-section (3) of section 13 of the Act cannot vest him with any jurisdiction in the matter.

The result then is that both the contentions urged before us fail, and the appeal must consequently be dismissed with costs.

Babu Hari Mohun Chuckerbutty, and Babu Harendra Narayan Mitter, for the Respondent.

[321] The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (MACLEAN, C. J., and BANERJEE, J.).

Maclean, C.J.—A preliminary objection is taken that no appeal lies, the ground being that, inasmuch as this order of the 11th August 1896 was an order conditional upon the applicant finding security, it was not an order that was appealable within the meaning of section 19 of the Succession Certificate Act. In my opinion, an order is not the less an order because there is a condition attached to it that security is to be given by the person in whose favour it is made. It is still an order. The appellant not unnaturally relies upon the case of Bhagwani v. Manni Lal, (1891) I. L. R., 13 All., 214. With great respect to the learned Judges who decided that case, I regret I am unable to concur in that decision. It seems to me to be rather a narrow view to take of the term "order" in section 19.

That disposes of the preliminary point.

Upon the merits, the learned Judge in the Court below has granted this certificate without a tittle of evidence to show that the promissory notes referred to in the order were the property of the deceased son-in-law of the applicant. I do not think that is a right course to adopt. I think he is bound to enquire into the matter and require at least some evidence to show that there is a prima facie case that the property, in respect of which the certificate is granted, belonged to the deceased person. This order has been made without any evidence whatever. I think the proper course is to remand the case to the Court below with this intimation of our opinion. The appellant is entitled to his costs in this Court.

The principle of this judgment, upon the merits, will, it is admitted, apply to appeal No. 444 of 1896. That case, therefore, will also be remanded to the Court below. The appellant in this case also must have his costs.

Banerjee, J.—I am of the same opinion. I do not think that the preliminary objection based upon section 19 of the Succession Certificate Act and upon the case of Bhagwani v. Manni Lal, (1891) I. L. R., 13 All., 214, is a valid one. Section 19 says that "subject to the other provisions of this Act an appeal shall lie to this Court from an order [322] of the District Court granting, refusing, or revoking a certificate under the Act." The order appealed against says: "Brindaban Chandar Basack will be granted a certificate with regard to eight Government promissory notes named in the petition, provided that he gives security to the amount of rupees six thousand five hundred." This to my mind is undoubtedly an order granting a certificate within the meaning of section 19, though it is coupled with a condition which the Court, by section 9 of the Act, is authorised to impose, the condition, namely, that the applicant must give security. I must, therefore, respectfully dissent from the view taken by the Allahabad High Court in the case cited for the respondent.

Upon the other point, namely, that it was necessary for the Court below to make some enquiry before granting the certificate, especially when the application was opposed, I do not think it necessary for me to add anything to what has already been said in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice, and to what I have said in the case of Hurri Krishna Panda v. Balabhadra Panda, (1896) I. L. R., 23 Cal., 431.

Execution of decree—Stay of Execution—Decree for arrears of rent—Decree for money—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), section 546.

A decree for arrears of rent is a "decree for money" within the meaning of section 546 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

ONE Syama Churn Bhuttacharjee obtained a decree for arrears of rent against one Banku Behary Sanyal, in the Court of the Munsif of Faridpore, and it was confirmed on appeal. The judgment-debtor preferred a second appeal to the High Court, which was admitted under section 551 of the Code of Civil Procedure. On the decree-holder's taking out execution, and the property of [323] the judgment-debtor having been advertised for sale, he applied to the Munsif under section 546 of the Code of Civil Procedure to stay the sale. The Munsif allowed the application and stayed the sale. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge reversed the decision of the Munsif, holding that section 546 of the Code of Civil Procedure did not apply to rent decrees or to sales in pursuance of such decrees.

From this decision the judgment-debtor appealed to the High Court.

Babu Kishory Lal Sarkar, for the Appellant.

No one appeared for the Respondent.

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and BANERJEE, J.)

Maclean, C. J.—I feel no difficulty about this case. In my opinion the expression "decree for money" used in the last paragraph of section 546 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies to a case where a decree has been made for payment of arrears of rent. Arrears of rent are "money." It would be a very narrow construction to hold otherwise, especially as regards the operation of this particular section, which deals with the case of staying execution of a decree pending an appeal on certain terms as to giving security. Why that should not apply to a case where the decree is for arrears of rent, as well as to any other case of a money decree, I fail to see. I think the appeal must succeed and the order of the Munsif be restored with costs.

Banerjee, J.—I am of the same opinion. There is no reason why a decree for rent should not be held to be included within the meaning of the expression "decree for money" in the last paragraph of section 546 of the Code of Civil Procedure, nor is there anything in the Bengal Tenancy Act to show that the provisions of section 546 should not apply to a case like the present. Section 143 of the Bengal Tenancy Act makes the Civil Procedure Code generally applicable to rent suits, subject only to certain exceptions; and none of the exceptive provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, such as those in sections 148, 163 and 170, goes to show that section 546 was intended not to have any application to the execution of a rent decree.

Landlord and tenant—Suit for rent—Tenant settled on the land by a trespasser, Position of —Joint landlords—Payment of rent by a tenant to some of the landlords, whether sufficient discharge from liability to other landlords—Bengal Tenancy Act (VII of 1885), sections 157 and 188.

A suit was brought by the plaintiffs against a tenant for the entire rent, making the co-sharer landlords also defendants to the suit. The defence of the tenant, defendant No. 1, was denial of relationship of landlord and tenant, and payment to the co-sharer landlords. The co-sharer landlords inter alia pleaded that, as the tenant-defendant was settled on the land by them at a time when they were claiming to be entitled exclusively to the possession thereof, under a title derived from their auction purchase, they must be taken to have been trespassers on the land, so far as the plaintiffs' share was concerned, and that consequently defendant No. 1, who was settled on the land by them, must also be treated as a trespasser as against the plaintiffs.

Held, that the defendant No. 1 could not be treated as a trespasser as against the plaintiffs, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to claim rent for use and occupation from the defendant No. 1.

Banerjee, J.—This is an appeal arising out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs-respondents asking the Court to pass a decree against the defendant No. 1 for the entire sixteen annas of the rent due from him in respect of certain lands held by him under the plaintiffs and the defendants Nos. 2 and 3, and to award to the plaintiffs a 7 annas, or 7-16th share of the amount decreed, that being their share, and to award to their co-sharers, the defendants Nos. 2 and 3, the remaining 9-16ths of the amount. There was also a prayer, in the alternative, for a decree against the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 for so much of the amount appertaining to the plaintiffs' share as might be found to have been realised by those defendants.

The allegations upon which the claim is based are shortly these: That the plaintiffs are the putnidars of village Amlah, jointly with the defendants Nos. 2 and 3, the share of the plaintiffs being seven annas; that, in the village Amlah, there was a non-transferable rayati holding in the name of one Ram Dhone Ghose, which the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are alleged to have purchased; that the plaintiffs brought a suit in the Civil Court against the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 to have it declared that the alleged purchase by the said defendants of the jote of Ram Dhone Ghose was invalid, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to khas possession of the land covered by the said jote, jointly with the defendants Nos. 2 and 3, and the suit was decreed in favour of the plaintiffs; that the defendant No. 1 holds a portion of the land which formed the jote of Ram Dhone Ghose in respect of which rent is claimed in this suit; that notwithstanding that he was served with notice from the plaintiffs, [326] requiring him to pay rent to them, the defendant No. 1, in collusion with defendants Nos. 2 and 3, withheld payment of rent to the plaintiffs; and that as the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 refused to join with the plaintiffs in bringing this suit, the plaintiffs have been compelled to institute this suit making the tenant and their co-sharers defendants in it.

The defence of the tenant-defendant was that there was no relation of landlord and tenant subsisting between him and the plaintiffs; that the rate at which the plaintiffs claimed rent was in excess of that at which rent was payable by him; and that the rent that was payable by him had been paid by him in full to the defendants Nos. 2 and 3.

The co-sharer-defendants, that is the defendants Nos. 2 and 3, in their defence, supported the tenant-defendant, and urged that there was no relation of landlord and tenant between the plaintiffs and the defendant No. 1; that they were not liable for the plaintiffs' claim; and that the plaintiffs' suit was liable to dismissal under the provisions of the Road Cess Act, Bengal Act IX of 1881.

The first Court held that the relation of landlord and tenant between the plaintiffs and the defendant No. 1 had been made out: that the provisions of the Road Cess Act were no bar to this suit; that the amount of rent payable by the tenant-defendant was proved, inasmuch as the quantity of land held by the defendant No. 1 and the rate of rent per bigha of such land were established by the evidence; but the first Court dismissed the plaintiffs' suit on the ground that the tenant-defendant had paid all that was payable by him to the defendants Nos. 2 and 3; and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover anything from the tenant-defendant, nor anything from the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in a suit for arrears of rent.

Against this decision, the plaintiffs preferred an appeal, but no objection appears to have been raised at the hearing against the decision of the first Court upon any of the points which had been decided in favour of the plaintiffs by that Court. The Lower Appellate Court was of opinion that the first Court was wrong in holding that payment to the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 was sufficient to discharge the tenant-defendant from liability to the [327] plaintiffs, and it accordingly gave the plaintiffs a decree for the rent due to them on account of their share.

Against that decree of the Lower Appellate Court, this second appeal has been preferred jointly by the tenant-defendant and the co-sharer defendants, and it is contended on their behalf, first, that upon the facts found the Courts below ought to have held that the relation of landlord and tenant between the plaintiffs and the defendant No. 1 was not established; secondly, that the Court of Appeal below ought to have held that payment to the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 was sufficient to discharge the defendant No. 1 from liability to the plaintiffs; thirdly, that the Court of Appeal below ought to have held that the provisions of section 20 of Bengal Act IX of 1881 were a bar to the present claim; fourthly, that the Court of Appeal below ought not to have made any decree in favour of the plaintiffs without determining the amount of rent payable by the defendant No. 1, when a question had been raised as to the amount of rent payable; and, fifthly, that the suit, in so far as it relates to the rent due for one instalment of the year 1300, ought to have been dismissed as premature.

Upon the first point there is no question that the plaintiffs are entitled to a seven annas share in the patni mehal, Amlah, the village in which the land in suit is situated, nor is there any question that the plaintiffs have been declared entitled to that share of the land in dispute jointly with the defendants Nos. 2 and 3; but it is contended that as the tenant-defendant was settled on the land by the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 at a time when they were claiming to be entitled exclusively, to the possession thereof, under a title derived from their auction purchase of the jote of Ram Dhone Ghose, the defendants Nos 2 and 3 must be taken to have been trespassers on the land, so far as the plaintiffs' seven annas share was concerned, and that consequently the defendant No 1, who was settled on the land by them, must also be treated as a trespasser as against the plaintiffs, and not as their tenant.

I do not think that there is any force in this contention. Tenancy in this country is created not only by contract, but also by occupation of land, so far as agricultural lands are concerned. [328] As was observed by this Court in the case of Nityanand Ghose v. Kissen Kishore, (1864) W. R. Act X. Rul., 82: "Here it is a very usual thing for a man to squat on a piece of land, or to take into cultivation an unoccupied or waste piece of land. Tenancy in a great many districts in Bengal commences in this way, and where it so commences it is presumed that the cultivator cultivates by the permission of the landlord, and is under obligation to his landlord to pay him a fair rent, when the latter may choose to demand it. Thus the established usage of the country regards these parties as landlord and tenant, and unless the landlord chooses thus to treat him, the cultivator is not regarded, as he would be by the law as administered in England, as a trespasser, but as a tenant, and he would be so although he may never have expressly acknowledged the landlord's rights, or entered into express contract with him for the payment of rent. If he chooses to cultivate the zemindar's lands, and the zemindar lets him, there is an implied contract between them creating a relationship of landlord and tenant."

So in the case of Lalun Monee v. Sona Monee Dabee, (1874) 22 W. R., 334, Mr. Justice JACKSON observes: "If these parties are in possession they make themselves tenants by use and occupation of the land." In the Full Bench case of Lukhee Kanto Dass Chowdhry v. Sumeeruddi Lusker, (1874) 13 B. L. R., 243: 21 W. R., 208, where the landlord sued a raiyat for rent alleged to be due under a kabulyat and the plaintiff was unable to prove the kabulyat, the question arose whether, as the defendant had occupied the land under the zemindar, the latter was entitled to recover some rent or compensation for the use of the land, and the learned Judges held that he was so entitled. And following the two last mentioned cases GARTH, C.J., in the case of Surnomoyeee v. Deno Nath Gir, (1883) I. L. R., 9 Cal., 908, observes: "As the plaintiff is willing in this case to waive the dispossession and to consider the defendant as her tenant, we think that upon the authority of those cases we may give the plaintiff a decree for use and occupation."

The principle of law enunciated in those decisions has now been [329] embodied in section 157 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, upon which reliance was placed by the learned Counsel for the respondent in answer to the appellants' contention. If the success of the plaintiffs, so far as this point is concerned, depended solely upon the provisions of section 157 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, there would have been a difficulty in the plaintiffs' way, created by section 188 of that Act, which enacts that " where two or more persons are joint landlords, anything which the landlord is under this Act authorised to do must be done by both or all of those persons acting together, or by an agent authorised to act on behalf of both or all of them," and the present suit is brought, not by the entire body of landlords nor by an agent authorised to act on behalf of them all, but by only some of them. But quite independently of the provisions of section 157 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, according to the law as it has always been understood in this country, as will appear from the cases to which I have referred, the relationship of landlord and tenant has been held to exist, at any rate as regards agricultural lands, between the person who is the proprietor of such lands and the actual cultivator when there is no intermediate tenure existing between the two. And in the case of Binad Lal Pakrashi v. Kalu Pramanik, (1893) I.L.R., 20 Cal., 708, which was decided by a Full Bench of this Court after the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it was held that a person being settled on certain land as a raiyat by a trespasser, and being sued in ejectment by the true owner, was entitled to resist the action on the ground of his being a non-occupancy raiyat. Sir COMER PETHERAM, whose judgment was concurred in by the other members of the Full Bench, observes: "The possession of the land in question for the purpose of cultivating it was acquired a good many years ago by the defendant from the persons who at that time were in actual possession of the zemindari within which it was situated, and who were the only persons who could give possession of the lands of the zemindari to cultivators. It is not suggested that the defendants did not then obtain possession as tenants under the bonâ fide belief of the title of their landlords, but since then it has been ascertained by a judgment of a Court of law that the zemindari did not belong to these persons, but to [330] the plaintiffs, and the question is whether, now that the plaintiffs have established their right to the zemindari, they can treat all cultivators who have been settled on the lands by the persons whom they have ousted from its possession as trespassers, and obtain khas possession of all the raiyati lands from them at any moment without any notice and without any compensation even for the crops on the land. I am of opinion that they cannot." It follows then that the plaintiffs are incompetent to treat the defendant No. 1 as a trespasser and to eject him. That being so they must be held entitled to claim as against him rent for use and occupation. The first contention raised before us must therefore fail.

As regards the second contention, the only authority cited in its support is the case of Ahamudeen v. Grish Chunder Shamunt (1878) I. L. R., 4 Cal., 350. But that case is clearly distinguishable from the present. There the ground upon which the payment of rent to some of the co-sharers was held to be payment to them all was, as appears from the judgment, this,—that the tenant had paid his rent, as he had been accustomed to do, to the joint owners that is, to some of the joint owners. The ground then of the decision in that case was that the fact of all the co-sharers having let some members of their body realise the whole rent for a long period of time raised the presumption that the co-sharers who had been realising the rent were doing so with the consent of the other co-sharers. In the present case that fact is wholly wanting; on the contrary, we have it upon the finding of the Lower Appellate Court that notice was given to the defendant No. 1 by the plaintiffs after they had recovered their decree against the defendants Nos. 2 and 3, declaring their rights, that they had acquired a right to a 7 annas share of the land; and if in spite of such notice the tenant continued to pay rent to defendants Nos. 2 and 3 who had previously been in receipt of rent, not as some of the co-sharers, but as persons claiming to be the exclusive landlords, such payment by the tenant must be taken to have been made at his risk, and cannot exonerate him from liability to the plaintiffs' claim.

With reference to the third contention this is how the facts stand: The tenant-defendant, against whom, and against whom alone, the decree of the Lower Appellate Court has been made, [331] did not raise any objection to the suit on the ground of its being opposed to the provisions of the Road Cess Act. The objection was raised on behalf of the co-sharer defendants; and though it is quite true that an issue was raised on the point, the first Court decided that issue in favour of the plaintiff, holding that the return filed was a sufficient compliance with the provisions of section 20 of Bengal Act IX of 1880, when the land, in respect of which rent is now claimed, had been entered in such return. Against this decision of the first Court no objection appears to have been raised before the Lower Appellate Court either on behalf of the tenant-defendant or on behalf of the co-sharer defendants. That being so, we do not think that the appellants ought now to be allowed to raise this objection before us, and we take this view, not only because this objection is of a purely technical character, but also because the peculiar circumstances of this case go to show that it would not be right and proper that the appellants should be allowed to raise the objection now. The circumstances, to which I refer, are those stated in the following passage of the judgment of the first Court upon the second issue. "Both parties were called upon to file the return, and the party defendants Nos. 2 and 3 having filed it first, the return from the plaintiffs seems to have been not accepted as only superfluous; the return by the party defendants Nos. 2 and 3 appears to have been filed some time after the date of the High Court's decree, passed on appeal in Suit No. 45 of 1887. In that return the names of these tenant-defendants have not been given, but the lands comprised in the jote in the name of Ram Dhone Ghose have been inserted as if still standing in the name of Ram Dhone, though said to be held in possession by two of the party defendants Nos. 2 and 3. Thus it comes to this, that the return in respect of the patni taluk has been filed in respect of the patni taluk, and the lands in suit have also been mentioned therein, though not the names of the tenants sued." So that, although the present plaintiffs had put in a road cess return, that return was not accepted, because another return had already been filed by their co-sharers, the defendants Nos. 2 and 3; and there has been no inquiry as to what the nature of the return was which the plaintiffs wanted to file. The defendants Nos. 2 and 3, evidently for their own [332] benefit, inserted in the return filed by them the name of Ram Dhone Ghose, as the person in whose name the holding stood covering the land in dispute, and they ignored the names of the tenants who are now sued.

In this state of things, it would be obviously unjust to visit the plaintiffs with any penalty by reason of the Road Cess return, put in by their co-sharers, not containing the name of the tenant-defendant. As the tenant-defendant is evidently making common cause with the defendants Nos. 2 and 3, to give effect to this objection would virtually be to enable the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 and defendant No. 1, who is acting in collusion with them, to take advantage of their own wrong. For these reasons we think it right not to allow the objection to be raised in this Court. And I may add that even if it had been open to the appellants to raise this objection, it is not at all clear that they would have been entitled to succeed.

As to the fourth contention, no doubt, the Lower Appellate Court has not come to any determination as to the rate of rent; but then the first Court determined that question, inasmuch as it found the quantity of land, which was in the possession of the tenant-defendant and also the rate at which rent was payable in respect of such land; and that finding was not questioned before the Lower Appellate Court. That being so, and the plaintiffs respondents being quite willing to have the decree of the Lower Appellate Court modified so as to reduce the amount of the decree to what it ought to be, having regard to the area and the rate found, we think the decree of the Lower Appellate Court ought to be modified accordingly.

The fifth point raised before us need not detain us long, as the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs respondents admits that the claim for the last quarter of the year 1300 is premature.

That being so, the decree of the Court below will be modified in the two respects mentioned above, but as the objections raised in this case on behalf of the appellants have for the most part been of a purely technical character, and as the claim of the plaintiffs has been resisted on grounds which are by no means fair, we think it right to direct that the appellants should pay the costs of the respondents.

[333] It is admitted that this judgment will govern the remaining six appeals, that is, second appeals Nos. 1575 and 1622 to 1626, both inclusive. In the view we have taken above of these cases it becomes unnecessary to consider the question whether the petitions of compromise filed by the tenants in some of those cases, and subsequently withdrawn by them, are binding upon them.

Maclean, C.J.—I concur in the judgment which has just been delivered.

CRIMINAL REVISION.

The 28th October, 1897.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE AND MR. JUSTICE WILKINS.

Deputy Legal Remembrancer............Petitioner

Ahmad Ali............Opposite-Party.*

Reformatory Schools Acts (V of 1876), sections 2 and 7 and (VIII of 1897), section I, clauses 2—3 and 8—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), section 3 and section 399—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), section 318—General Clauses Consolidation Act (X of 1897)—Effect of the repeal of a repealing statute—Construction of statute.

The accused was convicted of the offence under section 457 of the Penal Code by the Deputy Magistrate of Barisal, who found that the accused was a boy of fourteen or fifteen years, decidedly under sixteen, and passed the following order:—

"I find Ahmad Ali, boy, guilty of house-breaking by night for the purpose of committing theft, and instead of being imprisoned in the jail under section 457 of the Penal Code, I direct under section 399 of the Criminal Procedure Code and section 7 of Act V of 1876, that Ahmad Ali be confined in the Calcutta Reformatory for two years for training in some branch of useful industry."

Held, that the order could not be sustained under section 7 of Act V of 1876 as that Act had been repealed before the date of the order and the commission of the offence, nor under section 8 of Act VIII of 1897, as the order did not comply with the provisions of the latter Act.

Held, further, that section 318 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872) having been repealed by section 2 of Act V of 1876, the corresponding [334] section 399 of the present Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) must also be held by virtue of section 3 of the Code to have been repealed in the provinces, including Bengal, to which Act V of 1876 was extended.

The repeal of a statute repealing another statute does not revive the repealed statute. The law in India as embodied in section 7 of the General Clauses Act (X of 1897) is the same as the law in England.

Queen-Empress v. Madasami, (1888) I. L. R., 12 Mad., 94, and Queen-Empress v. Manaji, (1889) I. L. R., 14 Bom., 381, referred to and approved of.

THE facts of the case appear fully from the judgments of the High Court.

The Officiating Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Abdur Rahim) for the Crown.

No one appeared for the Accused.

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (BANERJEE WILKINS, JJ.):—

Banerjee, J.—This is a rule calling upon the accused person and the Magistrate of the district to shew cause why the sentence passed in this case should not be set aside as being contrary to law, and a proper sentence passed.

* Criminal Revision No. 682 of 1897, made against the order passed by Babu Chandra Kumar Dutta, Deputy Magistrate of Barisal, dated the 3rd of May 1897.

The sentence passed by the learned Deputy Magistrate on the 3rd of May 1897 runs in these words: "I find Ahmed Ali, boy, guilty of house-breaking by night for the purpose of committing theft, and instead of being imprisoned in the jail under section 457 of the Penal Code, I direct under section 399 of the Criminal Procedure Code and section 7 of Act V of 1876 that Ahmed Ali be confined in the Calcutta Reformatory for two years for training in some branch of useful industry."

No cause is shewn either by the accused or by the District Magistrate.

The order of the Deputy Magistrate, so far as it refers to section 7 of Act V of 1876, is clearly wrong, as before the date of the order (3rd May 1897) and that of the commission of the offence (27th April 1897) that Act had been repealed by section 2 of Act VIII of 1897, which came into operation on the 11th March 1897. The question then is whether section 399 of the [335] Code of Criminal Procedure or any provision of the present Reformatory Schools Act (VIII of 1897) will sustain the order.

Act VIII of 1897 does not warrant the sentence as it stands, as the least period for which detention in a Reformatory School can be ordered under that Act is by section 8 of the Act fixed at three years, whereas the term for which detention is here directed is two years only.

Section 399 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, if it stood alone, would no doubt warrant the order made in this case, the accused having been found to be "a boy of fourteen or fifteen years, decidedly under sixteen." But then the question arises, what is the effect of section 399 read with section 3 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and with section 2 of Act V of 1876? And how far is that effect modified by sections 2 and 3 of Act VIII of 1897?

Section 2 of Act V of 1876 enacted that on and from the day on which that Act was extended to any Province by the Local Government, section 318 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (that is, Act X of 1872, the Code then in force) should be repealed therein. Section 399 of the present Code of Criminal Procedure corresponds to, and is in fact a reproduction almost word for word of, section 318 of the former Code; and section 3 of the present Code enacts that in every enactment passed before that Code comes into force in which reference is made to any section of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1872), such reference shall so far as practicable be taken to be made to the corresponding section of the present Code. Therefore section 399 of the present Code must be taken to stand repealed to the extent to which section 318 of the former Code had been repealed by section 2 of Act V of 1876, that is in the Provinces to which the last mentioned Act had been extended; and it remains operative only as regards the rest of British India.

It might appear somewhat anomalous that after having provided in section 2 of Act V of 1876 for the gradual repeal of section 318 of the Criminal Procedure Code of 1872, the Legislature should re-enact this last mentioned section in an unmodified form in the Code of 1882 But the anomaly is explained when it [336] is remembered that section 399 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is a general provision applicable to all cases except those otherwise specially provided for, while the provisions of Act V of 1876 and Act VIII of 1897 are of a special character applicable only to certain defined classes of cases. This view is in accordance with the decision of the Madras High Court in Queen-Empress v. Madasami, (1888) I. L R., 12 Mad., 94.

The repeal of Act V of 1876 does not revive section 399 of the Criminal Procedure Code in places in which it had been repealed by the first mentioned Act, regard being had to the provisions of section 7 of the General Clauses Act (X of 1897), which, in fact, embodies the rule of English law applicable to the subject (see Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, 3rd Edition, p. 585).

Nor does section 3 of Act VIII of 1897 really raise, as it might at first sight seem to do, any inference that section 399 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is in force throughout British India, and is repealed in any Province only from the date of the notification mentioned in the section, such notification having reference, as section 1, sub-section 3 shews, only to the Punjab and Coorg, and not to any other part of British India.

Section 399 of the Code of Criminal Procedure must therefore be held to have no force in the Provinces to which Act V of 1876 was extended, and to be in force only in the rest of British India. Now Act V of 1876 was extended to Bengal on the 1st of March 1878 by a notification, dated the 14th of February 1878 (See the Calcutta Gazette for 1878, Part I, p. 138). Therefore section 399 has no force in Bengal, and the order of the Court below directing the accused to be confined in the Calcutta Reformatory for two years is not warranted by law, and must be set aside.

The question then remains what sentence should be passed on the accused. There being no clear finding that the accused was at the date of conviction "under the age of fifteen years," the limit of age prescribed by the present Reformatory Schools Act VIII of 1897, the provisions of that Act do not apply to him, and there is no other provision of law under which he can be detained in a reformatory. We therefore set aside the sentence passed [337] on the accused as being contrary to law; and having regard to all the circumstances of the case we sentence the accused under section 457 of the Penal Code to rigorous imprisonment for six months, the sentence taking effect from the date of this order.

Wilkins, J.—This is a rule calling upon the District Magistrate of Backergunge and the accused Ahmed Ali to show cause why the order of the Deputy Magistrate of Barisal, dated the 3rd May last, directing that the accused (whom he had convicted under section 457 of the Penal Code) be detained in the "Calcutta Reformatory" for a term of two years, should not be set aside as being contrary to law, and a proper sentence passed.

The order purports to have been made "under section 399 of the Criminal Procedure Code and section 7 of Act V of 1876."

The rule was granted to the Deputy Legal Remembrancer at the instance of the Local Government. It has been duly served upon the parties concerned, of whom the District Magistrate admits that the order is illegal, but the accused does not appear to show cause.

As to the illegality of the order, so far as it depends upon the Reformatory Schools Act V of 1876, there can be no question; firstly, because that Act has been repealed by section 2 of the Reformatory Schools Act VIII of 1897; and, secondly, because, even if the Act of 1876 were still in force, the order is in contravention of Rule I of the Rules* made by the Governor-General in Council under the provisions of section 22 of that Act; this being a first conviction of the accused, and the latter being over ten years of age, the minimum period for which he could be sentenced to detention in a Reformatory School would be three years; and, as he appears to be close upon sixteen years of age, it would follow that he could not legally be sent to a Reformatory School at all.

It remains to be seen whether the order is a good order under section 399 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

* Notification No. 340, Home Department, dated 18th March 1878.

[338] The question as to the effect of the Act of 1876 upon the provisions of section 399 of the Criminal Procedure Code in any Province to which the former Act had been extended, was discussed by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in the case of Queen-Empress v. Madasami, (1888) I.L.R., 12 Mad., 94. So far as the question now before us is concerned the position is much the same as when that case was decided in 1888. But it will be advisable to refer briefly to certain provisions of the Act of 1897 when discussing the question.

The entire Act of 1897 extends to the whole of British India "except the territories for the time being administered by the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab and the Chief Commissioner of Coorg, but either of the said local Governments may at any time by notification in the local official Gazette, extend" the whole Act to their territories from any date fixed in such notification. This is provided by sub-section (3) of section 1.

Again, section 3 declares that from the date so fixed, section 399 of the Criminal Procedure Code "shall be repealed in the Province to which the notification relates."

It will be observed, therefore, that the Act is silent as to whether section 399 of the Criminal Procedure Code is still in force in the Provinces to which the Act applies by virtue of section 1, sub-section (3); for example in this Province of Bengal.

The reason for this silence is not very clear. It may be that the Legislature, when enacting Act VIII of 1897, assumed that section 399 of the Code of Criminal Procedure had been already repealed by Act V of 1876 in all territories to which that Act had been extended; or, it may be, as pointed out by MUTTUSAMI AYYAR, J., in Queen-Empress v. Madasami, that it allowed section 399 of the Criminal Procedure Code to remain in force side by side with the Reformatory Schools Act, so as to reserve to itself the power to provide in the future "reformatories" for the benefit of female juvenile offenders, the special Act dealing only with male juvenile offenders.

[339] The inconsistency, however, of leaving section 399 of the Criminal Procedure Code in force in some Provinces, and of altogether repealing it in others, would seem to furnish an argument against the adoption of the second of these conjectures.

And, indeed, it appears to me that section 399 of the Criminal Procedure Code has already been practically repealed in Bengal by Act V of 1876; and, of course, the repeal of the latter Act would not have the effect of reviving the section which it repealed.

I base this opinion upon the following reasons: When Act V of 1876 was passed, the Procedure Code in force was that of 1872. Section 318 of that Code, which is practically word for word the same as section 399 of the present Code, was repealed in Bengal on and from the day upon which Act V of 1876 came into force in this Presidency by notification (See sections 1 and 2, Act V of 1876). That section 318 of the Code of 1872 was reproduced as section 399 of the present Code was perhaps due (partially at least) to the fact that Act V of 1876 had not in 1882 been extended to every Province in British India, and that it was necessary to leave some such provisions in force in the Provinces to which this special Act had not been extended. But the result would not be to revive the provisions of section 318 of Act X of 1872, or, in other words, to make section 399 of the present Code to be in force, in Provinces (such as Bengal), in which the Reformatory Schools Act of 1876 was in force. This would be prevented by the provisions of the first paragraph of section 3 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which runs as follows: " In every enactment passed before this Code comes into force, in which reference is made to, or to any chapter or section of, the Code of Criminal Procedure Act XXV of 1861, or Act X of 1872, or to any other enactments hereby repealed, such reference shall, so far as may be practicable, be taken to be made to this Code or to its corresponding chapter or section." So that, where section 2 of Act V of 1876 refers to section 318 of Act X of 1872, as being repealed, that reference must, " so far as may be practicable, " be taken to be made to the corresponding section, viz., section 399 of the Code of 1882 now in force. In other words, Act [340] V of 1876 repealed, not only section 318 of Act X of 1872, but also section 399 of the present Code, in all territories to which the Act of 1876 has been extended.

It consequently follows that the order of the Deputy Magistrate of Barisal purporting to be under section 399 of the Criminal Procedure Code and section 7 of Act V of 1876 is an illegal order under both these sections.

There is yet another matter in which that order is at least irregular. The age of the accused is not clearly ascertained. In his statement to the Court, he is declared to be fifteen years old; in the judgment the Deputy Magistrate says "that he is a boy of fourteen or fifteen years, decidedly under sixteen." Now, even if the Act of 1876 had been in force, the Magistrate should have clearly determined the age of the boy before directing his detention in the reformatory school. This has been laid down in the case of Queen-Empress v. Manaji, (1889) I. L. R., 14 Bom., 381, and the present Act of 1897, section 11, prescribes that there should be a preliminary enquiry and a finding in this respect.

For the above reasons, I also think that the order of the Deputy Magistrate should be set aside, and in lieu thereof that Ahmed Ali should be sentenced under section 457 of the Penal Code to rigorous imprisonment for six months.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 4th January, 1898.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE AND MR. JUSTICE WILKINS.

Kunjo Behari Gossami and another............Defendants

Hem Chunder Lahiri............Plaintiff.*

Probate—Jurisdiction in Probate cases—Transfer of a probate case by the District Judge in whose Court it was instituted, to that of a Subordinate Judge - The Bengal, North-Western Provinces and Assam Civil Courts Act (XII of 1887), section 23, sub-section 2, clause (d)—Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), section 52.

An application was made for probate of the will of a deceased testator [341] in the Court of the District Judge, who transferred the case to that of the Subordinate Judge. The opposite party inter alia objected that the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to try the case.

Held, that the case came within the scope of section 23, sub-section 2, clause (d), of the Bengal, North-Western Provinces and Assam Civil Courts Act (XII of 1887), and therefore the Subordinate Judge had jurisdiction to try it.

THE facts of the case, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of this report, and the arguments, appear sufficiently from the judgment of the High Court.

Babu Saroda Churn Mitter, and Babu Indu Bhusan Masumdar, for the Appellants.

Sir Griffith Evans, and Babu Shib Chunder Palit for the Respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (Banerjee and Wilkins, JJ.) was as follows: –

This appeal arises out of an application by the respondent, Hem Chunder Lahiri, for probate of the will of the late Jibun Kristo Gossami, uncle of the petitioner's wife's father, by which the petitioner and his wife have been appointed executors.

The will propounded by the petitioner is dated the 20th September 1895, that is, about six months before the death of the testator. The application for probate was opposed by the appellants, Kunjo Behari and Debendernath Gossami, two of the nephews of the testator, mainly on the grounds that the testator was not of sound disposing mind at the time the will propounded is alleged to have been executed, and that he was completely under the influence of the petitioner and his wife; and that the execution of the will should be held to have been brought about by coercion and undue influence.

The case was transferred by the District Judge, in whose Court it had been instituted, to the Court of the Subordinate Judge under the provisions of section 23, sub-section 2, clause (d) of Act XII of 1887. Upon the case being so transferred, an objection was taken on behalf of the defendants to the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge to try the case. The learned

* Appeal from Original Decree No. 35 of 1897 against the decree of Babu Abinash Chundra Mitter, Subordinate Judge of Hooghly, dated the 22nd of December 1896.

Subordinate Judge has overruled that objection, and upon the evidence he has held [342] that the will propounded had been duly executed by the testator, and that it was not invalid by reason of any want of mental capacity on his part or by reason of the execution of it having been brought about by coercion and undue influence; and he has accordingly ordered probate to be granted upon security being given by the petitioner under section 78 of the Probate and Administration Act.

In appeal it is contended on behalf of the objectors, first, that the Court below was wrong in holding that it had jurisdiction to try the case; and, secondly, that upon the merits it ought to have held that the will was invalid by reason of want of mental capacity on the part of the testator, and also by reason of the execution of it having been brought about by coercion and undue influence on the part of the petitioner and his wife.

It is further contended that the Court below was wrong in making the objectors bear their own costs, and that, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, it ought to have directed that their costs should come out of the estate of the testator.

In support of the first contention, it was argued that the provision of Act XII of 1887 that has been relied upon, applies only to incidental proceedings, such as those relating to the testing of security and the like, and that it does not authorize the trial of a probate case by a Subordinate Judge, jurisdiction to hear such cases being vested exclusively in the District Judge, and in the District Delegate where the proceeding is not a contentious one.

We are of opinion that this contention is not correct. Section 23, sub-section 2, clause (d), enacts that the High Court may, by "general or special order"—we quote only so much of the section as bears upon the present case—"authorize any Subordinate Judge to take cognizance of or any District Judge to transfer to a Subordinate Judge under his administrative control, proceedings under the Probate Act, 1881, which cannot be disposed of by District Delegates."

The proceeding in the present case is one under the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), and is one which the District Delegate cannot dispose of having regard to the provisions of [343] section 52 of that Act. The case, therefore, comes clearly within the scope of section 23, sub-section 2, clause (d). A slight contention was raised as to whether a probate case, where there is contention, can come within the meaning of the term "proceeding" in section 23, the argument being that such a case is really a "suit" and not a "proceeding"; but the very section of the Probate and Administration Act (section 83) which says that a contentious probate case shall take as nearly as may be the form of a suit, itself describes the case as a "proceeding." There is nothing then in the language of clause (d) of section 23 of Act XII of 1887 to take the present case out of its operation and scope. And if one looks to the reason of the enactment, it becomes clear that it was intended to cover cases of this description.

The object of section 23, as we understand it, is to enable a District Judge, in whose Court, and in whose Court alone, certain proceedings are ordinarily to be instituted, to transfer these proceedings, under a general or special order of the High Court to a Subordinate Judge. In regard to probate proceedings, the District Judge may transfer them in certain cases to the District Delegate, but then such transfer is limited to non-contentious proceedings only. As regards contentious proceedings, the only way in which a District Judge may be relieved is by acting under clause (d) of sub-section 2 of section 23.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the Court below had jurisdiction to entertain this case, and that the first contention urged on behalf of the appellants must fail.

We now come to the second contention raised before us. The learned Vakil for the appellants has very properly not thought it fit to raise any question as to whether the will propounded by the petitioner was signed by the testator. There is ample evidence to show that the will was signed by the testator and presented for registration by the testator on the very day it was signed. The contention of the appellants was mainly directed to showing that the mental condition of the testator was such that it ought not to be held that the execution of the will by him was an intelligent execution; or, in other words, that he was not of sufficient mental capacity to execute a will. And it was further contended that, as [344] regards the execution of this will, he was entirely under the influence and guidance of the petitioner and his wife Promoda Sundari, the person to whom the whole of the testator's property has been bequeathed.

In support of this contention, the evidence of the witness Gopal Chunder Gossami, a medical practitioner, examined on behalf of the petitioner, has been relied upon as showing that the testator was not of sufficient mental capacity to execute a will; and other witnesses examined for the petitioner and for the objectors have also been referred to as supporting the statements of the witness just named.

Upon a careful consideration of the evidence, the conclusion that we arrive at is this, that, though by reason of old age and disease aggravated by an accident that injured his leg, and the taking of opium to which the testator was very much addicted, his mental capacity was somewhat enfeebled about the time of the execution of the will, it cannot be said that he had not sufficient capacity to execute a will such as the one that has been propounded in this case. Their Lordships of the Privy Council observe in the case of Sajid Ali v. Ibad Ali, (1895) I.L.R., 23 Cal., 1; L. R., 22 I. A., 171: "Even in cases where the mental faculties of the person affected have been greatly enfeebled by physical weakness, he may still be capable of devising and intelligently executing a will of a simple character, although unfit to originate or to comprehend all the details of a complicated settlement." And then their Lordships say: "Nothing can be more simple than the changes which were made by the will impeached upon the terms of the second will which it was intended to supersede."

These remarks, we think, apply with full force to the present case. For we find that the will propounded is not the only will that the testator executed. Before that, he had already executed two wills. By one of them, dated the 27th September 1875, executed in favour of his wife, he left all his property absolutely to her, with power to her to adopt a son if she felt inclined to do so. Then upon the death of his wife, he executed a second will on the 11th December 1891, by which he bequeathed almost the whole of his property to [345] Promoda Sundari, the legatee under the present will, and made certain provisions for the maintenance of the worship of the family idol, and for a few other matters of minor importance. And the only points of difference between this last-mentioned will and the one now under consideration, are the omission of a certain provision for the maintenance of Omesh Chunder Gossami, one of the nephews of the testator; a slight variation in the direction for the expenditure of a sum of Rs. 1,000 for the performance of the first sradh of the testator; and the omission to make any binding provision for the worship of the family idols. These differences are, in our opinion, of such a slight character that they cannot go to show, as the learned Vakil for the appellants contends they do, that the present will was not intelligently executed by the testator, if the will immediately preceding had been really executed by him.

[Their Lordships then considered the evidence and concluded.]

Upon the whole then we are of opinion that neither the allegation as to want of sufficient mental capacity, nor that of coercion and undue influence, has been established; and that, on the contrary, the evidence clearly goes to show that the testator, though enfeebled in body and also to some extent in mind through old age and disease, still had sufficient mental capacity to execute this will.

Upon the question of costs, we are of opinion, having regard to a portion of the evidence at any rate brought forward by the objectors, which we must say is not true, that the learned Subordinate Judge in the Court below was right in making the objectors bear their own costs. He has shown sufficient consideration to the fact of their being the heirs-at-law of the testator, and, as such, persons interested in seeing that the will is duly proved, when he has exonerated them from liability to pay the petitioner's costs. The cross-appeal on this point has very properly been abandoned.

It remains now to dispose of the question relating to the costs of this appeal. Considering the fact that the judgment of the Court below, which is a very clear and a very strong judgment, was against them, we cannot say that the appellants are entitled [346] to be exonerated from paying the costs of the respondent altogether. At the same time, having regard to the fact that this appeal was argued by the learned Vakil for the appellants very temperately, and no point was unduly pressed before us, we think the assessment of costs ought to be moderate. We accordingly order that the appeal be dismissed with costs, the hearing fee being assessed at ten gold mohurs. The cross-appeal not being pressed is dismissed without costs.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), sections 6, 18, 23, clauses 4, 24, 48—Compensation—Acquisition of land "injuriously affecting other property"—Right to compensation for loss of a ferry by reason of acquisition of adjacent land—Land Clauses Consoliation Act (8 Vict., c. 18), section 63.

The word "acquisition," as used in section 23 of the Land Acquisition Act, includes the "purpose" for which the land is taken as well as the actual taking. And the words "at the time" in clause 4 of the same section must be taken to mean the time when the damage takes place and the right to compensation arises.

* Appeal from Original Decree No. 70 of 1896, against the decree of R. R. Pope, Esq., District Judge of Dinagepore, dated the 23rd of November 1895.

London and Brighton Railway Company, v. Truman, (1885) L. R., 11 App. Cas., 45, Hopkins v. Great Northern Railway Company, (1877) L.R., 2 Q. B. D., 224 ; 46 L. J., (Q.B.) 265 ; Ricket v. Metropolitan Railway Company, (1867) L. R., 2 E. and I. A., 175 ; Cowper Essex v. Acton Local Board, (1889) L. R., 14 App. Cas., 153 ; referred to.

The District Board of Dinagepore erected a bridge over the river Tulai, in consequence of the erection of which a ferry, which was within 100 cubits of the bridge and owned by the Maharajah of Dinagepore who was also the owner of the land taken for the construction of the bridge, ceased to exist: Held, that the owner of the ferry was entitled under the Land Acquisition Act to compensation for the loss of the ferry.

THE facts of the case are fully stated in the judgment of the High Court.

[347] The Senior Government Pleader (Babu Hem Chunder Banerjee), and the Junior Government Pleader (Babu Ram Charan Mitter), for the Appellant.

Mr. Hill, Babu Jasoda Nandan Pramanik, Dr. Rash Behary Ghose, and Babu Nalini Ranjan Chatterjee, for the Respondents.

Babu Ram Charan Mitter for the Appellant contended that the Maharajah was not entitled to any compensation for the loss of the ferry, regard being had to the provisions of sections 23 and 24 of the Land Acquisition Act. The ferry ghat was not on the land actually acquired by Government The Maharajah might have an equitable claim for damages in the Civil Court. Supposing the Maharajah had suffered loss by the erection of the bridge, could he under the Land Acquisition Act claim damages for the loss of his income from the ferry? His remedy, if any, would lie in a Civil Court by a regular suit. If another person had plied a ferry in competition with the Maharajah's ferry, that would not have entitled him to claim damages from the owners of the rival ferry —London and Brighton Railway Co. v. Truman, (1885) L.R , 11 App. Cas., 45, Hopkins v. Great Northern Railway Co, (1877) 46 L.J., (Q.B.) 265, Ricket v. Metropolitan Railway Co. (1867) L R., 2 E. and I.A , 175. Unless the injury or loss was by reason of the acquisition of the land itself, and unless the Maharajah had a statutory right, no action for damages would lie : see Cripps on Compensation, 3rd edition, p. 147.

Mr. Hill for the Respondent.—The case has been rightly decided by the lower Court and the Maharajah is entitled to full compensation. We are dealing with the question of "injuriously affecting other property by reason of the acquisition" as contemplated by section 23, cl 4 of the Land Acquisition Act. The ferry ceased to exist by reason of the construction of the bridge, and it cannot be said that the acquisition of this land for the bridge did not injuriously affect the ferry - Hammersmith and City Railway Co. v. Brand, (1868-69) L R., 4 H. L., 171, Duke of Buccleuch v. Metropolitan Board of Works, (1872) L.R., 5 H. L., 418 (458), Glasgow Union [348] Railway Co. v. Hunter, (1870) L. R., 2 H L. Sc. App , 78 (82), Cowper Essex v. Local Board for Acton, (1889) L.R., 14 App. Cas., 153 (161, 164, 176). The Queen v Cambrian Railway Co., (1871) L R., 6 Q. B , 422, Great Western Railway Co. v. Swinton and Cheltenham Railway Co, (1884) L R., 9 App Cas., 787 (802), Secretary of State for India v. Shanmugaraya Mudaliar, (1893) I. L. R., 16 Mad., 369 ; L. R., 20 I. A., 80.

It is essential to know the purpose for which the land is to be acquired, because the purpose is very much to affect the question of compensation for the land. The moment it was declared that the land was required for the bridge the injury ensued, the value of the ferry having been diminished—Land Acquisition Act, section 6, referred to.

Babu Ram Charan Mitter in reply.—Section 23, clause 4 of the Land Acquisition Act supports the view that the injury must be by reason of the acquisition of the land. The injury in this case was due, not to the acquisition of the land, but to the use to which the land when acquired was put; and under the law—the Land Acquisition Act—the Court cannot take into consideration the mode of using the land. Considerable time elapsed between the declaration by the Collector and taking possession of the land; the damage must be assessed at the time when the Collector took possession and not at any subsequent time. No doubt a declaration was made that the land was required for a bridge, but the respondent suffered no loss simply by reason of the acquisition. Moreover, the Government after the acquisition of the land might use it for a different purpose. The English cases cited were under a differently worded Statute and had no application to the present case. The sole question was whether the loss to the claimant was by reason of the acquisition of the land.

The judgment of the High Court (Macpherson and Wilkins, JJ) was as follows:—

This is an appeal from an award made by the District Judge of Dinagepore under the Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894) upon a reference made to him under section 18 of that Act.

[349] It appears that the District Board of Dinagepore erected a bridge over the Tulai river on the road from Dinagepore to Krishnagunge. Near the place where that road strikes the river, and where the bridge now stands, there used to be a ferry owned by the Maharajah of Dinagepore through whose estate the river Tulai flowed. That ferry ceased to exist when the bridge was erected and in consequence of its erection. Under these circumstances, the District Board proposed to offer to the Maharajah, upon whose land the bridge had been erected, the sum of Rs. 3,458-15-9 as compensation for the loss of his ferry, but the proposal was vetoed by the Commissioner of the Division, with the result that the land upon which the bridge stood was acquired under the Act, and that the Maharajah made a free gift of it to the public. He, however, claimed Rs. 6,000 as compensation for the injury sustained by him in the loss of his ferry. As this claim was opposed at the instance of Government and rejected by the Collector, the case was referred to the District Judge under section 18 of the Act for the determination of the amount of the compensation, and the District Judge has, for reasons recorded in his judgment, awarded to the Maharajah the exact sum which the District Board originally proposed to offer to him as compensation for the loss of his ferry.

In this appeal the Collector under the Act is the appellant; and his contention is that the respondents, i.e., the Maharaja and the zemindars, are not entitled in law to any compensation by reason of the ferry having been injuriously affected.

Although the bridge was constructed before the land was acquired or any proceedings taken for its acquisition, we must take it that the Act was put in force for the purpose of testing the Maharajah's claim for compensation for the loss of his ferry, and we must regard the acquisition as relating back to the time when possession of the land was taken. The circumstance has not been referred to on either side as one which should in any way affect the decision of the case.

In this appeal the question at issue is one purely of law, the determination of which depends upon the proper construction of [350] the Act, section 23 sets out the matters which the Court is bound to take into consideration in determining the amount of compensation to be awarded for land acquired under the Act. The claim in this case is based upon clause 4 of sub-section (1) of that section, which is to the following effect: "The damage (if any) sustained by the person interested at the time of the Collector's taking possession of the land, by reason of the acquisition injuriously affecting his other property, moveable or immoveable, in any other manner, or his earnings."

It is contended for the appellant that the claim is unsustainable, because no action could have been maintained by the Maharaja in respect of the bridge if it had been opened without the authority of the Act, and because the damage, if any, sustained is attributable, not to the acquisition of the land, but to the user of it when the bridge had been constructed and opened. In support of these contentions certain English cases have been cited, viz., London and Brighton Railway Co. v. Truman, (1885) L. R., 11 App. Cas., 45; Hopkins v. Great Northern Railway Co., (1877) 46 L. J., (Q.B.) 265: L. R., 2 Q.B., 224 and Ricket v. Metropolitan Ry. Co., (1867) L. R., 2 E. and I. A., 175.

It seems to us that no question of an actionable right here arises, and that it is unnecessary to consider the English cases in which there has been much discussion and some difference of opinion as to the rights of persons whose land had not been acquired but who claimed compensation under certain provisions of the Land Clauses Consolidation Act and the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act in consequence of their lands or interests having been injuriously affected by the exercise of the powers conferred by those Acts. Many of them turned on the construction of the Acts, the language of which is different from that of the Act now under consideration. There is a difference between the claim of a person whose land had not been acquired for compensation for injury caused to his property or interests by the acquisition, and the claim of a person part of whose land had been acquired for compensation for injury caused by the acquisition to the remainder of his [351] land, and this was pointed out by Lord HALSBURY in Cowper Essex v. Acton Local Board, (1889) L. R., 14 App. Cas. 153.

We are dealing now with the latter class of cases only. A piece of th Maharajah's land was acquired for the construction of a bridge; a bridge has been constructed upon it and opened for traffic, and he claims compensation for the loss of the income derived from his ferry which was worked within a very short distance of the spot on which the bridge has been constructed and within the limits of his estate. The ferry which is his property has undoubtedly been injuriously affected, he has suffered loss in consequence, and the only question is whether his claim comes within the 4th clause of the 23rd section of the Act.

Mr. Hill for the respondent has also referred us to other English cases bearing upon the construction of a somewhat similar provision in the Land Clauses Consolidation Act. Section 63 of that Act provides that in estimating the purchase money or compensation to be paid regard shall be had, not only to the value of the land to be purchased or taken, "but also to the damage, if any, to be sustained by the owner of the lands by reason of the severing of the lands taken from the other lands of such owner or otherwise injuriously affecting such other lands by the exercise of the powers" of the Act. The only case to which we need refer is that of Cowper Essex v. Acton Local Board, (1889) L. R., 14 App. Cas., 153 mentioned above. There a piece of the claimant's land had been acquired for sewage purposes, and the question was whether he was entitled to compensation for damage sustained by reason of the injuriously affecting his other lands by the exercise of the statutory powers. It was argued that the damage, if any, would result only from the future use or abuse of the land, and that if the land had been acquired without statutory powers no action would have lain for the construction of the works.

Their Lordships held that the claimant was entitled to compensation, and the ground of their decision was that the contemplated or intended use of the land for the purpose for which it was taken caused a depreciation in the value of the claimant's other land, [352] although the sewage works might be so conducted as to cause no nuisance. Lord WATSON says: "A proprietor is entitled to compensation for depreciation of the value of his other lands in so far as such depreciation is due to the anticipated legal use of works to be constructed upon the land which has been taken from him under compulsory powers."

We have, however, to construe a section of the Indian Act, and in doing so cases bearing upon the construction of a somewhat similar provision of an English Act different in its language can be of little or no assistance. We have alluded to the Cowper Essex case as showing that the contemplated legal use of the land for the purpose for which it was taken might be within the meaning of the English Act an "injurious affecting" (these words being the same in the Indian Act) of the other land of the person, part of whose land had been compulsorily taken. It does not of course follow that it is so under the Indian Act. The damage which must be taken into consideration under the 4th clause of section 23 is the damage sustained at the time of the Collector taking possession of the land by reason of the acquisition injuriously affecting the other property in any other manner, or the earnings of the person interested. There is no limit as to the nature of the "injurious affecting" except in so far as this is provided for by the other clauses of the section; the difficulty is as to the time when the damage is sustained.

The words "at the time when the Collector takes possession of the land" cannot mean that compensation can only be given for the damage which had actually at that time been sustained without reference to a continuing damage caused by the acquisition. The damage must be by reason of the acquisition; but this is only complete when possession is taken, for till then the Government could withdraw from it under section 48. The Collector could moreover take possession if he chose on the very day the award was made. The whole proceedings from the declaration under section 6 to the taking of possession might be completed within a month, and on any such construction a person deprived of earnings or an annual income would get nothing or next to nothing.

[353] The words must be taken to mean the time when the damage takes place, and the right to compensation arises, and it is, we think, sufficient to bring a case within this provision if, when possession is taken, there is other property or earnings injuriously affected so as to cause some damage to the person interested. Here the ferry was in existence. In the corresponding provision of the repealed Act (X of 1870) the words were "at the time of awarding compensation." That was open to abuse, as the award might have been, and very frequently was, made long after possession had been taken. Under the present Act the Collector makes his award whether the persons interested do or do not agree to take the compensation awarded, and the Collector can take possession immediately on making his award. The alteration in the law does not affect the construction of the section for the purpose of this case.

Then, was the damage sustained by reason of the acquisition, injuriously affecting the ferry? It is said that the word "acquisition" means the mere taking of the land without any regard to the purpose for which it was taken, and that the ferry was not in any way injuriously affected by the acquisition of the land, however much it may have been injured by the construction of the bridge when the bridge was constructed and opened to traffic. We think it is clear that the word "acquisition" as used in section 23 includes the purpose for which the land is taken as well as the actual taking.

Under section 6 the declaration of the intended acquisition must state the purpose for which the land is needed; after it has been published the Collector is to take order for the acquisition. He is to measure, mark out and make a plan of the land, to give notice that the Government intends to take possession of it, that he will receive claims to compensation for all interests in it, and that all persons interested must attend at a specified time and state the nature of their respective interests and the amount and particulars of their claims to compensation. He is then to inquire into the respective interests and claims and to make his award, and in determining the amount of compensation he is to be guided by the provisions of sections 23 and 24.

If he is not to take into consideration the purpose for which [354] the land is taken, it is difficult to see how he is to determine the amount of the compensation with reference to many of the matters which he is bound to consider under section 23.

It may be true that if the bridge had never been constructed, or if constructed never opened for traffic, the actual injury to the ferry might have been comparatively speaking small. But it is impossible to say that it was not injuriously affected by the acquisition in such a way as to cause some damage to the owner of it. The declaration of the Government that the land was wanted for a purpose which would entirely destroy that ferry, the proceedings taken, and the actual acquisition of the land for that purpose, must have considerably affected the letting or selling value at the time of the acquisition.

The intention of the Legislature to be gathered from the Act seems to have been that persons, a part of whose land has been compulsorily taken from them, should, apart from its actual value, be compensated for injury done to their other property by the taking.

We must hold, therefore, that the Maharajah was entitled under the Act to compensation for the loss of the ferry, and that the decision of the District Judge is right. No question as to the amount of the compensation is raised in this appeal, and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

B.D.B. Appeal dismissed.

Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee, Dr. Rash Behary Ghose, Babu Lal Mohun Das, Babu Girija Sunker Mazumdar and Babu Sridhar Das Gupta for the Respondent.

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (MACLEAN, C. J., and BANERJEE, J.)

Banerjee, J.—The suit, out of which this appeal arises, was brought by the plaintiff-respondent to recover possession and mesne profits of certain properties, seven in number, namely, two revenue-paying estates (in one of which only an 8 annas share is claimed), two dwelling houses, a temple and a garden, and a tank. The material allegations on which the plaintiff bases his suit are shortly these: That the properties in dispute originally belonged to Kumar Ram Chunder, the adopted son of Rajah Udmanta Singh, who was the brother of Rajah Hanumant Singh; that the plaintiff was the great grandson by adoption of the said Rajah Hanumant Singh, having been duly adopted on the 24th of August 1866 by the widow of Rajah Kirti Chand, grandson of Rajah Hanumant Singh; that Kumar Ram Chunder, having dedicated properties Nos. 1 and 2 of the schedule to the plaint (that is the two revenue-paying estates) to the worship of a certain idol, and having appointed Rani Annapurna, widow of Rajah Udmanta Singh, to be the shebait, died, leaving him surviving his widow Rani Ananda Moye and the said Rani Annapurna; that Rani Annapurna purported to make a gift of a 2 annas share of property No. 2 in favour of the defendant, who claims to be her sister's adopted son; that by her last will and testament, dated the 6th July 1877, Rani Annapurna purported to dedicate property No. 1, and the remaining six annas of property No. 2, to certain idols, and to appoint Rani Ananda Moye as shebait; that on the death of Rani Annapurna, Rani Ananda Moye obtained probate of the said will and remained in possession of the properties in dispute; that on the death of Rani Ananda [357] Moye in September 1883, the defendant and the Court of Wards, on behalf of the plaintiff who was then a minor, made separate applications for letters of administration to the estate, and the application of the defendant was granted, while, owing to the neglect of the manager under the Court of Wards to adduce evidence, the application on behalf of the plaintiff was disallowed; that the defendant has since then gradually taken possession of the properties in dispute, and has been misappropriating the profits of the endowed properties; and that according to the Hindu law of the Benares School, which governs the family, the plaintiff, as the reversionary heir to Kumar Ram Chunder after the death of his widow Rani Ananda Moye, is entitled to the properties in dispute. And the plaintiff seeks to recover possession of the said properties as the heir to Kumar Ram Chunder. And he makes an alternative prayer that if it be held that the properties Nos. 1 and 2 were the absolute property of Rani Annapurna, he may be awarded possession of property No. 1 and of a six annas of property No 2 as heir of the said Rani and as shebait of the idols to whom she dedicated those properties.

The defendant pleaded limitation and res judicata in bar of the suit, denied the adoption of the plaintiff and his title as heir to Kumar Ram Chunder and to Rani Annapurna, and alleged that the properties in dispute were the stridhana or absolute property of Rani Annapurna, and that the defendant as her sister's adopted son was entitled as her heir to all of them except No. 7, which had been dedicated by her to public use. He also denied the charge of misappropriation of the profits of the endowed properties. There were certain other points raised in the defence which are not necessary to be considered for the purposes of this appeal.

Upon these pleadings several issues were framed in the Court below; and that Court has held that the suit is not barred by limitation or by the principle of res judicata; that the plaintiff is the validly adopted son of Rajah Kirti Chand, and the defendant the validly adopted son of Annapurna's sister; that the plaintiff is the heir of Kumar Ram Chunder and of Rani Annapurna in preference to the defendant; that the defendant has committed [358] waste of the income of the endowed property; that the properties Nos. 1, 2 and 3 belonged absolutely to Annapurna, who made a gift of 2 annas of No. 2 to the defendant and dedicated No. 1 and the remaining 6 annas of No. 2 to the idols Lakshminarayan and Radhamohun; that the remaining properties belonged to Kumar Ram Chunder; and that the plaintiff had no cause of action against the defendant as regards property No. 7. And in accordance with these findings, the lower Court has given the plaintiff a decree for possession of properties Nos. 1 and 3 and a 6 annas share of property No. 2 as shebait of Thakurs Lakshminarayan and Radhamohun, and for possession of the remaining properties in suit except a 2 annas share of property No. 2 in his own right, the claim for an account having been abandoned.

Against this decree the defendant has preferred this appeal, and the plaintiff has filed a cross appeal.

At the hearing, the cross-appeal was not pressed. In the appeal of the defendant, the only grounds pressed are, first, that the Court below should have held that the whole suit was barred by limitation under article 119 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act; second, that the Court below should have held that the suit, so far as the plaintiff sought to oust the defendant from the office of, shebait and to recover possession of the endowed properties as shebait, was barred by limitation under article 120 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act; third that the Court below should have held that the suit, so far as the plaintiff seeks to recover possession of properties other than those of Rani Annapurna, was barred by limitation under article 144 of the said Schedule; fourth, that the Court below should have held that the defendant was the heir to the stridhana of Rani Annapurna in preference to the plaintiff; fifth, that the Court below should have held that the charge of waste and misappropriation of the income of the endowed property was not established against the defendant, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to oust the defendant from the office of shebait; and, sixth, that the Court below should have held that the defendant had acquired a valid title to property No. 6 under his purchase at a sale in execution of decree.

We shall consider these grounds in the order in which they have been stated above.

[359] In support of the first ground, the learned Vakil for the appellant argued that, as the plaintiff could not, in any view of the case, succeed without establishing the validity of his adoption, and as a suit to obtain a declaration that his adoption was valid was barred under article 119 of schedule II of the Limitation Act by reason of the time allowed by that article having expired, the whole suit must be held to be barred by limitation, and he relied upon the cases of Jagadamba Chaodhrani v. Dakhina Mohun Roy Chaodhri, (1886) I. L. R., 13 Cal., 308, Mohesh Narain Munshi v. Taruck Nath Moitra, (1892) I.L.R., 20 Cal., 487, and Parvathi v. Saminatha, (1896) I.L.R., 20 Mad., 40. On the other hand, it was contended for the respondent that article 119 applied only to a suit to obtain a declaration that an adoption was valid, and that it had no application to a suit like the present for possession of immoveable property, and in support of this contention the case of Fannyama v. Manjaya, (1895) I.L.R., 2 Bom., 159, and the cases therein cited were referred to.

After giving our best consideration to the point, we come to the conclusion that the contention of the appellant is not correct.

If article 119 applied to this suit it would be barred, assuming that the rights of the plaintiff, as the adopted son of Rajah Kirti Chand, were interfered with by the order of the High Court dated the 11th September 1885, granting the defendant's application for letters of administration to the estate of Rani Annapurna, and refusing that of the plaintiff, as the present suit was brought more than six years after that date, and more than three years after the plaintiff attained majority. But we do not think that article 119 applies to a suit like the present, which is brought for recovery of possession of immoveable property, though the plaintiff has to establish the validity of his adoption as the basis of his title. That article, as its language shows, applies only to a suit to obtain a declaration that an adoption is valid. The view contended for by the learned Vakil for the appellant is not only opposed to the plain language of the article in question, but would [360] lead to obvious anomaly and hardship. Thus, while a son claiming the immoveable property of his father from a person who denies his legitimacy has twelve years within which to bring his suit, an adopted son making a similar claim against a person who denies the validity of the adoption would in that view have only six years allowed to him. Again, an adopted son claiming by inheritance the immoveable property of a collateral kinsman by adoption years after his adoption took place, would in that view have only six years from the time the succession opens within which to bring his suit, whereas if he had been a blood relation of his deceased kinsman, he would have had the ordinary period of twelve years. We do not think it reasonable to suppose that the Legislature could have intended this.

It was argued by the learned Vakil for the appellant that his view was supported by the cases he cited. Two of these being decisions of the Privy Council, if they are in point, we are bound to follow them. But they were both cases in which the contention was that the suit was barred by limitation because it was too late for the plaintiff "to set aside" the adoption of the defendant, or, in other words, to displace the title by adoption under which the defendant claimed to hold the immoveable property in dispute; whereas the contention in the present case is, that the suit is barred by limitation, because it is too late for the plaintiff to "establish" his adoption, or, in other words, to have it declared that his title by adoption under which he seeks to recover the immoveable property in dispute, is valid. The provision of law relied upon in the two cases cited was that portion of article 129 of Act IX of 1871, which corresponds to article 118 of Act XV of 1877, and not the portion corresponding to atricle 119, upon which the present appellant's contention rests. Though these two articles of the pr nt Act into which article 129 of the former Act has been broken up, relate to cognate matters, and though the two contentions mentioned above are in some respects analogous, it is by no means clear that precisely the same considerations apply to both. The reasons which led their Lordships of the Privy Council in Jagadamba Chaodhrani v. Dakhina Mohun Roy, (1886) I. L. R, 13 Cal., 308 [361] to conclude that the expression ' suit to set aside an adoption " includes a suit for possession of land after displacing a title by adoption, as well as a suit for a declaration that an adoption was invalid, do not warrant the conclusion that the expression "suit to establish an adoption " includes also a suit for possession of immoveable property upon a title by adoption, when the property claimed is, as it is in this case, that of a collateral relation by adoption.

Moreover, both the cases referred to were cases governed by the old law (Act IX of 1871), the language of the corresponding provision of which (article 129) was very different. In the earlier of the two cases, Jagadamba Chaodhrani v. Dakhina Mohun Roy, (1886) I. L. R, 13 Cal, 308, which was a suit by a reversioner after the death of the widows of the last full owner, to recover possession of immoveable property from the defendant who was holding it as his adopted son, their Lordships observe: " It thus appears that the expression 'set aside an adoption' is, and has been, for many years applied in the ordinary language of Indian lawyers to proceedings which bring the validity of an alleged adoption under question, and applied quite indiscriminately to suits for possession of land and to suits of a declaratory nature. It is worth observing that in the Limitation Act of 1877, which superseded the Act now under discussion, the language is changed. Article 128" (evidently a misprint for 118) " of Act XV of 1877, which corresponds to article 129 of 1871, so far as regards setting aside adoptions, speaks of suits 'to obtain a declaration that an alleged adoption is invalid or never in fact took place,' and assigns a different starting point to the time that is to run against it. Whether the alteration of language denotes a change of policy, or how much change of law it affects, are questions not now before their Lordships. Nor do they think that any guidance in the construction of the earlier Act is to be gained from the later one, except that we may fairly infer that the Legislature considered the expression 'suit to set aside an adoption' to be one of a loose kind, and that more precision was desirable.

" If then the expression is not such as to denote solely, or even to denote accurately, a suit confined to a declaration that an alleged [362] adoption is invalid in law or never took place in fact, is there anything in the scope or structure of the Act to prevent us from giving to it the ordinary sense in which it is used, though it may be loosely, by professional men ? " And this question is answered in the negative. This shows that, though their Lordships did not decide what the effect of the change in the law was, they decided that a suit for possession which could succeed only if a title by an alleged adoption was displaced, was governed by article 129 of the earlier Act, because the loose expression "suit to set aside an adoption " used in that article, applied indiscriminately to suits for possession of land and to suits of a declaratory nature, and did not denote solely or even accurately a suit of the latter description. Can the same thing be said of articles 118 and 119 of the present Act, which taken together correspond to article 129 of the Act of 1871 ? Evidently not. The language is altered and made more precise so as to apply only to suits of a declaratory nature, and the time is reduced from twelve years (which is the period generally allowed in the enactments for suits for possession of immoveable property) to six years, a much shorter period. To our minds their Lordships' observations quoted above go to support the view taken of article 119 of the present Limitation Act in the argument for the respondent rather than that taken on the other side.

The learned Vakil for the appellant argued that the next case cited, Mohesh Narain Munshi v. Taruck Nath Moitra, (1892) I. L. R., 20 Cal., 487 went clearly to support the view taken by him of the meaning and effect of article 119 of the Act of 1877; and the passage in the judgment most strongly relied upon is the one in which their Lordships say: "It was suggested that the Act of 1871, having been superseded by the Act of 1877, the question of limitation should be determined with reference to the provisions of the later statute, in which the language used is somewhat different, the suit there referred to as necessary to save the limitation being described as one 'to obtain a declaration that an alleged adoption is invalid or never in fact took place.' It seems to be more than doubtful whether [363] if these were the words of the statute applicable to the case, the plaintiff would thereby take any advantage." We do not think that the concluding sentence in the above passage, which is only a dictum in guarded language and not a decided opinion of their Lordships, bears out the appellant's contention that the change in language adopted in articles 118 and 119 of Act XV of 1877 has not effected any change in the law. "What their Lordships considered to be more than doubtful even if the language of the old law (article 129 of Act IX of 1871) were the same as that of the present law (article 118 of Act XV of 1877) was not whether that would make any change in the law, but whether the plaintiff would take any advantage, that is, whether the plaintiff in the case before their Lordships would succeed under the circumstances of the case (quoted. in 27 Cal., 255)." That this is the meaning of the above passage appears to us to be clear, not only from the language used, but also from the fact that the High Court held that the suit was barred by adverse possession, and their Lordships in an earlier part of the judgment say that they decide the question upon the construction of article 129 of Act IX of 1871 without expressing any dissent from the view of the High Court that the suit was barred by adverse possession.

The case of Parvathi v. Saminatha, (1896) I. L. R., 20 Mad., 40 no doubt is in favour of the appellant. But as against that case there has been a strong current of decisions the other way. See Lala Parbhu Lal v. Mylne, (1887) I. L. R., 14 Cal., 401 Basdeo v. Gopal, (1886) I. L. R., 8 All., 644, Ganga Sahai v. Lakhraj Singh, (1886) I. L. R., 9 All., 253, Natthu Singh v. Gulab Singh, (1895) I. L. R., 17 All., 167, Padajirav v. Ramrav, (1888) I. L. R., 13 Bom., 160, Fanniyama v. Manjaya, (1895) I. L. R., 21 Bom., 159 and Hari Lal v. Bai Rewa, (1895) I. L. R., 21 Bom., 376.

For the reasons given above, and upon the authority of the cases we have referred to, we must respectfully dissent from the [364] case of Parvathi v. Saminatha, (1896) I. L. R., 20 Mad., 40 and hold that article 119 of Schedule II of Act XV of 1877 applies only to a suit for a declaratory decree, and that the present suit, which is one for possession of immoveable property, is not barred under that article.

The second ground of appeal, namely, that the suit, so far as the plaintiff seeks to oust the defendant from the office of shebait and to recover possession of the endowed properties, should have been held as barred under article 120 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act, is based upon the case of Jagannath Dass v. Bir Bhadra Das, (1892) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 776. But that case is quite distinguishable from the present. What was held there was that a suit to oust a shebait from his office which is not hereditary, and the appointment to which is made by nomination, is governed by the six years' rule of limitation under article 120. In the present case the late shebait Rani Ananda Moye, not having appointed her successor as provided in the will of the founder, Rani Annapurna (Ex. B), and there being no other provisions for the appointment of shebait, the management of the endowment must revert to the heirs of the founder, See Jai Bansi Kunwar v. Chattardhari Singh, (1870) 5 B. L. R., 181; 13 W. R., 396, Gossamee Sree Greedharreeje v. Rumanlolljee Gossamee, (1889) L. R., 16 I. A., 139; I. L. R., 17 Cal., 3, and the office of shebait henceforth must be hereditary in the founder's family. The limitation applicable to a suit for possession of such an office is twelve years under article 124, and not six years under article 120, and the suit being brought within twelve years from the date when the defendant took up the management of the endowed properties, is well within time.

In support of the third ground, namely, that the suit, so far as it is one for possession of properties other than those of Rani Annapurna, should have been held as barred under article 144 of Schedule II of Act XV of 1877, the learned Vakil for the appellant argued that as Kumar Ram Chunder died in 1859, it was possible for his widow Rani Ananda Moye to have been barred by limitation under Act XIV of 1859, before Act IX [365] of 1871, which superseded that Act and allowed the reversioners to reckon limitation from the date of the widow's death, came into operation, that is, before April 1873; and if the widow was so barred, the reversioner was also barred under the old law (see Nobin Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Gurupersad Doss, (1868) B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 1008; 9 W. R., 505), and his right being once barred could not be revived by Act IX of 1871 or Act XV of 1877 as is expressly provided by section 2 of the latter Act. The view of the law upon which this argument proceeds is correct, see Drobomoyi Gupta v. Davis, (1887) I. L. R., 14 Cal., 323, Shamlall Mitra v. Amarendro Nath Bose, (1896) I. L. R., 23 Cal., 460, but the argument assumes that Rani Ananda Moye's possession within twelve years before April 1873 is not proved—an assumption which is disproved by the admission of the defendant in paragraph 10 of his written statement. No doubt the admission is qualified; but except as heir to her husband we fail to see how Rani Ananda Moye could have been in possession of these properties which belonged to her husband, and had not been dedicated to the idols. That being so, the third ground before us must fail.

Upon the fourth ground, namely, that the defendant ought to have been held to be the heir of Rani Annapurna's stridhana in preference to the plaintiff, the argument on behalf of the appellant is two-fold. In the first place, it is argued that if Annapurna had been married in one of the disapproved forms, the defendant as her sister's son was unquestionably her heir in preference to the plaintiff, her husband's kinsman; and as the burden of proof lay on the plaintiff, and he had adduced no evidence on the point, his claim should be dismissed; and in the second place it is contended that even if the marriage of Annapurna be assumed to have been in an approved form, still the defendant, as her sister's adopted son, was her heir in preference to the plaintiff. We shall consider these two branches of the argument separately.

Upon the first branch of the argument, it is suggested that the marriage of Rani Annapurna took place in the disapproved [366] form called Asura, allowable for the Vaisya or mercantile caste to which the parties belong. But though the parties may belong to the Vaisya caste, as stated by one of the plaintiff's witnesses, Mohant Krishnanand Ram Goswami, and though some consider the Asura form of marriage allowed for that caste, Manu is strong in his condemnation of it, and he prohibits it altogether: see Manu III, 25 51, IX, 98. As Rajah Udmanta Singh, the husband of Rani Annapurna, belonged to a highly respectable Hindu family, as is shown by the fact of his having the title of Rajah, it is improbable that he should have contracted a marriage in the Asura form. It would be unreasonable, therefore, to assume, in the absence of evidence (and it was admitted in the argument that there was no evidence on the point) that the marriage of Rani Annapurna took place in the Asura or in any other disapproved form. In Thakoor Deyhee v. Rai Baluk Ram, (1866) 11 Moo. I. A., 139, in which a similar question arose, their Lordships of the Privy Council, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, held that the marriage in dispute was according to one of the four approved forms. And the same view was taken by the Bombay High Court in the recent case of Gojabai v. Shahajirao Maloji Raye Bhosle, (1892) I. L. R., 17 Bom., 114, in which TELANG, J., observed : "It must be assumed, as in the absence of all evidence it was rightly assumed by the Subordinate Judge, that Anundbai's marriage was in one of the approved forms."

The first branch failing, it becomes necessary to consider the second branch of the argument upon the fourth ground, namely, that if Annapurna was married in one of the four approved forms, even then the defendant was the heir to her stridhana in preference to the plaintiff. The parties are admittedly governed by the Hindu law of the Benares School; and there can be no question that the Mitakshara is the highest authority in that school; and the Mitakshara in chapter II, section XI, paragraph 11, says: "Of a woman dying without issue as before stated and who had become a wife by any of the four modes of marriage denominated brahma, daiva, arsha and prajapatya, the (whole) property as before described belongs in the first place to her husband. On [367] failure of him it goes to his nearest kinsman (sapinda). But in the other forms of marriage called asura, gandharva, rakshasa and paisacha, the property of a childless woman goes to her parents, that is to her father and mother. The succession devolves first (and the reason has been before explained) on the mother who is virtually exhibited (first) in the elliptical phrase pitrigami, implying that it goes (gachhati) to both parents (pitarau) that is to the mother and to the father. On failure of them, their nearest kinsman takes the succession." This clearly shows that if the marriage of Annapurna was, as in the absence of evidence we must assume it was, in one of the four approved forms, the plaintiff, who is the nearest kinsman of her husband now living, and not the defendant who is her father's kinsman, is her heir.

But it is argued by Babu Golap Chunder Sarkar for the appellant that, though the Mitakshara is clear on the point, a doubt arises as to the correctness of the rule laid down in the passage quoted above, by reason of that rule being in conflict with a text of Brihaspati quoted in the Viramitrodaya (G. C. Sarkar's Translation, page 243), a text of a sage which is recognised as an authority; and there being a doubt thus raised, the Viramitrodaya, which is a work of authority in the Benares School, should, as observed by the Privy Council in Gridhari Lal Roy v. The Government of Bengal, (1868) 1 B. L. R., P. C., 44 : 10 W. R., P. C, 31, be followed, and following the Viramitrodaya, the defendant should be held to be the heir of Annapurna's stridhana in preference to the plaintiff. In support of this argument the case of Thakoor Deyhee v. Rai Baluk Ram, (1866) 11 Moo. I. A., 139, is cited as furnishing an instance in which a text of the sage, Katyayana, not referred to in the Mitakshara, was followed upon a point on which the Mitakshara lays down a different rule.

We are unable to accept this argument as sound. What their Lordships of the Privy Council said in the case of Gridhari Lall Roy v. The Government of Bengal, (1868) 1 B. L. R., P. C., 44 : 10 W. R., P. C.. 31, was that, when the text of the Mitakshara was doubtful upon any point, the Viramitrodaya as a work of authority in the Benares School might be referred to for the [368] purpose of removing the doubt. But their Lordships do not say, and there is neither reason nor authority for saying, that where the Mitakshara is as it is here, clear on the point, the text of any sage, which is in conflict with the rule therein laid down, can be referred to for the purpose of creating a doubt, as the learned Vakil for the appellant contends. To allow such a course would be to upset altogether the Hindu Law of the Benares School, and indeed of every other school. The Mitakshara is the guiding authority of the Benares School, and we cannot, in administering the law of that school, question the correctness of that authority because of its conflict with the text of some ancient sage. Nor is the case of Thakoor Deyhee v. Rai Baluk Ram, (1866) 11 Moo. I. A., 139, cited for the appellant at all a case in point. There Katyayana's well known text was referred to upon the question as to the widow's right to alienate the property inherited by her from her husband, because upon that question the Mitakshara is silent, or at best doubtful. We should add that upon the question of succession to the stridhana of a childless woman, the Viramitrodaya, following the text of Brihaspati referred to above, places in the line of heirs certain kinsmen on the father's side (the sister's son being one of them) before several near relations of the husband, and thus gives an order altogether inconsistent with that given in the Mitakshara. The view we take is in accordance with the opinion of the Bombay High Court in Gojabai v. Shahajirav Malaji Raje Bhosle, (1892) I. L. R., 17 Bom., 114.

We must in this case follow the Mitakshara, and hold that the plaintiff is the heir to the property of Rani Annapurna in preference to the defendant.

Coming now to the fifth ground, namely, that the charges of waste and misappropriation of the endowed property have not been established, and that the plaintiff is not entitled to oust the defendant from the office of shebait, we are of opinion that the first part of it is immaterial, even if it be well founded, and the second part is altogether untenable.

Granting that the charges of waste and misappropriation of endowed property are not established against the defendant, [369] that does not materially affect the result. The late shebait, who was authorized to appoint her successor, having omitted to do so, and there being no other provision on the point in the deed of dedication, the management, as has been said above, reverts to the heirs of the founder, see Jai Bansi Kunwar v. Chattardhari Singh, (1870) 5 B. L R., 181 · 13 W. R., 396, and Gossamee Sree Greedhareejee v. Rumanlolljee Gossamee, (1889) L. R., 16 I. A., 137: I. L. R., 17 Cal., 3. The plaintiff as the next heir to Rani Annapurna is therefore entitled to be appointed shebait.

It was contended for the appellant that the grant of letters of administration to the defendant by the order of the High Court, dated the 11th of September 1885, is a bar to the appointment of the plaintiff as shebait, so long as the grant of administration is not revoked. We do not consider this contention to be of much force The order granting letters of administration to the defendant is, under section 41 of the Evidence Act and section 59 of the Probate and Administration Act, conclusive proof of the representative title of the defendant against all debtors of the deceased, Rani Annapurna, and all persons holding property which belonged to the deceased. But the object of the proceedings under the Probate and Administration Act is to determine only the question of representation of the deceased for the purpose of administering the estate, and not for the purpose of determining any question of inheritance or of the right to be appointed as shebait. A reference to sections 2, 3, 4, 6 and 37 of the Probate and Administration Act, which authorize the grant of letters of administration to persons who may not be the heirs of the deceased, well bears out the view we take, which also receives support from the observations in the judgment of this Court in Arunmoyi Dasi v. Mohendra Nath Wadadar, (1893) I. L. R., 20 Cal., 888. The order granting letters of administration to the defendant is therefore no bar to this suit, the decree in which will surpersede the grant.

The sixth ground, namely, that the defendant has acquired a valid title to property No. 6 by his purchase at a sale in execution of a decree, need not detain us long. The Court below on [370] this point says: "Now it has been decided before, and defendant has himself admitted that Sri Narain Singh was not validly adopted by Rani Anandmoyi, so the purchase by defendant of his son's right cannot avail him." This view is, we think, quite correct, and no reason has been shown to induce us to dissent from it.

The grounds urged before us, therefore, all fail, and the appeal must consequently be dismissed with costs. The cross-appeal not being pressed, must also be dismissed with costs.

Maclean, C. J.—The above is the joint judgment of Mr. Justice BANERJEE and myself. I only wish to add one word on the second point. I entertain some doubt whether the defendant can, upon this particular point, successfully set up the Statute of Limitation as against the present plaintiff. The defendant was never appointed, and never was, shebait. He held the property and managed it as administrator, and as administrator alone, and in fact stood in a fiduciary position towards the person who was legally entitled to be shebait. The plaintiff is that person, and when the plaintiff comes forward and as shebait claims the property, I feel a difficulty in saying that the defendant, holding it as he did, in a fiduciary capacity, can successfully set up the Statute of Limitation as against him. The point was urged before us by Mr Bonnerjee for the respondent, and though it is unnecessary to decide it, I refer to it, to show that it has not escaped me. In making these observations, I am not unmindful of the decision in the case of Balwant Rao v. Puran Mal, (1883) I. L. R., 6 All., 1.

[371] APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 17th January, 1898.

PRESENT :

SIR FRANCIS WILLIAM MACLEAN, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON, AND MR. JUSTICE TREVELYAN.

Saral Chand Mitter............Defendant

Mohun Bibi... ....Plaintiff.*

Minor—Fraudulent Representation by minor that he was of age—Mortgage—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sections 42, 45, 53—Plaint, Amendment of.

A sum of money was advanced to a minor by a mortgagee, secured by a mortgage of house property, on the representation by the minor that he was of age, and the mortgagee was deceived by such false representation:

Held that the mortgagee was entitled to a mortgage decree against the property of the infant.

Dhanmull v. Ram Chunder Ghose, (1890) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 265, distinguished and doubted, (1859) 4 De G. & J., 458.

Held, also, that on the question of amending a plaint, section 53 of the Civil Procedure Code should be read with sections 42 and 45 : that it is the intention of the Legislature that all matters in dispute should be disposed of in the same suit. The proviso to section 53 is not intended to interfere with this.

Nelson v. Stocker, (1859) 4 DeG. & J., 458, per TURNER, L.J., applied.

APPEAL from a decision of JENKINS, J., dated 27th July 1897.

The defendant by an instrument of mortgage, dated 14th November 1893, mortgaged his right, title and interest, in a house and premises, No. 5, Syed Salleh's Lane, Machua Bazar, in the Town of Calcutta, and in a house and premises No. 9, Canal West Road, Sealdah, in the District of the Twenty-four Pergunnahs, in favour of the plaintiff to secure the re-payment of a sum of Rs. 5,000, with interest at 24 per cent. per annum with quarterly rests, lent to him by the plaintiff. At the time the mortgage was given the defendant admittedly was a minor, but he would have come of age six or seven months later, if it had not been for an order of 1st February 1894, which appointed a guardian of the person and property of the infant and thereby extended the period of minority to the age of 21. The defendant was a young man of [372] dissolute habits, and being in want of money went to the plaintiff and asked for the loan. The plaintiff, being suspicious as to the defendant's age, asked for proofs, and the plaintiff thereupon produced an affidavit of a relative stating that he was of age and also a document purporting to be a certificate of the death of his father, and this certificate was produced before the Registrar of Assurances at Sealdah, who, on seeing it, was satisfied and registered the mortgage. The money was then handed over to the defendant. On the institution of this suit to obtain a mortgage decree, in answer to the plaint a written statement was put in, on 17th April 1895, by the guardian of the infant, disclosing the fact that, at the time of the advance, the defendant was a minor. At the hearing, on 6th July 1897, a question was raised as to the amendment of the pleadings, it being suggested that if, at the date of the mortgage, the defendant was an infant, the plaintiff should be allowed to raise an alternative case to the effect that he had been induced to part with his money upon the fraudulent representation of the infant defendant, and an order giving leave to make the amendment was granted to the plaintiff.

The Judgment appealed from was as follows:—

Jenkins, J.—On the 14th November 1893 the defendant executed, in favour of Luckhinarain Singh, the original plaintiff in the suit, a mortgage of certain immoveable properties, which had devolved on the defendant under the will of his grandfather, and on the 20th February 1895 this suit was instituted, whereby it is prayed—

"(a) That the defendant may be decreed by this Honourable Court to pay to the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 5,000, together with the interest due thereon, and the costs of this suit on some day to be fixed by this Honourable Court, and that in default thereof the right to redeem the said mortgaged premises may be foreclosed.

"(b) That the said premises may be sold, and the sale proceeds applied in and towards the repayment of the said sum of Rs. 5,000, and the interest thereon, and the costs of this suit.

[373] "(c) That if the sale proceeds be not sufficient for the payment in full of the said amounts, the said defendant be decreed and ordered to pay to the plaintiff the amount of such deficiency.

"(d) That for such purpose such directions may be given and such accounts may be taken as to this Honourable Court may seem necessary.

"(e) For such further and other relief as the nature of the case may require."

Luckhinarain having died, the plaintiff Sreemutty Mohun Bibee, as his administratrix, was substituted in his place.

On the 1st February 1894 Kaliprosonno Ghose was appointed guardian on the allegation that the defendant was an infant, and on the 17th of April 1895 he put in a written statement, pleading infancy and submitting the matter to the Court.

This was the state of the record when the case came on for trial. On that occasion, however, it was stated that the defendant had reached the age of 21, and it was arranged that the guardian should be discharged.

Thereupon it was asked by the plaintiff whether the defendant intended to affirm his mortgage, and to this there was a reply in the negative.

On this the plaintiff contended that it was not open to the defendant to rely on his infancy, on the ground that the mortgagee had been induced by his fraud, and that, at any rate, the decision gave rise to such rights as are indicated by sections 64 and 65 of the Indian Contract Act. It was further pointed out that until then there had been no avoidance of the mortgage, and leave was asked to file a supplemental written statement. The defendant objected, but I acceded to the application. In coming to this conclusion I was influenced by the fact that to refuse it would simply necessitate the institution of a fresh action without any advantage to the defendant, as I have given him all the time he required to meet the allegations of fraud; and next because this supplemental written statement was, so far as the plaintiff sought to rest on his mortgage, really in the nature of a replication seeing that there had been no prior avoidance of the mortgage.

[374] In this state of things the following issues were raised :—

1. Was the mortgage deed executed by the defendant?

2. Was the defendant an infant at the date thereof?

3. Was the plaintiff induced to lend the money under the circumstances alleged in the written statement?

4. Apart from the question of fraud are the plaintiffs entitled to recover under the sections of the Contract Act (64 and 65)?

There really can be no question that the defendant executed the mortgage, nor have I any doubt that at its date the defendant was under the age of 18 and consequently a minor. I accordingly decide the 1st and 2nd issues in the affirmative. In deciding the 3rd issue, I have to deal with a conflict of evidence of a most direct character going to the very heart of the matter in dispute.

There are, however, certain matters which are practically beyond question, and it will be best to state them, so as to see which of the conflicting cases best accords with the established facts. Those facts I take shortly to be as follows:—

Some days prior to the mortgage, arrangements were made for an advance by Luckhinarain Singh to the defendant on the security of the property which has been actually charged. In the course of the negotiations there were produced to Luckhinarain the death certificate and affidavit which are alleged to have contained the false representation. The death certificate and affidavit were afterwards placed before Aushootosh Bose, a pleader of the Alipore Court, by Luckhinarain, who requested him to advise whether, having regard to them, money could be advanced. Subsequently, Aushootosh Bose, in accordance with instructions, prepared a draft and engrossed mortgage mentioned in the plaint On the 11th of November 1893 Luckhinarain accompanied by Aushootosh and Gunput met the defendant and Hari Churn Mitter at the Sealdah Registry; the defendant signed the mortgage and the defendant, Luckhi, Aushootosh, and Gunput went upstairs and presented the deed for registration.

The Registrar, who was a friend of the defendant's family, doubted whether the defendant was a major, nor were his doubts removed by the production of the affidavit of Achintanath Biswas, [375] so the parties went downstairs and Hari, Luckhi, and Gunput went away in a garry, and after the space of an hour brought back the death certificate. The parties once more went before the Registrar, the certificate was handed to him, and he, apparently being satisfied as to the defendant's majority, registered the deed. On this 5,000 rupees in notes was paid into the defendant's hands and the parties again went downstairs, leaving the death certificate and the affidavit with the Registrar. Notes to the amount of Rs. 200 were handed to Aushoo and then Luckhinarain and Aushootosh left in a garry, leaving the others there. A few days after Saral went to the Registry and obtained the affidavit that had been left there.

The facts which I have so far stated are beyond dispute, and it will now be convenient to examine shortly the several versions of the plaintiff and the defendant as to what occurred over and above this.

According to Gunput's evidence Saral himself took part in the negotiations for a loan, and himself produced to the plaintiff the certificate and affidavit. After stating that Saral came with Suren Das to Luckhinarain 15 or 20 days prior to the mortgage, Gunput proceeds as follows:—

"Suren said to Luckhinarain Singh in defendant's presence: 'Here is Saral Babu; will you advance him the Rs. 2,000 on a promissory note, which you have promised to advance'; upon that Luckhinarain Singh said: 'The other day you told me something about his age; where are the affidavit and certificate of death of his father.' Saral thereupon produced two pieces of paper from his pocket and handed them over to Luckhinarain Singh, who read them and handed them over to me." The witness then identified these two documents as being the death certificate and the affidavit. Gunput further describes how the two came again the next day, and that it was ultimately arranged that Rs. 5,000 should be advanced on mortgage. After this, according to Gunput, the defendant obtained a return of the death certificate and affidavit on his furnishing the copies which have been produced here. Gunput beyond this connects Saral with the transaction before its completion by stating that he handed to him a draft of the mortgage.

[376] I now pass to the plaintiff's version of what happened at the Sealdah Office.

According to it the defendant was present in the Registry, and on the Registrar, Hem Chunder, expressing doubts as to his majority, produced the affidavit to the Registrar. Babu Hem Chunder being still in doubt, Hari Mitter was sent by the defendant to get the death certificate, and for that purpose went away with Luckhinarain Singh and Gunput, dropped them at their house, went on, and brought back the certificate, picking up Luckhinarain and Gunput on the way. Then it is said that it was on production of the certificate by the defendant to Hem Chunder that the deed was registered and the 5,000 rupees paid. It is admitted that after leaving the Registrar's room notes to the amount of Rs. 200 were handed to Aushoo, but it is sworn that this was to discharge the expenses in connection with the transaction, and Ashootosh's remuneration, amounting in all to Rs. 140, and that Rs. 60 was then and there repaid to the defendant. Beyond this it is absolutely denied that any payment was made by Saral.

The version put forward on the part of the defence is widely different. Saral swears that he knew nothing about the mortgage till the day before it was executed, that he took no part in the negotiations for the loan, and did not produce the certificate and affidavit, and he further disclaims prior possession of them or even knowledge of their existence. He further swears that he did not know, though he was present, why Hem Chunder declined at first to register the document, that he did not produce either the affidavit or certificate to Hem Chunder, that he did not know the nature of those documents when they were produced, or what the affidavit was when he went to the office afterwards and took it away, and he denies that he sent Hari Mitter for the certificate. On the other hand he states that, after leaving the Registry, he paid Rs. 2,000 to Luckhinarain, Rs. 1,100 to Gunput, and did not receive Rs. 60 or any other sum back in respect of the Rs. 200 paid to Aushoo. Then the question comes, which version am I to adopt. Now I absolutely decline to believe Saral's disavowal of all connection with the certificate and affidavit. In the first place it is proved to my satisfaction that documents undistinguishable from [377] these had been previously shown to Preonath Shastri on the occasion of Saral's obtaining a loan from him. Then I find it impossible to believe that the defendant did not know for what purpose those documents were produced to Hem Chunder. There can be no question that Hem Chunder did express his doubts as to Saral's age, and when it is borne in mind that he was a friend of Saral's family and was well acquainted with Saral himself, it is beyond my capacity to believe that Hem Chunder should not have said a word to Saral on the point, and that Saral remained in absolute ignorance of that which admittedly was going on in his presence. I find it equally difficult to accept his account of what happened when the affidavit was taken away from the Registry. He states that in consequence of Gunput's persuasion he accompanied him to get the affidavit; still he declares that, though it was he who went to the Registrar and asked for the document, he did not know what it was; that he only described it to the Registrar as "the first document which was produced to you in connection with the loan"; that the Registrar told the clerk to get it; that it was handed to him folded, and that he did not open it. The purpose of this evidence is to support the defendant's theory of his ignorance and freedom from guile, but when I consider the improbability of the tale, and the fact that during the cross-examination of Gunput no suggestion was made of his having accompanied Saral on the occasion when the affidavit was taken away, I do not hesitate to say that the defendant's evidence on the point is undeserving of credit.

The conclusion to which I come is that the defendant was perfectly well aware of the purport of these two documents, and the purpose to which they were put in connection with the transaction. It is the defendant's case that he had nothing to do with the case, and that Hari Mitter acted for him. Yet he does not call Hari as a witness, though he is a friend of the defendant's and was in Court during the trial. The evidence appears to me to demand the conclusion that Saral took part in the negotiations for the loan, and that he used the death certificate and affidavit fraudulently, being well aware of their falsity, for the purpose of inducing Luckhinarain to believe that he, Saral, had attained his majority, and so of procuring from him the advance which was made.

[378] After the best consideration I have been able to give I further come to the conclusion that Luckhinarain was deceived into making the loan by the defendant's fraudulent misrepresentation. In arriving at this conclusion I have not overlooked the arguments based on the rate of interest and on the assertion that Luckhinarain is a money-lender. But I cannot find in those circumstances anything to justify me in coming to the conclusion that the defendant's fraud had not its intended and natural result on Luckhinarain's mind. It has also been a prominent point in the defendant's argument in this connection that the advance was made on a first class security, but I am bound to disregard it as there is not a tittle of evidence in its support. As bearing to a certain extent on this part of the case I will here deal with the defendant's statement that he only got Rs. 1,700. The balance of Rs. 3,300 the defendant accounts for as follows:—

He says Rs. 2,000 was paid to Luckhinarain: but as to the remaining Rs. 1,300 there has been a departure from the original suggestion. At first it was suggested that Rs. 300 was paid to Aushoo which would have left a balance of Rs. 1,000 for Gunput; later, however, the Rs. 300 dropped to Rs. 200, with a corresponding rise in the amount paid to Gunput, though Sital, who was called by the defendant, adhered to the original figure of Rs. 1,000, his evidence in this respect being consistent with the earlier rather than with the later account suggested by the defendant. Now, as to the Rs. 2,000, it is sworn by Saral that he paid that amount to Luckhinarain, and Sital's testimony is to the same effect. On the other hand Gunput and Aushoo, who were both there and must have seen the payment, if made, deny that it ever was made. As to Rs. 1,100 Gunput swears it was not paid; the defendant declares that it was; while according to Sital it was Rs. 1,000 that was paid to Gunput. Both the defendant and Sital agree in stating that Gunput went in a garry with them from the Registry to Lal Bazar, where change was obtained. This account naturally suggested the question why was it necessary to take Gunput to Lal Bazar for the purpose of changing the notes, seeing that even after the alleged payments to Luckhinarain and Ausboo there were notes to pay the sum Gunput is said to have received whether it was Rs. 1,100 or Rs. 1,000.

[379] Saral's explanation is that Gunput was paid Rs. 1,000 when he got into the garry, but as he was to pay to Sital Rs. 25 and the coachman Rs. 10, Sital suggested that the Rs. 100 should be kept till the change was got. Sital, on the other hand, says that before the garry was driven away no money was given to Gunput, and that the notes were given to Gunput at Lal Bazar. While Gunput was in the box, for some reason or other, doubtless a very good one, no suggestion was made to him in cross-examination that he had gone to Lal Bazar, and it is a curious fact that, though Saral says that he informed his father-in-law of all this before he put in his written statement as guardian ad litem, still there is not a suggestion in the written statement of this alleged iniquitous conduct on the part of Gunput and Luckhinarain.

Mr. Hyde says that it was unnecessary to do more than plead infancy, and that is the explanation he gives.

I do not for a moment suggest that the silence of the written statement is in any sense conclusive, still I think it is a factor to which one may have regard in determining which version should be accepted in this conflict of testimony.

Apart, however, from this, I certainly would place credence in the testimony of Gunput and Aushoo, rather than of Saral and Sital. The last-named struck me as a most unsatisfactory witness, and when I bear in mind the accounts he gave of how Gunput had promised him the Rs. 25, and his mode of giving evidence, I am able to place little (if any) reliance on his statements. While as to Saral, not only did he, in my opinion, practise a deliberate fraud on Luckhinarain in the mode I have already indicated, but he has come here and given an absolutely false account of the part he took in the whole transaction. In a conflict of testimony he is not a witness on whom I would rely, and I decline to accept his account of what occurred. I accordingly hold that the Rs. 2,000 and Rs. 1,100 were not paid as Saral has suggested, and further that the Rs. 60 was paid back. So much for the facts of the case: I next have to consider what result should follow from those facts.

On the part of the defendant it is contended that, notwithstanding the defendant's fraud, infancy is a complete answer both [380] to the claim for personal payment and also to the relief by foreclosure or sale on the mortgage. In support of this contention reliance is placed on Dhanmull v. Ram Chunder Ghose, (1890) I. L.R., 24 Cal., 265, a decision of the Appellate Court by which, of course, I am bound.

It has not been suggested that in relation to this point the Indian differs from English law, and it is perfectly obvious that in England infancy affords a complete answer to that which before the Judicature Acts would have been called an action at law on the contract; and it is equally clear that a decree for personal payment on the contract expressed or implied in a mortgage could not be made against an infant however fraudulent he might be. The liability of a fraudulent infant to a decree for sale or foreclosure is however a perfectly different thing, and it is necessary to examine the case of Dhanmull v. Ram Chunder Ghose to see whether the learned Judges in that case were dealing with anything more than the right to a decree for personal payment against a fraudulent infant. From the report of the case it appears that it was a suit brought to recover the sum of Rs. 13,000 and interest due on a mortgage executed by the defendant on the 26th March 1886. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant at the time of execution represented himself to be of full age, and thereby induced the plaintiff to advance the mortgage money, and he contended that, in the event of the defendant establishing that he was a minor at the date of the mortgage, then his representations amounted to a fraud, and were wilfully made with a view to deceive the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff should in any event be held entitled to recover the money. The prayer of the plaint was for the usual mortgage decree and for a money decree. The defendant pleaded minority, and denied the alleged fraudulent representation.

The case was heard before Mr. Justice NORRIS, who found that the plea of minority was proved, but that the defendant falsely pretended, and allowed other persons in his presence and on his behalf to state to the plaintiff that he was of full age; that such statements were false to the knowledge of the defendant, and operated upon the plaintiff's mind, so as to induce him to [381] advance the money. It was admitted at the Bar that if the plea of minority was established the plaintiff could not be entitled to a mortgage-decree, but it was argued that, if the case of false representations was made out, he was entitled to a money decree.

The learned Judge dismissed the suit, and from that dismissal there was an appeal which was heard and decided by the Chief Justice Sir COMER PETHERAM, Mr. Justice PRINSEP, and Mr. Justice PIGOT, who affirmed the decision of Mr. Justice NORRIS.

Now there can be no doubt that the facts of that case must be taken for all purposes to be the same as those of the present, but that does not necessarily make it conclusive: for it is clear that a case is not a precedent for any proposition that was neither consciously nor unconsciously in the mind of the Court. Now, according to the report of the case, it was admitted at the hearing before Mr. Justice NORRIS that, if the plea of minority was established, the plaintiff could not be entitled to a mortgage-decree. If that be so, it would be reasonable to suppose that both in the Court of First Instance and the Appellate Court the only point that was discussed and made matter of actual decision was whether the plaintiff could get a money decree in spite of the plea of infancy, seeing that the advance had been procured by the infant's fraud. A glance at the cases quoted, and a moment's consideration of the cases left unquoted, distinctly bear out the view that the argument of Counsel and the deliberation and decision of the Courts were limited in the manner I have indicated.

This too is apparent from the judgments that were delivered. For instance the learned Chief Justice says: "No case has been cited before us, nor are we aware of the existence of any, in which a person has been held personally liable to pay a debt contracted by him during his infancy on the ground that he obtained the credit by fraudulent misrepresentations as to his age." Mr. Justice PRINSEP adopts the reasons and conclusions of the Chief Justice. Then, if one turns to the judgment of Mr. Justice PIGOT, the same thing appears. He says: "I think it is clearly established that the defendant was under age when he entered into the contract." Then later, after stating that the suit must fail, he proceeds: "Assuming it to be framed in tort an infant," as Sir F. POLLOCK [382] accurately says, "could not be made liable for what was in truth a breach of contract by framing the action ex delicto. You cannot convert a contract into a tort to enable you to sue an infant." If any doubts were left after reading this passage, it is removed by what appears in the concluding part of the judgment where the learned Judge says:—

"If we as a Court of equity as well as a Court of law were to allow the plaintiff to recover in this suit it would amount to restraining a defendant from setting up the plea of infancy in an action on contract by reason of his having made a fraudulent misrepresentation dans locum contractui; and in no case has this ever been done." It appears to me clear that the learned Judges were simply considering the defendant's personal liability to a money decree, that being the sole question with which they were invited to deal. The high respect I entertain for the learned Judges who decided the case of Dhanmull v. Ram Chunder Ghose wholly precludes me from supposing that they ever intended to deal with the plaintiff's right to foreclosure or sale by virtue of his mortgage—a point on which there has been an undeviating course of decision from the time of Lord COWPER down to the present day, and a point which has been familiarized by the inclusion of Savage v. Foster in the 2nd volume of White and Tudor's leading cases in Equity. I refer to those decisions as being authoritative on this point, as it is apparent from the very case of Dhanmull v. Ram Chunder Ghose that the point is one which falls to be determined by this Court administering principles of equity in accordance with the decisions of English Courts.

No doubt the report of Dhanmull v. Ram Chunder Ghose records Counsel's admission that if the plea of minority were established the plaintiff could not be entitled to a mortgage-decree.

It may be that there was some special circumstances in the case that demanded such an admission, but it is obvious that, however that may be, it has no binding force, and in my opinion the plaintiff's right to a mortgage-decree is res integra so far as that case is concerned.

[383] I have, therefore, to determine whether the defendant can rely on his infancy to the plaintiff's prayer for a mortgage-decree.

I was in the first place referred by the plaintiff to the second case of Ganesh Lala v. Bapu, (1895) I. L. R., 21 Bom., 198, on the authority of which it was contended that the defendant would be bound apart from fraud by virtue of section 115 of the Evidence Act. As, however, I find that there has been fraud, it is unnecessary for me to consider whether the principle there enunciated would govern this case.

There are, however, as I have already mentioned, a number of English cases which clearly establish that, in a Court of Equity, the disability of a party, whether arising from infancy or coverture, cannot be successfully used in defence of fraud, so that, if the Rule of English Equity applies, the defendant cannot avail himself of the plea of infancy. It is unnecessary to do more than refer to a few of the better known of these cases, such as Watts v. Cresswell (9 Vin. Abr. 415: 2 Eq., Cas. Abr. 515) decided by Lord COWPER, who held the Great Seal from 1714 to 1718; Savage v. Foster (2 Wh. & Tud. Eq., Cas. 678); Teynham v. Webb, (1750) 2 Ves. Sen. 198, decided by Lord HARDWICKE in 1750; Evans v. Bicknell, (1801) 6 Ves. 174 (181), decided by Lord Eldon in 1801; Cory v. Gertchen, (1816) 2 Madd., 40; Vaughan v. Vandersteqen, (1854) 2 Drew., 363, Davies v. Hodgson, (1858) 25 Beav , 177 ; In re Lush's Trust, (1869) L. R., 4 Ch , 591 ; and Cahill v. Cahill, (1883) L. R., 8 App., Cas., 420 (434), per Lord BLACKBURN, from which it is apparent that the prinple is one which has prevailed for 180 years, and has met with the approval of the most eminent English Judges. It further has the support of so eminent a text writer as Lord ST. LEONARDS (3 Sugden's Vend. and Purch. 428). Nor is the rule one peculiar to the English Courts, for a reference to Story and Kent will show that it is one recognized and acted on by the Courts of the United [384] States. It is therefore fair to take the rule as an expression of that which is required by the principles of equity, justice and good conscience, and so a rule which should govern decisions of this Court. It may be said, however, that the special circumstances of this case forbid the innovation of the rule, and doubtless it is to that end that it has been more than once repeated in the course of the argument that Luckhinarain was a money-lender and the defendant an unfortunate young man entrapped into the transaction. I am at all times inclined to regard with suspicion this class of argument.

Even a money-lender, if such Luckhinarain was, is not beyond the pale of the law, and even in regard to him the justice of his claim must be judged by the evidence given in the case in which that claim is put forward, and not by any general appeal to the iniquities, real or imaginary, of those who follow his calling.

The Evidence Act prescribes that the judgment of the Court must be based upon facts declared by the Act to be relevant and duly proved, and it would be intolerable that Courts should decide rights upon suspicions unsupported by testimony.

Then, if the conduct and behaviour of the defendant is a matter for consideration, I fear it would be impossible for me to view him in the favourable light in which he has been painted. He might perhaps find apologists for his youthful extravagances and vices, possibly even for the fraud by which he secured the loan; but I think it would be difficult anywhere to find an excuse for his attempt to escape from the consequences of the fraud by the version which he has given this Court of his conduct--a version which I have been wholly unable to accept. Therefore, I confess that the defendant does not appear to me to be a fitting object of that sympathy which I have been invited to extend to him. On the contrary, I see no reason for withholding the application of the rule of equity by reason of those personal matters to which my attention has been called There remains, however, another point taken on the part of the defendant which requires notice.

It is said that the result of the written statement is to convert the action from one on contract into one on tort based on deceit, and that the statute of limitation would afford a complete answer to [386] an action based on deceit. To the argument so stated there would be the obvious answer that it is a misconception to treat the action as one in tort, for it is not and does not purport to be such. The plaintiff's right to succeed, notwithstanding the defendant's infancy, arises from the applicability of a principle of equity, which treats fraud as a bar to the plea of disability. The precise position was this.

The effect of the infancy was that the mortgage was voidable, not void, for that is the result of the decision of this Court by which I clearly am bound whatever my own views may be.

Accepting this as the law, the infant's right to elect whether he should affirm or repudiate the mortgage remained open until he attained his majority, and in this particular case it was not until after the infant attained his majority, which happened in the month of June, that the plaintiff could have known whether the defendant would by his repudiation render reliance on his fraud obligatory on the plaintiff. I may also further point out that even in the written-statement there is merely a plea of infancy, and a submission to the protection of the Court, and no allegation even of such a provisional repudiation as is open to an infant in relation to a voidable transaction.

But apart from this, the position is very clearly expressed by Lord Justice TURNER in Nelson v. Stocker, (1859) 4 De Gex. & J., 458, where he indicates the true question is whether the false representation is such a fraud as will take away the privilege of infancy.

It seems to me, therefore, that the answer to the plea of infancy could properly be introduced under the circumstances of this case by way of replication, to use the phraseology of English pleading, as the plaintiff was not bound to assume in his plaint that it would be necessary for him to rely on the fraud of the infant. In any case, I do not think that art. 95 of the Limitation Act is, on the facts of this case, any answer to the plaintiff's claim.

Under the circumstances, therefore, I hold the plaintiff is entitled to succeed, but while I give her the benefit of the principles of equity, she must take her remedy subject to the qualifications those principles impose.

In the first place I will not allow any interest. Then, as I [386] indicated in the course of the argument, I am not inclined to charge the infant with remuneration paid to Aushootosh Bose, but as it is not clear what part of the Rs. 140 was applied in payment of the expenses, and as the cost of an inquiry on the point would be disproportionate to the result, the simpler plan will be to disallow the whole of the Rs. 140. I understand the plaintiff is willing to accede to this course. The mortgaged property therefore will be a security for the principal advanced after deducting the Rs. 140 and costs, and there will be an account on that footing. There will, therefore, be the usual mortgage decree with interest at 6 per cent. on decree, with the qualification that the plaintiff will not be entitled to recover the principal sum or interest otherwise than out of the mortgaged property. Costs on scale No. 2 including reserved costs.

From this decision, and also from the order giving the plaintiff leave to amend his plaint, the defendant appealed.

Mr. Garth (Mr. Chakravarti with him) for the appellant. Although the power of making amendments under section 53 of the Code of Civil Procedure is discretionary, the power in this case was exercised contrary to the proviso to that section. The conversion of this suit from a suit to enforce a mortgage into a suit for the recovery of money paid upon the footing of a false representation is the conversion of a suit of one character into a suit of another and inconsistent character. As regards the facts of this case my submission is that a mortgage by an infant, like a contract, is void, if the plea of infancy is raised. Luckhinarain deliberately blinded himself to the fact that the defendant was a minor. He must shew that he took all prudent precautions which a man should take. If he cannot, a Court of Equity will not help him. The only question was whether the Registrar would be satisfied or not as to the minority. The plaintiff has failed to prove that Luckhinarain himself was deceived, or took any steps to prevent himself from being deceived. As long as he did not do so he cannot raise the plea of fraud. In this decree we are ordered to pay the money and there is no time fixed for payment. On the facts as given in Dhanmull v. Ram Chunder Ghose, (1890) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 265, there was no misrepresentation.

[387] Sir G. Evans (with him Mr. Dunne and Mr. Sinha) for the Respondent.—This is a case of deliberate fraud by a forged certificate and a false affidavit and would deceive any one. The affidavit was made by a friend and relative of the minor, Hari Babu, who was in the same office with him. The Registrar even was deceived by the certificate, and was satisfied that the boy was over age. He was as a matter of fact within 7 months of attaining his majority. As regards the case of Dhanmull v. Ram Chunder Ghose, (1890) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 265, it is not necessary for this Court now to overrule that case. In that case in the lower Court Counsel gave up all claim under the mortgage, as they thought they would be entitled to a money decree only. The mind of the Chief Justice turned in that case upon whether a money decree could be given against the infant. PIGOT, J., dealt with the case on the same lines. That case has been confined to a narrow point on account of the line taken by Counsel. They cited Ex-parte Unity Joint Stock Mutual Banking Association, (1858) 3 De G. & J., 63, to show it was a debt, but did not cite analogous cases to shew how relief can be given, which is laid down in cases cited by the Judge in the Court below. If the infant is old and cunning enough to carry on a fraud he should be made liable—Watts v. Creswell (9 Vin. Abr. 414). Where fraud is practised by a married woman or an infant the protection thrown around them is taken away; but the Courts of Equity have not carried it so far as to make a money decree against them. A married woman's property is liable to be visited with the consequence of the fraud—Vaughan v. Vanderstegen, (1854) 2 Drew, 363; Sharpe v. Foy, (1868) L. R., 4 Ch. App., 35; Hobday v Peters, (1860) 28 Beav., 351; In re Lush's Trust (1869) L.R., 4 Ch. App, 591 (596,600),. The only objection to a money decree is the question whether it is available against the person. The minor cannot now turn round and say, Luckhinarain ought to have thought the document was a forgery, but if a man has got no money you cannot make [388] an order in a Court of Equity that he shall pay. The case of a married woman is stronger—Cahill v. Cahill, (1883) L R., 8 App. Cal., 420; Raj Coomary Dassee v. Preo Madhub Nundy, (1897) 1 Cal., W. N, 153. It does not matter whether in this case the contract is void or voidable. The minor cannot take advantage of his own fraud.

The following judgments were delivered by the Appellate Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and MACPHERSON and TREVELYAN, JJ.) :—

Maclean, C.J.—On the 14th November 1893 the defendant mortgaged certain property to one Luckhinarain, who has since died, his representative being the plaintiff in the suit, to secure a sum of Rs. 5,000 advanced by him with interest at the rate of 24 per cent. per annum. At the time the mortgage was given the defendant admittedly was a minor, but he would have come of age six or seven months later, if it had not been for an order of the 1st February 1894, which appointed a guardian of the person and property of the infant, the effect of which was to extend the period of minority to the age of 21. On the 20th February 1895 Luckhinarain, the mortgagee, instituted this suit to enforce his mortgage, and on the 17th April 1895 a written statement was put in by the guardian of the infant, and that written statement disclosed the fact that the defendant was an infant at the date of the mortgage in question. The case came on for trial, and on the 6th July 1897, as I understand, on the suggestion of the learned Judge himself, a question arose as to the amendment of the pleadings, it being suggested that if it turned out that at the date of the mortgage the defendant was an infant the plaintiff should be allowed to raise an alternative case to the effect that Luckhinarain had been induced to part with his money upon the fraudulent representation of the infant defendant. Mr. Justice JENKINS allowed the application for the amendment, and one of the points we have to decide is whether that leave was or was not properly granted. The case proceeded and the learned Judge found as a fact that the defendant was a minor at the date of this mortgage, that he represented and represented falsely to Luckhinarain, the intending mortgagee, that he was of age, and that the [389] advance was made on the faith of that representation, and although the Judge in the Court below did not make a personal decree against the defendant for the repayment of the money advanced, he gave the plaintiff an ordinary mortgage decree. The defendant appeals from that decision.

The first point we have to consider is as to whether the learned Judge in the Court below was right in allowing the amendment which enabled the plaintiff to set up his alternative case. This point depends upon the construction of certain sections of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is urged by Mr. Garth for the appellant that, although the power of making amendments is discretionary under section 53 of the Code, the power in this case was exercised contrary to the proviso to that section. That proviso says this: "Provided that a plaint cannot be altered so as to convert a suit of one character into a suit of another and inconsistent character."

It is urged by the appellant that the conversion of this suit from a suit to enforce a mortgage into a suit for the recovery of money paid upon the footing of a false representation, is the conversion of a suit of one character into a suit of another and inconsistent character. No doubt, in one sense, the original character of the suit was to enforce the mortgage, but the object of the suit was, after all, to recover the money. We must read the proviso with other sections of the Code, and particularly with sections 42 and 45. Section 42 says: "Every suit shall, as far as practicable, be so framed as to afford ground for a final decision upon the subjects in dispute, and so as to prevent further litigation concerning them," while section 45 says: "Subject to the rules contained in chapter II and in section 44, the plaintiff may unite in the same suit several causes of action against the same defendant or the same defendants jointly." It seems to me that if the argument of the appellant were to prevail, it would virtually prevent an alternative case, which arises out of, and is immediately connected with, the same transaction, from ever being raised in the same suit I do not think, looking at the sections of the Code I have referred to, that that was the intention of the [390] Legislature, nor do I think that the alternative claim, which is set up, is inconsistent with the character of the claim originally made within the meaning of the proviso in question. Reading sections 42 and 45 of the Code, the intention of the Legislature was that, as far as possible, all matters in dispute between the parties relating to the same transaction should be disposed of in the same suit, and I do not think that the proviso to section 53 was intended to interfere with this. I therefore think that Mr. Justice JENKINS was perfectly right in allowing, in the manner he did, the amendment of the plaint.

Now I pass to the facts of the case, and in my opinion the plaintiff has succeeded in substantiating his story. The evidence shows that the defendant was desirous of raising money. He was a young man, apparently of dissolute habits, and being in want of money he approached Luckhinarain, whom for this purpose I will regard as a professional money-lender. I think the evidence shows that he went to him, and asked for the loan in question. Luckhinarain was suspicious as to the defendant's age, whereupon the defendant then and there produced an affidavit of a relative, which deposed to the date of his birth, and which, if true, would show that he was of age. He also produced what purported to be a certificate of the death of his father. The evidence shows to my mind that copies of these documents were made, and that the defendant took away the originals. The copies were then sent to the pleader who has given evidence in the case. The mortgage was settled by him, the mortgage was prepared, and ultimately, the parties concerned, the intending mortgagee, the pleader, the defendant and one or two others, went to the Registrar at Sealdah to have the transaction completed. There, according to my view of the evidence, the Registrar objected, entertaining a doubt as to whether the defendant was of age, and was not satisfied with the affidavit which had been produced. The evidence shows that Hari Mitter who was, to use the defendant's own language, his "boon companion," was sent to fetch the certificate, that he fetched the certificate, that upon that the Registrar was satisfied, the mortgage was executed, and the money handed over to the defendant. I think these facts have been made out by the plaintiff [391] It has been urged that the appearance of the defendant was such as would induce any prudent man about to advance him money to hesitate doing so, his appearance being, it is suggested, such as to indicate clearly that he was a minor. In these cases, the appearance of the minor is a matter of considerable importance; but in the present case there is no evidence, or practically no evidence, upon this point one way or the other, so I dismiss that as an element in this particular case.

That being the history of the case, what we have to consider is did the defendant fraudulently represent to Luckhinarain, the intending mortgagee, that he was of age, and did Luckhinarain rely and act upon that representation? I may here remark that Mr. Justice JENKINS regarded the evidence of the defendant as very unsatisfactory evidence, upon which he could place no reliance. It is clear to my mind upon the evidence that the defendant produced his affidavit and produced his certificate, the affidavit being false and the certificate a forgery, with the express object of inducing Luckhinarain to advance the money, that Luckhinarain did advance the money upon the faith of the representation, which was certainly made, and which was certainly false, that the defendant was of full age.

It has been urged by Mr. Garth that a prudent man would have made further inquiries before advancing the money, and would not have been satisfied either with the affidavit or with the certificate. It occurs to one at once to inquire what further inquiries could he have made.

The mother of the defendant, even if she had been accessible, would have been the last person to whom either the defendant or Luckhinarain would have been likely to apply for any information; but the mother was a purdanashin lady, and was not accessible to Luckhinarain for the purpose of his making inquiries from her. It is also suggested that he might have gone to the mother's house and made inquiries of the servants there: but I am quite unable to accede to this suggestion. It is said that a minute examination of the certificate would have shown that it was a clumsy forgery: but it scarcely lies in the mouth of the defendant to say that. It must be borne [392] in mind that the certificate deceived the Registrar, who had no interest whatever in the transaction.

I am not prepared to accede to the contention urged by Mr. Garth that if Luckhinarain had made further inquiries he would have ascertained that the representation made was untrue, for, in my judgment, if a person makes a positive assertion, knowing it to be false, he cannot relieve himself of the liability arising from that false assertion by saying that the person to whom it was made need not have relied, or ought not to have relied, upon it. If he made the representation, and he afterwards alleges that the person to whom it was made did not rely upon it, he ought to show that the representation was not, in point of fact, relied upon.

I see no reason then, upon the question of fact involved in this case, to differ from the conclusion at which Mr. Justice JENKINS has arrived.

But then it is urged that even if, in point of fact, the defendant did make this fraudulent representation, upon the faith of which Luckhinarain parted with his money, seeing that at the time he was an infant, he is not liable to Luckhinarain in the present suit. There is not, so far as I can discover, any distinction betweeen the law in India and the law in England upon this subject. In my judgment, there is a current of cases decided in the Courts of Equity in England, dating back for 150 years or more, which show that, in Equity, an infant cannot take advantage of his own fraud. I think it is established that in cases of fraud by an infant the protection which the law throws around him is taken away: in other words, that the defence of infancy cannot be successfully pleaded in defence of a fraud perpetrated by the infant. I do not propose to go in detail through the various cases which have been cited; they are all referred to in the judgment of Mr. Justice JENKINS, and in my opinion they establish the proposition for which the respondent contends.

There is, however, one case, the case of Nelson v. Stocker, (1859) 4 De Gex & J., 458, which is a decision of the Court of Appeal in England, to which I will [393] refer. The judgment is that of Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE and Lord Justice TURNER. The headnote is this: "A young man of the age of seventeen, previous to his marriage with a woman possessed of personal property, executed a marriage settlement, by which he covenanted to pay £1,000 to the trustee. Before executing it, being asked by the solicitor of the intended wife whether he was of age, he said he believed he was. The intended wife, however, knew that he was not. After the marriage he received the wife's personal estate, and after her death refused to pay the £1,000. Held, reversing the decision of the Court below, that, as the wife was not misled by the misappropriation, the settlement was not binding upon the husband when he came of age."

But it is clear from passages in the judgment of Lord Justice TURNER—and Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE did not differ from him—that, if a false representation had been made and acted on, the person to whom it was made, not knowing that it was false, the liability of the defendant, although at the time he entered into the covenant he was a minor, to pay the £1,000 would have been undoubted. The Vice-Chancellor had made a decree for the payment of the money, holding that the representation was a false representation. Although the Court of appeal differed from the Court below upon the question of fact, it is, I think, apparent from Lord Justice TURNER'S observations (4 De Gex. & J. at pp. 464, 465) that he did not differ from the Vice-Chancellor upon his view of the law. He says: "If the case had depended simply upon the point of the defendant having represented himself to be of age, when he was not of age, I should have felt no doubt about it." He can only mean by that that, if the representation had been made out, he would have had no doubt as to the liability of the defendant, although he was an infant at the time he entered into the covenant. Lord Justice TURNER then goes on: "It is too much to call upon the Court to believe that this defendant could really have thought himself to be of age at the date of the settlement when he was under eighteen years of age, and, if he did not so think, the representation he made to the solicitor was false and fraudulent. Infants are no more entitled than adults [394] are to gain benefits to themselves by fraud, and had the case therefore depended upon this point alone I should have agreed most fully with the decision of the Vice-Chancellor." Now the decision of the Vice-Chancellor was a personal order against the defendant for payment of £1,000. Then the Lord Justice TURNER goes on to say, and, if I may respectfully say so, I entirely agree with him: "The law has for the wisest reasons thrown around infants a protection against acts done by them during their infancy, and the policy of the law cannot be maintained if this privilege of infancy be allowed to be broken in upon on slight and insufficient grounds. If the contracts of infants with persons, who know them to be under age, are held to be binding upon the ground that the infants represented themselves to be of age, there will hardly be a case in which the plea of infancy will be of any effect, and the door will be open to all the frauds against infants, which the law was intended to protect them from." But he goes on to say: "The privilege of infancy is a legal privilege. On the one hand, it cannot be used by infants for the purposes of fraud. On the other hand, it cannot, I think, be allowed to be infringed upon by persons who, knowing of the infancy, must be taken also to know of the legal consequences which attach to it." In my opinion the observations of Lord Justice TURNER in the case of Nelson v. Stocker are very pertinent to the present case.

If in the present case, upon the facts, I had been satisfied that Luckhinarain, when he advanced this money, knew that, notwithstanding the affidavit and notwithstanding the certificate, the defendant was not of age, then I agree that he could not come into a Court administering Equity and seek successfully to make the defendant liable. But in this case, upon the facts, I conclude that Luckhinarain was deceived, and deceived by the course of conduct which the defendant adopted. I think the cases establish that, in a case like the present, the defendant, though at the time when he entered into the contract he was an infant, is not entitled to take any advantage resulting from his own fraud.

It has been strongly urged before us that the case decided by this Court some years ago, Dhanmull v. Ram Chunder [395] Ghose, (1890) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 265, but only recently reported * is opposed to the view we take. As regards that case, I need only remark that what the Court decided there was that where an infant obtained a loan upon the representation (which he knew to be false) that he was of age, no suit to recover the money could be maintained against him, there being no obligation binding upon the infant which could be enforced by action upon the contract, either in law or in equity, but that the defendant should not be allowed costs in either Court.

That case only dealt with the personal liability of the fraudulent infant. In the case before us, the learned Judge in the Court below has not made a personal decree against the defendant for payment of the money, but has made an ordinary mortgage decree, and there is no cross-objection by the respondent as to his not having been granted a personal money decree against the defendant. Speaking for myself, I am by no means satisfied that that case, (1890) I. L. R, 24 Cal., 265, was rightly decided.

But the decree here, as I pointed out, is a decree against the property which was pledged by the infant, and which has got into the hands of the mortgagee; the decree only goes to that, and therefore, in that respect, it is distinguishable from the case of Dhanmull v. Ram Chunder Ghose, (1890) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 265.

I have now, I think, dealt with the various points which have been urged before us. I have dealt with the facts of the case and the law which to my mind is applicable to them. If, in this case, a money decree for personal payment had been granted, and we had differed from the view expressed in the case above mentioned, (1890) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 265, it would have been necessary to refer the case to a Full Bench; but inasmuch as there is the distinction I have pointed out in the decree in this case, and the point, which was decided in the other, no necessity arises for the adoption of that course. I think that Mr. Justice JENKINS was right and the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

[396] Macpherson, J.—I agree on all the points which have been disposed of by the Chief Justice.

Trevelyan, J.—I also agree, and I think that if the respondent had objected to there not having been a personal decree, we should, having regard to the arguments which have been placed before us, have had to refer the question to a Full Bench.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 6th June, 1887.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE TOTTENHAM AND MR. JUSTICE NORRIS.

Modhusudun Nath Tewari............Defendant

versus

Hiru Ram Pandey and others............Plaintiffs.

Chota Nagpore Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act (Bengal Act I of 1879), section 124—Sale in execution of a decree for rent—Jagir tenure, Incidents of—Right, title and interest of registered "ilakadar"—Joint-holder. *

Where a suit was brought for the recovery of arrears of rent due in respect of a jagir tenure, the joint property of four brothers, governed by the Mitakshara law, the arrears having accrued during the lifetime of their father, and a decree was obtained against the eldest brother, who was the sole registered ilakadar, or person held responsible in the zemindar's book, it was held, that the decree related to the arrears due in respect of the whole tenure and not merely of the judgment-debtor's individual interest, and that a sale of his right, title and interest under section 124 of Bengal Act I of 1879 would, under the circumstances of the case and by the incidents attaching to such tenure, include the right, title and interest of any person claiming jointly with him, and whose interest was inseparably united with his.

THE plaintiffs alleged that they, together with their brother Dukhi Ram and their father, held the village of Kulherpat jointly till 1932 Sumbut, when it was divided among them in [397] equal shares. The family was governed by the Mitakshara law. On the 10th January 1882 the village was sold under section 124 of Bengal Act I of 1879, in execution of a decree for arrears of rent and cesses, and purchased by one Rachia Sahu, who re-sold it to the defendant. After the defendant obtained possession the plaintiff's brother Dukhi Ram died without leaving heirs other than the plaintiffs. The present plaintiffs sued to recover possession of 12 annas of the village on the plea that the sale held under section 124 of Bengal Act I of 1879 only passed the four annas share of the plaintiff Hiru Ram, who was the eldest brother, against whom the decree had been obtained. The Subordinate Judge held that there had been no partition, and that as the decree was for the rent due from the father of Hiru Ram, whom he succeeded as manager, being the eldest son, the whole interest in the tenure had passed by the sale. The defendant having appealed against this decision it was set aside by the Judicial Commissioner. Against the decree of the Judicial Commissioner the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2007 of 1886, against the decree of F. Cowley, Esq., Officiating Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur, dated the 27th of August 1886, reversing the decree of A. W. Mackie, Esq., Assistant Commissioner and Subordinate Judge of Lohardugga, dated the 20th of January 1886.

Mr. Woodroffe, Mr. C. Gregory, and Babu Surendra Nath Roy, appeared for the Appellant.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose, Babu Jogesh Chunder Dey, and Babu Golap Chunder Sarkar, were for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Tottenham and Norris, JJ.) was as follows:--

We are of opinion that this appeal must be allowed, and that the Court of First Instance was right in dismissing the suit.

It was brought to recover 12 annas of a jagir named Kulherpat, possession of the whole of which has come into the hands of the defendant by transfer from an auction-purchaser under a decree for arrears of rent. It is alleged that the jagir when the sale took place was the joint property of four brothers, and that nothing passed by that sale beyond the right, title and interest of one of the brothers, Hiru Ram Pandey, against whom only the rent decree had been obtained. The plaintiffs sue to get back the other three equal shares.

It appears that the jagir is one governed by the provisions of [398] Bengal Act I of 1879—the Chota Nagpur Landlord and Tenant Act; that no sale of the tenure itself could take place under a decree for arrears; but that with the consent of the Commissioner the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor could be and was sold.

The Lower Appellate Court thought it must be held that the consent of the Commissioner was limited to the sale of the individual right, title and interest of Hiru Ram, and that the sale conveyed nothing more. We think that the Commissioner's sanction under section 124 must be held to apply to all the right, title and interest represented by the judgment-debtor Hiru Ram in the decree passed against him. There is no question as to his having been sued as representing the full ownership of the jagir. The arrears claimed had accrued in the lifetime of the father of the four brothers, and the suit was brought against the eldest of the brothers who held possession as manager, and who was the sole registered ilakadar or person held responsible in the zemindary books. The decree, undoubtedly, related to the arrears due in respect of the whole tenure, and the judgment-debtor was undoubtedly sued as being in possession of the whole tenure. His right, title and interest sold would, under the circumstances of the case, and by the incidents attaching to such tenures in Chota Nagpur, include the right, title and interest of any person claiming such jointly with him, and inseparably united with his own.

Many authorities have been cited before us on either side in support of the opposite views taken by the parties of what really passed by the sale. But it is enough to say that the circumstances of the particular case must determine this question, and that we are satisfied that in this case the sale as sanctioned by the Commissioner disposed of the whole right, title and interest represented by Hiru Ram.

The decree of the Lower Appellate Court is, therefore, set aside, and that of the first Court must be restored with costs.

Appeal allowed.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE.

[399] The 20th April, 1892.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE HILL.

Pertab Udai Nath Sahi Dev............Plaintiff

versus

Pardhan Mokand Sing and others............Defendants.

Chota Nagpore Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act (Bengal Act I of 1879), section 124—Jagir and under-tenures—Decree for arrears of rent.

No decree for arrears of rent can be made against any person other than the actual tenant, or some one who may be security for him, and consequently there can be no decree for rent against persons holding subordinate interests in a jagir tenure which have been created by the jagirdar.

THIS was a suit brought under the provisions of Bengal Act I of 1879 for the recovery of arrears of rent and cesses due in respect of a jagir tenure comprising the entire pergunnah of Sisia in the district of Lohardugga. The tenure was alleged to have been granted by the father of the plaintiff, the Maharaja of Chota Nagpur, to an ancestor of the first defendant, on condition of his performing the duties of keeping watch in the gurh. The grant was by its terms putra putradik, that is limited to the grantee and the heirs male of his body, on failure of which the jagir would revert to the grantor free of all incumbrances. It was therefore unalienable, and could under the terms of section 124 of Bengal Act I of 1879 be sold in execution of a decree. But it was alleged that the first defendant had nevertheless divested himself of the whole of his estate by the creation of numerous sub-tenures, which the plaintiff declined to recognize. The name of the first defendant, therefore, was alone registered in the Maharaja's sherista, and it was alleged that the numerous shikmidars, mokurraridars, and zuripeshgidars were only made parties to the suit in conformity with certain rules framed by the Commissioner of Chota Nagpur for the execution of decrees under section 124 of Bengal Act I of 1879. The first Court had given the plaintiff a decree against the first defendant only, and it was now sought in appeal to obtain decrees against the remaining defendants.

[400] Mr. W. R. Donogh and Babu B. M. Dass for the Appellant.

Babu Jogendra Chundra Ghose for the Respondents.

* Appeal from Original Decree No. 296 of 1890, against the decree of P. H. O'Brien, Esq., Assistant Commissioner of Ranchi, dated the 11th of June 1890.

The judgment of the Court (Prinsep and Hill, JJ.) was as follows:—

This is a suit for arrears of rent brought against the proprietor of a jagir, and together with him are included as defendants various persons said to have subordinate interests in that property created by the jagirdar.

An ex parte decree was passed against the jagirdar; some of the other defendants appeared and objected to any claim as against them, but no questions relating to these defendants have been considered, nor have these defendants been made liable under the decree.

The plaintiff, not being satisfied with the ex parte decree against the actual tenant, has appealed to this Court, asking that the tenants of the jagirdar who have been made parties to this case should also be made liable under the decree, in order that their interests might be sold at the same time as the jagir of the actual tenant. It has been stated that this is in accordance with the practice in Chota Nagpur, and, as authority, a circular issued by the Commissioner of Chota Nagpur has been read before us. The tenure in question, it is stated by the learned Counsel for the appellant, is one of the nature described in section 124 of Bengal Act I of 1879—the Chota Nagpur Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act. We cannot conceive on what principle any person other than the tenant himself or one who may be security for him can be made liable under a decree for arrears of rent. The rules cited before us have not the force of law, and we may observe that it does not appear that they were so intended as they are headed, "Rules issued for the guidance of officers subordinate to the Commissioner," whose signature they bear. It is unnecessary for us to express any opinion regarding the mtaters stated in those rules. It is sufficient to say for the purposes of this appeal that no decree in this suit can be passed except against the actual tenant, defendant No. 1; and we may add that section 121 does not contemplate a general [401] sanction for sale of the right and title of any person in the particular under-tenure, but seems to require special orders for the sale of the right and title in any such tenure in each particular case. That is a matter which has not arisen in the present stage of the case, because it may be that, in execution of the decree, the judgment-debtor will pay the amount due and so avoid any sale in execution. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 19th March, 1897.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE SALE.

Ramjibun Serowgy............Plaintiff

Oghore Nath Chatterjee............Defendant.*

Evidence Act (I of 1872), section 92, prov. 3—Parol evidence qualifying an engagement in a written document—Admissibility of such evidence—Reservation of question as to the admissibility of evidence.

The proper meaning of proviso 3 to section 92 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) is that a contemporaneous oral agreement, to the effect that a written contract was to be of no force or effect, and that it was to impose no obligation at all until the happening of a certain event, may be proved. An oral agreement purporting to provide that the promise to pay on demand in a promissory note, though absolute in its terms, was not to be enforceable by suit until the happening of a particular event, i.e., that the legal obligation to perform the promise was to be postponed, is not such an agreement as falls within the proviso 3 to section 92 of the Evidence Act.

Jugatanund Misser v. Nerghan Singh, (1880) I.L.R., 6 Cal., 433, and Cohen v. Bank of Bengal, (1880) I.L.R., 2 All., 598, followed.

Questions as to the admissibility of evidence should be decided as they arise, and should not be reserved until judgment in the case is given.

Jadu Rai v. Bhobotaran Nundy, (1889) I.L.R., 17 Cal., 173, followed.

THE facts of the case appear sufficiently from the judgment.

[402] Mr. R. Mitter for the Plaintiff.

Mr. A. M. Dunne for the Defendant.

Sale, J.—The point which is raised in this case has been elaborately argued, but I think it would be of no advantage if I took further time to consider the arguments, because it seems to me that the authorities, both English and Indian, are pretty clear. The claim in this suit is based on a promissory note executed by the defendant, under the terms of which there is an absolute engagement on the part of the defendant to pay on demand the sum of Rs. 7,000.

The defendant admits the execution of the note, and admits consideration for it, and the only defence is that which is set up in the 4th paragraph of his written statement. That paragraph runs as follows:—

"That in the year 1895 a settlement of accounts was come to between the plaintiff and the defendant, and it was thereupon agreed between them that the said hundis should be cancelled, and that the defendant should pay the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 4,000 in cash and give him a promissory note for the sum of Rs. 7,000 in full discharge of all his claims against the defendant in respect of the said hundis and of all other claims against the defendant up to that; and it was further agreed between the plaintiff and the defendant that the plaintiff should not bring any suit to enforce payment of the said promissory note until the defendant's share in the compensation money awarded in the Land Acquisition case No. 181 of 1892 in the Court of the District Judge of 24-Pergunnahs should be received by him."

* Original Civil Suit No. 307 of 1896.

The question is whether evidence in proof of the alleged contemporaneous oral agreement set up in that paragraph of the written statement is admissible, having regard to the terms of section 92 of the Evidence Act.

It was suggested on the part of the defendant that the more convenient if not the right course would be to admit the evidence in the first instance, reserving the question of law as to its admissibility until the final judgment in the case. No doubt that course has advantages and is a proper enough course to follow [403] in certain cases, but having regard to the observations of the Appeal Court in the case of Jadu Rai v. Bholotaran Nundy, (1889) I.L R., 17 Cal., 173, I do not think that course is open to me in the present instance.

Their Lordships expressed the view that questions as to admissibility of evidence should be determined as they arise, and the particular question as to which that opinion was expressed was a question under section 92 of the Evidence Act. It seems to me therefore I ought to proceed to determine the question of law which has now been raised.

The oral agreement which is set up in the 4th para. of the written statement, and which is sought to be proved for the purpose of limiting the defendant's liability under the promissory note, must, it seems to me, be read in one of two ways. Either it must be read in the literal sense of the words, as constituting an undertaking on the part of the plaintiff not to enforce the note by suit until the happening of a certain event, or else it must be read as meaning that the legal obligation of payment was to be postponed to, or made conditional upon, the happening of a certain event. In whichever sense the words are read, the agreement appears to me to have the effect of varying the terms of the contract as contained in the promissory note, and I think the result is the same whether the section be read in the light of the English cases which have been cited, or whether it be construed apart from those authorities.

Under the promissory note the engagement is an absolute engagement to pay on demand. The defendant seeks to set up a contemporaneous oral agreement, the effect of which is to qualify or restrict that engagement.

The case of Mosley v Hanford, (1830) 10 B. & C., 729, is clear authority to the effect that in England the evidence of such an oral agreement would be inadmissible. In that case, which was a suit on a promissory note payable on demand, the defendant set up a stipulation that it was to be paid on the sellers giving up [404] possession of certain premises sold to him. TENTERDEN, C.J., regarded the stipulation as having the effect of providing that the promissory note was not to be put in suit till a given event happened, and he held that the evidence of such an agreement was inadmissible.

There are numerous other English authorities to the same effect to which I need not refer, inasmuch as the argument for the defendant is not so much that under the English law the evidence is admissible, but that proviso 3 to section 92 of the Evidence Act has the effect of altering the English law.

Proviso 3 is as follows :—

"The existence of any separate oral agreement constituting a condition precedent to the attaching of any obligation under any such contract, grant or disposition of property, may be proved."

What Mr. Dunne contends is that the general law laid down by section 92, viz., that no contemporaneous oral agreement can be proved to vary the terms of a written contract, is qualified by proviso 3 to this extent, that the terms of a written contract may be varied by proof of a contemporaneous agreement if the effect of such agreement is to postpone a certain obligation under the contract, or to make it conditional upon the happening of a certain event. I am of opinion that this is not the meaning of the proviso. I do not think it can be read as saying that something may be done under certain circumstances, which section 92 says cannot be done. I do not think that it was intended by proviso 3 to permit the terms of a written contract to be varied by a contemporaneous oral agreement; but having regard to the illustrations (b) and (j), I think the proper meaning of proviso 3 is that a contemporaneous oral agreement to the effect that a written contract was to be of no force or effect at all, and that it was to impose no obligation at all until the happening of a certain event, may be proved.

Placing that construction on proviso 3 brings it into general harmony with the terms of the section, and I think this view of the proviso finds support in the opinion expressed by GARTH, C.J., in [405] the case of Jugatanund Misser v. Nerghan Singh, (1880) I. L. R., 6 Cal, 433, and also in the opinion expressed by Mr. Justice STRAIGHT in the case of Cohen v. Bank of Bengal, (1880) I. L. R., 2 All., 598. It is to be observed, moreover, that Mr. Justice SPANKIE, who considered that the evidence of the oral agreement sought to be proved in that case was admissible under the proviso, proceeded upon the view that such agreement did not vary the terms of the written contract on which the suit was based.

Now, in the present instance, the oral agreement sought to be proved does not provide that the promissory note was to have no force or effect until the happening of the particular event mentioned, but it purports to provide that the promise to pay on demand, though absolute in its terms, was not to be enforceable by suit until the happening of that event, or, in other words, that the legal obligation to perform the promise was to be postponed. I think it clear that such an agreement does not fall within proviso 3 of section 92, and that being so, the defence fails, and there must be a decree in favour of the plaintiff for Rs. 7,000, with interest at 6 per cent. from date of the note to the date of decree with costs on scale 2 and interest on decree.

In any case she is entitled to make a disposition of the husband's property in favour of the idol under the Hindu law, particularly as it was her husband's wish that she should do so.

Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee, for the Respondent.—No gift can be made by a Hindu either directly or through the intervention of trustees to a person, (and an idol is a juridical person), unless he was in existence at the time the gift took effect. Tagore v. Tagore, (1872) 9 B. L. R., 377: L. R., I. A., Sup. Vol., 47. An idol cannot be said to have juridical existence, unless it has been consecrated by the appropriate ceremony performed and mantra pronounced. See Doorga Proshad Dass v. Sheo Proshad Pandah, (1880) 7 C. L. R., 278. A Hindu may leave authority to another to appoint his property in favour of a third person, but the person in whose favour the appointment is to be made must be in existence at the time of the Hindu's death. See Bai Motivahoo v. Bai Mamoobai (1897) I L R, 21 Bom., 709: L.R., 24 I.A., 93. It is clear on all the authorities that a Hindu widow cannot dedicate the whole of her husband's property to idols to the detriment of his heirs.

Babu Saroda Charan Mitter in reply.

The judgment of the High Court (Macpherson and Wilkins, JJ.) was as follows:—

[407] The appellant, in order to succeed in his suit, must show that there has been a valid gift or dedication of the property to the idol, and that he is entitled to be the shebait

* Appeal from Original Decree No. 112 of 1896, against the decree of Babu Kaliprosunno Mukerjee, Subordinate Judge of Dinagepur, dated the 19th of March 1896.

Behari Lal Boral, who was the former owner of the property, made a will on the 17th Bysak 1280. In it he expressed his intention to establish the service of an idol, to construct a temple, and to appoint his wife Atarmoni to be the shebait. In the event of his being unable to effect this, he provided that she shall, by virtue of his will and in the exercise of powers equal to his own, establish the service of an idol, and by making a will in favour of it manage the properties, construct a temple, and perform the sheba. Then there are certain provisions relating to the management and restricting alienation, and authorising her to appoint another person to be the shebait. The will concludes by providing that if Atarmoni died before doing those acts, the heirs of his spiritual preceptor and his family priest and his heirs should maintain the sheba and manage the properties.

On the 19th Bhadra 1280 he executed an anumatipatro. This refers to the will and its provisions, and authorises Atarmoni to adopt one to five sons in succession. It provides that during her lifetime she should possess and manage the properties left by him; that on her death the dattaka son should be the shebait, and that if he died unmarried his spiritual preceptor and his priest with their sons, grandsons, &c., in succession, should be the shebaits, and as such possess the properties and perform the shebas. Behari Lal died without making any further disposition of his property, and at the time of his death there was no idol in existence. Atarmoni did not take out probate of her husband's will, and in the ordinary course of succession she would as his widow and heiress take his estate. In 1875 she established an idol, and in 1883 she adopted a son who died soon after the adoption. Atarmoni died in 1887, having made a will by which she appointed the appellant to be the shebait. The respondent is the brother of the adopted son.

We agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that Behari Lal made no devise of his property to his widow or to the idol, and that his widow succeeded as his heiress. Reading together [408] the will and the anumatipatro it could at the most be said he gave a life-estate to his widow with power to make a gift to an idol to be established by her, or that he appointed her executrix with a similar power. It does not seem to us to matter much which view is taken. If there was a gift to the idol it was bad because there was no idol in existence at the time of his death, if there was a power to make such a gift the power was ineffective, because, on the authority of Bai Motivahoo v. Bai Mamoobai (1897) I. L. R., 21 Bom., 709: L. R., 24 I. A., 93, we think that the power must be to convey to a person who was in existence either actually or in contemplation of law at the death of the testator, and the idol to which the dedication is said to have been made was not then in existence.

We are unable to agree with the learned Vakil for the appellant that the idol was in existence in contemplation of law. The deity, no doubt, is always in existence, but there could be no gift to the deity as such, and there was no personification of the deity, to whom the gift could have been made or who was capable of taking it. We must hold, therefore, that there was no valid gift or dedication to this idol either by Behari Lal directly or by his widow under the powers conferred upon her by the will.

It is argued that, assuming there was an intestacy, and that Atarmoni succeeded as her husband's heiress, the gift of the whole of the property to the idol would still be good because it was made in accordance with the well expressed wish and intention of her husband. But Atarmoni adopted a son under her husband's authority and the adoption related back to the time of her husband's death. On the adoption the widow was divested and the adopted son took. Even assuming that she kept the life-estate she had no power to make a gift which would enure after her death. We may observe also that the anumatipatro in effect revoked the power of appointing a shebait conferred on her by the will. An adoption being made, the succession to the shebaitship was regulated. In our opinion the appellant cannot in any view of the case succeed, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

B. D. B. Appeal dismissed.

But the Full Bench in Bhupati Nath Smrititirtha v. Ram Lal Maitra (1909) 37 Cal. 128 overruled these cases, holding that "the principle of Hindu Law which invalidates a gift other than to a sentient being capable of acquiring it, does not apply to a bequest to trustees for the establishment of an image and the worship of a Hindu deity after the testator's death, nor does it make such a bequest void."]

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), section 22—Assignment pendente lite—Substitution of assignees as plaintiffs.

In a suit instituted within the period prescribed by the law of limitation, the plaintiff assigned over his interest, and the assignees were substituted on the record in the place of the original plaintiff after the said period had expired.

Held, that under section 22 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) the suit was barred by limitation. Suput Singh v. Imrit Tewari, (1880) I. L. R., 5 Cal., 720., distinguished.

THE facts of this case appear sufficiently from the judgment of the High Court.

* Appeals from Original Decrees Nos. 366 and 388 of 1895, against the decree of Babu Boroda Prosanna Shome, Subordinate Judge of Patna, dated the 26th of August 1895.

The judgment of the High Court (Trevelyan and Stevens, JJ.) was as follows:—

This suit was brought on the 4th September 1894 by Deonath Sahay for the purpose of enforcing a mortgage which had [410] been executed in the name of one Ganesh Dutt Singh whose servant he was. Pending the suit Deonath Sahay transferred his interest to Amrit Singh and Sri Kishen Singh, who by an order, dated the 17th April 1895, to which we shall hereafter refer, were substituted in his place as plaintiffs.

The main defence in the Court below was that the mortgage was not a genuine transaction, and therefore could not be sued upon.

We have heard the evidence on which the learned Judge decided the case and we have no reason whatever to differ from his conclusion. He found that the mortgage was a genuine one, and that Deonath Sahay was the beneficial owner thereof. A certain number of observations are capable of being made with regard to the evidence, but we think they have been fairly met.

The learned Judge had the opportunity of seeing the witnesses, and it is impossible for us to say that there is any error in his decision. We are not even prepared to say that if we were trying this case as a Court of First Instance we would come to a different conclusion.

Another question, which is a more serious one, has been argued before us. It is contended that the suit is barred by limitation. This defence was not taken in the Court below. But that circumstance does not in any way permit us to exclude it from our consideration. Section 4 of the Limitation Act provides that every suit which is instituted after the period of limitation prescribed therefor shall be dismissed, although limitation has not been set up as a defence. If a suit is barred by limitation it is the duty of the Court to dismiss it. Therefore, as the question is raised in the memorandum of appeal before us, we must determine whether the lower Court was right in not dismissing this suit.

There is no doubt that as originally instituted the suit was not barred by limitation. The question is whether, as now constituted, the defence of limitation is not fatal to it. The suit was brought just within twelve years of the due date. Having regard to the decision of a Full Bench of this Court [411] in the case of Girwar Singh v. Thakur Narain Singh, (1887) I. L. R., 14 Cal., 730, it is admitted that this case is governed by article 132 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act. Therefore twelve years is the period applicable. As we have said Amrit Singh and Sri Kishen Singh were made plaintiffs on the 17th April 1895, it is necessary for us to see what the order then made was. The whole question depends, in our opinion, on the terms of that order.

On the 1st April 1895, Amrit Singh and Sri Kishen Singh filed a petition saying that the plaintiff had sold his entire right and interest in the amount in suit for 8,000 rupees to them; that he has no connection with the suit and no right to take measures under it, and they asked that by striking off the name of the original plaintiff Deonath Sahay their names may be brought in the category of the plaintiffs, and that all the proceedings in the suit may be held in their presence from the date of the petition. On the same day Deonath Sahay filed a petition consenting to the order asked for. On the 7th April 1895 the order was made and is recorded in the order sheet as follows: "No objection being made to-day, let the purchasers' names be substituted vice the original plaintiff, and that the case do proceed. In register of suits note is to be made accordingly." The alteration made in the heading of the plaint is as follows: "Under an order dated the 17th April 1895 Sri Kishen Singh alias Hazoori Singh, son of Rup Narain Singh, deceased, inhabitant of mohallah Andarkila, one of the mohallahs of Behar, and Amrit Singh, son of Meherban Singh, deceased, inhabitant of mouzah Onawan, pergunnah Behar, purchasers of the claim of the plaintiff were brought under the category of the plaintiffs." The subsequent proceedings in the suit were headed in the same way, and it does not appear that Deonath Sahay had anything more to do with the suit. He is made a party to this appeal but this does not affect the question. The judgment of the lower Court is headed : "Sri Kishen Singh and another." That seems to show that the Subordinate Judge, who made the order of 17th April 1895, himself understood the name of the original plaintiff was struck out; and that is the order in terms which has been made. If the new plaintiff had been [412] added to the list of plaintiffs no difficulty would have arisen. But it is contended under section 22 of the Limitation Act that as the original plaintiff is no longer a party to the suit, the suit must fail. The first part of that section is as follows : "When after the institution of a suit a new plaintiff or defendant is substituted or added, the suit shall, as regards him, be deemed to have been instituted when he was so made a party." There is no doubt that, taking the words of that section to bear their legitimate meaning, the suit must be barred so far as the substituted plaintiffs are concerned. It may, perhaps, appear extraordinary that an assignment pending suit should have this effect, and that although the right of the original plaintiff is not barred the right of his assignee should be barred as soon as it is acquired. It might perhaps have been possible for us to put on that section a construction which does not apply to assignments pendente lite, but the proviso seems to show that it does so apply. It shows that the section was not intended to allow any benefit to those whose rights are acquired during suit, as it expresses in one of such cases an exemption from the operation of the section. Our attention has been called to a decision of SIR RICHARD GARTH and MITTER, J., in Suput Singh v. Imrit Tewari, (1880) I. L. R., 5 Cal., 720. In some respects that case is similar to the present case. There, however, the substituted plaintiffs obtained leave to carry on the suit. No such leave has been obtained here. It is very unfortunate, but we feel ourselves unable to avoid acting upon the plain words of the section. This is not the only case where an assignee may be in a worse position so far as limitation is concerned than his assignor. An assignee from a person who has the exemption given to minors does not obtain the same exemption, and a case similar to the present one might occur with regard to an assignee from a person who was a minor at the time the transaction, which he seeks to set aside, took place. We cannot but feel that we may be doing a certain amount of injustice in this case; but we think that the Legislature has prevented us from coming to any other conclusion. We accordingly dismiss the suit.

The appellants are entitled to their costs in the Court below, [413] but, as the defence of limitation was not raised in that Court, and as the expense of this appeal has been brought about by such omission, we think that the appellants ought to pay the respondents' costs of the appeals in this Court.

NOTES.

[I. LEGISLATION—

The Indian Limitation Act, 1908, sec. 22 (2), provides that nothing in sub-section (1) shall apply to a case where a party is added or substituted owing to an assignment or devolution of any interest during the pendency of a suit or where a plaintiff is made a defendant or a defendant is made a plaintiff. This removes the previous conflict of case-law between cases like (1907) 34 Cal., 612 F.B.; (1909) 36 Cal., 675 ; (1909) 36 Cal., 688 ; (1905) 9 C.W.N., 883 ; (1902) 26 Bom., 730 ; [see also (1903) 7 C. Evidence Act (I of 1872), section 27†—Information received from the accused—Statement leading to the discovery of a fact—Admissibility of such statement.

If the statement of an accused person in the custody of the police is a necessary preliminary to the fact thereby discovered, it is admissible under section 27 † of the Evidence Act; it is immaterial whether the statement is sufficient to enable the Police to make the discovery by themselves, or is only of such a nature as to require further assistance of the accused to enable them to discover the fact.

Empress of India v. Pancham, (1882) I. L. R., 4 All., 198, dissented from; Queen-Empress v. Nana, (1889) I. L. R., 14 Bom., 260, followed; Adu Shikdar v. Queen-Empress (1885) I. L. R., 11 Cal., 635, referred to.

THIS appeal was presented by the Local Government under section 417 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) against an order of acquittal in appeal by the Sessions Judge of Rungpore, setting aside the order of the Deputy Magistrate convicting the accused.

The facts of the case appear from the judgment.

No one appeared on behalf of the accused.

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (BANERJEE and WILKINS, JJ.):-

[414] Wilkins, J.—In this case the accused was convicted by the Deputy Magistrate of Nilphamari, on the 9th March last, with having dishonestly retained certain stolen property, viz., Rs. 910-0 in cash and a baguna, and was sentenced under section 411 of the Indian Penal Code to nine months rigorous imprisonment. On appeal the Sessions Judge of Rungpore set aside the conviction and sentence and acquitted the accused, and against this order the appeal which is now before us has been filed by the Local Government under section 417 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

The circumstances of the case as disclosed by the evidence were these: On the night of the 11th February 1897, the house of one Keramutulla Sarkar was burglariously entered and a brass baguna with its contents, viz., Rs. 1,000-0 in cash, and two silver ornaments were stolen from it. Information was given to the Police who took up the enquiry, and in the course of their investigation unsuccessfully searched (amongst others) the house of the accused. On the 14th February the accused was questioned by the Sub-Inspector and made certain statements to him, offering to produce the stolen property. In consequence of these statements, a number of witnesses were taken by accused to a field close to his house, and there at a spot pointed out by the accused the stolen baguna was dug out of the ground; then accused took the party to the outer-courtyard of his house, and pointed out a spot in a drain close by: further digging in the slope of the ditch at a place covered with rubbish brought to light an earthen pot containing Rs. 940-0 declared by accused to be part of the stolen Rs. 1,000-0. Upon these facts the Deputy Magistrate convicted the accused.

† [Sec. 27.—Provided that, when any fact is deposed to as discovered in consequence of information received from a person accused of any offence, in the custody of a Police Officer, so much of such information, whether it amounts to a confession or not, as relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered, may be proved.]

The defence of the latter was to the effect that complainant had falsely brought the charge against him because he wished to marry a widowed sister of the accused, and the latter would not allow him to do so. But no evidence was adduced in support of this plea. The prosecution witnesses were none of them cross-examined on the point, and the accused merely called witnesses who attempted to show (but failed) that the first search of the accused's premises, including the actual places where the property was dug up, had failed to discover the stolen property, which accord-[416]ingly must have been deposited by or on behalf of the complainant where it was subsequently found.

The Sessions Judge, in acquitting the accused, has entered into certain arguments which are not very easy to understand. It is of course correct to say that, as a general rule, a confession made to a Police officer is not admissible in evidence. But section 27 of the Evidence Act provides that when any fact is deposed to as discovered in consequence of information received from an accused person, in the custody of a Police officer, so much of such information (whether it amounts to a confession or not) as relates distinctly to a fact thereby discovered, may be proved. Consequently, the Magistrate was not in error in recording so much of the accused's statement to the Police as led to the discovery of the stolen property in this case. It is perfectly well proved that the accused did make such a statement, that he did take the search-party to two secret places, that he did indicate that there the stolen property was buried, and that when these places were dug up, the stolen property was then found. The conclusion is irresistible, the guilty knowledge of the accused is clearly established, and no further proof of his dishonesty was necessary. If the Magistrate recorded a little more of the accused's statements to the Sub-Inspector than the law would strictly justify, the accused has not been prejudiced thereby; there is ample evidence, apart from that, against him.

I should, therefore, set aside the order of acquittal passed by the Sessions Judge, and restore the order of the Deputy Magistrate convicting and sentencing the accused under section 411 of the Indian Penal Code, and I would direct the Magistrate to issue his warrant accordingly, in order that the accused may serve out that portion of the original sentence which is still unexpired.

Banerjee, J.--I concur. I only wish to add a few words with reference to the applicability of section 27 of the Evidence Act to this case.

The learned Deputy Magistrate is wrong in saying that "section 27 of the Evidence Act does not apply because, to use the words of STRAIGHT, J., in Empress of India v. Pancham, (1882) I. L. R., 4 All., 198), [416] it was by the accused's own act and not from any information given by him that the discovery took place." In the first place, the facts here were different from those of the case cited, the property in this case having been actually found out, not by the accused, but by one of the witnesses who dug up the property at the direction of the Sub-Inspector, upon the place being pointed out by the accused. And in the second place, the view taken by STRAIGHT, J., in the case referred to, has been dissented from by a Full Bench of the Bombay High Court in a later case, Queen-Empress v. Nana, (1889) I. L. R., 14 Bom., 260, which in my opinion lays down the correct rule, that where the statement of the accused is a necessary preliminary to the fact discovered, it is admissible under section 27 of the Evidence Act, the question whether the statement is sufficient to enable the Police to make the discovery by themselves, or is only of such a nature as to require further assistance of the accused to enable them to discover the fact being immaterial. In this view, the statement of the accused that the property in question had been kept concealed by him in the place pointed out, though that statement was made while the accused was in police custody, and not in the immediate presence of a Magistrate, would be admissible evidence against him. The view I take is in no way inconsistent with that taken by this Court in Adu Shikdar v. Queen-Empress, (1885) I. L. R., 11 Cal., 635, as the part of the information or statement that is here used as evidence against the accused under section 27 relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered and does not go beyond it.

CRIMINAL APPEAL.

The 15th September, 1897

PRESENT

MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE AND MR. JUSTICE WILKINS.

Nabi Baksh alias Ali Baksh Sheikh............ Appellant

versus

Queen-Empress............Respondent.

Theft—Removing a thing with the object of causing trouble to the owner—Wrongful loss.

The accused, who was charged by his master with having committed theft of a box, stated that he had removed the box and left it concealed in the [417] cowshed to give a lesson to his master. The Sessions Judge in his charge to the jury said ' If the jury find that the accused removed the box to put the owner to trouble, that is causing wrongful loss to the owner, and the act is theft ;" and the jury returned a verdict of guilty finding " that the taking was with the intention of putting the owner to trouble."

Held, the above charge and verdict were based on an erroneous view of the law. It cannot be said that removing a thing to put the owner to trouble is necessarily and in every case causing " wrongful loss."

* Criminal Appeal No. 646 of 1897, made against the order of T. Palit, Esq., Officiating Sessions Judge of Berhampur, dated the 29th of July 1897.

THE facts of the case appear from the judgment.

No one appeared on behalf of the accused.

The judgment of the High Court (Banerjee and Wilkins, JJ.) was as follows: —

The appellant Nabi Baksh alias Ali Baksh Sheikh was tried before the Sessions Court of Murshidabad for the offence of theft committed by him while he was a servant of the complainant, and committed after two previous convictions. He was found guilty by the jury and he admitted two previous convictions; and he has been sentenced by the learned Sessions Judge to two years' rigorous imprisonment under sections 381 and 75 of the Indian Penal Code.

He has appealed against the conviction and sentence; and the trial having been by the jury, the appeal lies only on a matter of law (see section 418 of the Criminal Procedure Code); and this Court can alter or reverse the verdict, only if it is of opinion that the verdict is erroneous owing to a misdirection by the Judge or to a misunderstanding on the part of the jury of the law as laid down by him. [see section 423, clause (d)].

We are of opinion that the verdict of the jury in this case is erroneous owing to misdirection by the Judge. For the learned Sessions Judge in his charge to the jury said: "If the jury find that the accused removed the box to put the owner to trouble, that is causing wrongful loss to the owner, and the act is theft. The jury will consider the accused's statement in this connection." The statement of the accused here referred to was this: "Bebi then told me to produce the things, I brought out this box, which I left concealed in the cowshed, to give a lesson to them." And the jury returned a verdict of [418] guilty, finding "that the taking was with the intention of putting the owner to trouble"

Now the above charge and verdict are, we think, based on a clearly erroneous view of the law. It is true that to constitute the offence of theft it is not necessary that the taking should be permanent or with an intention to appropriate the thing taken, or that there should be wrongful gain to some one in addition to wrongful loss to the real owner [see section 378 of the Indian Penal Code, Illustration (l), Queen-Empress v. Sricharan Chungo (1895) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 1017]. But to constitute theft there must be an intention to take the thing in question dishonestly, that is, with intent to cause wrongful gain or wrongful loss, and can it be said that removing a box "to put the owner to trouble" is necessarily and in every case causing "wrongful loss"? The answer must, we think, be in the negative. For, otherwise a person, keeping concealed for a time a valuable thing belonging to a friend, who is a careless man, in jest for the purpose of causing him a little anxiety, or in earnest for the purpose of teaching him the salutary lesson of being careful, would be guilty of theft, a result which the Legislature could never have intended. No doubt the language of section 23 of the Indian Penal Code which defines wrongful loss, and says a "person is said to lose wrongfully when such person is wrongfully kept out of any property as well as when such person is wrongfully deprived of property," might at first sight seem to create a difficulty in the way of accepting the view we take. But the difficulty is only apparent and not real. Of course, when the owner is kept out of possession with the object of depriving him of the benefit arising from the possession even temporarily, the case will come within the definition. But where the owner is kept out of possession temporarily not with any such intention, but only with the object of causing him trouble in the sense of mere mental anxiety, and with the ultimate intention of restoring the thing to him without exacting or expecting any recompense, it is difficult to say that the detention amounts to causing wrongful loss in any sense.

[419] We, therefore, hold that the verdict in this case was erroneous owing to a misdirection by the Judge, and we reverse it accordingly and acquit the appellant.

Having regard to all the circumstances of the case, we have not thought it necessary to order a retrial.

CRIMINAL REFERENCE.

The 8th November, 1897.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE AND MR. JUSTICE WILKINS.

Chundra Kumar Dey, Municipal Overseer............Complainant

Gonesh Das Agarwalla............Accused.

Bengal Municipal Act (Bengal Act III of 1884), section 237, section 238 and section 273—Notice of intention to build—Commencing to build before sanction—Refusal of sanction within the period of six weeks—Liability to fine.

If a person after giving notice in writing of his intention to erect a house under section 237 of the Bengal Municipal Act (Bengal Act III of 1884) commences to build without waiting for the six weeks mentioned therein (as he is not bound to do under the Act there being no such provision in it) he does not necessarily contravene the law.

But if he so acts, the reasonable view must be that he does it at his risk, his act being liable to be treated as one in contravention of any legal order of the Commissioners issued within the statutory period of six weeks, if such order does not sanction the proposed building; the above appears to be the only reasonable view of section 238 of the Act.

REFERENCE under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code submitted by the Deputy Commissioner of Lakhimpur.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently from the letter of reference, the material portion of which was as follows :—

"In this case one Gonesh Das Agarwalla, a merchant of Debrugarh, applied to the Municipal Commissioners, on the 20th July 1897, for permission to erect a house on the Strand Road.

"The Vice-Chairman enquired into the case, and as the result of his enquiry a notice was issued on Gonesh Das, directing him not to erect the house and to demolish it, if already built. This notice was served on August [420] 5th, 1897, after the building had been completed. The Vice-Chairman reported the matter to the Chairman, who instituted a prosecution under section 273 of the Municipal Act.

"The case was tried by the Senior Extra Assistant Commissioner who found that the notice under section 238 was served after the building was completed. He was of opinion that the accused should not have proceeded with the building without permission, but should have waited six weeks to allow the Commissioners to pass orders on his application. He was of opinion that the provision of section 238 (1) had been contravened, and that an offence had been committed under section 273 (1).

"The accused was fined Rs. 20.

"I consider the accuracy of the finding of the lower Court extremely doubtful. Section 273 (1) provides that whoever begins to build contrary to the provision of section 238 is liable to punishment. As the accused admittedly made an application to the Commissioners asking for permission to build the house he has clearly not contravened the provision of section 238 (1) and is, therefore, apparently not liable under section 273 (1).

"The Commissioners have a separate remedy. They may direct the demolition of the building already erected without their consent. They have actually, it appears, directed the accused in the notice, dated the 3rd August 1897, to demolish the building, but he has not apparently taken any steps to carry out this order.

"The lower Court (as appears from the explanation of the Magistrate) was of opinion that the accused was legally bound to wait six weeks before he commenced building.

"I venture to differ from this view. The framers of the Act apparently desired to place no restriction to the commencement of operations in pucca buildings. In the erection of huts, the builder is bound under section 243 to give one month's notice before he commences building. There does not appear to be any such provision in the case of pucca buildings.

"I venture to submit on these grounds that the conviction is bad in law and should be set aside."

No one appeared in support of the reference.

The judgment of the High Court (Banerjee and Wilkins, JJ.) is as follows :—

In this case the accused Gonesh Das Agarwalla was convicted by the Extra Assistant Commissioner of Debrugarh under section 273 (1) of the Bengal Municipal Act III of 1884 (as amended by Bengal Acts IV and VI of 1894) for having begun to build a house [421] contrary to the provisions of section 238 of the Act and was fined Rs. 20. The Deputy Commissioner of Lakhimpore has referred the case to this Court under the provisions of section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code, as he is of opinion that the conviction of the accused is bad in law, inasmuch as the notice issued by the Municipal Commissioners forbidding the erection of the house, and which was served upon the accused after the house had been completed, was too late, and that the accused was not bound to wait for the permission of the Commissioners before commencing to build the house.

It is an admitted fact that the accused did, before commencing to build the house, give a written notice to the Commissioners under section 237 (1) of the Act. The question is whether the accused in commencing to build before getting the permission of the Commissioners, and without waiting for the "six weeks" mentioned in that section, contravened the provisions of section 273 (1) of the Act.

Under section 237 of the Act the Commissioners were allowed six weeks from the receipt of the notice given by the accused to deliberate upon the matter, and to grant or refuse sanction for the proposed building; as a matter of fact they refused to sanction it, within the statutory period, but in the meanwhile, the accused, without waiting for their decision, commenced and completed the erection of the building.

Section 273 (1) is as follows: "Whosoever............begins to build...... ......any house contrary to the provisions of section 238............shall be liable............to a fine of Rs. 50............"

Section 238 (1) provides: "Should any person commence to erect......... such house.............in contravention of any legal order of the Commissioners issued within six weeks of receipt of a valid notice under the last preceding section, the Commissioners may, by notice to be delivered within fifteen days, require the building to be altered or demolished............"

Thus, if the provisions of both these sections are fulfilled, the Commissioners have two remedies, viz., (1) by prosecution and fine under section 273, and (2) by altering or demolishing the objectionable building.

[422] The question in the present case is, whether the provisions of sections 238 and 273 (1) of the Act were fulfilled, or, in other words, whether the accused can be said to have commenced to erect the house "in contravention of a legal order" which was not communicated to him until after the building had been completed. So far as we understand the Act, the accused was not bound to wait for six weeks before getting a reply to his notice; it is true that the Commissioners are allowed that period within which to come to their decision; but the Act is silent as to the counter-obligation alleged against the accused, whatever the intention of the framers of the Act may have been.

But, though that is so, and though, by commencing to build after giving the notice required by section 237, without waiting for the six weeks mentioned in it, a person does not necessarily contravene the law, yet when he so acts, the reasonable view must be that he does it at his risk, his act being liable to be treated as one in contravention of any legal order of the Commissioners issued within the statutory period of six weeks, if such order does not sanction the proposed building. As he commences to build in anticipation of sanction, his act is valid if the sanction is obtained; but if sanction is refused within the statutory period, the act from its commencement must be held to have been in contravention of the order of the Commissioners, though issued subsequently within the statutory period.

This appears to us to be the only reasonable view of section 238 of the Act. The language of the section is doubtless faulty; but its meaning is clear.

To hold that a building completed before receipt of the order of the Commissioners refusing sanction within the statutory period is unaffected by that order, would be to hold in such cases sections 237 and 238 are a nullity.

For these reasons, we think that the order of the Extra Assistant Commissioner was right and should stand.

Possession, Order of Criminal Court as to—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), section 145—Parties to Proceedings—Manager in Possession.

A person who is in possession of land merely as manager for the actual proprietor should not be made a party to proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Behary Lall Trigunait v. Darby, (1894) I.L.R., 21 Cal., 915, followed

THE facts of the case appear from the judgment.

Mr. A. M. Dunne appeared for the Petitioner.

Babu Kritanto Kumar Bose for the Opposite Party.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Gordon Leith) for the Crown.

The judgment of the High Court (Hill and Wilkins, JJ.) is as follows :—

These proceedings were instituted under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by one Prithiraj Mandal against Mr. A. P. Brown in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Kurseong. They relate to four plots of land which were claimed by the complainant on the ground that he was in possession of them as tenant. He asserted that he had been dispossessed by Mr. Brown. The proceedings were transferred on the 9th April 1897 to the Court of the Deputy Magistrate of Darjeeling. After the Deputy Magistrate had held a local investigation, he drew up a proceeding under section 145, requiring the parties to put in written statements of the respective cases and to appear before him for disposal of the matter in due course. In the result he arrived at the conclusion that the complainant Prithiraj Mandal was entitled to retain possession of the first and second of the plots; that in respect of [424] the third plot he was entitled to graze his cattle upon it; and with regard to that particular plot he made an order in favour of Prithiraj Mandal under section 147. With reference to the fourth plot his finding was that Mr. Brown was the person in possession, and he accordingly ordered him to be retained in possession.

Exception has been taken to the proceedings and orders of the Magistrate upon various grounds. It appears to us, however, that it is necessary only to refer to the first, as we think it to be conclusive of the case. In the written statement put in on behalf of Mr. Brown, it has been stated, and it has been so found by the Magistrate that he, Mr. Brown, was not the actual proprietor of the land in dispute, but was there merely in the character of a manager for the actual proprietor one Mr. Ephgrave, who appears himself to be a resident of Darjeeling, and to have been present there at the time of these proceedings.

It has been contended before us upon the authority of the case of Behary Lall Trigunait v. Darby, (1894) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 915, that, having regard to the fact that Brown had no interest in the land but was in possession merely as manager for the actual proprietor, he was not a proper party to these proceedings, and that they are therefore bad ab initio. We think that this contention is sound; and that we have no alternative but to give effect to it. In the case to which reference has been made the person against whom the claim was preferred and who was treated as the second party in the case was a Mr. Darby, who was the manager of a certain coal company, which claimed to be in possession of the land. What the Court there said was this: "We think that this rule must be made absolute, and that it is enough for us to say that it must be made absolute, because the persons interested are not before the Court. Mr. Darby, in whose favour this order has been made, in his written statement, states that the property in question belongs to a coal company; and that his position is that of a manager of the company. He does not state that he has any interest except as manager, and does not state that he has any independent, or in fact any, possession, except as representing the company on whose behalf he is managing the mine. We do not think that that kind of [425] possession is a possession such as is contemplated by this section, or, as I said just now, that the parties interested are properly before us." We think the principles thus laid down are applicable to the present case, and we accordingly set aside the proceedings ab initio.

The case relied upon by the other side, Protap Narain Singh v. Rajendro Narain Singh (I. L. R. 24 Cal., Criminal Revision, 55) in our opinion has no application here. We further direct that the costs which were made payable by Mr. Brown by the orders of the Deputy Magistrate, dated the 30th June and 2nd July, if paid be refunded.

Nuisance—Cremation—Burning-ghat or cremation-ground - Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), sections 133, 140, 437—Jurisdiction of District Magistrate to order further inquiry, in a proceeding under section 133 of the Code—"Legalised nuisance"—Private cremation-ground, Duties of owner of—"Public place"—"Trade or occupation"—Order of removal of burning-ghat--Form of Notice.

A District Magistrate has, strictly speaking, no power under section 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) to order a 'further inquiry' into a proceeding under section

* Criminal Revision No. 566 of 1897.

133 of the Code, which has been practically dropped by a Subordinate Magistrate, the proper course being to refer the matter to the High Court.

Although a burning-ghat or cremation-ground may not in itself be a "nuisance" within the meaning of clause 2, section 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), still a Magistrate will have a jurisdiction to take action under that section if it is shown that such a ghat or ground is in such an offensive state, or that cremation is carried upon it in such an offensive manner, as to be a source of injury, danger, or annoyance to persons living in the vicinity.

Queen-Empress v. Sammadha Pillai, (1896) I. L. R., 19 Mad., 464, 467, 468; and Bamford v. Turnley, (1862) 31 L. J., Q. B. (Ex. Ch., 286), referred to and discussed. Brindabun Chunder Roy v. Chairman of Municipal Commissioners of Serampore, (1873) 19 W. R. Civ., 309, distinguished.

[426] A private proprietor may be guilty of acts done on his private property, which may give rise to a public nuisance; the owner of a cremation ground may be held to create a "nuisance" if he allows the cremation of bodies upon that ground to be so performed as to annoy or endanger the lives and properties of persons living in the neighbourhood.

The proprietor of a cremation-ground cannot be said to be carrying on any "trade or occupation" within the meaning of clause 3, section 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

A Magistrate has no power under section 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code to order the removal of a burning-ghat from its position, but he can direct a proprietor to "remove the nuisance," i.e., to take such steps as would result in the cremation of corpses ceasing to be a nuisance to the public.

THE facts of the case, and the arguments adduced, are fully set forth in the judgment of the High Court.

Mr. Jackson, Babu Digamber Chatterjee, Babu Debendra Chunder Mullick, and Babu Dwarka Nath Mitter, for the Petitioner.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Gordon Leith), and Babu Samatul Chunder Dutt, for the Crown.

The judgment of the Court (Hill and Wilkins, JJ.) was as follows :—

This is a rule calling upon the District Magistrate of Burdwan to shew cause why the order of the Sub-Divisional Officer of Katwa, dated the 21st July 1897 making absolute, under section 137 of the Criminal Procedure Code, a conditional order issued by that officer on the 24th April 1897, under section 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and calling upon the petitioner to remove a burning-ghat from its present position where it is a nuisance, or to shew cause why such conditional order should not be made absolute, should not be set aside.

The facts appear to be as follows :—

Previous to the 10th June 1893, the burning-ghat or cremation-ground in question was situated on the borders of villages Mohanpur and Naihati; on the application of some of the inhabitants of Mohanpur proceedings were instituted against the proprietor (the present petitioner) under section 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and on the 10th June 1893, at the instance of the District Magistrate, the petitioner removed the burning-ghat [427] to its present position. In November 1896 some of the inhabitants of Naihati moved the Sub-Divisional Officer under section 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code for the removal of the ghat from its new site, and, on the 4th March 1897, the Deputy Magistrate declined to interfere, not because the ghat as conducted was not a "nuisance" within the meaning of the section but because "as there must exist a burning-ghat for the cremation of the dead, and as he could not find a more suitable spot, it would be futile to take proceedings under section 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code." The result was that the Deputy Magistrate ordered the application to be "filed."

The Naihati people then moved the District Magistrate in revision of this order, and asked that a proceeding under section 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code might be drawn up against the petitioner to remove the said "nuisance from the Naihati village." Upon receipt of this petition, the District Magistrate ordered it to be forwarded to the Sub-Divisional Officer, who was directed to institute fresh proceedings under section 133. The Sub-Divisional Officer accordingly drew up his proceedings of the 24th April, with the result that he made the order absolute which the petitioner now seeks to have set aside.

We have heard the Deputy Legal Remembrancer, who appears on behalf of the Crown, to show cause against the rule, and we have also heard Mr. Jackson for the petitioner in support of this rule. We now proceed to deal seriatim with the arguments used by Mr. Jackson in support of his contention that the rule should be made absolute.

The first ground of objection is that the proceedings are bad, inasmuch as the District Magistrate had no authority to order a further inquiry into the application of the inhabitants of Naihati, which had been practically rejected or refused by the Sub-Divisional Officer. We cannot accept the arguments set up in reply to this, viz., that the proceedings instituted in April 1897 were not in continuation of the application of November 1896, but were fresh proceedings altogether. There is nothing in the petition to the District Magistrate to show that the inhabitants of Naihati complained to him upon a new state of affairs, or upon [428] any fresh nuisance which had occurred since the Sub-Divisional Officer had refused to interfere; and the conditional order which was ultimately made absolute was one issued upon the original complaint stated in the application of November 1896. But we may dispose of this objection by saying that, though strictly speaking the District Magistrate may have had no power under section 137 of the Criminal Procedure Code to order a further inquiry into this matter, still we do not think it necessary to set aside the whole of the proceedings upon this ground, for, had the District Magistrate referred the petition to this Court as would appear to have been the proper course, we should certainly have directed the Sub-Divisional Officer to proceed and hold the formal inquiry which he has now held.

The second contention of the learned Counsel for the petitioner is that, as no burning-ghat can be a public nuisance, the Magistrate had no authority to take action under section 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code in respect of this burning-ghat. Mr. Jackson supports this contention by referring to certain remarks contained in the judgment of a Divisional Bench of the Madras High Court in the case of Queen-Empress v. Saminadha Pillai, (1896) I. L. R., 19 Mad., 464, 467, 468. The accused in that case had been convicted under section 290 of the Indian Penal Code for having cremated a corpse at a certain place, and the learned Judges remarked that "it is clear that the act of the accused falls under the limited class of cases sometimes designated as nuisance "legalised." In other words it seems to be one instance of those compromises belonging to social life [alluded to by POLLOCK, C.B., in Bamford v. Turnley, (1862) 31 L. J., Q. B. (Ex. Ch.), 286] upon which the peace and comfort of that life mainly depend, and in which some apparent natural right is invaded or some enjoyment abridged to provide for the more general convenience or necessities of the whole community." Now the expression "legalised nuisance" used in this connection might at first sight seem to render innocent in law the practice of cremation under any circumstances whatsoever. But that this is not the true meaning of the phrase, and that it was not so interpreted in the case above referred to, is clear from what immediately follows in the same [429] judgment. The learned Judges go on to say (at p. 467 of the report): "In support of the above view, it is hardly necessary to observe that not only the religious sentiments of all sections of the community, but also the requirements of general health and comfort, absolutely demand that corpses shall be disposed of as early as practicable, so as not to prove hurtful to the living. It is this imperative necessity that, as a general rule, casts upon persons having charge of corpses, not only as a matter of social but also of legal obligation, the duty of arranging for the disposal of those corpses in a reasonably speedy, decent and inoffensive way," and further on, at p. 468, "When persons like the accused entitled to use a particular spot dedicated for the communal purpose of cremation use it for that purpose in a manner neither unusual nor calculated to aggravate the inconveniences necessarily incident to such an act as it is generally performed in this country, it must be admitted that he does what is perfectly lawful." In fact the case cited does not go further than this; it is an authority upon the point that a cremation-ground properly kept and used cannot be considered a public nuisance, but it does not decide that a cremation-ground kept and used in such a manner as to be offensive or a source of injury, danger or annoyance to the people in general, who dwell in the vicinity, is not therefore a "public nuisance" within the meaning of section 268 of the Indian Penal Code, or a "nuisance" within the meaning of the second paragraph of section 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

In support of this branch of his argument, Mr. Jackson also relied upon the case of Brindabun Chunder Roy v. Chairman of the Municipal Commissioners of Serampore, (1873) 19 W. R., Civ., 309, but that case does not seem to us to be very much in point. Its decision turned upon the construction of section 79 of the Municipal Act of 1864, and the conclusion arrived at was that Municipal Commissioners could not close a cremation-ground under that section, merely because they thought that the burning of dead bodies was offensive; it was necessary in order to give them jurisdiction that they should be satisfied upon the evidence of competent persons, that the ground was in such a state as to be dangerous to the [430] health of persons living in the neighbourhood (see pp. 312 and 314 of the report).

We, therefore, hold that, although a burning-ghat or cremation-ground may not in itself be a nuisance within the meaning of clause 2, section 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code, still a Magistrate will have jurisdiction under that clause if it is shown that such a ghat or ground is in such an offensive state, or that cremation is carried on upon it in such an offensive manner, as to be a source of injury, danger, or annoyance to persons living in the vicinity. As a matter of fact this is what the Magistrate in the present case has clearly found upon the evidence given before him.

The third objection taken on behalf of the petitioner is that as this cremation-ground is private property, it is not a "public place" within the meaning of section 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and that consequently the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to proceed under the second clause of that section. No doubt this burning-ghat is the property of the petitioner, and is not itself a public place. But the question before us is not so much whether the land itself is public or private, as whether the "nuisance" complained of is on or at a public place. The distinction is clear. It is not the place where the nuisance originates which we have to look to, it is the nuisance itself. And we have no hesitation in saying that in our opinion a private proprietor may be guilty of acts done on his private property, which may give rise to a public nuisance to those living in the neighbourhood. A private owner who fires off blank charges from a cannon in his compound may give rise to a public nuisance, so far as regards persons riding or driving on a public way just outside the compound. So also the owner of a cremation-ground may fairly be held to create a nuisance if he allows the cremation of bodies upon that ground to be so performed as to annoy or endanger the lives and properties of persons living in the vicinity.

This, we think, is the proper reply to the argument as set forth. It is not enough to say, as has been urged by the Deputy Legal Remembrancer, that clause 3 of section 133 of the Criminal [431] Procedure Code would apply to this case. In the first place the petitioner in the present case cannot be said to be carrying on any "trade or occupation," he merely puts his land at the disposal of any one who wishes to cremate a dead body, and makes his profit by charging a high rent to a tenant who sells wood to the relatives. In the second place the proceedings throughout have been conducted with reference to clause 2, and not to clause 3, of section 133.

For these reasons we think that we should not be justified in setting aside the order of the Sub-Divisional Officer, who has found as a fact upon evidence, which he summarises in his judgment, that the practice of cremating corpses as carried on upon the petitioner's land, amounts to a nuisance within the meaning of section 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It is not sufficient for the petitioner to say that it is not he who commits the nuisance which is one which (if it exists at all) is created by the mudafarashes or professional corpse-burners paid by the persons who use the cremation-ground. If he permits his ground to be used for such a purpose, it is incumbent upon him to take care that it is used in a proper, decent, and inoffensive manner, whereas the findings are that the process of cremation is so conducted as to be opposed to public decency, and to be a source of annoyance to the neighbours. It is for the petitioner to see that the ground is properly enclosed, and that no offensive matter is allowed to lie about it or to travel beyond its boundaries so as to annoy the public.

But we think that the form of the order absolute made by the Sub-Divisional Officer is open to objection. The Sub-Divisional Officer has directed the petitioner to "remove the burning-ghat from its present position." This, under the section, he had no power to do. What he had jurisdiction to direct was that the petitioner should "remove the nuisance"; in other words take such steps as would result in the cremation of corpses at this place ceasing to be a nuisance to the public. And we think that this is the form in which the notice, to be given to the petitioner under section 140 of the Criminal Procedure Code, should be drawn up. If, as would appear from the Sub-Divisional Officer's order of [432] the 7th August last, a new and more convenient site has been selected for a burning-ghat, and if the petitioner has no objection to remove it to that site, so much the better. But if he desires to retain the ghat where it is, the Magistrate has no authority to force him to remove it, and to prevent its being used for cremation purposes, so long as he takes care that it is not a nuisance to the neighbourhood. To this extent, therefore, and only to this extent, will the rule be made absolute.

CRIMINAL REFERENCE.

The 19th October, 1897.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE AND MR. JUSTICE WILKINS.

Queen-Empress

versus

Makund Ram and others . .. .Accused-petitioners.*

Gambling Act (Bengal Act II of 1867), section 6—Common gaming house—Cowries—Instruments of gaming.

Cowries may be treated as instruments of gaming where they are used as counters or as a means to carry on gaming.

The finding of cowries in a house upon search made under a warrant will under section 6 of the Gambling Act (Bengal Act II of 1867) raise a rebuttable presumption that the house is used as a common gaming house.

REFERENCE submitted under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code by the Officiating Sessions Judge of Cuttack, against a conviction and sentence under section 4 of the Gambling Act (Bengal Act II of 1867). The material portion of the letter of reference was as follows :

"The facts appear to be that a certain house was raided by the police during the night, and the accused were found seated round a heap of pice and cowries. The first accused was sent up under section 3 but was acquitted; he was however convicted with the others under section 4. The Magistrate appears to have found that the house was occupied by all the accused except the Brahmins, who seem to be three or four among them.

"The prosecution must prove that the place comes under the definition of a common gaming house in section 1 of the Act taken with section 6. It is, I believe, settled that coins are not instruments of gaming—Queen-Empress v. Vithal Bhaichand, (1881) I. L. R., 6 Bom., 19. The case of cowries is somewhat more doubtful. They [433] are not instruments primarily devised or intended for gaming. In a very recent case, Queen-Empress v. Bala Misra, (1897) I. L. R., 19 All., 311, it was held that if cowries were used in any particular case as instruments of gaming, they should be considered as such for the purpose of the Act. I understand this to apply to the case in which cowries are used as counters representing a higher denomination of coins. When the cowries themselves are gambled for I think they are not instruments of gaming. The game in the present case was probably some variety of odds and events, and it appears that cowries and pice were the things gambled for: 24 cowries exchange for a pice. It is impossible to say whether the cowries were gambled for as counters or for themselves. I have not been referred to any Calcutta case on the legal status of cowries, and I think it would be desirable to have a definite ruling on the subject.

"Another necessary part of the definition of a common gaming house is that it must be kept for the profit of the occupier. Section 6 under certain circumstances raises a rebuttable presumption that it is so occupied. In this case, however, the person who was tried as the occupier was actually acquitted on that charge. The Magistrate seems to believe that the house is occupied by all the accused except the Brahmins. Whether this means that they live there permanently, or that they keep it as a club, does not appear. It can hardly be believed that the occupiers made gain or profit out of the two or three Brahmins who were probably servants. On this ground, I think, the building was probably either accused's dwelling house or their club, and was not a common gaming house."

* Criminal Reference No. 271 of 1897 made by W. B. Brown, Esq., Officiating Sessions, Judge of Cuttack, dated the 20th of September 1897.

No one appeared in support of the Reference.

The judgment of the High Court (Banerjee and Wilkins, JJ.) was as follows :—

The accused have been convicted under section 4 of Bengal Act II of 1867 and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 10 each. The learned Sessions Judge recommends that the conviction and sentence be set aside on the ground that the house in which the accused were found is not shewn to be a common gaming house within the meaning of section 1 of the Act.

To sustain a conviction under section 4 of the Act, no doubt two things have to be established, first, that the accused were found gambling, and, second, that the place where they were found was a common gaming house within the meaning of the Act. The first is clearly established as has been found in the judgment of the Magistrate. As to the second, the mere fact of gambling having taken place in the house on previous occasions was not, as the Magistrate [434] appears to think, sufficient to make it a common gaming house within the meaning of the Act, as the condition that it must be kept "for the profit or gain of the person owning, occupying, using, or keeping" it, though inferrible from it, would not be necessarily established by that fact. But if cowries are instruments of gaming within the meaning of the Act, the finding of cowries in the house upon search made under the warrant issued in this case will, under section 6 of the Act, raise a rebuttable presumption that the house is used as a common gaming house. Now, though coins are not instruments of gaming, as has been held in Queen-Empress v. Vithal Bhaichand, (1881) I. L. R., 6 Bom., 19, cowries are different from coins, and may be treated as instruments of gaming, where they are used as counters, or as a means to carry on gaming. See Queen-Empress v. Bala Misra, (1897) I.L.R., 19 All., 311. And in the present case, having regard to the fact that there were found both pice and cowries, and the latter were being used as means of gaming, we think the presumption under section 6 of the Act may well arise, a presumption which is further supported by the fact of the house having been used for gaming on previous occasions.

We therefore decline to interfere in this case.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), section 522—Restoration of possession of immoveable property—Dispossession by use of criminal force.

The words "an offence attended by criminal force" in section 522 of the Criminal Procedure Code(Act X of 1882) mean an offence, of which criminal force forms an ingredient. Section 522 is not applicable to cases where there has been no conviction for criminal force, either separately or as an ingredient of the offence of which there is a conviction, and where there is no finding that any person has been dispossessed of any immoveable property by criminal force.

[433] Luchmi Das v. Pallat Lali, (1875) 23 W. R. Cr., 51, and Soshi Bhusan Dutt v. Pyari Kishore Biswas, (1897) 1 C. W. N., CCLVI., followed.

REFERENCE under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code by the Sessions Judge of Moorshedabad. The facts of the case appear from the following portion of the letter of reference.—

"The trial was concluded on the 10th December 1896, and all the accused were convicted under section 143 of the Penal Code. They appealed to the District Magistrate, who on the 17th December upheld the conviction.

"On the 26th July the complainant in the case under section 143 of the Indian Penal Code made an application to the Honorary Magistrate who had tried the case, for an order under section 522 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The Honorary Magistrate recorded the following order on the petition: 'Possession be given to the complainant under section 522 of the Criminal Procedure Code.' The petitioner moved this Court to refer the matter to the High Court on the ground that it was illegal. The petitioner was the principal accused and was convicted under section 143 of the Indian Penal Code on the 10th December last. A rule was issued by this Court in the following terms: 'Let a rule issue on the District Magistrate and on the opposite party to show cause why a reference to the High Court should not be made with the recommendation that the order under section 522 of the Criminal Procedure Code be set aside on the following grounds: (a) That the original conviction having been for an offence which did not contain the element of force, section 522 is inapplicable. (b) That in the original case it was not found that there was any dispossession of the opposite party. (c) That the original case having been decided in December last the Honorary Magistrate was not competent to pass an order under section 522 of the Criminal Procedure Code in July.'

"The Honorary Magistrate has not offered any explanation.

"The order appears to me to be clearly illegal and improper. The conviction was under section 143 of the Indian Penal Code, of which offence the use of criminal force is not a constituent element. Section 522 of the Code of Criminal Procedure applies 'whenever a person is convicted of an offence attended by criminal force.' I interpret the phrase 'attended by criminal force,' to mean 'of which the use of criminal force is an ingredient.' The learned pleader for the opposite party argued (1) that the phrase 'attended by criminal force' might mean attended by the use of criminal force or the show of criminal force, and (2) that 'attended by criminal force' might be interpreted to mean not that the use of criminal force must necessarily be an ingredient constituting the offence, but that the commission of the offence of which the accused [436] is convicted was accompanied by criminal force, though there may have been no conviction for the use of such criminal force. I think both the arguments are unsound. 'Criminal force' has been defined in section 350 of the Indian Penal Code, and it is quite clear from that section that criminal force must necessarily mean the use of force and does not include the show of criminal force. Had criminal force included the show of criminal force the definition of assault would have been unnecessary. As to the second contention that the section is applicable if the commission of the offence of which a person is convicted was accompanied by criminal force, although there was no conviction for such criminal force, it amounts to this, that the Court passing the order is to go beyond the conviction, and consider whether there was criminal force used or not apart from the conviction. That certainly could never have been intended. If the section was intended to mean that then it would have run as follows: 'Whenever a person is convicted of an offence and it appears to the Court that any person has been dispossessed of immoveable property by criminal force, the Court may, &c.,' instead of being as it is now 'whenever a person is convicted of an offence attended by criminal force.' I am therefore of opinion that section 522 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is not applicable to cases where there has been no conviction for criminal force either separately or as an ingredient of the offence of which there is a conviction. Even if it be admitted that the section is applicable to such cases, it is to be noted that there is no finding in the Honorary Magistrate's judgment as to the use of criminal force. He no doubt says in giving the account of the prosecution that the men assembled were throwing brickbats, but he nowhere finds that as an established fact.

"The second ground on which the rule was issued was: 'That in the original case it was not found that there was any dispossession of the opposite party.' The Honorary Magistrate's judgment on this point is as follows: 'The accused's main contention is that the said piece of land belongs to the said Nehalia Estate, of which first accused is the executor and rest servants and defendants, on a purchase from one Lakhan Chandra, first witness for defence. Both the parties filed documentary evidence. It appears that Lakhan Chandra purchased it on a sale by the Official Assignee and that the land formerly belonged to one Gahi Babu. The boundary mentioned in the deed executed by the Official Assignee does not exactly tally with that executed in the sale deed of Lakhan Chandra. No party had advanced any evidence of taking actual possession of the land after purchase, but it is clear from the sale certificate, as well as from the deposition of the said Lakhan Chandra, that there lies a land on the south of Pulin Dhar's hatia measuring about 25 or 30 cubits by 5 or 6 cubits which is in possession of Pulin Dhar, and it is evident from the deposition of complainant's witnesses, as well as from the evidence of Durga Churn Dey, fifth witness for the defence, that Rajkrishta had a [437] hut, and that it stands on Pulin Dhar's land. As to the other portion of the land which is lying waste it appears that no party was in undisturbed possession, and the parties had a dispute about it. Sub-Inspector Gagun Chunder Neogi said that a proceeding under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code was pending in the Berhampore Court between the parties, and both the parties were ordered not to interfere, so this statement clearly supports my aforesaid finding.'

"The case for the prosecution was that the complainant's master Pulin Chandra Dhar had purchased forty years ago a plot of lakhiraj land, and that this Rajkrishta, whose name appears in the above extract from the judgment of the Honorary Magistrate, was a tenant of Pulin Dhar's and had a hut on a portion of the land.

"From the above extract from the Honorary Magistrate's judgment it appears that he found that, as regards a portion of the disputed land, it was in no one's undisturbed possession, and that there were proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code pending. As regards the hut he found it to be in the possession of Pulin's tenant Rajkrishta.

"Now the petition praying for an order under section 522 evidently relates to a good deal more than the hut which was in Rajkrishta's possession. The Honorary Magistrate, without specifying what portion of the land the complainant was to be put in possession of, ordered: 'Possession be given to the complainant under section 522 of the Criminal Procedur ...' It is to be noted that the complainant ... and neve... anything to do with the possession of th... ...atter Rajkrishta was in possession. On this ground too the order is clearly an illegal and improper one.

"The third ground on which the rule was issued raises an important question of law, viz., whether an order under section 522 of the Criminal Procedure Code can be passed subsequently to, and independently of, the decision in the original case. I think not. To allow such an order to be passed subsequently would be productive of the greatest confusion and mischief. Within what limit of time must the order be passed? There is no limit fixed in the section, and if it be held that such orders can be passed subsequently, then the order may, as in this case, be seven months after the decision of the original case: and if seven months afterwards, then why not a year or two years and so on? This clearly could never have been intended by the Legislature. There are good grounds for holding that the order under section 522 of the Criminal Procedure Code should be a part of the original judgment by which there is a conviction of an offence attended by criminal force. One very important reason in favour of taking this view is that, whereas orders under sections 517, 518 or 519 of the Code are subject to appeal, revision and reference, there is no such special provision with regard to an order under section 522. And that I [438] think is due to the Legislature intending that an order under section 522 of the Criminal Procedure Code should form a part of the substantive order of conviction, and should be subject to appeal or revision with the substantive order; otherwise it may happen that an order under section 522 may be passed by the original Court while the substantive order convicting the accused has been appealed against. The conviction may be set aside on appeal, but there being no provision for an appeal against an order under section 522 of the Criminal Procedure Code, it cannot be interfered with. An appeal against an order under section 522 will certainly not lie under the provisions of Chapter XXXI. If, however, section 522 be so construed that an order under this section is to be considered a part of the order of conviction, then, if the conviction be set aside on appeal, the order under section 522 will be necessarily set aside as part of the conviction itself.

"This case exemplifies the danger of allowing an order under this section to be made except as a part of the original order of conviction.

"On the above grounds I would refer this case to the High Court with the recommendation that the order under section 522 be set aside."

Babu Jogendro Nath Bose appeared on behalf of the Petitioner.

Babu Joy Gopal Ghose on behalf of the Opposite Party.

The judgment of the High Court (Banerjee and Wilkins, JJ.) was as follows:—

This is a reference from the Sessions Judge of Murshedabad recommending that an order of the Honorary Magistrate of Lalbag, giving possession of certain property to the opposite party under section 522 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, should be set aside on three grounds, —first, because the offence of which the petitioner has been convicted is not one attended by criminal force, the conviction being for an offence punishable under section 143 of the Indian Penal Code; secondly, because it has not been found that the opposite party has been dispossessed of any immoveable property by the use of criminal force; and, thirdly, because the order under section 522 does not form part of the judgment in the criminal case as it ought to have done, but was passed several months after the conviction in that case.

We are of opinion that the view taken by the learned Sessions Judge with reference to the first two grounds is correct. Section [439] 522 of the Code of Criminal Procedure says: "Whenever a person is convicted of an offence attended by criminal force, and it appears to the Court that by such force, any person has been dispossessed of any immoveable property, the Court may, if it thinks fit, order such person to be restored to the possession of the same." "An offence attended by criminal force" means, in our opinion, an offence of which criminal force forms an ingredient. The offence in this case being that of being members of an unlawful assembly, is one into the composition of which the use of criminal force does not enter, though the show of criminal force may in certain cases; and the view we take is supported by the cases of Luchmi Dass v. Pallat Lall, (1875) 23 W. R., Cr. 54, and Soshi Bhusan Dutt v. Pyari Kishori Biswas, (1897) 1 C. W. N., CCLVI. But granting that the expression "attended by criminal force" is ambiguous and might include a case in which the offence involves not only the actual use of criminal force, but the show of such force, as an ingredient, it cannot be said that the expression "by such force" in the sentence "and it appears to the Court that by such force any person has been dispossessed" means the show of criminal force and not the actual use of it.

The learned Vakil for the opposite party referred to a passage in the judgment of the Court below as showing that the dispossession was by the use of force; but that would not be sufficient. It must be found that the dispossession was by the use of "criminal force" as defined in section 350 of the Indian Penal Code, the last clause of section 4 of the Code of Criminal Procedure clearly showing that the expression "criminal force" used in section 522 of the Code of Criminal Procedure must be understood in the sense in which it is defined in the Penal Code.

In this view of the matter it becomes unnecessary to consider the other questions raised before us.

The order under section 522 of the Code of Criminal Procedure must therefore be set aside.

Recognizance to keep peace—Surety bond—Liability to forfeiture—Evidence necessary—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), section 514.

The mere fact of the person for whom another stands surety being convicted of a breach of the peace ought not to be sufficient to make the surety bond executed by the latter liable to forfeiture without any evidence taken in the presence of the surety to show that the forfeiture has been incurred.

* Criminal Reference No. 268 of 1897 made by R. H. Anderson, Esq., Sessions Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 20th and 21st September 1897, against the order of F. B. Harris, Esq., District Magistrate, and Babu Uma Prosunna Guha, Deputy Magistrate of that District, dated the 27th June 1897 and the 7th May 1897 respectively.

The language of section 514 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) does not indicate that the final order making a person bound by a bond can be made without taking any evidence in his presence or giving him any opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses on whose evidence the forfeiture is held to be established.

The mere production of the original record or of a certified copy of the original record of the trial in which the principal had been convicted of breaking the peace within the period covered by a bond would not be conclusive, if indeed it would be any evidence, against the surety in a proceeding under section 514 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

REFERENCE under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) by the Sessions Judge of Mymensingh.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently from the letter of reference, the material portion of which was as follows:—

"In this case the Deputy Magistrate, Babu Uma Prosanna Guha, by a proceeding, dated 7th April 1897, called on the petitioners to show cause why bonds for Rs. 100 each which they were said to have executed as sureties for Ram Kanta Chango and Hara Charan Chango keeping the peace for a period of one year from the 20th September 1895, should not be forfeited on the ground that Hara Charan Chango and Ram Kanta Chango were convicted on the 30th October 1896 and 20th January 1897, respectively, of an offence punishable by section 324 of the Indian Penal Code committed on the 28th July 1896.

"The petitioner showed cause on the 23rd April. It will be observed that they did not distinctly admit having executed the bonds.

[441] "The Deputy Magistrate without recording any evidence forfeited the bonds by an order, dated 7th May 1897. An appeal was preferred to the District Magistrate, and dismissed on the 27th June, though the amount forfeited was in each case reduced to Rs. 50.

"In my opinion the Deputy Magistrate's order is illegal. These bonds could only be forfeited on proof taken in the presence of the petitioners that the bonds were liable to be forfeited. In the matter of Mohesh Chunder Roy, (1882) 10 C. L. R., 571; Empress v. Nobin Chunder Dutt, (1879) I. L. R., 4 Cal., 865; and In re Chandra Sekhar Rai, (1884) I.L.R., 11 Cal., 77.

"Further, as it seems to me, there should have been proof that these petitioners executed these bonds, since they did not admit they had executed them.

"Finally I have considerable doubt whether this penalty could be exacted from the sureties, when it was not exacted from the principals (see the Deputy Magistrate's order).

"With regard to the District Magistrate's remarks I would say (a) that the case of Empress v. Nobin Chunder Dutt, (1879) I. L. R., 4 Cal., 865, appears to me to have much more bearing on the question before us than the District Magistrate thinks. The question referred to the Full Bench was whether a Magistrate is bound by law to record the proof on which he proposes to forfeit a recognizance to keep the peace in the presence of the person bound by such recognizance." But the answer was this: 'A Magistrate is not justified in forfeiting a recognizance unless the party charged with a breach of the peace has had an opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses, upon whose evidence the rule to show cause has been issued.' Now, when the surety is called on to show cause why his bond should not be forfeited, it seems to me he is then legally in the position of the 'party charged with a breach of the peace.' He did not personally break it, but, in the eye of the law when the principal broke it, the surety broke it. That is what he is penalized for. As I understand the criminal law no punishment of any kind is imposed on a man unless the evidence on which the order of punishment is based is taken in his presence (or at least he has had an opportunity of being present) and he has had an opportunity of showing that on that evidence he ought not to be punished.

"(b) The second point in my reference is purely technical I admit. As, however, the petitioner's pleader urges it, and in fact it is a valid though technical objection, I think I am bound to mention it.

"(c) The third point is doubtful. I cannot say I am sure the Magistrate is wrong; still the matter is not free from doubt in a case like this where the [442] principals have been prosecuted and convicted and their bonds have not been forfeited."

No one appeared in support of the Reference.

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (BANERJEE and WILKINS, JJ.):--

Banerjee, J.—The petitioners were called upon by the Deputy Magistrate of Mymensingh under section 514 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to show cause why the bond executed by them as sureties for Ram Kant Chango and Hara Charan Chango keeping the peace for one year should not be forfeited, and why they should not each pay the amount of the bond (Rs. 100), when the said Rama Kanta Chango and Hara Charan Chango had been convicted of an offence under section 324 of the Indian Penal Code. The petitioners showed cause, but their objections were overruled, and the Deputy Magistrate without recording any evidence declared on the 7th May 1897 that the bonds were forfeited; and that order was affirmed on appeal by the Magistrate of the district on the 27th of June 1897, with this modification, that the amount forfeited in each case was reduced to Rs. 50.

The learned Sessions Judge of the District recommends that the orders of the District Magistrate and the Deputy Magistrate be reversed for three reasons: first, because they were made without taking any evidence in the presence of the petitioners; secondly, because the execution of the bond by the petitioners was neither admitted or proved; thirdly, because the principal parties not having been proceeded against, the sureties could not be made liable.

In support of the first reason the cases of Empress v. Nobin Chunder Dutt, [(1879) I. L. R., 4 Cal., 865], and In the matter of Mohesh Chunder Roy, [(1882) 10 C. L. R., 571,] are relied upon by the Sessions Judge. Though the facts of the two cases referred to are different from those of the present, the principle upon which they are based is, I think, applicable to this case, and no order declaring the forfeiture of a bond can be [443] made against any party unless the ground of forfeiture is established by evidence, which is taken in the presence of such party, or is otherwise admissible against him. The mere fact of the persons for whom another stands surety being convicted of a breach of the peace ought not to be sufficient to make the surety bond executed by the latter liable to forfeiture, without any evidence taken in the presence of the surety to show that the forfeiture has been incurred.

It is true that section 514 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by enacting that "whenever it is proved to the satisfaction of any Court by which a bond under the Code is taken that such bond has been forfeited, it shall record the grounds of such proof, and it may call upon any person bound by such bond to pay the amount or to shew cause," indicates that the evidence upon which the Court is satisfied that a forfeiture has been incurred and that the person bound by the bond should be called upon to pay or to show cause, may be taken in the absence of such person, but that does not show that the final order making him liable can be made without taking any evidence in his presence or giving him any opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses on whose evidence the forfeiture is held to be established. Where the bond is given by the person bound down to keep the peace, the judgment convicting him of a breach of the peace is admissible in evidence against him, and may form a sufficient basis for an order under section 514, he having had an opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses on whose evidence the forfeiture is held established. So also in a case in which a surety bond is given on condition that it shall be forfeited if the person for whom it is given is convicted of a breach of the peace, the judgment in the case in which such person is convicted would be admissible in evidence against the surety under section 43 of the Evidence Act as evidence of the fact of conviction, which is a relevant fact in the case.

But where, as in this case, the bond is given by a surety, and the condition in the bond is that it shall be forfeited, not if the principal party is convicted of a breach of the peace, but if he commits a breach of the peace, the judgment convicting the [444] principal of a breach of the peace is no evidence under the Evidence Act (see section 43) against the surety who was no party to it, to prove that the party bound down to keep the peace has really committed a breach of the peace. Such fact must be proved by evidence taken in the presence of the surety, unless it is admitted by him. There has been no such evidence taken in this case, nor is the fact of a forfeiture having been incurred admitted. That being so, the order complained of must in my opinion be set aside, and the amount, if realized, refunded.

In this view of the case it becomes unnecessary to determine the other two points raised in the reference. I may add, however, that the second ground is not tenable, the execution of the bond having been admitted in the argument as pointed out in the explanation of the Deputy Magistrate. Nor is there any force in the third reason. The mere fact of the principal party not being proceeded against is no ground for holding that the surety is discharged.

Wilkins, J.—I am of the same opinion. Before it can be declared that a bond executed by a surety is forfeited under section 514 of the Criminal Procedure Code, there must be a formal finding arrived at after taking evidence in the presence of such surety, which evidence must prove that the principal person has so acted as to necessitate or render it advisable that the surety should by reason of the act of the principal forfeit his bond. The mere production of the original record or of a certified copy of the original record of the trial in which the principal had been convicted of breaking the peace within the period covered by the bond, would not be conclusive, if indeed it would be any evidence against the surety in a proceeding under section 514 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The proceedings are judicial proceedings, and an order of forfeiture under section 514 can be made only after a proper judicial enquiry and upon legal evidence recorded in presence of the surety.

[445] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 19th November, 1897.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE AND MR. JUSTICE WILKINS.

Madhub Ram...........Defendant

Doyal Chand Ghose... ....Plaintiff.*

Landlord and tenant—Suit for rent—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885) sections 72 and 73 —Rule 3, chapter I of the Rules made by the Local Government under clause (2) of section 189 of the Bengal Tenancy Act—Liability for rent on change of landlord Notice of transfer—Transfer of putni right over a specific area, whether valid —Regulation VIII of 1819, sections 3 and 6—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), section 6.

Putni right over a specific area lying within a putni taluk is transferable.

Sub-section 1 of section 72 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not require that the notice therein contemplated should be given in any particular manner.

THE facts of the case, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of this report, and the arguments, appear sufficiently from the judgment of the High Court.

Babu Mohendra Nath Roy for the Appellant.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghosh, and Babu Hara Kumar Mitter, for the Respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (BANERJEE and WILKINS, JJ.) was as follows:--

Banerjee, J.— This appeal arises out of a suit for arrears of rent brought by the plaintiff-respondent on the allegation that in execution of a decree held by him against Bibi Jarao Kumari, he purchased at a sale held by public auction the interest of the said Bibi Jarao Kumari in a certain quantity of land; that the defendant holds the said land at a certain rent; and that the rent payable in respect of the period in suit is due to him from the defendant.

The defence, so far as it is necessary to be referred to for the purposes of this appeal, was to the effect that the land in suit [446] being basti land situated in Sulkea within the jurisdiction of the Howrah Municipality, the suit was not maintainable in the form in which it was brought and in the Court in which it was instituted; that there was no relation of landlord and tenant between the plaintiff and the defendant; and that the defendant was not liable for the rent claimed, and it had been paid to Bibi Jarao Kumari, and the plaintiff had given the defendant no notice of his purchase before such payment.

The first Court dismissed the suit on two grounds: first, because the plaintiff's purchase which was that of a portion of the interest of Bibi Jarao Kumari, which was a putni, was invalid in law; and, secondly, because the defendant was not exempted from liability to pay the rent in suit to Bibi

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 235 of 1896, against the decree of Babu Abinash Chunder Mitter, Subordinate Judge of Hooghly, dated the 13th of November 1895, reversing the decree of Babu Devendra Bejoy Bose, Munsif of Howrah, dated the 26th July 1894.

Jarao Kumari. On appeal by the plaintiff, the Lower Appellate Court has reversed the first Court's decision, holding that the plaintiff has acquired a valid right by his auction purchase, to claim rent from the defendant, and that the defendant must be taken to have had sufficient notice of the plaintiff's purchase after the date when the plaintiff took possession of the property purchased by him, and any payment made by the defendant subsequent to that date must be taken to have been made by him at his own risk.

In second appeal it is contended for the defendant-appellant that the decision of the Lower Appellate Court is wrong, first, because the purchase by the plaintiff of the interest of Bibi Jarao Kumari in a portion of the lands of her putni taluk was not valid in law; and, secondly, because the defendant was not liable to pay rent to the plaintiff when he did not give any notice to him in due form as required by section 72 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

In support of the first contention the learned Vakil for the appellant referred to section 3 of Regulation VIII of 1819, and argued that as property in a putni taluk was a creation of Regulation VIII of 1819, such property could arise only so far as it was recognised by that enactment; and as the Regulation did not recognise the existence of separate property in any portion of the land of a putni taluk, what was sold here was not property, i.e., was not saleable property within the meaning of [447] the law, and the plaintiff, therefore, could not have acquired any interest by his auction-purchase.

We are unable to accept this contention as sound. Though, no doubt, clause 1 of section 3 of the Putni Regulation speaks of the entire putni, section 6 affords indication of the validity, under certain conditions, of a transfer by the putnidar, extending, not only to fractional or aliquot parts of a putni taluk, but also to any alienation other than that of the entire interest, that is, to any alienation of the interest in any portion of the putni taluk, such portion not being an aliquot part or share, but being a portion of the land composing the putni. We may also refer to section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act as showing that property of the kind that has been purchased by the plaintiff in this case is transferable, and could therefore be validly attached and sold under the Code of Civil Procedure. The first contention urged on behalf of the appellant therefore fails.

In support of the second contention, reference has been made to section 72 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and to Rule 3, Chapter I of the Rules made by the Local Government under clause (2) of section 189 of the Tenancy Act; and it is argued that as the notice has not been served in the manner prescribed by the said Rule, which is of general application, and should, therefore, be held to apply to this case, the mere fact of notice being presumable from the plaintiff having taken possession, according to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, cannot be considered a sufficient compliance with section 72 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which makes the giving of notice of the transfer a condition precedent to the liability to pay rent to the transferee arising.

In answer to this contention, the learned Vakil for the respondent urges, in the first place, that the point now raised is different from that which was raised in the written statement of the defendant, in the 9th paragraph of which he said: "If the plaintiff had given any information to or served any notice on the defendant the latter could find out the proper party and pay rents considerately"; in the second place that the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act were inapplicable to this [448] case, which was a suit for rent on account of basti land situated within the limits of a Municipality; in the third place, that even if the Bengal Tenancy Act applied to this case, sub-section 1 of section 72, which is the provision relied upon, does not require the giving of the notice in any particular manner, and that the requirements of the law were fully satisfied when it was found that the defendant had notice of the purchase; and, lastly, that Rule 3 relied upon by the appellant was in its nature directory and not mandatory, and that all that was required was that the defendant should have notice of the transfer, the provisions relating to the mode in which notice ought to be served being intended only to secure a proper notice.

In answer to the first of these grounds upon which the appellant's contention has been sought to be met, the learned Vakil for the appellant points out that the defendant not only said what is stated in paragraph 9 of his written statement, but in an earlier part of that statement he urged that there had been no notice duly served. In answer to the second reason relied upon by the learned Vakil for the respondent it was urged that as the plaintiff brought his suit under the Bengal Tenancy Act, as he must have done when he claimed damages, and not interest on the arrears of rent, and the Court gave him a decree in accordance with such prayer, it was not open to the plaintiff to urge now that the case was not governed by the Bengal Tenancy Act. And as to the third and fourth grounds it was urged, in reply, that there was no distinction observed in the Bengal Tenancy Act between the giving of notice and the serving of notice, and that Rule 3 relied upon being of general application and mandatory in its character, should be held to govern this case.

We are of opinion that the first ground upon which the learned Vakil for the respondent seeks to meet the appellant's objection is not tenable, as the defendant in his defence not only said what has been pointed out in paragraph 9, but also raised the objection that no notice had been served upon him.

The question raised upon the second ground relied upon by the respondent is not altogether free from difficulty, having [449] regard to the fact that the suit was evidently brought under the Bengal Tenancy Act, and there is nothing found as to the nature and incidents of the holding at its inception; but in the view we take of the remaining two grounds urged for the respondent, it becomes unnecessary to say more with reference to this second ground. We are of opinion that sub-section 1 of section 72 does not require that the notice therein contemplated should be given in any particular manner. In the first place a comparison of sub-section 1 with sub-section 2 of that section would show that, whereas in sub-section 1 all that is said is that the tenant's liability to pay rent to the transferee would not accrue unless the transferee has, before payment to the original landlord, given notice of the transfer to the tenant, sub-section 2 enacts that where there is more than one tenant paying rent to the landlord, a general notice from the transferee to the tenants of the transfer in the prescribed manner shall be a sufficient notice for the purpose of this section. The prescribed manner, which by clause 15 of section 3 means the manner prescribed from time to time by the Local Government by notification in the official Gazette, is therefore expressly limited to the case where there are more tenants than one paying rent to the landlord. That, however, admittedly, is not the case here.

A comparison of section 72 with section 73 also bears out the same view for the notice contemplated in section 73 is required to be given to the landlord in the prescribed manner. Then, again, in other places, such as clause (b) of section 49, where a notice is contemplated, the Act speaks of the notice being served and not simply given; and Rule No. 3 of Chapter 1 of the Rules made by the Local Government under the Act, runs in these words:

"Where no other mode of service of the notice is prescribed by the Tenancy Act, or by these Rules, service shall be effected in the manner prescribed for service of summons on the defendant." This evidently shows that Rule 3 is intended to apply only to those cases where the Act speaks of the service of notice and not merely of the giving of a notice. Rule 3 may apply to cases where the Act speaks of the giving of notice if such notice is required to be given in the prescribed manner. But we do not think it would be reasonable to hold that, although the Act may speak only of the giving of a notice without the qualifying [460] words "in the prescribed manner," nevertheless a notice given in any way other than the prescribed manner should be treated as not being a sufficient compliance with the Act. Seeing that when the Legislature intended that the notice was either to be served or to be given in the prescribed manner, it has expressly said so, and seeing that in the provisions of the law, sub-section 1 of section 72, now under consideration, it has not taken care to say so, we do not think that it would be right to hold that it was nevertheless intended that notice under sub-section 1 of section 72 should be served in the prescribed manner.

What we have said above is sufficient for the disposal of the case. Were it necessary to determine the fourth point raised by the learned Vakil for the respondent, we should have been inclined to hold that Rule 3 of the Rules made under section 189, in a case like this, was intended to be only directory and not mandatory. The two grounds urged before us on behalf of the appellant, therefore, both fail; and the appeal must consequently be dismissed with costs.

We should add that we are indebted to the learned Vakils on both sides for the able arguments that have been addressed to us in this case.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Schedule II, Article 132—Mortgage—Usufructuary Mortgage—Further Mortgage of the same property—Destruction of Mortgaged property by diluvion—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), section 68, Right to sue under—Limitation.

Plaintiffs advanced money on an usufructuary mortgage of certain land in Magh 1280 (January 1873), and subsequently advanced another sum of money in Sraban 1280 (July

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1073 of 1896, against the decree of Babu Mohendra Nath Mitter, Subordinate Judge of Shahabad, dated the 1st of May 1896, modifying the decree of Babu Lalit Kumar Bose, Munsif of Buxar, dated the 8th of July 1895.

1873) on the security of the same land. The [451] land was washed away in 1892. In an action brought in 1894 under section 68 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) for the money of both the mortgages on the ground that the defendants declined to give fresh security the defendants objected that the claim as regards the mortgage of Sraban 1280 was barred before the inundation, under clause 132* Schedule II of the Limitation Act (1877), the money being due on the date of the bond.

Held, overruling the objection of limitation :—

1. With reference to the terms of the mortgage of Sraban 1280, that it was intended to add the money to the amount of the previous mortgage, and to place it on the same conditions, and that the plaintiffs were, therefore, equally entitled to sue for the money upon this mortgage as upon the other.

2. That assuming that there was a right to sue for the money, it did not follow that the plaintiffs were not entitled to have substituted for the security the money which took the place of the security.

3. That on the happening of the event provided for in section 68, the plaintiffs who were admittedly entitled to remain in possession of the property, until the moneys had been repaid, were clearly entitled to have the money substituted for the property.

THIS was a suit by the mortgagee under section 68 of the Transfer of Property Act requiring the defendants, mortgagors, to give them sufficient security for their debt, on the ground that the mortgaged property had been destroyed by inundation, and should the defendants fail to do so the suit was in the alternative for the mortgage-money. There were two mortgages in respect of the property, one a registered usufructuary mortgage, dated the 1st Magh 1280 (14th January 1873) and the other an unregistered mortgage, dated the 21st Sraban 1280 (31st July 1873). The lower Courts found that the inundations took place in Asar and Sraban 1299 (July 1892) and the present suit was brought on the 26th August 1894. One of the objections raised in defence was that the money due on the mortgage of 21st Sraban 1280 was barred by limitation. The terms of the mortgages are sufficiently set forth in the judgment of the High Court. The material portion of the Munsif's judgment was as follows :—

" The parties contracted that the money due on this mortgage bond shall not be payable immediately on the day the bond is written, but at some distant date when the rehnnama is satisfied. The plaintiffs could not, therefore, have sued at any time they liked for money due on this mortgage bond. I, therefore, am of [452] opinion that the present cause of action arose when the property was washed away. According to the statement of both the parties the plaintiffs sue within three years of that time, consequently the suit, even though it is for a personal remedy, is not barred by limitation."

The Munsif decreed the entire claim. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge held that the bond of Sraban 1280 was barred by limitation. He observed :—

" If the plaintiff's right to recover the money due under the bond is barred, he cannot recover the money under section 68 of the Transfer of Property

* [Art. 132 :—

Act on the ground of the mortgage land being lost by diluvion, for his right to recover the money being barred, the security is at an end. There being no time fixed for payment of money in the bond, limitation under article 132, Schedule II of the Limitation Act, runs from the date of the bond. Nilcomal Pramanick v. Kamini Kumar Basu (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 269).

The appeal was allowed in part and the decree of the original Court was modified by disallowing the claim in respect of the bond of Sraban 1280.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Mr. C. Gregory for the Appellants.

Moulvie Mahomed Yusuf for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Trevelyan and Stevens, JJ.), was as follows:—

In this case we are of opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge has erred in the conclusion at which he has arrived. The suit was brought under the provisions of section 68 of the Transfer of Property Act to obtain payment of certain mortgage money on the ground that the mortgaged property had been wholly destroyed by having been flooded with water. There were two mortgages, one dated Magh 1280, and the other Sraban 1280. The learned Munsif gave a decree in respect of both the mortgages. But the Subordinate Judge, while upholding the decree in respect of the mortgage of Magh, has upset it with regard to the mortgage of Sraban.

[453] The mortgage of Magh was unquestionably an usufructuary mortgage. The mortgagee was put into possession and was allowed to take the profits of the property as the interest of the money advanced by him, and the mortgagor was to pay the principal of the money on the full-moon day of any Jeyt succeeding the date of the mortgage. The second mortgage is, as we read it, clearly nothing more than a further charge of a further sum of money on exactly the same conditions as the first mortgage. It is very short, and has been translated both by the appellants' and the respondents' advisers, and there seems to be no real distinction between the two translations. Taking the translation put in by the respondents it reads in these terms: "Whereas I borrowed in cash Company's rupees 99—15 annas current coin from Madho Misser and Ram Jewan Misser, of mouzah Adrakpore, pergunnah aforesaid, I shall pay the interset thereon at the rate of one rupee per cent. I have borrowed the money along with the registered deed" (that is the deed of Magh) "in which the field of my share is 3½ bighas, and I mortgage this field for this money. I shall first pay this amount together with interest, and after that the money covered by the registered mortgage bond. Therefore I execute this document so that it may be of use when required." The document proceeds to this effect: "I have executed this document as a part of the said mortgage bond:" and in the third place we find this document incorporates the second loan with the first. Meghborn Singh, who is one of the mortgagors, when signing his name says: "I execute this bond for 100 rupees payable along with the mortgage bond." There could be nothing clearer to show that it was intended to add this money to the amount of the previous mortgage and to place it on the same conditions. It follows, therefore, we think that the plaintiff is equally entitled to sue for the money upon this mortgage as upon the other.

It has been argued that the claim in respect of this money is barred by limitation, and it is said that as the right to sue upon this mortgage was barred before the inundation, the right to sue under section 68 of the Transfer of Property Act is also barred.

In the first place it is exceedingly doubtful, to say the least of it, whether there was any right at all to sue for the money. But assuming that there was such a right, it does not by any means follow that the plaintiff is not entitled to have substituted for the security the money which takes the place of the security. It is admitted that the plaintiff is entitled to remain in possession of the property until the mortgage moneys have been repaid. Therefore in the event happening which is provided for in section 68 of the Transfer of Property Act, it is clear that the plaintiff is entitled to have the money substituted for the property. [464]

In the result, we think that the decision of the Subordinate Judge must be set aside, and that of the Munsif restored with costs in this and the Lower Appellate Court. As far as the cross objections are concerned there is nothing in them, and they must be disallowed.

CRIMINAL REVISION.

The 17th January, 1898.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE HILL AND MR. JUSTICE STEVENS.

Chairman of the Serampore Municipality............Petitioner

Inspector of Factories, Hoogly............Opposite Party.

Factories Act (XV of 1881 as amended by Act XI of 1891), sections 15 (g) and proviso (i), 17—Bengal Municipal Act (Bengal Act III of 1884), sections 320, 321—Liability for neglecting to keep a factory in a cleanly state—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), section 537—Nuisance—Sanction.

The Inspector of Factories having found the latrines of the Hastings Mill, within the Serampore Municipality, in a filthy state instituted a prosecution against the manager of the mill, but the prosecution failed. He then prosecuted as representing the Municipal Commissioners of Serampore, the Chairman of the Municipality, who, on conviction, was fined Rs. 200 for "neglecting to keep the factory free from effluvia arising from a privy," under the provisions of the Factories Act and of the Bengal Municipal Act, section 320.

Held, that the conviction of the Chairman was unsustainable on the [465] finding that the Municipality and the occupier of the factory were jointly responsible.

Held, further, that it lay upon the occupier of the factory as being primarily liable for breach of any of the provisions of the Factories Act, to give the strictest proof of circumstances exonerating himself from the liability in order to fix it on any other person.

* Criminal Revision No. 795 of 1897, against the order passed by H. F. Samman, Esq., Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Serampore, dated the 28th of October 1897.

THE Civil Medical Officer of Serampore, being the Joint Inspector of Factories, inspected the Hastings Mill, within the limits of the Serampore Municipality, and made a report to the effect that the drains and cesspits of the factory were full of filth and swarming with maggots, and that the latrines were in a neglected condition. Thereupon the Manager as the occupier of the mill was prosecuted under section 15 (g) of the Factories Act, but the prosecution failed. Upon that, the present proceedings were instituted against the Petitioner as representing the Municipal Commissioners of Serampore, under orders of the District Magistrate of Hooghly, (he being the Inspector of Factories of that District) for neglecting to keep the latrines of the Hastings Mill clean, under section 15 (g) of the Factories Act and section 320 of the Bengal Municipal Act, 1884, the Municipality having undertaken to maintain an establishment for the cleansing of public and private latrines within its limits.

The case was heard by the Sub-divisional Magistrate of Serampore, who in a summary trial convicted the petitioner under both the Acts aforesaid, and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 200.

Against this conviction the Petitioner moved the High Court on the ground, amongst others, that he was not liable under either the Factories Act or the Bengal Municipal Act for the nuisance complained of.

Mr. Caspersz (with Babu Shib Chunder Palit) for the petitioner referred to Chisholm v. Doulton, (1889) L. R., 22 Q. B. D., 736 (741), in support of the rule. The rest of the arguments appear from the judgment of the Court.

The judgment of the High Court (Hill and Stevens, JJ.) was as follows:—

This was a prosecution under clause (g), sub-section (1) of section 15 of the Factories Act (XV of 1881), as amended by section 14, Act XI of 1891.

[456] It appears that on the 20th of July last the Civil Medical Officer of Serampore, who is a Joint Inspector of Factories, inspected the Hastings Mill between the hours of 9 and 11 A.M. and found the latrines used by the operatives in a filthy state, the cause of that condition of things being that the pipe between the inner and the main outer cesspools had become blocked with solid nightsoil, jute and other things.

In the first place a prosecution was instituted against the manager of the mill, but the prosecution failed.

The present case was then instituted.

The sanction required by proviso (1) to section 15, Act XV of 1881, as amended by section 14, Act XI of 1891, was accorded to the prosecution of the Municipal Commissioners of Serampore. Process was at first issued against the Chairman of the Municipality. An order was afterwards passed for the issue of summons to all the Municipal Commissioners, but it was eventually revoked, and the case proceeded against the Chairman, who is described in the summary-trial record made by the Sub-divisional Magistrate by whom the case was tried as "representing the Municipal Commissioners of Serampore." In that capacity the Chairman was convicted of "neglecting to keep a factory free from effluvia arising from a privy" and under the provisions of clause (g), sub-section (1) of Act XV of 1881 read with section 17 of the same Act and section 320 of Bengal Act III of 1884 he was sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 200, which the Magistrate directed to be paid out of the Municipal fund.

The ground on which the Municipality has been found to be liable is that under section 320 of Bengal Act III of 1884, it has undertaken to maintain an establishment for the cleansing of public and private latrines within its limits, that it levies a fee from the Hastings Mill accordingly under the provisions of section 321, and that it is therefore bound under section 320 to " make suitable provision " for the cleansing of the latrines of the mill. The criminal liability under section 15 of Act XV of 1881 is held by the Magistrate to attach to the Municipality by the operation of the latter part of section 17 of the Act as amended by Act XI of 1891. That section runs as follows :—

[457] " Every occupier of a factory shall be deemed primarily liable for any breach therein of this Act or of any order or rule made thereunder; but he may discharge himself from such liability by proof that such breach was committed by some other person without his knowledge or consent, and in that case the person committing such breach shall be liable therefor "

We are now asked to set aside the conviction on several grounds, of which the principal are that the proceedings are informal, because the person prosecuted was the Chairman of the Municipality, whereas the sanction accorded was for the prosecution of the Municipal Commissioners ; that sections 15 and 17 of the Factories Act refer only to persons immediately connected with a factory ; that there is nothing to show that the Municipal Act is to be read with the Factories Act; that there is no provision of law authorising the prosecution of Municipal authorities, and that in any case neither the Municipality nor the Chairman can be held liable under the provisions of section 17 of the Factories Act on the Magistrate's own finding, that the manager of the factory and the Municipality were jointly responsible for the obstruction which was the primary cause of the nuisance.

We may remark in passing that we are not prepared to say that the sanction did not sufficiently comply with the provisions of section 15 of the Factories Act and even assuming it to be otherwise, the defect would, we think, be cured by the provisions of section 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It does not seem to us necessary to enter at length into a consideration of all the questions which have been raised before us, because we are clearly of opinion that assuming that the Municipal Committee or their Chairman could at all be made criminally liable under the provisions of section 17 of the Factories Act, the conviction is unsustainable on the findings of the Magistrate.

It has been found that a special establishment of sweepers is maintained by the Municipality for the cleansing of the latrines of the mill, but that they receive an extra allowance from the mill for night work, and are required to report themselves during the night to the mill officers. The Magistrate has held accordingly that the Municipality has undertaken the responsibility of [458] keeping the latrine clean by day, and the mill that of keeping it clean by night. It has not been found that the establishment of sweepers provided by the Municipality is insufficient ; but it has been found that neglect on the part of the sweepers brought about the direct cause of the nuisance, namely, the obstruction of the pipe between the cesspools, and that for that obstruction the mill ,and the Municipality are jointly responsible. The Magistrate has, however, here drawn a subtle distinction in which we are unable to follow him. He says that, although the mill and the Municipality are jointly responsible for that which caused the effluvia to arise, the Municipality must be held responsible for the arising of the effluvia, because the discovery of the effluvia by the inspecting officer took place in the day time, when it was the turn of the Municipality to keep the latrine clean. He goes on to deal with the question whether the occupier of the mill had knowledge of the existence of the nuisance, and he concludes with the proposition that though it is possible that the occupier was aware of it, the burden of proving this lay upon the Municipality,- a proposition which seems to us clearly erroneous.

The provision of section 17 of the Factories Act, by virtue of which this conviction has been had against the Chairman of the Municipality, is of a highly penal character and must be construed strictly in favour of the accused. We think that in order to fix liability on any person other than the occupier of a factory it is incumbent upon the latter to give the strictest proof of circumstances exonerating himself, and it is plain on the face of the section that the burden of proving absence of knowledge or consent on his part lies entirely upon him.

In the present case on the Magistrate's finding of joint responsibility the occupier is not discharged from his liability under section 15 of the Factories Act and therefore the liability cannot be fixed on any other person. The conviction is for this reason unsustainable.

We accordingly set it aside, and direct that the fine, if realised, or so much thereof as may have been realised, be refunded.

B. D. B. Conviction set aside.

[459] PRIVY COUNCIL.

The 2nd, 6th, 8th July and 10th December, 1897.

PRESENT:

LORDS HOBHOUSE, MACNAGHTEN, AND MORRIS, AND SIR R. COUCH.

Dowlat Koer............Proponent

versus

Ramphul Das and others............Impugnants.

[On appeal from the High Court at Fort William in Bengal.]

Will—Evidence as to execution.

The question whether an alleged Hindu will was genuine or not was raised by the relations of the deceased, on an application, under the Probate and Administration Act V of 1881, for administration with the will annexed, filed by the proponent.

It was held upon evidence, which was very conflicting, in some respects obscure and unsatisfactory, and in reference to which the Court below had differed, that the will was genuine, and that the High Court was not justified in reversing a decree to that effect.

It was also held that it is the duty of a Judge in such cases patiently to investigate the actual facts, placing himself as it were in the position of the alleged testator with all his actual surroundings; not to approach the subject from the point of view of what a testator ought or would be likely to have done on some preconceived idea of Hindu usages and habits of thought.

APPEAL from a decree (10th July 1891) of a Divisional Bench of the High Court, reversing a decree (11th November 1893) of the District Judge of Gaya.

This appeal arose out of a petition filed on the 9th June 1893 by the appellant for administration, with the will annexed, of Narain Das, which purported to be for her benefit. It was dated the 18th May 1893, and the testator died on the 3rd June following. The proponent stated that she was one of the widows of the testator, who died at his residence at Tikari in the Gaya District, leaving, beside herself, another widow named Rajkali, a mother named Uttim, and a brother named Babban Das, who were the present respondents. The latter filed objections to the will impugning it as not the genuine will of Narain Das.

The disputed will, after reciting that the testator had married three wives, of whom Rajkali and Dowlut Koer were alive, proceeded thus, as translated :—

[460] " Whereas shortly after my marriage with Massumat Rajkali Koer, and the performance of her ruckhsarti ceremony, I cut off all communication with her on account of her bad temper, disobedience, and also for several other reasons, and have kept my connection only with Massumat Dowlat Koer, my third wife, because she is the only wife who has been obeying and serving me, and has all along kept me pleased and happy by her amiable conduct and obedience. Therefore I, the declarant, have always been living with her alone. And whereas my second wife Rajkali Koer has been residing against my wishes with Ramphul Das alias Babban Das, my brother who is a drunkard, and a bad character, and who has always lived separate from me, and with whom I, the declarant, have ceased to have any connection."

He then left his whole property, as the alleged will declared, absolutely to the proponent subject to monthly charges of Rs. 25 each in favour of Rajkali Koer and Uttim Koer. The document bore the signatures of the testator and twelve witnesses, including that of the writer.

The facts of the case are stated in their Lordships' judgment, where the judgment of the District Judge, Mr. Alfred C. Brett, is referred to, and the terms of his order appear. Both the Judges in the Appellate Court alluded to the alleged will having made no provision, except a subsistence allowance, for the other wife or for the mother of the testator, or for his own shrad, and examined the evidence at length. The evidence as to the execution of the will was, in the opinion of the Appellate Court, such that the Judge should have declined to act on it. That evidence they considered to have become less valuable upon an endeavour to test it by the probabilities derived from the face of the will itself, and other sources. The Judge, in their judgment, should have held the will unproved.

On this appeal—

Sir E. Clarke, Q. C., Mr. J. D. Mayne, and Mr. J. T. Woodroffe, appeared for the Appellant.

Mr. H. H. Asquith Q.C., and Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the Respondents.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

Lord Macnaghten.—The only question in this case is whether a certain paper writing, purporting to be dated the 18th of May 1893, and to bear the signature of Narain Das, who died on the following 3rd of June, is his will or a forgery.

[461] The instrument in dispute was propounded on the 9th of June 1893 by the appellant Dowlat Koer, who was living with Narain Das as his wife at the time of his death, and had lived with him for about twenty years on that footing, whether she was lawfully married to him or not. It was challenged at once by the three respondents Babban Das, a younger brother of Narain Das, Uttim Koer his mother and Rajkali Koer his wife, and his only living wife, if Dowlat was not married to him.

After a trial which lasted fourteen days Mr. Brett, the District Judge of Gya, found for the will and decided in favour of the appellant, but refused her the costs of the suit on the ground that, the will was not registered. On appeal to the High Court Mr. Brett's decision was reversed by TREVELYAN and AMEER ALI, JJ. They dismissed the appellant's petition with costs in both Courts.

In any view of the case there is much that is obscure and much that is unsatisfactory. But after carefully considering all the circumstances, and giving due weight to the objections of the learned Judges of the High Court, their Lordships have no hesitation in accepting the conclusion at which the District Judge arrived and pronouncing in favour of the will.

Narain Das seems to have been a little over fifty years of age when he died. He was a man of low caste --a Bari At one time he was a table attendant of the Rani Asmod Koer. For some services to the Raja Run Bahadur, who became her heir, he was rewarded by valuable mokurruri grants and thus acquired a good deal of property. When in the service of the Rani he formed a connection with Dowlat Koer, a maid servant in attendance on his mistress and then a young widow. Dowlat Koer says that Narain Das married her in privacy according to the simple rites of the "Sagai" ceremony. The respondents represent her as merely a concubine discarded in favour of the lawful wife. The District Judge thought the weight of evidence was in support of Dowlat's contention. Their Lordships agree with him in this. It seems more probable that there was a marriage between Narain and Dowlat than that there was not. The point, however, is not very material. Nor is it material to enquire whether Narain's connection with Dowlat when it first [462] began preceded or followed his marriage with Rajkali. There again if it were necessary to come to a conclusion their Lordships would be disposed to agree with the District Judge, who does not seem to have fallen into the error attributed to him by the High Court of mistaking dates by confusing the younger Rani with the elder. Be that as it may, it is quite plain that Dowlat was not abandoned for Rajkali. For many years and down to Narain's death Dowlat was the favourite, and her influence with him seems to have been paramount. He had no issue. Rajkali and Dowlat were both childless and so was his first wife who died before he married Rajkali.

Narain had two houses within the enclosure known as the fort of Tikari. They stood about 400 yards apart. One is spoken of as the north house, the other as the south house. The south house, according to the District Judge who inspected both, is in every way the larger, the more convenient, and the better built of the two. It was bought in Dowlat's name and rebuilt by Narain for her accommodation. "After he had made a fine place of it," says one of the witnesses for the respondents, "he put Dowlat into it." In this house Narain lived with Dowlat, and her nephew Tunu, who was Narain's treasurer or cashier, and her brother Chhedi, who used to be addressed by Narain as "Chhedi Bai" or "brother Chhedi." Narain's office was there. There he kept all his valuables, his deeds, his money, and his jewels, and there the customary nuzzars or complimentary offerings were presented in his honour. The north house was a humbler edifice and maintained on a poorer scale. It was occupied by Uttim and Rajkali and Babban and Babban's two wives. "In the north house," said Babban in cross-examination, "we got no fixed monthly allowance from Narain; but I should say he sent us at the average Rs. 50 a month. His net income was say Rs. 20,000 a year."

It is common ground that Narain's illness lasted five or six months. Though he seems to have been confined to the house during the greater part of that period, and though he was gradually getting worse, it is not disputed that he was perfectly competent to dispose of his property at the time when he is said to have made his will. In fact he did not become insensible until [463] the last few days, or, as Babban says, the last few hours before he died.

In these circumstances if it could be shown that Narain was minded to settle his affairs before his death, or willing to face the question at all, one would certainly expect to find provision made for Dowlat Koer and her relations. They seem to have held the first place in his affections. At any rate they were about him during his long illness. They must have foreseen the end. They were hardly likely to be indifferent to their own interests, or to shrink from pressing their own claims and disparaging the merits or exaggerating the faults of absent rivals. On the other hand, the inmates of the north house for all practical purposes were out of sight. What amount of intercourse there was between the north house and the dying man it is impossible to say. It is admitted that Uttim often came to see Narain during his last illness. Rajkali came but once, if Dowlat and Tunu are to be believed. Dowlat speaks of one visit by Babban and Rajkali. She puts the date of that visit, "soon after the deed to Tunu," which will be mentioned presently and which was dated the 28th of April 1893. "They remonstrated with Narain," says Dowlat, "for alienating his property to my relations. They spoke contemptuously of me. This led to the interchange of abuse and they left in anger." Tunu also says that Rajkali came once to complain and that Narain's reply was this: "All the property is mine to deal with as I like." On this part of the case unfortunately no help is to be got from the other side. They pretended that Narain never ceased to live with the inmates of the north house. Uttim and Rajkali and Babban too in his examination-in-chief say that Narain lived continuously at the north house, that he fell ill there, that about two months before he died they took him to the south house for change of air, and migrated with him in a body. "We all stayed there," says Rajkali, "till the death of Narain, and then we said 'let us go and worship at the house where our family gods are' "—and so they all migrated back to the north house on the following morning. The District Judge, who examined the ladies himself, had no difficulty in rejecting this story as an impudent attempt to impose upon the Court. It is shown to be untrue by the ignorance which Uttim [464] and Rajkali both displayed about the south house. I do not believe, says Mr. Brett, they were there at all. It is disproved by entries in the accounts and by Babban's own admissions on cross-examination. It is directly contradicted by a petition signed and presented by Babban himself on the 28th of May asking for the intervention of the police to prevent Dowlat and her relatives despoiling the south house on Narain's approaching death. Narain Das, it is stated in the petition, "has been ill in his residential house for the last five or six months. Now he is becoming worse, and there is no hope of his life, he may die to-day or to-morrow. Babu Narain Das has a kept woman who lives along with her brother and sister's son with the said Babu Saheb."

About six weeks before his death Narain made a partial disposition of his property. The evidence does not explain what led him to do so. But the fact is undisputed and not unimportant.

On the 21st of April 1893 he executed in favour of Chhedi a permanent and heritable mokurruri lease of a mouzah producing, according to Babban, a net annual profit of Rs. 600, a sum just equal to the annual allowance he was making for the north house. The lease was duly registered on the 23rd by the sub-registrar who attended at the south house for the purpose.

On the 28th of April Narain executed in favour of Tunu a permanent and heritable mokurruri lease of a mouzah called Khurey producing, according to Babban, a net annual profit of Rs. 3,000. It was duly registered on the 30th. This lease, as originally drawn and executed, was in favour of Dowlat. It was intended to have the document in that form registered at the same time as the lease to Chhedi. A petition stating its execution and asking the sub-registrar to attend for the purpose of registering it was presented on the 22nd, together with a similar petition relating to Chhedi's lease. But when the sub-registrar came he was asked to postpone the registration of the lease of Khurey on the ground that some alteration was required, and the writer of the deed was not present. A petition was then put in stating that only one deed [465] was ready, and so only the lease to Chhedi was registered on that occasion. So far there is no dispute. There is a conflict of evidence as to the reason for not completing the registration of the lease of Khurey as originally drawn. Babban says he was told "one afternoon" when he was in the north house "about six weeks before Narain's death" that one "Gur Sahai had come from Gya with a lease." "I went over," he adds, "to see what was up. I saw my brother and Gur Sahai and Tunu and others. I asked Narain what he was doing. He said 'I am giving a life lease of Khurey to Dowlat.' She was on one side. He commenced to sign his name. He had got half through the signature when Gur Sahai said the deed was hereditary. Then Narain refused to sign and flung the paper down." Dowlat's account of the transaction is this: "Narain was ill," she says, "five or seven months. After he got ill he gave a lease to my brother Chhedi and to Tunu, my sister's son. To Tunu he gave the lease of Khurey. He had intended to give me the lease, perpetual lease. This was written out, but I refused. I said 'You give one village to Chhedi and want to give one to me; what is to become of the rest?' He said 'I will give the rest to Tunu.' I said 'No' give Khurey to Tunu and give me the rest.' He consented. The lease to me was destroyed and Khurey was leased, perpetual lease, to Tunu eight days afterwards." Babban's story cannot be true. It is extremely improbable; the lease to Chhedi and the lease to Dowlat were both prepared on Narain's written instructions; the lease given to Chhedi was hereditary; the lease given afterwards to Tunu was hereditary too. But apart from the improbability of the story it will be observed that there is no room for the incident described by Babban. It could not have happened on the 21st, for the petition of the 22nd asking the sub-registrar to come over states that the lease was executed. It could not have happened on the 23rd. Babban says it was in the afternoon that he went over to see what was up. But the sub-registrar, who is above all suspicion, and who was called for the respondents, after stating that on the 22nd of April two petitions were put in to him to go to Tekari "to register two deeds executed by Narain Das," says: "I went on 23rd April arriving there very early; it was the hot weather. I saw Narain. He [466] had two deeds. But he apparently wished to amend one but could not find the writer." Dowlat's account may be true. To a certain extent she is corroborated by Babban himself. After stating that Khurey was afterwards given as a hereditary lease to Tunu he adds: "This was on the advice of Dowlat Koer." Whether Babban had any special reason for saying so or not the statement is a remarkable tribute to the influence which Dowlat had over Narain.

Putting aside the visit of Rajkali and Babban to complain of alienations of property in favour of Dowlat's relations (if the visit really took place), the evidence is a blank as to what occurred between the date of the gift to Tunu and the 18th of May, the date of the alleged will. Dowlat Koer says that between the date she refused the lease and the date the will was given she had no talk about the will with her husband. She felt sure, she says, that he would do what he promised. Her reticence on the subject of the. will during the period in question was naturally commented upon by the learned Counsel for the respondents. It is certainly a matter for observation. But it does not go very far. It is possible that Dowlat's story may be true throughout. It is at least as possible that it may be true in the main, though she may have deviated from the truth in her anxiety to make out that Narain was ready to fulfil his promise of his own free will and without any pressure from her.

The document put forward as Narain's will and the fulfilment of his promise to Dowlat is simple enough in its dispositive clauses. His entire property is left to Dowlat Koer absolutely subject to the payment to Uttim and Rajkali each of Rs. 25 a month.

The document purports to bear the signature of Narain Das and the signatures of twelve witnesses including the writer.

No one comes forward to say that Narain's alleged signature is not his own handwriting, and yet his handwriting must have been well known to some of the persons who were witnesses for the respondents. The District Judge notices the point, but observes that it may have been an accidental omission, and says that he does not wish to lay too much stress upon it. The omission, however, acquires much greater signi- [467] ficance from what took place in the Court of Appeal. One of the learned Judges in the High Court was familiar with the native character, and evidently not disposed to overlook the assistance to be derived in such a question as this from a comparison of handwriting. He scrutinized the signatures appended to the document in question. He saw, or thought he saw, some indication tending to show that the signatures had not all been written at the same time. He compared the signature of one witness with a signature which that witness subscribed to his deposition in Court, and came to the conclusion that the two signatures were not made by the same person. But as to the signature of Narain Das, he says nothing, although he had actually before him in documents put in evidence signatures of Narain which were unquestionably genuine.

The alleged writer of the will was one Sheo Pershad, a young mukhtar. It seems that in May 1893 there was a local investigation going on in regard to some litigation in connection with a village called Paluhan, which was situated about two miles from Tikari. A number of lawyers and others concerned in the inquiry were gathered together at Tikari. Among them came Sheo Pershad and Sheo Sahai, another young mukhtar. They put up in the same house at Tikari. They were old acquaintances, they said, of Narain. They heard he was ill and went to see him on the 12th. On the 16th he sent for them and consulted them about making over his property to Dowlat Koer. At first a deed was suggested, but the amount of the stamp duty seemed a formidable objection, and so after some discussion they advised a will. He told them how he wished to dispose of his property and they prepared a draft from his verbal instructions. It was their joint production. They left the draft with Narain that evening. On the evening of the 18th they were summoned again to Narain's house in order to complete the transaction. Sheo Pershad "faired out" the draft. Witnesses were collected and the will was duly executed. They both saw Narain execute it and they both attested his execution. That was their story. Of the other ten seven deposed to seeing Narain sign the will. They signed as witnesses and saw the other witnesses sign. That leaves three of the alleged witnesses to be accounted for. One [468] was absent from illness. The remaining two were Kali Churn and Bunkey Behari, a young pleader in the Gya Court, whose name on the will appears in English with the word "witnessed" also in English before it. Kali Churn was summoned as a witness by the petitioner. He evaded service and then was arrested. When he was brought into Court neither side would call him. He was called by the Judge. He said the writing of his name on the will resembled his, but was not his, and he tried to make out an alibi. The Judge did not believe the alibi and thought his evidence of no weight. Bankey Behari was also distrusted by both sides and called by the Judge. He admitted that one day just after the application for probate when he was in the Bar Library he was taxed with having signed Narain's will and that he did not deny it directly. What he said was, "As far as I recollect I have not signed any will." "Those," he adds, "were the words I uttered. I meant to absolutely deny my signature. But I did not say that I had never signed." Before Mr. Brett he was more positive and more intelligible. He declared that his name on the document in dispute was not his signature. "My signature," he said, "has been forged." To some extent, however, his evidence curiously corroborates the appellant's case. He admits that on the evening of the 18th of May somebody came to him and said Narain wanted him. "The messenger," he says, "told me that Narain Das had heard I was in Tikari, and that others were with him and he wanted to see me as he was ill. He said, perhaps, that the men were writing something." "My grandfather," he said in another part of his evidence, "was a pleader of the Raj, and Narain Das had been an influential servant, so it did not strike me as peculiar that he sent for me." All this is entirely in accordance with the story told by the witnesses for the appellant. As to what followed there is a direct conflict of evidence. The appellant's witnesses say, Bankey Behari obeyed the summons and witnessed Narain's will. He says he "was tired and did not go," showing, as the Judge thought, an indifference to his professional prospects remarkable, to say the least of it, in so youthful a practitioner. The District Judge in whose Court he practises did not believe him. The High [469] Court did. They found no resemblance between the signature he made at the foot of his deposition in Court and the signature shown to him a few minutes before and denounced by him as a forgery. They seem to have thought a difference in the handwriting at that critical moment conclusive in his favour. Moreover, they thought the writing on the will "an unformed writing like that of a schoolboy"—the signature "of a beginner just learning to write," while the signature on the deposition was "in the running hand of a person much accustomed to writing in English." On the other hand, the District Judge observes that the words on the will have a genuine look about them . . . . they do not look like an imitation. Their Lordships have had the will before them. So far as regards the character of the writing they are unable to agree with the learned Judges of the High Court. No fault is to be found with the signature. It seems to be written boldly and would pass for the writing of a well educated English gentleman.

It is unnecessary to discuss in detail the evidence of the witnesses for the appellant. The District Judge has gone through it very carefully noticing apparently everything that struck him as suspicious in statement or demeanour. On the whole he came to the conclusion that there was no sufficient reason for refusing credence to the appellant's story. One circumstance may be noticed in passing which, in the view of TREVELYAN, J., tells strongly against the appellant, while the District Judge thinks it throws no light on the case. It is this: Narain's accounts were kept by Tunu. The accounts for the last year are missing. If they had been forthcoming, and if they could have been trusted, they might have been useful in clearing up some disputed points. The absence of these accounts gave rise to a good deal of argument before the District Judge. But he was, he says, "unable to form any definite opinion as to the question as to on whom the disappearance casts suspicion." TREVELYAN, J., felt no difficulty on that score. "There is," he says, "no doubt to my mind that this book can only have been kept back by Dowlat's party." And then he proceeds to draw the inference which suppression of evidence invariably suggests. Their Lordships do not think it by any means clear [470] that Dowlat's party ought to be held accountable for the non-production of the last year's book of accounts. At any rate, it is obvious, that an unscrupulous man concerned in forging a will would not scruple to manipulate accounts for his own purposes, if he thought he could do so without fear of detection. As the whole book was written up by Tunu, there would be no difficulty in his replacing an incriminating page by a new leaf with all necessary entries to confirm his story. It is difficult to see why Tunu should have suppressed a piece of evidence which he might so easily have made to serve his purpose.

The District Judge and the learned Judges of the High Court both deal with the main question at issue on a broad view of the whole case. It is little wonder that they come to opposite conclusions, for they approach the matter from very different points of view. Patiently, and with every appearance of impartiality, the District Judge sets himself to investigate the actual facts. He tries to place himself in the position of the alleged testator with all his actual surroundings. On the other hand, AMEER ALI, J., who claims to be intimately acquainted with the usages and habits of thought of his Hindu fellow-countrymen, though not himself, it may be presumed, a member of their community, approaches the question from the point of view apparently of a pious Hindu gentleman, scrupulous and exact in the discharge of every moral and religious duty--so scrupulous indeed and so exact that in the opinion of the learned Judge it becomes a matter of grave importance that no provision is to be found in the will for the worship of a family idol, whose worship, as it appears, was maintained during the testator's lifetime by the annual expenditure of the sum of one rupee. Tried by so high a standard the will is found wanting in many things. But for all that it is not an unlikely disposition for such a man as Narain Das to have made under the circumstances. As regards the monthly allowance to Uttim and Rajkali it will be observed that the aggregate of the two allowances is precisely the sum which Narain had been in the habit of providing for the maintenance of the north house. And it is perhaps remarkable that the allowance to Uttim, which seems to the High Court so niggardly as to throw doubts on the genuine-[471]ness of the will, is the exact amount which Rajkali and Babban allotted to her when they assumed to divide the inheritance between them on the 6th of July 1893 under a deed of compromise.

The learned Judges of the High Court have embarked upon an enquiry as to the truth of the charges against Rajkali and Babban contained in the introductory part of the will. Their Lordships cannot think that the enquiry is much to the purpose. There is certainly no evidence in support of these charges. But in estimating their value and importance one cannot help seeing that something must be attributed to the zeal of the two young mukhtars who would probably exert all their skill to amplify and embellish whatever Narain may have said in disparagement of those whom he proposed to disinherit. Something, too, may be due to the ill-feeling between the inmates of the two houses which must have been tolerably bitter, if one is to judge from the steps which Babban thought fit to take against Dowlat, when Narain lay a-dying. Whatever the will may say to the discredit of Babban, all that seems to be alleged against Rajkali is ill-temper coupled with disobedience. We know that Narain preferred living with Dowlat whatever the reason was. The will hints at "several other reasons"—a suggestion one would think too vague to be taken seriously. But in its vague generality, AMEER ALI, J., finds a deep meaning. He has no doubt that those apparently innocent words were intended to convey "an insinuation of unchastity." It is obviously quite impossible to accept that construction on the faith of a statement, whatever may be its source or apparent authority, which the appellant had no opportunity of meeting by direct evidence or testing by cross-examination. In the Court of First Instance, as far as we can see, the point was not even suggested. It is not alluded to in any one of the 27 reasons set forth in the memorandum of appeal, and certainly it is satisfactory to find that it escaped the notice of Rajkali and her advisers. In her petition of objection put in on the 14th of July 1893 she alleges that "several of the statements made in the alleged will are false." She avers that "she was never disobedient to her husband nor was he ever displeased with her," but she makes no reference to the imputation of unchastity which she naturally would have resented, [472] if she had supposed that the will contained any insinuation of the sort. In the course of the litigation and at the trial the appellant certainly made a direct charge of unchastity against Rajkali, a charge for which there appears to have been no foundation whatever. But it would be a mistake to connect that charge with anything in the will. It seems to have been provoked by the attacks which Babban and Rajkali made on the appellant at the time of Narain's death. Insulted as she was and treated with great cruelty it is hardly surprising that Dowlat Koer should attempt to retaliate with any weapon she could think of.

Some minor points were pressed. There was the non-registration of the will—due perhaps to Narain's state at the time. Then it was said that the witnesses to the will were in social position inferior to the persons who attested the lease to Chhedi and the lease to Tunu. That may be accounted for by the circumstances under which the will was executed, and after all the inferiority may not have been so great as it was represented. At least we find that one of the witnesses to the two leases, who is described as a "rais" or "big man," says of himself "my profession is service, but I am not in any employ." Then it was pointed out that the witnessses to the will were on their own showing singularly reticent as to the transaction in which they say they were engaged. So they were, and this reticence is one of the difficulties in the case. But even here the evidence is not all one way. Sheo Pershad, for example, says he told some mukhtars. Among others, he says, he told Gopal Lal whom he pointed out in Court. About the 23rd May he says he told him that Narain Das was ill and had made a will. Now Gopal Lal seems to have been an adherent of Babban and to have been the writer of the deed of compromise between Babban and Rajkali which has already been mentioned, and he was not called to contradict Sheo Pershad's statement.

It is not necessary, however, to discuss these points further. On a review of the whole case their Lordships are of opinion that the appellant has established the genuineness of the will, and that the High Court were not justified in overruling the decision of the District Judge.

[473] Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise Her Majesty that the decision of the High Court ought to be reversed with costs and the judgment of the District Court restored. The respondents will pay the costs of the appeal.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

The 11th November and 8th December, 1897.

PRESENT:

LORDS WATSON, HOBHOUSE, AND DAVEY, AND SIR R. COUCH

Suleiman Kadr Bahadur............Plaintiff

versus

Mehndi Begum............Defendant.

[On appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh.]

Benami Transaction—Onus of Proof—Purchase, ism farzi, in the name of a person other than the real purchaser—Proof of the actual transaction.

In liquidation of a mortgage debt the mortgagors sold the mortgaged property and executed a sale deed with a recital that they had received from the wife of the mortgagee the amount of the mortgage debt and interest with also a small sum of money.

In after years the husband, now plaintiff, and the wife, defendant, contested which o the two was the real purchaser.

Held, that the burden of proving that the mortgagee gave the consideration for the sale was upon him at the outset, as he claimed contrary to the tenor of the admitted document; which burden had been discharged by his evidence that the substantial consideration for the sale by the mortgagors was the extinction of the mortgage debt due to him.

This proof shifted on to the wife the burden of showing that this extinction was effected by her money, or of showing that she had continuous possession in accordance with the sale deed. She did not prove that any money was paid by her, either to the vendors or to the mortgagee; nor was there such an amount of possession proved as affected the question either way. The conclusion was that the wife's name was used ism farzi for the husband's, as alleged.

APPEAL from a decree (11th August 1892) reversing a decree (12th April 1890) of the District Judge of Lucknow.

The plaintiff in the suit giving rise to this appeal was Mirza Suleiman Kadr, and the defendant was his wife, Nawab Mehndi [474] Begum Sahiba, who was living apart from her husband. Both were members of the ex-Royal family of Oudh. (See I. L. R., 21 Cal., 135.)

The question between them was as to which of them was the real purchaser of the property in suit under a purchase evidenced by deed of the 14th May 1875, which purported to convey to the wife, an arrangement which the husband, now appealing, contended was ism farzi for himself.

On the 10th May 1870, before the marriage of the parties which took place in July 1871, the plaintiff became mortgagee of the property (houses in Lucknow) for Rs. 8,500, at 6 per cent. per annum repayable in five years.

On the 14th May 1875, while the parties were still living together, the mortgagors executed a sale deed of the property to the wife. The recitals and other contents of that document appear in their Lordships' judgment. In 1886 the husband and wife separated, and this suit was commenced on the 2nd August 1888. The plaint alleged that the possession of the property by the wife began in May 1888, and prayed a declaration that the sale deed had been taken by the husband as purchaser in his wife's name, he being the real vendee, and that the transaction was ism farzi for his benefit. The defence was that the wife had purchased the property with her own money in 1875, having since then been in adverse proprietary possession.

The issue raised questions on these contentions, and the District Judge decided that " the sale deed was fictitiously executed in the defendant's name," making a decree which declared the plaintiff entitled to the property.

The Appellate Court, composed of the Judicial Commissioner and the Additional Judicial Commissioner, reversed the lower Court's decree. In their judgment the plaintiff had failed to discharge the burden of proof upon him, both as to title and possession. They dismissed the suit with costs in both Courts.

The plaintiff having appealed, -

Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the appellant, argued that the respondent had not proved the payment of the purchase money by her, [475] or her possession for more than a brief period, it having been necessary for her to prove her case, when it had been shown that the consideration for the purchase of the property was the discharge and extinction of the mortgage debt. The appellant had explained why the sale deed had been in the name of the respondent; so that the source of the money, whereby the mortgage and sale were obtained, was the governing question. The whole evidence was before the Appellate Court to consider its effect.

Mr. J. D. Mayne, for the respondent, referred to the burden of proof that was on the plaintiff to outweigh the presumptions that arose from the statements in the sale deed. The use of the wife's name, and those statements threw the burden on to the appellant, and it had not been effectively discharged.

Mr. C. W. Arathoon, in reply, referred to the judgment in Sham Lall Mitra v. Amarendro Nath Bose, (1895) I. L. R., 23 Cal., 460, (475). This had cited Debia Chowdhrain v. Bimola Soondree Debia, (1874) 21 W. R., 422, as establishing, on the authority of Ram Surran Singh v. Pran Peary, (1870) 13 Moo. I. A., 551, that the right of a party to an ism farzi transaction of this kind was to have the true position ascertained, and that effect should be given to it, although he had taken part in concealing it at another time.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered on the 8th December 1897 by Lord Davey.—The appellant is a son of the late King of Oudh. The respondent is his wife. They were living together in the year 1875, but in the year 1886 they separated and they have since lived apart. By a mortgage bond, dated the 10th May 1870, two ladies mortgaged certain houses and lands to the appellant to secure Rs. 8,500 with interest at the rate of 8 annas per cent. per mensem for a stipulated period of five years. Nothing was paid by the mortgagors on account of either principal or interest, and on the 14th May 1875 a sale deed of the mortgaged property was executed by the mortgagors, whereby, after reciting the mortgage and that the mortgagors had not been [476] able to pay anything up to date, and that according to accounts it appeared that they had then to pay to the appellant the sum of Rs. 11,000 on account of principal and interest, it was witnessed that the mortgagors sold the mortgaged property in lieu of Rs. 11,000 to the respondent, and that the mortgagors having received the purchase money in full from the said vendee had paid it to the appellant in liquidation of the debt due to him under the deed of the 10th May 1870. It appears from the endorsement on the sale deed that a further sum of Rs. 250 was paid in cash to the mortgagors, and this sum seems to have found its way back into the hands of the appellant's then agent.

The question on this appeal is what the transaction recorded in this sale deed really was. The appellant contends that the sale deed was executed ism farzi (fictitiously) in the name of the respondent, and that he was the real purchaser and assumed proprietary possession of the property comprised in the deed. The respondent, on the other hand, alleges that she purchased the property in suit with her own money and has ever since been in adverse proprietary possession thereof.

The burden of proof is in the first place upon the appellant who claims against the tenor of the deed. He states in his evidence that the consideration for the sale was the mortgage money plus interest, and the sum of Rs. 250 which he says that he paid through his then agent one Achche Sahib, and again that the mortgage money was not recovered in cash but formed part of the consideration. The substance of his evidence is that no money passed in the transaction except the Rs. 250. He accounts for the production of the title deeds by the respondent by saying that they were in the custody of Achche Sahib who was formerly his agent, but had been dismissed, and who was prior to and at the time of the suit acting exclusively for the respondent. He further says that Achche Sahib advised him to have the sale deed in the name of the respondent in consequence of some threatened litigation. The appellant's evidence is confirmed by that of Kirpa Ram and Maharajah Tej Krishna Sahib who were relatives of the vendors and negotiated the transaction on their behalf. They both state that the consideration was not received in cash [477] except as to the Rs. 250, which was taken back from the vendor's agent by Achche Sahib, and that the sale deed was executed in the name of the respondent by the orders of the appellant. The evidence of the vendors, who were both purdah ladies, is less precise, but to the same effect.

It is apparent from this evidence, and indeed it is not denied, that no money in fact passed from the nominal purchaser to the vendors, and from the latter to the mortgagee, and that the narrative of the deed is not, therefore, in accordance with the facts. The effect, and doubtless the object, of the deed is to make it appear that the consideration to the vendors for the sale proceeded to them from the respondent, so as to give her an apparent title for value, whereas the real consideration to the vendors being the extinction of the mortgage debt, which was the property of the appellant, it proceeded from him. Their Lordships think that this circumstance and the other evidence of the appellant and his witnesses are sufficient to call upon the respondent for an answer and to shift the burden of proof upon her. This burden she may discharge by showing that the purchase money, though not paid by her to the vendors, was paid to the appellant out of her moneys, or by evidence of continuous possession in accordance with the deed. The respondent was called as a witness by the appellant. In her evidence she states as follows: -

"My husband told me that there was no use in keeping money, that he had a house in mortgage which I should buy, that it was very cheap, that I will get rents and that it will be sold for Rs. 11,000. I told him that he should speak to my aunt (Ammi Jan), if she accepts I will accept. The plaintiff then spoke to her and she consented. Thereupon I also consented. Then the plaintiff told my aunt that the Rani's mukhtar had come, and if she, my aunt, gives the money the plaintiff will make arrangements for the purchase. Thereupon my aunt sent Rs. 10 000 in cash with the plaintiff and asked Achche Sahib to send for the remaining Rs. 1,000 thereafter. This Rs. 10,000 belonged to me and was kept in deposit with my aunt. Then I sent Agha Nawab, my mukhtar, who got the deed executed. The plaintiff got the remaining Rs. 1,000 from Achche Sahib. The latter paid the money on my [478] behalf as my mother had told him to pay. Then Agha Nawab got the deed of sale duly executed and registered, and then gave over to me the said deed of sale as well as the mortgage deed. Agha Nawab took Rs. 250 more from me which he said the plaintiff had told him to pay to Kripa Ram, mukhtar of the Ranis. Since purchase the house in dispute has been all along in my possession . . The above facts were known to Agha Nawab, Mirza Muhammad, Daroga, Achche Sahib, Saiyid Mustafa and others whose names I cannot recollect. . . When my aunt paid the money to the plaintiff I was sleeping; when I got up my aunt told me that she had paid the money and Taijan Mahaldar told me that she had carried the money with the plaintiff." Achche Sahib states he was told that Rs. 1,000 was short and was asked to pay it, and paid it to Taijan Mahaldar and so far he confirms the respondent's evidence. He further states that he did not see the price Rs. 11,000 paid. Achche Sahib, however, was a dismissed servant of the appellant. He says he resigned the appellant's service, because the appellant gave him orders to oppress the respondent, and he is now the agent of the respondent and was made a defendant in the appellant's suit for restitution of conjugal rights. The District Judge described him as "a most shifty and unsatisfactory witness." On the other hand the respondent did not call as witnesses her aunt, her mother, Taijan, Agha Nawab or Saiyid Mustafa and there is no explanation of their absence. Nor were any questions addressed to the appellant in cross-examination with a view to showing that money was paid to him by the respondent's direction or on her behalf. There is, therefore, no real corroboration of the respondent's evidence, and their Lordships cannot accept her evidence as reliable proof that any money was paid by her either to the vendors or the mortgagee on their account.

The evidence as to possession is vague and unsatisfactory on both sides. The balance, perhaps, inclines in favour of the respondent, but in the opinion of their Lordships there is not such an amount of possession proved as to affect the question either way.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise Her Majesty [479] that the order appealed from be reversed, and instead thereof an order be made dismissing the respondent's appeal to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner with costs. The respondent will pay the costs of this appeal.

Appeal allowed.

[On appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh.]

Oudh Land Revenue Act,(XVII of 1876), sections 52, 53—Claim to resume grant.

A proprietor in Oudh claimed to resume a perpetual lease as having been granted by his ancestor at a favourable rent, without the sanction, but otherwise under the circumstances, contemplated by section 52 of the "Oudh Land Revenue Act," XVII of 1876, so that the grant was resumable.

Held, that the claim failed. The undefined charges, expenses of management, and other payments incidental to the lease, might have been such as to make the rent paid a reasonable one as between lessor and lessee; and that the favourable nature of the rate of rent had not been established.

APPEAL from a decree (8th June 1894) of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, affirming a decree (30th April 1891) of the District Judge of Rae Bareli.

The question raised on this appeal was whether a perpetual lease of three villages in the district of Partabgarh granted by a talukdar of Tarwal, the ancestor of the plaintiff, who was his heir and the devisee under his will, was or was not resumable under section 52 of the Oudh Land Revenue Act, XVII of 1876.

Section 52 enacts as follows: "All grants, whether in writing or otherwise, by proprietors, or the persons whom they represent, of land to be held exempt from the payment of rent, or at a favourable rate of rent, are hereby declared to be liable to resumption, [480] unless such grants have been sanctioned or confirmed by the Governor-General in Council or the Chief Commissioner."

The plaintiff's ancestor and predecessor in estate, Raja Ajit Singh, talukdar of Partabgarh, executed on the 7th March 1874, in favour of Bhikha Ahir, the father of the defendants, a perpetual lease (naslan bad naslan) of three villages. It was agreed in the deed of lease that the lessee should pay annually to the lessor for rent, Rs. 2,191, and should be liable to contributions such as bhent (presents), nachna presents to dancers, rasad (supply) and other dues paying also the patwaris and chaukidars, and defraying the village expenses. The lessee was not to alienate on pain of the lease becoming void.

Lessor and lessee both died in 1889.

The suit was brought on the 6th September 1890 for a declaration that the lease was liable to resumption by the present owner of the proprietary right, on the ground that it was granted at a favourable rate of rent, without the sanction referred to in section 52 of the Oudh Land Revenue Act, 1876.

The defendants, some of whom were minors, answered that the lease was not a grant within the meaning of the section, and was a lease at a reasonable rate. It was added that the villages had been granted in consideration of services during the troubles in Oudh. The Raja, having received the grant of the taluk Tarwal, thereupon made the grant of the lease now in question to the defendants' father for services at the same time.

Whether the rent was a favourable one, and whether section 52 was applicable to permit the resumption, were questions raised by the issues.

The plaintiff filed accounts showing the gross rental of the villages comprised in the lease, at the date of the grant, and at the date of suit brought.

The District Judge was of opinion that the lease was not a grant within the meaning of section 52, and that the rent reserved by the lease in 1874 was not a favourable one. He therefore dismissed the suit.

[481] On an appeal heard by a Court consisting of the Judicial Commissioner and the Additional Judicial Commissioner, the lease was held to be a grant within the meaning of the Act. But the Court found that the plaintiff had failed to prove that the lease was granted at a favourable rate of rent: and the suit was dismissed.

The material part of the Judicial Commissioner's judgment was as follows:—

"It appears to me that the words 'at a favourable rate of rent' mean at a rent which is not a fair, reasonable and equitable rent." Badlu, one of the defendants, distinctly pleaded that the rent was reasonable; and it was incumbent on the plaintiff to prove the issue framed by the lower Court, viz., whether the rent reserved by the lease was favourable.

"This the plaintiff attempted to do by producing evidence with the view of showing what the gross rental (including sair and sewai items) of the three villages was in 1280 Fasli (when the lease was granted) and 1296 Fasli (when these proceedings were instituted, respectively, according to the jamabandis, corrected where necessary by the imposition of full rents on lands held by the lessee's family. The gross rental of the three villages (including sewai and sair items) according to the jamabandis, as corrected by the patwaris, amounted to about Rs. 3,960 and 3,980 in 1280 Fasli and 1296 Fasli respectively average Rs. 3,970. According to the uncorrected jamabandis the gross rental in 1280 Fasli and 1296 Fasli was Rs. 2,728 and Rs. 3,094, respectively.

"The appellant contends that this evidence is sufficient, and that it must be inferred under the circumstances that the rent fixed by the lease (Rs. 2,191) was favourable. It appears to me, however, that it is not sufficient for the plaintiff to prove that the gross rental (including sair and sawai items) of the three villages according to the corrected jamabandis was much in excess of the rent reserved by the lease: but that it was also incumbent upon him to show by some standard or criterion that the rent reserved by the lease was not fair and reasonable, but favourable. In the absence of such standard or criterion how is the Court to determine in the case of a lease of a village whether the rent is a fair and reasonable one or otherwise? The appellant has not attempted to show by the evidence that the three villages or any of them had been previously leased or could have been leased at a rent in excess of that entered in the lease; nor has he endeavoured to show what percentage of the gross rental is ordinarily left to the lessee of a village in the pargana, district or division in which the three villages in question are situated, i. e., what percentage of the gross rental is ordinarily considered to be a fair and reasonable rent payable by the lessee of a village, and to what extent the liability to contribute bhent, nachna, rasad, etc., on the occasions of marriages and deaths in the lessor's family would affect the letting value of a village.

[482] "In the absence, therefore, of any evidence showing what rent might fairly and reasonably have been obtained by the talukdar by a perpetual lease of the three villages in question under conditions similar to those contained in the lease under consideration, I would hold that the plaintiff has failed to prove that the lease was granted at a favourable, rate of rent."

The Additional Judicial Commissioner concurred in dismissing the suit.

On the plaintiff's appeal,—

Mr. J. D. Mayne, for the appellant, argued that the lease was granted at a favourable rent within the meaning of section 52. The defendants had not denied that the rent was at a favourable rate. The amount expended by the lessee had not been stated, nor what result had followed upon expenditures. Their pleadings substantially admitted that the rate was favourable, and they accounted for its being favourable by the statement of meritorious service rendered by the grantee to the grantor; the accounts produced by the plaintiff were at all events primâ facie evidence that the rent was a favourable one and it had not been rebutted.

The respondents did not appear.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by Lord Hobhouse.—Their Lordships see no reason for differing from the Courts below in this case. The Courts below have treated the matter as a question of inquiry whether the rent was a favourable one or not, and they have held, as it appears to their Lordships quite justly, that the appellant has not produced any proof to show that the rent was a favourable rent. The undefined charges, the expenses of management, and so forth, may have been such as to make it a perfectly reasonable rent as between lessor and lessee. The case, therefore, fails, and their Lordships must humbly recommend Her Majesty that the appeal be dismissed. As the respondents do not appear there will be no costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[483] CRIMINAL REFERENCE.

The 21st December, 1897.
PRESENT:
MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE AND MR. JUSTICE HILL.

Corporation of Calcutta
Eastern Mortgage Agency Co., Ld.*

Calcutta Municipal Consolidation Act, Bengal Act (II of 1888), section 87, and Schedule II, Rule 7, clause (6)—License tax—Liability to tax of Company carrying on business through Agents in Calcutta, and not having a registered place of business.

A joint-stock company carrying on money-lending business through Agents in Calcutta, where it has no registered place of business, is liable to pay license tax under section 87 and Schedule II of the Calcutta Municipal Act of 1888.

Corporation of Calcutta v. Standard Marine Insurance Company, (1885) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 581, distinguished.

THIS was a reference made by an Honorary Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta under section 432 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882).

The facts of the case and the questions referred for the opinion of the High Court appear from the following letter of reference:—

"During the official years 1893-94, 1894-95 and 1895-96, commencing on the 1st of April and ending on the 31st March every year, Messrs. Gillanders, Arbuthnot & Co., merchants, carried on as they still carry on business in Calcutta as agents of the Eastern Mortgage Agency Company, Limited, a Joint Stock Company registered and having their principal place of business in England and having a paid-up capital of more than ten lakhs of rupees. The defendant Company have no place of business in India. The business of the Company, as carried on by their agents, Messrs. Gillanders, Arbuthnot & Co., consists in lending money on mortgages in Calcutta. The moneys so advanced belong to the defendant Company, and the profit or loss in those transactions accrues to the defendant Company, and not to Messrs. Gillanders, Arbuthnot & Co. Messrs. Gillanders, Arbuthnot & Co., take out licenses in their own name for the business carried on by them in Calcutta, and have done so for the years 1895-96 and 1896-97. The defendant Company took out licenses in their name through Messrs. [484] Gillanders, Arbuthnot & Co. for the official years 1893-94 and 1894-95 under sections 87 and 88 of Act II (B. C.) of 1888, the licenses being granted under class I in the second schedule to the Act. No license, however, has been taken out by the defendant Company for the official year 1895-96, and the present proceedings were instituted in consequence by the Corporation. The defendant Company made no application to the Commissioners for exemption in accordance with Rule 7, clause (b) in the second schedule to the Municipal Act. Rule 7 down to the end of clause (b) is as follows:—

(7) The liability of any person to take out a license and the class under which he is liable shall be determined in the following manner.

Any person who has taken out a license for the preceding year or been fined under section ninety for not taking out a license during such year, shall be presumed to be liable and entitled to take out a license under the class in which he was then placed in the year for which the tax is being levied.

* Criminal Reference No. 2 of 1897, made by J. C. Dutt, Esq., an Honorary Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, dated the 16th of December 1897.

(b) Any person who, in consequence of any change in his profession, trade or calling or place of business, or for any other reason, considers himself entitled to take out a license in a lower class than before, or to be altogether exempted, may present an application to that effect to the Commissioners at any time before the first day of July. If no application is made by that date he will be liable to take out a license as prescribed in clause (a).

The Commissioners shall pass orders on such application, and the license shall be taken out in accordance with such orders unless appealed against under clause (e).

It is urged on behalf of the Corporation that the defendant Company are liable to take out a license under section 87 of the Municipal Act inasmuch as they exercise in Calcutta within the meaning of that section one of the professions, trades or callings prescribed in the second schedule to the Act, namely, the profession, trade or calling of money-lender, and further that the fact that licenses for the official years 1893-94 and 1894-95 were taken out by the defendant Company, and no application for exemption was made on their behalf before the 1st of July 1895 in accordance with Rule 7, clause (b) quoted above, absolutely precludes the Company from raising the question of liability or non-liability under section 87 of the Act, and the defendant Company are therefore bound to take out a license for the official year 1895-96.

On behalf of the defence it is contended that exercising a profession, trade or calling in Calcutta does not mean exercising a profession, trade or calling through agents in Calcutta by a person or company having no registered place of business in India, and that therefore the defendant Company do not come under section 87 of the Act, that this has been held by the High Court in the case of Corporation of Calcutta v. Standard Marine Insurance Company [(1895) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 581]. That Messrs. Gillanders, Arbuthnot & Co., having [486] taken out a license for the year 1895-96 for the business carried on by them including the business of the defendant Company which they carry on as their agents, it will be taxing the same business twice over if the defendant Company be held liable to take out a license; that apart from the fact that the agents of the defendant Company were not acquainted with the provisions of the Municipal Act, Rule 7, clause (b), referred to above cannot override section 87 of the Act, and does not preclude a person from contending that section 87 does not apply to him, and that therefore he is not liable. As this case is of some importance, and the points involved in it frequently come up for decision, I have thought it advisable to submit the following questions for the opinion of the High Court.

1. Do the words in section 87 of the Municipal Act "exercise in Calcutta any of the professions, trades, or callings prescribed in the second schedule" mean and include the exercising through agents in Calcutta of any such profession, trade or calling by a person or company having no registered place of business in Calcutta?

2. Is the Eastern Mortgage Agency Company, Limited, bound under section 87 of the Act or Rule 7 clause (b) in the second schedule to the Act to take out a license for the official year 1895-96 under class I in that schedule?

In connection with the second question I have found that Messrs. Gillanders, Arbuthnot & Co., came to know of the decision in the case of the Corporation of Calcutta v. The Standard Marine Insurance Company, Limited, in April 1895, but they not only did not apply to the Commissioners for exemption before 1st July 1895, but took out the license for the official year 1894-95 on the 27th of March 1896.

As to the first question it seems to me that all that their Lordships decided in the case of the Corporation of Calcutta v. The Standard Marine Insurance Company, Limited, was that the Standard Marine Insurance Company, Limited, were not liable to take out a "personal license" inasmuch as the business of insurance was not one of the occupations mentioned in the second schedule to the Act, and that the said company were also not liable to take out a "local" license as keepers of a place of business under class VI, because they had no place of business in Calcutta. It was not decided, so far as I can make out, as to whether the said Company would have been held liable to take out a personal license if the business of insurance had been one of the occupations mentioned in the second schedule to the Act. I think, therefore, that the decision in that case does not apply to the present case. I am inclined to hold, however, that the defendant Company in the present case are not liable to take out a license under section 87. The mere carrying on of business through agents does not seem to me to be within the meaning of that section, especially when the agents take out a license for the business carried on by them, which includes the business of the defendant Company. The tax levied by the Municipality is not in respect of the income derived from a business, but for the privilege of carrying on the business itself. [486] Such cases therefore as those of Erichsen v. Last, (1881) L. R., 8 Q. B. D., 414; Werle & Co. v. Colquhoun, (1888) L. R., 20 Q. B. D., 753, which are under the Income Tax Act, stand on a different footing, and have no application to a case like the present.

As to whether the defendant Company are bound under the circumstances stated above to take out a license for the official year 1895-96, I am inclined to hold that they are bound to take out a license for that year. The wording of Rule 7, clause (b) seems to me to be imperative and to give no discretion to the Court in the matter. The fact that no application for exemption was made before the 1st of July 1895 seems to me to be fatal to the defence; and the plea of ignorance of the Municipal Law cannot of course be entertained in the face of the well known maxim ignorantia juris non excusat."

The parties were not represented at the hearing of the reference.

The judgment of the High Court (Banerjee and Hill, JJ.) was as follows:—

In this case Mr. J. C. Dutt, an Honorary Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, has referred for the opinion of this Court the two following questions of law under section 432 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Do the words in section 87 of the Municipal Act "exercise in Calcutta any of the professions, trades, or callings prescribed in the second schedule" mean and include the exercising through agents in Calcutta of any such profession, trade or calling by a person or company having no registered place of business in Calcutta?

Is the Eastern Mortgage Agency Company, Limited, bound under section 87 of the Act or Rule 7, clause (b) in the second schedule to the Act to take out a license for the official year 1895-96 under class I in that schedule?

We are of opinion that upon the facts stated in the reference the first question should be answered in the affirmative. There is no reason why a Joint Stock Company exercising through an agent in Calcutta the profession, trade or calling of a money-lender, should not be held to exercise in Calcutta one of "the professions, trades, or callings prescribed in the second schedule," within the [487] meaning of section 87 of Act II of 1888 (B.C.) the profession, trade or calling of a banker and a money-lender being distinctly mentioned in the said schedule. We quite agree with the learned Presidency Magistrate in thinking that the case of Corporation of Calcutta v. Standard Marine Insurance Company, (1895) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 581, does not decide the present question, the point decided in that case being that an Insurance Company carrying on business by an agent in Calcutta is not bound to take a personal license, as it does not exercise any profession, trade or calling prescribed in the second schedule to the Act, the business of an Insurance Company not being mentioned in that schedule, and that it is not bound to take any local license, as it has no place of business in Calcutta. In the present case the defendant Company must, upon the authority of that case, be held not bound to take any local license; but the case referred to is no authority for the position that it is not bound to take a personal license, when the profession, trade or calling which it exercises is mentioned in the second schedule to the Act. Nor can we accept as correct the view taken by the learned Presidency Magistrate that the defendant Company is not bound to take out any license because it carries on business by an agent, and because the Municipal license tax is not a tax on income, but is a tax levied for the privilege of carrying on business within the limits of the Municipality. It is quite true that the license tax is levied for the last mentioned privilege, and the capital of the Company is taken into account only in judging of the value of the privilege; but the privilege is exercised none the less, and should therefore be paid for none the less, when the profession, trade or calling is exercised through an agent than when it is exercised directly by the company itself. In the view we take upon the first question, it is not necessary for us to say more in answer to the second question than this, that the Eastern Mortgage Agency Company is liable as much under section 87 as under Rule 7, clause (b) of the second schedule, to take out a license for the year 1895-96 under class 1.

[488] REFERENCE FROM THE RECORDER OF RANGOON.

The 19th January, 1897.

PRESENT:

SIR FRANCIS MACLEAN, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON, AND MR. JUSTICE TREVELYAN.

Mahomed Hady............Plaintiff

versus

Swee Cheang and Company............Defendants.*

Recorder of Rangoon, Jurisdiction of—Reference to High Court, Calcutta—Lower Burma Courts Act (XI of 1889), section 42—Doubt—Conflicting Decisions—Decision of Superior Court—Power of Recorder to refer.

The Recorder of Rangoon, in a suit tried by him, referred to certain decisions of the High Courts at Calcutta, Bombay and Madras, which were in conflict; and, not agreeing with the decision of the Calcutta High Court, referred the case to the High Court in its appellate jurisdiction.

Held, that as the decisions of the High Court at Calcutta are binding on the Recorder he had no jurisdiction to make the reference, and that it must be returned.

THIS was a reference from the Recorder of Rangoon in the following terms:—

"This is a suit to recover the sum of Rs. 3,300, being the difference between the contract and market rates on a contract for 4,000 bags of rice. The making of the contract is not disputed, but the defendant pleads that it is void under section 30 of the Contract Act; that he carries on business as a speculator in the rise and fall of prices of rice; that by the custom of the Rangoon market a market rate of rice is fixed by a committee authorized thereto, on the last day of each month; and that an agreement of the nature sued on is treated as fulfilled when the difference between the settlement rate and the contract rate is paid, and that the parties to the agreement are speculators in differences, and entered into the agreement, having in view the custom of the market and with the full knowledge that the actual delivery of rice was in no wise a necessary or intended incident of the contract.

* Civil Reference No. 11 of 1896 made by W. F. Agnew, Esq., Recorder of Rangoon, dated the 23rd September 1896.

"At the hearing it was contended on behalf of the plaintiff, on the authority of Juggernath Sew Bux v. Ram Doyal, (1883) I. L. R., 9 Cal., 791, that evidence was not admissible to show that the contract was void. In that case the contract was for the sale of Government securities, and upon the evidence the learned [489] Judge of the Small Cause Court found that it came within sections 23 and 30 of the Contract Act, and referred the following questions for the opinion of the High Court :—

"First, whether upon the facts, as found by me, the contract was an agreement by way of wager and therefore void within the meaning of section 30, and contrary to public policy under section 23 of the Indian Contract Act?"

"Second, whether the tender was a good legal tender?"

"The High Court held that the contract being in writing, and there being no ambiguity about it, evidence was not admissible to vary or contradict its terms. It was argued that evidence was admissible for the purpose of showing illegality, but GARTH, C.J., said: 'I have considerable doubt whether oral evidence is admissible for the purpose of showing that the contract is in its nature illegal. So long as there is no ambiguity about it, the question whether it is illegal or not depends, as it seems to me, upon the terms of the contract itself.' In Anupchand Hemchand v. Champsi Ugerchand, (1888) I.L.R., 12 Bom., 585, a similar question was raised, and the Bombay High Court held that oral evidence was admissible to prove that the contract, which on the face of it was for goods to be delivered at future dates, was in reality a contract by way of wager, SARGEANT, C.J., saying that the provisions of proviso I to section 92 of the Evidence Act, which allow evidence to be given of any fact which would invalidate any document, did not appear to have been considered from that point of view in Juggernath Sew Bux v. Ram Doyal, (1883) I.L.R., 9 Cal., 791. The point was again raised before the Madras High Court in Eshoor Dass v. Venkatasubba Rau, (1894) I.L.R., 17 Mad., 480, and the decision of the Bombay High Court was followed and that of the Calcutta High Court dissented from.

"The English authorities are clear that parol evidence is admissible to show what the true nature of the transaction is, and that the Court is not bound to look at the form of the document only. In re Watson, (1890) L. R., 25 Q. B. D., 27; Madell v. Thomas, (1891) L. R., 1 Q. B., 230; Universal Stock Exchange v. Strachan, (1896) L. R., App. Cas., 166.

"The weight of authority is therefore decidedly in favour of admitting the evidence. But the decision in Juggernath Sew Bux v. Ram Doyal, (1883) I. L. R., 9 Cal., 791, is absolutely binding upon me, and I must therefore hold that the contract being on the face of it unambiguous, parol evidence is not admissible to show that it is in reality illegal.

[490] "But there being this difference of opinion, and as the case is one of the highest importance to the mercantile community of Rangoon, for I am informed that the same point must arise in numerous cases now pending in this Court and in the Court of Small Causes, I refer the following question under section 42 of the Lower Burma Courts Act for the opinion of the High Court. When a written contract is on the face of it unambiguous, is parol evidence admissible for the purpose of showing that the contract is in reality illegal?"

Mr. Jackson for the Plaintiff.—I take the preliminary objection that the Recorder is not in a position to refer the case, because, as he himself says, there is a decision of this Court which is absolutely binding on him. His judgment shows that he had no doubt on the matter; and therefore he cannot refer the case under section 42 of the Lower Burma Courts Act. He should have decided the case, and let the unsuccessful party appeal. The reference must be returned.

The Advocate-General (Sir Charles Paul) and Moulvie Mahomed Yusuf for the Defendant.—The Recorder has the power to refer. He dissents from the decision of this Court, which decision is absolutely wrong—see section 92 (a) of the Evidence Act, and he finds that the Bombay and Madras High Courts have also dissented. Therefore he has a doubt on the matter; and, if so, he can refer the case for the opinion of this Court. [MACLEAN, C.J.—Can he in his judicial capacity express a doubt as to the soundness of a decision of this Court?] I submit he can. This Court has no power to return the reference. Section 42 of the Lower Burma Courts Act says that on receiving the reference, the Court "shall decide the question referred therein." The section must be read so as to assist the administration of justice. The Calcutta decision, being opposed to section 92 (a) of the Evidence Act, and to the current of authority, this Court ought to answer the question put by the Recorder.

Mr. Jackson in reply.—If a reference like this be permitted, the very next time the Recorder finds himself in disagreement with a decision of this High Court he could refer the case again on the ground that he differed from the decision just given; and that might go on indefinitely. The contention that this Court [491] must decide the point comes to this,—that, although the Recorder had no power to send the case up, yet, if he did so, the Court is bound to decide it.

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court:—

Maclean, C. J.—A preliminary objection is taken by Mr. Jackson that this reference does not come within section 42 of the Lower Burma Courts Act (Act XI of 1889), and consequently that we cannot hear it. We will deal with that objection. By the above section the Recorder of Rangoon, if he entertains any doubt upon any question of law, or of custom having the force of law, or as to the construction of any document, or the admissibility of any evidence affecting the merits, may, if he think fit, draw up a statement of the question and submit it to the High Court. In this case what has happened is this: Upon the point at issue in the case there are conflicting decisions of this Court with those of the High Courts of Madras and Bombay. Under these circumstances the position of the Recorder is clear. He is not bound by the decisions of the High Courts of Madras and Bombay, but he is bound by the decision of this Court. He should therefore have followed, as he was bound to follow, the decision of this Court, and have left the party who felt aggrieved by his decision to appeal under section 40 of the Act. What doubt, then, has the learned Recorder expressed in the reference upon any question of law arising in the case? He has expressed none; on the contrary he has stated in the most explicit terms that he is bound by the decision of this Court.

If he entertain any doubt, it is a doubt as to the soundness of the decision of this Court. Personally he may, but judicially he cannot, indulge in that doubt. He is bound by the decision. Were it otherwise, in every case in which the learned Recorder doubted the soundness of a decision of this Court he might send up a reference. This cannot be the meaning of the section. I do not think this reference comes within section 42, and that the preliminary objection must prevail.

The papers will be returned to the Recorder with this expression of our opinion.

[492] Macpherson, J.—I concur.

Treveylan, J.—I should like to say that I think it clear, having regard to the terms of section 42 of the Lower Burma Courts Act, that the doubt which the Recorder entertains must be a doubt as to the way in which he ought to determine the particular question of law, or of usage having the force of law, or as to the construction of any document, or the admissibility of any evidence affecting the merits which may arise in the case before him. No other doubt can possibly be the basis of any reference having regard to the terms of the section. In this case the Recorder himself says that the decision of the Calcutta High Court is absolutely binding upon him. That being so, there is, in my opinion, no basis for this reference.

CRIMINAL REVISION

The 14th December, 1897.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE AND MR. JUSTICE HILL.

Lutfur Rahman Nuskur............Petitioner

versus

Municipal Ward Inspector............Opposite Party.

Calcutta Municipal Consolidation Act (Bengal Act II of 1888), sections 381, 382—Burial ground—Certificate for closing a burial ground, Requisites of.

The Municipal authorities issuing a certificate under the provisions of section 381 of the Calcutta Municipal Act (Bengal Act II of 1888), prohibiting the use of a burial ground, must definitely specify the point of time from which the period fixed by them under that section is to run.

THE Municipal Commissioners of Calcutta issued a certificate, dated 28th April 1897, prohibiting the use of a certain burial ground, under section 381 of the Calcutta Municipal Consolidation Act of 1888 in the following terms: "No person shall after two months bury or permit to be buried any corpse in, within, or under the ground to which the certificate relates," without specifying the point of time from which the "two months" were to run. The [493] certificate was published in the Calcutta Gazette on the 2nd June 1897. And the petitioner, who was one of the proprietors of the burial ground, was tried and convicted under section 382 of the aforesaid Act for having permitted corpses to be buried there on the 28th June and 9th July 1897.

The petitioner moved the High Court under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code to set this conviction aside, mainly on the ground that the certificate issued did not definitely specify the time as required by section 381 of the Municipal Act.

Babu Debendra Chunder Mullick for the Petitioner.

No one appeared to show cause.

The judgment of the High Court (Banerjee and Hill, JJ.) was as follows:—

* Criminal Revision No. 756 of 1897, against the order passed by Babu Shamadhava Roy Deputy Magistrate of Sealdah, dated the 1st of October 1897.

This is a rule calling upon the District Magistrate to show cause why the conviction and sentence in this case should not be set aside on the ground that the provisions of section 382 of the Calcutta Municipal Consolidation Act (Bengal Act II of 1888) have not been contravened by the petitioner in this case.

No one appears to show cause, and the learned District Magistrate, in his letter to the Registrar of this Court, says that the Deputy Magistrate who tried this case has no cause to show. The offence complained of is stated in the record in these terms: Permitting corpses to be buried at the Talbagan burial ground after it had been closed, as seen on the 28th June 1897 and 9th July 1897. The plea of the accused was that he could not say whether there was any burial on those two particular dates mentioned, but since then several burials have taken place; that he was one of the proprietors of Talbagan burial ground; and that he did not know that it was closed, and therefore allowed the burial of corpses on that ground. There was evidence adduced to show that the burials alleged did take place there. Upon that fact being proved, and the Magistrate being of opinion that the period of two months allowed in this case for closing the burial ground ran from the date of the certificate mentioned in section 381 of the Act, which was the 28th of April 1897, he has convicted the petitioner under section 382 of the Calcutta Municipal Consolida-[494] tion Act (Bengal Act II of 1888) and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 10 and annas 8 as costs.

The contention urged on behalf of the petitioner before us is that the conviction is wrong, because the certificate issued under section 381 of the Act does not definitely specify any time as required by the section; and that if it does name any, it has not been shown that burials have taken place since the expiry of such time. Section 382, under which the petitioner has been convicted, runs thus: "Whoever after due publication of such certificate buries or burns, or causes, permits or suffers to be buried or burned, any corpse contrary to the last preceding section, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding Rs. 200."

The offence in this case is said to consist in the petitioner having permitted, or suffered, corpses to be buried in the burial ground in question contrary to the provisions of section 381. Now section 381 enacts—we refer only to so much of it as has bearing upon this case—that if after certain preliminaries are complied with, the Commissioners shall "certify that a fitting place for interment or burning (as the case may be) exists within a convenient distance and is available, no person shall, after a time (not less than two months) to be named in such certificate, bury or burn, or permit or suffer to be buried or burned, any corpse in, upon, within or under, the ground to which the certicate relates;" and the latter part of section 381 enacts that "every such certificate shall be published in the Calcutta Gazette, and a translation thereof in Bengali shall, in the case of a burial or burning ground, be affixed conspicuously on some part of the said ground."

In the present case the certificate that was made by the Commissioners, and is filed with the record as Ex. II., bears date the 28th April 1897, and runs in these terms: "The Commissioners in meeting hereby certify that the condition of the cemeteries of Gobra, New Kasia Bagan, Talbagan and Khoyrati is in such a state as to be dangerous to the health of persons living in the neighbourhood thereof, and that a fitting place for interment exists within a convenient distance and is available. No person shall after two months bury or permit to be buried any corpse in, within or under the ground to to which the [495] certificate relates;" and this certificate was published in the Calcutta Gazette on the 2nd June 1897. There was also what purports to be a translation in Bengali of the certificate affixed on some part of the burial ground. The certificate, Ex. H., though it specifies the period as being two months, does not name the time from which the two months will run. In what purports to be a translation of it in Bengali, certain words are inserted, which do not occur in the original, and which have the effect of making the period run from the date of the certificate. That will appear from Ex. D. And the questions for determination are, whether the provisions of section 381, so far as they require the naming of a period in the certificate and the publication of the certificate in the two-fold manner prescribed by the section, have been complied with; and if these requirements have been complied with, whether the burials in question took place after the expiry of the period mentioned in the certificate.

We are of opinion that the first question must be answered in the negative. For though a period is named in the certificate, Ex. H. the point of time from which the period is to run is not mentioned. We do not think that it would be reasonable to hold that in the absence of any express mention of the point of time from which the period is to run, it must be taken to run from the date of the certificate itself, because the law requires that a time should be mentioned in the certificate, and it also requires that the certificate should be published in the Gazette and affixed on a conspicuous part of the burial ground in question. These two provisions clearly indicate that before the use of a burial ground, closed under this section, can be treated as an offence punishable under the next following section, the public should have sufficient notice given to them; and to ensure this, section 381 provides that a time should be mentioned in the certificate, which must not be less than two months; and it is for the authority issuing the certificate to determine the point of time from which the period of two months or such other period as may be fixed is to run, the point of time being evidently intended to be so determined that it may not be anterior to the date of the publication contemplated by the last paragraph of the section, that is to say, the publication in the Gazette, and the posting of the certificate in some conspicuous [496] part of the ground. It would be manifestly contravening that intention to hold, in a case like this, that in the absence of any express mention of the point of time from which the period is to run, the starting point should be the date of the certificate, especially when it appears in this case that it was not published until the 2nd of June; nor was it affixed conspicuously on the sopt until the 21st of May.

That being so, it becomes unnecessary to consider the second question. We must hold that the provisions of section 381 have not been complied with in the matter of the issuing and publishing of the certificate.

The conviction and sentence in this case must, therefore, be set aside, and the fine, if realized, refunded.

B. D. B. Conviction set aside.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), section 13—Absence of defendant from British India—Defendant carrying on business in British India through an authorised agent.

Section 13† of the Limitation Act, which excludes the time during which a defendant has been absent from British India in computing the period of limitation for any suit, applies even where, to the knowledge of the plaintiffs, the defendants, partners in a firm, are during the period of their absence carrying on business in British India through an authorised agent.

Harrington v. Gonesh Roy, (1884) I. L. R., 10 Cal., 410, overruled.

THIS was a reference by the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court to the High Court on 15th March 1897. The case stated [497] for the opinion of the High Court by the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court was as follows:—

"In this case Poorno Chunder Ghose, Kedar Nath Mukerji and Khetter Nath Sircar carrying on business under the style of Poorno Chunder Ghose, Kedar Nath Mukerji, sued Messsrs. E. D. Sassoon & Co. for Rs. 771-6-0, the balance price of myrabollams sold by the plaintiffs to the defendants under a contract, dated 12th July 1893, delivery to be taken by the 20th August 1893. The facts are admitted, but the defendants pleaded that the plaintiffs' suit was barred by limitation. I found that the plaintiffs' suit was not barred by limitation, and gave a decree with costs in their favour. The plaintiffs' pleader argued that the suit was not barred on several grounds, some of which I found against him. Both parties have asked me to refer the case to the High Court; if their Lordships are of opinion that the plaintiffs' claim is barred by limitation, then the plaintiffs' suit will be dismissed with costs; if their Lordships are of opinion that the plaintiffs' claim is not barred by limitation, then the decree in the plaintiffs' favour for Rs. 774-6-0 with costs will stand.

"In order to understand fully how the question of limitation arises, it is necessary for me to refer to a cross-suit which was tried by me at the time when this suit was first tried. In that suit Messrs. E. D. Sassoon & Co., sued Kedar Nath Mukerji, Poorno Chunder Ghose and Khetter Nath Sircar carrying on business in partnership for Rs. 572-1-0 as compensation for inferiority in quality and for short weight of the myrabollams bought under the contract, dated 12th July 1893. Kedar Nath Mukerji and Poorno Chunder Ghose sued Messrs. E. D. Sassoon & Co. for Rs. 77-6 0, balance of price of the myrabollams. The two suits came on before me, and I gave my judgment on the 17th day of February 1896. Khetter Nath Sircar pleaded in the suit brought by Messrs. E. D. Sassoon & Co. that he was not a partner of Kedar and Poorno, and asked that the suit should be dismissed against him with costs. On the evidence I was satisfied that Khetter Nath Sircar was a partner of Kedar and Poorno.

* Reference to the Full Bench in the reference from the Presidency Small Cause Court, No. 1 of 1897.

Exclusion of time of defendant's absence from British India.

† [Sec. 13:—In computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit, the time during which the defendant has been absent from British India shall be excluded.]

Just before delivering judgment the pleader for Khetter Nath said that if I was of opinion that Khetter Nath was a partner, he would ask me to add him as a plaintiff in the suit brought by Kedar and Poorno. I declined to add Khetter Nath at that stage and gave judgment dismissing both suits, Kedar's and Poorno's, on the ground that Khetter Nath ought to have been a plaintiff. Thereupon Kedar Nath Mukerji and Poorno Chunder Ghose moved the High Court under section 622 of Act XIV of 1882. On the 7th May 1890, Mr. Justice AMEER ALI set aside my order of dismissal in Kedar's and Poorno's suit, and ordered me to re-try the suit. His Lordship was of opinion that I ought to have added Khetter Nath Sircar as a plaintiff when I was asked so to do.

"The judgment of the High Court was read on the 8th July 1896 in the [498] Officiating Chief Judge's Court. The case came on before me on my return from furlough on 9th December 1896, but nothing was done on that day. On the 14th January 1897 the case came on again before me, and Khetter Nath Sircar was added as a plaintiff at the request of plaintiffs' pleader and with his own consent. Messrs. E. D. Sassoon & Co.'s pleader then pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation. The cause of action arose on the 20th August 1893. Khetter Nath Sircar was added as a plaintiff on 14th January 1897 more than three years afterwards. If the claim of a necessary party to a suit is barred by limitation at the time when he is added as a party the whole suit is barred—See Ramdoyal v. Junmenjoy Coondoo, (1887) I. L. R., 14 Cal., 791. I held the plaintiffs' suit was barred unless they could show me that limitation did not run against them."

The plaintiffs' pleader contended that limitation did not run against them on the four following grounds :—

"Firstly.—That Khetter Nath Sircar was not a necessary party to the suit. I held that he was a necessary party, and that plaintiffs had recognised that fact by applying to me to have him made a plaintiff.

"Secondly.—That Khetter Nath Sircar became a plaintiff on May 7th, 1896, when Mr. Justice AMEER ALI said he ought to have been made a plaintiff. I decided that Khetter Nath Sircar did not become a plaintiff until January 14th 1897, when he was placed on the record as a plaintiff. He might have been added on July 8th, 1896, when the judgment of the High Court was read, but no application to add him was made then. If he became a plaintiff on May 7th, 1896, there was no necessity for the application of January 14th, 1897—See Rampartab Samrathrai v. Fooli Bai, (1896) I. L. R., 20 Bom., 767 (776).

"Thirdly.—The plaintiffs' pleader contended that in two letters, dated 23rd January 1894 and 7th February 1894, Messrs. E. D. Sassoon & Co. acknowledged their debt to the plaintiffs in the following words : "Please call at our office to settle your account, as we have received the result of your 100 tons myrabollams," and "since writing you on the 23rd ultimo we have neither seen nor heard from you ; we now again request you to call and settle about the shipments of your myrabollams guaranteed by you at London, failing which we shall demand the same through our attorneys without any reference." Mr. Abrahams, an assistant in Messrs. E. D. Sassoon & Co., gave evidence and said the letters were not an acknowledgment of a debt to the plaintiffs, but a demand on the plaintiffs to pay what was due to the defendants as compensation for inferiority in quality, and for short weight of the myrabollams sold by the plaintiffs to the defendants. The letters support Mr. Abrahams, and I decided against the plaintiffs on this point.

[499] "Fourthly—The plaintiffs' pleader contended that the suit was not barred, inasmuch as the partners in the defendants' business were all absent from British India. J. E. Sassoon, M. E. Sassoon and E. E. Sassoon are the only partners in the defendants' business. M. E. and E. E. Sassoon always reside in Europe. J. E. Sassoon resides in Bombay, and goes home about once in three years ; he went to England in February 1896, and returned in November 1896, and during that time there was no partner in British India. The defendants had a place of business here which was carried on by a manager to the knowledge of the plaintiffs, as appears from the description of the defendants on the point. The defendants' manager held a power-of attorney, which authorised him to institute and defend suits.

On the authority of Atul Kristo Bose v. Lyon & Co., (1887) I. L. R., 14 Cal., 457 found for the plaintiffs on this point, and decreed the case in their favour. Harrington v. Gonesh Roy is opposed to Atul Kristo Bose v. Lyon & Co., but is a prior case, and I considered that I was bound to follow the later case.

The Advocate-General (Sir C. Paul) for the defendants.—This suit is barred by limitation. Section 13 of Act XV of 1877 cannot apply in a case like the present one. Here, although the partners in the defendants' firm were not resident in India during the whole of the three years, the business of the defendants' firm was carried on in British India by a manager who held a power-of-attorney authorising him to institute and defend suits. The case of Atul Kristo Bose v. Lyon & Co, (1887) I. L. R, 14 Cal., 457, does not apply. At the time of the suit the defendants were carrying on business here, and that was made the subject of jurisdiction. There has been no absence sufficient to bring the case within the exception of section 13 of Act XV of 1877. That section only applies where actual residence is needed to give a ground of jurisdiction. Here the carrying on of the business is the ground of jurisdiction. If this were not so, the only partner in a Calcutta firm might be absent for six months in every year, and the period of limitation would be extended to six years. If he was absent for eleven months in every year the period of limitation would be extended to 36 years. If he was only present in India for quarter of a month in each year, the period of limitation would go on for 144 years. This is not the intention of the Legislature. The judgment of WILSON, J., is based on a fallacy as [500] appears from the report. If not you are led to an unreasonable construction. As long as the defendants were carrying on business here through their manager they were never absent according to the section of the Code of Civil Procedure Section 13 of Act XV of 1877 is intended to apply to cases where the defendant cannot be got at, but that is not the case here. The decision of TOTTENHAM and NORRIS, JJ., (1884) I. L. R., 10 Cal., 440, is correct. The case before the Privy Council, (1852) 5 Moo. I. A, 234 (260), construes the statutes of James, the words in that case deal with the words "return" in the statute. The statute gives a cause of action on the return. Section 7 says the plaintiff shall have a right of action on the return. Statutes, however, are always intended to be construed in a reasonable way. See the case of In re Dhunput Sing (1893) I.L.R., 20 Cal., 771, and on Appeal to Privy Council, (1895) I. L. R., 23 Cal., 26, where it was held that although the person was not present he could commit an act of insolvency through his gomastha. See the case of Hawkins v. Gathercole (6 De G. M and G, 1) on the necessity of considering the intention of the statute.

Mr. Woodroffe for the Plaintiffs —The words of the section are clear, Beake & Co. v. Davis, (1882) I.L.R., 4 All., 530. Act XV of 1882, Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, says the foundation of the jurisdiction is that all the defendants at the time of the institution of the suit must reside within the local limits. The laws are adapted to what happens in the ordinary course of business. If the defendants choose to be absent from British India that is not the plaintiffs' fault, and they are entitled to the exception given by section 13 of Act XV of 1877. Assuming a partner has an agent within the jurisdiction will he be exempted from the provisions of section 13 ? Mitra's Limitation Act, p. 602. The case before the Privy Council, (1852) 5 Moo. I.A., 234, is in plaintiffs' favour. So also is the case of Atul Kristo Bose v. Lyon, (1887) I.L.R, 14 Cal., 457, and Rampartab [501] Samrathrai v. Foolibai, (1896) I.L.R., 20 Bom. 777. If the Limitation Act gives the plaintiff a right to bring a suit within certain periods, the fact that he can effect service of the summons on the agent of the defendants under the Civil Procedure Code is nihil ad rem. The law of limitation is not controlled by the question of jurisdiction. The words in the Act are expressed. In the case of Harrington v. Gonesh Roy, (1884) I. L. R., 10 Cal., 440, this point was not argued. Starling's Limitation Act, p. 62.

The Reference by MACLEAN, C.J., MACPHERSON and TREVELYAN, JJ., to the Full Bench on 24th January 1898, was as follows:—

The facts of this case appear in the case stated for the opinion of this Court by Mr. A. P. Handley, the Chief Judge of the Court of Small Causes of Calcutta.

The question that has been argued before us is, whether, having regard to the fact that the defendants' firm has to the knowledge of the plaintiffs been represented in Calcutta by a manager holding a power-of-attorney which authorized him to institute and defend suits, the provisions of section 13 of the Limitation Act of 1877 have any application.

It is contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that the period during which no one of the defendants was in British India, viz., from February 1896 to November in the same year, should be excluded in computing the period of limitation.

After hearing the argument we agree with this view, but having regard to a decision to the contrary in the case of Harrington v. Gonesh Roy, (1884) I. L. R., 10 Cal., 440, we refer this case for decision by a Full Bench.

The cases of Atul Kristo Bose v. Lyon, (1887) I. L. R., 14 Cal., 457, and Ruckmaboye v. Lulloobhoy Motichund, (1852) 5 Moo. I. A., 234, have also been cited to us.

We reserved liberty to Mr. Woodroffe, Counsel for the plaintiffs, to argue any other questions which may arise in the case [502] should the opinion of the Court be against him on the question to which we have referred.

The case came on for hearing before the Full Bench on 4th February 1898.

The Advocate General (Sir C. Paul) for the Defendants.

Mr. Woodroffe for the Plaintiffs.

The following judgments were delivered by the Full Bench (MACLEAN, C.J., and O'KINEALY, TREVELYAN, GHOSE and AMEER ALI, JJ).

Maclean, C. J.—I had the advantage of hearing this case argued before the Division Bench of which I was a member, and I have had the further advantage now of having heard the case re-argued by the learned Advocate General, but the later arguments have not shaken the view I entertained and expressed when the case was before us on the previous occasion. The facts in this case have been found in the reference, and the short question we have to decide is, whether or not, having regard to section 13 of the Limitation Act, and to the fact found in the reference that all the partners in the defendants' firm were absent from British India from February to November 1896, the time of such absence is to be excluded in computing the period of limitation prescribed for the suit. It is conceded by the defendants that, if such time be excluded, the suit has been instituted within the prescribed period, and is not barred by the statute.

It is found as a fact in the case, that the defendants had a place of business, I assume, in Calcutta, which was carried on by a manager, to the knowledge of the plaintiffs, and that the defendants' manager held a power-of-attorney which authorized him to institute and defend suits.

It is contended for the defendants that section 13 only applies to cases where the jurisdiction is founded upon residence, and that it does not apply to cases in which the carrying on of a business in Calcutta is the basis of the jurisdiction, in other words, that the section does not apply, and could not have been intended to apply, when the defendants, to the knowledge of the plaintiffs, have a place of business in [503] Calcutta carried on by a manager, who is authorised to institute and defend suits, and when in fact, the defendants, to the knowledge of the plaintiffs, are represented in British India by a duly authorised agent. In support of this contention the case of Harrington v. Gonesh Roy, (1884) I. L. R., 10 Cal., 440, is strongly relied on by the defendants. I doubt, however, whether, having regard to the clear and precise language of section 13, that decision is well founded, for it seems to me that, whatever may be the common sense of the decision, it can only be arrived at by interpolating into the section words that are not there, words to the effect that the time of absence is not to be excluded if the defendants are, during the period of personal absence, represented by a duly constituted agent in British India. Although we have been referred to the case of Hawkins v. Gathercole, (1855) 6 DeG. M. & G., 1, as to the manner in which statutes are to be construed, I do not see my way to put the construction upon the section for which the defendants contend; if we did so, I think we should be rather legislating than adjudicating upon the section as it stands. It may well be that it would be expedient not to allow the time of absence from British India to be excluded, if the defendants be carrying on business in British India, and be represented by a duly authorised agent during such absence; but, if this change is to be made, it must be made by the Legislature. Reading the language of section 13—a section be it remembered in a Limitation Act, the provisions of which must be construed strictly, and which, when set up as a defence, must not be extended to cases which are not strictly within the enactment, whilst exceptions or an exemption from its operation are to be construed liberally [see per Lord CRANWORTH in Roddan v. Morley, (1857) 1 DeG. & Jones, 1 (23)] reading, I say that section according to the ordinary significance of the words used, I think we are not warranted in holding that the section does not apply to cases where the defendants are, during the period of absence, carrying on business in British India through an authorised agent.

In other words, I do not see my way to getting over the clear and precise language of the section, feeling as I do that the words [504] of the section are too strong against the view contended for by the defendants, and that we could only support that view by the interpolation of words to the effect I have stated above. This I do not think we are justified in doing. My opinion is supported by the case of Atul Kristo Bhose v. Lyon & Co., (1887) I. L. R., 14 Cal., 457, in which decision, notwithstanding the able criticism of the Advocate-General upon it, I concur, and is strengthened by the consideration that the words in the corresponding section of Act IX of 1871 as to service of a summons to appear and answer in the suit have been omitted in the present section.

With reference to the further argument which has been addressed to us to-day that section 9 of the Limitation Act must be read in conjunction with section 13 of the same Act, it is no doubt a cardinal rule of construction that in construing any Act of Parliament one may look at the whole Act to ascertain what the intention of the Legislature was, but to my mind, notwithstanding the decision to which our attention has been called in the case of Narrowji Bhimji v. Mugniram Chandaji, (1880) I. L. R, 6 Bom., 103, I am unable to see how section 9, even if read with section 13, can assist the defendants in the present case. Section 9 only says that "when once the period of limitation has commenced to run in any case, it will not cease to do so by reason of any subsequent disability or inability to sue." I do not see the application of that section to the present case. Here there is neither subsequent disability or, in my judgment, inability to sue. What disability or inability is suggested? None so far as I have heard. In his work on the Law of Limitation Baboo Upendra Nath Mitter, the author, at page 240, gives this definition of disability and inability: "Disability," he says, "is want of a legal qualification to act." "Inability is want of a physical power to act." I do not say these definitions are exhaustive: few definitions are, but so far as they go I am not prepared to dissent from them. It is perhaps unnecessary to prosecute this matter further, for I am unable to see where, in this case, the disability or inability existed. I think therefore that the Chief Judge of the Court of Small Causes was [505] right in holding that the case came within section 13 of the Limitation Act, and that the plaintiffs have brought their suit within time.

O'Kinealy, J.—I agree in thinking that the suit has been brought within time, and that the view taken by the Chief Justice of section 13 of the Limitation Act is correct.

Trevelyan, J.—I agree entirely with what has fallen from the learned Chief Justice.

Ghose, J.—And so do I.

Ameer Ali, J.—I also agree with the learned Chief Justice.

Maclean, C.J.—We can only award such costs as the Rules allow; and this we do, to be paid by the defendants in the suit.

* Reference to a Full Bench, in reference from the Presidency Small Cause Court, No. 3 of 1897, on case stated for opinion by E. W. Ormond, Esq., Officiating Chief Judge of that Court.

plaintiffs re-sold the goods and sued to recover the expenses of the re-sale, and the difference between the price realized and the contract price with interest.

Held, that clause 1 of the Indent Contract gave the plaintiffs a right to re-sell the goods, and sue for the damages mentioned therein. Section 107 of the Contract Act had no bearing on the case.

Yule & Co. v. Mahomed Hossain, (1896) I.L.R., 24 Cal., 124, dissented from.

[506] THIS was a case stated for the opinion of the High Court by the Officiating Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court on 14th September 1897; the terms of the reference were as follows:—

"The questions which I have the honour to submit for your Lordships' decision deal with two distinct matters—one relating to the plaintiffs' right of re-sale under the contract in suit and the other relating to the necessity of filing an award under section 525 of the Civil Procedure Code.

"The plaintiffs sold to the defendant under an 'Indent' contract ten cases of tobacco at a net price C. F. I. The contract is sent herewith for reference, if required, the first clause of which is as follows:—

"The goods are to be shipped by steamer to Calcutta and to be at our risk as soon as they are landed, I/we herewith pledge myself/ourselves to pay for them before delivery within 30 days after arrival of the bill of lading from Europe, failing which you are authorized to re-sell the goods or any portion of them, or at your option cancel this indent, and you have absolute discretion as to when and how to re-sell the goods. In case of any re-sale, we shall pay to you any loss or deficiency arising from such re-sale together with interest at 12 per cent. per annum. Should there, however, be any surplus after payment of the indent-price, charges, costs and expenses of resale the same shall belong to you.

"The plaintiffs ordered ten cases only of tobacco and caused them to be shipped and consigned to themselves for the purpose of fulfilling this contract. The goods duly arrived, but the defendant refused to pay for and take delivery of the goods on the ground that they were not the goods contracted for; the plaintiffs subsequently re-sold the goods after notice and now sue to recover the expenses of such re-sale and the difference between the price realized and the contract price together with interest as stipulated for in clause 1 of the contract. The defendant contends that the plaintiffs had no right to re-sell the goods, etc., as he (defendant) had never approved of the goods. I found that the goods imported by the plaintiffs for the defendant and tendered to him were in accordance with the contract, and I hold that upon default in payment by the defendant, the plaintiffs had the right to re-sell the goods and sue for the above damages under clause 1 of the contract whether the property in the goods had actually passed to the defendant or not. I decreed the suit therefore in favour of the plaintiffs for the amount claimed, making my judgment contingent upon the opinion of the High Court at the request of the defendant's pleader. No evidence as to any market-rate was adduced, and if the plaintiffs are not entitled to the damages as stated above, the suit must be dismissed.

"The case of Yule & Co. v. Mahomed Hossain, (1896) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 124, which was referred from this Court, decided that in a contract for the sale of goods to arrive, the [507] 'buyer' not having approved of the goods, the property in the goods had not passed to him under section 83 of the Contract Act; and that the proviso for re-sale in the contract itself could have no application 'as no such power is required to enable a man to sell his own goods.' It will be seen that the High Court decided a point which was not included in the reference, it having been assumed in this Court that a right of re sale arose to the plaintiffs in that case upon default by the defendant in taking delivery and making payment. I presume that that case was not intended to decide that a proviso for re-sale in a contract should have no application even though the parties agree in express terms that the right of re-sale and to recover the abovementioned damages should arise whether the property in the goods had passed to the party in default or not. Such a stipulation in a contract (for the sale of goods to be imported) merely provides a practical, convenient and reasonable method for ascertaining the actual damages sustained by the importer in case of default by the other party to the contract. In the present case it would seem from clause 4 of the contract that the parties intended that the plaintiffs should be at liberty to re-sell and to recover the above damages even though the defendant had not approved of the goods, i.e., even though property in the goods had not passed to the defendant under section 83 of the Contract Act. The word "re-sell" itself does not mean selling the property of the defaulting party, but rather selling the goods contracted for " against " the party in default in order to ascertain the amount of damages to be recovered from him.

" The first question, therefore, that I submit for your Lordships' decision is :—

" 1. The defendant having committed default in payment (for goods tendered to him which were in accordance with the contract) does clause 1 of the contract give the plaintiffs a right to re-sell the goods and to sue for the damages mentioned in clause 1, irrespective of whether the property in the goods had passed to the defendant or not?

" In case it should be found necessary to determine the question of the property passing to the defendant or not, I hold that the property had passed to the defendant for the following reasons :—

" (a) Property can pass by agreement at any time. The parties agreed that the plaintiffs should have a right of re-sale in a certain event (viz., upon default in payment by the defendant); if the property passing is a necessary incident to that right, the property must be deemed to have passed when the plaintiffs exercised their right of re-sale.

" (b) If risk attaches to the buyer it is a very strong argument that the property was meant to be in him. Clause 1 of the contract, therefore, would show that the property in the goods was in [508] defendant from the time of arrival. In the above case of Yule & Co. v. Mahomed Hossain, the contract contained a clause to the effect that the goods should be at the 'buyer's risk from the delivery due date ; but this fact in all probability was not brought to the notice of the High Court, for it was not mentioned in the case submitted by this Court, and the arguments of Counsel as to the property passing appear from the report to have been confined to the question of property passing under section 83 of the Contract Act.

" (c) I think the property in the goods passed from the plaintiffs to the defendant at the time of shipment under section 84 of the Contract Act. The contract is called an Indent, the price covered ' cost, freight and insurance,' and clause 15 of the contract is a request by the defendant to the plaintiffs to take charge of the goods on arrival on the defendant's account. It would seem, therefore, that the plaintiffs shipped the goods and insured them on account of the defendant, although done in his own name.

" I submit, therefore, this second question :—

" 2. Did the property in these goods pass to the defendant at or before the time of the resale by the plaintiffs?

" The third question submitted refers to the necessity of filing an award in this suit under section 525 of the Civil Procedure Code and is framed by the defendant's pleader is as follows :—

" 3. Is the suit maintainable in its present form—plaintiffs not having made the award a Rule of Court—when the latter part of clause 4 of the contract says that the award may be made a rule of the High Court?

" The facts material to this part of the case are as follows : The defendant objected to the goods as not being goods of the description contracted for ; the parties referred the matter to arbitration under the contract ; the arbitrators disagreed and thereupon appointed an umpire who decided that the goods were in accordance with the contract. The plaint merely states these facts and asks for damages by way of re-sale. In clause 4 of the contract it is provided that the arbitrators before acting shall appoint an umpire ; but at the time the umpire was surveying the goods to the defendant's knowledge, the defendant agreed to be bound by his decision. I held therefore that the defendant was bound by the umpire's award. Direct evidence also was given to show that the goods were in accordance with the contract, and I found this as a fact, although the awards, or rather the report of the umpire for the "award," does not direct any sum of money to be paid by defendant to the plaintiffs, but in effect states that the goods are in accordance with the contract. The defendant contends that the matter having once been [509] submitted to arbitration, the plaintiffs' remedy under the contract is gone; that their remedy rests solely upon the award which can only be enforced by making the award a rule of the High Court under section 525 of the Civil Procedure Code in accordance with clause 4 of the contract, and therefore this Court has no jurisdiction to try this suit. The defendant at the same time impugns the validity of the award on the ground that the umpire was not appointed by the arbitrators before acting, and apparently he was never desirous of having the matter re-submitted to arbitration. I held against all these contentions. The summary procedure provided under section 525 of the Civil Procedure Code does not prevent a plaintiff from suing upon the award in the ordinary way, and the clause in the contract as to making the award a rule of Court is also permissive. The plaintiffs are not bound under the contract to go to arbitration or to obtain an award before suing for a breach of the contract, and unless the defendant sets up an award in answer to the plaintiffs' claim, I see no reason why the plaintiffs should not succeed in a suit for such breach. If the award is bad (as the defendant contends it is) the whole proceedings relating to the submission are void and the parties are relegated to their original position under the contract."

Mr. O'Kinealy for the Defendant.—Here there was a refusal to take delivery of the tobacco on the ground that they were not the goods contracted for. Can there be a re-sale of the goods so as to bind the seller and buyer. The first three clauses of the Indent deal with the rights of the parties and what they are to do if a dispute arises between them. I rely on the case of Yule & Co. v. Mahomed Hossain (1896) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 124 (126). If the buyer does not examine the goods within ten days property does not pass. The seller ought to sue for the value between the contract price and the market price of the day. They are still the vendor's goods. Buyer is liable in damages for breach of the contract. Under section 74 of the Contract Act, whether it is stipulated damages or penalty, the Court can give what they please. Section 73 rules what a person is entitled to when the contract is broken. Supposing the property has not passed, then there can be no re-sale. The property in the goods had not passed under section 83 of the Contract Act.

Mr. Dunne for the plaintiffs.—This case is distinguishable from the case of Yule & Co. v. Mahomed Hossain (1896) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 124 (126)., There the [510] question as to the right of re-sale was never really referred. On the facts the property may have been shown to have passed. That case was decided on a reference in which the facts were never dealt with. A vendor cannot, when goods are at the risk of the buyers, change them. The plaintiffs can only re-sell the goods under section 107 of the Contract Act.

The JUDGMENT of the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and MACPHERSON and TREVELYAN, JJ.), referring the case to a Full Bench on 24th January 1898 was as follows:—

The facts of this case appear in the case stated for the opinion of this Court by Mr. E. W. Ormond, Officiating Chief Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Calcutta.

The question that has been argued before us is, whether, under the terms of the first clause of the contract, the plaintiffs were at liberty to resell the goods, and are entitled to recover the loss on such re-sale.

It has been contended on behalf of the defendant that the plaintiffs are not entitled, either under the contract or under section 107 of the Indian Contract Act, to re-sell the goods, and that they are only entitled to the difference between the contract rate and the market rate at the time of breach.

In support of their contention they have relied upon the decision of this Court in the case of Yule & Co. v. Mahomed Hossain, (1896) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 124. As the terms of the contract in that case were similar to those in the present case, and as we differ from the view taken by the learned Judges in that case with regard to the rights of the plaintiffs under a contract of that description, we refer this case for decision by a Full Bench.

Mr. O'Kinealy for the Defendant.

Mr. Dunne for the Plaintiffs.

The opinion of the Full Bench was delivered by Maclean, C.J., -(O'Kinealy, Trevelyan, Ghose and Ameer Ali, JJ. concurring).

Maclean, C.J.—If it had not been for one passage in the [511] judgment in the case of Yule & Co. v. Mahomed Hossain, (1896) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 124, I should scarcely have thought that the point which we have to decide, and which has been submitted to us, was susceptible of serious argument. The passage I refer to is at page 128 of the report, and it is as follows:—

"To such a case as this neither section 107 of the Contract Act nor the proviso for re-sale in the contract itself can have any application, as no such power is required to enable a man to sell his own goods."

I may point out in passing that that passage scarcely appears to me to have been necessary for the decision of the case, having regard to the real question which was then submitted by the reference. The question we have first to decide is the first question submitted to us in the reference. In my opinion that question ought to be answered in the affirmative. Section 107 of the Contract Act has, in my judgment, no bearing on this case. I base my decision on the terms of the contract between the parties. Here the parties, two mercantile men, perfectly competent to contract, have made their own bargain, and one of the terms of that bargain is that if there were any such default on the part of the purchaser as is mentioned in clause 1 (as there was) the vendor was to have the right to re-sell the goods, and any loss or deficiency arising from such re-sale, with interest thereon at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum, was to be paid by the purchaser to the vendor. We are told upon the authority of the passage in the case to which I have referred, and upon that authority alone, that such a re-sale is bad, and that the course which the vendor (the plaintiff) took in this case was not justified under the contract. I am quite unable to assent to that view. There is nothing in the contract which is contrary to public policy. It is a perfectly good contract. It is not an unreasonable contract for two mercantile men to have made, and having made it why should not effect be given to it? It is said that the term "resell" can only apply to a case where the property has passed to the purchaser, and that that term pre-supposes a previous valid and effectual sale. In the ordinary [512] acceptation and use of the term there was a sale to the defendant, and the bargain was that if he did not pay the purchase-money the plaintiff might re-sell the goods and hold the defendant responsible for any loss. There is nothing in the contract about the property having or not having passed, or that the re-sale was only to be made if it had passed.

The clause was intended to provide for the very case which has arisen, and I think it would be rather a shock to mercantile men to be told that when a clause like this has been introduced into a mercantile bargain no effect can be given to it. I hope that is not the law. I do not think it is the law. If such a clause as this were only to become operative if and when the property in the goods had passed to the defaulting purchaser, the operation of such a clause would, probably, not be effective in many cases. But I do not think such is the meaning of the clause. As I have said before, the first question must be answered in the affirmative.

That being so, the second question submitted to us does not arise, and the third question, when the matter was before us originally, was abandoned by the learned counsel who appeared for the defendant. As regards the costs we can only give such costs as are provided for by the Rules, and this we do, and order the defendant to pay to the plaintiffs such costs.

PRESENT:

SIR FRANCIS MACLEAN, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY, MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON, MR. JUSTICE TREVELYAN, AND MR. JUSTICE JENKINS.

Queen-Empress
Abbas Ali.*

Forgery—Using a forged Document - Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sections 463, 471—"Fraudulently," Meaning of.

Deprivation of property, actual or intended, is not an essential element in the offence of fraudulently using as genuine a document which the accused knew or had reason to believe to be false—Queen-Empress v. Haradhan, (1892) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 380, overruled.

[513] THIS was a reference made under section 35 of the Letters Patent and section 434 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, by JENKINS, J., to a Full Bench in the following terms:—

"1. Under clause 25 of the Letters Patent and section 434 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, I reserve and refer for the decision of the Court the question of law which (as hereinafter stated) has arisen in the course of the trial of the abovenamed accused and the determination of which will affect the event of the trial.

"2. The accused was tried before me and a common Jury at the Criminal Sessions now pending on a charge expressed in the following terms:—

"That he, the said Abbas Ali, on or about the fourteenth day of August in the year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-six in Calcutta aforesaid fraudulently and dishonestly used as genuine a certain forged document, to wit, a document purporting to be a certificate of competency as an Engine-room First Tindal and purporting to be signed by one H. Abern, Chief Engineer of the Steam Launch Nicol, and being a forged document (intended to be used for the purpose of cheating) knowing or having reason to believe the same to be a forged document and thereby he, the said Abbas Ali, committed an offence punishable under sections 465 and 471 of the Indian Penal Code."

* Reference to a Full Bench, by JENKINS, J., sitting in the exercise of Original Criminal Jurisdiction.

"3. Ultimately the case went to the Jury, as though the words enclosed in brackets had been omitted from the charge, and by their unanimous verdict the accused was convicted under sections 465 and 471 of the Indian Penal Code.

"The certificate mentioned in the charge and hereinafter referred to as Exhibit E was in the following form :—

"This is to certify that Abbas Ali has served with me as Engine-room First Tindal in Steam Launch Nicol for a period of one year and one month, and he is still in service. I found him a sober, intelligent, smart and trustworthy man."

CALCUTTA; H. ABERN,
The 12th August, 1896. Chief Engineer.

[514] "The materiality of the certificate and the use to which it was put will appear from the evidence of Dino Nath Mukerji, and the facts hereinafter alleged taken in conjunction with Act VII of 1884, and the Regulations issued under that Act to which as well as to the application forms hereinafter mentioned I refer.

"The evidence of Dino Nath Mukerji, so far as material, is as follows :—

"I am an examination clerk at the Calcutta Port Office.

"I have held the post eight years continuously and did so during last August.

"I have an Assistant, Anukul Chandra Neogy.

"My duty is to receive papers and testimonials from candidates and fees, i.e., candidates who want to go up for examination to obtain certificates under Act VII of 1884.

"I receive those testimonials in accordance with Rules under the Act.

"These are the printed regulations of the Government of Bengal under that Act.

"They were printed in the Gazette: they have been in force since 1890. I act under the orders of the Port Officer.

"My practice is as follows : —

"When a man comes for examination as an Engine driver of a sea-going steamer he comes to me and delivers his testimonials to me. I look into the certificates to see, if he has the required service or not. Then if the men can write their applications themselves I give them the forms of application.

"If any one cannot write then I write out the application for him. Then I receive the fees and take him before the Port Officer to sign his name or affix his mark on the application form in the presence of the Port Officer who then signs his name. I keep the application form with me till the last date of receiving candidates' papers, and then on that last day before the office closes I forward those applications to the [515] Resident and Engineer Examiners at the Government dockyard.

"Engine drivers are examined there and not in the Port Office. There is Board of Examiners nominated by the Government. After the examination is over the applications are returned to the Port Office, showing the result of the examination signed by the Examiners.

"There are regular dates which are notified in the newspapers. I make a note on the application forms with regard to the vessel the applicant has served in, the period, and capacity of his service; these particulars I get from the certificate which the applicant produces.

"I always make that entry with regard to the certificates before the applicant is taken to the Port Officer to sign. If a man comes up and fails he must produce a fresh testimonial of further service since his failure, but there is no period of subsequent service demanded: if this subsequent service did not cover a period of two months I in practice reject the application. He must produce a certificate of having served as principal Serang or Tindal in the Engine-room of a sea-going steamer for three years signed by a certificated Engineer under whom he has served.

"In the case of failure six months must elapse before a candidate may present himself again."

"On the 14th August 1896 the accused produced Exhibit E to Dino Nath Mukerji at the Port Office, Calcutta, and at the same time asked Dino Nath Mukerji to write out for him (the accused) the requisite application for examination.

"The evidence in the case establishes that the accused used Exhibit E for the purpose of having the requisite application for examination filled up and of qualifying himself as a candidate for the examination of engine drivers under Act VII of 1884, and further that he used Exhibit E as genuine, though he knew it to be a false document made with the intent that it should be used in the manner in which it was in fact used by him. Exhibit E, if not a forged document, would [516] with the other testimonials produced by the accused have satisfied the conditions, as to testimonials under which candidates are entitled to have the requisite applications filled up, and become qualified for examinations held under Act VII of 1884; without Exhibit E those conditions would not have been satisfied.

"The question which I reserve is whether the facts hereinbefore stated are sufficient to satisfy the intent prescribed by section 463 of the Indian Penal Code, and whether having regard to those facts the accused fraudulently or dishonestly used Exhibit E within the terms of section 471 of the Indian Penal Code."

The Officiating Standing Counsel (Mr. A. M. Dunne) represented the Crown.

No one appeared on behalf of the accused.

The Officiating Standing Counsel.—Apart from the words "fraudulently or dishonestly," there is no doubt that the certificate was a false document; it had not been signed or made by the person by whom it purported to have been made. It was made and used for the purpose of committing a fraud within the meaning of section 463. The intention to defraud is the intention to commit a fraud upon somebody; it is not necessary that there should be an intent to deprive any person of some property. The Penal Code is intended to carry out the English law on the subject of forgery. In England the charge would be that the act was one that intended to defraud; and that would be upheld. In the case of Queen-Empress v. Haradhan, (1892) I. L.R., 19 Cal., 380, the Court felt a difficulty in construing the word "fraudulently," and the learned Judge drew a distinction between primary and the more remote intention. But an act cannot be split up like that. Reg. v.

Toshack, (1849) 4 Cox., C. C. 38: 1 Den., Cr. C., 492, is exactly in point; there the indictment was that the accused had forged certificates for the purpose of inducing the Trinity House Examiners to pass him; the gist of the offence was the intent to defraud. In the case of The Empress v. Dhunum Kazee, (1882) I. L. R., 9 Cal., 53 (60), NORRIS, J., himself deals with the question [517] of fraud, and shows that the element of wrongful gain or loss does not come into it, but that it is sufficient that there should be an intention to defraud. It is a fraudulent making if there was a fraud in the making of the document, or if there was an intention to commit a fraud by means of the document—Lolit Mohun Sarkar v. Queen-Empress, (1894) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 313 (321). In Reg. v. Hodgson, (1856) Dearsley and Bell, 3, there was no intent to commit any particular fraud; but if there had been any particular person to be deceived the decision would have been different. The decision in Queen-Empress v. Haradhan, (1892) I.L.R., 19 Cal., 380, has been dissented from in Queen-Empress v. Soshi Bhushan, (1893) I. L. R., 15 All., 210. [O'KINEALY, J.—I think NORRIS, J., really found that the intention was wanting.] Possibly. [MACLEAN, C.J.—In the case of Queen-Empress v. Shosi Bhushan the prisoner got the benefit of a course of lectures for nothing.] It is true there was also a question of dishonesty. [JENKINS, J.—And the professor lost his fees.] No doubt the dishonesty alone was sufficient to convict the accused. In the present case the offence consists in the fraud; not in his attaining the results he aimed at. It is the intention to deceive that constitutes the offence--Queen-Empress v. Ganesh Khanderao, (1889) I.L.R., 13 Bom., 506 (514). [JENKINS, J.—The question is, whether, the purpose being limited, as it was in this case, there was an intention to defraud. It comes to this, whether "defraud" does not imply some deprivation of property.] That is so. The term 'fraudulently' is used apart from 'dishonestly' and is not intended to cover the same ground. [JENKINS, J.—Does not section 496 of the Penal Code help you?] Yes, greatly The essence of the offence there is getting a marriage performed with a fraudulent intention. [JENKINS, J.—On the other hand, in section 239, there is a distinction between fraudulent intention and an intention to commit a fraud.] I submit that no distinction is intended; but that, on the contrary, if A delivers counterfeit coin to B, he would be guilty, and if he delivers it to B, not with the intention of defrauding B, but with the intention that B [518] should commit a fraud upon C, A would be equally guilty. [TREVELYAN, J.—There is a high text-book authority in Morgan and Macpherson's note, where they say that fraud does not relate only to loss of property.] If the view of NORRIS, J., in Queen-Empress v. Haradhan, (1892) I.L.R., 19 Cal., 380, were correct, the definition of "dishonestly" would not be necessary, as it would be included in the definition of "fraudulently." It cannot be supposed that a higher element is required to make a document a false document than to make a false document a forgery. [JENKINS, J.—Section 262 separates the two terms—" whoever fraudulently or with intent to cause loss.]"

Maclean, C. J.—We are unanimously of opinion in this case that the conviction must be upheld. But as the point is of importance, we will reduce our judgment into writing.

C. A. V.

The opinion of the Full Bench was delivered by

Maclean, C.J. (O'Kinealy, Macpherson, Trevelyan and Jenkins, JJ., concurring)—The accused in this case was tried before Mr. Justice JENKINS and a common jury on a charge of having fraudulently or dishonestly used as genuine a certain forged document, to wit, a document purporting to be a certificate of competency as an Engine-room First Tindal and purporting to be signed by one H. Abern, Chief Engineer of the Steam Launch Nicol, and being a forged document, knowing or having reason to believe the same to be a forged document, and that thereby he committed an offence punishable under sections 465 and 471 of the Indian Penal Code.

The certificate in question purported to be a testimonial of service and good character.

It seems that in accordance with the provisions of Act VII of 1884 and the regulations issued under that Act, examinations are from time to time held in Calcutta of those who desire to obtain certificates of competency as engine drivers of ocean-going steamers. As a condition precedent to his qualification for any such examination each candidate has to produce to an appointed officer a certificate or testimonial [519] of his having served as principal or first serang or tindal in the engine-room of a steamer for the prescribed period, and this certificate has to be signed by a certificated engineer under whom he has served.

On the production of the required certificate or testimonial a form of application is filled up, and then signed by the candidate in the presence of the Port Officer; thereupon the candidate is entitled to present himself for examination.

On the 14th of August 1886 the accused produced the certificate mentioned in the charge to Dinonath Mukerji, the officer deputed to receive and examine candidates' certificates.

It is established by the evidence that this was done by the accused for the purpose of having the requisite application for examination filled up and of qualifying himself as a candidate for the examination of engine-drivers under Act VII of 1884, and further that the accused used the certificate as genuine, though he knew that it was a document made with the intention of causing it to be believed that it was made by a person by whom it was not made, and with the further intention that it should be used in the manner in which it was in fact used by the accused.

It also appears that the use to which the certificate was put by the accused was an essential and necessary condition of the success of his scheme.

A verdict of guilty was returned in accordance with the ruling of the Judge, who, however, reserved and referred for our decision the question whether, having regard to the decision in Queen-Empress v Haradhan, (1892) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 380, his ruling and the conviction could be upheld.

The Queen-Empress v. Haradhan has been dissented from in Queen-Empress v. Shoshi Bhushan, (1893) I. L. R., 15 All., 210, and the point reserved has no doubt been the subject of conflicting decisions.

It will, however, serve no useful purpose to enter into a minute examination of the several authorities to which we have been [520] referred: the law is contained in the Code, and whether the conviction now under consideration is sanctioned by its provisions is best to be determined by an examination of the Code itself.

Now section 471 of the Indian Penal Code is in the following terms: "Whoever fraudulently or dishonestly uses as genuine any document which he knows or has reason to believe to be a forged document, shall be punished in the same manner as if he had forged such document."

It will be seen that the essential elements of the offence are (1) that the document in question should be a forged document, (2) that the accused should have used it as genuine, and (3) that he should have so used it fraudulently or dishonestly, knowing or having reason to believe that it was a forged document.

A forged document is a false document made wholly or in part by forgery (section 470), and we learn the meaning of a false document from section 464 which (omitting the portions immaterial to the present purpose) provides, that a person is said to make a false document who dishonestly or fraudulently makes a document with the intention of causing it to be believed that such document was made by a person by whom he knows it was not made. Forgery is in turn defined by section 463, which is in the following terms: "Whoever makes any false document or part of a document with intent to cause damage or injury to the public or to any person, or to support any claim or title, or to cause any person to part with property, or to enter into any express or implied contract, or with intent to commit fraud or that fraud may be committed, commits forgery."

This referential definition of a forged document is to a certain extent tautologous, but be that as it may, it is clear that the person against whom the offence is charged must have acted dishonestly or fraudulently, and the sole question in the present case is whether that can be predicated of the accused Abbas Ali.

"Dishonestly" is defined by section 24, which provides that whoever does anything with the intention of causing wrongful gain to one person or wrongful loss to another person, is said to do that thing dishonestly; and the meaning of the expression [521] wrongful gain and wrongful loss is made clear by section 23. "Fraudulently" is defined by section 25 in the following words:—

"A person is said to do a thing fraudulently if he does that thing with intent to defraud, but not otherwise." As a definition this provision is obviously imperfect, and perhaps introduces an element of doubt, which did not previously exist; for it leaves it to be determined, and that really is the point on which the present case turns, whether the word "defraud" as used in section 25 implies the deprivation or intended deprivation of property as a part or result of the fraud. The word defraud is of double meaning in the sense that it either may or may not imply deprivation, and as it is not defined in the Code and is not, so far as we are aware, to be found in the Code except in section 25, its meaning must be sought by a consideration of the context in which the word fraudulently is found.

The word "fraudulently" is used in sections 471 and 464 together with the word "dishonestly" and presumably in a sense not covered by the latter word. If, however, it be held that fraudulently implies deprivation either actual or intended, then apparently that word would perform no function which would not have been fully discharged by the word dishonestly and its use would be mere surplusage. So far as such a consideration carries any weight, it obviously inclines in favour of the view that the word "fraudulently" should not be confined to transactions of which deprivation of property forms a part.

There appears to us, however, to be a still more potent reason based on the language of section 463 for arriving at this conclusion.

Section 463 defines the offence of forgery, and in so doing prescribes the intents necessary to that offence. The words of the section are as follows: "Whoever makes any false document or part of a document, with intent to cause damage or injury to the public or to any person, or to support any claim or title, or to cause any person to part with property, or to enter into any express or implied contract or with intent to commit fraud or that fraud may be committed, commits forgery."

The section contemplates two classes of intents, and it is clear [522] (especially if regard be had to the context) that it is not an essential quality of the fraud mentioned in the section that it should result in or aim at the deprivation of property. If this be so, it cannot be supposed that the definition of a false document, which is but a part of the definition of forgery, requires as a condition of criminality an intent different in its quality and its aims from that prescribed by section 463.

It appears to us, therefore, that deprivation, actual or intended, is not a necessary ingredient of the intent to defraud referentially imported into section 464, and by a similar train of reasoning we are led to the like conclusion as to the true construction of section 471.

Though we are in no way bound by the decisions of the English Courts, still we are fortified in the view we take of the expression "intent to defraud" by the decision in Reg v. Toshack, (1849) 4 Cox C.C. 38: 1 Den. C. C., 492. We therefore hold, so far as the question reserved and referred for our decision is concerned, that the accused Abbas Ali was rightly convicted of the offence with which he was charged.

Rajani Mohun Das (Plaintiff)............and others Defendants Nos. 4 to 10.*

Evidence Act (I of 1872), sections 11 and 13—Judgment not inter partes*—Admissibility in evidence of judgment in former case—The subject matter of the former suit not being identical with that of the latter suit, judgment irrelevant.*

The rule laid down in the cases of Gujju Lall v. Fatteh Lall, (1880) I. L. R., 6 Cal., 171, and of Surender Nath Pal Chowdhry v. Brojo Nath Pal Chowdhry, (1886) I. L. R., 13 Cal., 352, has been materially qualified by the decisions of the Privy Council, in the cases of [523] Ram Ranjan Chakerbati v. Ram Narain Singh, (1894) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 533 : L. R., 22 I. A., 60, and Bitto Kunwar v. Kesho Pershad, (1897) L. R., 24 I. A., 10.

Under certain circumstances, in certain cases, the judgment in a previous suit, to which one of the parties in the subsequent suit was not a party, may be admissible in evidence for certain purposes and with certain objects in the subsequent suit.

* Reference to the Full Bench in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1747 of 1895.

In a case where the previous suit was to recover a two-thirds share of the property in question, and the subsequent suit was by a different plaintiff to recover the remaining one-third share of the same property :—

Held, in the subsequent suit, the judgment in the previous suit was not admissible in evidence, the subject-matter in the two suits not being identical.

THIS case was referred to the Full Bench by MACLEAN, C.J., and BANERJEE, J.

The facts of this case, so far as they are necessary for purposes of this report, and the arguments, appear sufficiently from the ORDER OF REFERENCE which was as follows :—

BANERJEE, J.—" This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff, respondent, for possession of a one-third share of a plot of land measuring 21 bighas, on the allegation that the said land appertained to resumed estate No. 9870 of the Dacca Collectorate, which belonged originally to the proformâ defendants; that defendant No. 4 was in possession of two-thirds share of the same, having purchased it at a sale in execution of a decree; that the plaintiff purchased the remaining one-third share thereof from the proformâ defendants after they and their predecessors had held possession of the same for upwards of twelve years, and that the plaintiff had been unjustly kept out of possession of the land in dispute by the principal defendants since 1891.

" The principal defendants in their defence urged that the suit was barred by limitation; that the suit was also barred under sections 13 and 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure; that the land in dispute originally belonged to one Mr. Panioty, who held it for upwards of a hundred years; that by successive [524] transfers the land came to the hands of the defendants; and that defendant No. 4, with the object of ousting the defendants from the same, instituted several suits against them; but being unsuccessful now caused the plaintiff to bring this suit. The defendant No. 4 supported the plaintiff.

" The first Court found after a local investigation by an Amin that 8 bighas and odd cottahs of the disputed land appertained to the plaintiff's estate, but it dismissed the suit altogether on the ground of limitation.

" Against the decision of the first Court the plaintiff preferred an appeal, and the principal defendants put in a cross-appeal, urging that the Munsif had improperly refused to admit certain judgments in evidence. The Lower Appellate Court has decreed the appeal of the plaintiff and dismissed the defendant's cross-appeal.

" In second appeal it is contended for the defendants, first, that the Court of Appeal below was wrong in holding that the judgments tendered in evidence by the defendants were inadmissible; and, secondly, that the decree in favour of the plaintiff should in any case have been limited to a one-third share of 8 bighas and odd cottahs only.

" The second point need not detain us long, as the learned Vakil for the respondents concedes that the decree ought to be limited in the manner contended for on behalf of the appellants.

" The first point, however, involves a question which is not altogether free from difficulty.

" If the cases of Gujju Lall v. Fatteh Lall, (1880) I. L. R., 6 Cal., 171, and Surendra Nath Pal Chowdhry v. Brojo Nath Pal Chowdhry, (1886) I.L.R., 13 Cal., 352, upon the authority of which the Lower Appellate Court, has held the judgments tendered in evidence for the defendants to be inadmissible, are good law, the first ground urged before us must fail. But if those cases have in effect been overruled by the decisions of the Privy Council in Ram Rajan Chakerbati v. [525] Ram Narain Singh, (1894) I. L. R., 22 Cal. 533 : L. R., 22 I. A., 60, and Bitto Kunwar v. Kesho Pershad, (1887) L. R., 24 I. A., 10, then the question arises whether the judgments referred to are admissible in evidence.

"In the two cases relied upon by the Lower Appellate Court, namely, Gujju Lall v. Fatteh Lall, (1880) I. L. R., 6 Cal., 171, and Surender Nath v. Brojo, (1886) I. L. R., 13 Cal, 352, it was held by this Court that a former judgment, which is not a judgment in rem nor one relating to matters of a public nature, is not admissible in evidence in a subsequent suit either as res judicata or as proof of the particular point decided, unless between the same parties or those claiming under them. But in the case of Ram Ranjan Chakerbati v. Ram Narain Singh, (1894) I.L.R., 22 Cal., 533 : L.R., 22 I.A., 60, it was held by the Privy Council that a judgment passed in a suit to which the plaintiff was no party, was admissible against the plaintiff as evidence showing the rent paid ; and in Bitto Kunwar v. Kesho Pershad, (1887) L. R., 24 I. A., 10, their Lordships of the Privy Council, speaking of the judgment in a former suit against one of the defendants, Bacha Tewari, observe : "This decision is not conclusive against Bacha Tewari as the suit was not between the same parties as the present suit, but their Lordships agree with the Subordinate Judge that it was admissible as evidence against him." These two decisions of the Privy Council must be taken to have in effect overruled the cases relied upon by the Lower Appellate Court. That being so, the question arises whether, apart from those cases, the judgments referred to in the argument were admissible in evidence against the plaintiff, respondent.

"Now the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act expressly relating to judgments are sections 40 to 44. The judgments which are said to have been improperly rejected in this case not being evidence of any of the descriptions referred to in sections 40, 41 and 42, and they not having been excluded on [526] any of the grounds mentioned in section 44, it is not necessary to dwell upon the provisions of those sections. The question we have to consider is, whether the judgments, which have been held to be inadmissible by the Courts below, are really admissible under section 43 of the Evidence Act, which enacts that 'judgments, orders or decrees other than those mentioned in sections 40, 41 and 42, are irrelevant, unless the existence of such judgment, order or decree is a fact in issue or is relevant under some other provision of this Act.'

"I am inclined to think that this question ought to be answered in the affirmative, and that the existence of the judgments under consideration, or at any rate the existence of one of them, is relevant under sections 11 and 13 of the Evidence Act.

"The judgments that were tendered in evidence and rejected as inadmissible by the Courts below are three in number, being (as I gather from the judgment of the Lower Appellate Court and from paragraph 10 of the written statement of defendants No. 1—3, (1) the judgment in suit No. 742 of 1887 brought by the present defendant No. 4, Protab Chunder Das, co-sharer of the plaintiff, against the present defendants for possession of two-thirds share of the land now in dispute ; (2) the judgment in suit No. 165 of 1892 brought by the said Protab Chunder Das against the said defendants ; (3) the judgment in suit No. 1219 of 1886 brought by one Emdad Ali against the present defendants. Though the relevancy of the last two may not be quite clear, the existence of the first-mentioned judgment seems to be a relevant fact, as well under section 11 of the Evidence Act, as under section 13. This may be seen from the following considerations.

"First as to the relevancy of the judgment in suit No. 742 of 1887 under section 11. The existence of the judgment, that is, the circumstance that that particular judgment was passed, is clearly a fact within the meaning assigned to the term in section 3. Now the existence of the judgment (which will be established by the judgment being filed) shows that a suit had been brought by plaintiff's co-sharer Protab Chunder [527] so far back as 1887 against the principal defendants for possession of his two-thirds share of the disputed land, and that suit was dismissed. The plaintiff's case now is that the said Protab Chunder was in possession of the two-thirds share in dispute, while he and his vendor were in possession of the remaining one-third share down to a period within twelve years before the institution of the present suit. And the existence of the above-mentioned adverse judgment taken in connection with the other facts of the case might, if the judgment had been admitted in evidence by the Court below, have been found to make the non-existence of the plaintiff's possession and the existence of the defendants' possession highly probable within the meaning of section 11 of the Evidence Act. I cannot say it would have that effect, because, sitting here in second appeal, it is not open to us to enter into questions of fact. But I do say that it might have that effect, and if it might, a substantial error in the procedure consisting in the improper rejection of evidence is made out which may possibly have produced error in the decision of the case upon the merits within the meaning of section 584, clause (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure.

"Next as to the relevancy of the judgment in suit No. 742 of 1887 under section 13. If the existence of the judgment is not a transaction within the meaning of clause (a) of section 13, it proves that a litigation terminating in the judgment took place; and the litigation comes well within the meaning of the clause as being a transaction by which the right now claimed by the defendants was asserted. So again the litigation which is evidenced by the existence of the judgment was a particular instance within the meaning of clause (b) of section 13, in which the right of possession now claimed by the defendants was claimed. It has been said that the right spoken of in this section is an incorporeal right. I do not think that there is any sufficient reason for putting this limitation on the meaning of the term as used in the section. The judgment, therefore, is in my opinion relevant under section 13.

"If such judgments were not relevant under either of the two sections 11 and 13, they could not be admissible in evidence, [528] as the Privy Council have held them to be in the two cases referred to above.

"The strongest argument against the admissibility of such judgments in evidence is, to use the language of a well-known writer on the Law of Evidence (see Taylor on Evidence, 9th edition, section 1682) 'That no man ought to be bound by proceedings to which he was a stranger and over the conduct of which he could, therefore, have exercised no control.' But in the first place, the judgments in question are sought to be used, not as binding and conclusive evidence, but only as evidence for what they are worth, the weight to be attached to the evidence being left to the Court to determine. And in the second place, the reason stated above, though it is a good reason for excluding from consideration as against a stranger, the evidence afforded by a judgment, so far as it is the opinion of a Court upon materials in the placing of which before the Court the stranger could have had no control, does not appear to hold equally good where what is sought to be taken into consideration is the evidence afforded by the existence of the judgment as to a litigation relating to the right in question and the way in which that litigation terminated. For such collateral purposes, judgments are admissible in evidence against strangers under the English Law. See Davies v. Lowndes, (1843) 6 M. & G., 471 (520). It is true that their Lordships of the Privy Council in the two cases referred to above while overruling in effect the decision of this Court in Gujju Lal v. Fatteh Lal, (1880) I. L. R., 6 Cal., 171, and Surendro Nath v. Brojo Nath, (1886) I. L. R., 13 Cal., 352, do not refer to any section of the Evidence Act. But I may add that the view I take is supported to some extent by the cases of Hira Lal Pal v. A. Hills, (1882) 11 C. L. R., 528; Venkata Sami v. Venkatreddi, (1891) I. L. R., 15 Mad., 12; and the Collector of Goruckhpur v. Palakdhari Singh, (1889) I. L. R., 12 All., 1. It has sometimes been said (see Ranchhod Dass v. Bapu [529] Narhar, (1888) I. L. R., 10 Bom., 439) that if the Legislature in this country had intended to make judgments admissible in evidence against strangers, as it was an important departure from the English Law, the intention would have been expressed, not indirectly by the provisions embodied in sections 11 and 13, but directly by some express povision in that part of the Evidence Act which relates to judgments. I think the answer to this remark is furnished by section 43, which is one of the group of sections relating to judgments, and which contains the provision applicable to cases like the one before us, relating to the relevancy of judgments as evidence against strangers.

"For these reasons I think the judgment in Suit No. 742 of 1887 ought to have been admitted in evidence. But as the point raised is not altogether free from doubt and difficulty, and is one of frequent occurrence and of great importance, I agree with the learned Chief Justice in thinking that the case should be referred to a Full Bench, the main question for determination being whether the judgments referred to above to which the plaintiff-respondent was no party are admissible in evidence against him under sections 11 and 13 of the Evidence Act, or under any other provision of law.

"MACLEAN, C.J.—I concur in thinking, as the point often arises and is of great importance, that this case should be referred to a Full Bench, but I reserve my opinion upon the point submitted for decision."

Babu Hari Mohun Chuckerbutty for the Appellants.

Babu Lal Mohan Dass for the Respondents.

The following opinions were delivered by the Full Bench (MACLEAN, C.J., and MACPHERSON, TREVELYAN, BANERJEE and JENKINS, JJ.): -

Maclean, C. J. - Although I was a party to this reference, I am not quite satisfied, after the discussion which we have heard to-day, that the question submitted in its broader aspect really arises. In my opinion, the judgments in question are not admissible in evidence in this suit, because now that the matter [530] has been fully laid before us, it appears that the subject-matter of the present suit is not identical with the subject-matter in the previous suits, in which those judgments were delivered. In the previous suit the subject matter was to recover a two-thirds share of the property in question, but in the present case it is a suit by a different plaintiff to recover the remaining one-third share. The subject-matter, therefore, of the two suits is not identical; the title to the one-third share may be, and apparently is. different from that of the other shares. In this view the judgments which were sought to be admitted as evidence in this case were irrelevant, and, therefore, not admissible as evidence. This point, so far as I recollect, I am speaking only from memory, was not very clearly brought to the attention of Mr. Justice BANERJEE and myself on the previous occasion, and if it had been, we might possibly have thought that this reference was not necessary. But as the two cases decided by the Full Bench in this Court, the case of Gujju Lall v. Fatteh Lall, (1880) I.L.R., 6 Cal., 171, and a later case of Surender Nath Pal Chowdhry v. Brojo Nath Pal Chowdhry, (1886) I. L. R., 13 Cal., 352, have been referred to, I feel bound to express my opinion that, having regard to the recent observations of the Privy Council in the case of Ram Ranjan Chakerbati v. Ram Narain Singh, (1894) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 533: L. R., 22 I. A., 60, and in the more recent case of Bitto Kunwar v. Kesho Pershad, (1897) L.R., 24 I. A., 10, the Full Bench decisions referred to must be regarded as materially qualified, because it is clear from the decisions in the Privy Council that under certain circumstances, and in certain cases, the judgment in a previous suit, to which one of the parties in the subsequent suit was not a party, may be admissible in evidence for certain purposes and with certain objects in the subsequent suit.

The decree in the present suit in favour of the plaintiff must be limited to a one-third share of 8 bighas and odd cottahs only; subject to the decree being varied to that extent the appeal fails, and must be dismissed with costs, including the costs of this reference.

[531] Macpherson, J.—I agree in the view expressed by the learned Chief Justice.

Trevelyan, J.—I also agree.

Banerjee, J.—I agree with the learned Chief Justice in holding that the rule laid down in the cases of Gujju Lall v. Fatteh Lall, (1880) I. L. R., 6 Cal., 171, and Surender Nath Pal Chowdhry v. Brojo Nath Pal Chowdhry, (1886) I. L. R., 13 Cal., 352, must be taken to have been materially qualified by the decisions in the Privy Council in the cases of Ram Ranjan Chakerbati v. Ram Narain Singh, (1894) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 533, and Bitto Kunwar v. Kesho Pershad, (1897) L. R., 24 I. A., 10. Upon the question whether the judgment mentioned in the referring order is admissible or not, I feel bound to say that I am not quite satisfied that the mere fact of the subject-matter of the present suit being a one-third share in the property in dispute, whereas the subject-matter of the previous suit was the remaining two-thirds of the same property, would make any real difference in the case, having regard to the nature of the case made by the parties to the suit. For the reasons given by me in the referring order, I still have my doubts as to whether the Lower Appellate Court was right in excluding that judgment altogether. But I must add that my doubts on the point are not so strong as to justify my expressing myself in the language of positive dissent.

Jenkins, J.—I agree with the learned Chief Justice.

Landlord and Tenant—Suit for rent—Sub-division of Tenancy—Rent receipt signed by the agent—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), section 88.

[532] A receipt for rent granted by a landlord or his agent containing a recital that a tenant's name is registered in the landlord's sherishta as a tenant of a portion of the original holding at a rent which is a portion of the original rent, does amount to a consent in writing by the landlord to a sub-division of the holding and a distribution of the rent payable in respect thereof, within the meaning of section 88 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

THIS case was referred to a Full Bench by BANERJEE and RAMPINI, JJ., on the 23rd April 1897, with the following OPINION:—

"This appeal arises out of a suit for arrears of rent. The plaintiff, in the plaint as originally filed, alleged that the defendant held 41 bighas 11 cottahs and 4 chittaks of land, bearing a rent of Rs. 31-1 anna 1¼ koras, and that arrears were due for the period from Bysak 1298 to Choitro 1300.

"The defence was, that the holding did not contain the area alleged by the plaintiff, nor did it bear the rent mentioned in the plaint, but that the defendant was really in possession of 37 bighas 12 cottahs and 4 chittaks of land, bearing a rent of Rs. 28-15 annas and 2¼ gundas, and that this reduced holding at the lower rent resulted from a sub-division of the former holding, an area of 3 bighas 19 cottahs, bearing a rent of Rs. 2-14 annas 15¾ gundas, having been sold to one Sridhur Haldar. Subsequently, the plaint was amended with the permission of the Court; and the plaintiff stated in the amended plaint that the area of the holding was 45 bighas 6 cottahs, and the annual rent Rs. 33-14 annas 10¼ gundas. Upon the plaint being amended, a fresh written statement was put in, in which the defendant alleged that, in addition to the transfer to Sridhur Haldar, there had been transfers to three other persons; and that the quantity of land that was in the possession of the defendant, and the rent that was payable by him, were as alleged in the first written statement. There was also a plea of payment raised."

Upon these pleadings, the parties went to trial upon three issues: "First, whether the jama payable by the defendant is Rs. 33-14 annas, or Rs. 28-1 anna, after kharij." "Second, whether the plaintiff's suit is not maintainable as the plaintiff has not filed the road-cess returns, and whether the defendant is not [533] entitled to raise that plea now." "Thirdly, whether the defendant's allegation of payment is true."

The Court of First Instance found against the defendant upon all these issues, and it decreed the claim in full. On appeal by the defendant, the Lower Appellate Court gave effect to the plea of sub-division of the holding, and it accordingly modified the decree of the first Court, holding that the annual rent payable by the defendant was Rs. 28-1 anna.

Against that decision of the Lower Appellate Court, the plaintiff has preferred this second appeal, and it is contended on his behalf, first, that the Lower Appellate Court was wrong in giving effect to the plea of sub-division of the holding, and the consequent reduction of the rent, sofar as that plea related to the deduction unsuccessfully pleaded in a previous suit, by reason of the transfer of a part of the holding to Sridhur Haldar; and, secondly, that the Lower Appellate Court was wrong in giving effect to the defendant's plea of sub-division of the tenure when it was not shown that such sub-division was made with the consent in writing of the plaintiff, as required by section 88 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. As it is necessary for the disposal of this case to determine the point raised in the second contention of the appellant, and as upon the question raised in that contention there is a conflict of authority in this Court between the case of Aubhoy Churn Maji v. Shoshi Bhusan Bose, (1888) I. L. R., 16 Cal., 155, and the unreported decision in second appeal No. 1537* of 1891, Jagadishwar

* The 9th August, 1892.

MR. JUSTICE NORRIS AND MR. JUSTICE BEVERLEY.

Jagadishur Bhuttacharji............Defendant

Joymoni Devi............Plaintiff.†

Landlord and Tenant -Suit for rent—Receipt granted by the gomastha of the landlord, containing recital that the tenant's name was registered in the landlord's sherishta in respect of a holding which is a portion of the original holding—Effect of such receipt—Sub-division of tenancy —Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), section 88.

A rent receipt signed by the landlord's gomastha, and containing a recital that the defendant's name is registered in the landlord's sherishta, as a tenant in respect of a holding which is a portion of the original holding, is evidence of the fact that the landlord consented to the sub-division of the tenure.

The facts of the case, for the purposes of this report, are sufficiently stated in the judgment of the High Court.

Babu Ashutosh Mookerjee for the Appellant.

No one appeared for the Respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (Norris and Beverley, JJ.) was as follows :—

This is an appeal from the decision of the District Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, who has confirmed the decision of the Munsif of Alipur in a rent suit.

The suit was for arrears of rent, and the defendant No. 2 who is the appellant before us contended that the original rental of Rs. 28-13 annas had been sub-divided, and that he, at the time the suit was brought, held a portion only of the land in respect of which the rent was sued for and which had been consolidated with other lands of which he was in possession, which together formed a new holding.

The suit was decreed. The defence was held to fail on the ground that under the provisions of section 88 of the Bengal Tenancy Act there was no evidence to show that the landlord had consented to the sub-division of the holding.

The case came before us on the 1st of this month, and it was adjourned in order that the learned Vakil for the appellant might have the dakhila upon which he relied translated. It has now been translated and copies of the translations are before us. It appears that this †Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1537 of 1891 against the decree of R. F. Rampini, Esq., District Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 11th of June 1891, affirming the decree of Babu Kartic Chunder Pal, First Munsif of Alipur, dated the 8th of October 1890.

[534] Bhattacharji v. Joymoni Debi, dated the 9th August 1892, it becomes necessary under Rule I of Chapter V of the rules of this Court on the Appellate Side to refer this case for decision by a Full Bench. Though the receipts expressly referred to by the Lower Appellate Court are receipts not for rent but for bonus paid by the transferee, they do not cover all the transfers pleaded. To give effect to the plea as the lower Court has done, it is conceded that receipts for rent filed in the case have to be referred to; and thus there arises the question upon which the conflict of authority referred to above exists, namely, whether a receipt for rent [535] granted by the landlord or his agent containing a recital that a tenant's name is registered in the landlord's sherishta as a tenant of a portion of the original holding, at a rent which is a portion of the original rent, amounts to a consent in writing by the landlord to a division of the holding, and a distribution of the rent payable in respect thereof, within the meaning of section 88 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. As the question arises in a second appeal, the whole case must be referred to a Full Bench for decision.

Babu Girish Chunder Chowdhry for the Appellant contended that a receipt signed by a gomastha does not amount to a consent in writing within the meaning of section 88 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The receipt may be binding upon the landlord, but it cannot be called a consent in writing of the landlord, so as to make a sub-division of a tenure.

Section 56 of the Bengal Tenancy Act speaks only of granting of receipts for the amount paid by the tenant, but such receipt cannot have the effect of a consent in writing of the landlord. Then again section 187, clause 3, of the Bengal Tenancy Act clearly indicates that in order to make a sub-division there must be a consent in writing to that effect by the landlord; the mere granting of a receipt by a gomastha would not make a sub-division.

Dr. Ashutosh Mookerjee for the Respondent was not called upon.

The following opinions were delivered by the Full Bench (MACLEAN, C.J., and MACPHERSON, TREVELYAN, BANERJEE, and JENKINS, JJ.)

Maclean, C.J. —The question for our decision on this reference is whether a receipt for rent granted by the landlord or his agent containing a recital that a tenant's name is registered in [536] the landlord's sherishta as the tenant of a portion of the original holding at a rent which is a portion of the original rent amounts to a consent in writing by the landlord to a division of the holding and a distribution of the rent payable in respect thereof within the meaning of section 88 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The matter was referred to a Full Bench by reason of a difference of opinion which was regarded as existing between the case of Aubhoy Churn Maji v. Shoshi Bhusan Bose, (1888) I. L. R., 16 Cal., 155, and an unreported decision of NORRIS and BEVERLEY, JJ. in S. A. No. 1537 of 1891, dated 9th August 1892, which is set out in the Paper Book. I am not myself quite satisfied that, as between these two cases, there is any real difference of opinion, for it is not very clear what the actual form of the receipt was in the case of Aubhoy Churn Maji v. Shoshi Bhusan Bose, (1888) I. L. R., 16 Cal., 155. In dakhila, which is signed by the landlord's gomastha, states that in the landlord's serishta the appealing defendant is registered as a tenant in respect of a holding of 37 bighas 13 cottahs at a rent of Rs. 18-1-8 pie, plus 9 annas for road-cess and public work-cess.

We think that this document containing the recital that the defendant is thus registered in the landlord's serishta and being signed by the gomastha of the plaintiff is evidence that the landlord consented to the sub-division of the tenure.

We are therefore of opinion that the appeal must be allowed, the decrees of the lower Courts set aside, and the plaintiff's suit dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

Appeal allowed.

the present case, the receipt is in the form given in the schedule to the Bengal Tenancy Act. I assume for the purpose of our decision, and I think the question submitted to us presupposes, that the agent is duly authorised by the landlord to give such a receipt. If that be so, I entertain no doubt whatever that a receipt given by the landlord or by his duly authorized agent in the form of the receipt given in this case, amounts to a consent in writing by the landlord to a division of the holding and a distribution of the rent payable in respect thereof within the meaning of section 88 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

As regards the other point, which was rather hinted at than argued, viz., that the matter was res judicata, having regard to the findings of fact by the Lower Appellate Court, the point is not arguable.

The appeal therefore fails and must be dismissed with costs including the costs of this reference.

Macpherson, J.—I agree.

Trevelyan, J.—I also agree.

Banerjee, J.—I agree with the learned Chief Justice in thinking that the receipt produced in this case is sufficient to [537] answer the requirements of section 88 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. I only wish to add one word with reference to the reason for this reference to a Full Bench. Although the form of the receipt in the case of Aubhoy Churn Maji v. Shoshi Bhusan Bose, (1888) I. L. R., 16 Cal., 155, is not set out, it appears from the statement of facts in the report that the receipt was one for the smaller rent payable in respect of the smaller area contended for by the defendant. That receipt was considered insufficient to meet the requirements of section 88 by the Lower Appellate Court; and in the judgment of this Court, the learned Judges observe, after referring to the view taken of section 88 by the Lower Appellate Court: "In this view of section 88 we agree." It was this observation that influenced me in referring the case to a Full Bench.

Jenkins, J.—I concur in the judgment of the Chief Justice.

S. C. G. Appeal dismissed.

[On appeal from the Chief Court of the Punjab.]

Marriage— Personal Status -Christian marriage followed by Mahomedan marriage Rights of widow under Mahomedan law Divorce.

In a suit to obtain a widow's share under Mahomedan law in the estate of the deceased, it was proved that the plaintiff and deceased had been married in 1865 as professed Christians in a church at Meerut, that subsequently, having reverted to Mahomedanism, they were married a second time according to Mahomedan law in nikah form, which second marriage had not been dissolved by a Mahomedan divorce. In 1886 the husband died, leaving a will excluding the wife from all participation in his estate.

Held, that the personal status of the deceased being at the time of his death that of a Mahomedan, and the plaintiff's personal status being that of his wife under the same law, she was entitled to a share in his estate, notwithstanding his will, which purported, but under Mahomedan law was inoperative, to exclude her [538] Quaere,—whether in the case of spouses remaining domiciled in India where religious creed affects the rights incidental to marriage, such as that of divorce, a change of religion made honestly after marriage with the assent of both spouses, without any intent to commit a fraud on the law, affects any change in those rights.

APPEAL from a decree (12th July 1893) of the Chief Court, affirming a decree (25th June 1889) of the District Judge of Delhi The appellant, first defendant in the suit, was a sharer, and represented minor defendants, also sharers, in the estate of the late Stuart Skinner, otherwise Sardar [Nawab ?] Mirza, who died a Mahomedan in 1886. The plaintiff, respondent, (and cross-appellant in the Chief Court), was also a Mahomedan, and claimed to share in his estate according to that law, as his widow.

The facts are stated in their Lordships' judgment.

The main question as to the plaintiff's title, which was founded on her marriage to the deceased in the English form in a Church at Meerut, they having both been then Christians, was this Whether the plaintiff, who afterwards with her husband had reverted to the Mahomedan religion, was precluded from claiming her widow's share in the distribution of her husband's estate on his decease, according to the latter law, by reason of her having been divorced from him in manner sanctioned thereby.

Both the Courts below decided that the widow's claim was established; but they differed as to whether, in fact, such a divorce, according to Mahomedan law, had taken place. The District Judge found that it had. But he decided that it had no effect to dissolve the Christian marriage. The Chief Court, on an appeal, found no sufficient evidence of the divorce: so that the result was identical in the judgment of both Courts in favour of the claim.

The decree made by the District Judge, and affirmed, with the above distinction as to the grounds, by the Chief Court, directed a partition of the estate of the deceased, and the delivery of her share to the plaintiff as one of the two widows of the deceased Mahomedan proprietor.

The District Judge did not consider it necessary before giving his judgment, of the 25th June 1889, in favour of the plaintiff, to call on the defendants to produce all their evidence of the divorce [539] having taken place. The Christian marriage could not, in his opinion, have been dissolved by the divorce (talak), even if proved; and in support of this, he referred to the recognition, by the Mahomedan law itself, of a valid Christian marriage.

The first defendant appealed, and the plaintiff cross-appealed, to the Chief Court, who, on the 1st April 1891, remanded the suit to the first Court to take all the evidence for the defence. The District Judge, in his return of the 22nd June 1892, found that the plaintiff [plaintiff's husband?] had pronounced what amounted to a divorce against his wife, according to Mahomedan law, before 1865; but that this had not effected a dissolution of the Christian marriage of 1855.

The final judgment of the Chief Court of the 12th July 1893 distinguished between the evidence as to the actual occurrences which constituted the divorce, and the evidence as to the supposed effect of those occurrences. It was clear, said the Court, as indeed it was admitted by the defendants, that it was for that Court to decide whether or not there was an effectual divorce; and it had been correctly argued that it was of no consequence whether the parties were afterwards reconciled; for that would not renew, or revive, the marriage tie. Proceeding to the facts on which they were to decide the legal question—Was there a divorce?—the Court summed up that they did not consider the evidence to have given a true or trustworthy account of the occurrence, concerning which a dispute afterwards arose as to whether the words used constituted a conditional divorce.

The Court said: "It must be remembered that the whole issue depends upon the precise words said by Nawab Mirza to his wife thirty-five years before suit. All that can be safely deduced from the evidence is that about the year 1859 something was said by the husband to the wife, which the wife chose to regard as amounting to a divorce, probably a conditional divorce, and which the husband did not so regard; that the difference of opinion between husband and wife was referred before 1865 to a council of experts (or possibly two councils) which differed as to the legal effect of whatever had been submitted to them; and that the parties to the marriage [540] adhered to their respective views for a considerable period afterwards, and probably up to the time of Nawab Mirza's death. What was actually said by the husband to the wife it is impossible to determine positively, and with reasonable certainty upon the evidence before us, and it is therefore impossible to say whether or not there was a divorce which under the Mahomedan law dissolved the marriage tie of the nikah at Delhi.

"As to the rest of the evidence, it is agreed on all hands that the parties separated in 1859, and we do not consider that any fact is proved which is inconsistent with the continuance of the marriage tie from that date onwards, though we are by no means satisfied that there was any renewal of conjugal co-habitation. The results of the evidence are merely negative, and no positive conclusions can be, or need be, arrived at upon the minor disputed points.

"We find accordingly that it is not proved that the plaintiff was divorced by her husband at any time after the marriage, and consequently she was still his wife at the time of his death."

The Judges concurred with the lower Court in finding that the loss of a kabin nama, alleged by the plaintiff to have been executed, had not been proved; nor that any portion of dower was due thereunder.

They thus stated their conclusion: "The result of these findings of fact is that the decree of the District Judge stands affirmed; but on somewhat different grounds from those on which it was made. We must accordingly dismiss both appeals; and we think that the proper order is that each party should bear its own costs in both appeals."

On an appeal preferred by the first defendant,

Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the appellant, argued that the Chief Court were wrong in their view of the facts as to the divorce, as to which they should have maintained the finding of the District Court. But, as to the legal effect of that divorce, he argued that the District Court had been wrong in holding that it had not operated to dissolve the Christian marriage of 1855. That [541] divorce had operated to disqualify the widow from claiming to share in her late husband's estate according to the Mahomedan law. Examination of the evidence showed that her conduct and assertions after her separation from her husband were sufficient to prove that she herself considered that she had been divorced and that she was free to marry again. The facts disentitled her to claim, on the principles of justice, equity, and good conscience, against the estate of the deceased, —principles which had been applied to members of the Skinner family in Barlow v. Orde, (1870) 13 Moo. I. A., 277.

The Respondent did not appear.

The judgment of their Lordships was delivered on 8th December 1897 by Lord Watson. Stuart Skinner, otherwise known as Nawab Mirza, was, on the 3rd May 1855, married to the respondent, who was the daughter of one Martin Blake, of the Bengal Civil Service, by a Mahomedan woman, Choti Begum. The ceremony was performed in the Protestant Church at Meerut, by the Rev. J. E. Wharton Rotton, the resident chaplain. It appears that the spouses were originally adherents of the Mahomedan faith; and that, in order to validate the marriage which they contemplated, they had previously become professing Christians, the respondent having [542] been baptized at Delhi on the 18th April 1855, and Stuart Skinner, at Meerut on his marriage day. Some time after the marriage, but not later than the commencement of the Mutiny in 1857, both spouses reverted to their original creed; and, although they did not cohabit after the year 1859, they both continued in the practice and profession of the Mahomedan faith until the death of Stuart Skinner, which took place at Delhi, on the 29th of January 1886.

After their Christian marriage, the spouses went through the form of marriage a second time, according to Mahomedan law. The precise date of the ceremony is not satisfactorily fixed by the evidence; but it must have been shortly after the time when they reverted to Mahomedanism. In the year 1859, in consequence of domestic unpleasantness, occasioned by the circumstance that Stuart Skinner suspected his wife of having illicit intercourse with one Abdul Wahid, it is a fact proved beyond dispute that the respondent left his house and never returned to it. She stayed at first with her mother, and subsequently went to live with her alleged paramour, Abdul Wahid, to whom she bore several children. Before their separation, two children, a son and a daughter, whose legitimacy is not impeached, had been born of the marriage between her and Stuart Skinner, both of whom survived their father.

In the month of May 1871, Stuart Skinner began to cohabit with Sophia Skinner, daughter of one Thomas Skinner, whom he treated as his wife, and with whom he continued to live on that footing, until his decease in January 1886. He was survived by six children, born of that intercourse, by whom the present appeal has been brought.

This suit was commenced in May 1888, 16 months after the death of Stuart Skinner, by Charlotte Blake, alias Badshah Begum. In her plaint, Badshah Begum set forth their Christian marriage, and also alleged that "shortly after the said marriage, the plaintiff and Nawab Mirza were again married at Delhi according to Mahomedan law, as Sunnis, and "the plaintiff's dower was fixed at Rs. 50,000." She further averred that she and the deceased "lived together as husband and wife [543] according to the Mahomedan creed." Her claim was alternative, being for one-third of the deceased's estate according to the English law of inheritance, or otherwise, for Rs. 50,000 as dower, and one-eighth of the remaining estate according to Mahomedan law. The parties called by her as defendants were the two children born by her to the deceased during their cohabitation, and the six appellants, whom she described as being "looked upon as the heirs of Nawab Mirza, and entitled to succeed to the estate left by him." The plaintiff at the beginning of the litigation disputed that there had been any marriage between the deceased and Sophia Skinner, and the legitimacy of their offspring; but that contention was ultimately abandoned. By order of the District Judge of Delhi, before whom the action depended, Sophia Skinner was added as a defendant.

None of the defendants lodged written pleading; but they appeared by their Vakils before the District Judge, who made a note of the pleas orally stated in defence to the action, with a view to the adjustment of issues. The main pleas stated for the present appellants were to the effect (1) that the plaintiff was not, at the time of his decease, the wife of their father Stuart Skinner, she having been divorced by him, according to Mahomedan law, about the year 1859; and (2) that the deceased had left a last will, by the terms of which she was, in any event, excluded from his succession. The plaintiff, in replication, denied the execution of the will, and also contended that, assuming the will to have been executed with due formality, it was in law inoperative.

The learned Judge having adjusted 13 issues, which it is unnecessary to notice in detail, intimated to the parties, at the close of the plaintiff's evidence, that he would only take evidence from the defendants as to the factum of the will set up in answer to the plaintiff's claim, and then hear arguments upon the law points, when, if necessary, he would call upon the defendants to produce their remaining evidence. The effect of that order was to limit the evidence of the defendants to the 9th issue:—"Did Stuart Skinner execute a will excluding the plaintiff?"

When the evidence of the defendants bearing upon the [544] factum of the will was concluded, the District Judge heard parties, and gave judgment upon the 25th June 1889. He found that the Christian marriage of 1855 was valid and binding upon the parties; and he also held that the subsequent return of the spouses to Mahomedanism did not give the husband any right to dissolve that marriage by a divorce according to Mahomedan law. He found in fact that the will put forward by the defendants had been duly executed by Stuart Skinner; but he held that it was in law inoperative, because it was admitted on both sides that Stuart Skinner, after the nikah or second marriage ceremony with Badshah Begum, " continued to live as a Mahomedan, and died professing this faith." The learned Judge adds that, in the matter of his will, "Stuart Skinner was bound by the provisions of the Mahomedan law, and according to that law it was clearly invalid." Upon the assumption on which it proceeds, the Mahomedan law laid down by the learned Judge appears to their Lordships to be correct, and no attempt was made by the appellant's counsel to impugn it. Upon these findings, a decree of partition was given to Badshah Begum, which assigned to her, as one of the two legal wives of the deceased, one-half of the eighth share allotted to the widow, or widows as the case may be, under the Mahomedan law of intestacy.

Against that judgment cross appeals were taken to the Chief Court of the Punjab; and, on the 1st April 1891, Sir Meredyth Plowden and C. A. Roe, Esq., remanded the case to the District Judge, under section 566 of the Civil Procedure Code, directing him to proceed with the trial of the 6th, 7th and 8th issues which he had framed, and to report the evidence and his findings thereon. The issues thus sent back were : 6 Did he (i.e., Stuart Skinner) in fact divorce her, (i.e., Badsha Begum), and when ? 7. Subsequently did plaintiff re-marry, and when ? 8. What was plaintiff's dower on nikah with Stuart Skinner? In obedience to the remand, the District Judge took evidence bearing upon these issues, which he returned to the Court, along with his findings, upon the 22nd June 1892. Upon the 6th issue, his finding was, that Badshah Begum had been divorced, according to the form prescribed by Mahomedan law, sometime [545] before 1865; upon the 7th issue, that Badshah Begum lived with Abdul Wahid as his wife, but that there was no evidence to show that they had contracted a Mahomedan or nikah marriage, and, upon the 8th issue, that, on the plaintiff's nikah marriage with Stuart Skinner, her dower was fixed at Rs. 50,000, such finding being subject to those qualifications, (1) that it was questionable whether the spouses, in going through the ceremony of a nikah marriage, and fixing the dower at Rs. 50,000, considered it more than an empty form, and (2) that it was " subject to the plaintiff's right to give secondary evidence of the contents of the deed of dower, which up to this date has not been produced."

The case was finally disposed of in the Chief Court of the Punjab, on the 12th July 1893, by the same learned Judges who had made the remand. Their decree simply affirmed the original decree of the District Judge, and ordered the parties to bear their own costs of appeal. In arriving at that result, the learned Judges expressed no opinion in regard to the finding of law by the District Judge in his original judgment of the 25th June 1889, to the effect that the fact of the spouses having returned to their Mahomedan faith after the Christian marriage of 1855 did not give Stuart Skinner any right to dissolve that marriage by a Mahomedan divorce ; but they reversed the later finding of the District Judge to the effect that there had been such a divorce. They agreed with him in holding, first, that, in the absence of secondary evidence of the contents of the deed of dower alleged by her, the plaintiff's claim for dower must fail: and, secondly, that the defendants had failed to prove their allegation that Badshah Begum had married Abdul Wahid during the life-time of Stuart Skinner.

The decree made by the District Judge, and ultimately approved of by the Chief Court, is framed upon the footing that the personal status of Stuart Skinner, at the time of his death in 1886, was that of a Mahomedan, and that the rights of succession to his estate, including the right of his first wife, who had become and was then a Mahomedan, were governed by the rules of Mahomedan law. But the grounds upon which the two Courts [546] came to the conclusion that Badshah Begum continued to possess the status of a wife of the deceased were essentially different. Whilst the District Judge held, as a matter of law, that the regular Christian marriage, celebrated between two persons domiciled in India, could not, upon the spouses subsequently embracing and professing Mahomedanism, be dissolved by a Mahomedan divorce, the learned Judges of the Chief Court were of opinion that, as a matter of fact, there had been no Mahomedan divorce, as alleged by the defendants.

One of the many peculiar features of this suit arises from the circumstance that in the case of spouses resident in India, their personal status, and what is frequently termed the status of the marriage, is not solely dependent upon domicile, but involves the element of religious creed. Whether a change of religion, made honestly after marriage with the assent of both spouses, without any intent to commit a fraud upon the law, will have the effect of altering rights incidental to the marriage, such as that of divorce, is a question of importance, and it may be of nicety. In the present case that question does not arise for decision, unless it is shown that Stuart Skinner did, in fact, divorce Badshah Begum according to Mahomedan form.

On the hearing of this appeal, which was ex parte, the appellants' counsel did not challenge any finding of the Court below with the exception of that of the Chief Court which negatives the fact of divorce. Upon that part of the case, their Lordships, after careful consideration of the evidence, which is not only contradictory, but is marked by peculiarities which are more perplexing than mere contradiction, have come to substantially the same conclusion with the learned Judges of the Chief Court. In these circumstances, and having regard to the fact that the case has come before them in such a shape as to make an exhaustive argument from the bar on both sides of the question impossible, they do not think it expedient to express any opinion as to the effect of a change of religion by the spouses, their domicile remaining the same, upon the rights of one or other of them which are incidental to marriage.

The bulk, and that not the least important part of the evidence [547] adduced in this case bearing upon the fact of divorce, consists of legal proceedings between the respondent Badshah Begum and the deceased Stuart Skinner, including depositions of witnesses taken in those proceedings. The difficulty, to say the least of it, of estimating the value of that evidence for the purposes of the present case, is occasioned by the fact that, in all these litigations, the respondent alleged and endeavoured to prove that she had been divorced about the year 1859, whereas the deceased alleged and endeavoured to prove that she had not. Accordingly, in the present suit, the appellants relied upon the statements made and proof furnished by the respondent, whilst she herself relies upon the statements made and proof furnished by Stuart Skinner, which she had controverted. It appears to their Lordships that these proceedings would have been insufficient to raise an estoppel, either against the respondent or against Stuart Skinner, in any question between them as to their status; and, in the argument upon this appeal, it was in their Lordships' opinion rightly conceded by the appellants' counsel, that the respondent was not estopped from maintaining that she never ceased to be the wife of Stuart Skinner, and that the question must now be decided upon the weight of the evidence before the Court.

The first of these proceedings, Suit No. 257 of 1865, was instituted by the respondent against Stuart Skinner and the Official Trustee, who held certain funds in which the respondent and her children were interested. The immediate cause of action was the refusal of Stuart Skinner to sign papers to enable the respondent to obtain payment of interest on those funds to which she was entitled. The case was settled by a judgment adjusted with consent of the parties, in which, notwithstanding the respondent's contention that she had been divorced, Stuart Skinner is described as "her husband."

The second (Suit No. 33 of 1868) was brought against the respondent and also against Stuart Skinner, by Sophia Skinner, an infant, the legitimate daughter of their Christian marriage, and one John Van Cortland, as her next friend, for the appointment of a guardian to the infant. Stuart Skinner, who, by the consent decree in the previous suit, had become bound to give [548] the custody of the infant to the respondent, was the real instigator of the action, in which he repeated the allegation that the respondent was his wife, whilst she denied it. The suit was dismissed, with costs against both parents.

The third of these proceedings was an action brought by Stuart Skinner, in the year 1881, against Mrs. W. Orde and others, for the purpose of establishing his own legitimacy, and so proving his title to the share of an estate. The respondent was not a party to the suit, but she was examined as a witness on behaif of Stuart Skinner, when she again took the opportunity of stating that she had ceased to be his wife, by reason of his divorce.

There is, in their Lordships' opinion, an entire absence of facts established by reliable evidence, available for the purpose of testing the accuracy of the counter-statements made in the course of these proceedings by the respondent and by Stuart Skinner respectively. The only facts which appear to them to be proved are these: That, about 1869, there were dissensions between the spouses, in consequence of which the respondent left her husband's house, and never returned to it; that after, if not before she left, the respondent did not lead a chaste life, and gave her husband good cause for divorcing her, if he had chosen to dissolve the marriage tie; but it by no means follows that Stuart Skinner, either thought that it would be conducive to his interest, or that he intended to avail himself of that remedy. On the contrary, his repeated judicial assertions that, notwithstanding their actual separation, he still continued to be the husband of the respondent, strongly point to the inference that his design was to retain the hold over his wife which that relation gave him, in order that he might use it for his own advantage. If he had really been desirous to divorce the lady, he could have done so whenever he chose, according to Mahomedan law. It would, in their Lordships' opinion, be somewhat rash to assume that the counter-statements of these two parties were not affected by motives of self-interest, but they see no cause to prefer, as the District Judge did, the statements of the respondent, who had a clear object in stating that she [549] was divorced in the first and second of these suits, and, so far as they can see, she may have been actuated by the same motive when giving evidence in the year 1881.

The appellants relied strongly upon evidence which was furnished by them after the remand, as establishing that, subsequently to their disputes in Court, Stuart Skinner had a meeting with Badshah Begum, in her mother's house at Delhi, at which their controversy as to the fact of the divorce had been settled by Stuart Skinner admitting it. The date of the meeting is not precisely fixed, but it appears to have been about the year 1860 or 1861. Four maulvis, or sages learned in the law, are said to have been present, and to have had submitted to them, for their opinion, a paper containing the precise words which were addressed by Stuart Skinner to his wife in 1859, at the time when they separated. From the account given by Amanullah, a leading witness for the defendants, he had suggested to Badshah Begum " a reference to learned men (ulama) to whom the words used should be stated, and who should give their opinion whether they amounted to a divorce or not, she appointing some and Nawab Mirza some. To this she agreed. On behalf of Nawab Mirza, I called Maulvi Sayad Muhammad and Maulvi Karimullah, and she called Maulvi Said-ud-din and another, whose name I forget. I was present at their meeting. A friend of hers stated the words used by Nawab Mirza, Badshah Begum being behind the pardah. The deliberations of the learned conclave, and the result of the meeting, are thus stated by the same witness : After consultation, Maulvi Sayad Muhammad said that the divorce was not clear, while the other learned men said it amounted to a divorce." " No written opinion was recorded ; before it could be done, dispute arose, and we dragged away Nawab Mirza from the house."

Assuming that such a meeting took place, terminating in a conflict which does not appear to have been confined to logic, and from which it was necessary to remove Stuart Skinner alias Nawab Mirza, by force, their Lordships are unable to derive from it any inference that Stuart Skinner then admitted that Badshah Begum had ceased to be his lawful wife. There is, in their opinion, no satisfactory evidence to show that the words, [550] which on that occasion are said to have been represented to the maulvis as having been the precise words used by the husband in 1859, were so in fact, or were admitted by both parties to be so. Nor does it appear that either of the spouses intended or consented to be bound by the opinion of the maulvis. There is really no trustworthy evidence to prove the language used by the husband in 1859. The version which is said, by witnesses examined in this case, to have been used at the meeting of 1860 or 1861, depends upon the memory of people not altogether neutral, who are speaking after a lapse of thirty years. The District Judge, in his report, relies to some extent upon the depositions of certain witnesses, taken in Badshah Begum's suit of 1865, which have been put in evidence in this case, but the Judges of the High Court make no reference to them. That testimony does not appear to their Lordships to be calculated to dispel the obscurity in which the matter is involved. Ahmed Jan, one of Badshah Begum's witnesses, says that he and three others were present in her mother's house, when Stuart Skinner said to her three times " I have divorced you " and then went away. Another witness, servant of a female relative of Badshah Begum, tells a similar story, but says that, besides himself, there were only two persons present, including Ahmed Jan. Both those witnesses state that there were no relations of either spouse present. The evidence of Maulvi Said-ud-din refers, not to what took place in 1859, but at the meeting of 1860 or 1861, which has been already noticed. In these circumstances, their Lordships have come to the conclusion that the defendants have failed either to establish that Stuart Skinner admitted that he had divorced his wife according to Mahomedan law, or to prove the words which he actually used in 1859, so as to enable a Court of law to determine whether they did or did not amount to a Mahomedan divorce.

Their Lordships will, accordingly, humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm the judgment appealed from and to dismiss the appeal. There will be no order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Bengal Tenancy Act (Act VIII of 1885), section 167—Effect of service of notice—Annulling of incumbrance—Property in possession of a person other than the purchaser.

Service of notice under section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has the effect of annulling an incumbrance. It is not necessary for the purchaser to bring a declaratory suit to have it declared that the incumbrance is annulled

The incumbrance would be annulled even if the property be not at the time of the service of the notice under section 167 in the possession of the purchaser, but of somebody else.

THIS suit was brought on a mortgage bond against the heirs of the mortgagor as well as against the purchaser of the mortgaged property at a sale in execution of a decree for rent due thereon. After the sale, notice was served by the purchaser through the Collector in the terms of section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (Act VIII of 1885) annulling the plaintiff's incumbrance. The lower Courts dismissed the plaintiff's suit holding that his incumbrance was annulled by operation of law. The plaintiff preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Dr. Ashutosh Mookerjee for the Respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (O'Kinealy and Rampini, JJ.) is as follows:—

The learned pleader for the appellant in the case raises two contentions: first, that the service of notice under section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has not the effect ipso facto of annulling [552] an incumbrance; and, secondly, that the purchaser was not in possession at the time of annulling the incumbrance, the property having then been made over to the grandson of the original mortgagor.

We think there is no force in either of these contentions. We quite agree with the learned Judge in the Court below that service of a notice under section 167 does have the effect of annulling an incumbrance without it being necessary for the purchaser to bring a declaratory suit to have it declared that the incumbrance is annulled. This is quite clear from the second clause of section 164 read with section 167.

The learned pleader has also contended that the notice was bad, inasmuch as it was not served within one year from the date of the sale, or of the purchaser having become aware of the incumbrance. But this point was not raised in either of the lower Courts, and there are no facts before us upon which we could form any opinion upon it.

Then his second ground of appeal also seems to us to fail. There is no reason why an incumbrance should not be annulled simply because the property at the time of the service under section 167 was in the possession, not of the purchaser, but of somebody else. The learned pleader urges that the notice under section 167 was not served until after the transfer of the property in question by the purchaser at the sale under the mortgage decree, and that therefore it can have no effect. But we do not think it necessary to say anything further about this plea than that such does not appear from the proceedings of the Court below to be the case. There are no facts stated either in the pleadings or in the proceedings in the lower Courts upon which we could give effect to this contention, if we thought it necessary to do so.

For these reasons we dismiss the appeal with costs.

[553] TESTAMENTARY JURISDICTION.

The 15th, 16th & 17th February, 1898.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE SALE.

In the Goods of Taramoni Dasi (deceased). *

Probate—Grant of Probate—Subsequent inconsistent will of which probate is also granted- Costs of Executor.

The executor of a will had obtained probate thereof, when the executor of a subsequent (and inconsistent) will applied for and obtained probate of the second will.

* Original Civil Suit No. 3 of 1897.

Held, that having regard to the circumstances of the case, and to the fact that the litigation was produced by the conduct of the testatrix herself, the executors of both wills were entitled to their costs to be paid out of the estate; but that in so far as the costs would not be covered by the estate, each party must bear his own costs.

THE testatrix died on the 26th November 1896, after having made two wills, one in September 1896 and the other dated the 23rd day of November 1896. By the first will she appointed the defendant her executor, and the will was made in favour of his infant son. After the death of the testatrix, the defendant obtained probate of the will in common form.

Subsequently, the plaintiffs produced the second will, and applied for probate thereof. The executor of the prior will opposed the application; and the matter was set down as a contentious cause. At the hearing the Court pronounced in favour of the subsequent will; and thereupon the question arose as to what order should be made with regard to costs.

Mr. Braunfeld and Mr. U. P. Roy, on behalf of the Defendant.—The costs should come out of the estate, or, failing that, the parties should pay their own costs. For the executor of the prior will, having obtained probate, and the estate having come into his hands, could charge the estate with his costs; and as such executor he was bound to call upon any person propounding a latter will to prove it in solemn form. The costs should come out of the estate, because the conduct of the testatrix gave rise to [554] this litigation. An executor is called upon to pay costs personally only when he has been guilty of misconduct or has not acted properly, but that is not the case here.

Mr. Avetoom and Mr M. L. Dutta for the Plaintiffs.—The costs should follow the result. The Court having pronounced in favour of the subsequent will, the executor of the prior will should personally bear the costs.

The following is the judgment of SALE, J., so far as it relates to the question of costs:—

Sale, J.—I have considered the question of costs, and it appears to me the rule is this: The executor of the will of the testator is entitled, in the same way as the next of kin would be, to call upon the executor of a prior will to prove in solemn form and to cross-examine the witnesses in support of the will, supposing there are any suspicious circumstances in connection with the execution of that will.

In the present case I think the executor of the former will has done nothing more than discharge the duty cast on him. There were circumstances undoubtedly of suspicion in connection with the execution of the subsequent will. The testatrix very shortly after executing the former will left her place of residence, and, while living under the care and protection of her nephews, executed a will in their favour, which was certainly inconsistent with the terms of the provisions of the previous will. It is quite true the learned counsel for the executor of the first will did not confine himself to cross-examining the witnesses to the subsequent will, but also called evidence; but this was to allow the executor of the former will to give his version of an interview which took place after the death of the testatrix between him and the nephew of the deceased. Taking all the circumstances together, I prefer the account given by the nephews, but I think this circumstance should not disentitle the executor of the former will to his costs. The evidence given on his behalf was very short, and I think the litigation was produced by the conduct of the testatrix herself; and under the circumstances I think the order I should [555] make is that the costs of both parties shall be paid in the first instance out of the estate, and, as the estate is a very small one, so far as the costs would not be covered by the estate, each party must bear his own costs.

The costs of the plaintiff and defendant will be paid rateably out of the estate, if the estate should be insufficient to pay the costs of both parties in full. So far as the estate may not be sufficient to pay these costs, each party will pay his own costs.

Jury, Irregularity in trial of case by—Trial by Jury of an offence triable with assessors—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 306, 307, 536—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 240, 241—Government Notification of 1862.

The accused was tried by a jury for an offence triable with the aid of assessors, and the jury by a majority found him "not guilty." The Sessions Judge, who disagreed with the verdict, convicted the accused, treating the verdict of the jury as the opinion of assessors:

Held, that the conviction was bad, inasmuch as the case was validly "tried by a jury" within the meaning of s. 536 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), and the trial was complete when the jury had returned their verdict; and that the Judge was bound, under the circumstances, either to give judgment in accordance with the verdict or, if he disagreed with it, to submit the case for orders of the High Court, as provided by sections 306 and 307 of the Code.

In the matter of Bhootnath Dey, (1879) 4 C. L. R., 405, followed.

A reference under section 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code should be made when the Judge is "clearly of opinion" that he should do so for the ends of justice.

[556] THE facts of the case are shortly these: The appellant was tried by a jury at the Sessions Court of Burdwan for having "delivered" a counterfeit coin knowing it to be counterfeit, an offence punishable under section 240 of the Penal Code. The jury by a majority of 4 to 1 returned a verdict of "not guilty." The Sessions Judge disagreeing with the verdict was about to refer the case to the High Court under section 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), when it was brought to his notice by the Public Prosecutor that the trial ought to have been conducted with the aid of assessors, and not jurors, as offences under sections 240 and 241 of the Penal Code were not declared triable by jury, by the Government Notification of 1862. Thereupon the Sessions Judge, treating the verdict of the jury as the opinions of assessors, convicted the accused and sentenced him to two years' rigorous imprisonment.

* Criminal Appeal No. 946 of 1897, against the order passed by A. C. Sen, Esq., Officiating Sessions Judge of Burdwan, dated the 24th November 1897.

Against this conviction and sentence the prisoner appealed to the High Court.

No one appeared for the appellant.

The judgment of the High Court (Hill and Stevens, JJ.) was as follows:—

The appellant was committed to the Court of Session for trial on the charge of having committed an offence punishable under section 240 of the Indian Penal Code. At the sessions the case was tried by a jury, which by a majority of four to one found the appellant not guilty and returned a verdict accordingly.

The learned Sessions Judge records that he was about to refer the case to this Court under the provisions of section 307 of the Code of Criminal Procedure when it was brought to his notice that the case was triable, not by a jury, but with the aid of assessors.

The course which the Sessions Judge then adopted was to treat the verdict of the jury as the opinions of assessors and to record a judgment convicting the appellant under section 241 of the Indian Penal Code and sentencing him to be rigorously imprisoned for two years.

The appellant has now appealed against the conviction so had.

[557] We are of opinion that the conviction, as it stands, cannot be supported. The case was "tried by a jury" within the meaning of section 536 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and under the provisions of that section the trial was not invalid on the ground only that the case had been so tried, although the offence in question was triable with the aid of assessors. The trial by the jury was complete when they had returned their verdict, and the Judge was bound to act either under section 306 or under section 307 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, that is, he was bound either to give judgment in accordance with the verdict, or to submit the case for orders of this Court, if he disagreed with the verdict, and was clearly of opinion that reference to this Court was necessary for the ends of justice.

We are supported in this view by the decision in the case of In the matter of Bhootnath Dey, (1879) 4 C. L. R., 405.

We set aside the conviction and remand the case to the Sessions Judge in order that he may deal with it according to law by passing an order under either section 306 or section 307 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), section 35—Sentence—Concurrent sentences of imprisonment—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), section 409.

Sentences of imprisonment passed for distinct offences to run concurrently are not warranted by law.

Queen-Empress v. Wazir Jan, (1887) I. L. R., 10 All., 58, referred to.

THE appellant was charged with having committed criminal breach of trust as a public servant in respect of three different sums of money, and was tried by the Court of Sessions on three [558] distinct charges under section 409 of the Penal Code. The Sessions Judge found him guilty on all the three charges and passed sentence in the following terms:—

"The Court agreeing with both assessors finds accused Daitari Das guilty of the three offences of criminal breach of trust as a public servant charged against him, and sentences him under section 409 of the Indian Penal Code to seven years' rigorous imprisonment on each charge: the sentences to run concurrently."

Against this conviction and sentnce the prisoner appealed to the High Court.

No one appeared for the Appellant.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Gordon Leith) for the Crown.

The judgment of the High Court (Banerjee and Hill, JJ.) was as follows:—

The appellant in this case was tried before the Sessions Court of Cuttack on three charges under section 409 of the Indian Penal Code for having committed criminal breach of trust as a public servant in respect of three different sums of money.

The learned Sessions Judge, agreeing with the assessors, has found the accused guilty on all the three charges, and has sentenced him under section 409 of the Indian Penal Code to seven years' rigorous imprisonment on each charge, with this qualification that the sentences are to run concurrently. We see no reason to interfere with the conviction; but in regard to the sentence, we are of opinion that it is not warranted by law. There is no provision in the Code of Criminal Procedure, or in any other law that we are aware of, authorizing a Court to pass sentences which are to run concurrently. On the contrary, section 35 of the Code of Criminal Procedure enacts that "when a person is convicted at one trial of two or more distinct offences, the Court may sentence him, for such offences, to the several punishments prescribed therefor, which such Court is competent to inflict, such punishments, when consisting of imprisonment or transportation, to commence the one after the expiration of the other in such order as the Court may direct."

[559] We may also refer to the case of Queen-Empress v. Wazir Jan, (1887) I. L. R., 10 All., 58, which goes to support the same view. That being so, the concurrent sentences passed in this case must be set aside.

The question then arises what should be the proper sentence in the case? We see no reason to dissent from the learned Sessions Judge's view that an aggregate sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment is required for the ends of justice; and our order, therefore, will be this—that the appellant be sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment in respect of the first count, one year's rigorous imprisonment in respect of the second charge, and one year's rigorous imprisonment in respect of the third, for the offences of criminal breach of trust as a public servant punishable under section 409 of the Indian Penal Code. Such sentences to run the one after the other in the order in which they have been mentioned above.

B. D. B. Sentence altered.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), sections 107, 145—Disputes concerning land—Procedure—Recognizance.

Where a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists concerning possession of land, proceedings under section 145, and not under section 107, of the Criminal Procedure Code, should be instituted.

THE facts of the case are shortly these: One Dhanu Khan (opposite party) purchased the interests of two tenants in a village in the District of Bankura, at a sale in execution of a decree against them and was put in possession by the Civil Court; and while he was proceeding to cultivate the land in question he was prevented from doing so by the petitioners, who claimed the land [560] under a permanent lease granted to their ancestors in 1867, and objected to be disturbed in their possession thereof. Thereupon Dhanu Khan lodged a complaint before the Police, who, after an investigation, submitted a report to the Deputy Magistrate. The Deputy Magistrate having satisfied himself from the Police report that a breach of the peace was imminent in respect of possession of the land, instituted proceedings against the petitioners under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and bound them down to keep the peace for one year. The petitioners applied to the District Magistrate under section 125 to cancel the bonds, but he declined to interfere. Against this order of the District Magistrate the petitioners moved the High Court and obtained this Rule.

Mr. Donogh (Babu Sarat Chunder Dutt with him) for the Petitioners.—The Deputy Magistrate's order shows that he was satisfied from the Police report that there was a dispute about a piece of land likely to end in a breach of the peace. Under such circumstances the Magistrate was bound to proceed under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and to decide which party was in possession of the land, and having decided it to maintain such party in possession until evicted therefrom in due course of law. The language of section 145 being imperative the Magistrate has no option in the matter. Section 107 of the Code is not intended to apply to disputes regarding land, but to cases of personal liability to preserve the peace.

Babu Degumber Chatterjee for the Opposite Party.

(The Magistrate not having shown cause against the Rule their Lordships declined to hear the opposite party.)

The judgment of the High Court (Banerjee and Hill, JJ.) was as follows:—

This is a rule calling upon the Magistrate of the District to show cause why the orders complained of, purporting to have been made under section 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, should not be set aside.

The ground upon which our interference is asked is, that the proceedings recorded show that the case is properly one for the [561] institution of proceedings under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and not under section 107. The order complained of is one that has the evident effect of binding down only one of the parties to the dispute, leaving the other party free, without any adjudication upon the question as to which of the two parties is in possession. We think the contention urged on behalf of the petitioners is right and ought to prevail.

We, therefore, set aside the order under section 107.

Jury, Verdict of—Charge to Jury—Misdirection—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 297, 423 (d)—Effect of omissions to explain the law to Jury—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss 143, 147, 380, 395—Practice.

In a trial by jury, the accused were charged with offences under the Penal Code. The Judge while charging the jury omitted to explain the law by which they were to be guided. The jury returned a verdict of guilty on all counts except one and the Judge agreeing with the verdict convicted the accused.

Held, that the omission to explain the law to the jury amounted to a misdirection vitiating the verdict within the meaning of s. 423 (d), Criminal Procedure Code.

Wafadar Khan v. Queen-Empress, (1894) I. L. R, 21 Cal., 955, relied upon.

Some statement should appear in the record of a trial by jury to show that the law bearing upon the charges has been explained to the jury.

THE appellants in this case were charged with (1) dacoity, (2) theft in a dwelling house, (3) rioting, and (4) being members of an unlawful assembly, under sections 395, 380, 147, and 143 of the Penal Code, respectively, and were tried by a jury. The Sessions Judge, in his charge to the jury, summed up the evidence, but omitted to lay down or explain the law by which they were to be [562] guided, according to section 297 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The jury retired for consideration of their verdict, and on being asked what their verdict was on the first charge replied, through their foreman, that they could give their opinion upon the whole case, but they had not considered their verdict on each charge. Thereupon the charges were once more read over to them, and they again retired to consider their verdict on each charge separately; and on their return pronounced a verdict of guilty on the first, third, and fourth charges, and that of not guilty on the second. The Judge agreeing with the verdict convicted the accused under sections 143, 147 and 395 of the Penal Code, and sentenced each of them to five years, rigorous imprisonment on the first charge only, observing that "There will be no sentence on the other charges The verdict of the jury on the second charge being contradictory to their verdict on the first charge, there will be no order by the Court as to this second charge."

Against this conviction and sentence the accused appealed to the High Court

Babu Dasarathi Sanyal for the Appellants.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Gordon Leith) for the Crown.

The judgment of the High Court (Banerjee and Hill, JJ.) was as follows:—

The appellants in this case were tried by a jury before the Sessions Court at Rajshahye on four charges: (1) dacoity punishable under section 395 of the

* Criminal Appeal No. 800 of 1897, against the order passed by H. E. Ransom, Esq., Sessions Judge of Rajshahye, dated the 28th of August 1897.

Indian Penal Code; (2) theft in a dwelling house, actual and constructive, punishable under section 380 read with section 149; (3) rioting punishable under section 147; and (4) being members of an unlawful assembly, punishable under section 143 of the Indian Penal Code.

The learned Sessions Judge charged the jury by summing up the evidence, but without laying down the law by which the jury were to be guided, as laid down in section 297 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The jury, on being asked what their verdict was on the first charge, through their foreman replied that they could give their opinion upon the whole case, but they had not considered their verdict on each charge. Thereupon, as the record shows, the charges were once more read over to the jury, who [563] retired for some time to consider their verdict on each charge separately; and on their return they pronounced a verdict of guilty on the first charge, not guilty on the second charge, and guilty on the third and fourth charges. The learned Sessions Judge, agreeing with the verdict of the jury on the first, third and fourth charges, has convicted the accused under sections 395, 147 and 143, and has sentenced each of them under section 395 to rigorous imprisonment for five years.

In appeal it is contended by the learned Vakil for the accused that the learned Judge's omission to explain the law to the jury in this case constitutes a material misdirection, for which the verdict ought to be set aside, and a new trial ordered.

The learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer very properly calls our attention to the fact that here the charge to the jury that has been recorded contains, not merely the heads of the charges, but is actually the charge that was read out to the jury and interpreted in Bengali; so that there is no room for any contention that the law might have been explained without the explanation being embodied in the charge to the jury as recorded. But even if there had been any room for a contention of that sort, we should observe that as a rule we expect some statement in the record to show that the law has been explained to the jury. In the present case there can be no manner of doubt, as far as we can judge from the record, that the law has not been explained; and, if that is so, the question is, whether that amounts to a misdirection within the meaning of section 423, clause (d) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Perhaps, strictly speaking, the error here is rather of non-direction than misdirection, but we think that the term misdirection in section 423 includes an omission of this description.

It is next necessary to consider whether this absence of direction, that is, this error, is not cured by section 527, and whether the language of clause (d) of section 423 stands in the way of our interfering with the verdict. We are of opinion that the effect of the two provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure which we have just referred to, is to require us, before we interfere with the verdict of a jury, to see whether the misdirection [564] complained of was one of a material character, that is one which has made the verdict erroneous and led to a failure of justice. In the present case we feel no hesitation in answering the question in the affirmative, because the accused were charged with having committed a number of offences which are of a complex character, and it was very necessary therefore that the Judge should have explained to the jury what the elements are which go to constitute each of those offences, and should have clearly placed before them the distinction between them. That the absence of such direction had an effect upon the verdict is clear from the fact that the jury, when they were first asked what their verdict was on the first charge, were unable to say what their verdict was upon each separate charge. Thereupon the only additional direction given to them by the Judge consisted in the reading of the charges, unaccompanied by any explanation of the law. Then the verdict they returned is somewhat inconsistent and not quite intelligible; because while they find the accused guilty on the first charge, that is guilty of the offence of dacoity, they find them not guilty of the offence mentioned in the second charge, namely, theft in a dwelling house. It is difficult to say upon what view of the evidence they returned a verdict of guilty on the first charge convicting the accused of the offence of dacoity, and yet did not convict them of the offence of theft in a dwelling house under the second charge.

Having regard to these circumstances we are of opinion that the misdirection in the charge has vitiated the verdict, and has thereby occasioned a failure of justice.

We may add that the view we take in this case is in accordance with that expressed in the case of Wafadar Khan v. Queen-Empress, (1894) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 955.

The result is, that the convictions and sentence must be set aside, and the case sent back for re-trial.

[565] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 2nd February, 1898.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE AND MR. JUSTICE WILKINS.

Upendra Lal Mukerjee and others............Appellants

versus

Girindra Nath Mukerjee and others (Plaintiffs) and Nilratan Mukerjee and others (Defendants)......... .. Respondents.*

Contribution, Suit for —Contract Act (IX of 1872), section 70—Money deposited by the plaintiffs to save the property, of which they were co-sharers, from being sold for arrears of revenue—Personal liability—Appeal -Power of the Appellate Court to add parties as respondents —Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), section 559.

In a suit for contribution by the plaintiffs against the defendants, the Court of First Instance gave the plaintiffs a decree against one defendant, and exonerated the others. On an appeal by the defendant against whom the decree was passed, the Appellate Court directed the defendants exonerated by the first Court to be added as respondents, set aside the decree against the appealing defendant, and passed a decree against the defendants who were added as respondents, as representatives of one Shayamamoyi, and ordered the amount so decreed to be recovered from the estate of her, Shayamamoyi's husband. On appeal to the High Court by the defendants, who were thus made liable, on the grounds that they were wrongly made parties and no decrees could be passed against them, and that the liability to contribution being the personal liability of Shayamamoyi, they not being heirs to her stridhan, they were not liable for the plaintiff's claim :—

Held, that there was nothing wrong in the course adopted by the Lower Appellate Court, and by s. 559 of the Code of Civil Procedure the defendants were rightly made parties.

Atma Ram v. Balkishen, (1883) I. L. R., 5 All., 266, dissented from.

Held, also, that inasmuch as a claim for contribution creates only a personal liability against the co-sharers on account of whose share the payment has been made, and does not create a charge on the estate, the persons liable would not be the reversionary heirs to Shayamamoyi's husband's estates but those who would inherit her stridhan.

THE facts of the case, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of this report and the arguments, appear sufficiently from the judgment of the High Court [566] Babu Saroda Churn Mitter for the Appellants.

Babu Horendra Nath Mookerjee, with him Babu Joy Govind Shome, for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Banerjee and Wilkins, JJ.) was as follows : -

This appeal arises out of a suit for contribution brought by the plaintiffs, respondents, against certain persons described as principal defendants and certain other persons described as pro formâ defendants, on the allegation that a four-annas share of a certain mehal bearing No. 76 on the Collector's rent roll belonged to one Shayamamoyi Debia, the plaintiffs, and the pro formâ defendants being co-sharers in that mehal; that defendants Nos. 1 to 8 were the heirs of Shayamamoyi ; that the amount of Government revenue payable in respect of Shayamamoyi's share was Rs. 650 on account of the September instalment of 1891 ; that out of this the amount of Rs. 325 having remained unpaid, the said amount was paid by the plaintiffs to save the estate from sale ; and that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover the said amount from the principal defendants. It was further stated in the plaint that the share of Shayamamoyi had been let out in ijara to Annada Prosad Mukerjee, the predecessor in title to defendants Nos. 1 to 5 and to Saroda Prosad Mukerjee, predecessor in title to defendants Nos. 10 to 12 in equal shares and that the share leased out in the name of Saroda Prosad which was held by him and his (Saroda's) brother Nilratan, defendant No. 6, was sold in execution, and the ijara interest in respect of this two annas share was purchased by the husband of defendant No. 9. It is not clearly stated in the plaint on what ground the plaintiffs seek to make all the principal defendants liable, but it would appear from the tenor of the plaint that they sought to make the defendants liable, not merely as representatives of Shayamamoyi, in respect of whose share they had paid the Government revenue, but also as her ijardars, it being stated in the plaint that one of the terms of the ijara lease was that the ijardars were to pay the Government revenue payable by Shayamamoyi.

The suit was originally contested only by defendants Nos. 1 to 5. They were exonerated from liability and an ex parte decree [567] was passed against defendant No. 9. Subsequently the ex parte decree was set aside and the suit was reheard.

The defence of defendants Nos. 1 to 5 was that they had paid their share of the revenue due, and that the only share that was in default was that held in ijara by defendant No. 9.

The defence of defendant No. 9 was that neither she nor her predecessor in interest was a co-sharer of the plaintiffs; that no suit for contribution was, therefore, maintainable against her; that she had no possession of the property at the time when the default in payment of the revenue was committed; and that money was due to her from the plaintiffs who were darijardars under the ijara and so she was not liable for the plaintiff's claim.

The first Court held that defendant No. 9 was the only person liable, and it accordingly upon the rehearing of the case made the same decree that had been originally made ex parte.

On appeal by defendant No. 9, the Lower Appellate Court ordered the remaining defendants who apparently had not been made parties to the appeal, viz., defendants Nos. 1 to 8, to be brought before the Court under section 559 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and it has set aside the decree against defendant No. 9 and given the plaintiffs a decree against defendants Nos. 1 to 8 as representatives of Shayamamoyi, and has ordered that the plaintiffs shall recover the amount decreed from the estate of the husband of Shayamamoyi.

In second appeal it is contended on behalf of defendants Nos. 1 to 5 that the decree of the Lower Appellate Court is wrong, first, because no decree could be passed against defendants Nos. 1 to 5, the suit having been dismissed against them by the first Court and the plaintiffs having preferred no appeal against that part of the decree; secondly, because the suit having been based by the plaintiffs mainly, if not solely, upon the terms of the ijara lease, and the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 having paid the share of the Government revenue that was due on account of the two-annas share held by them under the ijara, they were not liable for any part of the plaintiff's claim; and, thirdly because the liability to contribution was a personal liability of Shayamamoyi, and defendants Nos. 1 to 5 were no heirs to her stridhan, but were the [568] reversionary heirs to the estate of her husband, and, as such, were not liable for the plaintiff's claim.

Upon the first point, the case of Atma Ram v. Balkishen, (1883) I. L. R., 5 All., 266, is no doubt in favour of the appellant's contention; but having regard to the language of section 559, we think it authorizes the course that the Lower Appellate Court has taken in this case. The plaintiffs in their plaint stated all the necessary facts, and they asked for a decree against the defendants. The first Court upon the view that it took of the liabilities of the parties as a matter of law, exonerated defendants Nos. 1 to 8 from liability and passed a decree against defendant No. 9 alone. The plaintiffs were content with that decree, because it did not matter to them whether the decree went against defendants Nos. 1 to 8, or against defendant No. 9, the parties being all equally solvent. The defendant No. 9 being dissatisfied with the decree passed against her, preferred an appeal; and the Lower Appellate Court having, at the hearing of the appeal, found that the defendants Nos. 1 to 8 who were parties to the suit in the first Court, but who had not been made parties to the decree and were interested in the result of the appeal (in this sense that, whereas they sought to fasten the liability for contribution on defendant No.9, the appeal was intended to exonerate defendant No. 9 altogether) ought to be made parties, directed that they should be made parties; and they entered appearance in accordance with the order made. The plaintiffs, having obtained a decree against defendant No. 9, and being satisfied with that decree, were not under any necessity for preferring any appeal to make the other defendants liable. But if at the hearing of the appeal, the Court found that the defendant No. 9 was not liable, but the other defendants were liable, we do not think that there was anything wrong in the Lower Appellate Court's making them respondents and passing a decree against them. We may observe that the exercise of the power is not limited by the provisions of the Limitation Act, see Manickya Moyee v. Boroda Prosad, (1882) I. L. R., 9 Cal., 355.

The view we take is, to some extent, supported by the decision of the Bombay High Court in the case of Sowu Padmanabh [569] Rangappa v. Narayanrao bin Vithalrao, (1893) I. L. R., 18 Bom., 520. The first contention of the appellants must, therefore, fail.

Upon the second point, we are of opinion that, although the plaintiffs in their plaint referred to the ijara lease and based their claim in part upon the terms of that lease, still that circumstance cannot go to exonerate the defendants Nos. 1 to 8 altogether from liability, if they are otherwise liable under the law. They were made parties as the heirs of Shayamamoyi, and a decree was asked for against all the defendants. It cannot, therefore, be said that, upon the case as made, the defendants Nos. 1 to 8 ought to be exonerated from liability altogether. The liability for contribution attaches to the co-sharer by whom the revenue was payable and for whom it was paid, that is, Shayamamoyi, and after her death to her legal representatives; and the defendants Nos 1 to 8 are alleged to fill that character.

Upon the third point, we find that although, in the plaint, the defendants Nos. 1 to 8 are represented as the heirs of Shayamamoyi, the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 in their written statement denied that they were her heirs, and alleged that they were the heirs of Chandra Bhusan Mukerjee, Shayamamoyi's husband; and there has been no adjudication in either of the Courts below as to whether defendants Nos. 1 to 5 are the heirs to Shayamamoyi's stridhan. The question then arises whether, if the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 are not heirs to Shayamamoyi's stridhan, they can still be made liable for the plaintiff's claim. The claim is for contribution for the payment of Government revenue, which was payable by Shayamamoyi during her lifetime. Now, a claim for contribution, as has been held by a majority of the Judges of a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Kinu Ram Das v. Mozaffer Hossein Shaha, (1887) I. L. R., 14 Cal., 809, creates only a personal liability against the co-sharer on account of whose share the payment has been made, and does not create a charge on the estate. That being so, the claim must be held to be one for which Shayamamoyi was personally liable, but which the reversionary heirs are not bound to satisfy. It may appear somewhat anomalous that although, if Shayamamoyi had borrowed money for the purpose of paying her share of the Government revenue, mortgaging her husband's estate or even [570] alienating any portion of it by sale, the mortgage or sale would have been binding on the reversioners, yet if she has made default in the payment of revenue and another co-sharer has paid the amount for her, such co-sharer can have no claim against the reversioners.

But one explanation of the anomaly is, we think, to be found in the fact that the widow's alienation for the purpose of paying the revenue becomes binding on the reversioners only when there is necessity made out for the alienation. But where the widow merely neglects to pay the revenue and somebody else pays it for her, it cannot be said that the default on the part of the widow was due to the necessities of the estate. It may be that she had funds in her hands out of which to make payment, and yet she did not make the payment. In such a case the persons who ought to be held properly liable would be, not the reversionary heirs to her husband's estate, but the persons who would inherit her stridhan. That being so, it becomes necessary to determine whether the appellants or any of them are the heirs of Shayamamoyi's stridhan. As that question has not been determined, the case must go back to the first Court for its determination, and, as the ground upon which we remand the case is common to all the defendants, who have been made liable, the result is that the decree of the Lower Appellate Court must be set aside, and the case remanded for determination of the question, whether the defendants Nos. 1 to 8 or any of them are heirs to Shayamamoyi's stridhan. If the question is answered in the affirmative, the plaintiffs would be entitled to a decree against such persons as are found to be heirs to Shayamamoyi's stridhan. If the question is answered in the negative, as against all the defendants, the plaintiff's suit must fail. The costs of this appeal will abide the result. It will be open to the parties to adduce evidence on the issue for the determination of which the case is sent down.

The decree exonerating the defendant No. 9 from liability will stand, and the defendant No. 9 will recover her costs of this appeal from the appellants; but the costs so recovered will be costs in the cause and will be recoverable by defendants Nos. 1 to 5 from the plaintiffs or not according to the final result of the suit.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 695 of 1895 on review and in Rule No. 1604 of 1897, against the decree of Babu Brojo Behari Shome, Subordinate Judge of Jessore, dated the 12th of January 1896, modifying the decree of Babu Ambica Charan Mozoomdar, Munsif of Jessore, dated the 8th of August 1894.

section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Therefore no second appeal would lie in a case, where the value of the suit is less than Rs. 100, even if there is a question as to the instalment of rent.

Koylash Chandra v. *Tarak Nath, referred to.

[573] In a previous suit for rent valued at less than Rs. 100 by the plaintiff against the defendants, one of the questions raised was, in how many instalments the rent was payable, and it was held that it was not payable in instalments. In a subsequent suit for rent valued at more than Rs. 100 between the same parties, the question of instalment was again raised, as the plaintiffs claimed the rent to be payable in four instalments. The defendants inter alia pleaded that the question as to instalment was barred as res judicata. The Munsif held that it was so barred. On appeal the Subordinate Judge reversed the decision of the Munsif.

On a second appeal to the High Court:—

Held, that the judgment in the previous suit operated as res judicata, notwithstanding that no second appeal was allowed by law in that suit.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY AND MR. JUSTICE HILL.

Koylash Chandra De ....Plaintiff

versus

Tarak Nath Mandal...........Defendant.†

Landlord and tenant—Suit for rent—Whether interest on rent is rent within the meaning of section 3, Clause (5) of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885) —Second appeal—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), section 153.

Interest on rent is not rent within the meaning of section 3, clause (5), of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Therefore no second appeal would lie in a case where the question is only relating to rate of interest, and the value of the subject-matter of the suit is less than Rs. 100.

The plaintiff brought a suit for recovery of arrears of rent for the years 1297 to 1300 B. S., in the Court of the Munsif of Diamond Harbour. The defendant objected as to the rate of interest, and also pleaded that the rent for the first six months of the year 1297 B. S. was barred by section 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Munsif gave a modified decree, and allowed interest on the rent, at the rate of 25 per cent. per annum. On appeal to the District Judge by the defendant as to the rate of interest, he held that under the law the plaintiff was entitled to interest only at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum. Against this decision the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Dr. Ashutosh Mookerjee, for the Respondent, took a preliminary objection to the hearing of the appeal, on the ground that as the value of the subject- matter of the suit was below Rs. 100, and the question was only relating to interest, no second appeal would lie under section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Babu Gyanendra Nath Bose, for the appellant, argued that a second appeal would lie as interest on rent is rent within the meaning of section 3 (clause 5) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. He referred to the following cases: Watson & Co v. Sreekristo Bhumick, (1893) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 132, Nobin Chand Naskar v. Bansenath Paramanick, (1894) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 722, and Assanulla Khan Bahadur v. Tirthabashini, (1895) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 680.

The judgment of the High Court (O'Kinealy and Hill, JJ.) was as follows:—

At the hearing of this appeal it was objected that there was no second appeal, as the question was merely a question of the rate of interest and not of rent. The pleader for the appellant argued that interest is rent We are of opinion that it is not.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

THE facts of the case, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of this report and the arguments, appear sufficiently from the judgment of the High Court.

Babu Taruk Nath Sen for the Appellants.

Dr. Ashutosh Mookerjee for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and BANERJEE, J.) was as follows:—

Banerjee, J.—This case was heard along with an appeal from Appellate Decree No. 759 of 1895. One of the grounds upon which the learned Vakil for the respondent sought to support the decision of the Lower Appellate Court that the judgment in a previous rent suit did not operate as res judicata was that the matter in dispute in the former suit could not, by reason of its value being below Rs. 100, be taken up to the High Court in second appeal, whereas the matter now in dispute, being in value above that limit, a second appeal was allowed in this suit. We considered this ground untenable, holding that, even if the proposition of law, upon the assumed correctness of which it was based, was correct, it did not affect this case, as a second appeal in fact lay in the former suit. This is quite true as regards one of the two cases, namely, the appeal from Appellate Decree No. 759 of 1895; but it is, as has been shown to us now, not true with reference to the appeal from Appellate Decree No. 695 of 1895, the decision upon which the plea of res judicata is based in this case having been passed in a case in which no second appeal lay.

An application for review of judgment was made in this case on the ground of there being the abovementioned error in our [574] decision; the application was granted, and the case was reheard under section 630 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The ground upon which the Lower Appellate Court's judgment is based is untenable, and this is conceded by the learned Vakil for the respondent. The only question now raised before us is, whether the decision in the former case upon the matter of instalments can operate as res judicata in this, when a second appeal in that case was barred by section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, whereas in the present case a second appeal is not barred. If this question is answered in the affirmative, the appeal succeeds. If it is answered in the negative, the appeal must fail.

The learned Vakil for the appellants contended in the first place that the question did not arise, and that a second appeal was not barred in the previous case by section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, as the judgment of the first Appellate Court, by deciding the question of instalments, determined the interest payable on the arrears of rent, and thus decided a question relating to rent; and in the second place he contended that, even if the question did arise, it ought to be answered in the affirmative, as the issue relating to instalments now raised was directly and substantially in issue in the former suit between the same parties in a Court of jurisdiction competent to try the present suit, and has been heard and finally decided by such Court; and it was none the less a Court of competent jurisdiction because a second appeal was barred in the case. On the other hand, the learned Vakil for the respondents urged in the first place that the question did arise, as a second appeal was barred in the former case, a question relating to interest being different from one relating to "the amount of rent annually payable" within the meaning of section 153, and in support of this contention, he relied upon the case of Koylash Chandra De v. Tarak Nath Mandal (ante p. 571), ; and in the second place he contended that the question should be answered in the negative, as section 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure required that the former suit, the decision in which was pleaded as res judicata, should be triable, not only in the first instance, but also in successive appeals by the same Court by which the second suit is triable: and in support of this contention he cited the cases [575] of Bhola Bhai v. Adesang, (1881) I. L. R., 9 Bom., 75; Vithilinga Padayachi v. Vithilinga Mudali, (1891) I. L. R., 15 Mad., 111; Misir Raghobardial v. Sheo Baksh Singh, (1882) L. R., 9 I. A., 197, and Edun v. Bechun, (1867) 8 W. R., 175.

I am of opinion that in the former case no second appeal lay, as the question relating to instalments, though it affected the question of interest on the rent, was not a question of "the amount of rent annually payable" within the meaning of section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and I fully agree in the view taken in the case of Koylash Chandra De v. Tarak Nath Mandal (ante p. 571) cited for the respondents.

That being so, the question stated above does arise in this case. The question is one of considerable importance and of no small difficulty. The answer to the question must be sought for in the first instance in section 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and if that section leaves the matter in doubt, then in the general principles relating to the doctrine of res judicata.

Section 13 enacts (I quote only so much of the section as bears upon the question before us) that "no Court shall try any suit or issue in which the matter directly and substantially in issue has been directly and substantially in issue on a former suit between the same parties in a Court of jurisdiction competent to try such subsequent suit, or the suit in which such issue has been subsequently raised and has been heard and finally decided by such Court."

Now the matter in issue in this suit, namely, whether the rent of the defendant's holding is payable quarterly or annually, was also directly and substantially in issue in the former suit brought in the Munsif's Court which was competent to try the present suit: the issue was decided against the defendants by the Munsif, but on appeal the Appellate Court, that is the Court of the Subordinate Judge which was competent to try the first appeal in the present suit, finally decided the issue in favour of [576] the defendants. As has been said above, a second appeal was barred in the former suit by reason of its value, but a second appeal is not barred in the present suit. Does this case then come within the rule of res judicata enunciated in section 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure? I think it does. The section applies to two classes of cases, in one of which a subsequent suit is wholly barred by the decision in a former suit by reason of the subject-matter of the two suits being the same, and in the other the trial of an issue in a subsequent suit is barred by the adjudication upon the same issue in a former suit, though the subject-matters of the two suits are different. The present case comes under the latter class, but it is not a simple type of that class. The simplest type is that in which the trial of an issue in a subsequent suit is barred by the adjudication upon it in a former suit by the first Court in which it was brought and which was competent to try the subsequent suit. Here the adjudication relied upon was in the Court of Appeal in the former case. But that alone cannot affect the application of the section. It would be most unreasonable to hold that a decision does not operate as res judicata merely because it is the decision of the Appellate Court in the former suit. It is true that the section speaks of the matter being "heard and finally decided by such Court," that is the "Court of jurisdiction competent to try" the subsequent suit; and it is true also that if the Court spoken of in the section can mean the Court of Appeal in the previous suit, it may lead to the decision of an Appellate Court in a previous suit cognizable in the first instance by the Munsif operating as res judicata in a subsequent suit of value exceeding the limit of the Munsif's jurisdiction by reason of such suit being cognizable by the Appellate Court -a result evidently not contemplated by the section, as has been held in several cases: see Baharasi Lal Chowdhry v. Sarat Chunder Dass, (1895) I.L.R., 23 Cal., 415; Pathuma v. Salimamma, (1884) I.L.R., 8 Mad., 83; Run Bahadur v. Lucho Koer, (1884) I. L R., 11 Cal., 301 : L. R., 12 I. A., 23. But the difficulty is completely removed if we read the words "heard and finally decided by such Court" to mean heard and finally decided by such Court, either [577] if no appeal is preferred from its judgment, or if an appeal being preferred has been disposed of and the judgment of the Appellate Court which takes the place of its judgment has decided the point. This view is in accordance with Explanation IV of the section, and with section 581, which requires the Appellate judgment to be entered in the register of suits in the first Court. Thus understood, the section clearly applies to a case like the present.

It remains now to consider whether the fact of a second appeal being barred in the former suit and not being barred in the present can make any difference. There is nothing in section 13 to indicate that the judgments in two suits must be open to appeal in the same way in order that the decision upon any issue in the earlier suit can bar the trial of the same issue in the later one.

It was urged by Dr. Ashutosh Mookerjee, who in his concise but clear argument has placed before us all that could be said in favour of the respondents, that section 13 is not very clearly worded, that a literal construction of it would lead to many anomalous results and that a reasonable construction of the section requires that not only should the Court which tried the former suit be of jurisdiction competent to try the subsequent suit, but its judgment in the former suit should be open to appeal in the same way as the judgment in the latter suit is. No doubt it must be conceded that the wording of the section is in some respects faulty, and that a literal construction of the section will lead to many anomalies. This has already been observed with reference to the words "finally decided by such Court." Another and a still greater anomaly was noticed with reference to the words "competent to try such subsequent suit" in the case of Gopi Nath Chobey v. Bhugwat Pershad, (1884) I. L. R, 10 Cal., 697, and Raghunath Panjah v. Issur Chunder Chowdhry, (1884) I. L. R., 11 Cal., 153, in which it was held that those words must be taken to mean competent to try the subsequent suit, if it had been brought at the same time that the former suit was brought. It may also be conceded that as an estoppel, to use the language of Sir BARNES PEACOCK in Edun v. Bechun, (1867) 8. W. R., 175, "shuts out [578] enquiry into the truth," it is necessary to see that the principle of res judicata is not unduly enlarged, and that it would be a wholesome restriction to the rule of res judicata if it is held that in order that a judgment in a former suit may be conclusive upon any issue arising in a subsequent one, it must have been open to appeal in the same way as a judgment in the subsequent suit is. Indeed one might go further and say that the proper application of the doctrine of res judicata should be confined to a subsequent suit relating to the same subject-matter, and that the extension of the doctrine to exclude the trial of an issue in a subsequent suit relating to a different subject-matter, merely because that same issue was tried in a previous suit in a Court of jurisdiction competent to try the subsequent suit, is of doubtful propriety, for this, amongst other reasons, that a suit for a comparatively small amount, say Rs. 100, though triable only in a Subordinate Judge's or a District Judge's Court which is of jurisdiction competent to try a suit for a lakh of rupees or more, is not likely to be conducted by the parties with the same interest and the same care in the production of evidence as a suit of the latter description. But these are matters for the Legislature and not for the Court to consider. The duty of the Court is to construe the law as it stands, and not to make a new, though it may be a better, law. It is quite true that in interpreting a statute, to meet the obvious intention of the Legislature, "a construction may be put upon it which modifies the meaning of the words and even the structure of the sentence" (see Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, Chapter IX), but that is allowed only where the Court is coerced to do so to avoid some serious injustice or to prevent a statute from being reduced to a nullity; or for any other similar reason [see Ex parte Rashleigh, (1875) L.R. 2 Ch. Div., 9 (13); Salmon v. Duncombe, (1886) L. R. 11 App. Cas., 627]. In the present case it cannot be said that any such reason forces us to adopt the strained construction contended for on behalf of the respondents, for which the words used in the section afford no warrant. Moreover, the construction contended [579] for will, in cases like the present, be attended with some anomaly, if not also hardship and injustice. For if that construction be accepted, then to undo the effect of a judgment in a previous suit for rent in which a second appeal was barred, either party may wilfully raise a false and unfounded dispute as to the amount of rent in the subsequent suit, to make a second appeal allowable under section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Of the cases cited Bhola Bhai v. Adesang, (1884) I.L.R., 9 Bom., 75, and Vithilinga Padayachi v. Vithilinga Mudali, (1891) I.L.R., 15 Mad., 111, are no doubt in point; but for the reasons given above, I must respectfully dissent from them. As for the cases of Misir Raghobardial v. Sheo Baksh Singh, (1882) L.R., 9 I.A., 197, and Edun v. Bechun, (1867) 8 W.R. 175, they are clearly distinguishable from the present. The question raised in those cases was whether a judgment passed by a Court in a previous suit was conclusive upon any matter raised in a subsequent suit when the Court which tried the former suit was incompetent to try the latter; and that question was answered in the negative. There are no doubt certain observations in the judgments in those two cases which may seem to favour the respondent's contention; but they must be taken in connection with the point which the Court had to determine, and so considered they do not warrant the view which the learned Vakil for the respondents asks us to take. I should add that the view I take is supported by the case of David v. Grish Chunder Guha, (1882) I. L. R., 9 Cal., 183.

For the foregoing reasons I must hold that the judgment in the previous suit operates as res judicata upon the question of instalments. This appeal must consequently be allowed, the decree of the Lower Appellate Court reversed, and that of the first Court restored with costs in this Court and in the Court below.

Maclean, C.J.—I have had the advantage of reading Mr. Justice BANERJEE'S judgment, and I concur.

S. C. G. Appeal allowed.

PRESENT:

SIR FRANCIS WILLIAM MACLEAN, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Fazil Howladar............Judgment-debtor

Krishna Bundhoo Roy...........Decree-holder.*

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), section 230— Decree for payment of money—Decree for sale of hypothecated property, which also made the defendant personally liable in case of insufficiency—Mortgage decree.

A decree, which directs the realization of the decretal amount from the hypothecated property, and, if insufficient, makes the defendant remain personally liable, is a mortgage decree, and not a "decree for payment of money" within the meaning of s. 230 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Ram Charn Bhagat v. Sheobarat Rai, (1891) I. L. R, 16 All, 418, followed.

Hart v. Tara Prasanna Mukherji, (1885) I. L. R., 11 Cal, 718, distinguished.

Jogemaya Dassi v. Thackomoni Dassi, (1895) I. L. R, 24 Cal, 473, referred to.

THE facts of the case, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of this report and the arguments, appear sufficiently from the judgment of the High Court.

Moulvi Shamsul Huda for the Appellant.

Babu Bassant Kumar Bose for the Respondent.

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and BANERJEE, J.):—

Maclean, C J.—The first question we have to decide is whether the decree in this case is a mortgage decree. That point has not been very seriously argued by the learned Vakil for the appellant, because he virtually admits that he cannot distinguish a recent decision of this Court in the case of Jogemaya Dassi v. Thackomoni Dassi, (1896) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 473, from the present case upon that point. In my opinion the decree in this case was a mortgage decree.

That being so, the further question arises, whether the plaintiff is now entitled to take any further execution proceedings [581] to obtain the benefit of this decree, the appellant urging that he is debarred from doing so by reason of the third paragraph of section 230 of the Code of Civil Procedure which says that "No subsequent application to execute the same decree shall be granted after the expiration of twelve years from any of the following dates."

* Appeal from Order No 332 of 1897, against the order of Babu Debendra Lal Shome, Subordinate Judge of Backergunge, dated the 20th of July 1897, affirming the order of Babu Rajoni Kanto Chatterjee, Munsif of Barisal, dated the 1st of May 1897.

The decree referred to in that paragraph of the section is admitted to be a "decree for the payment of money," and we therefore have to decide whether the decree, in this case, is a decree "for payment of money" within the meaning of that paragraph of section 230. The decree was dated 16th May 1884, and the last execution proceedings were on the 14th May 1896, and the present application for execution is dated 30th November 1896, so admittedly a period of twelve years has expired from the date of the decree. The translation of the decree as handed up to me is in these terms: "It is ordered that the suit be decreed ex parte and the sum of Rs. 323 claimed (in the suit)and the costs of this suit Rs. 34-8 as., with interest at 6 per cent. per annum from this day till the date of realization, plaintiff do get from the hypothecated property. If insufficient, defendant to remain personally liable."

This question has been before the Allahabad High Court, and it was there decided in the case of Ram Charan Bhagat v. Sheobarat Rai (1894) I. L. R. 16 All, 418, "that a decree for sale of hypothecated property made in a suit for sale upon a mortgage bond is not a decree for the payment of money within the meaning of section 230 of the Code."

Looking to the reasoning upon which that decision is based, and having regard to the various sections of the Code of Civil Procedure to which attention is drawn in that judgment, with the object of showing that under certain sections of the Code the term "decree for payment of money" is used in contradistinction to other decrees, I concur in that decision and in the reasoning by which it is supported. This being so, I scarcely think that it is necessary to go through the various sections which have been referred to in the course of the argument, though I may briefly say that sections 210 and 322 and 254 of the Code indicate to my [582] mind the distinction to which I have referred, that is to say, the distinction drawn in the Code between a decree for the mere payment of money and a decree with other objects, and giving other relief. Reliance is placed by the appellant upon the case of Hart v. Tara Prasanna Mukherji (1885) I. L. R., 11 Cal., 718, decided by this Court, but there, as has been pointed out in the course of the discussion, was a distinct order upon the defendant personally to pay the money. In the present case there is no such order; there is merely that which is tantamount to a declaration that if the property be insufficient, the personal liability is to remain, and I may here remark that in this case as regards any personal liability of the defendants to pay the money, both the Courts below have held that the application is too late, and the execution proceedings decreed are confined to a realisation of the property only.

Reliance was placed by the learned Vakil for the appellant upon certain passages in the judgments of MACPHERSON and TREVELYAN, JJ., in the case of Jogemaya Dassi v. Thackomoni Dassi, (1896) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 473, to which I have already referred, and for the purpose of showing that in that case those learned Judges held that a mortgage decree, such as the present, was a decree for the payment of money within the meaning of section 230 of the Code. I was a party to that decision, and the reliance I placed upon that section is indicated by my observations at p. 487 of the report. Personally I did not in that case express any opinion upon the point which is the subject of discussion before us now, though no doubt there are passages in the judgments of my learned brotherswhich do support the appellant's present contention. But speaking from recollection, and seeing that neither the case in the Allahabad High Court nor the case of Hart v. Tara Prasanna Mukherji, (1885) I. L. R., 11 Cal., 718, were cited, and looking to the head note of the case Jogemaya Dassi v Thackomoni Dassi, (1896) I.L.R, 24 Cal., 473, as to the application to that case of section 230, and to the circumstance that the point was not necessary to the decision, I am not satisfied it was the intention of those learned Judges finally to decide the point. But even if [583] it were, the decision would not avail the appellant here as I notice that in that case there was a decree against the defendant personally for payment. For these reasons, and, adopting as I do, the reasoning and conclusion of the learned Judges who decided the case in the Allahabad Court, I think that a decree such as this is not a decree for payment of money within the meaning of paragraph 3 of section 230 of the Code, and consequently that the order of the Court below was right and must be affirmed.

Banerjee, J.—I am of the same opinion. Two questions have been raised before us by the learned Vakil for the appellants: first, [illegible] decree in this case is a mortgage decree, that is a decree ordering [illegible] the mortgaged property, or whether it is simply a money decree, that is, a decree ordering the payment of money by the defendant; and, second, whether, even if the decree be held to be a mortgage decree, the present application for execution is not barred by section 230 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

As to the first question, having regard to the terms of the decree, I am of opinion that it is a mortgage decree, that is, a decree ordering the sale of the mortgaged property coupled with a decree for the realization of the balance of the mortgage debt, if any, left after the sale of the mortgaged property, out of any other property belonging to the judgment-debtor. The terms of the decree in this case come very much nearer to the terms of the decree in the case of Jogemaya Dassi v. Thackomoni Dassi, (1896) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 473, than to the terms of the decree which was the subject of discussion in the case of Chundra Nath Dey v. Burroda Shoondury Ghose, (1895) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 813. The last mentioned case is therefore distinguishable from the present; and following the case of Jogemaya Dassi v. Thakomoni Dassi, (1896) I.L.R., 24 Cal., 473, I think we must hold that the decree in this case was a mortgage decree.

As to the second contention, the Courts below have already held that so much of the decree as authorizes the decree-holder to realise the judgment-debt out of any property of the judgment-debtor other [584] than the mortgaged property is barred under section 230 of the Code, and the only question now before us is whether that portion of the decree which directs the realization of the mortgaged debt by sale of the mortgaged property is also barred under section 230 That question ought, in my opinion, to be answered in the negative. Although the first paragraph of section 230 relates to a decree generally, the third paragraph which contains the rule of limitation now relied upon speaks of an application to execute "a decree for the payment of money or delivery of other property." Can it be said that the decree that is now sought to be executed is one "for the payment of money," or, more strictly speaking, is that portion of the decree made in the suit which is for the payment of money? No doubt, every mortgage decree directs the mortgagor within a certain time fixed by the Court to pay the mortgage debt; and if such payment is not made, the decree directs the sale of the mortgaged property. The decree in this case did not specify any time within which payment was to be made. But we need not consider the question whether that defect vitiates the decree, because it is too late now to raise that question What the decree-holder is now seeking to execute is only so much of the decree as directs the sale of the mortgaged property; and an application to execute such a decree is not, in my opinion, within the scope of the third paragraph of section 230 of the Code. That the Code of Civil Procedure clearly observes a distinction between a simple decree for the payment of money and a decree directing the realization of money by the sale of mortgaged property, will be clear from section 322 of the Code, and will also be borne out by a reference to sections 254 and 295. The view I take is fully supported by the case of Ram Charan Bhagat v. Sheobarat Rai, (1884) I. L. R., 16 All., 418.

As for the case of Hart v. Tara Prasanna Mukherji, (1885) I.L.R., 11 Cal., 718, that is clearly distinguishable from the present, because the question that arose there was with reference to the applicability of section 295 to the decree in that case, and it was held that section 295 applied, one of the reasons evidently being that the decree in that case not only directed sale of the mortgaged property, [585] but also authorized the realization of the money decreed by sale of property other than the mortgaged property.

As for certain observations of two of the learned Judges in the case of Jogemaya v. Thackomoni, (1896) I.L.R., 24 Cal., 173, referred to, they have been considered in the judgment just delivered by the learned Chief Justice, and I need say nothing more than this, that those observations, though they may be construed as favouring to some extent the construction contended for by the learned Vakil for the appellant, are observations that were not necessary for the decision of the case.

Lunatic—Act XXXV of 1858—Uncertificated guardian, Powers of—Manager of Joint Hindu Family, Powers of - Guardian --Sale by de facto Guardian of Lunatic's share.

Act XXXV of 1858 does not affect the general provisions of Hindu law as to guardians who do not avail themselves of the Act, and the managing member of a joint Hindu family, one of the members of which is a lunatic may, in case of necessity, sell joint family property including the lunatic's share although he does not hold a certificate under the said Act.

Ram Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Projonath Mozoomdar, (1879) I. L. R., 4 Cal. 929, followed in principle; the Court of Wards v. Kupulmun Singh, (1873) 10 B. L. R., 364; 19 W. R., 163, disapproved.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 287 of 1897, against the decree of Babu Kadar Nath Mozumdar, Subordinate Judge of Burdwan, dated 23rd December 1896, affirming the decree of Babu Aughore Nath Biswas, Munsif of Burdwan, dated 24th February 1896.

THIS case was referred to a Full Bench by STEVENS, J., sitting alone to hear appeals not exceeding Rs. 50 in value. A Full [586] Bench consisting of five Judges, MACLEAN, C.J., and MACPHERSON, TREVELYAN, BANERJEE and STEVENS, JJ., heard the case on the 1st February, and the appeal was dismissed with costs. The judgments of the Full Bench were subsequently recalled, it appearing in the trial of another appeal referred to the Bench that there could not be a valid reference from a single Judge to a Full Bench. The order was as follows :—

" MACLEAN, C.J.—We directed this case to be put on the Board to-day under these circumstances. In the case heard by the Full Bench yesterday S. A. No. 1517 of 1896, objection was taken that there could not be a valid reference from a single Judge to a Full Bench. That case has been considered by us, and we have arrived at the unanimous conclusion that such a reference cannot be made. In the present case that objection was not taken, but the decision I have referred to applies equally to the present case, which was also a reference by a single Judge. Therefore the reference to the Full Bench was bad, and our judgment which has not been signed, passed and entered, must be recalled. Strictly then our course is to send the case back to Mr. Justice STEVENS, but, in order to save the parties expense, and as they consent, the proper steps shall be taken to have the case heard by a specially constituted Court of the same five Judges who heard it on the previous occasion. This will, we consider, get rid of any difficulties, and save the parties expense."

The plaintiff in this case sued for declaration of his title and recovery of possession of 1/12 share of a tank after cancellation of a deed of sale, dated the 31st Assar 1291, alleged to have been executed by his brother Hari Madhab. It was stated in the plaint that the plaintiff became of unsound mind while living jointly with Hari Madhab, and that he became of sound mind five or six years before the suit. It was further stated that Hari Madhab and the plaintiff had together an 1/6 share in the tank, that Hari Madhab wrongfully sold the plaintiff's share to the defendant during the plaintiff's insanity, and that the plaintiff not having been benefited by the sale the sale was not binding upon him.

The defence inter alia was that a joint debt of the plaintiff and his brother was paid off by selling the share in question, and that the plaintiff's brother sold it as manager of the family comprising [587] himself and the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff was benefited by the sale.

The lower Court dismissed the plaintiff's claim.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court

The question raised in the High Court was thus stated by STEVENS, J., in his order of reference to a Full Bench :—

" The point which arises in this case is, whether a sale by the managing member of a joint Hindu family, which included a lunatic, of a portion of a joint family property, including the interest of the lunatic, is bad so far as the share of the latter is concerned, on the sole ground that the manager, who was the lunatic's brother, did not hold a certificate under Act XXXV of 1858.

It has been found on the facts that the transaction was a prudent one entered into for the benefit of the lunatic, and that the lunatic actually derived benefit from it.

According to the ruling in the case of Court of Wards v. Kupulmun Singh, (1873) 10 B. L. R., 364 : 19 W. R., 163, the sale of the lunatic's interest would appear to be invalid. The principle on which that case seems mainly to have been decided was that in all cases of disqualification the appointment of a guardian to the disqualified person lay according to the Hindu law with the State, and inasmuch as by Act XXXV of 1858 a particular course was marked out for the Court as representing the State, to pursue, in regard to appointing a guardian or manager of a lunatic's estate, no appointment of such guardian or manager could be properly effected after the passing of that Act otherwise than in the special manner prescribed thereby. It was held that any equitable principle that might apply to dealings bona fide for valuable consideration with a de facto manager who had not obtained a certificate under the Act could not extend to transactions which in the case of a certificated manager would have required the previous sanction of the Court under section 14 of the Act.

Those principles were applied on the authority of that decision [588] among others in the case of Abhassi Begum v. Rajrup Koonwar, (1878) I. L. R., 4 Cal., 33, which was an analogous case under Act XL of 1858, section 18 of which corresponds closely to section 14 of Act XXXV.

The latter case was overruled by a Full Bench of the Court in the case of Ram Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Brojo Nath Mozumdar, (1879) I. L. R., 4 Cal., 929. The case in 19 Weekly Reporter, 163, was referred to in the argument, but was not mentioned in the judgment of the Full Bench, which moreover proceeded on the construction of Act XL of 1858 itself and on the history of previous legislation on the subject. Although, therefore, the principles, on which the case in 19 Weekly Reporter, 163, was decided, were not followed by the Full Bench, and so far the decision may be said to have been dissented from by implication, it was not expressly overruled.

I think that, though all the considerations noticed in the judgment of the Full Bench are not applicable to Act XXXV of 1858, there does not appear to be any substantial difference of principle between that Act and Act XL of 1858, so as to render correct the application of section 14 of the former Act in circumstances analogous to those in which the application of section 18 of Act XL of 1858 has been held by the Full Bench to be incorrect. I, therefore, venture to differ from the decision in the case of Court of Wards v. Kupulmun Singh, (1873) B. L. R., 364 . 19 W. R., 167, and I accordingly refer the matter for the decision of a Full Bench."

Babu Digambar Chatterjee appeared for the Appellant, and contended that on a proper construction of the deed of sale, the interest of the lunatic did not pass thereby, but only an 1/12 share, and that of the brother who executed this deed was meant to be sold. He further contended that the brother had no authority to sell the interest of the lunatic without a certificate under Act XXXV of 1858, and cited Court of Wards v. Kupulmun Singh, (1873) B. L. R, 364 : 19 W. R., 167, and Goureenath v. Collector of Monghyr, (1867) 7 W. R., 5.

Babu Nilmadhab Bose (Babu Shib Chandra Palit with him) [589] on behalf of the Respondent argued that the principle of Hanuman Prasad's case should be applied; it appeared from the pleadings that it was understood that the plaintiff's share was sold, and the facts found were that full value was paid for the entire ⅙ share, and that the plaintiff benefited by the sale. The case cited from 7 W. R., 5, supported the defendant, and that from 19 W. R, only proceeds on the view that the unauthorized guardian should not possess more power than the authorized. That case is considerably weakened by the subsequent case in I. L. R., 4, Calcutta Series. The two Acts XXXV and XL of 1858 were passed at the same time and are similar in their scheme, and should be construed to be on the same principles. See section 14 of the Lunatics' Act and section 18 of the Minor's Act. The principle of the Full Bench ruling in I. L. R., 4, Calcutta Series, should be extended to the case of a lunatic.

Babu Digambar Chatterjee in reply.

The Judgments of the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J., MACPHERSON, TREVELYAN, BANERJEE, and STEVENS, JJ.) were as follows:—

Maclean, C. J.—The question we have to decide is whether a sale by the managing member of a joint Hindu family, which includes a lunatic, of a portion of a joint family property, including the interest of the lunatic, is bad so far as the share of the latter is concerned, on the ground that the manager, who was the lunatic's brother, did not hold a certificate under Act XXXV of 1858. It must be taken that the sale in this case was effected by Hari Madhab, brother of the lunatic, to pay off a debt of the joint family, and that there was necessity for the sale. I entertained during the course of the argument some doubt as to how this question should be answered; but on the whole I have come to the conclusion that it must be answered in the negative, in other words, I think the sale is good and binding.

Two points have been urged before us on behalf of the plaintiff, appellant, and the first point is upon the construction of kobala in question. It is contended for the appellant that on the construction of the deed Hari Madhub only sold his own interest [590] in it and not the interest of his then lunatic brother, the present plaintiff.

If the document stood alone and the question were one merely of the construction of the document as it stands, there might be some difficulty in saying that it passed anything more than the interest of Hari Madhub. But the authorities cited appear to me to establish that in a case of this class, the Court may take into consideration not only the language of the deed itself, but may look into all the surrounding circumstances in order to ascertain what the true intention of the parties was. This being so, it is not an unfair inference from the findings of the Court below that the purchaser intended to buy, and that Hari Madhub intended to sell, not only the share of Hari Madhub in the tank in question, but also the share of his lunatic brother. Taking then the deed in connection with the surrounding circumstances, the right conclusion is, I think, that the sale included, and was intended to include, both the shares.

Upon the second point, the decision of this Court in the case of Court of Wards v. Kupulmun Singh, (1873) 10 B. L. R., 364 : 19 W. R., 163, where it was held—I am now reading from the head note—"That all dealings with a lunatic's property must be made by the hands of a guardian or manager to be appointed by the supreme civil power; the legality of the guardianship depending on such appointment," is an authority in the plaintiff's favour. But in a later case decided by a Full Bench of this Court—Ram Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Brojo Nath Mozumdar, (1879) I. L. R., 4 Cal, 929, it was held that it was not the intention of Act XL of 1858, which was no doubt an Act applicable to infants and not to lunatics—"to alter or affect any provision of Hindu or Mahomedan law as to guardians who do not avail themselves of the Act. The scope of the enactment is merely to remove legislative prohibitions to confer expressly a certain jurisdiction, and to define exactly the position of those who avail themselves of, or are brought under, the Act, leaving persons to whom any existing rules of law apply unaffected."

[591] That case no doubt applies to the case of an infant and not to that of a lunatic, but the statute relating to lunatics (Act XXXV of 1858) was passed in the same year as that relating to infants, and the provisions of the two Acts, qua the present point, are substantially, if not absolutely, analogous. Although, as I said before, I, in the first instance, entertained some doubt on the point—a doubt which was fostered by the circumstance that there is no express provision in the Mitakshara for the case of a lunatic, though there is for the case of a minor—I think the reasoning upon which the judgment in the later Full Bench case is based applies with equal force to the case of a lunatic as to the case of an infant. It is difficult to see any real distinction in principle between the two cases having regard to the wide and somewhat general powers of the manager of Hindu joint family property, and which prevail according to Hindu law. The necessity for the sale must of course be shown.

Upon these short grounds I am of opinion that the sale in question is good, and that it binds the share of the lunatic.

The appeal therefore fails, and must be dismissed with costs, but there will be no costs of the reference by Mr. Justice STEVENS, which proved to be abortive.

Macpherson, J. —I think that on the facts found, the plaintiff's brother had power to dispose of the plaintiff's interest in the tank in question, the plaintiff being a lunatic at the time of the sale. The tank was the joint property of the two brothers, and the plaintiff's brother was in the position of the manager. Act XXXV of 1858 does not make the appointment of a guardian or manager compulsory in the case of every lunatic, nor does it deprive the managing member of a Hindu family, one of the members of which is a lunatic, of the powers of dealing with the family property in case of necessity. The authority of the case of Court of Wards v. Kupulmun Singh, (1873) 10 B. L. R., 364. 19 W. R, 163, has, I think, been greatly shaken by the case of Ram Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Brojo Nath Mazumdar, (1879) I. L. R, 4 Cal., 929, decided by a Full Bench of this Court. Reasons which led the Full Bench to hold [592] that a de facto guardian of a minor has authority in case of necessity to deal with the infant's property, apply, in my opinion, equally to the case of a Hindu family, one member of which is a lunatic.

On the other point as to whether the sale did actually pass the interest of the plaintiff, I agree in the view expressed by the learned Chief Justice.

Trevelyan, J.—I also agree in the view taken by the learned Chief Justice on both the questions. As regards the first question, I think that it is always to be determined in these cases, from the terms of the deed and surrounding circumstances, what the parties intended should pass, whether they intended that the share of the minor, or the lunatic, as the case may be, should pass, or whether they only intended that the person who was acting for such a minor or a lunatic, should be considered as dealing with his own property. In this case one-twelfth share of the property did actually belong to the manager himself and one-twelfth belonged to the lunatic. Looking at the deed itself, and having regard specially to the decision of the late Sir BARNES PEACOCK, Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice DWARKA NATH MITTER in Judoonath Chuckerbutty v. James Tweedie, (1869) 11 W. R., 20, I am bound to say that the property of the lunatic passed by the sale in question. In that case, as in the present case, the manager had, apparently, a share of his own besides the share with which he was dealing. The learned Chief Justice there said: "In this case it appears to be clear that the vendors intended to pass the whole property and not merely the share which they passed in their own right, first—because they professed to sell the whole, and, secondly, because in the deed they recite a necessity which it would have been wholly unnecessary for them to have done if they were selling in their own right." In the present case, also, the manager professed to sell the whole one-sixth. In this case, also, he professed to sell such property in order to pay off a debt which is admitted to be a joint family debt. It is described in the plaint as a joint family debt, and throughout it has been treated as such. It seems to me, therefore, that there is [593] absolutely no distinction whatever between the case of Judoonath Chuckerbutty v. James Tweedie, (1869) 11 W.R., 20, and the present case. I, therefore, hold that the parties must have intended that the whole one-sixth should pass.

I also agree in the view that the decision in Ram Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Brojo Nath Mozumdar, (1879) I. L. R., 4 Cal., 929, practically concludes this case on the point referred to us.

Banerjee, J.—I am of the same opinion. Upon the first of the two points raised, namely, that relating to the construction of the conveyance, I do not think it necessary to add anything to what has been said in the judgments of the learned Chief Justice and Mr. Justice TREVELYAN.

Upon the second point, which is the one that has given rise to this reference, I wish only to add a few words in answer to the contention raised by the learned Vakil for the appellant, that the case of a lunatic is distinguishable from that of a minor. The distinction which is sought to be drawn is this: Whereas the case of a minor is expressly provided for by Hindu law, and it was this express provision of Hindu law that was made the basis of the decision of the Full Bench in the case of Ram Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Brojo Nath Mozumdar, (1879) I. L. R., 4 Cal., 929, there is no such provision relating to the case of a lunatic. And there being no such provision relating to the case of a lunatic, it is argued that the only authority dealing with his property must be that derived from Act XXXV of 1858.

The answer to this argument, in my opinion, is this: Though the passage of the Mitakshara which is referred to, namely, Mitakshara, Chapter I, Section I, para. 29, relates only to the case of minors, the text of Brihaspati upon which that passage is a comment, and which is quoted in the preceding paragraph, is quite general in its terms, and would include the case of a lunatic, or other disqualified person, just as much as that of a minor; and if that is so, it cannot be said that the case of a lunatic is absolutely unprovided for in Hindu law. The view I take is [594] supported by a decision of this Court in the case of Gouree Nath v. Collector of Monghyr, (1867) 7 W. R., 5. That being so, I do not think that there can be any reason for distinguishing the case of a lunatic from that of a minor, in regard to whom it has already been settled by the decision of this Court in the case of Ram Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Brojo Nath Mozumdar, (1879) I.L.R., 4 Cal., 929, that a de facto guardian or manager has the power of dealing with his property in case of necessity. I think the rule of law which requires a purchaser in such a case to prove necessity in order to sustain the alienation in his favour, is a sufficient safeguard against the interest of the lunatic being sacrificed.

Stevens, J.—I agree.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Schedule II, Art 179, cls. (4) and (2)—Execution of decree, not materially defective, Application for —Application returned for amendment —Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), sections 235 and 248—Decree against joint defendants—Appeal by one of several defendants against part of the decree.

The plaintiff obtained a joint decree against defendants for possession of immoveable property and damages on 21st May 1886. Against that decree all the defendants except defendant No. 1 appealed, and on 2nd July 1887 so much of the decree was reversed as made the appealing defendants liable for damages but was affirmed in all other respects. A second appeal by the plaintiff from the decree of the Appellate Court was dismissed by the High Court on 9th July 1888. An application for execution of the decree was made by the plaintiff on 7th July 1891 within three years from the date of the final decree, dated 9th July 1888

[595] The prayer was for issue of notice on the Judgment-debtor for delivery of possession, for attachment and sale of certain immoveable properties, for realization of costs and damages decreed. Notice under section 248 of the Code of Civil Procedure was issued on the judgment-debtors on 8th September 1891. The judgment-debtors, except defendant No. 1, objected that as the application did not contain the right number of suit and date of decree it was not in accordance with law, and as no other application had been made within three years from date of decree, the execution was barred by limitation. Defendant No. 1 objected that limitation as against him would run from 21st May 1886, there being no appeal by or against him from the decree of that date.

Held, that material defects only could vitiate an application, and as the defects in the present application for execution were not material, it was not barred by limitation. Asgar Ali v. Troilokya Nath Ghose, (1890) I. L. R., 17 Cal., 631, and Gopal Sah v. Janki Koer, (1895) I. L. R., 23 Cal., 217, distinguished.

Held, also, that even if such application was defective as an application for execution of decree it was still an application to take some step in aid of execution, namely, to issue a notice under section 248, which was necessary, the decree having been passed more than a year before, and such notice having been issued, it kept the decree alive.

Behari Lal v. Solik Ram, (1878) I. L. R., 1 All., 675, and Dhonkal v. Phakkar, (1893) I. L. R., 15 All., 84, referred to.

Held, further, that limitation against defendant No. 1 would run from date of the decree in appeal, therefore the application for execution was not barred by limitation. Gunga Moyee v. Shib Sunker, (1878) 3 C. L. R., 430, followed. Moshiat-un-nissa v. Rani, (1889) I. L. R., 13 All., 1, distinguished.

* Reference to the Full Bench in Appeal from Order No. 88 of 1896.

THIS case was referred to a Full Bench by MACLEAN, C.J., and BANERJEE, J., on the 9th August 1897. The order of reference was as follows:—

BANERJEE, J.—This appeal arises out of an application for execution of a decree for possession of certain immoveable property and for damages. The first Court, on the 21st May 1886, gave the plaintiff a decree for possession and for damages against all the defendants. Against that decree all the defendants, except No. 1, preferred an appeal, and the Appellate Court, on the 2nd July 1887, reversed so much of the decree as made the appealing defendants liable for damages, but it affirmed the [596] decree in every other respect. And a second appeal from the decree of the Appellate Court was dismissed by the High Court on the 9th of July 1888.

The first application for execution was made in the Court of the first Munsif of Howrah on the 7th of July 1891; it was returned by the first Munsif on the 21st of August following for want of jurisdiction; and it was presented on the same day to the proper Court. The application asked for issue of notice on the judgment-debtor for delivery of possession and for attachment and sale of certain immoveable properties for realization of the costs and damages decreed. Notice under section 248 of the Code was issued on the judgment-debtors on the 8th September 1891, and on their objection that the particulars required by section 235 were incorrectly stated, the application was, by an order of the Court, dated the 11th January 1892, allowed to be amended. This last-mentioned order was reversed by the Appellate Court, and the Munsif was directed to deal with the application for execution as originally made; and the execution case was dismissed by the Munsif, on the 13th July 1892, for want of prosecution. A second application for execution made on the 15th August 1893 was rejected on the 4th April 1894 for incorrectness in the statement of necessary particulars, and then the present application was made on the 19th of June 1894. The judgment-debtors urge that it was barred by limitation; the first Court gave effect to this objection, but the Lower Appellate Court has reversed the decision of the first Court, and ordered execution to proceed; and hence this appeal by the judgment-debtors.

Two contentions have been raised in this appeal:

First—That execution is barred against all the defendants, as the application of the 7th of July 1891 was not one according to law; and as there was no other application within three years even from the date of the decree of the High Court; and

Second—That even if the application of the 7th of July 1891 be held to be one according to law, still execution is barred against defendant No. 1, as time runs in his case, not from the [597] date of the decree of the High Court, but from the date of the decree of the first Court, that is, the 21st of May 1886, there having been no appeal by or against him from that decree.

In support of the first contention, it is argued by the learned Vakil for the appellants that many of the particulars required by section 235 of the Code were incorrectly stated in the application of the 7th of July 1891, and that it cannot therefore be regarded as an application made according to law within the meaing of Article 179, Clause 4 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act; and the cases of Asgar Ali v. Troilokya Nath Ghose, (1890) I.L.R., 17 Cal., 631, and Gopal Sah v. Janki Koer, (1895) I.L.R., 23 Cal., 217, are relied upon. It was conceded, however, and very properly conceded, that the decree-holder was entitled under section 14 of the Limitation Act to exclude from computation the time from the 7th July to the 21st August 1891.

That being so, and the decree-holder being admittedly entitled to reckon time as against at least some of the judgment-debtors from the date of the final decree in appeal, that is, the 9th of July 1888, execution is not barred against them, if the application of the 7th July 1891 is one within the meaning of Clause 4 of Article 179, that is, if it is an application according to law within the meaning of that clause.

Now the question whether an application for execution or for taking some step in aid of execution is one according to law within the meaning of Article 179, Clause (4), has to be determined with reference to the circumstances of each case; and while on the one hand an application must be in substantial compliance with the law in order that it may be regarded as one coming within the meaning of clause 4, on the other hand, it is not every informality that would vitiate an application and take it out of that clause. Were it otherwise, bonâ fide applications for execution would fail to save limitation owing to trivial defects of form, —a result which I do not think the Legislature could have intended. The view I take is amply supported by the authority of decided cases [598] of which I need only refer to Bal Kishen v. Bedmati, (1892) I.L.R., 20 Cal., 388, and Rama v. Varada, (1892) I.L.R., 16 Mad., 142.

The two cases cited by the learned Vakil for the appellants are clearly distinguishable from the present. In Asgar Ali v. Troilokya Nath Ghose, (1890) I.L.R., 17 Cal, 631, while the decree-holder, as I gather from the judgment of PRINSEP, J., asked for the sale of the immoveable property of the judgment-debtor "as per list," no list was attached to the application, so that the application did not comply with section 237 of the Code, and no execution could be taken out thereon owing to this material defect. So also in Gopal Sah v. Janki Koer, (1895) I.L.R., 23 Cal., 217, the application, which was considered to be one not according to law, was found to be materially defective in not complying with sections 235 to 238. Mr. Justice PRINSEP in his judgment in this last mentioned case observes: "One of the errors committed by the decree-holder was in misstating the amount of his decree in a lesser sum than he was given, and the Subordinate Judge has consequently limited the execution to that smaller sum. If that had been the only defect the decree would have been capable of being executed for the smaller sum. But in other respects, which it is unnecessary to mention, the application failed to comply with the requirements of sections 235, 236, 237 and 238 applicable to the case." These observations go to some extent to support the view I take, that it is only material defects that can vitiate an application. In the present case, the defects in the application of the 7th of July 1891, as the Lower Appellate Court has shown, were not of a material character. The application asked for delivery of possession of the property covered by the decree, and the decree could well have been executed so far as this part of the prayer was concerned. It is admitted again that the application contained a list of the immoveable property sought to be attached and sold for the realization of the money decreed, so that there was no want of compliance with the provisions of [599] section 237 of the Code here. Moreover, though the amendment allowed by the first Court was set aside on appeal, the Appellate Court did not treat the application as one not made according to law, but remanded the case to the first Court to deal with the application as originally made—a course which it could not have taken if the application had been considered as not made according to law. Lastly, granting that the application of the 7th of July 1891 was informal and defective as an application for execution of decree, it was at any rate, as pointed out by the learned Vakil for the respondent, an application to take some step in aid of execution, that is to say, to issue a notice under section 248 of the Code which was here necessary, the decree having been passed more than one year before. A notice was issued according to the prayer made in this application, and the application and the notice were sufficient to keep the decree alive. See Behari Lal v. Salik Ram, (1878) I.L.R., 1 All., 675, and Dhonkal v. Phakkar, (1893) I.L.R., 15 All., 84.

The first contention of the appellants must therefore fail.

In support of the second contention that time runs as regards defendant No. 1 from the date of the decree of the first Court, the cases of Hur Proshad v. Enayet Hossein, (1878) 2 C.L.R., 471, and Raghu Nath v. Abdul Hye, (1886) I.L.R., 14 Cal., 26, are relied upon. These cases are in conflict with that of Gunga Moyee v. Shib Sunker, (1878) 3 C.L.R., 430, which I am inclined to follow, as the decision in this last mentioned case appears to be more in conformity with the language of the law, than that in the two cases cited for the appellants. Moreover, Explanation I to Article 179 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act makes a distinction between a joint decree against several defendants and a decree in which separate reliefs are granted against different defendants, with reference to Clause 4, while no such distinction is made with reference to Clause 2; and this to my mind is a clear indication that the [600] Legislature intended that time should run from the date of the final decree of the Appellate Court where there has been an appeal irrespective of the question whether the appeal related to the whole decree or not.

In this conflict of decisions in this Court, a reference to a Full Bench becomes necessary, and as this is an appeal from an Appellate order having the force of a decree, the whole case must be referred to a Full Bench.

MACLEAN, C.J.—I agree that this case should be referred to a Full Bench reserving my opinion upon the question raised.

Babu Prosonno Gopal Roy, for the Appellant.

Babu Nil Madhub Bose and Babu Shib Chunder Palit, for the Respondent.

Babu Prosonno Gopal Roy.--The application for execution is barred by limitation. It is a defective application, as it does not give the right number of the suit, the date, and the amount of the decree. That being so, the application is not one made in accordance with law. See section 235 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the cases of Gopal Sah v. Janki Koer, (1895) I.L.R., 23 Cal, 217 (223), and Chowdhry Paroosh Ram Das v. Kali Puddo Banerjee, (1889) I.L.R., 17 Cal., 53 If it is an application not made in accordance with law, the issue of a notice under section 248 of the Code of Civil Procedure would not save limitation. Application in aid of execution must be made according to law, in furtherance of the execution proceedings under a decree. See Sujan Singh v. Hira Singh, (1889) I L.R., 12 All., 399 (402), and Dalichand v. Bai Shivkor, (1890) I.L.R., 15 Bom., 242). The execution as against defendant No. 1, at least, has been barred by limitation. Limitation as against him would run either from the date of the decree of the first Court, or of the Appellate Court, as there was no appeal by or against him. See the cases of Hur Proshaud Roy v. Enayet [601] Hossein, (1878) 2 C. L R., 471; Harkant Sen v. Biraj Mohan Roy, (1895) I.L. R, 23 Cal., 876; Mashiat-un-nissa v. Rani, (1889) I. L. R., 13 All., 1; Muthu v. Chellappa, (1889) I. L. R., 12 Mad., 479; Rughu Nath Singh v. Pareshram Mahata, (1882) I. L. R., 9 Cal., 635; Mullick Ahmed Zumma v. Mahomed Syed, (1880) I. L., R., 6 Cal., 194

Babu Nil Madhub Bose, for the Respondent, was not called upon.

The opinion of the FULL BENCH was delivered by MACLEAN, C.J. (MACPHERSON, TREVELYAN, BANERJEE, and JENKINS, JJ., concurring).

Maclean, C. J.—Although in the reference I have reserved my opinion on the point referred to the Full Bench, I had the advantage of hearing the arguments addressed to Mr. Justice BANERJEE and myself in the Court below, and of discussing the matter with him, and I am in entire agreement with the opinion he has expressed upon the question of whether the application for execution of the 7th July 1891 was or was not one according to law. I concur both in the reasoning and in the conclusion expressed by Mr. Justice BANERJEE; and as regards the point which has been referred to the Full Bench, namely, whether the time from which the period is to begin to run is, as regards the defendant No. 1, the date of the decree pronounced on the appeal or the date of the decree of the first Court, I am of opinion that it begins to run from the date of the decree on appeal. I only propose to add one or two brief remarks to what Mr. Justice BANERJEE has said. With respect to the case decided in the Allahabad High Court, the case of Mashiat-un-nissa v. Rani, (1889) I.L.R., 13 All., 1, the first comment I make is that in that case there was a marked difference of opinion amongst the Judges who heard and decided it, and, in the next place, the facts were clearly distinguishable from those of the present case, inasmuch as here the decree was a joint one, whilst in the Allahabad case the decrees were [602] separate, or any way tantamount to separate decrees against each of the defendants. There is no doubt a dictum of C. J. EDGE which supports the present appellant's view, but it was obiter and not necessary for the purposes of that particular decision. I allude to the passage as to the application of clause 2, article 179 * on page 13. For myself I prefer the reasoning and the conclusion of the two learned Judges who were in the minority in that case, and to read the language of sub-section 2 of Article 179 of the second schedule to the Limitation Act according to the ordinary signification of the words used. That article says that, where there has been an appeal, the date of the final decree or order of the Appellate Court shall be taken to be the time from which the period is to begin to run. There is no such qualification in the article as is suggested by the majority of the Judges in the Allahabad case, and which must be read into the article in order to support their view, nor is there anything to lead me to suppose that any such qualification or modification was intended by the Legislature. The language of the article is reasonably clear, and in my opinion the safer course is to construe it according to the ordinary meaning of the words used. Again, upon the question of convenience, the convenience seems to me to be all in favour of the view which I take. In my opinion, the answer to the question submitted to us should be, that the time runs, as against the defendant No. 1, from the date of the final order of the Appellate Court, which was that of the High Court, dated the 9th July 1888; and that being so, the application for execution of the 7th July 1891 was not out of time. The appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs, including the costs of this reference.

Macpherson, J.—I agree with the Chief Justice on both points.

Trevelyan, J.—I also agree.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), section 92—Mortgage, Sale—Conduct of parties—Oral Evidence when admissible to prove that an apparent sale is a mortgage—Admissibility of parol evidence to vary a written contract.

Oral evidence of the acts and conduct of parties, such as oral evidence that possession remained with the vendor notwithstanding the execution of a deed of out-and-out sale, is admissible to prove that the deed was intended to operate only as a mortgage.

THIS case was referred to a Full Bench by BANERJEE and WILKINS, JJ., on the 24th November 1897, with the following OPINION:—

"This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff respondent, for declaration of his title to, and confirmation of his possession of, an 8 annas share in certain plots of land on the allegation that the said share belonged to two brothers, Panchcowri Maity and Bonomali Maity; that Panchcowri, without the knowledge and consent of his brother, mortgaged the entire 8 annas share to Bama Sundari Dassi, wife of Khetra Mohun Shaha, by a deed appearing on the face of it to be a deed of out-and-out sale, but both Panchcowri and Bonomali continued to be in possession of the land as before; that the shares of the two brothers having passed by inheritance to Mohendra Nath Maity, son of Panchcowri, he redeemed the mortgage to Bama Sundari; that on his death his mother Puti Dasi, having inherited the said property, sold it to the plaintiff in

* Reference to the Full Bench in appeal from Appellate Decree No. 205 of 1896.

1297, and the plaintiff has since been in possession of the same; that Hari Churn Maity, defendant No. 2, having fraudulently obtained possession of the kobala or mortgage deed [604] in favour of Bama Sundari, and having, in collusion with defendant No. 1, Preonath Shaha, who claims to be the heir of Khetra Mohun Shaha, suffered a fraudulent decree for arrears of rent to be obtained against himself by Preonath, induced Preonath to cause the property in dispute to be advertised for sale; and that hence the plaintiff is obliged to institute this suit.

"The defence, so far as it is necessary to be referred to for the purposes of this appeal, was that the alleged mortgage to Bama Sundari Dasi was really an out-and-out sale to her husband Khetra Mohun Shaha by Panchcowri and Bonomali under a registered deed of sale, dated the 8th Falgun 1269; that the plaintiff's vendors did not hold adverse possession of the property in dispute for twelve years; and that the decree obtained by defendant No. 1, who was the heir of Khetra Mohun Shaha, against defendant No. 2, and the proceedings taken in execution thereof, were not fraudulent and collusive, but were boná fide and valid.

"The first Court found for the defendant No. 1 and dismissed the suit. On appeal by the plaintiff the Lower Appellate Court has reversed the first Court's decision and given the plaintiff a decree, holding that the deed of the 8th of Falgun 1269, though executed by both Panchcowri and Bonomali, was one of mortgage and not of sale, and that the plaintiff and his predecessors in title had been in possession of the property in dispute for more than twelve years.

"Against that decree of the Lower Appellate Court defendant No. 1 has preferred this appeal, and it is contended on his behalf—

"First.—That the Lower Appellate Court is wrong in admitting parol evidence to contradict the terms of the deed of the 8th Falgun 1269; and

"Second.—That even if the deed be held to be a mortgage deed, the Lower Appellate Court is wrong in giving the plaintiff a decree without finding that the mortgage was either satisfied or extinguished.

"In support of the first contention, section 92 of the Evidence Act is relied upon for the appellant, while the learned [605] Vakil for the respondents in answer cites the cases of Baksu Lakshman v. Govinda Kanji, (1880) I. L. R., 4 Bom., 594, and Hem Chunder Soor v. Kally Churn Dass, (1883) I. L. R., 9 Cal., 528, as showing that section 92 of the Evidence Act is no bar to the admission of evidence of acts and conduct upon which the Lower Appellate Court has held the deed in question to be one of mortgage and not of sale.

"There is some conflict of authority upon the point and some little difficulty in reconciling those cases which favour the respondent's view with the provisions of section 92 of the Evidence Act.

"In the case of Kashee Nath Chatterjee v. Chundy Churn Banerjee, (1866) 5 W. R., 68, decided before the Evidence Act was passed, the majority of a Full Bench of this Court held that evidence of an oral agreement was not admissible to prove that a deed of sale was intended to operate only as a mortgage, but that evidence of the acts and conduct of parties, as for instance evidence of possession having been allowed to remain with the vendor, was admissible for that purpose.

"In Daimoddee Paik v. Kaim Taridar, (1879) I.L.R., 5 Cal., 300, which was decided by this Court after the Evidence Act had come into force, it was held that section 92 of that Act had altered the law and was a bar to the admission of evidence of the kind which was considered admissible in the Full Bench case just referred to, and it was pointed out that there was "some difficulty in comprehending the distinction between the admissibility of evidence of a verbal contract to vary a written instrument and the admissibility of evidence showing the acts of the parties, which after all are only indications of such unexpressed, unwritten agreement between the parties." And somewhat to the same effect is the case of Ram Doyal Bajpie v. Heera Lall Paray, (1878) 3 C. L. R., 386.

" On the other hand it has been held by the Bombay High Court [606] in Baksu Lakshman v. Govinda Kanji, (1880) I. L. R., 4 Bom., 594, by the Madras High Court in Venkatratnam v. Reddiah, (1890) I. L. R., 13 Mad., 494, and by this Court in Hem Chunder Soor v. Kally Churn Das, (1883) I. L. R., 9 Cal., 528, and Kasi Nath Dass v. Hurrihur Mookerjee, (1883) I. L. R., 9 Cal., 898, that section 92 of the Evidence Act does not alter the rule laid down in Kashee Nath Chatterjee v. Chundy Churn Banerjee, (1866) 5 W R., 68, and that the ground upon which the evidence of acts and conduct is admitted, is that the Court, should not permit the perpetration of fraud. But as has been well pointed out in a work of which the learned Vakil for the respondent is the author (see R. B. Ghose's Mortgage, second edition, page 66), the fraud referred to in proviso (1) of section 92, which would warrant the admission of oral evidence to vary a written instrument, must be contemporaneous and not subsequent fraud, that is fraud which prevented the insertion of the alleged agreement in the deed and not fraud which consists in a false denial of the agreement; for, if fraud of this latter description were to be allowed to make oral evidence admissible to contradict a document, it would render the section nugatory, the object of the section evidently being to avoid falsehood and perjury in the great majority of cases, even at the risk of allowing fraud to go undetected in a few instances.

"The case of Kader Moideen v. Nepean, (1891) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 882, to which our attention was called by the learned Vakil for the respondents, does not in our opinion touch the point now raised, the ground upon which their Lordships of the Privy Council based their judgment in that case having reference more to the construction of the written instruments than to the effect of oral evidence to vary them.

" The ground upon which the admissibility of the evidence of acts and conduct of parties to contradict a written instrument, in cases in which there is no contemporaneous fraud, may be [607] based, notwithstanding the provision of section 92 of the Evidence Act, is we think this: that section 92 of the Evidence Act, with a view to prevent falsehood and perjury, excludes evidence of " any oral agreement or statement " as to which perjury is easy, for the purposes of varying a written instrument; but neither the letter nor the spirit of the section excludes oral evidence which seeks to vary a written instrument, not by proving a mere verbal agreement or statement as to which perjury may be easy, but by proving acts and conduct of the parties as to which perjury is not equally easy, and which would be inconsistent with the view that the instrument was intended to operate in the form in which it appears.

" Having regard to these considerations, and to the fact that the balance of authority is in favour of the admissibility of the evidence upon which the Lower Appellate Court has held the deed in this case to be one of mortgage, we are inclined to hold that the first contention of the appellant should be disallowed. But as there is a clear conflict between the decisions of this Court in the cases of Daimoddee Paik v. Kaim Taridar, (1879) I. L. R., 5 Cal., 300, and Hem Chunder Soor v. Kally Churn Das, (1883) I. L. R., 9 Cal., 528, which are both in point, the question whether oral evidence of the acts and conduct of parties is admissible to contradict the deed in this case must, under Rule I of Chapter V of the Rules of this Court, be referred for decision to a Full Bench. And as the question arises on an appeal from an Appellate decree, the whole case must be so referred under Rule II, the point upon which we differ from the decision of this Court in Daimoddee v. Kaim Taridar, (1879) I. L. R., 5 Cal., 300, being whether oral evidence of the acts and conduct of parties, such as oral evidence that possession remained with the vendor notwithstanding the execution of a deed of out-and-out sale, is admissible to prove that the deed was intended to operate only as a mortgage.

"We may add that in our opinion the second contention of the learned Vakil for the appellant ought to succeed, and the case ought to go back to the Lower Appellate Court, as the learned [608] Subordinate Judge has not determined the question whether the mortgage had been extinguished or satisfied, nor has he even stated that as one of the questions requiring determination. The finding as to possession cannot help the plaintiff, because if the plaintiff's predecessors in title were mortgagors of the property, their possession could not bar the right of the mortgagee."

Babu Umakali Mookerjee for the Appellant.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghosh and Babu Digambar Chatterjee for the Respondent.

The judgment of the Full Bench (MACLEAN, C.J., and MACPHERSON, TREVELYAN, BANERJEE, and JENKINS, JJ.) was as follows: -

Maclean, C.J. In regard to the question of law, which was the main ground for this reference, namely, whether oral evidence as to the acts and conduct of the parties was admissible to prove that the deed in this case was intended to operate as a mortgage and not as an out-and-out sale, the learned Vakil who appeared for the appellant stated that, having regard to the authorities, he could not successfully contend that such evidence was not admissible. We think the authorities establish that in such a case, evidence directed to the acts and conduct of the parties would be admissible. Upon the main question submitted to us on this reference, the appellant consequently fails.

Upon the other point, whether the case ought to go back to the Lower Appellate Court, upon the ground that the Subordinate Judge has not determined the question whether the mortgage has been extinguished or satisfied, we see no reason to differ from the conclusion of the two learned Judges who heard the case in the Division Bench.

The case must go back for the determination of the question, but to be decided upon the evidence as it now stands.

With reference to the costs of the appeal, and of the reference as regards the appeal as there has been a partial success on each side, the costs of the appeal must abide the result of the remand, but as regards the costs of the reference the appellant must pay them.

[609] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 5th January, 1898.
PRESENT:
MR. JUSTICE GHOSE AND MR. JUSTICE AMEER ALI.

Makbool Ahmed Chowdhry............Decree-holder.
Bazle Sabhan Chowdhry............Judgment-debtor.*

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), section 310 A—Civil Procedure Code Amendment Act (V of 1891)—Amount payable incorrectly calculated by an officer of the Court.

The judgment debtor within thirty days from the date of sale deposited in Court, under s. 310A of the Code of Civil Procedure, the amount calculated in the office of the Munsif as payable under the section. The Munsif set aside the sale. On appeal to the High Court by the auction-purchaser on the ground that the amount deposited by the judgment-debtor was not in compliance with s. 310A, and that before the sale could be set aside it was necessary for the judgment-debtor to pay, in addition to what he deposited, a sum equal to five per cent. of the purchase money:

Held, that when the amount payable by the judgment debtor under s. 310A of the Code of Civil Procedure has been calculated by an officer of the Court, and has been deposited, an order setting aside the sale must be made by the Court as a matter of right; the Munsif therefore was justified in setting aside the sale. Ugrah Lall v. Radha Pershad Singh, (1891) I. L. R., 18 Cal., 255, referred to.

THE facts of the case, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of this report, are sufficiently stated in the judgment of the High Court.

Sir Griffith Evans, Babu Sreenath Das and Moulvi Abdul Jawad, for the Appellant.

The Advocate-General (Sir Charles Paul) and Moulvi Serajul Islam, for the Respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (GHOSE and AMEER ALI, JJ.) was as follows:--

Ghose, J.--This is an appeal by the decree-holder, who is also the purchaser at the sale held in execution of the decree, [610] against an order setting aside a sale under section 310A of the Code of Civil Procedure. It appears that after the sale had taken place, the judgment-debtor applied to the office of the Munsif for the purpose of ascertaining the exact sum that he had to pay in satisfaction of the decree in accordance with the provisions of section 310A; and an account was prepared by the execution mohurir shewing the amount payable by the judgment-debtor, and that account was signed by the Munsif. The judgment-debtor paid in the amount which was shewn in the account, and the Munsif subsequently set aside the sale in accordance with section 310A.

It has been contended, however, by the learned Counsel for the appellant that the amount that was deposited by the judgment-debtor was not in compliance with the requirements of section 310A, and he has argued that it was necesssary, before the sale could be set aside, that the judgment-debtor should pay, in addition to what he deposited, a sum equal to five per centum of the purchase-money to the purchaser. It is not necessary in this case to decide the question whether, in a case like this where the purchaser is decree-holder, and not a third party, a sum equal to five per centum on the purchase-money should be deposited by the judgment-debtor for the purpose of obtaining relief under section 310A. It is sufficient to say that the judgment-debtor in this case paid in the exact sum of money which, upon calculation by the Court, was found to be due, and payable by him in accordance with the requirements of section 310A.

* Appeal from order No. 195 of 1897, against the order of C. P. Caspersz, Esq., District Judge of Chittagong, dated the 8th of February 1897, affirming the order of Babu Romesh Chunder Bose, Munsif of Sitakund, dated the 30th of September 1896.

In the case of Ugrah Lall v. Radha Pershad Singh, (1891) I. L. R., 18 Cal., 255, decided by this Court, and reported, and which has, as we understand, been recently followed in another case (unreported) decided by MACPHERSON and AMEER ALI, JJ., this Court, under circumstances somewhat similar to this, held that the sale should be set aside. Sir COMER PETHERAM, in delivering the judgment of the Court in the case of Ugrah Lall v. Radha Pershad Singh, (1891) I.L R., 18 Cal., 255, observed as follows: Section 174 provides no [611] machinery by which the amount payable under the section is to be ascertained, but apparently from what has taken place in the case, the amount is in practice calculated in the office after notice to the decree-holder, and when that has been done, we think the amount so calculated and settled by the officer of the Court, has been settled as the amount payable under the section, and that when the amount has been paid into Court, an order to set aside the sale must be made by the Court as a matter of right. That was a case under section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the wording of which is very similar to section 310A of the Civil Procedure Code with which we are concerned in the present case; and the principle which underlies that case is equally applicable here.

We think that in the circumstances of this case the Munsif was justified in setting aside the sale which had taken place. The appeal will accordingly be dismissed and the application No. 1467 refused with costs.

Ameer Ali, J —I concur.

Mortgage—Further Advances—Equitable mortgage on title deeds already deposited under previous mortgage.

The defendants had executed a mortgage in favour of the plaintiff, and handed him the title-deeds of the mortgaged property. Subsequently the plaintiff advanced a further sum to the defendants, who agreed that the plaintiff should retain the title-deeds already held by him as a security for the repayment of the further advances. There was no fresh deposit of the deeds.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to be declared an equitable mortgagee in respect of such further advance.

Ex parte Kensington, (1813) 2 V. & B., 79, applied. In re Beethan, (1887) 18 Q. B. D., 380, referred to.

[612] THE facts of this case are fully stated in the judgment of SALE, J., below.

Mr. Sinha and Mr. J. G. Woodroffe for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Henderson and Mr. Swinhoe for the Defendant Kumud Kumari Dasi.

Mr. Avetoom for the Defendant Johurry Lall Pal.

Mr. Chuckerbutty for the remaining Defendant.

Sale, J.—The main question which arises for determination in this case is whether the plaintiff is entitled to a further charge for Rs. 8,000 by way of equitable mortgage in respect of certain property which admittedly was mortgaged to him. The facts are of a very simple character, and are in my opinion very clear, though as regards one point a question arises as to what is the proper inference to be drawn from them. The defendant Johurry Lall Pal carried on a piece goods business in Calcutta, and for the purposes of his business from time to time borrowed certain sums of money from Rajender Dutt, the father of the plaintiff. The transactions between Rajender Dutt and Johurry Lall Pal commenced by a loan from Rajender Dutt to Johurry Lall Pal of a sum of Rs. 10,000 as security, for which Johurry Lall Pal deposited title-deeds of the property in suit with Rajender Dutt, intending thereby to create an equitable charge as security for the loan in favour of Rajender Dutt. Subsequently Johurry Lall Pal, purporting to act for himself and for his wife Sreemutty Kumud Kumari Dasi, negotiated with Rajender Dutt for a mortgage of Rs. 60,000 which included the original sum of Rs. 10,000 obtained from him, and on the 18th January 1890 a mortgage for Rs. 60,000 was executed in favour of Rajender Dutt by Sreemutty Kumud Kumari Dasi. It appears that the title-deeds which were deposited with Rajender Dutt previous to the execution of the mortgage stood in the name of Sreemutty Kumud Kumari Dasi, and that Johurry Lall Pal, after the title-deeds had been so deposited, purported to act under the terms of a mukhtearnamah which he stated was executed in his' favour by Sreemutty Kumud Kumary Dasi. Subsequently to the execution of the mortgage of the 18th of Janury 1890, Johurry Lall was in want of further sums of money and he borrowed [613] sums amounting to Rs. 21,000 on three different occasions, and on each occasion executed a promissory note in favour of Rajender Dutt. It was agreed between Rajender Dutt and Johurry Lall Pal that the title-deeds already in the possession of Rajender Dutt should be regarded as a deposit to secure these further advances. At the same time Johurry Lall Pal, professing to act both fore himself and for his wife, agreed that a regular legal mortgage should be executed by himself and his wife to secure these further advances. On the 25th August 1890 that mortgage, which is the mortgage in suit, was executed. In the year 1893 Johurry Lall Pal required a further advance for the purpose of his business, and acting, as the evidence shows, in precisely the same way as when the former advances were obtained by him, he requested the plaintiff to lend him Rs. 16,000, agreeing that the title-deeds then in the possession of the plaintiff should be held by him as security for this further advance. The plaintiff, however, agreed to lend only a sum of Rs. 8,000. The question is whether under the circumstances there is evidence of authority on the part of Johurry Lall Pal to bind his wife, and, if so, whether the plaintiff is entitled to rank as an equitable mortgagee in respect of this further advance of Rs. 8,000. So far as the evidence of authority goes, it appears to me that there is abundant evidence to shew that Kumud Kumari was holding out to Rajender Dutt and to the plaintiff her husband as authorised on her behalf to borrow monies for her, and for that purpose to deal with the title-deeds so as to secure the monies borrowed. It is I think quite clear, both from the recitals which appear in the mortgage of the 25th August 1890, and also from the allegations contained in the written statement, both of Johurry Lall Pal and Kumud Kumari Dasi, that Kumud Kumari Dasi knew that her husband was acting as her agent for the purposes of his business, and that she authorized him so to do. That being so, the evidence is, it seems to me, sufficient to raise the implication of authority on the part of the husband to bind the wife in respect of the further sum of Rs. 8,000 which was borrowed by the husband under the circumstances I have already stated. The defendant Kumud Kumari Dasi in her written statement denies knowledge or authority in respect of this loan [614] of Rs. 8,000. Neither she nor her husband has been called for the purpose of supporting the defence which she sets up.

The next question is, whether upon the facts the plaintiff is entitled to be regarded as an equitable mortgagee in respect of this further sum of Rs. 8,000. It is said there was no further or fresh deposit of title-deeds to secure the advance, and further that the title-deeds were held, not under an agreement to deposit, but under an agreement and a conveyance. Authority has been referred to, from which it would appear that the Court of Chancery refused to extend the doctrine of the deposit of title-deeds creating an equitable mortgage to a case where the title-deeds were already held by the creditor under a mortgage in the nature of a conveyance. The authority referred to is an old case, and it would appear from the more recent case of In re Beetham, (1887) 18 Q. B. D., p. 380, that the Courts in England would recognize an agreement that the title-deeds already held under a mortgage should be held as a security for a further advance, if such agreement satisfied the conditions of the Statute of Frauds.

Moreover, it is to be remembered that in the present case the title-deeds in suit were originally held under an agreement to deposit, and that the defendants Johurry Lall Pal and Sreemutty Kumud Kumari Dasi from time to time regarded these title-deeds as deposited so as to secure fresh advances. I, therefore, see no reason why the contention of the plaintiff in respect of the fresh advance of Rs. 8,000 should not be given effect to. It has been pointed out that title-deeds already deposited as security for a previous loan are not required to be redelivered or redeposited to secure a subsequent advance when the parties by a subsequent arrangement intended that they should be held as security for a subsequent advance. In the case of Ex parte Kensington, (1813) 2 V. & B., 83, Lord Chancellor ELDON says at page 83: "In the cases alluded to I went to the length of stating that, where the deposit originally was for a particular purpose, that purpose may be enlarged by a subsequent parol agreement; and this distinction appeared to me to be too thin, that you should not [615] have the benefit of such an agreement, unless you added to the terms of that agreement the fact that the deeds were put back into the hands of the owner and a redelivery of them required, on which fact there is no doubt that the deposit would amount to an equitable lien within the principle of these cases." That case is referred to as an existing authority in the 10th edition of Snell's Principles of Equity at page 404, where the learned author says: "In Russel v. Russel, 1 Wh. & Tud. L. C. 7th, edit. 76, it was decided that the deeds were a security for the sum advanced at the time of the deposit, and only for that sum. But it is now held that such deposit will cover future advances, if such was the agreement when the first advance was made, or if it can be proved that a subsequent advance was made on an agreement, express or implied, that the deeds were to be or to remain a security for it as well."

I think, therefore, that the plaintiff is entitled to the usual mortgage decree, both in respect of the mortgage of the 25th August 1890 and of the further advance of Rs. 8,000. No relief is claimed as against the defendant Johurry Lall Pal who has been adjudicated an insolvent. A question was raised as to who should pay the costs of the brothers of the plaintiff who were not made plaintiffs in this suit, but were afterwards added as defendants on the ground that they as well as the plaintiff are entitled to the benefit of the mortgage of 25th August 1890. The defendant Kumud Kumari Dasi raised the question as to the title of the plaintiff to institute the present suit by himself, and asked that his brothers should be added as defendants. I think that the proper order to make with reference to the costs of these defendants, who only appeared on the first day of the hearing, is that their costs should be provided for in the same way as the plaintiff's costs from the proceeds of the mortgaged property. It is not necessary to make any order with reference to the costs of Johurry Lall Pal, inasmuch as no relief is sought against him, and he need not have appeared. The decree as against Kumud Kumari Dasi will be in the form of an ordinary mortgage decree.

Minor—Mortgage by minor —Voidable mortgage—Estoppel—Evidence Act (I of 1872), section 115—Fraud—Contract Act (IX of 1872), section 64—Restoration of benefit by minor.

The general law of estoppel as enacted by section 115 † of the Evidence Act (I of 1877) will not apply to an infant unless he has practised fraud operating to deceive.

A Court administering equitable principles will deprive a fraudulent minor of the benefit of a plea of infancy ; but he who invokes the aid of the Court must come with clean hands and must establish, not only that a fraud was practised on him by the minor, but that he was deceived into action by the fraud. Ganesh Lala v. Bapu, (1895) I. L. R., 21 Bom., 198, dissented from. Sarat Chunder v. Gopal Chunder Laha, (1897) I. L. R., 20 Cal.. 296 ; Mill v. Fox, (1887) L. R., 37 Ch. If money advanced to an infant on a mortgage declared void is spent by him, then there is no benefit which he is bound to restore under the provisions of section 64‡ of the Contract Act (IX of 1872).

THE facts of the case appear sufficiently from the judgment.

Mr. Pugh, Mr. Chakravarti and Mr. S. C. Mookerji for the Plaintiff.

Mr. O'Kinealy and Mr. J. G. Woodroffe for the Defendant.

Jenkins, J.—On the 20th of July 1895 the plaintiff executed in favour of the defendant a mortgage over premises in Calcutta known as No. 15, Bolaram Ghosh's Street and 133, Cornwallis Street, to secure Rs. 20,000, and the present suit is brought to have [617] the deed cancelled on the ground that at the time of its execution the plaintiff was an infant. On the evidence before me I have no hesitation in finding that the plaintiff was under the age of twenty-one on the 20th of July 1895, and as at that time his mother Jogendra Nandini Dasi was guardian of his person and property under an order of Court to that effect, it follows that at the date of the mortgage the plaintiff was under such incapacity as arises from infancy. By way of answer to this incapacity the defendant in the first place contends that the loan was induced by a fraudulent misrepresentation made by the plaintiff to the defendant's attorney Kedar Nath Mitter, to the effect that the plaintiff was of age, and that Kedar Nath Consequences of rescission of a voidable contract.

Mitter was deceived by the misrepresentation, so that it is necessary to examine the facts relevant to this contention.

The plaintiff, who seems to have been a young man of extravagant and profligate habits came to Kedar Nath Mitter, an attorney of this Court, some time in the month of May 1895, with a request for a loan of Rs. 20,000 on mortgage of the property to which I have already referred. The upshot of the matter was that Dedraj, the local manager in Calcutta of the defendant, an up-country money-lender, expressed his willingness to advance the money on being satisfied as to the security. In the course of investigation of the plaintiff's title there came into Kedar Nath Mitter's hands a decree in a partition suit and an order for possession in which the present plaintiff was described as a minor, and thereupon Kedar Nath Mitter, according to his account of what occurred, asked the plaintiff to produce satisfactory evidence of his majority, with the result that the latter produced copies of two petitions presented by his mother, one praying for a grant of letters of administration, and the other for her appointment as guardian of the person and property of the plaintiff. In the former of these the plaintiff was described as being under the age of seven years, from which Kedar Nath says that he drew an inference which would place the plaintiff's birthday in July. Kedar Nath Mitter claims to have based this inference on what he calls a calculation; but if the mental process he describes ever had an existence, then I can only say it had no justification in fact or in reason.

[618] Kedar Nath Mitter further has sworn that the plaintiff was constantly asserting that he was born on the 4th Assei (the 17th June), but his testimony on this point is uncorroborated by any of the defendant's witnesses, and is absolutely contradicted by the plaintiff.

The next thing, according to Kedar Nath Mitter, is that as he still wanted evidence of the precise date of the plaintiff's birth, the astrologer Kalidas Acharji and Nando Lal Ghosh were produced, and made the declarations which form part of the evidence in the case. In addition to this Kedar Nath Mitter got from the plaintiff, as he says, "for greater security in the interests of his client" the declaration affirmed by the plaintiff on the 20th of July, the day of the execution of the mortgage. These are the facts on which the defendant relies in support of his plea of fraudulent misrepresentations. The plaintiff, on the other hand, contends that Kedar Nath Mitter was not in fact deceived by the misrepresentations contained in the declarations, and to establish that he relies on his conduct in the matter and also on a letter of the 15th of July 1895. This letter was written by Babu Bhupendranath Bose, who at that time was the plaintiff's mother's attorney, and was in these terms:—

July 15th, 1895.

Babu KEDAR NATH MITTER.

Dear Sir,

I am instructed by Srimati Jogendra Nandini Dasi, the mother and guardian appointed by the High Court under its Letters Patent of the person and property of Babu Dharamdas Ghose, that a mortgage of the properties of the said Dharamdas Ghose is being prepared from your office. I am instructed to give you notice which I hereby do that the said Dharamdas Ghose is still an infant under the age of twenty-one and any one lending money to him will do so at his own risk and peril.

Yours faithfully,
BHUPENDRA NATH BOSE.

This letter was on the same day handed to the witness, Lal Mahomed, Pressman, to be taken by him to Kedar Nath Mitter's office. Lal Mahomed swears that he took the letter to Kedar Nath Mitter's office, and there went into a room where Kedar Nath Mitter and another Babu were seated. He says that he handed the letter to this Babu who opened it, read it and then handed [619] it to Kedar Nath Mitter, who in turn read its contents. The Babu, it is said, then signed the peon book, which was brought back by the messenger. No reply was sent to this letter, and on the 24th of July Bhupendra Nath again wrote to Kedar Nath Mitter as follows:—

July 24th 1895.

Babu KEDAR NATH MITTER.

Dear Sir,

Re Dharamdas Ghose.

I warned you on the 15th of July instant that Dharamdas Ghose was and still is an infant, and that his mother my client Srimati Jogendra Nandini Dasi is his guardian. I understand that yesterday, notwithstanding the warning, one of your clients Jamnadas Brahmadutt through you got the said Dharamdas Ghose to execute a mortgage of his properties in Calcutta in favour of the said Babu Jamnadas Brahmadutt for Rs. 20,000 of which he did not pay Rs. 8,700, the remainder being distributed between the unhappy victim and the confederates of your client. I am instructed to call upon your client through you to cancel the said mortgage at once as otherwise my instructions are to take legal proceedings without further reference.

Yours faithfully,
BHUPENDRA NATH BOSE.

To this letter Kedar Nath Mitter replied denying the receipt of the letter of 15th July, and this led to a further letter from Babu Bhupendra Nath Bose.

July 26th, 1895.

Babu KEDAR NATH MITTER.

Dear Sir,

Re Dharamdas Ghose.

Your letter of the 25th, I am surprised on hearing from you that you did not get any writing from me on the 15th. I find from my peon book that my letter of the 15th was delivered to you, and the receipt is signed by one of your clerks whose name, as far as I can make out, is Nishi Kanto Ganguly.

As regards the rest of your letter it requires no reply.

Yours faithfully,
BHUPENDRA NATH BOSE.

On the 27th July 1895 Kedar Nath Mitter sent a reply in which he simply states that there was no clerk of the name of Nishi Kanta Ganguly. On that Babu Bhupendra Nath Bose sent to Kedar Nath Mitter the peon book in which there is the name which certainly appears to be Radica Nath Gooly [620] or Gangooli; and I am further satisfied that there was a clerk of that name at the time in Kedar Nath Mitter's office and (notwithstanding Kedar Nath Mitter's denial) that it was his practice to sit downstairs. It will here be convenient to refer to a letter written on the 20th July 1895 by Nanda Lal Ghose to Kedar Nath Mitter in which he says:—

"As requested I have been to Babu Wooma Nath Ghose, the uterine brother of Hurry Das Ghose, and enquired of him whether he recollected the precise date of the birth of Dharamdas Ghose."

It further appears that there is an entry in Kedar Nath Mitter's day book, dated Tuesday, the 23rd July 1895.

"Attending yesterday at No. 2, Badur Bagan's Lane, accompanied by Babu Nanda Lal Ghose, Behary Lal Mitter and Nitto Gopal Ghose, having an interview with Babu Wooma Nath Ghose, the uterine brother of Hurry Das Ghose, the deceased father of Dharama Ghose and enquiring of him about the age of Dharamdas Ghose."

Now Nando Lall Ghose's evidence was that their visits were in consequence of a letter received by Kedar Nath Mitter from Bhupendra Nath Bose, though no doubt on learning the dates he receded from this position. In the same way Kedar Nath Mitter gives the following evidence in reference to his visit : "I wanted further enquiry because of the letter of Bhupendra Nath Bose. That made me curious to know what the other members said. I am sure of that." Then when the date is shewn him he says: "There must be a mistake in the date in the dav book." The importance of all this is that prior to these visits the only letter Babu Bhupendra Nath Bose had written was that of July 15th, the receipt of which Kedar Nath Mitter had denied, so that the position is this. It is sworn by the pressman that he delivered the letter : the peon book contains a signature which is the name of one of Kedar Nath Mitter's clerks, and he is a clerk whose practice it was to sit in Kedar Nath Mitter's room and was one of the attesting witnesses of the mortgage, Kedar Nath Mitter himself being the other. Radika Nath Ganguly, though still a clerk in Kedar Nath Mitter's employ, is for some reason, which has not been explained before me, not called to testify on this point; and both Kedar Nath Mitter and Nanda Gopal Ghose explain their [621] conduct by reference to a letter which on the dates can only have been that of the 15th of July.

Against this positive testimony and weight of probability I simply have the evidence of Kedar Nath Mitter, a witness, whose evidence I am forced with regret to describe as unsatisfactory.

I here pass to a consideration of Kedar Nath Mitter's conduct in this matter.

The plaintiff is brought to him by Nitto Gopal Ghose who certainly does not answer the description Kedar Nath Mitter attributed to him of a "well-to-do broker," but does seem to have had close relations with Kedar Nath Mitter and actually to have resided with him for four or five years. It is further clear that Kedar Nath Mitter dealt with the plaintiff, arranged for the loan, and secured a promise for payment to himself of Rs. 800 for his services at a time, when even, according to Kedar Nath Mitter's own case, he knew the plaintiff was an infant and that his mother was his guardian.

Then, when a question arose as to the plaintiff's age, does Kedar Nath Mitter make any inquiry of the plaintiff's mother or of her attorney Bhupendra Nath Bose or any member of the family with whom the plaintiff was brought up? That, apparently, is the last thing he would do, and instead he says that he consulted the witness Nando Gopal Ghose, an uncle, it is true, of the plaintiff, but a man who had been in hostile litigation with the plaintiff and his mother, who had employed Kedar Nath Mitter as his attorney in that litigation, and as to whom Kedar Nath Mitter is forced to admit he inferred that there must be bad feeling still existing between him and the plaintiff's mother.

The other person that he consults is apparently Kali Das Acharji, the astrologer. This man did not attend on his subpœna, and I therefore have had no oppurtunity of forming an opinion as to what passed between him and Kedar Nath Mitter. Then, I come to the statutory declaration which Kedar Nath Mitter got this young man to affirm, a declaration which contained more than one allegation that Kedar Nath Mitter must have known was beyond the plaintiff's knowledge. I do not intend to criticize [622] this declaration in detail, suffice it for me to say that it was in my opinion a most improper one for Kedar Nath Mitter to have prepared, if the object was to obtain a clear statement from the plaintiff as to his age.

It must further be borne in mind that Kedar Nath Mitter actually conducted this matter in the way I have indicated, though he was acting as the defendant's attorney. Let me say here that I absolve the defendant from all personal responsibility for this, for it all was clearly done without his knowledge; still at the same time, as he seeks to rely on a fraud alleged to have been practised on Kedar Nath Mitter, his claim must necessarily be tested by reference to Kedar Nath Mitter's conduct. It is unquestionably within the power of the Court administering equitable principles to deprive a fraudulent minor of the benefits flowing from the plea of infancy, but one who invokes the aid of that power must come to the Court with clean hands, and must further establish to the satisfaction of the Court that a fraud was practised on him by the minor, and that he was deceived into action by that fraud. I can only say that in this case it has not been established to my satisfaction that these requirements exist.

Kedar Nath Mitter's conduct has not been such as to predispose me in favour of the defendant's case, and a consideration of the circumstances to which I have referred does not lead me to the conclusion that Kedar Nath Mitter was deceived, and I accordingly hold that the circumstances of the case are not such as to nullify the plea of infancy.

It is right that I should here notice the argument that fraud and deceit are not necessary to the success of the defendant's plea.

This contention is based on section 115 of the Evidence Act as interpreted by Ganesh Lala v. Babu, (1895) I. L. R., 21 Bom., 198, in which it is no doubt said that, having regard to that section, proof of fraud on the part of the infant is not essential. The learned Judge in that case relies on the fact that in Sarat Chunder v. Gopal Chunder, (1892) I. L. R., 20 Cal., 296, [623] and in Mills v. Fox, (1887) 37 Ch. D., 153, no suggestion is made of the exception of an infant from the doctrine of estoppel. Now in the first of these cases the individuals sought to be affected were not infants, and at the bottom of page 306 the following passage appears in the judgment of the Privy Council: "The District Judge has held it to be proved that they had both reached majority at the date of the mortgage * * * * Accordingly it must be taken that they were of age to consent to the mortgage being granted or by their acts or representations to bar themselves from challenging it." It seems to me with all respect that this passage shows that the case is no authority for the proposition it is supposed to justify, but inferentially negatives it.

The case of Mills v. Fox, on the other hand, turned on special circumstances which do not allow of its being an authority for the broad principle laid down by the Bombay Court. Then it is further said by the learned Judge that Wright v. Snow, (1848) 2 De G. & S., 321, establishes this proposition. The headnote to that case appears to me to go beyond what was actually decided, for the learned Judge, V. C. KNIGHT BRUCE, finds that it was not proved that plaintiff was a minor at the time of the transaction, while his remarks in the course of the argument point to the view that fraud is necesssary though what amounts to fraud must depend on the circumstances.

That V. C. KNIGHT BRUCE did not regard fraud as unessential is, I think, made further apparent by the case of Nelson v. Stocker, (1859) 4 De G. & J., 458, in which being then Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE, he says: "It appears to me, however, upon the whole of the evidence that the defendant's deceased wife is not shewn to have been defrauded or deceived by the defendant in any respect before their marriage. I believe that at the time of the marriage and previously to it before the instrument of settlement in question was signed by either of them and before it was prepared, she was aware of his minority, and the case stands substantially on the same footing, so far as the parties to the present record are concerned, as [624] if the fact of his infancy had been stated on the face of the settlement." Nor does the matter rest there, for in the same case is to be found the clear statement of that most eminent Judge Lord Justice TURNER that fraud is an essential element. It is enough for me to refer to that portion of his judgment which is contained on pages 465 and 466 of the report.

It appears to me, therefore, that the cases do not justify the proposition that fraud on the part of an infant is not essential. I think fraud operating to deceive must be found as a fact, and whether in any particular case there is such fraud must depend on its own particular circumstances.

This brings me to the plea of ratification which is based on the allegations contained in the defendant's further written statement.

It is a matter of surprise and regret to me that an attorney of this Court should have seen fit to act as Kedar Nath Mitter did in connection with this matter.

The draft purports to have been approved by one Nanda Gopal Roy, an attorney of this Court, but how he came to act for the plaintiff does not appear, nor has he been called by the defendant to explain his connection with the matter. In fact the further charge never was carried through, and I cannot regard the draft as being itself a ratification. At most the matter does not seem to me to have been more than an engagement to ratify in case the further advance was made. I therefore hold that this plea too has failed. Next I have to notice the contention based on section 64 of the Contract Act which prescribes the consequences to arise from rescission of a voidable contract, it being common ground that I am bound by authority to regard the mortgage of an infant as voidable. The section provides that the party rescinding a voidable contract shall, if he have received any benefit thereunder from another party to such contract, restore such benefit so far as may be to the person from whom it was received. Now it is contended by Mr. Woodroffe that this provision entitles him to repayment of the money advanced even though it is not ear-marked and cannot now be followed.

[625] It is obvious that if this were the result of the section then the protection of infancy would practically be at an end. The money advanced has been spent, probably in useless or even vicious extravagance, and there is no benefit which the plaintiff is able or is bound to restore. Nor do I think that this is a case in which justice requires that the plaintiff should make compensation in accordance with the provisions of the Specific Relief Act, section 38. The result is that there must be a declaration that the mortgage of the 20th July 1895 is void and inoperative, and it must be delivered up to be cancelled.

Though I should have been glad to relieve the defendant of the costs of the action I do not see how I can with propriety do so; they must, therefore, be paid by him on scale No. 2.

Attorney for the Plaintiff: Babu Bhupendra Nath Bose.

Attorney for the Defendant: Babu Kedar Nath Mitter.

[The judgment of the High Court is contained in (1898) 26 Cal., 381 and that of the Privy Council in (1903) 30 Cal., 539, which hold that the Indian contract Act renders void contracts by minors and that the question of estoppel did not arise since the party dealing with the minor in this case was aware of his minority.]

CRIMINAL REVISION.

The 10th February, 1898.
PRESENT:
MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE AND MR. JUSTICE STEVENS.

Abhoy Charan Dass and another...... .....Petitioners
Municipal Ward Inspector...........Opposite Party.*

Calcutta Municipal Consolidation Act (II of 1888, B. C.), ss. 307, 335, 336, Schedule II, Rule 6—Liability for keeping animals without license—Penalty, to whom attached—Owner—Lessee.

The petitioners, as owners, let out a stable on hire, where ticca gharries and horses were kept by the lessee without taking out a license from the Municipal Commissioners. The petitioners were convicted under ss. 307 and 336 of the Calcutta Municipal Act (II of 1888 B.C.) for having permitted offensive matters, &c., and animals to be kept on the premises in contravention of the provisions of s. 335 of the Act:

Held, that the convictions were bad, the lessee alone being answerable in such a case for disregarding the provisions of the Act.

The penalty, under s. 336 of the Calcutta Municipal Act of 1888, attaches to the owner of any land for permitting any animals to be kept thereon, when he has direct possession of the land, and not when he has leased it out to another.

[626] THE facts are shortly these: The petitioner Abhoy Charan Dass and his son, being the proprietors of a tiled hut, let it out on hire to one Chunder Coomer Roy, under a registered agreement, for a period of six months for keeping horses and carriages. Chunder Coomer took possession of the premises and kept some horses and carriages therein without taking out a license from the Municipal Commissioners. The Municipal authorities thereupon prosecuted the petitioners under s. 307 of the Calcutta Municipal Act (II of 1888 B.C.), for having kept or suffered to be kept offensive matters otherwise than in a proper receptacle, &c., and also under s. 336 of the same Act for having permitted animals to be kept for profit, &c., in contravention of the provisions of s. 335 of the Act. The lower Court convicted the petitioners under both the aforesaid sections, and sentenced them to pay a fine. Against this conviction and sentence the petitioners moved the High Court and obtained this Rule.

Mr. A. P. Sen with Babu Joy Gopal Ghose for the Petitioners.

No one appeared to show cause.

The judgment of the High Court (Banerjee and Stevens, JJ.) was as follows:—

This is a rule calling upon the Magistrate of the District to show cause why the convictions and sentences in this case should not be set aside on the ground that as regards the offence under s. 307 of Act II (B.C.) of 1888, it has not been found that the accused were occupiers of the premises in question, and that as regards the offence under s. 336, it has not been found that the accused permitted any animals to be kept in the said premises in contravention of the provisions of s. 335 within the meaning of the law.

* Criminal Revision No. 858 of 1897, against the order of N. K. Banerjee Esq., Deputy Magistrate of Alipur, dated the 14th of October 1897.

No one appears to show cause, but a written explanation has been submitted by the Magistrate which goes to supplement the judgment. We do not think that effect can be given to the explanation as supplementing the judgment.

Turning now to the judgment, we find that there is nothing to show that the accused are the occupiers of the premises in [627] question, and so the conviction under s. 307 of Act II (B.C.) of 1888 must be set aside.

Then as regards the conviction under s. 336 of the above Act, this is how the finding is stated : "The Court believes the evidence of the Inspector and the peons that the accused Abhoy Moira and his son have let out a stable on hire where ticca gharries are kept."

If that is so, can it be said that the accused have permitted animals to be kept on the premises in contravention of the provisions of s. 335 as required by s. 336 to constitute the offence of which they have been convicted ?

Section 335 enacts that "no person shall keep any animal for profit within Calcutta except in a place licensed by the Commissioners." And on referring to Schedule 2, Rule 6, we find it laid down that "when the owner or lessee of any place is liable to take out a license, the license should be taken out by the lessee if there is any lessee; if not, by the owner." Now, the finding is that these premises are let out on hire: therefore, the provisions of s. 335 have been contravened by the lessee. Then can it be said that, notwithstanding that that was so, the accused who are the owners of the premises must, nevertheless, be held to have permitted the animals to be kept on the premises in contravention of s. 335, because the person bound to take out a license had failed to take out the same ? To hold that, would be to hold that the accused are liable for the acts of their lessee, over which they have no control.

If a person grants a lease of his land or house, he can have no direct possession of, or control over, the same; and if the lessee thereafter, without taking any license, keeps any animals on the premises for which he is required by law to take out a license, the penalty for doing so ought in reason and justice to attach to the lessee and the lessee alone The words of s. 336, though apparently general, must be read with this limitation, namely, that the penalty under the section attaches to the owner for permitting any animals to be kept thereon when he has direct possession of the land in question, but not when he has leased the same out to another.

[628] That being so, the conviction under s. 336 of Act II (B.C.) of 1888 must also be set aside, and the fines, if realized, refunded.

The order imposing a daily fine is also set aside.

MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE AND MR. JUSTICE HILL.

Subal Chunder Dey............(Defendant) Petitioner

Ram Kanai Sanyasi............(Complainant) Opposite Party.*

Recognizance to keep peace--Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 106—Security to keep the peace on conviction--Breach of the peace Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 448—House-trespass.

An order under s. 106 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) binding down the accused to keep the peace, upon conviction for "house trespass" under s. 448 of the Indian Penal Code, cannot stand where the intention of the accused for committing the trespass was to have illicit intercourse with the complainant's wife.

The Queen v. Gendoo Khan, (1867) 7 W. R., Cr., 11, and the Queen v. Jhapoo, (1873) 20 W., R. Cr., 37, distinguished.

It is necessary before an order under s. 106 of the Criminal Procedure Code can be made that the accused should have an opportunity of answering to an accusation for an offence of the kind, upon a conviction for which such an order can be made.

IT appears that the petitioner actually entered into the complainant's house with the object of having illicit intercourse with the wife of the complainant who seized him inside the house. Thereupon the petitioner threatened to beat the complainant. The lower Court, on these findings, convicted the petitioner for "house trespass" only and sentenced him to twelve days' rigorous imprisonment, and also ordered the petitioner, under s. 106 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to execute a bond to keep the peace towards the complainant for one year.

Against this conviction and sentence, and the order to keep the peace, the petitioner moved the High Court; but a rule to shew cause why the latter order only, viz., the order under [629] s. 106 of the Criminal Procedure Code should not be set aside was granted.

Mr. P. L. Roy for the Crown. An order under s. 106 of the Criminal Procedure Code may legally follow a conviction for "house trespass": see The Queen v. Gendoo Khan, (1867) 7 W.R, Cr., 14, and The Queen v. Jhapoo, (1873) 20 W.R., Cr., 37. And upon the finding of the lower Court the petitioner is likely to commit a breach of the peace, inasmuch as he threatened to beat the complainant: and, therefore, the order binding the petitioner down to keep the peace is in accordance with law.

Mr. C. R. Das for the Petitioner. -The cases cited by Mr. Roy are clearly distinguishable. In those cases the intention of the accused was to commit breach of the peace, and in carrying out that intention trespass was committed. Here the intention to commit adultery negatives any intention to commit breach of the peace; and the alleged breach of the peace was the result of the attempt by the accused to free himself from the clutches of the husband of the woman. That being so, the order under s. 106 of the Criminal Procedure Code is bad in law.

*Criminal Revision No. 768 of 1897, against the order of F. Karim, Esq., Deputy Magistrate of Munshigunge, dated the 2nd of November 1897.

The judgment of the High Court (Banerjee and Hill, JJ.) was as follows:—

This is a rule calling upon the Magistrate of the district to show cause why the order made in this case under s. 106 of the Code of Criminal Procedure should not be set aside upon the ground that there has been no conviction for any of the offences upon a conviction for which such an order could have been made.

The accused has been convicted of the offence of house trespass punishable under s. 448 of the Indian Penal Code, and the intention for committing the trespass, as found in the judgments of the Courts below, was to have illicit intercourse with the complainant's wife. That being so, can it be said that the accused was convicted of any of the offences contemplated by s. 106 of the Code of Criminal Procedure? We are of opinion that the question must be answered in the negative.

Mr. P. L. Roy, who appears for the Crown to show cause, [630] contends that a conviction for house trespass may sustain an order under s. 106 of the Code of Criminal Procedure; and in support of this contention he cites the cases of Queen v. Gendoo Khan, (1867) 7 W.R.Cr., 14, and Queen v. Jhapoo, (1873) 20 W.R.Cr., 37. Those two cases are, however, clearly distinguishable from the present. In both these cases this Court found that the intention of the accused for committing the trespass was to commit a breach of the peace; the trespass, as the facts of the cases showed, having been committed openly by a number of men. Those cases, therefore, well come within the provisions of the law, authorizing security being taken for keeping the peace. In the present case, as we have already observed, the intention of the accused, as found by the Courts below, was only to have illicit intercourse with the complainant's wife.

Mr. Roy next contended that the judgment went to show that it was proved that the defendant threatened to beat the complainant, but then there has been no conviction, for any offence of assault or criminal intimidation. In the absence of any such conviction, we do not think that any order under s. 106 of the Code of Criminal Procedure can stand. It is necessary, before an order under s. 106 of the Code of Criminal Procedure can be made, that the party should have an opportunity of answering to an accusation for an offence of the kind, upon a conviction for which such an order can be made. That requirement not having been complied with, the order under s. 106 of the Code of Criminal Procedure cannot stand and must be set aside.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE HILL AND MR. JUSTICE WILKINS.

Ram Chandra Mistry............Petitioner

versus

Nobin Mirdha and others...... .....Opposite party.*

Appeal in criminal case—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 404, 520, 522—Order as to restoration of immoveable property—Jurisdiction of Appellate Court to reverse such an order.

[631] There is no appeal from an order restoring possession of immoveable property under s. 522 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), nor can such an order be regarded as an integral part of the judgment appealed from, so as to stand or fall according as the judgment is upheld or reversed.

THE facts of the case appear sufficiently from the judgment of the High Court.

Mr. Jackson (with him Mr. P. L. Roy and Babu Baikant Nath Dass) for the Petitioner.—The order of the Deputy Magistrate of Ferozepore directing the opposite party to be restored to possession is ultra vires. The petitioner's complaint was enquired into by the Deputy Magistrate who believed it, and convicted the opposite party who appealed, and their appeal was dismissed. The High Court in revision remanded the case for a rehearing of the appeal, and this appeal was heard by another Sessions Judge who acquitted them. By the original order of conviction the Deputy Magistrate decided that the petitioner should be restored to possession under s. 522 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and he has retained possession of the property ever since. There is no provision of law by which he can now be ousted from possession: See Basudeb Surma Gossain v. Naziruddin, (1887) I.L.R., 14 Cal., 834; Queen-Empress v. Fattah Chand, (1897) I.L.R, 24 Cal., 499; In re Annapurna Bai, (1877) I.L.R, 1 Bom., 630. There is no appeal from an order under s. 522, so the Sessions Judge had no jurisdiction to set that order aside. See s. 404 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Sir Griffith Evans and Babu Dwarka Nath Chakravarti for the Opposite party.—Although there may be no procedure laid down as to how a person may be restored to possession, yet there can be no doubt that an Appellate Court has an inherent [632] power to deal with such matters; and if in the exercise of its judicial discretion it thinks fit to revise the order of the lower Court and to direct a person to be restored to possession, the executive authorites are bound to carry out that order. See Rodger v. Comptoir D'Escompte de Paris, (1871) L.R., 3 P.C., 465 (475).

In the present case the Sessions Judge had found that my clients were in possession, and the petitioner has been wrongfully put into possession; and it is idle to contend that effect cannot be given to the findings of the Sessions Judge by restoring them to the possession of the property which is lawfully their own. See Ambler v. Pushong, (1885) I.L.R., 11 Cal., 365.

* Criminal Revision No. 717 of 1897, made against the order of B. L. Gupta, Esq., Sessions Judge of Backergunge, dated the 23rd of September 1897.

The judgment of the High Court (Hill and Wilkins, JJ.), was as follows:—

The material facts of this case are as follows:—

In October 1896 Ram Chandra Mistry, the petitioner in this matter, charged four persons, Nobin Mirdha, Mohesh Mondal, Rajkishore Manbhi and Latim Shil (the opposite party), before the Deputy Magistrate of Ferozepore with offences under ss. 147, 148 and 326 of the Penal Code, alleging inter alia that they with some fifty or sixty armed men had forcibly deprived him of possession of certain land held by him as the tenant of one Lokenath. On the 21st December 1896, the Deputy Magistrate found two of the four accused persons guilty of the offence of rioting under s. 147, the other two of the offence of rioting being armed with a deadly weapon under s. 148, and Nobin Mirdha he further found guilty of an offence under s. 326; and he sentenced them accordingly to various terms of imprisonment. He at the same time made an order under s. 522 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for the restoration of the petitioner to possession of the disputed land. This order was carried into effect during the same month.

The opposite party then appealed to the Court of Session, which, in the first instance, upheld the decision of the Deputy [633] Magistrate. They afterwards, however, petitioned this Court with the result that the case was remitted to the Court of Session for retrial. Among other matters indicated for the guidance of the Court of Session the learned Judges pointed out that it was necessary under the circumstances of the case to come to a finding as to which of the two contending parties was in actual possession of the disputed land when the occurrence complained of took place. Upon the retrial the learned Sessions Judge came to the conclusion that the opposite party were at that time in actual possession, and, in respect of any violence they had used, he also held that, with the exception of Nobin Mirdha, they had acted within the right of defence of their property. He accordingly set aside the convictions and sentences under the rioting sections of the Code. In the case of Nobin Mirdha he held that the right of private defence had been exceeded, and therefore maintained his conviction under s. 326. He, however, reduced his sentence to one of six months' imprisonment, and as that period had then expired, ordered his release. The learned Judge further set aside the order passed by the Deputy Magistrate under s. 522 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. An application was then made to the Deputy Magistrate by Nobin Mirdha and his party to be restored to possession of the disputed land, but this was refused, the Deputy Magistrate being of opinion that it did not appear from the order of the Court of Session that Ram Chandra was to be turned out of possession for the purpose of replacing the other side in possession. Thereupon Nobin Mirdha applied to the Court of Session for relief in the matter, and that Court, on the 23rd of September 1897, passed the following order on the application:—

"I can give no further orders than what I have done. I have cancelled the Deputy Magistrate's order under s. 522, and all proceedings under that section are necessarily rendered null and void. I can give no orders to the police, but it is the duty of the Deputy Magistrate to give effect to the order of the Appellate Court, and also to maintain order and peace."

This was followed by another application by Nobin Mirdha and his party to the Deputy Magistrate for restoration of possession, and on the 27th September the Deputy Magistrate passed an order for the issue of a perwanna to the Police direct-[634]ing them "to give effect to the orders of the Sessions Judge at once."

It is to this order of the Deputy Magistrate, as being "vague and misleading," that the rule in this case is in terms confined, but at the hearing, the question which was, with our permission, chiefly discussed, was the legality of the order made by the Court of Session reversing the order passed by the Deputy Magistrate on the 21st December 1896, under s. 522 of the Code as well as of the order of the 23rd September 1897, by which the Court of Session in effect directed the Deputy Magistrate to carry out the order of reversal. It was contended on the part of the petitioner that both these orders were made without jurisdiction, and reliance was placed on the circumstance that no procedure is laid down by the Code effecting restitution of possession when a person has been ousted in pursuance of an order made under s. 522. On the part of the opposite party it was contended that when an Appellate Court comes to a conclusion different from that of a Subordinate Court upon the question of possession it must, upon principle, possess the power of undoing that which has been unlawfully done by the latter Court; that otherwise the action of the Courts might lead to grave injustice, and that as for the absence from the Code of any prescribed procedure for restoring to possession a person who has been wrongfully dispossessed it did not advance the argument for the other side, since the Code was likewise silent as to the procedure to be followed for giving effect to such an order when properly made. In the one case, as in the other, it was said it lies with the executive to carry out the orders of the Court. The learned Counsel for the petitioner in support of his contention cited the cases of Basudeb Surma Gossain v. Nazirruddin, (1887) I. L. R., 14 Cal., 834, and Queen-Empress v. Fattah Chand, (1897) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 499. In the former case the learned Judges, while setting aside an order made by a Magistrate under s. 517 of the Code, stated expressly that they were unable to order restitution of the property. In the latter also the Court set aside an order made under that section, but it was considered that the [635] question of the restitution of the property was not before the Court, and the learned Judges, therefore, expressed no opinion upon it. It can hardly therefore be claimed as an authority in support of the petitioner's contention. It was, however, argued on the authority of Basudeb Sarma's case, (1887) I. L. R., 14 Cal., 834, that if, notwithstanding the provisions of s. 520 of the Code, a superior Court has not authority to direct the restoration of property affected by an order made under s. 517 of the Code, the same must be the case with respect to property affected by an order under s. 522. We are not prepared, on the authority of this case, to commit ourselves to such a position. It may, indeed, be that the consideration which weighed with the learned Judges, who decided the case was, as the learned Counsel contended, that the Code does not provide any procedure for effecting restitution when possession has changed under an order made under s. 517, and if this was in fact their reason the case might perhaps be applied by way of analogy to the present case. But their reasons are not disclosed. They merely say that in this respect they follow the case of In re Annapurna Bai, (1877) I. L. R., 1 Bom., 630, in which likewise the reasons by which the learned Judges were guided are not stated. We think too, we may add, that it would be unsafe to conclude merely because the Legislature has not provided a remedy by way of restitution for a person, who has been improperly deprived of the possession of property of the kind to which s. 517 relates, that it, therefore, intended that a person improperly deprived of the possession of immoveable property in pursuance of an order made under s. 522 should be without a remedy of that nature.

On behalf of the opposite party Sir Griffith Evans referred us to a passage from the case of Rodger v. Comptoir D'Escompte de Paris, (1871) L. R., 3 P. C., 465 (475), in which the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council refer to the duty of all Courts to take care that the act of the Court does no injury to any of the suitors. His contention was that since it was shown by the finding of the Court of Session on the question of possession remitted to it by this Court that his clients had been injuriously affected by the action of the Magistrate, [636] by which the petitioner had been placed in possession, the power must be inherent in the Courts and ought to be exercised of redressing this wrong by restoring to them the possession of which they had been wrongfully deprived. We need not say that in a case which we considered to be a fit one in all respects for its application we should not hesitate to enforce the principle referred to. The question, however, now before us is not whether we should ourselves exercise the power, if we possess it, of ordering the persons previously in possession to be restored to possession, but is confined to the legality of the reversal by the Court of Session of the Magistrate's order under s. 522 and of the subsequent measure taken to give effect to its reversal And if under the law as it stands the Magistrate's order was not open to review in the Court of Session, we think our proper course is to apply the law as we find it. We might, it is true, if satisfied that the ends of justice would be best served thereby, refuse to exercise the revisional powers of the Court in favour of the petitioner, but on the whole we think that more harm than good might now result from the adoption of that course. In our view of the law, the Court of Session, dealing as it did in the present case as a Court of Appeal with the judgment of the Deputy Magistrate convicting the accused, exceeded its jurisdiction in setting aside the order made under s. 522. Our primary reason for this opinion is that an order passed under that section must be subject to the general rule laid down by s. 404 of the Code; that no appeal shall lie from any order of a Criminal Court except as provided for by the Code; while there is, so far as we are aware, no provision made by the Code for an appeal from an order under s. 522. Nor can such an order be regarded as an integral part of the judgment appealed from, so as to stand or fall, according as the judgment is upheld or reversed. If that were so, the Legislature would no doubt have so provided. But it seems to have been intended, and the reasons for this are not difficult to conceive, that an order giving possession under the section being once made should, in so far as the Criminal Courts are concerned, have finality. We are strengthened in this view by the consideration that in the case of orders made under section 517, which falls within the same chapter of the Code, very precise provisions are laid down [637] by s. 520 in respect of the powers which may be exercised by superior Courts.

We should add that Sir Griffith Evans relied also on Ambler v. Pushong, (1885) I.L.R., 11 Cal., 365, but in the view which we take of the case we do not think that it is in point.

We make the rule absolute and set aside the order of the learned Sessions Judge, reversing the order made by the Deputy Magistrate under s. 522, as well as his order of the 23rd September 1897, and also the order of the Deputy Magistrate passed on the 27th September.

Act XIII of 1859, ss. 1, 4—Breach of Contract—Jurisdiction of Presidency Magistrates—"Magistrate of Police"—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 3.

A Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta may lawfully take cognizance, under section 1 of Act XIII of 1859, of a complaint in respect of a contract made in Calcutta, the breach of which has been committed beyond the local jurisdiction of his Court.

The expression "Magistrate of Police" in section 1, Act XIII of 1859 means "Presidency Magistrate."

IT appears that the defendant entered into a contract with the petitioner at Calcutta to manufacture tin canisters at Sikohabad in the District of Mainpuri in the N.-W. Provinces, and received an advance of Rs. 61 from the petitioner. After working for a month at Sikohabad, the defendant ran away to Calcutta without finishing the specified work contracted for. Thereupon the petitioner lodged a complaint against the defendant in the Court of the Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta for non-performance of the contract. The Honorary Presidency Magistrate, to whom the case was made over for trial, dismissed the complaint [638] on the preliminary ground that he had no jurisdiction to entertain the complaint, inasmuch as the breach of the contract constituting the offence took place admittedly beyond the local limits of the jurisdiction of his Court.

Against this order of dismissal the petitioner moved the High Court.

Babu Atulya Charan Bose for the Petitioner.

No one appeared to show cause.

The judgment of the High Court (Hill and Stevens, JJ.) was as follows:—

In this case a complaint was made to an Honorary Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta under section 1 of Act XIII of 1859, in respect of a contract which was made in Calcutta, but the breach of which is said to have taken place in a portion of the N.-W. P., to which the Magistrate states the provisions of the Act had not been extended. The Magistrate considered that he had no jurisdiction to entertain the complaint, inasmuch as the breach of the contract had taken place beyond the local jurisdiction of his Court, at a place outside the limits of the Town of Calcutta. The complainant has applied for a revision of the order made by the Honorary Presidency Magistrate dismissing his complaint. Section 1 of Act XIII of 1859 provides that in the case of a breach of contract to which that Act applies a complaint may be made to a Magistrate of Police. We think that the terms of the section do not imply that the complaint is to be made to the Magistrate of Police in the place where the breach has taken place, and, moreover, section 3 of the Code of Criminal Procedure provides that in every enactment passed before that Act came into force, the expression "Magistrate of Police" shall be deemed to mean Presidency Magistrate. We, therefore, think that the Presidency Magistrate had jurisdiction to entertain this complaint.

We therefore set aside his order of the 7th of September 1897 dismissing the complaint, and direct that he do proceed to dispose of the complaint which he may lawfully take cognizance of in accordance with law.

B. D. B. Order set aside, and case remanded for trial.

Jurisdiction to try offence under s. 486 of the Penal Code (XLV of 1860)—Goods with counterfeit trade mark not intended to be sold within jurisdiction.

A Magistrate has jurisdiction to try an offence under s. 486 of the Penal Code if the accused be shown to be in possession of goods with a counterfeit trade mark for sale or any purpose of trade or manufacture, though the sale or the trade or the manufacture for the purpose of which the accused has the goods in his possession be not intended to take place within the jurisdiction of the Court in which the complaint is lodged.

THE facts of the case, sufficient for the purpose of this report, appear from the judgment.

Mr. Jackson on behalf of the Petitioner.—In order to give the Court jurisdiction the offence must be committed within its jurisdiction. In the trial of an offence under s. 486 of the Penal Code not only must it be shown that the accused has in his possession for sale or any purpose of trade or manufacture goods with a counterfeit trade mark, but also that the sale, &c., is intended to take place within the jurisdiction of the Court in which the trial is to be held.

* Criminal Revision No. 120 of 1898, made against the order of F. W. Duke, Esq., District Magistrate of Howrah, dated the 2nd of February 1898.

No one appeared on behalf of the Opposite party.

The judgment of the High Court (Banerjee and Wilkins, JJ.) is as follows :-

This is an application under s. 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, asking us to set aside an order of the District Magistrate of Howrah directing the Deputy Magistrate to proceed with the trial of a case in which the accused has been charged with an offence punishable under s. 486 of the Indian Penal Code, and which the Deputy Magistrate had dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

The ground upon which the Deputy Magistrate held that he had no jurisdiction to try the case is given in his judgment in the following words: After referring to s. 486 of the [640] Penal Code, the learned Deputy Magistrate says: "Now, as I understand and interpret this section, I think this Court has no jurisdiction to try this case. The section says: 'Whoever sells or exposes or has in possession for sale or any purpose of trade or manufacture any goods, &c.' Now, looking to the evidence adduced, admittedly the tins of ghee were on transit from Etawah to Rangoon, and they were not intended for sale or any purpose of trade in Howrah or any place within its jurisdiction. Sale is one of the principal ingredients, as I think, to constitute an offence under this section. If those tins of ghee are intended for one's own consumption or as presents to others, then, I think, the accused can hardly be amenable. Taking this view of the law, I determine that this Court has no jurisdiction to try this case which is accordingly dismissed and the accused discharged under s. 253 of the Criminal Procedure Code."

Thereupon an application was made to the District Magistrate, who has directed a further inquiry under s. 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, but his order must be taken to have been made under s. 43, though he refers to s. 435. And the view taken by the District Magistrate is that the Howrah Court has jurisdiction, because within the jurisdiction of the Howrah Court, the accused had the goods in his possession for the purposes of sale, though the sale was intended to take place, not in Howrah, but in Rangoon.

The contention urged by the learned Counsel for the petitioner before us is, that in order to give the Court jurisdiction to entertain the case, the offence must be committed within its jurisdiction, and when the offence is constituted by the accused having in possession for sale any particular goods, not only must his having the goods in his possession occur within the jurisdiction of the Court in which the case is brought, but the possession must be for sale, which also must be intended to take place within the jurisdiction of the Court.

We are not prepared to accept this contention as correct. It is quite true that before the possession of goods with a counterfeit trade mark can be held to constitute an offence under s. 486, it must be shown that such possession was for sale or any [641] purpose of trade or manufacture. But there is nothing in the law to show that the sale, for the purpose of which the accused has the goods in his possession, must be intended to take place within the jurisdiction of the Court in which the complaint is lodged. It may be that the goods are found in possession of the accused within a particular jurisdiction, and the accused has them in his possession for sale in a different jurisdiction; and in such a case it cannot be said that, before the goods reach the place where they are intended to be sold, the possession of the goods by the accused does not constitute any offence.

It was urged that, if this view was correct, it would give any number of Courts exercising jurisdiction at any distances from the place where the goods are ultimately intended to be sold, jurisdiction to try the case.

Though that may be so, we do not see how that supports the view contended for by the learned Counsel. We may observe that the provisions of s. 182 of the Code of Criminal Procedure go to show that the policy of our law is to authorize more Courts than one to try an offence of this kind.

If the view taken by the learned Deputy Magistrate was correct, that would go, not so much to show that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try the case, as to show that no offence was committed until the goods in question reached the jurisdiction within which they were intended to be sold. That view cannot, in our opinion, be correct.

We are asked to determine, and we must for the present determine the case upon the view of the facts as disclosed in the orders of the Courts below; and upon that view we must hold that the Howrah Court has jurisdiction to try the case.

In making these observations we wish it to be understood that we do not determine any question of fact in the case. For the foregoing reasons we refuse this application.

S. C. B. Application refused.

Practice—Receiver—Power to sue in his own name—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), s. 503—Trust-deed to liquidate debts—Non-communication of trust-deed to creditors—Limitation—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 10.

The Court has authority, under section 503 of the Civil Procedure Code, to confer on a receiver the power to sue in his own name; and if the order appointing the receiver gives him liberty, he may do so.

D S executed a trust-deed, whereby he made over his property to trustees to manage his affairs and liquidate his debts in manner therein directed. The deed contained this provision : "In order to prepare a list of my debts, the trustees shall ascertain the same by looking into my books of accounts; and they shall not admit any debt without rokur, hath-chitta, or hundi bearing the signature of myself or my monib gomastas, or without decree."

Held, in the absence of evidence that this deed was communicated to the creditors, that it did not create a trust in favour of the creditors, but enured only for the benefit of the executant; that therefore the plaintiff, a creditor, was not entitled to rank as a beneficiary under it; and that it did not create a trust in his favour so as to take out of the operation of the Limitation Act a claim that otherwise fell within it.

THE following statement of the facts of this case is taken from the judgment of O'KINEALY, J.:—

This was a suit to recover the amount of three hundis, all dated the 30th of May 1893, drawn by Rai Dhunput Singh upon himself in the name of his firm at Calcutta, and payable to one Sew Bux Sureeka.

One of these hundis is for the sum of Rs. 1,200 payable 180 days after date, and the other two are for the sum of Rs. 2,500 and Rs. 383-11, respectively, each payable 360 days after date.

Sew Bux Sureeka died some time in the year 1896, and a suit for the administration of his estate was instituted in this Court. By an order made in that suit on the 28th of January 1897, the plaintiff was appointed receiver of the moveable property, and of the [643] rents issues and profits of the immoveable property belonging to the estate of Sew Bux Sureeka, with power to get in and collect the outstanding debts and claims due to the estate, and with all the powers provided for in section 503, clause (d) of the Code of Civil Procedure with certain exceptions which are not material for the questions which arise in this suit; and the order further provided that the receiver should have power to bring and defend suits in his own name. By a further order, dated the 6th of May 1897, the plaintiff was given liberty to institute a suit in this Court in respect of the three hundis above mentioned, and in pursuance of this order the present suit was brought.

In the month of February 1893, before the hundis were drawn, Rai Dhunput Singh was adjudicated an insolvent at the instance of one of his creditors under the provisions of the Act for the relief of insolvent debtors at Calcutta; but this adjudication was afterwards set aside on the ground that Rai Dhunput Singh had not committed any act of insolvency. On the 19th of July 1896, he executed a deed of trust by which he conveyed all his property to the defendants Gopi Chund Bathra, Surji Kumar Adhicary and Kirut Chund Srimal, as trustees, upon certain terms and conditions contained in the deed. On the 21st day of September 1896, Rai Dhunput Singh died, leaving him surviving the defendant Moharaj Bahadur Singh his sole heir under the Hindu law.

In the plaint as originally drafted the plaintiff set forth the above circumstances and prayed for judgment for the amount due upon the hundis and the costs of the suit. When the case was opened before me the plaintiffs' counsel, being pressed with the question of limitation as regards the amount of the hundi for Rs. 1,200, contended that that question did not arise as the defendants, the trustees, were constituted express trustees for him and the other creditors of Rai Dhunput Singh under the provisions of the deed of trust, and were bound to pay him the amounts due upon all the hundis. It was objected by the counsel for the defendants that this claim was not put forward in the written statement, and that he was taken by surprise owing to its being brought forward at the time it was. I thought the objection a reasonable one, and allowed the suit to be adjourned for the purpose [644] of having the plaint formally amended so as to raise the contention.

That has been done, and now in answer to the plaintiff's suit the defendants say:—

(1) That the plaintiff cannot sue in his own name; (2) that under the trust-deed, the trustees are not trustees for the plaintiff or the other creditors of Rai

Dhunput Singh; and (3) that the claim on the hundi for Rs. 1,200 is barred by article 69 of the second schedule to the Limitation Act, 1877. It was also contended that no relief could be granted to the plaintiff under the deed of trust in this suit as framed; but I do not think it is necessary to consider a defence which, if successful, would involve a further amendment of the plaint, or the dismissal of the suit on what may be called a technical ground, as I am of opinion that the second ground of defence taken by the defendants is a sound one.

Mr. R. N. Mitter and Mr. J. N. Banerjee for the Plaintiff.—The claim on the hundi for Rs. 1,200 is not barred; the trust-deed saves limitation. Before these claims were brought, Dhunput Singh made over his property to the trustees. The plaintiff is entitled to look to the trustees for payment just as he would to Dhunput Singh, but for the trust-deed. He was not a party to the deed; but he was informed of it, and he forbore to sue in consequence, but that forbearance does not entitle the defendant to plead limitation.

Next, as to the frame of the suit: as a general rule, no doubt, a receiver may not sue in his own name only--Wilkinson v. Gangadhar Sirkar, (1871) 6 B. L. R., 486; but in the present case, the order appointing the receiver expressly gave him power to sue in his own name or in the names of the parties to the suit, and the defendant must be bound by that order.

Mr. J. G. Woodroffe for the Defendant.—The question is, what is the meaning of the order? It means that the receiver may bring the suit, but must do so in the names of the parties. The order giving leave to sue may be binding, and yet objections [645] may be taken to the form of the suit when brought. [O'KINEALY, J. —Appeals constantly come up to the High Court from the Mofussil Courts where a receiver has sued in his own name.] No doubt. There may be cases where the receiver could be the only proper person to sue. But in England the rule is that a receiver cannot sue in his own name.—In re Sacker, (1889) 23 Q. B. D., 179. [O'KINEALY, J.— It is such a convenience to suitors for the receiver to sue in his own name. Some of the parties may be dead; and if the receiver is to use the names of the parties, he would have to get the suit revived. But if he sues in his own name, no such difficulties arise.] No doubt: but the authorities are against it. In one case PHEAR, J., held that the meaning of an order empowering the receiver to sue was that he may bring the suit, but must use the names of the parties. I submit he must do so, because a receiver has no proprietary or other interest in the property.

But there is another difficulty in the way of this creditor; and that is, that according to the rule in the case of Garrard v. Lord Lauderdale, (1830) 3 Sim., 1, this deed does not create a trust that he could enforce. The deed is merely a direction charging the estate with payment of debts; it was executed solely for Dhunput Singh's own benefit; and there is not a word in it to indicate that it was for the benefit of anybody else.

Section 10 of the Limitation Act applies only to a suit to follow property. This is really a suit for the administration of a trust; it cannot be a suit to follow trust property in the hands of the receiver, because the plaintiff has no interest to recover. [Mr. Mitter—We also rely on Suddasook Kootary v. Ram Chunder, (1890) I. L. R., 17 Cal., 620]. In this case there has been no charge of any specific property for the discharge of any specific debt. The question is, what is a debt? Did Dhunput Singh direct the trustees to pay all debts, whether barred by limitation or not? Can he be said to have created by this deed a greater liability than existed before its execution? There is nothing to indicate any such intention.

Mr. J. N. Bannerjee in reply.

The first question I have to consider is whether the plaintiff can maintain this suit in his own name; and I am of opinion that he can. The orders by which he was granted liberty to institute this suit gave that power to him in express terms, and the authority to give that power is, in my opinion, conferred on the Court by the provisions of section 503 of the Code of Civil Procedure. By that section the Court has power to grant to the receiver "all such powers as to bringing and defending suits and for the realisation, management, protection, preservation and improvement of the property, the collection of the rents and profits thereof, the application and disposal of such rents and profits, and the execution of instruments in writing as the owner himself has;" and I read that as meaning that power is conferred upon the Court to substitute the receiver for the owner for those purposes, always supposing that the ownership of the property is completely represented in the suit in which the receiver is appointed. I am not disposed to put a narrow construction on this part of section 503, as it is often a great saving of time and trouble, so far as the receiver is concerned, and of expense to the estate in his hands, that he should have the power of bringing and maintaining suits in his own name. That the Court can give such a power is treated as clear by Mr. Justice WILSON in the case of The Oriental Bank v. Gobind Lall Seal, (1884) I.L.R., 10 Cal., 710, at p. 733.

The next question is, taking the plaintiff to be a creditor of Rai Dhunput Singh in respect of a debt existing at the time the deed of trust was executed, can he claim that he and the other creditors are beneficiaries under that deed, and can he call upon the Court to have the trusts contained in it administered for their benefit? I am of opinion that he cannot. This is a question depending upon the construction of the deed and the conduct of Rai Dhunput Singh and his creditors upon and after its execution.

In that document Dhunput Singh gives his reasons for exe-[647]cuting it. He says: "I was adjudicated an insolvent by an order of the Hon'ble High Court, Original Side, at Calcutta in its Insolvent Jurisdiction, dated the 16th day of February, year 1893, in consequence of which I became heavily involved in debts. I have managed to pay off many of the debts by sale and mortgage of properties; but there is still left a large amount of debts, and in order to pay off those debts to the best of my ability it is necessary for me to make some arrangement. Being myself troubled in body and mind, I am unable to manage (my) affairs properly any longer, and most of my creditors are desirous that I should make over the estate into the hands of trustees with a view to liquidation of my debts. For these reasons I make over all my moveable and immoveable properties, that is to say, whatever properties I am at present possessed of, to Srijoot Gopi Chund Bathra, son of the late Fakir Chund Bathra of Azimgunj, by caste Aswal, by occupation service holder, and Srijoot Kerut Chund Srimal, son of the late Mungni Ram Srimal and Srijoot Surji Kumar Adhicary, son of the late Bhogoban Chunder Adhicary, at present of Baloochur, by caste Brahmin, by occupation service holder, by appointing them trustees." That is to say, ill-health and mental anxiety having unfitted him for carrying out the work of paying off all his debts—a work which he himself had carried on up to that time--and his creditors being desirous that that should be carried on by the trustees, he appoints the trustees to carry on that work to completion. In other words, they are put in the place of Dhunput Singh himself so far as he could do so, and occupy the same position towards the creditors, and that position was certainly not that of a trustee. The deed then directs the manner in which the trustees are to proceed for the purpose of liquidating his debts and recovering his outstandings, and declares that neither himself nor his heirs shall have power to interfere with the acts of the trustees, until all his debts shall have been paid. This last clause was strongly relied on by the plaintiff as showing an intention to create a trust for the creditors. It is equally consistent with the case for the defendant. It is, I think, nothing more than a clause confirming the trustees in the powers given to them by the deed. Then there is this provision : "In order to prepare a list of my debts, the trustees shall ascertain the same [648] by looking into my books of accounts ; and they shall not admit any debt without roka, hatchitta or hundi, bearing the signature of myself or my monib gomastas, or without decree." This shows that the creditors were to be ascertained on a future investigation to be made by the trustees in accordance with certain tests laid down by which they were to be guided. It seems to me that this provision is against the plaintiff's contention, for it shows that every person who claimed to be a creditor of Rai Dhunput Singh at the date of the deed was not intended to be provided for by it, but only those whose debts should have been ascertained in the manner of investigation pointed out in the deed. There is no evidence before me that any such investigation has ever been undertaken. I think that the true way to look at this provision is, to take it as indicating the course of proceeding which the trustees were to take, not for the purpose of finding out their beneficiaries but for the purpose of liquidating the debts on behalf of Rai Dhunput Singh their real and only beneficiary. The remaining provisions of the deed point in the same direction. I do not see any indication that these trustees were intended by Rai Dhunput Singh to be trustees for his creditors ; in my opinion they were and were intended to be (so far as I can gather his intention from the construction of the deed) trustees for himself for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the deed of trust, and that he was, and his heir is, the only person who under the terms of that deed could call the trustees to account as trustees. There is no evidence before me to show that the deed of trust was communicated to the creditors, or that any of them accepted the position of beneficiaries under it. The evidence given by Heera Lall, the gomasta of Sew Bux Sureeka, is too shadowy to be relied upon as establishing the existence of any trust for the creditors or for Sew Bux Sureeka. This case is one of a class the best known example of which is Garrard v. Lord Lauderdale, (1830) 3 Sim., 1.

According to the view I have taken of this case the plaintiff cannot claim to rank as a beneficiary under the deed of the 19th of July 1896, and he is, therefore, not entitled to say that his [649] claim on the hundi for Rs. 1,200 is not subject to the ordinary law of limitation.

The result is that the plaintiff's suit fails as regards the hundi for Rs. 1,200 but he is entitled to a decree for the amount of the other two hundis, with interest at 6 per cent. per annum down to the filing of the plaint, together with the costs of the suit and interest on decree. The decree will be against the defendant Moharaj Bahadur Singh as the legal representative of Rai Dhunput Singh for the amount indicated above to be paid out of the property of Rai Dhunput Singh. I shall make no order as to the costs of the trustees. They did not sever in their defence from the infant, and there is no doubt that the estate of Dhunput Singh has benefited by the amount of the hundi for Rs. 1,200 being barred by limitation.

It must be understood that, although I give no relief to the plaintiff as against the trustees, I do so on the ground that the deed did not constitute them trustees for him, but trustees for Rai Dhunput Singh of the property included in the trust-deed. I decide nothing further as between the plaintiff and the trustees, and all questions which may arise between them regarding the execution of the decree in the suit remain untouched by me.

Practice—Consent Decree, Setting aside—Motion.

A consent decree cannot be set aside on motion on the ground that it was obtained by fraud and misrepresentation A separate suit must be brought for that purpose. Charges of fraud cannot properly be tried upon affidavits.

Gilbert v. Endean, (1878) L. R., 9 Ch D., 259, Huddersfield Banking Company, Limited v. Henry Lister & Son, Limited, (1895) II Ch., 273; and Ainsworth v. Wilding, (1896) I. Ch., 673, applied.

[660] THE facts of this case were stated by O'KINEALY, J., as follows:—

This is a suit which arose out of the will of one Kedar Nath Ghose, who died in Calcutta, on the 15th of June 1893. By his will, which was made on the 14th of May 1893, he appointed his wife, the plaintiff, Foolmoni Dassee, and his cousin, the defendant, Woodoy Chunder Biswas, executrix and executor; dedicated all his properties to the worship of a Thakoor established by himself; directed that a sum of Rs. 6,500 which he had borrowed on mortgage of his dwelling house should be paid off; appointed the plaintiff and the defendant to be shebaits of the Thakoor; directed that his wife should have suitable residence, and an allowance of Rs. 15 a month; granted allowances to the defendant as shebait, and to others mentioned in the will; directed that his executrix and executor should consult his friends Baboo Bhupendra Nath Bose and Baboo Okhoy Koomar Bose in case of a difference of opinion between them; and gave power to these gentlemen to control the shebaits in the management of the debutter estate.

On the 11th of January 1894 the plaintiff and the defendant obtained probate of the will, but shortly afterwards disputes arose between them, and this dispute led to the institution of this suit on the 22nd of August 1895. In her plaint, the plaintiff brought various charges of misconduct against the defendant, and prayed for the construction of the will, administration of the estate, an injunction and a receiver, and other relief which it is unnecessary to specify. On the 6th of September 1895, Mr. Belchambers was appointed receiver of the estate of the testator Kedar Nath Ghose. Nothing further seems to have been done in the suit till the 8th of September 1896, when a petition signed and verified by the plaintiff was presented to this Court on her behalf praying that a decree might be made in this suit on the terms stated in the petition, and that the receiver might be discharged and directed to hand over possession of the estate to one Poshupati Nath Bose. The prayer of the petition was consented to by the defendant's attorney, and Poshupati Nath Bose also signed a statement made at the foot of the petition consenting to act as the trustee of the estate of Kedar Nath Ghose. No order was entered on the [651] petition itself, but on the same day a decree was made with the consent of the attorneys for the plaintiff, and of the defendant, and of Poshupati Nath Bose in person, on the terms contained in a schedule annexed to the decree, those being the terms set out in the plaintiff's petition.

It is unnecessary to refer to those terms at any length. They follow to a certain extent the scheme of the testator's will. The distinguishing feature of the arrangement is that the receiver is to be discharged and the entire management of the testator's estate placed in the hands of Poshupati Nath Bose, who is to provide for payment of the debts and legacies, and the cost of this suit. The plaintiff's and the defendant's respective turns of worship as shebaits are also arranged for, and they are made responsible to the trustee for negligence in performing their duties as shebaits.

On the 1st of March last the plaintiff presented a petition to this Court, in which she prayed that the decree of the 8th September should be set aside, and the estate of the testator retained in the hands of the receiver appointed by the Court, and that her attorney in the suit, Babu Preo Nath Sen, should be prohibited from further acting for her. In this petition she alleges that she did not come to know of the decree of the 8th of September 1896 until recently, that her signature to the petition of the 8th of September was obtained by fraud and misrepresentation on the part of Poshupati Nath Bose and the defendant Woodoy Chunder Biswas, and she charges that her own attorney conspired with those persons for the purpose of defrauding her.

The plaintiff appeared in person.

Mr. R. N. Mittra appeared on behalf of the Defendant.

Mr. Jackson and Mr. Allen for Poshupati Nath Bose, and Mr. Pugh on behalf of Preo Nath Sen.

Mr. Mittra.—This consent decree is said to have been obtained by fraud and misrepresentation; it was made on the 8th September 1896, and yet, during the whole of 1897, no steps were taken to impugn it. There is no definite statement as to when the plaintiff discovered the alleged fraud. But even if the decree was obtained by fraud and misrepresentation, it cannot be [652] set aside on a motion; a separate suit must be brought—Huddersfield Banking Company, Limited v. Henry Lister & Son, Limited, (1895) II. Ch. 273, 276; Ainsworth v. Wilding, (1896) I. Ch., 673.

C. A. V.

O'Kinealy, J., (after stating the facts as above set forth).—The matter came before me once or twice with reference to an application by the plaintiff to be allowed to appear through an attorney other than Babu Preo Nath Sen, her attorney in this suit. That application I granted; and at my suggestion that the nature of the application was such, (involving as it did the professional conduct of an officer of the Court), that it should be disposed of without delay, the parties agreed that the matter should come on before me on Saturday, the 16th April. On that day there was not sufficient time to deal with it completely; and I directed it to be placed on the ordinary cause list without prejudice to the right of the defendant Woodoy Chunder Biswas to raise the contention that the application was not one that I could entertain.

Babu Preo Nath Sen, Poshupati Nath Bose, and the defendant Woodoy Chunder Biswas all filed affidavits in answer to the charges brought against them in the plaintiff's petition, and when the matter came on for hearing Mr. Mitra, who appeared for the defendant Woodoy Chunder Biswas, contended that I could not go into charges of this nature or set aside the decree, in a proceeding of this kind, and that the plaintiff's only remedy is to file a regular suit to have the decree set aside on the ground of fraud. I am of opinion that that contention is correct.

I do not think it is a proper mode of procedure to try charges of fraud and misrepresentation on affidavits in an application of this kind. I think the only satisfactory method of dealing with them is in a regular suit brought for the purpose, and that is the course which, it is laid down, should be followed in such cases in the High Court of Judicature in England under the Judicature Acts. In Gilbert v. Endean, (1878) L. R., 9 Ch. D. 259, [653] it was the opinion of the Master of the Rolls, Sir George JESSEL, that a dispute as to whether a compromise ought to be set aside on the ground of misrepresentation or concealment of material facts ought to be decided in a new action. In a debenture-holder's action against Henry Lister & Son, Limited, a consent order was sought to be set aside on motion by one of the parties to the order on the ground of mistake as to material facts; but Mr. Justice VAUGHAN WILLIAMS refused to deal with the matter on motion, and an action had to be brought to have the order set aside. Huddersfield Banking Company v. Henry Lister & Son, (1895) II Ch, 273, 276. In Ainsworth v. Wilding, (1896) I Ch., 673, which was a suit by a second mortgagee against a first mortgagee and other defendants, a decree for an account was made by consent: and the first mortgagee afterwards moved to set aside that decree on the ground that the consent of the parties thereto was given by mistake. Mr. Justice ROMER refused the application with costs, on the ground that the proper remedy of the applicant was to bring a fresh action. These cases are stronger than the one I am dealing with, which is based on charges of fraud and misrepresentation of the gravest character I therefore refuse the application with costs.

Mr. Pugh, who appeared for Babu Preo Nath Sen, asked me to decide upon the affidavits before me, whether there was any ground for the charges which the plaintiff has brought against his client. I think I had better express no opinion on that question, for if I should come to the conclusion that the charges made against Babu Preo Nath Sen are frivolous, and express that opinion, that might hamper the plaintiff in taking further proceedings should she be advised to do so.

Attorney for the Defendant: Babu O. C. Gangooly.

Attorney for Poshupati Nath Bose: Babu S. C. Mitter.

The 16th March, 1898.

PRESENT :

SIR FRANCIS WILLIAM MACLEAN, KNIGHT, CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON AND MR. JUSTICE TREVELYAN.

The British India Steam Navigation Co., Ld.*

Bill of Lading—Shipping Company, Liability of

A Shipping Company is prima facie bound to deliver goods in good order and condition, but this obligation is subject expressly to the conditions inserted in the Bill of Lading. Where a cask of brandy was shipped at Madras in good order and condition, but on arrival at Calcutta was found to be empty.

Held, that the Company were protected by the special words inserted in the Bill of Lading "Hogshead brandy covered with gunny, not responsible for condition and contents."

THE facts of this case appear sufficiently from the case stated for the opinion of the High Court by E. W. Ormond, Officiating Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court, dated 3rd June 1897:—

"The plaintiffs sue for damages for the non-delivery of a hogshead of brandy shipped by them on one of the defendants' steamers from Madras to Calcutta under the Bill of Lading, which is hereto annexed.

The cask of brandy was put on board at Madras in good order and condition, but on arrival at Calcutta the cask was found to be empty with one stave broken across.

The question which I have the honour to submit for your Lordships' opinion is whether, upon a proper construction of the manuscript clause at the foot of the Bill of Lading, "hogshead brandy covered with gunny, not responsible for condition and contents," the defendants are exempted from all liability in respect of this cask of brandy or not.

The defendants are admittedly not governed by the Indian Carriers' Act, and can, therefore, contract themselves out of anything. I hold that they were protected under the manuscript [655] clause, but not otherwise. Mr. Graham, for the plaintiffs, argued that this clause, in effect, meant no more than the ordinary clause "condition and contents unknown," or that the defendants did not hold themselves responsible for the then actual condition and contents of the cask, but I think some weight should be attached to the word "responsible," and to construe the clause as exempting the defendants from responsibility for the then actual condition and contents of the cask only would be giving no legal effect to the clause, for the defendants' responsibility could only begin from that time, i.e., when the cask was taken on board, whereas the whole tenor of the Bill of Lading is to specify the defendants' responsibility as at the time of delivery to the consignee. Moreover, in the previous portion of this clause (the " casks in bad condition " were some casks of beer shipped with this hogshead of brandy) the words " not responsible for leakage " would naturally refer to leakage which might occur whilst the casks were in defendants' charge and were probably meant to emphasise the condition in small print " The company is not to be responsible for............ leakage," which, from the context, is clearly not limited to leakage which might have occurred before the casks were put on board. For these reasons I held that the words " not responsible for condition and contents " absolved the defendants from all liability for the condition and contents of this cask of brandy so long as it remained in their charge. I dismissed the suit accordingly, but at the request of plaintiffs' counsel I made my judgment contingent upon the opinion of the High Court as to the construction to be placed upon the above manuscript clause.

If your Lordships are of opinion that the meaning of the said clause was to exempt the defendants from liability for the condition and contents of this cask of brandy, whilst it remained in their charge, the suit will stand dismissed ; otherwise there will be a decree for Rs. 500.

The Bill of Lading was as follows :—

BRITISH INDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY, LIMITED.

SHIPPED, in good order and well conditioned, by Messrs. Cutler Palmer & Co., in the Steam Ship Kerbela, Commander, or [656] whoever else may be placed in command for this present voyage, and now lying in Madras, and bound for Calcutta and intermediate ports—being marked and numbered as in the margin, and are to be carried and delivered subject to the conditions aftermentioned including those at the foot of this Bill of Lading in the like good order and well conditioned, at the port of Calcutta.

The act of God, the Queen's enemies, restraint of princes or rulers, pirates or robbers by sea or land, accidents, loss and damage from vermin, barratry, jettison, collision, fire, accidents to, or defects latent or otherwise in hull, tackle, boilers, or machinery or their appurtenances, steam, and all the perils, dangers, and accidents, of the sea, rivers, land, carriage, and steam navigation of whatsoever nature and kind ; and accidents, loss or damage from any act, neglect or default whatsoever of the pilot, master or mariners or other servants of the Company, or from any deviation, excepted ; with liberty to sail with or without pilots, and tow and assist vessels in all situations and circumstances ; and the Company are to be at liberty to carry the said goods to their ports of destination by the above or other steamer or steamers, ship or ships either belonging to the Company or to other persons, proceeding either directly or indirectly to such port : and in so doing to carry the goods beyond their port of destination, and to tranship or land and store the goods either on shore or afloat, and re-ship and forward the same at the Company's expense, but at merchant's risk ; and with liberty also, at the like risk, to deviate for any purpose from above voyage, and to call and stay at any ports or places whether in or out of the usual course of the voyage, and in any order, and for any purpose or at any time whatsoever unto Cutler, Palmer & Co., or to his or their assigns. Freight for the said goods at the rate of has been paid in Madras by the shippers as per margin, steam ship lost or not lost.

[657] IN WITNESS whereof the Commander or Agents of the said Steam Ship have affirmed to one Bill of Lading.

Dated at Madras on 18th August 1896.

N.B.—The goods are shipped and this Bill of Lading granted subject to the following express conditions:—Any claim for short delivery of or damage done to goods, and all other claims whatsoever, to be made at port of discharge, or at ports of Calcutta or Bombay, and at no other port; payment of claims to be made at port of shipment or discharge at Company's option.

No claim for damage will be admitted unless notified in writing before the goods are removed.

No claim for short delivery will be entertained unless made within one month after the delivery of any portion of the goods entered in this Bill of Lading.

This Bill of Lading is issued subject to the following conditions:—

Weight, contents, and value when shipped unknown. The Company is not to be responsible for damage, evaporation, of effects of climate or heat of holds, leakage or breakage, or other consequences arising from the insufficiency of the address or package: or for the condition or contents of re-exported package.

The Company reserves the right of charging freight by weight, measurement, or value, and of re-measuring or re-weighing the same, and charging freight accordingly before delivery. Freight on dates, fruit, and perishable produce to be paid on the weight shipped; and no allowance will be made for wastage on the voyage.

The Company does not guarantee that the Steamers shall have room at ports of transhipment, or that there shall be no delay there.

Packages weighing more than 3 cwt. (excepting bales and boxes of manufactured goods) are only carried at advanced rates of freight and by special agreement.

The Company shall have a lien for freight unpaid on these goods, or upon any portion of the goods covered by the Shipping order granted in respect thereof, which may not have been [658] shipped, and for any charges herein stipulated to be borne or customarily borne by owners of goods.

Should all or any part of the within goods not be found, or if from bad weather or other cause the goods cannot be landed during the steamer's stay at port of destination, the Company reserves the right to convey same to the next or the final port of the voyage, to be returned thence at the Company's expense but at the merchant's risk; and should necessity arise for detaining and storing the goods, it shall also be done at the Company's expense, and the merchant's risk; and the Company shall not be answerable for any delay occasioned, or for loss of market.

The Company will not be accountable for gold, silver, bullion, specie, jewellery, precious stones, platedware, or other valuables, or beyond the amount of five hundred rupees for any one package, or relatively for any portion thereof, unless a declaration of the value of such goods has been made prior to shipment, and special shipping orders granted for same, with which the Bill of Lading shall correspond. A wrong description of contents or false declaration of value shall release the Company from all responsibility in case of loss, seizure or detention, and the goods shall be charged double freight on the real value; which freight shall be paid previous to delivery. If medicinal fluids or any other goods of an explosive, inflammable, damaging or dangerous nature are shipped without being previously declared and arranged for, they are liable, upon discovery, to be thrown overboard, and the loss will fall upon shippers or owners of such fluids or goods. The shippers will not only be liable to the penalties imposed by statute, but also for all damage sustained in consequence of such shipment.

The goods are to be distinctly marked with the marks, numbers and port of destination, or the Company is not to be responsible for detention or wrong delivery.

Bill of Lading must be presented and delivered up cancelled before delivery of goods can be granted.

The Company to have the option of delivering these goods into receiving ship or landing them at consignee's risk and [659] expense, as per scale of charges to be seen at the Agent's offices, the Company having a lien on all or any part of the goods, against expenses incurred on the whole shipment. The Company's liability shall cease as soon as the packages are free of the ship's tackle, after which they shall not be responsible for any loss or damage, however caused. If stored in receiving ship godown or upon any wharf, all risks of fire, dacoity, vermin or otherwise, shall lie with the merchant, and the usual charges shall be paid before delivery of the goods Fire Insurance will be covered by the Company' agents on application.

Specie, gold, silver, bullion, jewellery, precious stones, platedware, or other valuables will not be landed by the Company. They can only be delivered on presentation of Bills of Lading on board, and will be carrid on at consignee's risk, if delivery is not taken during the steamer's stay in port.

In case of quarantine, goods may be discharged at risk of the owners of the goods into quarantine depot, lighter, barge, hulk, or other vessel, as required for the ship's despatch; quarantine expenses upon the goods of whatever nature or kind shall be borne by the owners of the goods.

Delivery by the Company of packages externally in good condition as received shall be conclusive evidence of delivery of full weight and contents.

Shippers are requested to note particularly the terms and conditions of this Bill of Lading with reference to the validity of their insurance upon their goods.

Receipt does not state mark, casks in bad condition, not responsible for leakage. Hogshead Brandy covered with gunny, not responsible for condition and contents.

[660] Mr. O'Kincaly for the Plaintiffs. —The shipping Company say we will not be responsible for what the cask contains, but whatever it contains they must deliver it. They say we will not be responsible for the contents, but whatever we get from you we will deliver. Grenon v. Luchmeenarain Augurwallah, (1896) L. R., 23 I. A., 119, 125, The Peter der Grosse, (1875) L. R., 1 P. D., 414. They say in the Bill of Lading why they are not to be responsible for the condition and contents, but the Judge cannot read the clause as if it were "non-delivery" or "short delivery." Here nothing was delivered: the contents had all escaped. All the shipowner says is, I don't know what is in this parcel. I am not to be bound by saying it is a hogshead of brandy in 1st part of the Bill of Lading, because I have not examined it: but I engage to carry it safely to its destination whatever it is. I shall deliver it to you as I got it. If the shipowners were contracting themselves out of all responsibility they would use appropriate words. Here the words "not responsible for condition and contents" do not free the shipowners from all responsibility if the contents are lost on the voyage or while in their charge.

Mr. Henderson for the defendants.—The words in the Bill of Lading are as general as possible. They may have put in these words because the hogshead was covered with gunny. A carrier is entitled to exempt himself in any way provided the Bill of Lading is accepted. The words mean that the company will not be responsible whatever happens to the cask, and is not confined only to the state of the cask and its contents at the beginning of the voyage.

The judgment of the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and MACPHERSON and TREVELYAN, JJ) was as follows:—

Maclean, C J.—This case raises a short point, but one not altogether free from difficulty. The question we have to decide appears from the reference made by the Judge of the Small Cause Court and I need not recapitulate the facts. The question really turns upon what meaning we are to attribute to the words, inserted by the defendants in writing in the Bill of Lading, "Hogshead brandy covered with gunny, not responsible for condition and con- [661] tents." I agree with the contention of the plaintiffs that, primâ facie, the defendants were bound to deliver the goods in good order and so forth. But this obligation is subject expressly to the conditions in the Bill of Lading, one of which is that which I have read. As appears from the finding of fact in the reference, the cask of brandy was shipped at Madras in good order and condition, but on arrival at Calcutta was found to be empty. The question is, are the defendants liable for the loss of the brandy? They repudiate such liability, and rely on the condition I have specially referred to.

We must give some effect to these words, which are an essential part of the contract, and it is difficult to see why we should not place their ordinary meaning upon them. If so, it appears to me that the defendants were not to be responsible for the contents of the cask. This special condition was possibly suggested to the defendants by reason of the circumstance that the cask was covered with gunny, and the defendants, the contents being unknown, wished to guard themselves against responsibility for such contents. It is urged that other parts of the Bill of Lading indicate that when the defendants are to be absolved from their primâ facie obligation to deliver, the Bill of Lading expressly so states, as in clause 7. Taking that to be so I do not think that any inference to be drawn from such provisions in the Bill of Lading is sufficiently strong to warrant us in not giving effect to the clause I have quoted, reading the language of that clause according to the natural meaning of the words used. In my opinion the Judge of the Small Cause Court was right in the view he took. The defendants must have their costs according to the fixed scale.

Macpherson, J.—I agree.

Trevelyan, J.—I also agree.

[662] APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 5th April, 1898.

PRESENT:

SIR FRANCIS WILLIAM MACLEAN, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON AND MR. JUSTICE TREVELYAN.

Amrito Lall Dutt

Surnomoni Dasi and others.*

Hindu Law—Adoption—Widow—Direction to accumulate—Second Adoption.

Where a power to adopt was given by a testator to his widow, who was also the executrix of his Will and to two other executors conjointly :—

Held, that such power was bad. Under Hindu law power to adopt can be given to a widow only, and she has no capacity to adopt save under the express permission of her husband given in his life-time.

Per TREVELYAN, J.—A Hindu testator cannot direct the accumulation of the income of his estate for an indefinite period, if there is no beneficial interest created in the property, in order to render the gift whether under the will or inter vivos valid.

By a second adoption a widow divests herself of the mother's estate in the same way that she divests herself of her widow's estate on the first adoption.

THIS was a suit for the construction of a will and administration. The testator, Hurry Das Dutt, a wealthy Hindu of the Sudra caste and resident in Calcutta, died in October 1875, leaving a sole widow, the defendant Sreemutty Surnomoni Dasi, and two married daughters, the defendant Sreemutty Premmoni Dasi and Sreemutty Ranimoni Dasi. The first named of these daughters at the time of her father's death had three sons, the defendants Radha Prosad Mullick, and Kassi Prosad Mullick, and one since deceased. She also had had two sons born since her father's death, the defendants Peari Lall Mullick and Behary Lall Mullick. The other daughter had no children.

On the 30th of October 1875, the day of his death, Hurry Das Dutt executed his last will. By it he appointed his wife, his father Babu Modusudan Dutt, and his uncle Dwarka Nath Dutt to be his executrix and executors, and of these the testator's wife and uncle alone proved the will. The father apparently never performed any executorial duties or inter-[663]meddled in the management of the estate, but at the same time he never expressly renounced probate.

On the 9th of August the widow, with the consent of Dwarka Nath Dutt, purported to take a boy of five named Jotipersaud Mullick in adoption as the son of the testator in pursuance of a power in the will mentioned hereafter, but this adopted son died on the 29th of January 1881, when he was only ten years old.

On the 1st of April 1877 the testator's father died and on the 9th of February 1881 the plaintiff's natural father purported to give and the testator's widow purported to take the plaintiff, then a boy of eight, in adoption as the son of the testator, the executor Dwarka Nath Dutt being present on the occasion and consenting. This adoption like the former was intended to be in execution of the power contained in the testator's will, and it was admitted that prior to this action the legality of the adoption had never been called in question, on the contrary the plaintiff had throughout been brought up and treated as the duly adopted son of the testator. It will here be convenient to refer to those portions of the will especially relevant to the points raised in the case. They are as follows :—

In clause 2 the testator said :—

"I appoint my wife Sreemuty Surnomoni Dasi, the executrix, and my father Babu Modhusudan Dutt of Mullick's Street aforesaid, and my uncle Babu Dwarka Nath Dutt of Thontoneah, in Calcutta, aforesaid the executors and trustees of this my will."

Clause 8 provides as follows :—

"Whereas having no son born to me of my body I am desirous of adopting one in my lifetime, but in case I depart this life before carrying such my desire into effect I hereby authorize and empower my wife and executrix Sreemutty Surnomoni Dasi, and my executors and trustees to whom I give full permission and liberty to adopt after my decease a son, and in case of his death during his minority or on attaining his full age, and without leaving male issue to adopt a second son, and in case of his death during minority or on attaining such age and without leaving male issue to adopt a third son and no more. In any of the above cases of adoption should the adopted son die, leaving a son or sons, the power of adoption shall cease or remain in abeyance during the life or lives time of such son or sons of such adopted son, but shall revive on the death of such son or sons during minority."

[664] Clause 9 is as follows: —

"I direct my executors and executrix and trustees to pay out of the income and interest of my estate and effects monthly all necessary household expenses as well as for the worship of our family idol Sree Sree Radhagobindjee, and to pay my wife monthly during her natural life for her sole and separate use the sum of Rs. 200 (two hundred) and also the sum of Rs. 50 (fifty) monthly to such adopted son, who shall live and attain his full age of eighteen years after his so attaining such age of eighteen years during the lifetime of my said wife, provided he remains under her control and bears a good character, and if my said executrix and executors and trustees think fit and are satisfied with his conduct and behaviour and for the purposes of such monthly expenditure my executrix, executors and trustees shall set apart and retain out of the interest and income of my estate a sum sufficient to meet such expenditure for six months and invest the rest and residue of such income and interest in Government securities in their joint names, but in no case shall such adopted son have or exercise any control or dominion over my estate and effects until the death of my wife, after which event I direct my said executors and trustees to make over the whole of my estate and effects both real and personal or immoveable whatsoever and wheresoever and of what nature or quality soever to such adopted son, who shall survive my wife if he shall have attained his age of eighteen years during the lifetime of my wife, or on his so attaining such age after her decease, to whom and his heirs I give, devise and bequeath the same. But in case none of such adopted sons survive my said wife, or in case of either surviving my said wife and dying under the said age without leaving a son or sons, I desire and direct my executors after the death of my said wife or the death of such son after her, but under such age of eighteen years without leaving a son or sons to make over and divide the whole of my estate both real and personal unto and between my daughters in equal shares to whom and their respective sons I give, devise and bequeath the same, but should either of my said daughters die without leaving any male issue surviving but leaving my other daughter her surviving, then in such case the surviving daughter and her sons shall be entitled to the share of the deceased daughter, or in case of the death of either daughter leaving sons, the share of such daughter is to be paid to such her son or sons, share and share alike."

The 13th clause is in the following terms:—

" I authorise and empower my said executrix, executors and trustees and the survivor of them, and the trustee for the time being of this my will to appoint any other person or persons to succeed them or him in the execution of the trusts of this my will."

Clause 14th appears to have been added as an after-thought, and by it the testator provided as follows: –

" In case of any accident arising to cause my wife to depart her natural [665] life before adoption of a male child my surviving executors are empowered to act with my full consent and direction to adopt a male issue."

It will be seen from these provisions that until the death of the widow the surplus income of the testator's residue after providing for certain monthly payments was directed to be accumulated.

It was contended before the first Court that as the adoptive son, and consequently the heir of his father, the plaintiff had an absolute interest in his estate subject only to be divested in certain events, and that as a result he was now entitled to have the whole estate transferred from the trustees to him subject only to adequate provision being made for certain periodical payments and expenses authorized by the will; and it was next contended that in any case he was entitled to the enjoyment of the surplus income of the estate until the widow's death. This contention was opposed on the part of the defendants and the grounds of opposition were: First, that there had been no valid adoption of the plaintiff; secondly, that the provision for accumulation was valid; and, thirdly, that even if there were any interest in the estate which had not been disposed of then, in the events which have happened it was on the widow as heiress of the deceased adopted son, and not on the plaintiff, that it had devolved.

For the purpose of disposing of these points the following issues were agreed to:

First.—Whether the power of adoption is valid at all in law?

Secondly.—If so, was it validly exercised?

Thirdy.—If so, is the plaintiff on the true construction of the will and as the adopted son of the testator entitled –

(a) To the surplus income of the property until the death of his adoptive mother;

(b) To the absolute interest in the property subject only to the payments mentioned in the will.

His Lordship, Mr. Justice JENKINS, in the lower Court dealt with these issues as follows:—

1. Whether the power of adoption is valid at all at law?

[666] The clauses of the will particularly bearing on this point are 8th and the 14th, both of which I have already read, and the argument urged against the validity of the power is shortly this: It is said that, though a husband can delegate to his widow a power to adopt, still he can delegate it to no one else; consequently it is argued the present power to adopt is bad, because though it is delegated to the widow still it is not to her alone but to her in association with others. Now it is admitted, on the part of the defendants, indeed it is a part of their argument, that though the widow's discretion under a delegated power is absolute in the sense that she cannot be compelled to act upon it unless or until she so chooses, still any condition or clog can be imposed upon the exercise by her of this delegated power, and it therefore appears to me that, so far as the association of the two executors was a fetter on the absolute discretion and choice which might otherwise have existed, it cannot have vitiated the power. It may be that the widow alone is capable of performing the actual ceremony of adoption, that her hand alone can receive the child, but I do not find in the phraseology used by the testator any direction requiring or even justifying the inference that he desired or intended that the executors should take a part in the ceremony from which they are incapacitated by the rules of Hindu law.

It is clear from the prefatory recital with which the 8th clause of the will commences, that the testator did desire the adoption of a son in accordance with the provisions of the Hindu law, and though it may be unprofitable to speculate as to his motive, I think that he had a purpose beyond the mere designation of a beneficiary to take under his will and I must decline to put on the language of the will a construction that would render its provisions useless. In my opinion the testator associated the other executors with his wife for the purpose of ensuring a wise exercise of her discretion in the selection of a son for adoption and not with the intention of making it an essential condition of the adoption that they should take a part in the ceremony from which they were precluded, and I therefore hold that the power of adoption is valid.

[667] The next issue I have to consider is whether the power of adoption was validly exercised.

The contention of the defendants in this connection is twofold; for first it is argued that the power could not be exercised inasmuch as the father, one of the executors named by the will, was then dead and the power is not one that passed to the survivors, and next it has been argued by Sir Griffith Evans that it is evident from the terms of the deed of adoption and also from the evidence and admissions in the case, that the surviving executor Dwarka Nath Dutt did not take such a part in the adoption as was required of him by the power, so that even if there was a survival of the power still its terms were not observed.

Now both these points appear to me to be points of construction so that it is in the first place necessary to determine what the language of the will means, and in that investigation regard must be had to the circumstances of the testator and to every fact a knowledge of which may conduce to the right application of the words used. Cases are of little use except so far as they express or illustrate a general rule of construction; for the words of one will are seldom the same as those of another.

There is, however, a principle to be drawn from decisions which is of importance in relation to the question in hand, and it is this that where a power is vested in executors (though it may not be one reposed in them by the law) if on the true construction of the will it appears that the power was coupled with the executorial office, it will survive to the holders for the time being of the office as though it were a power attached to the office by law.

It obviously, therefore, is necessary first to determine whether or not as matter of construction the power of adoption contained in the will was not given to the executors in their official capacity.

In my opinion the power of adoption is connected with the office, and in confirmation of that view I may point to the fact that excepting the wife the executors are not named, but are described by reference to their office, and again though the wife is named still she is described as executrix in a manner [668] which points to the conclusion that the power even in her case was not dissociated from the idea of the office. That is not necessarily decisive of the question whether the power was one that survived for any such inference to that effect that might be deduced from the association of the power with the office might be rebutted by a sufficient indication that the testator desired the selection implied by the power to be entrusted to the three persons named as his executors and to no less a number.

But to effect such a result the indication must be one of a reasonable clearness drawn from the testator's own words, and not merely based on a speculation as to what a man might be imagined to intend in the testator's circumstances. It is suggested that this indication is to be found in the concluding clause of the will, but after the best consideration that I have been able to give to that clause together with the rest of the document I am unable to arrive at that conclusion. That clause appears to me to indicate the testator's strong desire that a son should be adopted ; he may be supposed (not merely as a rigid presumption of law, but as a matter of notoriety) to have known that a Hindu widow of the Bengal School could with her husband's assent adopt, but fearing the contingency of his wife's death he inserted the last clause for what it might be worth.

I should also state that I am not led by this last clause to the conclusion that the testator did not intend that the adoption to be effected under clause 8 should take effect as, and have the results of, an adoption according to Hindu law. In support of the view that the power in question could only be exercised by the three persons appointed as executrix and executors by the Will I have been referred by the learned Advocate-General to two cases. The first is the case of Surendrakeshav v. Doorga Sundari Dasi, (1892) L.R., 19 I.A., 108, which no doubt establishes that the authority delegated to the widow must be followed strictly, so that where the power only authorized the simultaneous adoption of two sons, it was impossible to exercise the power otherwise than in strict compliance with its terms, [669] though the result of an attempted adoption in accordance with the power would be in contravention of the Hindu law and so without an effective result.

The second was a case of Beemchurn Sen v. Heera Loll Seal, (1867) 2 Ind. Jur. N.S., 225, in which the consent of another was required as a condition of the adoption, and it was held that the absence of that consent, though due to death, was a bar to the adoption. Now both these cases are open to the comment, that I have held as matter of construction, that the power contained in this will did in the circumstances of this case survive to those by whom it was exercised, so that in my view of the case the requirements of the power have been observed.

It may, however, be said that the case of Beemchurn Sen v. Heera Loll Seal, (1867) 2 Ind. Jur. N.S., 225, so closely resembles this, that I ought in this case to put a corresponding interpretation on this will. In the first place I could not assent to the proposition that there is any real similarity between the two cases, and next I must point out that in that case an adoption according to Hindu law could not have been contemplated, the delegation of the particular power, then under consideration, having been made not to a widow but to a son's widow, and on a careful perusal of the judgment it will be seen that Sir BARNES PEACOCK expressly guards himself from expressing an opinion what would have been the result had the adoption intended been one that could have been effective according to Hindu law. It still remains to notice the argument that the terms of the power have not been complied with inasmuch as the widow alone and not in conjunction with the surviving executor actually took the son in adoption. I have already expressed my view of the meaning of the power, and if that view be right then it follows that this objection cannot prevail; the power does not in so many words say that the ceremony, which the law only allows to be performed by the widow, must be performed by the others, and I therefore hold that the mere fact of the surviving executors not having actually and physically taken in adoption is not a failure to comply [670] with the terms of the power, and I accordingly hold that the power was validly exercised.

This brings me to the third issue which turns upon the true construction to be placed on clause 9 of the will. The testator thereby directs his executors, executrix and trustees to make out of the income of his estate certain payments including a monthly payment of Rs. 200 to his wife during her life and a sum of Rs. 50 monthly to such adopted son who should live and attain the age of eighteen years during the lifetime of his wife, provided he remained under her control and bore a good character, and then he proceeds as follows:—

"My executrix, executors and trustees shall invest the rest and residue of such income and interest in Government securities in their joint names, but in no case shall such adopted son have or exercise any control or dominion over my estate and effects until the death of my wife."

Now it will be seen that there is here a direction to accumulate, and the first point to be decided is whether, according to the law applicable to Hindu wills, this direction is in operation or whether effect can be given to it.

Mr. Bonnerjee, no doubt, treated the point in his opening speech as beyond the realm of argument, but the learned Advocate-General declined to accede to that view, and I consequently must examine the point. I must, however, express regret that only a very slender argument has been addressed to me on this point on the part of the defendants -a course the more to be regretted by reason of my want of familiarity with the question, and I need hardly remark that the absence of such argument has not only greatly increased my labours, but compels me to decide the point on materials and information necessarily meagre.

Now accumulation is, with an exception immaterial for the present purpose, absolutely forbidden by section 104 of the Indian Succession Act, but on turning to section 2 of the Hindu Wills Act it will be found that section 104 is one of the few sections not applicable to Hindu wills, such as the one under consideration, and consequently there is no statutory prohibition which forbids accumulation directed in a will made by a Hindu.

It becomes, therefore, necessary to examine whether a direction [671] to accumulate is contrary to the provisions of Hindu law. Probably it would be wrong to attribute much force to the fact that section 104 is not made applicable to the will of a Hindu, but I certainly cannot accede to the argument that it is a recognition of the fact that accumulation was never allowed in the case of Hindu wills, for a similar train of reasoning would have excluded the application of other clauses of the Succession Act which do govern Hindu wills. Now it unquestionably is the case that a direction to accumulate is from time to time to be found in Hindu wills and the practice of inserting such a direction is of some standing.

In Sreemutty Soorjeemoney Dossee v. Denobundhoo Mullick, (1857) 6 Moo. I. A., 526, the will of a Hindu testator who died in 1841 was under consideration, and the case was argued on demurrer before the Supreme Court of Calcutta, and in the course of their judgment the following remarks appear :—

"It was, we apprehend, competent to this testator, if he had been so minded, expressly to provide for the accumulation of the surplus income of his estate within the limits allowed by law, and to make their accumulations subject to the limitation even in the event of any son dying without leaving issue in the male line: but he does not appear to have done so either expressly or by necessary implication. Again in Bissonauth Chunder v. Sreemutty Bamasoondery Dassi, (1867) 12 Moo I. A., 41, the following passage is contained in the judgment of the Privy Council :—

"In the first place it is to be observed that the testator has given no direction to accumulate. It remains, therefore, to be seen whether the Court can find from the words of the will, as was argued, an irresistible inference that such was the intention of the testator.

"This is the more important because in the case of Sonatun Bysack v. Sreemutty Juggutsoondree Dossee, (1859) 8 Moo. I. A., 66, which is relied on as governing this case, there is an express direction to accumulate. It was there directed that the surplus [672] was to be added to capital. There is an absence of that in this case. It is admitted that the testator could not dispose of the property of his son or prevent the heir of the son from inheriting his property, therefore the only question here is whether the testator has directed the accumulations of the property to be added to or made part of his own property, because if he has not it was the property of the son and the testator had no power of disposing of it. In this view of the case their Lordships think that this will, on whichever construction it is taken, shows an absence of any direction to accumulate."

It is true these cases do not decide that a direction to accumulate is good, but it is clear from them that the practice of directing accumulation is of long standing, and that at that time it was considered that such a direction would have effective operation. I asked Mr. Bonnerjee, who contends that a direction to accumulate is bad, to refer me to the authorities on which he relied, and I now propose to deal with them. The first case is that of Kumara Asima Kishna Deb v. Kumara Kumara Krishna Deb, (1868) 2 B. L. R., O. C. 11, the purport of which is set out in the head note as follows :—

"A Hindu, by will, attempted to create a trust for the accumulation, for ninety-nine years, of the surplus income (after certain yearly payments) of his estate, in purchase of zemindaries, etc., from time to time, and empowered his trustees to continue such trust after the expiration of the ninety-nine years' term. The will contained no disposition of the beneficial interest in the zemindaries so to be purchased. Held, that such trust was void.

"Semble.—Perpetuity (save in the case of religious and charitable endowments) is not sanctioned by Hindu law. Goberdhan Bysack v. Sham Chand Bysack, explained."

The contention in that case was that the trusts of the will were invalid and void, not only on the ground of perpetuity, but because there was no disposition of the beneficial interest in the estate.

The case in the first instance came before Mr. Justice NORMAN who said : "I may add that there is not in the will any disposition [673] whatever of the beneficial interest of the bulk of the testator's property . * * * * Even at the end of ninety-nine years there is no gift of the beneficial interest to any one. The manager for the time being may go on at his own will and pleasure indefinitely accumulating the estate. No right is given to the heirs of the testator or the persons indicated as such in the will to use the property for their own benefit taken at that remote time. This goes a long way beyond that of Mr. Thellusson's will.

Then later he says:—

"In the case now before me the trust for perpetual accumulation would deprive the parties of all enjoyment of the profits on the estate. I think it clear that the trust for accumulation must be treated as a condition repugnant to the natural rights of every owner of property to the use or enjoyment of it, inconsistent with the nature of property itself and therefore void."

From this decision there was an appeal which came before the Chief Justice Sir BARNES PEACOCK and Mr. Justice MARKBY.

Sir BARNES PEACOCK says:—

"There is no doubt that this will if construed according to English law would be void under the law relating to perpetuities. The question is, is it valid under Hindu law?"

Further on he proceeds:—

"The will in the present case gives the residue of the property, which is the subject of dispute, to the grandson and his successors upon trusts that the profits of the estate are not to be beneficially used during a period of ninety-nine years, but are to be laid out in the purchase of fresh estates and the formation of a fund for the payment of the Government revenue upon it, and this provision is to be extended, as I understand, in perpetuity, if the Hindu law allows."

I am not aware of any rule of the Hindu law by which grants inter vivos or gifts by will in perpetuity are expressly prohibited, but it appears to me to be quite contrary to the whole scope and intention of Hindu law.

In the result the decision of Mr. Justice NORMAN was upheld, [674] but it appears to me, looking at the facts of the case and the judgments delivered, that the true ratio decidendi was that the direction to accumulate was an attempt to create a perpetuity, that thereby it was sought to suspend the enjoyment for a longer period than the absolute vesting could be controlled, and that it consequently was bad. The case did not call for a decision that an accumulation which did not aim at that, which for shortness I may call a perpetuity, is void, and I therefore cannot regard the case as an authority which is or even purports to deal with the point before me.

I was next referred to a case of Srimati Bramamayi Dasi v. Jages Chandra Dutt, (1871) 8 B. L. R., 400, but all that case decides which can be regarded as material to the present point is that an attempt to defer the period of payment to or enjoyment by a beneficiary of a vested interest is inoperative.

Then reliance was placed on the case of Kally Nath Naugh Chowdhury v. Chunder Nath Naugh Chowdhry, (1882) I.L.R., 8 Cal., 378, where the will before the Court contained a present gift of the testator's property to his grandsons followed by provisions postponing payment and directing accumulation, and it was there held in accordance with principles which are beyond dispute that an absolute gift could not be qualified by a direction to postpone payment and accumulate. The legality of a direction to accumulate was not in question in the case.

Mr. Justice PONTIFEX says:—

"But his will containing, as in our opinion it does, sufficiently direct words of present gift, the clauses in it, which attempt to postpone the enjoyment of possession and to direct accumulation must be rejected or disregarded as inconsistent or repugnant."

The last case brought to my notice is that of Mokoondo Lall Shaw v. Gonesh Chunder Shaw, (1876) I.L.R., 1 Cal., 104, which decided that where a Hindu testator gave all his immoveable property to his sons but [675] postponed their enjoyment thereof by a clause that they should not make any division for twenty years, the restriction was void as repugnant to the gift.

Mr. Justice PHEAR in the course of his judgment says: "Now without saying that a Hindu testator might not give the current profits or income of the property to the trustees, and direct them to apply this to the payment of debts throughout a specified period such as twenty years, I do not think it is competent to him to give the corpus of the property to an adult person, and at the same time to forbid that person from enjoying the property in the way which the law allows.

"The prohibition against receiving and enjoying the income for twenty years appears to me simply to be a condition imposed on the property which is repugnant to the gift. It is not merely the giving of one portion of the property to one person or purpose and the remaining portion to another person or purpose, but it is giving the entire property to one person and coupling this gift with a prohibition against his enjoyment."

The key to this and the two previous decisions is obvious, and it simply is the repugnancy and consequent invalidity of a condition which attempts to fetter the enjoyment of an absolute gift, a principle which has no application here.

Mr. Bonnerjee very fairly admits that beyond these cases he is unable to refer to any decision or even dictum that a direction to accumulate is necessarily, and under all circumstances void, so as to entitle the heirs to claim the interest commensurate with the period of directed accumulation as though it were undisposed of, and I must therefore see whether there is any general policy, or principle of law, which calls for such a conclusion.

Is there then any principle of public policy which would discountenance accumulation? I take it that for this purpose regard must be had to Hindu and not to English policy, and so far as I can ascertain such a direction is in accordance with the modes of Hindu life and thought, and agrees in its aims with what is a matter of every-day practice and custom.

[676] Indeed had the life estate been given to the widow, then the accumulation which is directed would, in its practical result, be no greater a restraint on the expenditure of income than would have been almost necessarily incident to that situation. Does it then clash with any principle of law? First it is necessary to see what the effect of the accumulation in this case is. The direction is during the life of the testator's widow to invest the balance of the income, and after her death the trustees are to hand it over to such adopted son who shall survive the widow and shall answer the description given in the will.

It will, therefore, be noticed that apart from any question of legality the accumulations are disposed of so as to vest beneficially on the widow's death. It is true that the object of the testator's bounty is not ascertained at the testator's death, but that in itself is not a necessary indication of illegal remoteness. As has been said by a very learned Judge, in common sense it is only giving the accumulation to the person who is to take the fund itself, if it could be foreseen who that person is. That person may be the present plaintiff if he survives the widow, or it may be some one adopted in succession to him, but it is clear in either case that the fund itself will be given and why not the accumulation.

If the testator be permitted to give the fund itself at a future time, it would seem anomalous that he should not be able to give the intermediate rents and profits.

If the individual to take on the widow's death were now ascertained it surely could not be doubted that his title to the intermediate income would prevail against that of the heir-at-law, and how has the heir better right by reason of that person being at present unascertained. If it be urged that the effect is to create an absolute interest at a future date without limiting an intermediate beneficial interest corresponding and commensurate with the interest, and that, therefore, the heir-at-law must take the profits to arise during the interval, then this argument, as it appears to me, is met by Mr. Bonnerjee's own concession that trustees might be directed to accumulate a fund for the payment of debts, and by the further fact that the trustees are in this case directed to hand over the intermediate income to the individual who is to [677] take the fund from which they spring. I may remark incidentally that this is an objection to accumulation which was put forward in the English Courts, but without success though the principle on which it is based has as much force in English as in Hindu law. It cannot be said that the adopted son to whom the fund is given on the widow's death is incapable of being a recipient of the bequest, for by section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act it is provided that if property is bequeathed to a person described as standing in a particular degree of kindred to a specified individual, but his possession of it is deferred until a time later than the death of the testator by reason of a prior bequest or otherwise, and if a person answering the description is alive at the death of the testator, or comes into existence between that event and such later time the property shall at such later time go to that person. Seeing, therefore, the fact that the right to accumulate has been recognized, if not actually affirmed, both by the Supreme Court and the Privy Council, and that a direction to accumulate is no new expedient, and having regard to the various considerations I have discussed, I hold that it is not incompetent for a Hindu with proper limitations to direct an accumulation of the income of the property which under his will vests in his executors or trustees. That, however, is not necessarily conclusive of the present case, for it still remains to consider whether the particular direction in this case is bad as being in excess of what the law permits.

Now it appears to me on principle that if accumulations are permissible, then in the absence of special provision the limit must be that which determines the period during which the course or devolution of property can be directed and controlled by a testator, and applying that test to the present case I am of opinion that the directed accumulation is not in excess of that permitted by law.

In the view, therefore, that I take of the case I am of opinion that the plaintiff is not presently entitled to the surplus income or profits of the properties, until the death of his adoptive mother, and that he is not entitled (even after provision being made for the payments mentioned in the will) to have the corpus of the [678] estate made over to him. The plaintiff asks for an account, and as the Advocate-General does not oppose this, I am willing to accede to this inasmuch as when the case first came before me certain charges of breach of trust were waived on the understanding that the plaintiff should be entitled to take such objection to the trustees' conduct as might be open on the taking of the ordinary accounts, but I will only direct accounts at the plaintiff's risk as to costs, and as it has been suggested that the accounts will probably not be required, it will be better that the decree for accounts should be conditional.

The decree, therefore, will contain a declaration that the plaintiff has been validly adopted, but that on the true construction of the will he is not entitled during the life of the widow to have the property left by the testator handed over to him or to receive the rest and residue of the income and interest of the testator's estate by the will directed to be invested: then the decree will direct accounts (at the plaintiff's risk as to costs) of the estate and debts of the testator, but it will be provided that no proceedings are to be taken under this direction without the leave of the Judge in Chambers. There will be an enquiry what is proper to be allowed for all necessary household expenses as well as for the worship of the testator's family idol Sree Sree Radhagobindjee. Further consideration will be adjourned and there will be liberty to apply. As it is so desired the costs of all parties up to and including the trial to be taxed on Scale 2 as between solicitor and client will come out of the estate.

The plaintiff appealed from this decree.

Mr. Pugh (Mr. Bonnerjee with him) for the Appellants.—Is a Hindu testator able to give an estate to A and say that he is not to enjoy the estate more than 50 rupees per annum during the life-time of B, to whom no income has been given? This is a direction to accumulate. Hurry Das Dutt died in October 1875: On 9th August 1876 the first adoption was made. Jotipersaud Mullick died on 29th January 1881 and on the 9th February 1881 the second adoption was made, and the plaintiff adopted. There is, therefore, an express gift of the accumulations. [TREVELYAN, J.—The Privy Council have held that, apart from adoption, it [679] might be a valid bequest under a power of appointment.] Section 13 of the Transfer of Property Act. The accumulations are without an owner until the death of the widow. [TREVELYAN, J.—The corpus and income must, according to Hindu law, be vested in the same person. It cannot be in the air.] There is a valid gift to Amrito Lall Dutt subject to its being divested. Amrito Lall Dutt is the owner of the estate and any restriction to his use and enjoyment is repugnant to that estate. Gosavi Shivgar Doyagar v. Rivett Carnac, (1888) I. L. R., 13 Bom., 463. My client takes estate for life by limitation; section 4 of the Probate and Administration Act. It is clear that the son is not to take beneficially until after the death of the widow. If my first position is wrong then I say the estate is vested in the executors and trustee. Under section 104 of the Succession Act you cannot accumulate for more than a year. Under the Hindu Wills Act, section 104 is not applicable. The direction to accumulate is quite in keeping with Hindu notions. There is nothing in the will which says what is invested shall be added to the capital and form part of the estate. Heir is not to take until after the death of A and there is nothing to deprive A of the estate she took. As to the adoption, we say that there is no valid power to adopt. It is bad in law.—Nilmoney Singh v. Bakranath Singh, (1882) L. R., 9 I. A., 104. It was a joint power by three jointly or by two executors according to the scheme of the will. Tagore v. Tagore, (1872) Sup. Vol. I. A., 79, 78. If one person could perform ceremony efficaciously [681] others could join in it. In the case of Surendra Keshab Roy v. Doorga Sundari Dasi, (1892) L R., 19 I. A., 108., the adoption was simultaneously made and held to be bad. The power of adoption in its inception is bad. If I assume power is good it is still not validly exercised, it is exercised by two instead of by three. Crawford v. Forshaw, (1891) L. R., 2 Ch., 261; Sugden on Powers, p. 460. The power must not pass to others. Here the power was given to the uncle and the father. If a man dies leaving two sons and a widow, it is clear that the two sons take. If one son dies the widow takes the estate of that son, not the second son. In the case of adoption the mother holds as guardian and in trust until the first adoption. When the son dies it comes to her as her own as the mother and she cannot be divested by adopting a second son. Here the second adoption is made in derogation of the adopted mother's estate. If you inherit from the son there is no estate to pass on. When the adopted mother takes the estate of a son she has an estate which cannot be divested.

Sir Griffith Evans (Mr. O'Kinealy with him) for the other respondents.—The question of accumulation cannot be decided as between me and the widow. The trustee would in any event have to retain the corpus. The period of distribution is the death of the widow. What is to become of the surplus income between the death of the widow and the period of distribution. As it is impossible to predict who will come in at the period of distribution it will be necessary for the trustees to retain the estate until that period arrives. As regards the power of adoption being bad the executors were the proper persons to be appointed for the adoption, if it took place. Executors can always devolve their offices on the Administrator-General by the Administrator-General's Act. If the power attaches to the office it goes on to the end wherever the office goes. The reasoning of KEKEWICH, J., would apply to this case, because it is a naked power and does not attach to an executorial office. There is a great distinction between naked powers and powers given to a person by virtue of his office. Farwell on powers, pages 129, 140. [682] There is no inflexible doctrine that the full beneficial interest must be vested in some person who is ascertained at the time. The first adopted son took dehors the will; he was entitled because the adoption made him heir-at-law instead of the widow. For five years he was entitled. The result would be if Joti Prasad was properly adopted, he took it as heir-at-law under the power of appointment, dehors the will. However if he acquired it his mother would be his heiress, and if she adopts a second time does she surrender the estate of the adopted son? There must be some limit; she cannot divest herself of any thing that did not belong to the testator. If a descent was cast in the way other than the mother, then there is an end of the second adoption. For instance, the widow of the adopted son, if there was one, would have taken to the exclusion of the second adopted son. As regards the doctrine of estates by implication there is the case of Bissa Nath Chunder v. Bama Sundary Dassi, (1867) 12 Mad., I.A., 11. Widow and female there could not take, and in case one of them dies held the female heirs shall not take.

Mr. Pugh in reply.

The judgment of the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J., MACPHERSON and TREVELYAN, JJ.) was as follows:—

Maclean, C.J.—The facts are not disputed on this appeal, and that being so, I do not propose to recapitulate them as they are accurately found and stated in the judgment of Mr Justice JENKINS. The questions we have to decide are questions purely of law; they are stated in the judgment of the Court below, and it will be convenient to deal with them in the same order as in that judgment.

The first question and one in sense the paramount question is whether the power to adopt in the testator's will is a valid power. It is urged for the respondents, against the validity of the power, that although it is competent to a Hindu testator to empower his widow to adopt, it is a power which can only be given to the widow and to the widow alone, and that, inasmuch as in the present case the power is given to her conjointly [683] with two other persons, viz., the father and uncle of the testator, the power is invalid. If this contention be well founded, there is, at once, an end of the plaintiff's case, for, if there were no valid power to adopt, the plaintiff is not the adopted son of the testator, and has consequently no interest in the testator's estate and cannot maintain the present suit. He is suing as the testator's adopted son, and in that capacity alone. The testator doubtless was anxious that, if he had no natural son, he should have an adopted son, and the reasons for this, not merely on temporal but specially on spiritual grounds, are thoroughly recognised and understood in the Hindu community. But the question is, has he taken such a course as the Hindu law allows for giving effect to his desire?

It may, I think, be regarded as a well-established principle of the Bengal School of Hindu law that it is to the widow alone that the power of adopting a son can be delegated by the husband, and that she has no capacity to adopt, save under the express permission of the husband given in his lifetime. Now, looking at clause 8 of the will, which is admittedly the salient clause upon which, in a great measure, if not entirely, the case hinges, and reading the language of that clause according to the usual and ordinary meaning of the words used, there cannot, I think, as a matter of construction, be any reasonable doubt that the testator intended to give, and did give, the power of adoption, not to his widow alone, but to his widow conjointly with his father and uncle. If upon the true construction of the clause the power be given to the three, and not to the widow alone, it is not very important to consider whether it was or was not given to them in their executorial capacity, though the language suggests that it was given to them in that capacity, and this view is fortified by a reference to clause 14 of the will, which indicates that, in the event of the wife's death before the adoption of a male child, the surviving executors were to have the power. It is conceded by the appellant's counsel that the power under clause 14 is invalid. That clause shows that the testator intended the surviving executors should have the power, and throws a light upon what was in the testator's mind, as regards clause 8, viz., that the power [684] was given to his executrix, executors and trustees. If it be conceded that the power given to the two executors under clause 14 is bad, it is somewhat difficult to see how the power under clause 8 given to the three executors and trustees, even though the wife be one, is not equally bad, unless one can reasonably place upon that clause the construction placed upon it in the Court below. But even if, in clause 8, the wife, father and uncle had not been alluded to as executrix, executors and trustees, the testator has associated with the wife in this power two other persons, which, under Hindu law, he cannot do as the power can only be delegated to the wife.

It is urged, however, for the appellant that clause 8 may be read as a power given to the wife alone, and that the association of the father and uncle in the power was not to give them the power of adoption, but merely a power of supervision in order to ensure a discreet exercise of the power by the wife. In other words, we were virtually invited to read the power as if it were one given to the widow alone to be exercised with the consent of the father and uncle. I do not see my way to adopt this construction of the language of the will. There is nothing, so far as I can see, in the language used, to warrant us in placing such a construction upon it; were we to do so, I think we should be going dangerously near to making a new will for the testator, rather than construing the will he has made. We must look at what the testator has actually said, not what he might have said had the effect of what he has said been drawn to his attention.

The learned Judge in the Court below says he must decline to put on the language of the will a construction that would render its provisions useless. I am entirely in accord with the learned Judge, if by that expression he means that, if the language of the will warrant it, the Court should place such a construction upon it as will give effect to the testator's intentions, rather than render the provisions of the will useless. But we must be guided by what the testator has said; we must gather his intention from the whole will, and then say whether or not effect can be given to that intention consistently with law. Here the ques-[685]tion appears to me to be- What did the testator intend, gathering, that intention from the language he has used? If he intended to give the power to the three, then, according to Hindu law, such a power is bad; if he intended to give the power to the wife alone and only associated the father and uncle as a fetter on her choice of a son, then it would be good. But I fail to extract the latter intention from the language used. The recent case in the Privy Council of Surendro Kissen Roy v. Durga Sundari Dassi, (1892) L R., 19 I. A., 108, must not be overlooked in discussing this question of the validity of the power.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the power to adopt was not a valid one.

In the view I take, it becomes unnecessary to discuss whether the power was validly exercised, but one of the grounds upon which Mr. Justice JENKINS decided that it was well exercised has a bearing upon the question of the validity of the power. Mr. Justice JENKINS holds that the power was intended to be annexed to the executorial office, and treats the question as being whether the power of adoption contained in the will was not given to the executors in their official capacity, and he treats it as having been so given. But if the power of adoption were annexed to the executorial office, or if the power were given to the executors in their official capacity, the power is bad, for no such power can be validly given according to Hindu law. If, however, the true construction of clause 8 be such as the learned Judge in the Court below holds it to be, viz., a power of adoption to the wife alone, with the consent of the other executors and trustees, it would seem almost to follow that the testator intended the selection of an adopted son to be made with the consent of the father and uncle, as the personæ designatæ for this purpose in the will, and in whom a personal confidence was reposed by the testator. Clause 14 supports this view, whilst the case of Beemchurn Sen v. Hera Loll Seal, (1867) 2 Ind. Jur. N. S., 225, has a distinct bearing upon it. Had it been necessary for me to decide the point, I should have felt considerable difficulty in saying that the [686] power had been well exercised, the father of the testator having died before the adoption took place.

Holding the above views, it becomes unnecessary to express any opinion upon the other points which have been raised, as the plaintiff cannot maintain the present suit, though it is not to be inferred from my silence on those points that I am in accord with Mr. Justice TREVELYAN'S views upon them.

This is one of those cases in which, having regard to the time which has elapsed since the adoption, one's natural inclination would be to uphold it if possible. Having regard to that lapse of time I asked the appellant's counsel whether any question of limitation, estoppel, laches or acquiescence could be raised in the appellant's favour, but he very fairly replied that no such question could be successfully raised as against the infant respondents, who will take the property failing a valid adoption of the plaintiff. As, then, any such questions are eliminated, we may view the case as if the matter had been submitted for our consideration shortly after, and not many years after, the alleged adoption ; in other words, the lapse of time does not in point of law assist the appellant. It may seem a hard case on the plaintiff who, however, is responsible for having initiated the litigation, to be now told that his adoption is invalid : but, on the other hand, it would be equally hard on the infant respondents, if they have to hand over their property to one who has not been validly adopted as the testator's son. It is, however, not open to us to enter upon any question of hardship one way or the other. I think the appeal fails and must be dismissed.

The cross-objections must be allowed, and the suit dismissed. I will deal with the costs after the other judgments have been delivered.

Macpherson, J.—I agree with the learned Chief Justice. I do not think it necessary to express any opinion on the other questions raised in the case.

Trevelyan, J.—The two main questions in this case are (1) whether there is any valid gift of the accumulation of income ; and (2) whether the plaintiff has been validly adopted under Hindu law.

[687] I will deal with this second question first. The defendants are entitled to have it decided, as it goes to the root of the whole suit and is the subject of their cross-objection.

The first question which we have to determine is what the testator meant by his will. As put by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Tagore v. Tagore, (1872) L. R. Sup. Vol., p. 79: "The true mode of construing a will is to consider it as expressing in all parts whether consistent with law or not, the intention of the testator, and to determine upon a reading of the whole will, whether, assuming the limitations therein mentioned to take effect, an interest claimed under it was intended under the circumstances to be conferred. It is true that in giving a power of adoption, a testator is contemplating to a great extent his own welfare, but legal effect cannot be given to his intention, unless he provides for the exercise of that power within the limits of the law. We cannot alter or add to any portion of his directions, and if we attempt to depart from the strict letter of his injunctions, we run the danger of being charged with attempting to make a will for him rather than construing and giving effect to the will which he has actually made. Numerous instances occur to me where powers of adoption have been given with the real object of obtaining a spiritual benefit, but the Courts have declined to give effect to those powers. I need only instance by way of illustration the case of a double adoption, which came before the Privy Council lately in the Andul case. In my opinion we must endeavour to ascertain the intention of the testator as expressed by the words of his will just as carefully and upon the same principles when he is seeking his own spiritual benefit as when he is conferring a bounty upon others. Having ascertained his intention from his will, and without reference to the law on the subject, it is then for us to apply the law and see if the power be valid I know of no authority which lays down that powers of adoption are to be construed differently from other powers. It has been suggested to us that it must be assumed that the testator knew the law, and that the portion of the power which is in accordance with the law must be accepted and the rest rejected. It is im-[688]possible for us to deal with the will on this footing. Testators very often, though they know the law, try to evade it The Law Reports abound with instances of this. The power, so far as is material for the present purpose, is given in the following words:

"I hereby authorise and empower my wife and executrix S. M Surnomoyee Dassee and my executors and trustees to whom I give full permission and liberty to adopt after my decease a son." There can be no doubt that the only person to whom a power of adoption can be validly given is the wife of the person giving the power. If the testator intended, as he says, that his executors and trustees should execute this power jointly with his widow, it would be impossible to carry out this power. The only way, as far as I can see, by which any effect can be given to this power is by supposing that the testator intended to give the power to the wife alone, but required her to act with the consent of executors. This construction is, however, to my mind an impossible one, having regard to the other terms of the will.

In the first place paragraph 13 authorises the executrix, executor and trustees and the survivor of them to appoint any other person or persons to succeed them or him in the execution of the trusts of the will The adoption was one of the trusts of the will, and this power shows that he contemplated the adoption being made by persons other than the widow. Leaving paragraph 13 entirely out of consideration I think that paragraph 14*a* is conclusive on this question. He there says · "In case of any accident arising to cause my wife to depart her natural life before adoption of a male child my surviving executors are empowered to act with my full consent and direction to adopt a male issue." This to my mind shows conclusively that the testator did contemplate that the adoption should be made by persons other than his wife, and therefore there is no reason for giving a forced construction to the earlier paragraph, which gives the power.

Moreover, it is noticeable that whereas the testator gives to his executors powers to adopt on the death of the wife he does not give to the wife any power to adopt in case of the death of the executors. This shows that the testator imposed a greater confi-[689]dence in his executors than in his wife. I feel it impossible, having regard to all the terms of the will, to hold that the power was anything but a joint power, and was therefore bad.

Even if the power be a good one, namely, that the widow could adopt with the consent of the executors and trustees, I am of opinion that the death of the father, who was one of the executors, prevented the exercise of the power.

Besides his wife the testator appointed his father and uncle as executors and trustees. I have no doubt that this personal relationship operated in the testator's mind when including them in the power of adoption.

Even if the power be construed as giving a power to the widow with the consent of the executors, I think the nature of this particular trust and the relationship of the executors show that, although the power is given to the executors, it is intended to apply only to these particular persons and does not devolve upon other holders of the office.

In the case of Bheemchurn Seal v. Hera Chunn Seal, (1867) 2 Ind. Jur. N. S., 225, Mutty Lal Seal was described as executor, yet Sir BARNES PEACOCK considered that a personal confidence was reposed in him.

An authority to adopt must be strictly pursued. Choudhry Pudum Singh v. Koer Oodoy Singh, (1867) 12 Moo I. A., 356, and if the confidence here imposed be a personal one, it follows that the death of one of the persons whose consent is necessary to the execution of the power must destroy the power.

We have been referred to a recent decision of this Court—Surendra Nandan v. Sailaja Kant Das Mahapatra, (1891) I.L.R., 18 Cal., 385, in which Sir BARNES PEACOCK'S decision seems to have been considered, but beyond expressing their concurrence with the judgment of the Court below, the learned Judges give no reasons for their decision, and, as a matter of fact, in that case the widow was only enjoined to obtain the advice and opinion of the manager. [690] The consent was not a condition. Conditions, whether they be possible or impossible of fulfilment, must be considered, and unless they are strictly carried into effect, the power cannot be exercised—see Rangubai v. Bhagirthibai, (1877) I. L. R., 2 Bom., 377. In my opinion the adoption was bad, and on that ground the suit ought to fail. I desire also to express my opinion as to the other question which has been argued, namely as to the right to the accumulations.

The determination of this question depends upon the terms of the ninth paragraph of the will.

It was contended by the learned Advocate-General that by the provisions contained in that paragraph the widow got an interest for life by implication, but this is scarcely consistent with the direction that she should be paid a fixed monthly sum and that the residue was to be invested. There is no doubt that there is no immediate gift of the residue of the income It is to be accumulated during the lifetime of the widow. On that event happening it is to be determined who is to succeed. The question is whether a Hindu testator can direct the accumulation of the income of his property for an indefinite or any time without providing for the beneficial interest. The circumstance that the property has been given to trustees is wholly immaterial. A Hindu testator cannot create by a trust an interest which is otherwise incapable of creating, One of the best known of the several important principles which were enunciated in the Tagore case was that a man cannot be allowed to do, by indirect means, what is forbidden to be done directly, and that a trust can only be sustained to the extent, and for the purpose of giving effect to those beneficiary interests which the law recognizes.

As I understand the Hindu law, there must be a present beneficial interest created in property in order to render the gift, whether under a will or inter vivos, valid. In an unreported case (Gopal Lal Seal v. F. J. Marsden) decided on the 11th March 1887, I expressed my opinion on the subject in the following words :—" I do not think that a gift of this description is valid according to Hindu law. According to that law there must, as I [691] understand it, be a present beneficiary in order to make a gift valid. There may be a gift in future, but there must also be a gift in present. The law of gifts and of wills is the same, and in order that there may be a valid gift the donor must immediately divest himself of the property in favour of some existing beneficiary, and in the same way with regard to wills there cannot be a gift to a person to come into operation at a future date, unless there be a gift to a beneficiary in the interim." This is, as I understand it, merely what was decided in the Tagore case. In the judgment of that case we find the following: "Their Lordships for the reasons stated are of the opinion that a person capable of taking under a will must be such a person as could take a gift inter vivos, and therefore must, either in fact or in contemplation of law, be in existence at the death of the testator."

I cannot see how a direction to accumulate can be valid unless there be a present gift to support the direction to accumulate. The fact that in cases where there is a minor beneficiary, accumulation can be allowed, and that it may be possible to accumulate income for the purpose of paying debts does not to my mind help us. In the former case accumulation is rendered necessary by the incapacity of the beneficiary and is allowed in order that he may obtain the greater benefit from the gift which is made to him. In the latter case, the direction to accumulate is in aid of the proper administration of the testator's estate, and is sometimes necessary for the due performance of his legal and moral obligation to pay his debts.

I have assumed that the accumulations follow the gift of the corpus. I am very doubtful whether under the terms of this will there is any gift of the income.

In my opinion there is no valid gift of the income during the life-time of the widow.

There remains one matter in contest. It was contended that, even if there was no gift of the property, the widow took as heir of the first adopted son and by the second adoption did not divest herself of her mother's estate. There is no doubt that by adoption a woman divests herself of her widow's estate. I cannot see in [692] principle why she cannot divest herself of her mother's estate in the same way as she can divest herself of her widow's estate. The act is hers, and the object of it is to create an heir to her husband. Why that second adopted son should have different rights in the estate than those enjoyed by the first adopted son I cannot see. In my opinion, by a second adoption, a widow divests herself of her mother's estate in the same way as she divests herself of her widow's estate on the first adoption.

I agree that the suit should be dismissed.

Maclean, C.J.—As regards the costs of the suit the order as to them in the Court below may stand. As regards the costs of the appeal and of the cross-objections, the parties to the suit who are sui juris not objecting, the costs of all parties of the appeal and cross-objections may, as between solicitor and client, be paid out of the estate.

FULL BENCH REFERENCE.

The 3rd February, 1898.

PRESENT:

SIR FRANCIS W. MACLEAN, K.C.I.E., CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON, MR. JUSTICE TREVELYAN, MR. JUSTICE GHOSE AND MR. JUSTICE RAMPINI.

Mangun Jha and others .... Defendants

versus

Dolhin Golab Koer and others. ... .Plaintiffs.*

Limitation—Suit for damages for cutting and carrying away crops—Act XV of 1877, Schedule II, Articles 36, 39, 48, 49, and 109.

In a suit for damages for cutting and carrying away crops—

Held, by the Full Bench (RAMPINI, J., dissenting) such suit does not come within the terms of Art. 36† of Schedule II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877).

* Reference to Full Bench in Appeals from Appellate Decrees Nos 426, 460, 461, 462, and 463 of 1896, against the Decree of Babu Jogadurlabh Mozumdar, Subordinate Judge, First Court of Zilla Tirhoot, dated the 18th December 1895, reversing the decree of Babu Joya Pershad Pande, Additional Munsif of Sitamarhi, dated the 28th June 1895.

† [Art 36 —

Description of suit.	Period of limitation	Time from which period begins to run.
For compensation for any malfeasance, misfeasance or nonfeasance independent of contract and not herein specially provided for.	Two years.	When the malfeasance, misfeasance or nonfeasance takes place.]

[693] Per MACLEAN, C. J. (TREVELYAN, J., concurring).—Assuming that the case does not come within the terms of Art. 39*, the case is governed by Art. 49†. The crops, though immoveable in the first place, become specific moveable property when severed, and the fact that the severance was a wrongful act, does not make any difference.

Per MACPHERSON, J.—The case is governed by Art. 49 or 48‡, as the crops, after they had been cut, come under the description of specific moveable property. Possibly, also, the case might be brought under Article 109, if it is not brought under Article 39.

Per GHOSE, J.—Article 49 applied to this case. Surat Lal Mondal v. Umar Haji, (1895) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 877, followed.

Per RAMPINI, J. (dissentiente).—The suit, as framed, not being one for compensation for trespass, Article 39 does not apply. Art. 48 or 49 also does not apply as they deal with property which is ab initio moveable, and cannot be held applicable unless the first wrongful act, viz, the conversion of the immoveable into moveable property, be disregarded. Art. 109§ also does not apply, as it referred to a case in which possession of immoveable property was withheld. Art. 36, therefore, applied to the case.

Essoo Bhayaji v. The Steamship "Savitri", (1886) I. L. R., 11 Bom., 133, referred to.

Pandah Gazi v. Jennuddi, (1878) I. L. R., 4 Cal., 665, dissented from by TREVELYAN, J.

THE plaintiffs in this case sued for a declaration of their zerait rights in respect of certain lands and for recovery of damages for the cutting and carrying away of crops grown by them upon those lands. The material portions of the plaint were as follow:—

"5. On the 23rd November 1892 (the defendants) being emboldened by the order passed in the said Foujdari case, and misunderstanding the order, wrongfully cut and carried away the dhan crop of 10 bighas 12 cottahs of khas zerait land of the plaintiffs, which was grown on behalf of the plaintiffs, besides the dhan crop of the said land sold by auction. Through fear of recognizance, the servants of the plaintiff were unable to oppose and hinder the defendants strongly, although the zerait land did not lie in the land sold by auction, and neither the defendants nor Ramlal Kopur had any concern with the said zerait land and the crop thereof. This wrongful act of the [694] defendants has been highly prejudicial to the right of the plaintiffs. . . .

"6. Although the plaintiffs are in possession of the zerait land, they should get the dhan appropriated by the defendants. As it is difficult for the plaintiffs to get it from the defendants without suing in Court for the same, the plaintiffs are obliged to institute the present suit for damages in respect of the produce of the land as well as for declaration of their right to the zerait land cultivated by them.

"8. The cause of action accrued to the plaintiffs within the jurisdiction of this Court on the 23rd November 1892, when the dhan crop was cut and carried away.

"9. The plaintiffs pray for a decree as follows:—

(a) That upon determination of the plaintiffs' right and possession, it may be declared that 10 bighas 12 cottahs of land form a part of the plaintiffs' khas zerait and jote; that the dhan crop of 1300 Fasli was grown by the plaintiffs; that the defendants had no right to cut, loot and appropriate the crop, and that it was an illegal act of the defendants to cut and appropriate the dhan crop of the said zerait along with that of Ramlal Kopur's land sold by auction, taking advantage of the recognizance of the plaintiffs' servants.

(b) That upon adjudication of the point alluded to in the first prayer, and upon declaration of the plaintiffs' right to 10 bighas 12 cottahs of zerait land, as per undermentioned boundaries, situate in mauza Pangawa, Rs. 458-9-3 principal with interest, mesne profit on account of dhan crop of 1300 Fasli appropriated by the defendants may be awarded against the defendants." . . .

The plaint was filed on the 16th February 1895. The defendants did not raise any plea of limitation in the Courts below. On the merits, the first Court found in favour of the defendants on the question of cutting and taking away of crops and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge found for the plaintiffs and decreed the suit estimating the damage sustained by plaintiffs at Rs. 212.

[695] The defendants preferred a second appeal to the High Court, and one of the objections raised was that the claim for damages was barred by limitation, as the suit was instituted more than two years after the date of the cause of action.

The Division Bench (TREVELYAN and STEVENS, JJ.) before whom the case came on for hearing, being of opinion that there was conflict of opinion between different rulings on this point, made the following ORDER OF REFERNCE to a Full Bench:

In those cases the learned Vakil for the appellants has raised the objection that the suits are barred by limitation. This objection was not taken in the Courts below, but, having regard to the terms of s. 4 of the Limitation Act, it is an objection we are bound to consider.

The suits were brought for, amongst other things, damages for the cutting and carrying away of crops. This question of limitation only concerns the suits so far as they claim such damages. The suits were brought more than two years and less than three years, after the crops are said to have been cut and carried away. There have been contradictory decisions of this Court as to what Article of the Limitation Act applies to a suit for cutting and carrying away crops. The first case is a decision of MITTER and PRINSEP, JJ., in Shurnomoyee v. Pattarri Sirkar, (1878) I. L. R., 4 Cal., 625, in which the learned Judges held that a suit of this kind is a suit for profits of immoveable property belonging to the plaintiff wrongfully received by the defendant within the meaning of Act IX of 1871, Art. 109, which corresponds with Art. 109 of Act XV of 1877, and not a suit for compensation for any wrong, malfeasance, nonfeasance or misfeasance independent of contract within the meaning of Art. 40 of the Act of 1871. Art. 40 of Act IX of 1871 corresponds with Art. 36 of the present Act. According to that decision these suits would not be barred. But in the same volume, page 665, will be found a case, Pandah Gazi v. Jennuddi, (1878) I. L. R., 4 Cal., 665, decided by MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ., which holds that Article 40 is applicable. These two cases are directly in conflict. In a case, Surat Lall Mondal v. Umar [696] Haji, (1895) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 877, in which GHOSE and RAMPINI, JJ., differed, and which was reheard by NORRIS, J., in consequence of such difference of opinion, NORRIS and GHOSE, JJ., considered that Art. 36 of Act XV of 1877 did not apply, and RAMPINI, J., considered that it did apply. They dissented from the case to which we have referred in I. L. R., 4 Cal., 665, but did not refer the matter to a Full Bench.

In our opinion this point is one of importance, and as there are conflicting decisions of this Court on the subject we refer these appeals for the final decision of a Full Bench.

We may mention that a question of costs was raised, but, as the appeals have to go to the Full Bench, it is not for us to determine that question.

Babu Sarada Charan Mitra and Babu Lakshmi Narain Singh for the Appellants.

Babu Umakali Mukerjee and Babu Baldeo Narain Singh for the Respondents.

Babu Lakshmi Narayan Singh for the appellants contended that the suit was barred by the two years limitation prescribed in Art. 36, Schedule II of the Limitation Act (1877). The suit was not one for trespass but for compensation for crops carried away. [MACPHERSON, J.—The suit involved a trespass] Reading paragraph 5 of the plaint, it appears that the object of the suit is not for recovering damages for trespass on the land as in Art. 39. [MACPHERSON, J.—Why should not Art. 49 apply ?] That article relates to specific moveable property. Here the crops became moveable after the wrong, but when standing they were immoveable property. Pandah Gazi v. Jennuddi, (1878) I. L. R., 4 Cal., 665. [RAMPINI, J.—There may be two suits with two different limitations: two years for cutting away the crops; three years for removing them.] The case of Shurnomoyee v. Pattarri Sirkar, (1878) I. L. R.. 4 Cal., 625, takes a different view. But in that case there was no trespass at all I rely on the judgment of RAMPINI, J., in the case of Surat Lall Mondal v. [697] Umar Haji, (1895) I.L.R., 22 Cal., 877, and the case of Essoo Bhayaji v. The Steamship "Savitri," (1886) I.L.R., 11 Bom., 133, as to Art. 49. Art. 48 also deals with specific moveable and is, therefore, inapplicable. The case of immoveable property being made moveable is not specially provided for, and Art. 36 would apply. Another point was urged on behalf of some of the defendants who appealed on the ground that they were not allowed costs although they were exempted from the claim of damages in the lower Court.

Babu Umakali Mukerjee.—On the question of costs, there was no decree against those defendants (2 to 5) and there could be no appeal by them, and further the appeal has been valued at Rs. 212 only, in respect of the damages decreed and not in respect of costs of these defendants. It is a question of discretion which cannot be interfered with in second appeal. As to defendant No. 1, the Civil Procedure Code authorized the lower Court to saddle him with all costs. Shib Pershad Chuckerbutty v. Gunga Monee Debee, (1891) 16 W. R., 291, (293); Radhapershad Singh v. Ram Parmeswar Singh, (1882) I. L. R., 9 Cal., 797, (802).

As to the question of limitation, the Article here applicable is either 109, 39, 48, or 49. Art. 36 does not apply. In Pandah Gazi v. Jennuddi, (1878) I. L. R., 4 Cal., 665, the question was whether the limitation was one year under Art. 26 of the old law or not. The present question was not decided. That article is now incorporated in Art. 49 of the present Act. [TREVELYAN, J.—If so, Article 49 also would not apply under that ruling]. Art. 36 would apply only if there be no other article applicable to the case. [RAMPINI, J.—Here, cutting of the crops is the principal wrong, that brings you under Art. 36.] The plaintiff wants the value of the dhan and nothing for cutting of the standing crops. He does not, it is true, say that he was dispossessed, but that should not be the reason for cutting down the period of three years to two. Paragraph 5 and prayer in the plaint would shew that the claim was for mesne profits. [698] Art. 109 would then apply. Shurnomoyee v. Pattarri Sarkar, (1878) I. L. R., 4 Cal., 625. Then, again, reaping may be considered as trespass on land, and Art. 39 would apply. The other wrong is misappropriation, that brings the case under 48 or 49. In any view three years is the limitation for the suit. RAMPINI, J.'s judgment in Surat Lall Mondal v. Umar Haji, (1895) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 877, was based on a consideration of the frame of the suit. In this case dhan or the value of the crop, and not of the plant or standing crop, is claimed specifically. Art. 109, 39, 48, or 49, applies, Art. 36 has no application.

Babu Lakshmi Narain Singh in reply read Wharton's Law Lexicon p. 613, and section 211 of the Civil Procedure Code on the construction of Art. 109, and urged that none of the Articles 39, 48, 49, fully contemplated a case like the present. Art. 36 would therefore apply.

On the question of costs the judgment of PIGOT, J., in Secretary of State for India in Council v. Marjum Hosein Khan, (1885) I. L. R., 11 Cal., 359 was cited

The Full Bench (MACLEAN, C.J., MACPHERSON, TREVELYAN, GHOSE and RAMPINI, JJ.) delivered the following judgments:—

Maclean, C.J.— The short point we have to decide is whether the case falls within Art. 36 of the Second Schedule of the Limitation Act, or whether it is within some one or other of the articles to which I will refer in a moment. According to the reference, the suit was brought for, amongst other things, damages for cutting and carrying away crops, and it is admitted that, if Art. 36 applies, the suit is out of time, but that if Art. 39 or Arts. 48 or 49 or Art 109, which are the articles upon which the plaintiff relies, apply, then, as the period of three years, which is the period under the latter articles, had not elapsed when the suit was instituted, it was brought within time, and the statute of limitations is not a bar. To my mind Art. 36 does not apply to this case. In the first place that section is a general one and only applies when the particular [699] case is not specially provided for in the Act. Again, the words "malfeasance," "misfeasance" or "nonfeasance" are scarcely the terms one would ordinarily apply to such a tort as the present. They are terms which more generally, at any rate, I do not say entirely, are applied to some wrongful act committed by persons standing in a fiduciary or quasi-fiduciary character, such as executors, trustees, and directors of companies. But be this as it may, I think this particular case is otherwise specially provided for in the Act. Looking at the pleadings, and the nature of the relief sought, I am by no means satisfied that the case does not come within Art. 39, namely, compensation for trespass upon immoveable property. But assuming that not to be so, I think the case comes within

Art. 49, and I agree in the judgment of Mr. Justice GHOSE, in the case of Surat Lall Mondal v. Umar Haji, (1895) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 877. It is difficult to say that, under the circumstances of this case, the crops having been severed from the soil, it was not specific moveable property in respect of which the plaintiff was seeking compensation for the wrongful taking away of the same. Though immoveable in the first place, the crop became moveable property specific in the sense that it was in specie, as soon as it was severed from the soil, and I do not see why, for the purposes of this article, the fact that the severance was a wrongful act on the part of the tortfeasor ought to make any difference. Seeing that the defence is a statutory one, it is for the defendant to show clearly that the case comes within Article 36. However, agreeing as I do with Mr. Justice GHOSE'S judgment in the case I have referred to, I do not think I can usefully add anything to what he has said.

With respect to the question of costs I see no reason whatever for interfering upon that point with the decision of the Court below.

Macpherson, J.—I agree. I would only add that I cannot see any real conflict of opinion in the cases of Shurnomoye v. Pattari Sirkar, (1878) I. L.R., 4 Cal., 625, and Pandah Gazi v. Jennuddi, (1878) I.L.R., 4 Cal., 665, or between these [700] cases, and the case of Surat Lall Mondal v. Umar Haji, (1895) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 877. Mr. Justice GHOSE has clearly stated in the latter case the grounds on which he distinguished the case in I. L. R , 4 Cal., 665. Taking the question referred to us in this case to be whether Art. 36 applies to facts of the case as found, I agree with the learned Chief Justice that it does not apply. That article only applies to cases which are not otherwise specifically provided for by the Act. In this case the plaintiff's direct complaint is of an act of trespass on his land coupled with the cutting and carrying away of the crops off his land. Clearly he would be entitled to recover damages for trespass. The plaintiff claimed in addition damages for the crops which the defendants wrongfully cut and carried away, and although standing crops are immoveable property, I do not see on what ground we can hold that crops, after they have been cut, do not come under the description of specific moveable property, to which Art. 49 or 48 might apply. Possibly also the case might be brought under Art. 109, if it is not brought under Art. 39. It seems to me immaterial, or of very little importance, under which of the other articles it comes, because the plaintiff would, in any case, have three years from the date of the cause of action within which to bring his suit, and consequently would be in time. On these grounds I think that the appeal must be dismissed.

Trevelyan, J.—I entirely agree with the view expressed by the learned Chief Justice. I only wish to add this in regard to what Mr. Justice MACPHERSON has stated, although for the purposes of this appeal, it seems to me unnecessary to decide it. At the time of the reference, I thought, and I still think, that there is a distinct conflict of opinion between the decision of the learned Judges in the case reported in I. L. R., 22 Cal , and the decision of Mr. Justice MITTER reported in I.L.R., 4 Cal., 665. I think that the conclusion in the latter case as to Art. 40 of the second Schedule of the Limitation Act IX of 1871 is equivalent to a conclusion that Art. 36 of the second Schedule of the Limitation Act XV of 1877, which differs only from Art. 40 of Act IX of 1871 in the [701] prefixing of the word "wrong" to the words "malfeasance," "misfeasance" and "nonfeasance" would be applicable, whereas the ruling in the case in I. L. R., 22 Cal., is that it is not applicable. But, as I said before, having regard to the facts of this case and the judgment of the learned Chief Justice, it does not really very much matter whether those two cases agree or whether they differ.

Ghose, J.—I agree with the Chief Justice in holding that Art. 36 of the Limitation Act does not apply, but that Article 49 does apply, to the facts of this case. In the case of Surat Lal Mondal v. Umar Haji, (1895) I. L. R., 22 Cal, 877, I have fully given my reasons for arriving at the conclusion at which I then did, and at which I do now arrive; and I do not think I should be justified in referring to them again.

As regards the case decided by Mr. Justice MITTER and Mr. Justice MACLEAN reported in I. L. R., 4 Cal, 665, to which reference has been made, it is sufficient to say that for the reasons I gave at page 886 of I. L. R., 22 Cal., I do not think that that case decided the precise point which is raised before us in this case.

Rampini, J. -I regret I am unable to agree with the view taken of this case by the learned Chief Justice and by my learned Colleagues. I am of opinion that Art. 36 of the second Schedule of the Limitation Act applies to this case. I may say briefly that my reasons for thinking so are the same as those which I gave in my judgment in the case of Surat Lall Mondal v. Umar Haji, (1895) I. L. R, 22 Cal., 887. It appears to me that this case is on all fours with that case. The plaintiff in this case seeks to recover damages for the cutting and carrying away of his crops by the defendants, and consequently it appears to me that no other article of the Limitation Act, except Art. 36, will apply to such a case. The learned pleader for the respondent has argued that the case comes under either Art. 39 or Arts. 48 and 49 or Art. 109, but it appears to me that none of these articles will apply.

Art. 39 will not, in my opinion, apply because the suit, as framed, is not one for compensation for trespass upon immoveable [702] property. Arts. 48 and 49 will not apply, because this is not a suit for wrongfully misappropriating or injuring specific moveable property or for compensation for taking and determining the same. It is a suit, as is clearly shown from paragraph 5 of plaint, for the cutting and carrying away of standing crops which are immoveable property, whereas Arts. 48 and 49 can only apply to moveable property, which is ab initio moveable, and has not been converted from immoveable to moveable property by the act of the tortfeasor. In my opinion Arts. 48 and 49 cannot be held applicable unless the first wrongful act committed by the tortfeasors (in many cases, the principal wrong), viz., the conversion of the immoveable into moveable property, be disregarded. Article 109 will not apply because that article appears to me to refer to a case in which possession of immoveable property has been wrongfully withheld from the plaintiff. That is not the case in the present suit. The defendants disclaim all interest in the land, and it is not alleged that they wrongfully took possession of the land. That this is the correct interpretation of Art. 109 is apparent from the language of the article itself, from the definition of mesne profits given* in section 211 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and from the description of "an action for mesne profits" given at page 479 of Wharton's Law Lexicon, 9th edition, where it is said,—"An action for mesne profits is an action of trespass brought to recover profits derived from land whilst the possession of it has been improperly withheld."

For these reasons I am of opinion that Art. 36 applies, and I am supported in this view by the decision in the case of Pandah Gazi v. Jennuddi, (1878) I. L. R., 4 Cal., 665. I may also add that, as a matter of policy, it is a matter of some importance that the period of limitation in such cases should be short. In the case of Essoo Bhayaji v. The Steamship "Savitri", (1886) I.L.R., 11 Bom., 133, FARRAN, J., says: "There are no cases in which it is more desirable that the evidence by which they are supported or rejected should be promptly given and scrutinized than in actions of tort," and in my opinion this observation is [703] particularly applicable to cases of cutting crops, so common in Bengal. I have only to add that I have no reason to dissent from the judgment of the learned Chief Justice with regard to the costs of this case.

Maclean, C.J.—It is admitted that the appeals Nos 460, 461, 462 and 463 will be governed by this decision. The same order will be made in those cases also.

S. C. C. Appeal dismissed.

Kedar Nath Raut............Judgment-debtor
versus Kali Churn Ram (Decree-holder) and Khubi Lal.........Auction-Purchaser.*

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 310A—Sale in execution of mortgage decree—Application by mortgagor under s. 310A, Civil Procedure Code—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 104, Rules framed under Civil Procedure Code Amendment Act (V of 1894)

Held by the Full Bench :—

Section 310A of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882, as amended by Act V of 1894) does not apply to sales of mortgaged property under the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882.)

The rules framed by the High Court (Circular Order No. 13, dated 27th April 1892) under the provisions of s. 104 of the Transfer of Property Act do not make s. 310A applicable to such sales.

Ashruf Ali Chowdhry v. Net Lal Sahu, (1897) I. L. R., 23 Cal., 682, overruled ; Raja Ram Singhji v. Chunni Lal, (1897) I. L. R., 19 All., 205, dissented from.

Quere.—Whether a rule by the High Court under s. 104 of the Transfer of Property Act making s. 310A of the Civil Procedure Code applicable to sales of mortgaged property under the said Act would not be ultra vires.

KALI CHURN RAM instituted a suit for sale on a simple mortgage bond against Kedar Nath Raut, and obtained a decree on [704] the 29th January

* Full Bench Reference on Rule No. 2180 of 1896, issued by TREVELYAN and BEVERLEY, JJ., on 8th September 1896, against an order of Babu Sripati Chatterjee, Munsif at Arrah, dated the 17th February 1896.

1895, declaring the amount due on account of the mortgage and costs, and directing the defendant to pay the amount within three months from the date of decree. The decree was made absolute on the 22nd June 1895, and proclamation for sale issued. After several postponements, the sale was held on the 7th December 1895, and the mortgaged property was sold to Khubi Lal.

On the 10th December 1895, one Abdul Hye, alleging himself to be sublessee of the mortgaged property under the defendant applied to deposit the decretal amount and the purchasers' compensation under s. 310A of the Civil Procedure Code and made the deposit on the 12th December. On the 23rd December, the judgment-debtor applied to deposit the decretal amount, stating that the amount deposited by Abdul Hye really belonged to the judgment-debtor, but as that deposit was made in the name of Abdul Hye, a fresh deposit was rendered necessary. The correct amount was ascertained from the Court and deposit was made by the judgment-debtor on the 4th January 1896.

The decree-holder and the auction-purchaser raised several objections to the sale being set aside. The Munsif held with reference to one of the objections that he had no power to set aside sales under the Transfer of Property Act under the provisions of s. 310A of the Civil Procedure Code unless and until the High Court exercised its powers under s. 104 of the Transfer of Property Act and made s. 310 applicable to such sales The judgment-debtor's application was refused and the sale was confirmed on the 17th February 1896.

The judgment-debtor preferred an appeal to the District Judge, but the appeal was dismissed on the ground that no appeal was provided by law in respect of an order passed on an application under s. 310A.

The judgment-debtor then moved the High Court (TREVELYAN and BEVERLEY, JJ.) and that Court issued a rule calling upon the opposite party to shew cause why the order, dated the 17th February 1896, should not be set aside.

This rule (No 2180 of 1896) came on for hearing on the 27th [705] July 1897, before Mr. Justice TREVELYAN and Mr. Justice STEVENS who referred the case to a Full Bench.

The ORDER OF REFERENCE was as follows —

The question in this case is whether s. 310A of the Civil Procedure Code applies to sales of mortgaged property under the Transfer of Property Act. The only reported case of this Court on this question is Ashruf Ali Chowdhry v. Net Lal Sahu, (1896) I. L. R , 23 Cal., 682. In that case it was held that this section applied. The learned Judge then says "that by the rules framed by this Court (C. O. No. 13, dated the 27th April 1892) the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code are made applicable to sales of mortgaged property ordered by the Court under the Transfer of Property Act." On referring to the rules in question we find that the Code generally was not made applicable, but certain sections only were applied. As s. 310A had not been passed at the time the rules were framed, it is of course not included among the sections mentioned. It is only by the rules passed under s. 104 of the Transfer of Property Act that any portion of the Civil Procedure Code applies to Chapter IV of the Transfer of Property Act. As s. 310A has not been applied by the rules, we are unable to see how force can be given to it. Having grave doubts as to the correctness of the decision to which we have referred, we refer this matter for the final decision of a Full Bench.

The decision, which we have mentioned, was followed by a Division Bench of this Court in Appeal from Appellate Order No. 251 of 1895, decided on the 8th of June 1896.

Circular order No. 13*, dated 27th April 1892, alluded to in the reference runs thus :—

(1) An application under s. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act shall be made by means of a verified petition stating the facts.

(2) If the Court passes an order directing that the property, or any part of it, shall be sold, it shall issue a proclamation of sale and cause it to be served in the manner provided by the Code of Civil Procedure for the service of proclamations regarding the sale of immoveable property.

[706] (3) Sections 286 to 294, both inclusive, of the Code of Civil Procedure shall apply to such sales.

(4) Sections 304 to 319, both inclusive, and ss. 328 to 335 of the Code of Civil Procedure, shall apply to proceedings subsequent to sale under a mortgage.

(5) The procedure to be followed in the execution of a decree passed under s. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act is that prescribed by the Code of Civil Procedure.

Section 310A of the Code of Civil Procedure was added to the Code by Act V of 1894, which was passed on 2nd March 1894.

The reference came on for hearing before the Full Bench on the 28th January 1898.

Babu Karuna Sindhu Mukerjee (Babu Asutosh Mookerjee with him) for the petitioner contended that under the rule of the circular No 13, ss. 304 to 319 of the Code having been applied to mortgage decrees, 310A, which was only an addition to 310 should also be applied, the provision was one of procedure only, and the enumeration of the sections was not exclusive. Achalabala Bose v. Surendra Nath Dey, (1897) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 766 (772): 1 Cal. W. N., 550 (555), Jogodanund Singh v. Amrita Lal Sircar, (1895) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 767. Section 310A is, in its scope and purpose, retrospective. Assuming it to be a section conferring a right, it may be extended to mortgage cases. In Raja Ram Singh v. Chunni Lal, (1897) I. L. R., 19 All., 205, 208, s. 291 of the Code has been extended, although s. 89 provided that the right of redemption was extinguished. The same view was taken in a case, Vallabha Valiya Rajah v. Vedapuratti, (1895) 5 Mad. L. J., pp. 282, 289: I. L. R., 19 Mad., 40. The correct view appears to be that the Code is applicable to all cases, except as otherwise provided for in the Transfer of Property Act. The latter enactment is not complete by itself and cannot exclude the general procedure, and the rule made under s. 104 was not meant to be exhaustive. Ashruf Ali Chowdhry v. Net Lal Sahu, (1896) I. L. R., 23 Cal., 682. Before the rules of the High Court came into operation in 1892, the Code was made applicable in the mofussil to all cases under the Transfer of Property [707] Act, and that was for ten years from 1882 when the Act was passed. The Privy Council has taken the same view—Brij Mohun Thakur v. Rai Uma Nath Chowdhry, (1892) I. L. R., 20 Cal., 8.

Syed Shumsul Huda for the opposite party.—When the rules were framed s. 310A had no existence, and the rule that "ss. 304 to 319 shall apply," did not include 310A. It could not, moreover, have been intended that any future alterations should be incorporated in the rule. The provision of s. 310A is also one which does not come within the purview of s. 104 of the Transfer of Property Act. The application of that section (310A) would not be "consistent" with the Act nor would it "carry out the provisions" of Chapter IV. Reads s. 89 and s. 88. The application of 310A would involve a variation in the decree. It would also be inconsistent in the case of a sale on a second mortgage s. 96. The case cited from I. L. R., 19 Allahabad, is not in point.

Calcutta Gazette* of 9th April 1892, Part I, p. 414, and Assam Gazette of 16th April 1892, Part III, p. 272.

There is only an obiter dictum on the present question. As to the general application of the Code, vide Deefholts v. Peters, (1887) I. L. R., 14 Cal., 631; Himatram v. Khushal Jethiram Gujar, (1893) I. L. R., 18 Bom., 98; Claim sections were held inapplicable.

Babu Karuna Sindhu Mukerjee in reply.

The judgments of the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J., MACPHERSON, TREVELYAN, BANERJEE and JENKINS, JJ.) were as follows:—

Maclean, C.J.—The question we have to answer is, whether or not s. 310A of the Code of Civil Procedure applies to a sale of mortgaged property under a decree made in accordance with the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. The question has arisen by reason of the decision in Ashruf Ali Chowdhry v. Net Lal Sahu, (1896) I. L. R., 23 Cal., 682, from which the referring Judges, TREVELYAN and STEVENS, JJ., dissented. That case appears to me to be based upon the view that under rules framed by this Court (C. O. No. 13, dated 27th April 1892) "the provisions of the Code were made applicable to sales of mortgaged property ordered by the Court [708] under the Transfer of Property Act." I think this, which is the foundation of that judgment, is a mistake, the rules in question only make certain sections of the Code applicable to such sales, and not the whole Code. Section 310A of the Civil Procedure Code only became law in 1894, whilst the above rules came into effect in April 1892. The judgment-debtor, the mortgagor, has contended that the property was sold "under Chapter 19" of the above Code, within the meaning of s. 310A. That, to my mind, is a fallacy; the property was sold under the decree made in pursuance of the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. As s. 310A had not been passed at the time the above rules came into effect, that section could not have been included among those mentioned in the rules in question. But even if it had been, I question whether such a rule would not have been ultra vires. Section 104 of the Transfer of Property Act only enables the High Court to make rules "consistent with this Act" (The Transfer of Property Act) "for carrying out . . . . the provisions contained in this chapter." Let us consider what the effect would have been of a rule which made or purported to make s. 310A applicable to such a sale as that in question. Under s. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, if an order for an absolute sale be passed, the mortgagor's right to redeem and the security are extinguished and the proceeds of sale are to be applied according to the provisions of s. 88 of the same Act. Those are the mortgagee's rights under that Act. But if s. 310A of the Code is to apply to such a case, the mortgagee's rights are materially affected as are those of the purchaser, since, after the sale has been made, the mortgagor, on certain terms, may yet redeem his property. In other words, the period for redemption is substantially extended. If, then a rule had been made by the High Court making s. 310A applicable to such a sale, it seems to me exceedingly doubtful whether such a rule would have been "consistent with the Act." And in the case of a sale ordered at the suit of a puisne mortgagee or where there are a succession of puisne incumbrances inconvenience at least, if not substantial difficulties, might arise from applying s. 310A to a sale in such a case.

Whilst there is good reason for such a section as 310A [709] in relation to sales of property, other than mortgaged property, there is no such reason as regards the latter. In the former case the sale may have been hurried on, the debtor may consequently not have been able to get the money, and the Legislature may have reasonably thought that the debtor should have one more chance of, perhaps, retaining his ancestral property, by paying the money on certain terms. But this reasoning has no application to the case of mortgaged property, where under the decree the mortgagor is given at least six months to redeem. The case of Raja Ram Singhji v. Chuni Lal, (1897) I. L. R., 19 All., 205, is cited by the applicants as an authority in their favour, but the express point we are now discussing was not decided in that case, and the observations of the Judges were admittedly obiter dicta. I am unfortunately unable to concur in them.

It is urged that the provisions for the execution of decrees in the Code of Civil Procedure are general in their application, and apply to the sales of all mortgaged properties, where the decrees have been made under the Transfer of Property Act. I am unable to accede to this view, for, if this were so, it is very difficult to see why s. 104 was introduced into the Act. In other words, if the whole of the provisions of the Code as to the execution of decrees apply to a sale such as that in question, s. 104 of the Transfer of Property Act, was quite unnecessary. But it is abundantly clear that the Legislature left it to the High Court to frame rules consistent with the Act to carry out the provisions of that particular chapter of that Act, some of which relate to the sale of mortgaged properties. In the face of this particular section (s. 104) it is difficult to say that the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure were to apply, and least of all, a provision which was not even law when the Transfer of Property Act was passed. I may add that to apply s. 310A to the sale of mortgaged properties in Calcutta would not only, in my opinion, have a mischievous tendency, but would, I consider, be inconsistent with the practice which has hitherto prevailed. For these reasons I answer the question by saying that s. 310A of the Civil Procedure Code does not apply to sales of mort-[710]gaged property under the Transfer of Property Act. The rule must be discharged with costs, including the costs of this reference.

Macpherson, J.—I agree.

Trevelyan, J.—I also agree.

Jenkins, J.—I agree with the Chief Justice.

Banerjee, J.—The question referred to us is whether s. 310A of the Civil Procedure Code applies to sales of mortgaged property under the Transfer of Property Act.

I agree with my learned colleagues in thinking that the question ought to be answered in the negative; and I base my decision upon this short ground.

Section 310A, as its language clearly shows, applies by its own force only to sales of immoveable property under the chapter of the Civil Procedure Code in which it is included; and it may apply to any other sales to which it may be made applicable expressly or by necessary implication. Now the sale in this case was one not under the Code of Civil Procedure, but under the Transfer of Property Act; that is under the rules made by this Court under s. 104 of that Act; and neither by these rules, nor by any other rule or law, has s. 310A been extended to such a sale. Section 310A cannot, therefore, apply to the sale in question.

It was argued that as by the rules made by this Court under s. 104 of the Transfer of Property Act, most of the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure are made applicable to sales under that Act, such sales should be held to be sales under Chapter XIX of the Code, and s. 310A should be held applicable to them in consequence; and in support of this argument the case of Ashruf Ali Chowdry v. Net Lal Sahu, (1896) I. L. R., 23 Cal., 682, was relied upon. The case cited is no doubt in point. But I must respectfully dissent from it, as the sale is one under the rules made by this Court and not under Chapter XIX of the Code of Civil Procedure, and none the less so, because certain of the provisions of that chapter have been made applicable to it. Section 310A had not been enacted when the rules in question were made by this Court, and [711] these rules do not say that sales under the Transfer of Property Act are to be held under Chapter XIX of the Code of Civil Procedure, or that the provisions of that chapter, taken as a whole, shall apply to such sales. The enactment of s. 310A cannot, therefore, affect such sales.

In this view of the case I think it unnecessary to decide whether this Court has the power under s. 104 of the Transfer of Property Act to make s. 310A apply to sales under that Act. If it had been necessary to decide that question, I should have been inclined to answer it in the affirmative.

APPELLATE CRIMINAL.

The 24th March, 1898.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE AMEER ALI AND MR. JUSTICE HILL.

Taju Pramanik and others............Appellants

Queen-Empress............Respondent.*

Charge to the Jury—Misdirection—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 423—Setting aside verdict of the jury—Power of Appellate Court to deal with the case.

It is the duty of the Judge to call the attention of the jury to the different elements constituting the offence and to deal with the evidence by which it is proposed to make the accused liable. Failure to do so amounts to misdirection.

Queen-Empress v. Balya Somya, (1890) I. L. R., 15 Bom., 369, followed.

Statements by some of the accused persons, which do not amount to a confession, and which do not in any way incriminate them, are not admissible in evidence against any persons other than those making them. Omission to direct the jury that in dealing with the evidence against the accused other than those making the statements they are not to take into consideration such statements, also amounts to misdirection.

If the verdict of the jury is set aside on any of the grounds mentioned in cl. (d) of s. 423 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) then there is no restriction on the powers of the Appellate Court to deal with a case of which it has complete seizin in any of the manners provided in that section. [712] The law nowhere lays down that when the verdict of the jury is set aside the Court must necessarily direct a new trial.

* Criminal Appeal No. 110 of 1898 against the order of F. S. Hamilton, Esq., Additional Sessions Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 3rd of December 1897.

Wafadur Khan v. Queen-Empress, (1894) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 955, dissented from. The course adopted in Queen-Empress v. O'Hara, (1890) I. L. R., 17 Cal., [642] Regina v. Naoroji Dadabhai, (1872) 9 Bom. H. C., 358, and Queen-Empress v. Haribole Chunder Ghose, (1876) I. L. R., 1 Cal. 207, followed.

THE facts of the case sufficient for the purpose of this report appear from the judgment.

Babu Promotho Nath Sen appeared on behalf of the Appellants.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Gordon Leith) appeared on behalf of the Crown.

The judgment of the High Court (Ameer Ali and Hill, JJ) is as follows :—

Eight persons were charged in the Sessions Court of Mymensingh under ss. 395 and 412 of the Indian Penal Code and tried with a jury on the 3rd of December 1897. Four of the men so charged were acquitted; against the remaining four named, respectively, Taju Pramanik, Kasir Khan, Shahabatullah alias Sadatullah and Surat Khan the jury returned an unanimous verdict of guilty. Surat Khan was convicted under s. 412 and sentenced by the Additional Sessions Judge to six months' rigorous imprisonment, Taju Pramanik was convicted under section 395 and sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment; whilst Kasir Khan and Shahabatullah alias Sadatullah were convicted under s. 395 read with s. 75 and sentenced to four and five years' rigorous imprisonment respectively.

On appeal it has been contended before us that the verdict of the jury was erroneous owing to the misdirection of the learned Sessions Judge in not calling their attention either to the ingredients which constitute the offence of dacoity or to the evidence affecting the appellants in relation to the charge under s. 395. It is said that the learned Sessions Judge merely read to the jury the definition of dacoity and left it to them to apply the law; and that [713] considering the complex character of the offence he ought to have explained the law to the jury with special reference to the facts proved in the case. It is also contended that the learned Judge was wrong in admitting against the appellants the statements of two men who were also accused in the case and certainly in not calling the attention of the jury to the fact that those statements were not admissible against the appellants, and that no weight should be attached to them in considering the case against any of the accused other than those making them. There are other contentions raised in connection with the question of misdirection, to which we think it unnecessary to refer, as, in our opinion, the verdict must be reversed on the two grounds to which we have already adverted.

In our opinion it was not sufficient for the Judge merely to read to the jury the definition of dacoity, and to leave it to them to find out whether the evidence produced for the prosecution made out a case under s. 395 against the accused. It was the duty of the Judge to call the attention of the jury to the different elements constituting the offence, and to deal with the evidence by which it was proposed to make the accused liable under the section. His failure to do so, in our judgment, amounts to misdirection. The charge of the learned Sessions Judge under section 412 seems to us equally defective. In the case of Queen-Empress v. Balya Somya, (1890) I. L. R., 15 Bom., 369, the accused were charged with retaining stolen property under s. 411 of the Indian Penal Code. The Sessions Judge, in his charge to the jury, merely directed them to find whether the property was stolen, and whether it was retained by the accused. The Bombay High Court held that the charge was defective and amounted to a misdirection. It appears to us that in the present case also it was incumbent on the Sessions Judge to have explained to the jury that, in order to convict the accused under s. 412, it was necessary to find they retained or had possession of the goods with guilty knowledge. We think also that the Judge ought to have brought to the notice of the jury the fact that the appellants, at the time of the search, were in Police custody. It would then [714] have rested with the jury to draw any inference of fact they chose regarding the bonâ fides of the search.

As regards the second contention, namely, the improper admission of the statements made by some of the accused, it is enough to say that those statements do not amount to a confession. They do not in any way incriminate the persons making them. The learned Sessions Judge, in his charge to the jury, stated as follows: "There being no evidence against Basir and nothing against Haran, but an uncorroborated statement of the accused Wazir, on which it is not safe to rely without corroboration, I direct you to return a verdict of not guilty against them."

But the Judge did not direct the jury that in dealing with the evidence against the present appellants they were to omit entirely from consideration the statements made by Fakir and Uzir, and we are distinctly of opinion his failure to do so has resulted in a miscarriage of justice. Those statements, without a direction from the Judge to the effect that they were not admissible in evidence against any person other than the men making them, must have weighed with the jury in bringing in a verdict of guilty against the present appellants, certainly against Shahabatullah alias Sadatullah, against whom there is no evidence on which he could possibly be convicted under s. 395 or s. 412.

Upon these grounds we are of opinion that the verdict of the jury must be reversed, and we accordingly reverse it. The verdict being thus set aside, we have under s. 423 the power to deal with the case upon the facts; and after going through the evidence we are of opinion that Shahabatullah alias Sadatullah must be acquitted and the other two appellants retried.

Mr. Leith however contends on the authority of the case of Wafadur Khan v. The Queen-Empress, (1894) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 955, that we have no power to consider whether the evidence is sufficient or not against any of the accused, and the only thing we can do, if we find the verdict must be reversed, is to direct a retrial. No doubt this proposition is broadly laid down in that case, but we are not prepared to agree with the view of the law enunciated there. We [715] do not, however, think it necessary to refer the question to a Full Bench as, in our opinion, the course taken by the full Court in the case of The Empress v. O'Hara, (1890) I. L. R., 17 Cal., 642, fully warrants the view we take of the law. The same course was adopted by the Bombay High Court in the case of Regina v. Nauroji Dadabhai, (1872) H. C., 9 Bom., H.C., 358, and by this Court in that of The Empress v. Huribole Chunder Ghose, (1876) I. L. R., 1 Cal., 207. These cases are not referred to by the learned Judges in Empress v. Wafadur Khan who proceed simply on the principle laid down in Makin v. The Attorney-General for New South Wales, (1894) L. R., A. C., 57 We admit that theoretically the principle enunciated in Makin's case is of considerable importance. But it seems to us the policy of the law in this country is different, and that the Legislature has, with a distinct purpose, vested the Appellate Court with very large powers. A reference to s. 423 of the Criminal Procedure Code will make clear our meaning on this point. That section deals with the powers of the Appellate Court and runs as follows:—

"The Appellate Court shall then send for the record of the case, if such record is not already in Court, after perusing such record, and hearing the appellant or his pleader, if he appears, and the Public Prosecutor, if he appears, and in case of an appeal under s. 417, the accused, if he appears, the Court may, if it considers there is no sufficient ground for interfering, dismiss the appeal, or may—

(a) In an appeal from an order of acquittal, reverse such order and direct that further inquiry be made, or that the accused be retried or committed for trial, as the case may be, or find him guilty and pass sentence on him according to law.

(b) In an appeal from a conviction (1) reverse the finding and sentences and acquit or discharge the accused, or order him to be retried, by a Court of competent jurisdiction subordinate to such Appellate Court or committed for trial ; or (2) alter the finding, maintaining the sentence, or with or without altering [716] the finding, reduce the sentence ; or (3) with or without such reduction, and with or without altering the finding, alter the nature of the sentence, but not so as to enhance the same.

(c) In an appeal from any other order, alter or reverse such order.

(d) Nothing herein contained shall authorize the Court to alter or reverse the verdict of a jury, unless it is of opinion that such verdict is erroneous owing to a misdirection by the Judge, or to a misunderstanding on the part of the jury of the law as laid down by him."

Clause (d) restricts the grounds on which the verdict of the jury can be reversed or altered. But once the verdict is out of the way, there is no restriction on the powers of the Court to deal with the case of which it has complete seizin, in any of the manners provided in that section. For example, taking clause (b) the High Court, as the Appellate Court, has the power either to reverse the finding and sentence and acquit or discharge the accused, or order him to be retried, or alter the findings, maintaining the sentence, or, without altering the finding, reduce the sentence. Nowhere does the law lay down that, when the verdict of the jury is set aside, the Court must necessarily direct a new trial.

In this view it seems to us that a reference to a Full Bench will only cause unnecessary harassment to the appellants. As already stated, against Shahabatullah alias Sadatullah there is no evidence whatsoever to warrant a conviction. We accordingly set aside his conviction and acquit him and direct that he be discharged. We also set aside the conviction of the other two, Taju and Kasir and in their cases direct a retrial.

Land Registration Act (Bengal Act VII of 1876), s. 78 and s. 42--Suit for rent by unregistered proprietor—Transfer of proprietary right by succession.

Section 78 of the Land Registration Act, 1876, precludes a person claiming as proprietor from suing a tenant for rent unless his name has been registered as such under the Act. It is immaterial how the transfer of proprietorship is effected, whether it is a case of transfer by purchase or a case of transfer by succession.

Section 42 of the Act makes it clear that every person succeeding to the proprietary right in any estate must apply for registration of his name. Surjakanta Acharya Bahadur v. Hemanta Kumari, (1889) I. L. R., 16 Cal., 706, applied.

THE plaintiffs, who were the heirs of the registered proprietors, brought this suit for the recovery of arrears of rent. The defendants pleaded, amongst other things, that the suit could not proceed, as the plaintiffs had not been registered as proprietors as required by s. 78 of Bengal Act VII of 1876. The District Judge held that that section was applicable to cases of transfers of proprietorship and not to cases of its devolution on the heirs of registered proprietors, and decreed the plaintiffs' suit. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Babu Prosunno Chunder Roy appeared for the Appellant.

Babu Lakshmi Narain Sinha appeared for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (O'Kinealy and Rampini, JJ.) is as follows:—

This is a suit for arrears of rent, to which objection is raised by the defendant that the plaintiffs are not entitled to sue for rent, [718] inasmuch as their names have not been registered under the provisions of s. 78 of Bengal Act VII of 1876. The learned District Judge has overruled this objection and decreed the suit, and the defendant now appeals to this Court.

We are of opinion that the judgment of the District Judge is not correct. We think that the objection under s. 78 of the Land Registration Act must prevail. The learned District Judge says that the case of Surjakanta Acharya Bahadur v. Hemanta Kumari, (1889) I. L. R., 16 Cal., 706, is not a precedent in this case, because that refers to a case of transfer of proprietorship and not to one, as in this case, of sons succeeding their parents. We think, however, that under section 78 it is immaterial how the transfer of proprietorship is effected, whether it is a case of transfer by purchase or a case of transfer by succession. It is further apparent, under the provisions of section 42 of the Act, that every person succeeding to the proprietary right in any estate, must apply for registration of his name. The learned pleader for the respondents in this case urges that his clients are governed by the Mitakshara law, and they succeed by survivorship. We think, however, that in these circumstances the provisions of the second clause of s. 42 of the Act still apply. In any case, the plaintiffs come within the terms of s. 78 of the Act, and they are barred from recovering rent by suit under the provisions of that section.

We decree the appeal, and, setting aside the decrees of both the lower Courts, dismiss the suit with costs in all the Courts.

One M obtained a decree for possession of a jote and for mesne profits against the plaintiffs. Subsequently, by a registered ekrarnamah, the decree-holder having received from the judgment-debtors (the plaintiffs) the amount due on account of mesne profits, and also a further consideration of Rs. 156, relinquished an eight-anna share of the jote in favour of them. The remaining eight-anna share of the jote was also sold by the decree-holder by a registered kobala to the judgment-debtors. The heirs of the decree-holder on his death applied for execution of the decree, but notwithstanding the judgment-debtors' objection that the decree could not be executed, it having been satisfied by virtue of the aforesaid ekrarnamah and kobala, they obtained possession of the jote; the adjustment, not having been certified, was not taken into account by the Court executing the decree. On a regular suit by the judgment-debtors for a declaration of title to, as well as for the recovery of, possession of the jote, the defence mainly was that under s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure no separate suit would lie.

Held, that such a suit was maintainable, and that s 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure was no bar to it.

Babu Girija Sunker Mazumdar for the Respondents.

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (GHOSE and AMEER ALI, JJ.) :- -

Ghose, J. --The facts of this case are stated by the Subordinate Judge in his judgment as follows: "One Mohesh Chunder Dutt obtained a decree for possession of a jote against the defendants, appellants (it should be plaintiffs, respondents), and also for mesne profits for the period of dispossession. Subsequently to the passing of the decree, on the 12th of Sraban 1298, Mohesh Chunder received from the judgment-debtors the amount due on account of wasilat, and for a further consideration of Rs. 156 relinquished an eight-anna share of the jote in favour of the [720] judgment-debtors by an ekrarnamah which was duly registered. By a subsequent kobala (also registered), dated the 19th of Bhadra 1299, Mohesh sold the remaining eight annas share of the jote to the judgment-debtors. But, on his death, his heirs, the present appellants, took out execution of the decree, and the judgment-debtors raised the objection that the decree was satisfied by virtue of the ekrarnamah and kobala executed by Mohesh, but as this adjustment was not certified under s. 258 of the Civil Procedure Code, it was not taken into account, and the heirs of the decree-holder, Mohesh Chunder, were put in possession of the jote. Thereupon the judgment-debtors, the present respondents, brought a regular suit against the heirs of the decree-holders, the present appellants, claiming the following reliefs, viz., (1) a declaration of the plaintiffs' rights to the jote in question; (2) a declaration that the heirs of Mohesh Chunder have no right to the jote in question; (3) for recovery of possession of the jote in question; (4) for an order restraining the defendants from recovering the mesne profits in execution of the decree; (5) for recovery of the value of the crops taken by the defendants from the jote in question; (6) for mesne profits for the period the plaintiffs were kept out of possession; (7) for costs of the suit, and (8) for any other suitable relief."

The main defence to this action was that it was barred by the provisions of s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The Court of First Instance overruled this plea, and held that the plaintiffs were entitled to the reliefs asked for in the plaint, save and except the fourth relief, namely, that the defendants may be restrained from recovering the mesne profits in execution of the decree. So far as this particular matter is concerned, it is not before us, the plaintiffs not having appealed in the Lower Appellate Court against the judgment of the Court of First Instance. The Subordinate Judge has, on appeal by the defendants, dismissed the suit upon the ground that s. 244 of the Code is a bar to the maintenance thereof; and in support of this view he has quoted the case of Azizan v. Matuk Lal Sahu, (1893) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 437. The sole ques-[721]tion, therefore, for our consideration is whether, by reason of the provisions of s. 244 of the Code, this suit is barred.

Now, it will be observed that the deeds under which the plaintiffs sought for the reliefs to which we have already referred, are deeds that were executed in their favour by the decree-holder upon dates subsequent to the passing of the decree, and for fresh consideration. No doubt, when the decree was sought to be executed, the plaintiffs contended before the execution Court that, by reason of the said two deeds, the decree in question had been satisfied, and, therefore, it could not be executed. But the Court in execution declined to go into the question, as indeed it was not competent to go into it, having regard to the provisions of s. 258 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the adjustment of the decree having been made out of Court, and having not been certified to the Court in accordance with the Code. Section 258 in the last paragraph provides: "Unless such a payment or adjustment" (that is to say payment or adjustment out of Court) "has been certified as aforesaid, it shall not be recognized as a payment or adjustment of the decree by any Court executing the decree." So that it seems to be quite clear that the execution Court was not competent to recognize the adjustment, which was pleaded by the plaintiffs, of the decree in question.

In the case of Azizan v. Matuk Lal Sahu, (1893) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 437, referred to by the Subordinate Judge, the facts were that the defendant had obtained a decree against the plaintiff, which he partially executed, and thereupon an adjustment of account took place between the plaintiff and the defendant, in which a certain sum was found due by the plaintiff to the defendant, for which sum the plaintiff gave a bond to the defendant, and in consideration of which the defendant agreed to exonerate the plaintiff from liability for the balance due under the decree. This satisfaction of the decree was not certified to the Court. Subsequently, the defendant applied for further execution of the decree. In a suit for a declaration that the defendant had no right to execute the decree, and for an injunction to restrain him from executing it, it was contended that the action was barred by s 244 of the Civil Procedure Code. [722] It was held by the majority of the Judges who composed the Divisional Bench that s. 244 is not limited by s. 258, and that the suit is not maintainable, and that where a decree is satisfied by an agreement out of Court, and such satisfaction is not certified to the Court, a subsequent suit on the agreement is not maintainable if the object of the suit is to restrain the decree-holder from executing his decree in contravention of the agreement.

The circumstances of this case are very different. Eliminating from our consideration the fourth relief, which the plaintiffs asked for, namely, that the defendants might be restrained from recovering the mesne profits in execution of the decree, the object of the present suit is not to restrain the decree-holder from executing his decree in contravention of the agreement entered into between the parties as evidenced by the two documents, the ekrarnamah and the kobala, to which we have already referred, but rather the suit is with the object of recovering property under that agreement. The defendants, decree-holders, have already in execution of the decree been put in possession of the properties covered thereby, and what the plaintiffs now say is in effect this: Subsequent to the decree, you received from us certain considerations for which you conveyed the property covered by the decree; we were not at liberty to oppose the execution of the decree, and so you were put in possession of the property in execution; but we are, notwithstanding, entitled to recover the same from you upon the conveyances executed by you. We think that this action is quite maintainable.

It has, however, been contended by the learned Vakil for the respondents that the adjustment which was pleaded by the plaintiffs in the execution department could have been dealt with by the Court under section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and, therefore, the present suit is incompetent But having regard to the provisions of the last paragraph of section 258, to which we have already referred, we are unable to hold that the executing Court could go into a question which is distinctly prohibited from being gone into by "any Court executing the [723] decree." It seems to us, therefore, that there is no reason why the plaintiffs should not be entitled to recover upon the documents to which we have already referred—documents executed subsequent to the passing of the decree, and by which distinct rights were conveyed to them.

Upon these considerations we think that the decree of the Court below should be set aside, and that of the Court of First Instance restored with costs, the ekrarnamah and kobala having been found to be genuine by the Court of First Instance, and that finding not having been impeached by the defendants before the Lower Appellate Court.

Ameer Ali, J.—The only question in this case is whether, having regard to the provisions of s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, this suit is maintainable. Mohesh Chunder Dutt, the predecessor of the defendants, appears to have obtained a decree against the plaintiffs in respect of the lands in suit. Subsequent to the decree an arrangement was arrived at between him and the plaintiffs by which, in consideration of a certain sum of money paid by the plaintiffs, he transferred to them, or relinquished in their favour, a moiety of the said lands. Subsequent thereto he conveyed to them the remaining moiety also for consideration. Upon the death of Mohesh Chunder the defendants took out execution of the decree obtained by him. The plaintiffs objected that the decree having been adjusted no execution could issue. That objection was overruled on the ground that, inasmuch as the adjustment had not been certified, the Court was not in a position to entertain it. The defendants, thereupon, in execution of the decree, obtained possession of the lands in suit. The plaintiffs now bring this suit for a declaration of their right in respect of this jote upon the basis of the relinquishment and the conveyance executed by Mohesh, and they pray for the usual ancillary reliefs. They also ask for an injunction, which has been refused by the first Court. The suit, therefore, was not directed to interfere in any way with the execution of the decree that had been obtained by Mohesh nor was its scope parallel to any of the matters referred to in s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code, and consequently it does not appear to be barred in any way by the provisions [724] of that section. But it is contended that, under the ruling in the case of Azizan v. Matuk Lal Sahu, (1893) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 437, the suit is not maintainable because the plaintiffs could have, in the course of the execution of the decree, raised the objection that, there being this relinquishment and conveyance from Mohesh in their favour, the decree could not be executed. But if regard be had to the provisions of s. 258 it will be seen that it covers a much larger ground than what is covered by s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Section 258 deals with all adjustments arrived at between the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor. An adjustment may not be confined to the satisfaction or discharge of the decree. There may be matters in the course of an adjustment which may be outside that, and there is no reason whatsoever why, if any other arrangement has been arrived at, the judgment-debtors should not be entitled to maintain an action upon it, nor does there appear to be any ground based upon the provisions of s. 244 which would preclude the maintenance of such an action.

I may observe that the case of Azizan v. Matuk Lal Sahu, (1893) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 437 is one of a peculiar character. The decision there is limited to the reason that a subsequent suit brought with the object of interfering with the execution of the decree cannot be maintained under s. 244. How far I would be prepared to concur in the conclusion arrived at in that case it is not necessary to consider in the present case, for the facts here are totally different.

I am of opinion, therefore, that the suit was maintainable, that there is nothing in the provisions of s. 244 which covers this suit, and that the Lower Appellate Court was wrong in dismissing the plaintiffs' action on the ground it has done. I agree, therefore, in setting aside its order and in restoring the decree of the first Court.

Cess Act (Bengal Act IX of 1880), s. 34 and s. 35—Preparation and publication of valuation roll Liability to pay cess.

In the case of rent-paying lands the publication of the valuation rolls under s. 35 of the Cess Act (Bengal Act IX of 1880) is not a condition precedent to the attaching of liability to pay road cess in accordance with the valuation rolls. Ishanullah Khan v. Trilochan Bagchi, (1886) I. L. R., 13 Cal., 197 distinguished.

THE plaintiff instituted this suit for recovery of arrears of rent and cesses against the defendants, who held a patni tenure under him. The plaintiff was held liable by the Collector to pay road cess upon the basis of some valuation rolls prepared in 1892 under s. 34 of the Cess Act. The defendant, who was, previous to the suit, paying the cess at the same rate as the plaintiff was paying to the Collector, objected to pay at that rate any longer on the ground that the valuation rolls were not published under s. 35 of the Cess Act, but was willing to pay according to the previous valuation of 1889. The Subordinate Judge decided in favour of the defendant, holding that publication was necessary before liability to pay cess would arise.

The only point raised in this appeal is as to whether the defendant is liable to pay road cess to the plaintiff at the same rate as [726] that at which the plaintiff has been held bound to pay road cess to the Collector.

The plaintiff is the holder of an estate in which the defendant holds a patni tenure, and the plaintiff has been held liable by the Collector to pay road cess upon the basis of certain valuation rolls of 1892. The defendant has been paying road cess for some years at the rate specified in these papers, but in this suit he contends that he is not liable to pay road cess at that rate any longer, in consequence of the valuation roll not having been published under s. 35 of the Cess Act, and that he is liable to pay according to the previous valuation of 1889.

The Subordinate Judge has found in favour of the defendant, being of opinion that the publication of the valuation rolls under s. 35 of the Cess Act is a condition precedent to any liability attaching to the defendant to pay road cess in accordance with these valuation rolls. The plaintiff now appeals to this Court. We are of opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge is incorrect in the view which he takes of the law. He relies upon the ruling in the case of Ashanullah Khan v. Trilochan Bagchi, (1886) I. L. R., 13 Cal., 197, in which it was held that when under the Act certain things are required to be done before any liability attaches to any person in respect of any right or obligation, it is for the person who alleges that liability has been incurred to prove that the things prescribed in the Act have been actually done, and he appears to think that this ruling lays down the general principle that the publication of the valuation rolls under the Cess Act is a condition precedent to the attaching of any liability to pay road cess. We are, however, of opinion that this ruling [(1886) I. L. R., 13 Cal., 197] is no authority for the defendant being held not liable to pay the road cess in the case The ruling cited by the learned Subordinate Judge refers to the publication of valuation rolls under section 52 of the Cess Act, which relates to payment of road cess for rent-free lands; and it appears from s. 56 of the Act that owners of rent-free land are not bound to pay road cess before the publication of the valuation rolls under section 52. The present case, however, does not relate to the road cess [727] of rent-free lands; it relates to road cess of rent-paying lands, and the publication of the valuation rolls of such lands has to be made, not under s. 52, but under s. 35 of the Act. Then, there is no provision in the Act relating to rent-paying lands corresponding to s. 56 of the Act. On the contrary, it would appear from the provisions of ss. 36 and 41 of the Act that the publication of valuation rolls is not a condition precedent to the attaching of liability to pay road cess for rent-paying lands. Section 36 prescribes that "except as otherwise in this part" (that is Part II) expressly provided, "every valuation and revaluation made under this chapter shall remain in force for the term of five years;" and s. 41 lays down that "except as otherwise in this Act provided, every holder of a tenure shall yearly pay road cess to the holder of the estate or tenure within which the land held by him is included." There is, therefore, no provision prescribing that the publication of the valuation rolls is necessary before any liability attaches to the tenure-holder. On the contrary, it would seem that "except as otherwise provided," he is bound to pay the road cess on the preparation of the valuation rolls, and there is no provision in the Act which exempts him from, or limits his, liability.

For these reasons we think the view taken under s. 35 by the learned Subordinate Judge is incorrect, and we accordingly decree the appeal with costs in this Court and with proportionate costs in the Court below.

CRIMINAL REVISION.

The 16th November, 1897.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE AND MR. JUSTICE WILKINS.

The Legal Remembrancer

Bhairab Chandra Chuckerbutty and others.*

Transfer of Criminal case—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 526, cl. (e)—Expression of belief by the District Magistrate—Fairness and impartiality of the jury—Jury an important part of the tribunal.

When two such officers, as the District Magistrate and the Sessions Judge, emphatically express their belief that it will be next to impossible [728] to obtain a fair and impartial trial if the case be heard before a jury chosen from a particular district, the bare expression of such belief, quite apart from the foundations thereof, must shake the confidence of the parties interested and of the public in the fairness and impartiality of the particular jury to try the case. An order for transfer in such cases is expedient for the ends of justice under s. 526, cl. (e) of the Criminal Procedure Code. The importance of securing the confidence of parties in the fairness and impartiality of the tribunal is next only to the importance of securing a fair and impartial tribunal. Dupeyron v. Driver, (1896) I L. R., 28 Cal., 495, followed.

The jury in a case triable by jury constitute a part and an important part of the tribunal. It is not quite reasonable to say, where doubt is entertained as to the fairness and impartiality of the jury, that the trial should, nevertheless, go on before such a jury, because an erroneous verdict may, in the end, be set right by the High Court. Empress v. Nobo Gopal Bose, (1880) I. L. R., 6 Cal., 491, distinguished.

THIS was an application by the Deputy Legal Remembrancer for the transfer from the Sessions Court at Burdwan of a case under s. 526 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882). In support of the application the District Magistrate of Burdwan made an affidavit in which he, amongst other things stated:—

"That in his letter marked C, the Sessions Judge says that, not only stories of all sorts are afloat about it, but even the merits of the case appear to have been discussed and various conclusions arrived at, and under the circumstances it will be very difficult to get a jury with a quite unbiassed and open mind."

"That I firmly believe that it would be next to impossible to obtain a fair and impartial trial if the case be heard before a jury chosen from this district; such a course would, I believe, prejudice both the prosecution and the defence."

The rule was granted calling upon the accused to show cause why the case should not be transferred to the Sessions Court of some other district on the grounds: (1) That a fair and impartial trial cannot be had in the Sessions

Court at Burdwan, and (2) that the transfer is expedient for the ends of justice, having regard chiefly to the above statements.

[729] The Officiating Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Abdur Rahim) for the Crown.

Mr. P. L. Roy, Babu Debendro Chundro Mullick and Babu Dwarka Nath Mitter for the Accused.

The judgment of the High Court (Banerjee and Wilkins, JJ.) is as follows :--

This is a rule granted on the application of the Deputy Legal Remembrancer, calling upon the accused to show cause why the case against them now pending in the Sessions Court of Burdwan should not be transferred to the Sessions Court of Alipur or to the Sessions Court of any other district, on the grounds : (1) That a fair and impartial trial cannot be had in the Sessions Court of Burdwan before a Burdwan jury, and (2) that the transfer is expedient for the ends of justice.

In support of these two grounds two affidavits have been filed, one by Mr. Fisher. Magistrate of the district, and the other by Sheikh Bistu, brother of one of the two persons, said to have been murdered by the accused.

The material statements contained in the District Magistrate's affidavit are to the effect that the accused are sons and "near relations of men of influence and position," that the Magistrate who has been at Burdwan for about a year and-a-half and has come to know many people of the district is aware, from his "personal knowledge," "that various kinds of rumours, both true and false, are being circulated among all classes of the community all over the district" about the facts of this case ; that the Magistrate is credibly informed from various sources, including the Sessions Judge's letter to him (which is filed with the affidavit and marked C), "that this case has caused a profound sensation throughout the district among all classes of people;" that the Magistrate firmly believes "that it will be next to impossible to obtain a fair and impartial trial" if the case be heard before a jury chosen from the district of Burdwan ; and that it is necessary in the interests of justice that the case should be transferred from Burdwan.

The affidavit further states that this case "has created an [730] extremely" bitter feeling among the Mahomedan population of the town, that they "are an excitable people" and "have not much patience," that it is therefore necessary that the case should be tried under such circumstances as will give the Mahomedans every confidence, and that "this will not be the case if it be tried at Burdwan"

The affidavit of Sheikh Bistu contains statements nearly to the same effect.

The accused in shewing cause have filed six affidavits, three of which are by the fathers of the three accused, one by a pleader of the Burdwan Court engaged for the defence, and two by two Mahomedans residing at Burdwan, who, however, do not say anything as to what their position in life is, nor any thing as to what their means of knowledge are, beyond stating that they have been living in Burdwan for many years.

These affidavits more or less deny most of the allegations contained in the affidavits filed on behalf of the petitioner ; and they further state that the case should not be transferred from Burdwan, as a local inspection of the alleged place of occurrence by the jury may be necessary, and that transfer of the case would cause inconvenience to the accused and their witnesses, and would involve expense which it would be difficult for two of the accused, and impossible for the third, to bear.

It is unnecessary for our present purpose, and it is undesirable at the present stage of the case, to enter into a detailed examination of all the various statements contained in these affidavits and counter, affidavits. We shall confine our attention to such of them as relate to matters coming within the scope of s. 526 of the Criminal Procedure Code and are relevant to the present purpose, and exclude from consideration those that are irrelevant and likely to misguide the judgment.

We may add that under this latter description come those statements which speak of the Mahomedans being "an excitable people" who "have not much patience," and which hint at the necessity of allaying their irritation to prevent possible serious consequences. Those are considerations which do not come within the scope of s. 526 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and which [731] should not, therefore, influence our judgment. The only clause of the section which may possibly be referred to in this connection is clause (e); but that clause refers to expediency for the ends of justice and not to expediency from any political point of view. In dealing with an application like the present, it is, no doubt, the duty of this Court to have all due regard for the importance of securing the confidence of the public generally, and of every section of the community interested in the result, in particular, in the fairness and impartiality of the trial that is going to be held; but it is equally its duty to see that no undue regard is shown to the abnormal susceptibilities of any section of the public, from an apprehension of ulterior consequences If that were done, it would result in the obvious injustice of showing greater consideration to the less peaceful than to the more peaceful. We regret that the Sessions Judge, and following him the District Magistrate, should have referred to matters which ought not to be taken into account in this case.

We should further add that it was improper for the District Magistrate, as representing the prosecution, to have consulted in this matter the Sessions Judge in whose Court this case was pending, and still more so for the Sessions Judge to have addressed the District Magistrate the communication marked as Exhibit C. While making these remarks, however, we fully appreciate the object they had in view, which was to secure a fair and impartial trial in this case, and peace and harmony in their district.

Coming now to the consideration of those statements in the affidavits and counter affidavits which relate to matters lying within the scope of s. 526 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, we find that while the statements relied upon by the petitioner seek to bring the case under clauses (a) and (e) of the section, those relied upon by the opposite side seek, not only to contradict those allegations, but also to show that clauses (c) and (d) operate against the applications for transfer. That is to say, while the affidavits of the District Magistrate and Sheikh Bistu state that a transfer of the case is necessary for a fair and impartial trial and is otherwise expedient for the ends of justice, the affidavits relied upon on behalf of the accused affirm that a transfer is not neces-[732]sary for a fair and impartial trial, nor otherwise expedient for the ends of justice; that the allegations to the contrary are not well founded; and that the trial ought to be held in Burdwan, because a view of the place in which the offence is said to have been committed is necessary for the satisfactory trial of the same, and because the accused and their witnesses would otherwise be greatly inconvenienced. Thus there are conflicting statements giving rise to conflicting considerations, and the questions for determination are: first, which of these conflicting statements should be accepted; and, second, which of the conflicting considerations arising upon the statements to be accepted should prevail.

With reference to the first question Mr. Roy for the accused contends that the statements in the District Magistrate's affidavit are indefinite, and therefore insufficient to form the basis of a decision, while those in the affidavits filed on behalf of the accused are definite and point to specific sources of information; and he relied upon the case of The Empress v. Nobo Gopal Bose, (1880) I.L.R., 6 Cal., 491, as showing that a somewhat similar affidavit by the District Magistrate was considered insufficient by this Court. But the facts of that case were different from those of the present in several respects. In the first place, there the District Magistrate who made the affidavit had been in the district for about three months only, whereas in this case the Magistrate has been in the district for about a year and a half; and in the second place, in the case cited, the Magistrate did not state his sources of information, or the ground of his belief, whereas in the case before us he gives the sources of his information and states that he is aware of certain facts from personal knowledge. But though that is so, and though we are quite willing to accept the District Magistrate's statements in preference to counter statements in the affidavits on the other side, we must say that some of those statements which give reasons for the Magistrate's belief are vague and general; and having regard to the facts stated in the counter affidavits that there are on the jury list of Burdwan as many as 471 names, of which 22 are the names of Mahomedans and 28 of Europeans, we find it difficult to hold that a [733] fair and impartial trial cannot be had by a jury at Burdwan. The facts stated, therefore, are not quite sufficient to bring the case under clause (a) of s. 526 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The statements in the District Magistrate's affidavits are, however, in our opinion sufficient to bring the case under clause (c) of the section. The statements to which we refer are those contained in paragraphs 8 and 9 of the affidavit, which are to the effect that the Sessions Judge thinks that "it will be very difficult to get a jury with a quite unbiassed and open mind," and that the Magistrate firmly believes "that it will be next to impossible to obtain a fair and impartial trial if the case be heard before a jury chosen from this district," i.e., Burdwan.

These statements, as statements of belief, stand practically uncontradicted, though the grounds of such belief are challenged in the counter affidavits. But when two such officers as the District Magistrate and the Sessions Judge, whose honesty of purpose cannot be called in question, and who are the persons responsible for the administration of criminal justice in the district, have so emphatically expressed their belief on the subject, the bare expression of such belief, quite apart from the foundations thereof, must shake the confidence of the parties interested, and of the public, in the fairness and impartiality of the Burdwan jury to try this case, and create in their minds a reasonable apprehension that a fair and impartial trial cannot be had, if the case is tried in Burdwan. And when that is the case, an order for transfer must be held to be expedient for the ends of justice, the importance of securing the confidence of parties in the fairness and impartiality of the tribunal being next only to the importance of securing a fair and impartial tribunal. The view we take is in accordance with that taken by this Court in Dupeyron v. Driver, (1896) I.L.R., 23 Cal., 495.

It was contended by Mr. Roy for the accused that the considerations which influenced the Court in the case just referred to, apply only to cases where the confidence of either party in the fairness of the presiding Judge or Magistrate is shaken, and that [734] where, as in this case, the fairness and impartiality of the Sessions Judge is not doubted, the mere possibility of the jury being biassed should not form a ground for transfer, when the law provides a remedy against a wrong verdict by authorizing the Sessions Judge to refer the case to this Court; and in support of this contention the case of Queen v. Ameer Khan, (1871) 7 B. L. R., 240; 15 W. R. Cr., 69, and Empress v. Nobo Gopal Bose, (1880) I. L. R., 6 Cal., 491, were relied upon.

We are unable to accept this contention as sound. The jury, in a case triable by jury, constitute a part and an important part of the tribunal; and this Court, on a reference by the Sessions Judge under s. 307 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, is required to determine the case upon the entire evidence after giving due weight to the opinions of the Judge and the jury. It would not, therefore, be quite reasonable to say where doubt is entertained as to the fairness and impartiality of the jury, that the trial should nevertheless go on before such a jury, because an erroneous verdict may, in the end, be set right by the High Court. As for the cases cited, that of Queen v. Ameer Khan, (1871) 7 B. L. R., 240; 15 W. R. Cr., 69, is not quite in point, the trial there being not by jury but with the aid of assessors. The case of Empress v. Nobo Gopal Bose, (1880) I.L.R., 6 Cal., 491, is no doubt in point; but the learned Judges in that case do not hold as a matter of law that a case triable by jury is not to be transferred on the ground of the fairness and impartiality of the jury being questioned, because there are safeguards against miscarriage of justice; all that they decide is that it would require very strong grounds to justify a transfer in such a case.

The statements in the Magistrate's affidavit, in our opinion, therefore, bring the case under clause (e) of s. 526 of the Code of Criminal procedure.

The statements in the affidavits filed on behalf of the accused, on the other hand, show that a view of the place where the offence is said to have been committed may be necessary for a satisfactory trial; and that a transfer of the case will cause [736] inconvenience to the accused and their witnesses, and these statements we see no reason to reject as unfounded.

There are thus conflicting considerations arising upon the statements which we accept; and this brings us to the second question stated above, namely, which of these considerations should prevail?

Now the importance of having a fair and impartial jury ranks very much higher than the convenience of parties and witnesses, and the convenience of the Court in having a local inspection. If a local inspection is deemed necessary, the Judge and the jury at Alipur may have such an inspection, though not as conveniently as the Judge and jury at Burdwan might have had it; and the cost of such inspection will have to be paid by the Government The same remark applies with reference to the expenses of the witnesses (see s. 544 of the Code of Criminal Procedure).

The matter, which pressed most upon us against the transfer of the case, was the statement in the affidavit of the father of one of the three accused who says that, if the case is transferred, he has not means enough to pay for legal assistance, whereas if the trial is held in Burdwan where he has a few friends amongst the members of the local bar, he may succeed in inducing one of them to defend his son. There is no provision in the Code of Criminal Procedure for meeting this difficulty; and the only consideration which has relieved our minds to a certain extent is this, namely, that the accused, who will be tried with two others whose means are not so limited, may have the benefit of the legal aid which they will be able to secure.

After weighing the conflicting considerations arising in this case, the conclusion we come to is that the balance of reason is in favour of allowing the application for transfer, which we think is expedient for the ends of justice; and we accordingly order that this case be transferred to the Sessions Court of 24-Pergunnahs.

[736] APPELLATE CRIMINAL.

The 5th April, 1898.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE AMEER ALI AND MR. JUSTICE HENDERSON.

Abbas Peada and another............Appellants

Queen-Empress............Respondent.*

Misdirection—Charge to the jury—Explaining the law—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 126—Communications to Mukhtears privileged—Admission of inadmissible evidence.

In charging a jury it is incumbent on the Judge to explain the law to them in order to assist them in applying the law to the facts of the case. Mere reference to sections of the Penal Code defining the offences is not sufficient.

The restrictions imposed by s. 126 of the Evidence Act in respect of what are known as privileged communications extend also to communications made to mukhtears when acting as pleaders for their clients.

In cases tried by jury it is the duty of the Judge to prevent the production of inadmissible evidence whether it is or is not objected to by the parties.

Evidence relating to proposals of compromise ought not, in the exercise of a proper discretion, to be allowed to go in as evidence of guilty knowledge against the accused.

THE facts of the case appear sufficiently from the judgment.

Babu Dasarathi Sanyal appeared on behalf of the Appellants.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Gordon Leith) appeared on behalf of the Crown.

The judgment of the High Court (Ameer Ali and Henderson, JJ.) is as follows:—

In this case the petitioners, Abbas Peada and Chhirru alias Shibu Gain were tried by the Additional Sessions Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs with a jury, who convicted the former under ss. 365 and 346, and the latter under ss. 365 and 346 read with s. 109 of the Indian Penal Code; and the Judge has sentenced them to four years' and three years' rigorous imprisonment, respectively.

* Criminal Appeal No. 155 of 1898, against the order passed by C. P. Caspersz, Esq., Additional Sessions Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, dated 17th December 1897.

[737] The grounds upon which we admitted the appeal were of a twofold character, namely, first, that the Judge had misdirected the jury in his charge with reference to certain evidence, which was not legally admissible against the accused; and, secondly, that there was no sufficient explanation of the law in the charge.

The case has been argued by the learned pleader for the appellants on one side and the learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer for the Crown on the other. The appellants' pleader has taken three principal grounds upon which he impugns the verdict of the jury; and he asks that we should set aside that verdict and either acquit the petitioner or direct a retrial of the case. He contends, as he contended at the time of the admission of the appeal, that, having regard to the character of the offence charged against the accused, the learned Sessions Judge ought to have given a sufficient explanation of the law on the subject in order to assist the jury in the consideration of the facts of the case; that not having done so, he has failed to comply with the provisions of s. 279 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and that his clients have been prejudiced by the omission. He contends further that the learned Judge ought not to have admitted in evidence certain statements alleged to have been made by the petitioners to a mukhtear, named Kedar Nath Chakravarti, who had acted as legal adviser and representative for one of the accused in a previous case; and, that the learned Judge was also in error in asking the jury to draw any inference of guilty knowledge from a compromise spoken of by the clerk of their present mukhtear Hem Chundra; and, thirdly, he has contended that the trial had relation to the detention of the woman Lakhi at several places, and had reference to more than one individual, and that consequently the appellants were prejudiced in their defence.

We shall first refer to the law on the subject before dealing with the learned Sessions Judge's charge to the jury.

Section 297 of the Code of Criminal Procedure provides that, "in a case tried by jury when the case for the defence and the prosecutor's reply (if any) are concluded, the Court shall proceed to charge the jury summing up the evidence for the prosecution and defence and laying down the law by which the jury are to [738] be guided." And s. 367 declares "that in trials by jury the Court need not write a judgment, but the Court of Session shall record the heads of the charge to the jury."

It has been repeatedly held in this Court that it is incumbent on the Sessions Judge to explain the law relating to the particular offence with which the accused is charged before him, in order to enable the jury to apply the law to the special facts of the case; and that although the Judge is not bound to record a judgment, yet he should give sufficient indication in his charge that he has complied with the law, so as to enable the Appellate Court to form an opinion whether he has acted in accordance with the provisions of the section or not. No doubt in this case the Sessions Judge has in different parts of his charge mentioned the sections of the Penal Code we have referred to; but we regret there is very little indication to suggest that any explanation, such as is contemplated by section 297 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, as has been laid down in the different cases already decided, was given to the jury. Mere references to sections, unless the jurors are trained men, cannot be of much assistance to them to apply the law to the facts; and we think, therefore, it is always desirable in charges to juries that the law should be sufficiently explained in order that the jury may be assisted in the consideration of the case. That in this particular case the jury were not assisted in the consideration o the case by an explanation of the law is sufficiently clear from the manner in which they appear to have given their verdict which is recorded as follows :—

" Q.—Are you unanimous ?

Ans.—We are.

Q.—What is your verdict ?

Ans.—Abbas and Chhirru are guilty. Charan is not guilty.

Q.—Is Luckmi under sixteen years of age ?

Ans.—Yes, under sixteen.

Q.—Under what charge do you convict Abbas and Chhirru ?

Ans.—We convict as regards the road occurrences. Ss. 147, 365, 363.

[739] Q.—What is your verdict as regards the charges under ss. 346 and 346-109 (The jury retired again to consider)." * * *

We think we may take that as an indication that the jury were not quite clear in their minds about the application of the law to the facts of the case, and that their confusion or want of clearness on the subject was due, in some measure, to the omission of a sufficient explanation of the law on the subject.

The Sessions Judge's charge begins thus: "The charges relate to four occurrences: –

(a) On the Road, ss. 363, 365, 147 of the Indian Penal Code.

(b) At Abbasbari, s. 342 of the Indian Penal Code.

(c) At Jampabaria, ss. 346 and 346-109 of the Indian Penal Code.

(d) At Kalikapala, s. 346 of the Indian Penal Code.

Then it goes on: "All the accused are charged in respect of (a) and (c) and accused Abbas only is charged in respect of (b) and (d)," and so forth.

We are inclined to attach some weight to the argument of the learned pleader for the appellants that the mode in which the matter was placed before the jury was a little confusing and one likely to have prejudiced the accused at the trial.

But the matter does not rest here. The occurrence is alleged to have taken place on the 29th of August. On the 30th August the accused went to the mukhtear Kedarnath, who was at the time defending the appellant Chhirru in another case of abduction in respect of the same girl, and stated that another false case was likely to be brought against them, and that he must appear in it for them and on their behalf. The learned Sessions Judge refers to the evidence of Kedarnath in the following terms:—

"Then the evidence of Kedar Babu (witness No. 3) who acted as accused's mukhtear is very important." And he goes on to add, "because, he says, accused Abbas and Chhirru came to him at 5 or 6 A. M. on the day after the night attack on Naba's party. This conduct of these accused, I think, you will agree with me, and the statements they made to Kedar Babu, indicate guilty knowledge."

[740] It does not appear that when Kedar was being examined regarding this matter, any objection was taken by the accused to his making the statements in question.

Section 298, however, provides "that in cases tried by jury it is the duty of the Judge to decide all questions of law arising in the course of the trial, and specially all questions as to the relevancy of the facts which it is proposed to prove, and the admissibility of evidence or the propriety of questions asked by or on behalf of the parties, and in his discretion to prevent the production of inadmissible evidence, whether it is or is not objected to by the parties." If one may venture to say so, this is a wise provision of the law, because in many of these cases tried in the Sessions Court by a jury sometimes the prisoners are not defended at all, and sometimes defended by persons not fully qualified for their work. It is, therefore, the duty of the Judge to see that evidence, which is not admissible in itself, should not be allowed to go in to the prejudice of the accused. The pleader for the appellants contends that the statements made by the accused to the mukhtear Kedarnath were privileged, and that, without the consent of the accused, Kedarnath ought not to have deposed to those statements in Court; and reliance is placed on s. 126 of the Indian Evidence Act, which declares that "no barrister, attorney, pleader, or vakil shall at any time be permitted, unless with the client's express consent, to disclose any communication made to him in the course and for the purpose of his employment as such barrister, pleader, attorney or vakil, or on behalf of his client, or to state the contents or condition of any document with which he has become acquainted in the course and for the purpose of his professional employment, or to disclose any advice given by him to his client in the course of such employment."

The cognate section in Act II of 1855, s. 24, declared that "a barrister, attorney or vakil shall not, without the consent of his client, disclose any communication made by the client to him in the course of his professional employment or any advice given by him professionally to his client, the knowledge of which he shall have acquired in the course of his professional employment. The privilege, however, is that of the client to disclose [741] any such matter." It will be noticed that there are two important additions in s. 126, which differentiate it from s. 24 of Act II of 1855, namely, the addition of the word "pleader" and of the word "express" before the word "consent," which make it specially stringent in favour of the privilege. Now, there is no suggestion in this case that the accused expressly consented to Kedar disclosing in Court the statement or statements made to him by the accused. The question that was raised here was this: That inasmuch as he was a mukhtear he did not come within the purview of s. 126, and that consequently the statements made by the accused were not privileged; and we have been referred to the case of Queen v. Chandra Kant, (1868) 1 B. L. R., App. Cr., 8, which proceeded upon Act II of 1855. As we have already pointed out, s. 24 of the old Act is different from the section in the present Act.

The Procedure Codes (Act XXV of 1861 and Act X of 1872) did not contain any definition of the term "pleader." Act X of 1882 for the first time defines the word as follows: "Pleader," used with reference to any proceeding in any Court, means a pleader authorized under any law for the time being in force to practise in such Court, and includes (1) an advocate, a vakil and an attorney of a High Court so authorized; and (2) any mukhtears or other person appointed with the permission of the Court to act in such proceeding."

The result of that definition, therefore, is this that all persons who appear in a Court in any legal proceeding as representing parties for the purpose of pleading in any particular case come within the category of pleaders, and s. 126 must, we take it, be construed as applying to all persons who come within the category of pleaders as defined in the Criminal Procedure Code. It would indeed be a strange anomaly if mukhtears who act in certain Courts as pleaders were excluded from the provisions of s. 126 of the Indian Evidence Act, and statements made to them by their clients were not regarded as privileged, whilst in the case of all persons who hold a recognized position as barristers, attorneys or vakils, they should be privileged. We may say that the provision which was contained in Act II of 1885, and [742] which was subsequently amplified by s. 126 of the present Evidence Act, embodies one of the wisest principles of the English law; and that although in England there is no analogue to a mukhtear, the Indian Legislature, having regard to the conditions of this country, has properly included in the term "pleader" all persons who plead for clients in any legal proceeding in a Court of Justice.

We think, therefore, that the learned Sessions Judge was in error in allowing the statements which the accused had made to Kedarnath (who was at the time acting for one of them as his mukhtear and legal adviser, and to whom certain matters were mentioned with the object that he should appear for them in Court) to be given in evidence against the accused, and we also think that he was in error in asking the jury to agree with him in drawing an inference of guilty knowledge from those statements, even if those statements were admissible in evidence. The statement which the accused made to Kedarnath was that a false charge was going to be brought against them. We are inclined to think an inference of guilty knowledge was hardly warranted from that circumstance, and we have little doubt that the jurors were more or less influenced to the prejudice of the accused by the distinct direction given by the Sessions Judge in this behalf. Then, again, as regards the compromise, which was "discussed and effectuated at a later stage," it appears that the complainant and his party with another person went to the mukhtear who represented the accused in Court with the object of compromising the charge, and a paper was written out and apparently filed in Court. The learned Sessions Judge deals with the subject in this way: "Then you have the evidence of witnesses 4, 12 and 16 with regard to the compromise discussed and effectuated at a later stage." He had already mentioned that there was evidence indirectly bearing against the accused, and we may take it that his mention of the compromise at this stage and under the sixth head of his charge was intended to draw the attention of the jury to what he considered to bear indirectly on the case against the accused. In the first place it seems to us the evidence relating to the compromise ought not, in the exercise of [743] a proper discretion, to have been allowed to go in as evidence of guilty knowledge against the accused; in the second place the statements relating to the compromise were made to the clerk of the mukhtear, who was acting as the pleader of the accused, and under s. 127 statements made to the clerks are as privileged as those made to their employers.

Other objections have been taken to the charge to the jury. But we do not think it necessary to deal with them, as it seems to us the verdict must be set aside on the grounds already referred to.

With reference to the third ground taken by the appellants' pleader we may mention he relies upon the statement contained at the beginning of the charge in order to show that the offences were not so connected with each other as to warrant the accused being tried together under s. 245 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and he contends that the charges relate to separate offences alleged to have been committed by separate individuals at separate places. The learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer, on the other hand, argued that the section justifies the procedure adopted in this case. Looking at the statement at the beginning of the charge, we are not prepared to say the learned pleader's contention is without some force. But it is unnecessary to express any definite opinion on the point, as we think that when the case is retried the learned Sessions Judge will see that the trial is conducted in a manner which will not be likely to prejudice the accused or confuse the jury in any way in dealing with the facts.

On the whole, therefore, we have come to the conclusion that the verdict of the jury ought to be set aside in this case, and we accordingly set it aside and direct that the case be retried.

[744] FULL BENCH.

The 2nd February, 1898.

PRESENT:

SIR FRANCIS W. MACLEAN, K.C.I.E., CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON, MR. JUSTICE TREVELYAN, MR. JUSTICE GHOSE, AND MR. JUSTICE AMEER ALI.

Dulhin Golab Koer............Plaintiff

versus

Balla Kurmi and others............Defendants.*

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 50 Record of rights—Presumption from twenty years' uniform payment of rent—Raiyats holding at fixed rates.

In a proceeding for record of rights under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), it having been found that certain raiyats were holding their lands at rates which had not been changed during twenty years before the institution of the proceeding, the Settlement Officer recorded them as "raiyats holding at fixed rates." In second appeal, Held, that under s. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the Settlement Officer was right in giving effect to the presumption that the raiyats were holding at fixed rates of rent and in recording them as "raiyats holding at fixed rates."

Bansi Das v. Jagdip Narain Chowdhry, (1896) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 152, dissented from.

THIS case arose out of proceedings under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885). The defendants, respondents, who are raiyats, were recorded by the Assistant Settlement Officer as "raiyats holding at fixed rates." The landlord, plaintiff, objected to the entry and applied for its correction under s. 106 of the Act, alleging that the defendants were not raiyats at fixed rates, but only occupancy raiyats. The application was rejected by the Settlement Officer, and on appeal to the Special Judge, the order of the Settlement Officer was confirmed on the ground that the raiyats had been holding their lands at an uniform rent for twenty years, and the presumption arose that this rent was fixed in perpetuity.

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

The appeal was first heard by a Division Bench consisting of two Judges (Mr. Justice BEVERLEY and Mr. Justice AMEER ALI), who having differed in opinion on a question of law referred it to [745] a third Judge, Mr. Justice

* Reference to a Full Bench in Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 626 of 1894.

JENKINS, who agreed with Mr. Justice AMEER ALI, but referred the case to a Full Bench, as the case of Bansi Das v. Jagdip Narain Chowdhry, (1896) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 152), appeared to be in conflict with his view. As, however, it was decided in a previous case before the Full Bench that there could not be a valid reference from a single Judge to a Full Bench, a special Bench was constituted in this case.

The judgments of Mr. Justice BEVERLEY and Mr. Justice AMEER ALI were as follows :—

Beverley, J.—As I adhere to the opinion I expressed in Special Appeal No. 844 of 1895, and in another case which I cannot now trace, the papers must be laid before the Chief Justice in order that he may refer the hearing of the appeal to one or more of the other Judges of this Court under the provisions of s. 575 of the Code.

The point of law upon which Mr. Justice AMEER ALI and I differ is shortly this.

In making a record of rights under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the Settlement Officer entered the respondents as belonging to the class of raiyats holding at fixed rates (shara muaiyin). The landlords objected to the entry under s. 106 of the Act; but their objection was disallowed, and on appeal the Special Judge has held that " the raiyats having proved their holdings for twenty years " (I assume that he means at a rent which has not been changed during that period) the presumption arises that their rent was fixed in perpetuity.

My opinion is that no such presumption arises upon the correct reading of either s. 50 or any other section of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The presumption which is created by s. 50, sub-section (2) is a presumption that the tenant has held at the same rent or rate of rent from the time of the Permanent Settlement. But that is a wholly different thing from a presumption that the tenant is a raiyat holding at fixed rates, as defined in s. 4 of the Act.

It is quite true that under sub-section (1) of s. 50 the rent of a tenure or holding, which has not been changed from the [746] time of the Permanent Settlement, is declared to be not liable to be increased except on the ground of an alteration in the area of the tenure or holding.

Section 6 of the Act also provides that when a tenure has been held from the time of the Permanent Settlement, its rent shall not be enhanced except under certain circumstances. But nowhere, so far as I am aware, does the Act say that such a tenure or holding is to be presumed to be held at a fixed rent or at a fixed rate of rent.

" Raiyats holding at fixed rates " constitute one of the classes of tenants mentioned in s. 4, and the expression is there defined to mean " raiyats holding either at a rent fixed in perpetuity or at a rate of rent fixed in perpetuity." By this expression I understand that the class of raiyats holding at fixed rates are those whose rent or rate of rent was " fixed " in perpetuity at the time of the creation of the tenancy—not raiyats whose rent cannot be increased, except in ceratin circumstances, by reason of the presumption created by s. 50, sub-section (2). A raiyat with a right of occupancy may, by virtue of that presumption, be entitled to hold at a rent which is not liable to be enhanced ; but he does not thereby become a raiyat holding at fixed rates. By s. 18 certain incidents attach to the status of raiyats holding at fixed rates. Their holdings are for many purposes put on the same footing as permanent tenures. For instance, by s. 11 they are capable of being transferred or bequeathed like other immoveable property. But the holding of an occupancy raiyat is only transferable by custom, and the incidents of occupancy rights are set out and defined in different sections of the Act (ss. 23—26).

I hold, therefore, that a finding that a raiyat has held at the same rent for twenty years will not under s. 50 (2) raise any presumption that he belongs to the class of "raiyats holding at fixed rates."

Ameer Ali, J.—The question involved in this second appeal is one of great importance, and I regret therefore I cannot agree with Mr. Justice BEVERLEY in the construction of s. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

[747] It appears that in the course of settlement proceedings in connection with the estate of the appellant, the respondents who are the raiyats of Mouzah Bishenpur were entered in the khatian as raiyats at fixed rents. The appellant thereupon presented a petition under s. 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to have the entry corrected, alleging that the respondents were not raiyats at fixed rents, but only occupancy raiyats. The respondents, on the other hand, pleaded that they were raiyats at fixed rents. The Settlement Officer of Hajipur rejected her petition, and the Judge on appeal has confirmed that order holding, as I understand his judgment, that, inasmuch as it has been proved that the tenants have been in possession of their lands without any alteration in their rents for the last twenty years, they must be presumed under s. 50 of the Tenancy Act to be raiyats at fixed rates of rent. In special appeal it is contended that s. 50, upon which the Lower Appellate Court has proceeded, does not apply to raiyats whose rents are fixed in perpetuity; that it only protects, under certain circumstances, occupancy raiyats from the enhancement of their rents, but that it does not relate to fixity of rent, and that therefore the District Judge was wrong in holding that the respondents were raiyats at fixed rents.

In order to consider whether this contention is well founded, I shall refer for a moment to the provisions of the different chapters before dealing with the meaning of s. 50 as I understand it.

Chapter II gives the various classes of tenants and defines the expressions "tenure-holder" and "raiyats."

Chapter III deals with the enhancement of rent of tenure-holders and with other incidents of their tenures.

Chapter IV deals with the incidents of holdings at fixed rents or rates of rent, but does not lay down any rule as to the ascertainment of such holding.

Chapter V deals with occupancy raiyats; Chapter VI with non-occupancy raiyats and Chapter VII with under-raiyats. We then come to Chapter VIII which is headed thus: "General provisions as to rent, rules and presumptions as to amount of [748] rent." Section 50 which comes in this Chapter lays down in general terms the rules and presumptions as to fixity of rent. Sub-section 1 declares that "where a tenure-holder or raiyat and his predecessors in interest have held at a rent or rate of rent which has not been changed from the time of the Permanent Settlement, the rent or rate of rent shall not be liable to be increased except on the ground of an alteration in the area of the tenure or holding." But in the majority of cases it would be impossible to establish that a tenure or holding has been possessed at an uniform rent or rate of rent from the time of the Permanent Settlement. To meet such cases the Legislature provides in sub-section 2 that "if it is proved in any suit or other proceedings under this Act that either a tenure-holder or raiyat and his predecessors in interest have held at a rent or rate of rent which has not been changed during the twenty years immediately before the institution of the suit or proceeding, it shall be presumed, until the contrary is shown, that they have held at that rent or rate of rent from the time of the Permanent Settlement." It is clear, therefore, that those two sub-sections deal with two different cases : (1) where the raiyat (I am omitting the tenure-holder) is able to prove that he and his predecessors in interest (the use of the word "predecessor in interest" is of importance) have been in possession of the holding at a rent or rate of rent which has not been changed from the time of the Permanent Settlement, it declares absolutely that his rent shall not be liable to be increased except on the ground of an alteration in the area of the holding (a provision applicable to all classes of tenants, see s. 52); (2) where the raiyat is able to show that he and his predecessors in interest have held at a rent or rate of rent which has not been changed during the twenty years immediately before the institution of the suit or proceeding, the law declares it shall be presumed until the contrary is shown that the raiyats had held from the time of the Permanont Settlement. In other words unless the presumption is robutted "his rent or rate of rent" shall not be liable to be increased except on the ground common to all tenants, viz., alteration in the area. The Permanent Settlement is regarded as the starting point, and the result is that where it is found, either upon evidence or upon the basis of the statutory presumption provided in sub-section 2, that [749] the rent of the tenure or holding has not altered from its inception, it cannot be altered on any ground other than that provided in s. 52. If the rent of a holding has not altered since its inception, and it is not liable to enhancement except on certain grounds, it must necessarily follow that the rent is fixed in perpetuity. As already mentioned occupancy raiyats are dealt with in Chapter V; and s. 27 and the following sections lay down the rules relating to the enhancement of the rents of occupancy holdings. A reference to ss. 19 and 20 will show that occupancy raiyats are a class wholly apart. Section 19 runs as follows:—

"Every raiyat who immediately before the commencement of this Act has, by the operation of any enactment by custom or otherwise, a right of occupancy in any land, shall, when this Act comes into force, have a right of occupancy in that land."

Section 20 defines "a settled raiyat" and provides in sub-section 7 for a presumption in his favour. This presumption, it is unnecessary to observe, is wholly different from that provided for in s. 50. Nor does it contain any exclusive reference to an occupancy raiyat. The general term "raiyat" is used as defined in s. 5, and therefore to construe it correctly, one will have to read it thus: where a tenure-holder or a person who has acquired a right to hold land, etc. Any raiyat, therefore, by whatever name he may be called, if he pleads and proves the particular state of facts provided in s. 50, is entitled to its benefit.

As already observed, Chapter IV, which declares the incidents of tenancies held at fixed rents or rates of rent, lays down no rule for the ascertainment of such tenancies. Without expressing any opinion on the question whether such tenancies can be created now (since the passing of the Act) by contract, it seems to me that s. 18 must be read with s. 50. In my opinion the latter section lays down the circumstances under which tenancies at a fixed rent or rate of rent will be taken to exist, whilst s. 18 declares the incidents that will attach to them under the law. In considering whether s. 50 is applicable to raiyats holding at fixed rents or rates of rent, or whether it is only intended for the protection against enhancement of a certain class of occupancy raiyats, it is necessary to bear in mind another fact. A tenure-holder under the Tenancy Act has the right of transferring [750] his tenure by sale, gift or testamentary devise. In connection with a tenure-holder, therefore, the expression "predecessor in interest" includes a person from whom the holder for the time being derives his title as well by purchase, gift or will as by inheritance. A raiyat holding at fixed rent or rate of rent has the same right as a tenure-holder. Now in s. 50 the term "predecessor in interest" is used in respect of both tenure-holder and raiyat. In the construction of the section the collocation of the words is of importance, and it seems to me that it would be against all principle of right reasoning to suppose that the Legislature intended the words "predecessor in interest" in connection with a raiyat in a different sense from that in connection with a tenure-holder.

As a matter of fact, the Act itself supplies an index to the meaning of the Legislature. For with reference to occupancy raiyats who do not (apart from custom) possess the right of transferring their holding, and whose interest can therefore only devolve by inheritance, it uses a totally different expression, carefully abstaining from the use of the words "predecessor in interest." Sub-section 3 to s. 20 declares that "a person shall be deemed for the purpose of this section to have held as a raiyat any land held as a raiyat by a person whose heir he is." The difference in the phraseology here is most marked, that s. 50 applies to class (a) of raiyats mentioned in s. 4, and the incidents of whose tenancies are described in s. 18 will be apparent from the proviso which runs thus: "Provided that if it is required by or under any enactment that in any local area tenancies or any classes of tenancies at fixed rents or rates of rent shall be registered as such on or before a date specified by or under the enactment the foregoing presumption shall not after that date apply to any tenancy or, as the case may be, to any tenancy of that class in that local area unless the tenancy has been so registered" It shows clearly that the presumption provided for [by ?] sub-section 2, and the scope of which is limited by the proviso, relates to "tenancies at fixed rents or rates of rents." Upon the evidence, the sufficiency of which it is not open to us to consider in special appeal, the District Judge has found that the tenants have been holding their lands at rents which have not altered for the last twenty years. I am of opinion [751] that under s. 50 he was right in giving effect to the presumption that they are holding at fixed rents or rates of rents. I am not inclined to interfere with this judgment.

Mr. Justice JENKINS to whom the case was referred made the following ORDER OF REFERENCE to a Full Bench :—

This case, in consequence of a difference of opinion on the part of the two learned Judges before whom it came in the first instance, has been referred to me, under s. 575 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in order that I may deliver my opinion thereon; and as the case has been argued fully and ably by the learned Vakils who appeared, and the view I hold will necessitate a reference to a Full Bench, no object will be attained by my reserving judgment or elaborating my reasons.

The point for decision is, whether the Assistant Settlement Officer was right in recording the defendants as raiyats holding at fixed rates.

The facts of the case are fully set forth in the judgments of BEVERLEY and AMEER ALI, JJ., and it is not necessary that I should recapitulate them now, but I would state that on the part of the appellant it has been conceded before me that the facts proved do give rise to the presumption contained in the 2nd sub-section of s. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Now that Act is stated to be one passed for the purpose of amending and consolidating certain enactments relating to the law of landlord and tenant within the territories under the administration of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal; and by s. 4 a description, rather than a definition, is given of the classes of tenants to whom the Act is applicable, among them being raiyats who are divided into the following classes:—

(a) "Raiyats holding at fixed rates."
(b) "Occupancy raiyats."
(c) "Non-occupancy raiyats."

The same section defines "raiyats holding at fixed rates" by providing that the expression means "raiyats holding either at a rent fixed in perpetuity or at a rate of rent fixed in perpetuity."

[752] The next section to which I may refer is the 18th, which describes the incidents of holding at fixed rates, and then I come to s. 50 upon which the present case turns, and whereby it is provided that —

1. "Where a tenure-holder or raiyat and his predecessors in interest have held at a rent or rate of rent which has not been changed from the time of the Permanent Settlement, the rent or rate of rent shall not be liable to be increased except on the ground of an alteration in the area of the tenure or holding.

2. "If it is proved in any suit or other proceeding under this Act that either a tenure-holder or raiyat and his predecessors in interest have held at a rent or rate of rent which has not been changed during the twenty years immediately before the institution of the suit or proceeding it shall be presumed, until the contrary is shown, that they have held at that rent or rate of rent from the time of the Permanent Settlement.

"Provided that if it is required by or under any enactment that in any local area tenancies, or any classes of tenancies, at fixed rents or rates of rent shall be registered as such on or before a date specified by or under the enactment, the foregoing presumption shall not after that date apply to any tenancy or, as the case may be, to any tenancy of that class in that local area unless the tenancy has been so registered."

The expression "predecessors in interest," it is argued on the part of the defendants, is a strong indication in favour of the view they support. But I am unable to attach much importance to its use except to the extent that it is consistent with the construction for which they contend. But I think it is clear from the proviso to the second sub-section that it was in the contemplation of the Legislature that a tenancy to which the presumption would be applicable should be capable of registration under a system which provided for the registration of tenancies, or classes of tenancies, at fixed rents or rates of rent; and the inference I draw from that is that a tenancy to which the presumption is applicable may be aptly described as one held at fixed rates.

The matter, however, does not rest there, for under s. 102, provision is made as to the particulars to be recorded in records of rights and settlements of rent. By sub-section (b) it is provided that the particulars to be recorded shall include "the class to which the tenant belongs, that is to say, whether he is a [753] tenure-holder, raiyat holding at fixed rates, occupancy-raiyat, non-occupancy-raiyat or under-raiyat, and if he is a tenure-holder, whether he is a permanent-tenure-holder or not, and whether his rent is liable to enhancement during the continuance of his tenancy."

It would seem that non-liability to enhancement was regarded for obvious reasons as a matter proper to be recorded; but there is no provision which requires or permits such a record in the case of a raiyat unless it be by the entry in the record of the fact that he is a raiyat holding at fixed rates, and it appears to me to be the intention of the sub-section that the immunity from enhancement arising under section 50 should be recorded by the statement that the tenant was a raiyat, holding at fixed rates. In connection with this section I may refer to s. 115, which provides that "when the particulars mentioned in s. 102, clause (b) have been recorded under this chapter in respect of any tenancy, the presumption under s. 50 shall not thereafter apply to that tenancy," for it appears to me that this section also points to the same conclusion.

Further looking outside the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, one finds that the expression "raiyats holding at fixed rates" was one in use before that Act came into operation, for it appears both in Act X of 1859 and also in the Bengal Council Act VIII of 1869. I may particularly refer to ss. 3, 4 and 5 of both those Acts. Sections 3 and 4 correspond closely with sub-sections 1 and 2 to s. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885, and it will be seen from s. 5 of those Acts that the raiyat in whose favour the presumption operated would be properly described as one holding at fixed rates. My own opinion, therefore, apart from authority, would be that upon the construction of the Act the record of the Assistant Settlement Officer was properly made.

I have, however, been referred to a prior decision of this Court where the same question arose, and it was there said in the course of the judgment:

"We entertain grave doubts whether this class of raiyat [that is raiyat holding at fixed rates] can be created by the operation of s. 50. All that that section says is that a raiyat who has held [754] at the same rent or rate of rent since the time of the Permanent Settlement shall not be liable to have his rent increased except on the ground of an alteration in the area of the holding. It does not say that such a raiyat is a raiyat holding at fixed rates, or that the tenancy shall be subject to the incidents of a holding at fixed rates as prescribed by s. 18 of the Act."

The learned Judges there appear to have arrived at their decision not without "grave doubts," but still it is a decision which clearly covers the present case, and it will, therefore, be necessary to refer the matter to a Full Bench. The question referred is whether, having regard to the case cited, the Assistant Settlement Officer was right in recording the defendants as raiyats holding at fixed rates.

Babu Raghunandan Prosad (for Babu Umakali Mukerjee) contended on behalf of the appellant that the raiyats were not entitled to the status of a raiyat at a fixed rate by merely showing that they paid uniformly for twenty years. The case of Bansi Das v. Jagdip Narain Chowdhry, (1896) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 152, is in my favour, and that is a case referred to in the order of reference.

Macpherson, J.—Supposing the raiyat proved uniform payment for twenty years and was entitled to the presumption that he held from the Permanent Settlement at that rate, would any Court be justified in holding as a matter of fact that he does not hold at fixed rates?

Trevelyan, J.—Is it not a natural inference of fact?

Ghose, J.—Your case, I suppose, is that there must be an agreement?

Yes.—The tenant does not plead any agreement to hold at a fixed rate. Mere uniform payment for twenty years does not make him a "raiyat at fixed rent." Section 21 does not confer the right, and there is no other section conferring it. The statute should not be interpreted to confer a right which has not been expressly [755] given. The case of Norendra Nath Sircar v. Kamal Basini Dasi, (1896) I. L. R., 23 Cal., 563, lays down the rule.

Babu Horendra Narayan Mitra (for Babu Satis Chandra Ghose) who appeared for the respondent was not called upon.

The judgments of the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and MACPHERSON, TREVELYAN, GHOSE, and AMEER ALI, JJ.) were as follow :—

Maclean, C.J.—The question we have to decide is whether the Assistant Settlement Officer was right in recording the defendants as raiyats holding at fixed rates. There was a difference of opinion between Mr. Justice BEVERLEY and Mr. Justice AMEER ALI upon the point, and the case was referred to Mr. Justice JENKINS, who took the same view as Mr. Justice AMEER ALI, and referred the case to a Full Bench. As, however, it has been decided that a Judge of the High Court, sitting alone, has no power to refer a case to a Full Bench, the case has to be dealt with by the present Court, which has been specially constituted to hear it. For my part I think that the conclusion at which Mr. Justice AMEER ALI and Mr. Justice JENKINS arrived is the correct one, and I do not think I can usefully add anything to what they have said in their judgments. In my opinion the Assistant Settlement Officer was right in recording the defendants as raiyats holding at fixed rates and the present appeal must be dismissed with costs. There will be no costs of the abortive reference.

Macpherson, J.—I also think that the view taken by Mr. Justice AMEER ALI and Mr. Justice JENKINS is correct, when the question is whether a raiyat holds at a fixed rent, that is to say, whether the rent or rate of rent was fixed in perpetuity, and the raiyat proves that he had held the land at an uniform unchanged rent or rate of rent for, say, a hundred years, the Court would, I think, be justified in presuming, apart from any statutory enactment, that the rent was fixed in perpetuity. In sub-section 2 of s. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the Legislature apparently recognise the diffi-[756]culty a raiyat might have in proving that the rent was unchanged for any such length of time, and it provides on proof of certain facts for the presumption which might in my opinion be made if in fact the finding of the Court was that the rent had been unchanged since the time of the Permanent Settlement.

Trevelyan, J—I agree in thinking that the Assistant Settlement Officer was right in recording the defendants as raiyats holding at fixed rates, and I prefer to place my decision entirely upon the terms of clause 2 of s. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act It having been proved in this case that these raiyats held at a rate of rent which had not been changed during the twenty years immediately before the institution of the suit or proceeding, it ought to be presumed, in accordance with the provision of that clause, that they have held at that rent or rate of rent from the time of the Permanent Settlement. It seems to me, as Mr. Justice MACPHERSON pointed out, that the fact that they held at that rent or rate of rent, raises in fact the presumption, apart from the Act, that the original contract was a contract to hold at fixed rates, and it would be evidence from which any judge of fact could reasonably presume that there had been such a contract. That is what has been done in this case. I, therefore, agree in thinking that the Settlement Officer was right in what he did.

Ghose, J.— I agree in thinking that the question referred to us should be answered in the affirmative.

Ameer Ali, J.—I gave my reasons very fully on the previous occasion for holding that the Assistant Settlement Officer was right in recording the defendants as raiyats holding at fixed rates, and I have nothing more to add.

Maclean, C.J.—The appeal will be dismissed with costs, including the costs of all the hearings in this Court.

S. C. C. Appeal dismissed.

[757] FULL BENCH REFERENCE

The 16th March, 1898

PRESENT

SIR FRANCIS W. MACLEAN, K C I E, CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR JUSTICE MACPHERSON, MR. JUSTICE TREVLLYAN, MR JUSTICE BANERJEE AND MR. JUSTICE JENKINS

Mahomed Wahiduddin .... .Petitioner

versus

Hakiman alias Hakku .... Opposite Party *

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss 525 and 526—Arbitration—Award—Denial of reference to arbitration—Jurisdiction of Court to determine the factum of reference—Appeal.

Held, by a majority of the Full Bench (MACPHERSON, J, dissenting) that when an application has been made under s 525 of the Code of Civil Procedure and notice has been given to the parties to the alleged arbitration, the jurisdiction of the Court to order the award to be filed and to allow proceedings to be taken under it is not taken away by a mere denial of the reference to arbitration on an objection to the validity of that reference.

Amrit Ram v Dasrat Ram, (1894) I L R, 17 All, 21, followed

Held, also, that an order under s 525 determining that there has been no valid reference to arbitration and rejecting the application is a "decree" within the meaning of s. 2 and an appeal lies from such order

Kali Prosanno Ghose v Rajani Kant Chatterjee, (1897) I L R, 25 Cal, 141, followed.

THE petitioner in this case applied to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Patna under s. 525 of the Civil Procedure Code for filing an award alleged to have been made on a reference to the arbitration without the intervention of a Court of Justice. Notices were issued to the parties to the arbitration other than the applicant, the opposite party, Bibi Hakiman, appeared and objected to the award being filed in Court on the ground that there was no reference to arbitration by her, and that the deed of reference had been fraudulently caused to be signed by her without the purport of the document being explained to her. The Subordinate Judge rejected the application of the petitioner upon the objection of the opposite party without determining the factum of the objection and without taking any evidence [758] of the truth of the allegation made therein. The petitioner moved the High Court under s 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the present rule was issued by that Court.

---

* Reference to the Full Bench in Rule No 1187 of 1897 issued by the High Court, against an order of Babu Upendra Chunder Mullick, Subordinate Judge of Patna, dated 27th March 1897.

Upon the hearing of the rule before a Division Bench (Mr. Justice TREVELYAN and Mr. Justice STEVENS) the case was referred to a Full Bench for final decision. The order of reference was as follows:—

"The question to be determined in this case is whether, when an application has been made under section 525 of the Civil Procedure Code, and notice has been given to the parties to the alleged arbitration other than the applicant, the jurisdiction of the Court to order the award to be filed and to allow proceedings to be taken under it is taken away by a mere denial of the reference to arbitration on an objection to the validity of that reference.

"The learned Judge in the Court below held that he had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter in the case of a denial of the existence or validity of the reference. His decision follows the decision of a Division Bench of this Court in the case of Bijadhur Bhugut v. Monohur Bhugut, (1883) I. L. R., 10 Cal., 11. The view which the Judge of this Court took in that case is supported by the judgment of three of the Judges of the Full Bench in the case of Surjan Raot v. Bhikari Raot, (1893) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 213, but the opinions there expressed have no reference to the question referred to the Full Bench. Speaking with all respect for those opinions, we think that we are not obliged to treat them as of the same force as if they had been directly in point. We are unable to see why the Court cannot determine the factum or validity of a reference to arbitration in the same way as it can determine any disputed question in a suit, and we feel reluctant to accept an argument which places the jurisdiction of the Court in the power of the defendant.

"The other cases which have been cited before us are: the case of Rung Lall v. Hem Narain Gir, (1885) I. L. R., 11 Cal., 166; the case of Amrit Ram v. Dasarat Ram, (1894) I. L. R., 17 All. 21; the case of Tejpur v. Mahomed Jamal, (1896) I. L. R., 20 Bom., 596; and the case of Husananna v. Linganna, (1894) I. L. R., 18 Mad., 423.

"We refer this matter for the final decision of a Full Bench."

The rule came on for hearing before the Full Bench on the 25th January 1898.

[759] Dr. Asutosh Mukerjeee (with him Moulvi M. Mustafa Khan) for the petitioner contended that the jurisdiction of the Court was not ousted by the bare denial of the existence or validity of the reference. When the factum of the reference is denied the case comes under section 520, cl. (a). Amrit Ram v. Dasrat Ram, (1894) I.L.R., 17 All., 21. Section 526 is not exclusive, and does not fix the limits of the inquiry to be held under s. 525; under that section the jurisdiction of the Court is dependent upon certain matters, and if any of these be disputed, the Court is bound to inquire. Amrit Ram v. Dasrat Ram, (1894) I.L.R., 17 All., 21. See also Tejpur v. Mahomed Jamal, (1896) I.L.R., 20 Bom., 596; see p. 603. Micharaya Guruvu v. Sadasiva Parama Guruvu, (1881) I. L. R., 4 Mad., 319; Husananna v. Linganna, (1894) I. L. R., 18 Mad., 423. The dicta in Pijadhur Bhugut v. Monohur Bhugut, (1883) I.L.R., 10 Cal., 11, and Surjan Raot v. Bhikari Raot, (1893) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 213, ought not to be followed.

Moulvi Mahomed Yusuf (with him M. Syed Shumsul Huda) showed cause.—Section 526 is exclusive and prohibits the Court from inquiring into objections not falling within the terms of ss. 520 and 521. Section 525 prescribes only a summary inquiry, as there is no appeal from an order rejecting an application under that section. Chintaman Singh v. Ruppa Koer, (1866) 6 W. R., Mis., 83 F. B. Complicated questions cannot therefore be gone into. [JENKINS, J.—Section 526 describes the proceedings as a suit.] It is not a suit for all purposes. Sashti Charan Chatterjee v. Tarak Chandra Chatterjee, (1871) 8 B. L. R., 315: 15 W. R., F. B., 9; Sree Ram Chowdhry v. Dinobundhoo Chowdhry, (1881) I. L. R., 7 Cal., 490. Sections 331, 523 and 529 also show that the proceedings under s. 525 are not a suit. The language of section 327 of Act VIII of 1859 was wider, and a narrower construction should be put upon the new section. The English cases referred to by PAUL, J., in [760] Sashti Charan Chatterjee's case support my contention. The earlier cases in the Allahabad High Court took the same view. If the contention of the other side prevails the consequence will be serious; there being no appeal, the decision in the summary proceeding will operate as res judicata.

Dr. Asutosh Mukerjee in reply.—The effect of taking s. 526 to be exclusive and construing it strictly is to shut out all inquiry into the objection raised by the opposite party, but it is an elementary principle that when the jurisdiction of a Court is disputed, the Court must adjudicate upon the question. Besides the cases already cited see Huree Persad Malee v. Koonjo Behary Shaha, (1862) W. R., F. B., 29: Marsh, 99; Chunder Koomar Mundul v. Bakur Ali Khan, (1868) 9 W. R., 598; Sashti Charan Chatterjee v. Tarak Chandra Chatterjee, (1871) 8 B. L. R., 315; see 324; Mayor of London v. Cox, (1866) L. R., 2 H. L., 239; see 261, 263. That the question is one of jurisdiction appears from Nusserwanjee Pestonjee v. Mynoodeen Khan, (1855) 6 Moore's I. A., 134; see 155; Pestonjee Nusserwanjee v. Maneckjee & Co., (1868) 12 Moore's I. A., 112. The case of Bindessuri Pershad Singh v. Jankee Pershad Singh, (1889) I. L. R., 16 Cal., 482 (see 486) clearly supports this argument. Wright v. Graham, (1848) 18 L. J., Exch. 29, and Barton v. Ranson. (1838) 3 M. & W., 322, are distinguishable and would not now be followed in England under the Arbitration Act, s. 12. See also Lord v. Lord, (1855) 26 L. J., Q. B., 34, and Russell on Arbitrators (7th edition, 593). There is nothing to show that the inquiry is to be a summary one. As to the meaning of the word "suit" see the judgment of PETHERAM, C.J., in Surjan Raot v. Bhikari Raot, (1893) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 213; see 221. The question of validity of the reference cannot be more complicated than the questions which arise under ss. 520 and 521. [761] A similar argument found no favour in Brojodurlabh Sinha v. Ramanath Ghose, (1897) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 908. As to the question of appeal, if the award is ordered to be filed, there will be an appeal from the final decree. See Kali Prosanno Ghose v. Rajani Kant Chatterjee, (1897) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 141, where the earlier cases are discussed. If the application is rejected the order does not operate as res-judicata - see Mahommed Nawaz Khan v. Alam Khan, (1891) L. R., 18 I. A., 73; see 76, which shows at any rate that the validity of the reference may be put in issue under s. 525. The mischief of a contrary decision is forcibly put by PRINSEP, J., in Surjan Raot v. Bhikari Raot, (1893) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 213; see 224. If there is an appeal from the order of the lower Court the present petition under s. 622 may be regarded as a memorandum of appeal, a deficient Court-fee being levied from the petitioner.

The following judgments were delivered by the Full Bench :—

Maclean, C. J.—The question referred for the decision of the Full Bench in this case, is, whether when an application has been made under s. 525 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and notice has been given to the parties to the alleged arbitration (other than the applicant), the jurisdiction of the Court to order the award to be filed and to allow proceedings to be taken under it, is taken away by a mere denial of the reference to the arbitration on an objection to the validity of that reference. The affirmative of the proposition involved in the reference has no doubt been decided by more than one Division Bench of this Court, and it further has the support of the opinion expressed, though unnecessarily for the purposes of their decision, by certain members of a Full Bench Court in the case of Surjan Raot v. Bhikari Raot, (1893) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 213; see 224. There is, however, no authority on the point by which we are bound, so that it is open to us to consider the question on the words of the Code itself, apart from previous decision. The sections of the Code more directly governing the present case are ss. 525 and 526, which are in these terms :—

[762] SECTION 525 —" When any matter has been referred to arbitration without the intervention of a Court of Justice, and an award has been made thereon, any person interested in the award may apply to the Court of the lowest grade having jurisdiction over the matter to which the award relates, that the award be filed in Court.

" The application shall be in writing and shall be numbered and registered as a suit between the applicant as plaintiff and the other parties as defendants.

" The Court shall direct notice to be given to the parties to the arbitration other than the applicant, requiring them to show cause, within a time specified, why the award should not be filed."

SECTION 526.—" If no ground, such as is mentioned or referred to in s. 520 or s. 521, be shown against the award, the Court shall order it to be filed, and such award shall then take effect as an award made under the provisions of this chapter."

Now, according to a literal reading of s. 525, two conditions are requisite to warrant an application that an award be filed in Court: first, the matter must have been referred to arbitration without the intervention of a Court of Justice, second, an award must have been made thereon. It would, therefore, seem, on general principles, that the existence or non-existence of each of those conditions is a matter for enquiry and adjudication. It is difficult to see how the Court can ascertain whether or not such an award as is mentioned in the section has been actually made, without first ascertaining, if the matter be disputed, whether or not there has been such a reference as is mentioned in the section. It is urged that the section presupposes the existence of a submission or reference to arbitration, and that if this be disputed, the Court cannot go into the matter, but must leave the parties to have the factum or otherwise of reference decided in an independent suit The practical effect of such contention, if sound, would be that any party to a reference against whom an adverse award has been made, has only to allege that there was no reference, and he can throw the matter over and paralyze the operation of ss. 525 and 526 of the Code. [763] I can scarcely think this was the intention of the Legislature, nor do I think the language of the section warrants such a contention. It is difficult to see why the Court, on an application under s. 525, can go into the delicate questions indicated in ss. 520 and 521, and yet is unable to go into that of whether or not there were any reference to arbitration, which is the substratum of the whole matter, and upon which the summary jurisdiction under s. 525 is based. It seems a rather odd conclusion that the Court may go into questions which may result in the award being set aside, and yet cannot go into the question of whether or not there has been any valid reference to arbitration. It has however been urged before us that this literal interpretation of this section must be discarded, because, it is contended, there would be no right of appeal from an adjudication on the factum of reference. This by itself, even were the contention well founded, would not be sufficient reason for withholding from clear and unequivocal language its ordinary meaning, for the function of the Court is to expound the Act as it stands according to the plain sense of the words used. Moreover, any argument drawn from the alleged absence of any right to appeal loses its force, in view of the fact that the same consideration would apply to the adjudication as to the existence of an agreement to refer on an application under s. 523, and also as to those matters of far greater difficulty and intricacy indicated in s. 521, and referentially incorporated into s. 526, though undoubtedly they would have to be investigated and determined. But in fact the whole basis of this argument, in my opinion, has no existence, for I think the right of appeal exists. In the recent case of Kali Prosanno Ghose v. Rajani Kant Chatterjee, (1897) I.L.R., 25 Cal., 141, a Division Bench of this Court has held that an appeal will lie against a decree given in accordance with an award under s. 522 of the Code, when the award upon which the decree is based is not a valid and legal award. An award cannot be a valid or legal award if there has been no submission to arbitration, and how then can the Court go into the question of whether or not it is valid or legal if it cannot go into the question of whether or not there were a submission to arbitration. I do not think [764] that s. 522 contemplates there should be no appeal where the validity of the award is challenged. Another argument addressed to the Court on behalf of the opposite party was, that the question of whether or not there had been any submission to arbitration could not be determined, on the grouud that under ss. 525 and 526 the Court could only investigate such matters as are indicated in ss. 520 and 521. This is a somewhat dangerous argument, for, if it were to prevail, the result would be that the existence and validity of the agreement to refer cannot be questioned, and the order to file the award would be a matter of course. It will be noticed that under s 526 it is compulsory on the Court to file the award, unless some such ground as is mentioned in ss. 520 and 521 be shown against it. The result is that, in my opinion, the jurisdiction of the Court to order an award to be filed, and to allow proceedings thereunder, is not taken away by a mere denial of the reference to arbitration. This view is consistent with the decision of a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Amrit Ram v. Dasrat Ram, (1894) I. L. R., 17 All., 21.

I think, however, that this application must be treated as an appeal, the time for appealing not having expired, and not as an application under s. 622 of the Code, and the petitioner must undertake to pay any additional Court-fee there may be on the footing of its being an appeal.

Trevelyan, J.—I agree entirely with the view expressed by the learned Chief Justice.

Jenkins, J.—I am of opinion that the question referred to us must be answered in the way proposed by the Chief Justice, and for the reasons expressed in his judgment, and I agree with him as to the mode in which the case should be dealt with.

Macpherson, J.—I regret that I must in this case dissent from the decision of the other learned Judges of this Bench. In my opinion s. 525 of the Code presupposes that there has been a reference to arbitration and an award made thereon, and [765] the Court under s. 526 must deal with the award on that footing, if it can do so, having regard to the nature of the cause shown. If it cannot, if for instance the cause shown is that there was no submission and consequently no award, the Court must hold its hand and refuse the application.

Section 525 does not, it is true, refer to an admitted reference or an admitted award, but the Legislature might well refrain from using language which was too suggestive. If stress is to be laid on this circumstance, equal stress must be placed on the absence of any indication that when the question of submission is a question in dispute, the Court is to determine on evidence the fact of a submission. I may point out that an express provision to this effect is to be found in s. 531 when an alleged agreement to refer is filed by one of the parties.

Section 526 is silent as to the course to be adopted if, in showing cause, there is a denial of any submission, and I see nothing in that section or in s. 525 to prevent the Court from refusing the application on that ground without enquiring into and deciding the disputed fact. The cause to be shown under s. 526, and established according to the decision of the Full Bench in Surjan Raot v. Bhikari Raot, (1893) I.L R., 21 Cal., 213, is some cause as is mentioned or referred to in s. 520 or 521, but such cause could only be shown when there was an actual and not merely an alleged award. It would, moreover, be contrary to established practice and to all ideas of justice and fairness that when one party alleges and the other denies a submission, the burden of proof should be placed on the party denying. It is the party objecting who is to show cause, and this Court has held that to show cause means to establish cause.

The corresponding section (321) of the Code of 1859 enacted that if no sufficient cause was shown against the award, the award should be filed. The cases Iswari Prosad v. Bir Bhanjan Tewari, (1871) 8 B. L. R., 315 : 15 W. R. (F. B.) 9, and Chowdhri Murtaza Hossein v. Mussamat Bibi Bechanissa, (1876) L. R., 3 I. A., 209, show that there was a difference of opinion as to what those words [766] meant. The intended scope of the section has not been made very clear in the present Code, but the altered language of s. 526, coupled with the absence of any extending provisions, indicate to my mind that the Courts were intended to deal with actual and not with disputed award. Sections 525 and 526 must be read together, and so reading them they bear in my opinion the construction which I have put upon them. This construction is, moreover, consistent with what one may reasonably suppose to have been the intention of the Legislature that when the tribunal undisputedly chosen by the parties has made its award, the Court should determine in a summary way, without any right of appeal and having regard only to matters arising on the award on the conduct of the parties or the arbitrators in the making of it, whether effect should be given to the award. In determining the scope of these sections one cannot overlook the fact that finality is given to the decree which by the operation of ss. 526 and 522 is to follow on the filing of the award, except, in so far as the decree is in excess of or not in accordance with the award. No appeal is allowed against an order for the filing of the award, and when such an order is made, the award filed is to take effect as an award made under the provisions of Chapter XXVII. That is to say, the Court is to give judgment according to the award, which must of necessity be the award filed; upon that judgment a decree is to follow, and no appeal is to lie against that decree except in so far as it is in excess of or not in accordance with the award. When the decree is in strict accordance with the award filed, I fail to see that there is any right of appeal against the decree. If the Legislature intended that the Court of the lowest grade having jurisdiction in the matter should decide disputed questions of submission, I cannot believe that an appeal from the decision would have been disallowed. Possibly an appeal might lie on the ground that the Court had made a decree which it had no jurisdiction to make, but that would mean that the Court had decided matters which it was not competent to decide, and such an appeal would be very different from an appeal against the decree, on the ground that the decree was wrong by reason of an erroneous decision on a question of fact antecedent to the award with which alone the Courts can deal under ss. 525 and 526.

[767] A Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court held in Amrit Ram v. Dasrat Ram, (1894) I.L.R., 17 All., 21, that the words in s. 526 "if no ground such as is mentioned or referred to in s. 520 or s. 521" covered all objections relating to the submission and the authority of the arbitrators to act. If this decision is right my view of the section is wrong. I must however with due respect dissent from the decision. It has been already dissented from by FARRAN, C.J., and STRACHEY, J.—in Tejpur v. Mahomed Jammal, (1896) I. L. R., 20 Bom., 596, and I cannot do better than adopt the reasons of those learned Judges for holding that s. 526 bears no such construction as that. It is argued, however, that as the application under s. 525 is to be registered and numbered as a suit between the applicant as plaintiff and the other parties as defendants, it must be dealt with as a suit, and that the Court has at the least an implied power to try and decide all matters arising on the application. I think no such implication rises from that direction standing alone and without the addition of further words such as are to be found in s. 331 and in s. 529 read with s. 531, and having regard to the language used it would, in my opinion, be going very far to hold that the provisions of the Procedure Code relating to suits apply to applications under s. 525, and that every such application is to be dealt with as a suit. If, moreover, the application is to be dealt with as a suit culminating in a decree one way or the other, one is driven to what seems to me to be an absurd conclusion. The Court makes an order refusing the application on one or other of the grounds referred to in s. 526 after adjudicating on the objections which come within that section. The order is a decree as defined in s. 9 [s. 2?] of the Code, for as it is an adjudication on a right claimed on a defence set up which, so far as regards the Court expressing it, decides the suit. An appeal would lie against the decree, an appeal not being prohibited by any provision of law. If, however, the Court after a similar adjudication overrules the objections coming under s. 526 and makes an order that the award should be filed, the order is not an appealable order, and it is not a decree because it does not finally dispose of the suit. Obviously also no appeal would lie against the decree which is [768] to follow on the filing of the award, if the decree was in accordance with the award.

It would follow, therefore, that if the application was refused on any ground set out in s. 521, the plaintiff would have a right of appeal, but if the application was allowed, the objections under that section being overruled, the defendants would have no right of an appeal. I am unable to believe that any such result as this was intended or contemplated and I must decline to put upon the sections a construction which would lead to it, the more especially as I think they bear a more reasonable construction by which such a result is avoided.

The consequence would, of course, be much more serious, if there was a dispute as to the submission. In that case, if the Court held there was no submission and refused the application on that ground, the plaintiff would have a right of appeal. If it held that there was a submission and made a decree in accordance with the award, the defendant, in the view which I take and have already expressed, would have no right of appeal.

The real objection to putting a limited construction on the two sections seems to be that the defendant by denying that there was any submission could prevent the operation of the sections. I presume that the applicant would have to support his application by affidavit on verified petition, and that the defendant when called on to show cause must show cause in the same sort of way. His denial, therefore, if false, would not be without risk to himself. Nor do I see that in my construction of the sections any serious hardship or inconvenience is involved. The refusal of the application on the ground that there is a dispute as to the factum of a submission means only this, that the special and summary procedure provided by these sections is not applicable to the case. The applicant is not left without a remedy, he can bring a suit to enforce the award, and in that suit all questions upon which the parties are at issue would be tried in the ordinary way and with the ordinary right of appeal.

The cases in this Court seem to me to be all one way and in favour of the view I have expressed. I need only refer to [769] Ichamoyee Chowdhranee v. Prosunno Nath Chowdhri, (1883) I L.R., 9 Cal., 557, decided by WILSON, J., and myself, and to Bijadhur Bhugut v. Monohur Bhugut, (1883) I. L. R., 10 Cal., 11, decided by MITTER and TOTTENHAM, JJ. The head-note in the former case does not seem to be quite accurate. WILSON, J., although he went further than I was disposed to go, says this: "There is an additional objection to the present order because the applicant when before the Subordinate Judge denied altogether that the submission was binding upon her, and s. 525 seems to me to have no application to a case in which the submission or its binding effect is in dispute." Then there is the opinion expressed by PRINSEP and PIGOT, JJ., and in which I concurred, in the Full Bench case Surjan Raot v Bhikari Raot, (1893) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 213. That case overrules some of the decisions of this Court in which other learned Judges had taken a still more restricted view of the powers of the Court in dealing with applications under s. 525, and although the opinion above referred to on the question now raised has not the force of a decision, it was deliberately formed and expressed in order to prevent the decision of the Full Bench being carried further than it was intended to go.

The Bombay High Court has practically adopted the same construction in Samal Nathu v. Jaishankar Dulsukram, (1884) I. L. R., 9 Bom., 254, and Tejpur Dew Chand v. Mahomed Jammal, (1896) I.L.R., 20 Bom., 596.

The decision of the Madras High Court in Husananna v. Linganna, (1894) I. L. R, 18 Mad., 423, when examined will be found to be no authority on the question now raised. On the other side there is the decision of the Allahabad High Court already referred to.

It follows from what I have said that I entirely dissent from the conclusion that an appeal lies in this case.

Banerjee, J.—The question for the determination of which this case has been referred to a Full Bench is—

[770] "Whether when an application has been made under s. 525 of the Civil Procedure Code, and notice has been given to the parties to the alleged arbitration other than the applicant, the jurisdiction of the Court to order the award to be filed, and to allow proceedings to be taken under it, is taken away by a mere denial of the reference to arbitration on an objection to the validity of the reference."

The facts of the case upon which this question arises are shortly these: The petitioner before us applied to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Patna, under s. 525 of the Civil Procedure Code, for filing an award on the allegation that the same had been made on a reference to arbitration without the intervention of the Court. The opposite party appeared on notice being served on her, and objected to the award being filed in Court on the ground that there was no reference to arbitration by her, and that the ekrar or deed purporting to embody her assent to the reference had been fraudulently caused to be signed by her without the purport of the document being explained to her. And the Court below following the cases of Bijadhur Bhugut v. Monohur Bhugut, (1883) I. L. R., 10 Cal., 11, and Surjan Raot v. Bhikari Raot, (1893) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 213, rejected the application without taking any evidence or making any enquiry into the truth of the allegations on either side. Aggrieved by the order rejecting the application, the petitioner moved this Court, and has obtained the rule which has given rise to this reference.

The answer to the question referred to us must depend upon the meaning of ss. 525 and 526 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and in ascertaining that meaning we must look not merely to the letter but also to the spirit of the law, and must also, as far as possible, have regard to the interpretation put by previous decisions upon these and other cognate provisions of the Code.

Section 525 says: "When any matter has been referred for arbitration without the intervention of a Court of Justice, and an award has been made thereon, any person interested in the award may [771] apply to the Court of the lowest grade having jurisdiction over the matter to which the award relates, that the award be filed in Court.

"The application shall be in writing and shall be numbered and registered as a suit between the applicant as plaintiff and the other parties as defendants.

"The Court shall direct notice to be given to the parties to the arbitration other than the applicant, requiring them to show cause within a time specified why the award should not be filed."

An applicant under s. 525 must, therefore, allege that there has been a reference to arbitration without the intervention of a Court of Justice, and an award has been made thereon in which he is interested, and it must be competent to the party summoned to show cause to show, not only that the award is open to the objections referred to in s. 526, but also that the alleged reference to arbitration never took place Section 526, it is true, enacts that "if no ground, such as is mentioned in s. 520 or 521, be shown against the award, the Court shall order it to be filed, and such award shall then take effect as an award made under the provisions of this chapter;" but that cannot be taken to imply that the party summoned to show cause can resist the application only if he can show that the award is open to one or more of the objections contemplated by ss. 520 and 521, and that he is precluded from urging that there was no actual or valid reference to arbitration. It was argued that the effect of s. 526, referring only to the objections under ss 520 and 521, is to make the absence of other objections such as that there was no actual or valid submission to arbitration, a necessary condition for the Courts entertaining an application under s. 525. But if that had been the intention of the Legislature, it would have been expressed, not in this obscure and indirect way, but more clearly and directly by making s. 525 run, not as it does, but somewhat to the following effect, namely, "when it is admitted by all the parties concerned that any matter has been referred to arbitration without the intervention of a Court of Justice, etc." Moreover, if this argument was well founded, that is, if the jurisdiction to entertain an application for filing a private arbitration award depended upon the admis-[772]sion of all the parties concerned that there was a valid reference to arbitration, it would make the section practically nugatory, it being always in the power of a recusant party to say that he does not admit the fact of a valid reference to arbitration having been made.

When s. 525 allows a party to apply to the Court for filing an award on the allegation that there was a private reference to arbitration and that the award was made upon such reference, and when it directs that the application shall be numbered and registered as a suit between the applicant as plaintiff and the other parties as defendants, and the other parties shall be summoned to show cause why the award should not be filed, the Court must be held to have jurisdiction (unless it is expressly taken away, which is not the case) to enquire into and determine the question whether there has been a valid reference to arbitration, in the event of the parties summoned denying the reference. And the object of s. 526 is, in my opinion, not to limit the jurisdiction of the Court under s. 525 to cases in which the reference to arbitration is admitted, but simply to provide that the only grounds upon which the validity of a private arbitration award, made upon a reference to arbitration either admitted or proved, can be questioned are precisely those upon which an award made on a reference to arbitration in the course of a suit can be called in question; or, in other words, its object is to show that the validity of a private arbitration award cannot any more than that of an award made on a reference to arbitration in the course of a suit, be questioned on the ground of the award being erroneous in fact.

It was next argued that if it had been intended that the Court in a case under s. 525 should determine the question whether there has been any reference to arbitration when such question is raised, then the Legislature would have provided in s. 588 for an appeal against an order determining such question adversely to the applicant; and it would further have provided for an appeal against the decree based on the award when such question is decided in his favour, instead of making such decree final as the latter part of s. 526 by implication does.

[773] The answer to this argument is simple. An order under s. 525 determining on the objection of the party summoned to show cause that there has been no valid reference to arbitration and rejecting the application which is numbered and registered as a suit, is clearly a decree as defined in s. 2, and an appeal lies against it under s. 540. The case of Baboo Chintaman Singh v. Umi Kunwar, (1866) 6 W. R. Misc., 83: Sup. Vol. B. L. R., 505, was relied upon as showing that such an order is not appealable, but that was a case under the Civil Procedure Code of 1859, which contained no such definition of the term "decree" as is given in s. 2 of the present Code. Again, when the Court disallows the objection that there has been no reference to arbitration, and orders the award to be filed, and a decree is made in accordance with the award under the latter part of s. 526, which by implication makes s. 522 applicable to the case, though such decree, in so far as it is in accordance with the award, is under the last-mentioned section not open to appeal, yet that does not bar an appeal against the decree when the appeal raises the question whether there was any submission to arbitration and whether there was any valid award at all—See Joy Prokash Lal v. Sheo Golam Singh,* (1884) I. L. R., 11 Cal., 37; Kali Prosunno Ghose v. Rajani Kant Chatterjee, (1897) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 141; and Suppu v. Govinda Charyar, (1887) I. L. R., 11 Mad., 85; Lachman Das v. Brijpal, (1884) I. L. R., 6 All., 174. The finality that s. 522 contemplates attaches to a decree made in accordance with a valid award; the appeal that that section bars is an appeal against the award on the ground of the award being erroneous in fact on the merits.

It was then argued that though s. 525 requires that an application for filing a private arbitration award is to be numbered and registered as a suit, it does not, like ss. 331 and 531, say that the Court is to try the case in the event of opposition in the same manner as a suit, or that its order shall have the same force as a decree; and that a notice to the other parties to the award requiring them to show cause is not the same thing as [774] a summons to them requiring them to defend a suit. I think this argument is fully met by the following answer:—

In the proceedings under the two sections referred to, namely s. 331 and s. 531, the matter in dispute between the parties is intended to be determined by the Court, and accordingly it is expressly provided in those sections that the matter shall be determined by the Court in the same manner as a suit, and the order of the Court shall have the same force as a decree. In the class of cases to which ss. 525 and 526 relate, the primary matters in dispute between the parties are, or are alleged to be, determined by the award of the arbitrators; the dispute, if any, that may arise is only as to certain secondary or subsidiary matters, that is, as to the fact or the validity of the award, or of the submission to arbitration or of both; and if on any ground (including a ground such as this, namely, that there was no real or valid submission to arbitration), the Court holds that the award cannot be filed, it is evidently not open to the parties to ask the Court to decide for itself the matters to which the award relates; so that any specific provision to the effect that the Court is to decide the case as a suit would have been wholly out of place. The absence of any such provision cannot therefore afford valid ground for any adverse argument.

Then as to the supposed distinction between a notice to show cause and a summons to defend a suit, I think it is sufficient to say that when upon a notice to show cause, the party served with notice must allege and prove cause, and the Court must fully and finally determine the validity of the cause shown so far as it relates to matters contemplated by ss. 520 and 521, as has been settled by the decision of the Full Bench in Sujan v. Bhikari (I. L. R., 21 Cal., 213), there can be no good ground for thinking that those words imply either that the Court is not to determine at all, or that it is to determine only summarily, and subject to a more complete determination by a suit, the cause shown, when the cause shown consists in a denial of any reference to arbitration.

It was lastly argued that as the procedure prescribed by s. 525 is a summary one, and the proceeding is instituted by an [775] application and not by a plaint on payment of a proper Court-fee, it is not likely that the Legislature intended that any difficult questions, such as those relating to the fact or validity of a reference to arbitration, should be enquired into by the Court under that section. But the simple answer to the argument is this, that the Court must under s. 526 enquire into and determine objections such as those referred to in ss. 520 and 521, which raise questions of far greater nicety and difficulty than those sought to be excluded from the Court's consideration, and there is no reason why the Court should not determine these last which lie at the threshold of the case, when it must enquire into the former.

Sections 523 and 524 to some extent favour the view I take. They provide that a party to a private agreement to refer to arbitration any matter in dispute may apply to have the agreement filed in Court; thereupon the application is to be numbered and registered as a suit between the applicant and the other parties to the agreement, and a notice is to be issued to them to show cause why the agreement should not be filed, and if no sufficient cause be shown the agreement will be filed, arbitrators appointed, and the case proceeded with in the same manner as if the reference to arbitration had been made in a pending suit. Now in such a case the cause shown can relate only to the fact, validity or subsistence of the agreement to submit to arbitration, and if the Court is to enquire into these matters in a proceeding instituted under s. 523, there is no good reason why it should not enquire into them in a case under s. 525. As I understand the sections included in Chapter XVII of the Code of Civil Procedure, they are intended to provide for all cases of reference to arbitration, whether it be made, in the course of a suit, or privately without the intervention of a Court. The first group of sections, that is, ss. 506 to 522, provide for reference to arbitration in the course of a pending suit; the second group, that is ss. 523 and 524, relate to cases in which the parties have, or are alleged to have, before instituting any suit, privately come to an agreement to refer any matters in dispute to arbitration, but have proceeded no further, and the third group, that is ss. 525 and 526, to cases in which there has been, or is alleged to have been, a private submission to arbitration followed by an [776] award. In the first group of sections are given in detail the provisions applicable to the subject, while the other two groups concisely and by implication refer to such of the provisions of the first group as are respectively applicable to the classes of cases they contemplate, and it is their brevity which has given rise to the difficulty of construing them.

I may add that the view I take has the effect of preventing multiplicity of judicial proceedings by making the proceedings under s. 525 determine finally all the necessary questions that may arise in it, and it is in accordance with the view taken by the majority of the Full Bench in Brojo Durlubh Sinha v. Roma Nath Ghose, (1897) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 908, upon a somewhat analogous question arising upon the construction of s. 375.

It remains now to consider the cases cited.

Of these Chintamoni Singh v. Rupa Koer, (1866) 6 W. R., Misc., 83, (which has already been referred to above), and Lala Iswar Prosad v. Bir Bhanjan Tewari, (1871) 8 B L R., 315 15 W R. (F. B) 9, were decided under the Civil Procedure Code of 1859 under which the provisions relating to appeal were, as has been shown above, different from those under the present Code.

The cases of Ichamoyee Chowdhranee v. Prosunno Nath Chowdhri, (1883) I. L. R., 9 Cal, 557, Hurinath Chowdhry v. Nistarini Chowdhranee, (1883) I. L. R, 10 Cal., 74, which not only favour the contention of the opposite party, but go a great deal further, have been dissented from by the Full Bench in Surjan Raot v. Bhikari Raot, (1893) I. L R, 21 Cal., 213.

The case of Bijadhur Bhugut v. Monohur Bhugut, (1883) I. L. R., 10 Cal., 11, is no doubt against the view I take The decision in that case is based upon the terms of s 526. MITTER, J, in delivering the judgment of the Court says: "It appears from s 526 that the Court has jurisdiction to adjudicate only upon the grounds of objection mentioned in ss. 520 and 521." For the reasons given above I [777] must respectfully dissent from this view. And the same remarks apply to the case of Tejpur v Mahomed Jamal, (1896) I. L. R., 20 Bom., 596.

The opinions of PRINSEP, PIGOT and MACPHERSON, JJ., in Surjan Raot v. Bhikari Raot, (1893) I. L. R, 21 Cal., 213, are also against the view I take. But those opinions were not necessary to be expressed for the determination of the question before the Court. The ground upon which those opinions are based is the absence of any reference in s. 526 to any objections other than those contemplated by ss 520 and 521. But this ground, as I have tried to show above, is not sufficient to support the inference that is based upon it.

The case of Muhammed Nawaz Khan v. Alam Khan, (1891) L. R., 18 I. A., 73, was referred to as showing that the Privy Council held that an order rejecting an application for filing an award under s. 525 would not operate as res judicata upon the question of the validity of the award, and thence it was argued that the jurisdiction of the Court under that section must be of a very limited character. I do not think that the case cited lays down any such broad rule or supports any such inference. Their Lordships overruled the plea of res judicata, not upon the ground of the jurisdiction of the Court under s. 525 being limited in any way, but solely upon the ground of the question as to the validity of the award not having been raised and decided in the former proceeding.

On the other hand the cases of Amrit Ram v. Dasrat Ram, (1894) I. L. R., 17 All., 21, and Husananna v. Linganna, (1894) I. L. R., 18 Mad., 423, support the view I take.

For the foregoing reasons I would answer the question referred to us in the negative.

But here an important point arises for consideration. As in the view I take the order of the Court below rejecting the application is open to appeal, is it competent to the petitioner to invoke our interference under s. 622 of the Code of Civil [778] Procedure? The question I think must be answered in the negative. But as, regard being had to the value of the subject-matter to which the award relates, the appeal lies to this Court, and as the application under s. 622 was made before the expiry of the time allowed for an appeal, I would treat the application as an appeal (provided the applicant puts in the proper Court-fee) and I would decree the appeal, set aside the order of the Court below, and remand the case to that Court for a decision on the merits.

Maclean, C. J.—With this indication of our opinion we remit the case to the Division Bench which referred it to us. We fix three gold mohurs as the hearing fee for the hearing before the Full Bench.

S. C. C. Appeal allowed; case remanded.

NOTES.

[I. APPEAL—

1. The Civil Procedure Code, 1908, sec 104 provides for appeals from orders filing or refusing to file an agreement to refer to arbitration—(d) under Sch. II, para. 17; and from orders filing or refusing to file an award in an arbitration without the intervention of the Court—(f) under Sch. II, para. 21. The decree in accordance with the award after it is filed is made final.

The above provisions set at rest the conflict of case-law previous thereto.

2. The leading case on the subject is the Privy Council decision in Ghulam Jilani Khan v. Muhammad Hussain (1901) 29 Cal., 167.

3. In the following cases, it was held that an order refusing to file an award was an appealable decree:—(1905) 2 C. L. J., 80, (1905) 10 C. W. N., 601: 2 C. L. J., 153; (1908) 7 C. L. J., 486; (1908) 4 Lower Burma, 130; (1907) P. R., 100, (1910) 38 Cal., 143; (1903) 27 Mad., 255 F. B.

4. In (1906) 33 Cal., 757 F. B., it was held that an appeal lay from an order directing the filing of the award.

5. As regards the finality when the award is filed and a decree is drawn in accordance therewith, this decision, it was pointed out in (1905) 10 C. W.N., 601 2 C. L. J., 153, must be deemed to have been overruled by the Privy Council decision in Ghulam Jilani's case. In the following cases, it was held that the decree was final.—(1905) 2 C. L. J., 153; (1902) 2 C. L. J., 142; (1906) 33 Cal., 899; (1906) 11 C. W. N., 1152; (1907) 29 All., 457, (1910) 21 M. L. J., 263; (1908) 35 Cal., 648; contra (1905) 28 All, 21; (1905) 2 A. L J., 477

II. JURISDICTION TO ENQUIRE INTO FACTS OF REFERENCE AND AWARD—

The Civil Procedure Code, 1908, Sch. II, para. 21, expressly provides for inquiry into the facts of reference and of award by using these additional words, "Where the Court is satisfied that the matter has been referred to arbitration, and that an award has been made thereon," etc. This supersedes (1896) 20 Bom., 596 and is in accordance with (1896) 25 Cal., 757; (1897) 20 Mad., 89; (1895) 17 All., 21; (1906) 28 All., 621; (1901) P. Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 6, clause (a)—Reversionary right—Assignment of the interest of a Hindu reversioner.

The interest of a Hindu reversioner upon the death of a widow does not come within the terms of clause (a) of s. 6 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), and an assignment of such interest is allowed by law.

MUSSUMMAT LALITA KOER, widow of one Lala Bhekdhari Lal, inherited from her husband an eight-anna share of Mouza Norowli Sen and other properties, and sold two annas out of her share to Birjlal Singh for alleged necessities on the 20th December 1868. The defendants (1st party) are the heirs and assignees of Birjlal in possession of the said two annas. The defendant (2nd party) who is the nearest sapinda and heir of Lala Bhekdhari Lal, sold his reversionary right in respect of the said two annas and [779] other property during the lifetime of Lalita Koer to the plaintiff on the 7th November 1882. Lalita died in 1884, and the present suit was brought by the plaintiff for recovering possession of the said two annas on the ground that the sale to Birjlal was without any legal necessity, and became "an absolute nullity" on the death of Lalita Koer. Various objections were raised by the different parties, defendants, and issues joined thereon, but the Court below dismissed the suit, on the ground that the transfer of the reversionary interest to the plaintiff under the deed of 7th November 1882 was invalid under section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882).

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose, Babu Saligram Singh, and Babu Lakshmi Narayan Singh for the Appellant.

Babu Tarak Nath Palit and Babu Umakali Mukerjee for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Trevelyan and Stevens, JJ.) was as follows:—

In this case the assignee from a reversioner is seeking to question a sale made by a Hindu widow. The widow is now dead. The assignment was made to the plaintiff during her lifetime.

The learned Subordinate Judge has held that no effect can be given to that assignment, having regard to the terms of section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act.

In that section the following property is stated not to be capable of transfer, namely, "the chance of an heir-apparent succeeding to an estate, the chance of a relation obtaining a legacy on the death of a kinsman, or any other mere possibility of a like nature." The question before us is whether the right of a Hindu reversioner during the life-time of the widow is included within this expression. It is not, we are confident, possible to include it within the expression "The chance of an heir-apparent succeeding to an estate." The words "heir-apparent" are always used with reference to the relation between a living person and his successor. It is not quite certain exactly what was meant by the expression "heir-apparent." It is an expression which is very rarely used, except with regard to [780] the heir to the throne. As far as we can see, the provisions of section 6 are only intended to apply to cases of a mere hope or chance of succession which may be defeated by the act of some person having the present disposal of the property. It can scarcely be said that the right of a Hindu reversioner is a mere possibility. It is an interest contingent upon the reversioner surviving the widow, and also upon the non-intervention of a full heir. This is a contingency dependent on no man's will, but upon the happening of uncertain events. It is an interest which is capable of being protected by the Court. The reversioner can sue to restrain waste; he can, on making out a proper case, obtain a receiver; and he can contest alienations made by the widow. It is an interest which may at any time cease to be contingent by the widow giving up her estate. The reversioner with the widow can make a complete title to the property. A transfer of this interest is, in our opinion, not within the letter of the law, and, moreover, it is not within the mischief which the section was intended to counteract. Mere possibilities of succession are wholly incapable of valuation, whereas with the aid of an actuary it is not difficult to put a money value upon the interest of a reversioner.

The decisions under the Civil Procedure Code as to what is attachable can be of no assistance to us in this case. Much which, under the law, cannot be sold in execution is capable of being dealt with by voluntary transfer, and we think that it would be wholly unsafe to apply to the Transfer of Property Act decisions which have been given with regard to the Civil Procedure Code. In our opinion there is nothing in the law to prevent the assignment to the plaintiff. An argument was addressed to us with reference to section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act, but having regard to our view of the construction of section 6 of the same Act, it is unnecessary for us to consider that argument. The decree of the lower Court must be set aside, and the case remanded for determination on its merits.

The plaintiff is entitled to his costs of this appeal as against defendants 1 and 3 to 8.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 27 and 29—Landlord and Tenant—Suit for rent—Enhancement of rent—Enhancement of rent by a registered kabuliat within 15 years from a previous oral agreement to pay enhancement of rent, Effect of.

By an oral agreement in the year 1885 the tenant defendant agreed to pay an enhancement of rent, and he paid rent at that rate until subsequently he executed in the year 1893 a registered kabuliat, by which he agreed to pay a further enhancement of rent which was more than two-annas in the rupee. Upon a suit for rent by the landlord based on the registered kabuliat :

Held, that, inasmuch as the enhancement of rent, in s. 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, refers to enhancement after the promulgation of the Act, if in this case the enhancement which was made in the year 1885 was before the Act came into force, it would not bar an enhancement during the period of fifteen years from the date thereof as contemplated by cl. (3) of s. 29. But if the said enhancement was made after the Act came into force, it would also not bar a subsequent enhancement within fifteen years from the date thereof, as the previous contract was only an oral one, and was not effectual and binding upon the defendant.

Held, also, that having regard to cl. (b) of s. 29, as the enhancement was more than two-annas in the rupee, the registered kabuliat was bad in law, if the rent then agreed to be paid was an enhanced rent. The kabuliat would also be bad in law, if the rent agreed to be paid is partly enhanced and partly increased rent.

Held, further, that having regard to proviso (1) of s. 29, as also the provisions of s. 27, the plaintiff would at any rate (i.e., failing the kabuliat) be entitled to recover rent at the rate paid by the defendant for more than three years.

THE facts of the case, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of this report, are sufficiently stated in the judgment of the High Court.

Babu Saroda Churn Mitter, with him Babu Mukund Nath Roy, for the Appellant.

[782] Babu Mohiny Mohun Chuckerbutty for the Respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (Ghose and Wilkins, JJ.) was as follows :—

This appeal arises out of a suit for rent at the rate of Rs. 103 per year, upon a kabuliat executed by the defendant in the year 1893. The defendant pleaded that the kabuliat was not a bona fide transaction, but was the result of coercion exercised by the plaintiff and that the rent payable was Rs. 39-3 a year.

The Munsif, among other issues, laid down the following :—

(1) Whether the kabuliat was illegally and forcibly extorted from the defendant ?

(2) At what rate should the plaintiff recover rent ?

It transpired in the course of the trial that the rent of the defendant's holding had been once enhanced in the year 1292 (B. S.) ; and that there was a further enhancement in the year 1893 by the kabuliat executed by the defendant. The defendant, however, admitted in his deposition that he had been paying for some years at the rate of Rs. 50.

We should here mention that, in the course of argument before the Munsif, the plaintiff stated that the increased jumma mentioned in the kabuliat was due to increased area found in the occupation of the defendant, and urged that, inasmuch as the defendant in his written statement did not raise any defence as to alteration of rate of rent and area, he, the plaintiff, did not place before the Court all the evidence which was available explaining the circumstances under which the defendant, agreed to pay the rent as mentioned in the kabuliat. The Munsif, however, disallowed this plea upon the ground that the issue having been raised as to what jumma the plaintiff was entitled to recover, he should determine upon the evidence adduced whether the enhanced jumma, as mentioned in the kabuliat, was really due to increased area, or increased rate, or both.

The Munsif held that the kabuliat had not been extorted from the defendant as it was pleaded, and that the rent agreed to be paid under the kabuliat was partly increased rent on account of the excess area found in the occupation of the [783] defendant, and partly enhanced rent, and in excess of the rent then payable by the defendant. He accordingly gave a decree for such increased rent plus the rent then payable by the defendant, i.e., Rs. 50 with an enhancement upon it at the rate of two-annas in the rupee.

On appeal by the defendant, the District Judge has held that there having been an enhancement in the year 1292, the plaintiff is not entitled to any enhancement within fifteen years from that time; that the Munsif was not, therefore, right in allowing an enhancement at the rate of two-annas upon the rupee; and that the case does not fall within the proviso (i) to section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. He has further held that it is not proved that the enhancement as mentioned in the kabuliat was increased rent owing to increase of area. He has accordingly given the plaintiff a decree at the rate admitted by the defendant in his written statement.

Against this decree the plaintiff has preferred this second appeal.

The first question that has been raised before us for consideration is, what may be the legal effect of the enhancement in the year 1292 (B.S.) as bearing upon the kabuliat executed by the defendant in 1893.

It is not clear upon this record whether the enhancement in the year 1292 (B.S.) was before or after the promulgation of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Assuming, in the first instance, that it was before the Act came into operation let us examine how does the matter stand.

Section 29 of that Act provides (omitting the 2nd and 3rd provisos which have no bearing in this case): "The money rent of an occupancy raiyat may be enhanced by contract, subject to the following conditions: (a) the contract must be in writing and registered; (b) the rent must not be enhanced so as to exceed by more than two annas in the rupee the rent previously payable by the raiyat; (c) the rent fixed by the contract shall not be liable to enhancement during a term of fifteen years from the date of the contract.

[784] "Provided as follows: (i) Nothing in clause (a) shall prevent a landlord from recovering rent at the rate at which it has been actually paid for a continuous period of not less than three years immediately preceding the period for which the rent is claimed."

When the section says that the money rent may be enhanced by contract in writing and registered, it evidently means to refer to enhancement after the promulgation of the Bengal Tenancy Act : it does not refer to any enhancement which has already taken place. Under the old law, it was not necessary that the contract should be "in writing and registered"; it could be made orally. The contract by which rent was enhanced in the year 1292 (B.S.) does not, therefore, fall within s. 29; and it follows that that contract was no bar to an enhancement during the period of fifteen years from the date thereof, as contemplated by cl. (c) of the section.

In this view of the matter, it seems to us that the contract (as evidenced by the kabuliat) under which the defendant agreed to a further enhancement, though it is a contract falling within s. 29 of the Act (it having been entered into after the Bengal Tenancy Act came into force), could not be rejected upon the ground adopted by the District Judge. But then cl. (b) of the section enjoins that the rent payable by a raiyat must not be enhanced so as to exceed by more than two annas in the rupee. The rent agreed to be paid under the kabuliat of 1893 was certainly more than the limit prescribed by the section; and it, therefore, follows that the kabuliat is bad in law, if the rent then agreed to be paid was enhanced rent.

But supposing, on the other hand, that the enhancement of 1292 (B.S.) was effected after the Bengal Tenancy Act came into operation, let us examine what may be the relative rights of the parties.

What s. 29 of the Act evidently contemplates is that when the rent of an occupancy raiyat is enhanced after the promulgation thereof it must be, in order to make the contract effectual and binding, in writing; and the document must be registered. The contract by which the rent was enhanced in [785] 1292 B.S, if it was after the Act came into force, and being only an oral contract, was not and is not effectual and binding upon the defendant. It may, therefore, be left out of consideration. If it be so left out, the provisions of cl. (c) of s. 29 would not operate so as to debar the plaintiff from claiming enhancement in the year 1893. But then, having regard to cl. (b) of the section, the rent could not be enhanced so as to exceed by more than two-annas in the rupee the rent previously payable. It is unquestioned that the enhancement made in the year 1893 was far above the limit prescribed by cl.(b) and that being so the kabuliat is bad in law if the rent then agreed to be paid was enhanced rent.

But it has been contended before us that, having regard to the defence raised in the written statement, the issue framed by the Munsif as to what the jamma was which the plaintiff was entitled to recover in this case, was not clear enough, so as to call upon the plaintiff to adduce evidence upon the question whether the rent mentioned in the kabuliat was enhanced rent, or it was but increased rent assessed upon the increased area found in the occupation of the defendant. We think that the contention of the appellant in this respect is correct. The Munsif practically admitted it to be so, but yet he examined the evidence such as it was upon the record, and found that the rent stated in the kabuliat was partly increased rent and partly enhanced rent. The learned Judge, however, has upon the same evidence arrived at a conclusion wholly adverse to the plaintiff.

In the view that we have just expressed, we think that the plaintiff is entitled to a remand for the purpose of enabling him to adduce evidence upon the question, whether the rent agreed to be paid under the kabuliat was increased rent with reference to the increased area in the occupation of the defendant. If this question be found against him, the claim for rent at the rate of Rs. 103 must be disallowed, otherwise it should be allowed.

We should here state that, supposing it be found that the said rent is partly enhanced and partly increased rent, as it was held by the Munsif, the plaintiff would not be entitled to recover [786] the increased rent as was allowed by that officer; for the contract as evidenced by the kabuliat could not be divided into two parts, one part referable to a valid transaction, and the other part to an invalid transaction. See in this connection the case of Kristo Dhone Ghose v. Brojo Govindo Roy, (1897) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 895.

There is one other matter which arises in this appeal, and that is with reference to the admission of the defendant in his deposition as to the rent he has been paying for some years, i.e., for more than three years. He admits this rent to be Rs. 50, and having regard to proviso (1) of s. 29, as also the provisions of s. 27 of the Act, we think that there is no reason why the plaintiff should not, at any rate, i.e., failing the kabuliat, recover rent at the rate of Rs. 50 as admitted by the defendant.

We accordingly set aside the decrees of both the Courts below, and send the case back for retrial upon the question which we have already referred to, and with reference to the observations we have just made, costs to abide the result.

The judgment that we have just delivered will be applicable to appeals Nos. 1119, 1120, 1121 and 1124 of 1896.

No. 1116.—The judgment that we have delivered in appeal No. 1082 is also applicable to this appeal, with this exception, that the defendant in this case has made no admission in his deposition on oath that he had been paying any higher rent than that which is stated in his written statement, and, therefore, the observations that we have made in appeal No. 1082 as regards the effect of the admission of the defendant in that case are not applicable here. The case will, however, be remanded for retrial with reference to the other remarks that we have made in that case. The judgment in this appeal will be applicable to appeals Nos. 1117, 1118 and 1122 of 1896. These cases will also be remanded for retrial and the costs will abide the result.

Appeal allowed: case remanded.

Land Registration Act (Bengal Act VII of 1876), s. 78—Registration in regard to a share—Right to receive rent.

When some out of several proprietors of an estate, who collect the rent jointly, have registered their names under the Land Registration Act, all the proprietors are entitled to join in an action for the whole rent, but a decree will be made only in respect of the rent proportionate to the share registered. Under s. 78 of the Land Registration Act, the penalty of non-registration is the forfeiture, not of the whole rent, but of the rent of the share in regard to which the landlord is unregistered.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 990 of 1896, against the decree of B. G. Geidt, Esq., District Judge of Bankura, dated the 7th of April 1896, affirming the decree of Babu Upendra Nath Dutta, Munsif of Katra, dated the 15th of July 1895.

THE facts of the case, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of this report, are shortly as follows: The plaintiff sued to recover arrears of rent in respect of 14 annas share of a jama held by the defendants under them; some of the plaintiffs had registered their names under the Land Registration Act with regard to their respective shares amounting to 8½ annas; the shares of the other plaintiffs were not registered. It was found that the rent of the 14 annas was collected jointly. The Munsif dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiffs were not entitled to a decree for the entire rent under s. 78 of the Land Registration Act, nor were they entitled to a decree for the registered share, as that would amount to an apportionment of the rent. Upon appeal, the District Judge reversed this judgment, and decreed the claim proportionate to the share registered. The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Babu Dwarkanath Chakravarty for the Appellants.

Dr. Asutosh Mookerjee for the Respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (O'Kinealy and Rampini, JJ.), was as follows: —

The plaintiffs in this suit sued for the rent of the years 1296 [788] up to the 12 annas kist of 1299. The plaintiffs are 14 annas co-sharers. The defendants Nos. 1 to 5 are tenants of the land. They are also the owners of the remaining 2 annas of the landlord's interest. The matter is, however, immaterial, as the plaintiffs have been found to have been hitherto in separate collection of their 14 annas share of the rent. The plaintiffs are registered under Bengal Act VII of 1876 to the extent of 8½ annas only. They are unregistered as to the remaining 5½ annas. The lower Courts have given them a decree for 8 annas share of the rent claimed by them, except as respects the rent of 1296, which has been held to be barred by limitation. It is not clear why the plaintiffs have not got a decree for the remaining ½ anna with regard to which they have been registered. But no question as to this arises in this appeal.

The defendants appeal and contend that the plaintiffs are not entitled to any rent at all, inasmuch as to give them a decree for 8 annas of the rent, it is said, is to apportion the rent to this extent, which they do not ask and are not entitled to ask should be done in this suit. We think there is no force in this contention. There cannot be held to be in this suit any apportionment of the rent, which has been found to be Rs. 74-10 per annum. The suit has been perfectly rightly framed for the whole of the rent due to the plaintiffs. All the co-sharers are parties to the suit. The plaintiffs' claim to the amount of rent not decreed to them has been dismissed. The defendants cannot be sued for it again, which is greatly to their advantage. The next time the plaintiffs sue for their rent, they will have to sue again for the rent of their 14 annas share. There is nothing in the decree in this suit which will justify them in suing in future for the 8 annas share for which they have got a decree. The decree must be regarded as in favour of all the plaintiffs and not in favour of those only who have been registered. It is true that the Munsif in calculating the amount due to the plaintiffs has specified the plaintiffs whose names have been registered and the extent of the shares for which they have been registered. But he has done so for arithmetical purposes only, and not for the purpose of apportioning the rent among the plaintiffs.

[789] To hold that the defendants are entitled to have the suit entirely dismissed because the plaintiffs have not registered their names for the whole of their 14 annas share would be to enable the former to evade the payment of their just debts on a most technical plea. If this be the law, it will always be possible for a tenant to escape payment of the whole of his rent by showing that some fractional share of his landlord's interest is unregistered.

But it does not seem that Act VII of 1876 ever intended that such should be the case. On the contrary, the 2nd para of section 78 of Bengal Act VII of 1876 appears expressly to provide that a proprietor is entitled to recover his rent for the share for which he is registered, while being refused his rent only for the share for which he is unregistered. The 2nd para of section 78 runs thus: "No person being liable to pay rent to two or more such proprietors, managers or mortgagees holding in common tenancy shall be bound to pay to any one such proprietor, manager or mortgagee more than the amount which bears the same proportion to the whole of such rent as the extent of the interest in respect of which such proprietor, manager or mortgagee is registered bears to the entire estate or revenue free property." The penalty of non-registration is therefore the forfeiture, not of the whole rent, but of the rent of the share in regard to which the landlord is unregistered. For these reasons, we affirm the decree of the Lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Public Demands Recovery Act (Bengal Act VII of 1880), s. 2—Revenue Court—Sale under Certificate—Jurisdiction—Limitation—Appeal to Commissioner for setting aside sale—Suit to set aside sale—Order of Revenue Court setting aside sale—Powers of the Civil Court.

A sale was held on the 9th September 1893, in execution of a certificate under the Public Demands Recovery Act (Bengal Act VII of 1880). On the [790] 2nd January 1894, an appeal was preferred to the Commissioner under s. 2 of Act VII of 1868 for setting aside the sale after the expiry of sixty days prescribed for appeal. The Commissioner ordered an inquiry into the question whether the appellants before him were prevented from taking steps in consequence of fraud. The purchaser complained against this order before the Board of Revenue, who acting under their powers of revision set aside the certificate, and the Commissioner subsequently set aside the sale without hearing the purchaser.

* Appeal from Original Decree No. 163 of 1896, against the decree of Babu Chundi Charan Sen, Officiating Subordinate Judge of Tirhoot, dated the 15th of April 1896.

In a suit brought in the Civil Court for the same object during the pendency of the appeal before the Commissioner, and decided by the lower Court after the orders of the Board and the Commissioner setting aside the certificate and sale were passed, Held, by the High Court on appeal :—

(1). The plaintiff was entitled to proceed simultaneously in the Civil Court and in the Revenue Court. If the sale be validly set aside by the Revenue Courts, a decree must follow in the suit.

(2). Section 2 of the Public Demands Recovery Act (Bengal Act VII of 1868) applied to a sale under the Certificate Act (Bengal Act VII of 1880), and the appeal to the Commissioner was rightly made under that section. Sadhusaran Singh v. Punchdeo Lall, (1886) I. L. R., 14 Cal., 1, followed.

(3). As regards the contention that the Commissioner had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal as it was barred by limitation, the question of limitation cannot be held to be one of jurisdiction, and the grounds of the Commissioner's finding on that point cannot be discussed in the High Court. Mahomed Hossain v. Purundur Mahto, (1885) I. L. R., 11 Cal., 287, and Mungul Pershad Dichit v. Grija Kant Lahiri, (1881) I. L. R., 8 Cal., 51 : L. R., 8 I. A., 123 : 11 C. L. R., 113, referred to.

(4). The Civil Court has no authority to reverse the order of a Revenue Court, which sets aside a sale.

(5). The reason for overruling the objection on the ground of limitation applied to the objection that the Commissioner had not heard the purchaser, and that objection also could not be entertained.

THIS was a suit to set aside a sale held in execution of a certificate made under s. 5 of the Public Demands Recovery Act (Bengal Act VII of 1880). The facts were these: The Road Cess Deputy Collector of Darbhanga called upon the plaintiff in this case to furnish jammabandi papers in respect of mouzah Subhankerpur, of which plaintiff was the proprietor. The papers were not furnished, and a daily fine was imposed, which amounted to more than Rs. 400 in the course of several months. A [791] certificate was then made for the realization of the fine on the 23rd June 1893, and in execution of that certificate, mouzah Subhankerpur was sold on the 9th September 1893, and purchased by the defendant. The delivery of possession to the purchaser was made on the 5th of December 1893. The plaintiff thereupon, on the 2nd January 1894, preferred an appeal to the Commissioner of the Patna Division for setting aside the sale on the grounds, among others, that all the proceedings had been held without his knowledge; that the mouzah in question was not liable to pay road cess, as it was included within a Municipality and as it was also exempted from liability to pay cess under a Government notification; and that the proceedings were fraudulent and collusive.

While this appeal to the Commissioner was pending, the plaintiff instituted the present suit in the Civil Court on 4th December 1894.

On the 12th December 1894, the Commissioner passed an order directing the Collector to enquire into the question of fraud; the purchaser appealed to the Board of Revenue against that order, and the Board on the 9th May 1895, in the exercise of its revisional power, set aside the certificates in execution of which the sale was held. The Commissioner, also, by his order dated the 4th February 1896, set aside the sale.

Nine issues were originally raised in this suit, of which it is necessary to mention the following:—

"1st. Whether the appeal to the Commissioner was filed within time? If not, is the suit barred?

"2nd. Whether the Civil Court has jurisdiction to entertain the suit?

"3rd. Whether the suit is barred by limitation? When did the plaintiff's cause of action arise?

"7th. Whether the present suit was maintainable before the disposal of the appeal by the Commissioner?" * * *

An additional issue was fixed after the order of the Board of Revenue, dated 9th May 1895, was received by the lower Court; that issue was as follows:—

[792] "Whether the order of the Board of Revenue, dated 9th May 1895, is valid, and how it affects the sale?"

The order of the Commissioner, dated 4th February 1896, setting aside the sale was also filed by the plaintiffs in the lower Court.

In the judgment of the lower Court, the Subordinate Judge held:—

"In this altered state of things brought about by the order of the Board of Revenue as well as that of the Divisional Commissioner, I find that defendant is not entitled to retain possession of the property purchased by him, and consequently plaintiff is entitled to a decree for possession after a declaration of his right to it as well as for mesne profits."

The defendant appealed to the High Court.

Sir Charles Paul (Advocate-General) and Babu Tarak Nath Palit, Babu Ram Charan Mitra, and Babu Baldeo Singh for the Appellant.

Babu Lal Mohan Das, and Babu Nalini Ranjan Chatterjee, for the Respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (Trevelyan and Banerjee, JJ.) was as follows:—

In this case the learned Subordinate Judge of Mozufferpore has set aside a sale held in execution of a certificate for the recovery of public demands given under s. 5 of the Public Demands Recovery Act.

The decree has been made on the ground that the Revenue authorities have set aside the certificate and sale since the institution of this suit. The only question argued before us, and the only question which arises in this appeal is, whether under the circumstances the Commissioner of Patna had authority so to do.

The following are the only facts to which it is necessary for us to refer. The certificate is dated the 23rd of June 1893.

On the 9th of September 1893 the sale was held.

On the 5th of December 1893 possession was given to the purchaser by the Revenue authorities.

[793] On the 2nd of January 1894 the proprietor preferred an appeal to the Commissioner of the Patna Division, alleging that he had no knowledge of any of the proceedings and asking him to set aside the sale.

On the 4th of December 1894 this suit was filed with the object of setting aside the sale.

On the 12th of December 1894 the additional Commissioner of Patna dealt with the appeal. The objection had been taken that the appeal was barred by limitation. This had been met by a charge of fraud. The Commissioner held that fraud would be an answer to such objection, and directed the Collector to enquire and report as to the charge of fraud.

The purchaser then applied to the Board of Revenue to reverse the order of the Additional Commissioner. Although his appeal was confined to a complaint against the action of the Commissioner, the Board of Revenue on the 9th of May 1895 set aside the certificate on the ground that the fine in respect of which it was issued was unjust.

On the 4th of February 1896, the Additional Commissioner set aside the sale. He held that the sale was brought about fraudulently and without legal justification, but curiously enough, although he came to this conclusion, he considered it unnecessary to hear the purchaser, who was the person against whom he was making the order. This order, whatever may be our conclusion as to its validity, violates the elementary principle which is binding upon all persons who exercise judicial or quasi-judicial powers, namely, that an order should not be made against a man's interest without there being given to him an opportunity of being heard. This really concludes the facts which are necessary for our decision.

On the 15th of April 1896, the learned Subordinate Judge decreed this suit on the footing of the action taken by the Revenue authorities. We have to determine whether the action of those authorities was within their powers.

The plaintiff was entitled to proceed simultaneously in the Civil Court and in the Revenue Courts. The more ample and easier remedy was available to him in the Revenue Courts. If the [794] sale be validly set aside by the Revenue Courts a decree must follow in the suit.

The first question arises as to whether the appeal to the Commissioner could have been entertained by that officer.

This appeal could only have been made under s. 2 of Act VII (B.C.) of 1868. It has been contended that that section has no application to sales under the Certificate Act, VII (B.C.) of 1880. This contention is concluded by the authority of the decision of a Division Bench of this Court in Sadhusaran Singh v. Panchdeo Lall, (1886) I.L.R., 14 Cal., 1, with which we see no reason to differ.

It has also been contended that Mr. Bolton had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal as it was barred by limitation. In the view which we take of this question it is not necessary for us to determine whether the appeal was barred by limitation. If we had to determine it we would have great difficulty in holding that it was not barred. But although we might hold that Mr. Bolton ought to have refused to entertain the appeal, yet we cannot hold that the question is one of jurisdiction, and that we can discuss the grounds of his finding.

It was in our opinion for Mr. Bolton, and for him alone, to construe the section and to determine whether the appeal was barred by limitation. We are not a Court of Appeal or Revision from his decision except in cases where the law allows the Civil Court to interfere. The law allows the Civil Court to reverse a sale under certain circumstances, but there is nothing in the law authorising a Civil Court to reverse the order of a Revenue Court which sets aside a sale. We cannot question his decision on this question of limitation any more than it would be possible for us in a suit to determine that a decree made in another suit was barred by limitation, and that the decree was therefore without jurisdiction. If authority were required for this last proposition, we would refer to the decision of a Division Bench of this Court—Mahomed Hossain v. Purundur Mahto, (1885) I.L.R., 11 Cal., 287. The [795] well known case of Mungul Pershad Dichit v. Grijakânt Lahiri, (1881) I.L.R., 8 Cal., 51: L. R., 8 I. A., 123: 11 C. L. R., 113, also supports the proposition that an erroneous decision on a question of limitation cannot be treated as invalid unless it be set aside in a way provided by law.

A similar reasoning would prevent our entertaining any objection to the Commissioner's order on the ground that he had not heard the purchaser. If the purchaser was aggrieved on this account, there is no doubt that he could have found an appropriate remedy in the procedure of the Revenue Court; but whether that be so or not, we cannot treat as invalid an order made by the tribunal to which the Legislature has entrusted the power of making such order. We have no power to enquire into the circumstances under which the order was made or into the propriety of the order.

Having given this case our most careful consideration we are unable to disagree with the view taken by the Court below, and accordingly we dismiss the appeal with costs.

S. C. C. Appeal dismissed.

The Collector of Patna............Respondent.*

Letters of Administration—Court of Wards—"Person."

The Court of Wards is not a "person," and letters of administration cannot under the law be granted to it.

THE facts of this case, so far as they are material for the purpose of this report, are given in the judgment of the High Court. There were two applications for letters of administration before the District Court, one by the Court of Wards and another by Ganjessar Koer and Mohan Koer, and the applicants in one case were objectors in the other. The District Court decreed the application of the Court of Wards and dismissed that of [796] Ganjessar Koer and Mohan Koer, who preferred two appeals to the High Court, Nos. 27 and 28 respectively, against the orders of the lower Court.

Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee, and Babu Basant Kumar Bose and Babu Saligram Singh for the appellants.

Sir Charles Paul (Advocate-General) and Babu Ram Charan Mitra, Babu Lal Mohan Das and Babu Karuna Sindhu Mukerjee for the Respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (Trevelyan and Banerjee, JJ.) was as follows:—

These two appeals arise out of an order made by the learned District Judge of Patna.

The facts, so far as they are material for the purpose of these cases, are very shortly these: A man named Mahadeo Pershad died in December 1894 leaving a will, probate of which was given to his widow, who died on the 29th August 1896. Mahadeo Pershad left a son who was then and is still a minor. The Court of Wards has obtained possession of the estate under the powers given to it by the Court of Wards' Act. At one time it seems that the Collector on behalf of the Court of Wards obtained an order appointing him Manager of the Estate under Act VIII of 1890. But under s. 42 of that Act he was subsequently discharged, so the matter is at present quite free from the effect of that order. The Collector has now applied to the Judge for letters of administration. An application has also been made by two ladies, Ganjessar Koer and Mohan Koer, who claim to be relations of the minor, and as such entitled to administer the estate of which the minor is the heir, namely, the estate of his father.

The learned District Judge has granted letters of administration to the Court of Wards and dismissed the application made by the ladies.

It is admitted by the learned Advocate-General that the Court of Wards is not a person, and that letters of administration cannot under the law be granted to it. It is obvious that the powers of the Court of Wards are limited by the terms of the [797] Court of Wards Act. It is not necessary for us to go at any length into that question, as it has not been contested. It follows, therefore, that the order granting letters of administration to the Court of Wards cannot stand and must be set aside. The result is that the petition of the Collector must be dismissed with costs in both Courts.

With regard to the application made by the ladies, the learned Advocate-General suggests to us that there is no necessity for granting letters of administration at all, the property being in the hands of the Court of Wards. But we think that it is clear from the judgment of the learned District Judge that the ladies' application has not been considered independently and apart from the application of the Collector. It was only because the learned Judge thought that administration should be given to the Court of Wards that he dismissed the application of the ladies. Inasmuch as, in our opinion, the application of the Collector was a wrong one, the ladies are entitled to a consideration of their application. It may be that on such consideration being given to it, it might appear that there is nothing to administer, nothing but the interest of the heir, and that that interest is in the hands of the Court of Wards. But if there be anything to administer then the question arises who is to be appointed administrator. The ladies are entitled to be heard on that question. There is a provision in s. 31 of the Probate and Administration Act for granting of letters of administration with the will annexed where a minor is the sole residuary legatee. In that case letters may be granted to the legal guardian of such minor or to such other person as the Court shall think fit. The learned Judge will have to act under that section if he finds that there is property which ought to be administered according to law. It must be understood that in all that we have said we are not expressing any opinion as to whether it is possible for the Collector in any way to acquire a sufficient status to oppose the application of the ladies. With regard to costs in the case in which the ladies are the applicants, we think that the proper order is that the costs of the appeal to this Court do abide the result.

[798] CRIMINAL REVISION.

The 3rd June, 1898.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE AND MR. JUSTICE STEVENS.

Driver............Petitioner

Queen-Empress............Opposite Party.*

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 107 and 118—Wrongful act likely to occasion a breach of the peace—Practice—Rule issued upon the Magistrate—Right to appear of a party interested in the result.

The granting of leases to tenants of land not in one's possession does not constitute a wrongful act such as s. 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) contemplates.

Where the notice directs a person to show cause why he should not be bound down to keep the peace, it is improper to make an order directing him to execute bonds for his good behaviour.

When a rule is issued upon the Magistrate to show cause, and the order sought to be set aside is one that is only intended to secure the peace of the district by binding down the petitioner, the Magistrate is the only party entitled to be heard. Any other party interested in the result of the order cannot appear.

THE petitioner is the Manager of the Estate of Rai Kashi Prasad Singh and his brothers, who are the proprietors of certain mouzas in Begusarai, of which twenty-six were held by the Manjoul Indigo Concern for a long period under divers leases, the last of which expired in September 1896. The petitioner, as Manager of the Estate, leased out the mouzas to other tenants, who gave kabuliyats. The District Magistrate in his judgment stated as follows: "I find that J. C. M. Driver (the petitioner) is doing and is likely to do wrongful acts, viz., the giving of leases of land not in his possession and thereby instigating the lessees to commit criminal trespass on the land, and otherwise wrongfully dispossess the rightful occupiers, and that these wrongful acts are in the highest degree likely to give rise to breaches of the peace in the village of Manjoul and the neighbouring villages, and I therefore order under s. 118 of the Criminal Procedure Code that he give a bond with sureties for the [799] amounts noted below for their [his?] good behaviour for one year." The petitioner moved before the High Court against the above order.

Mr. Garth and Mr. P. L. Roy for the Petitioner.

Mr. Jackson for the Opposite Party.

The judgment of the High Court (Banerjee and Stevens, JJ.) is as follows:—

This is a rule calling on the Magistrate of the District to show cause why the order of the Magistrate of Monghyr, dated the 15th February 1898, calling upon the petitioner to execute bonds with sureties, should not be set aside, on the following grounds, namely, first, that the order is not warranted by the finding arrived at by the Magistrate; second, that it is inconsistent with the notice which he was called upon to answer; and third, that it is not warranted by law, and is otherwise not a fit and proper order under the circumstances of the case.

* Criminal Revision Nos. 264 and 265 of 1898, against the order passed by F. Roe, Esq., District Magistrate of Monghyr, dated the 15th of February 1898.

The learned Magistrate has submitted a written explanation, and Mr. Jackson appeared to show cause on behalf of the Manjoul Factory between the proprietors of which and the petitioner the dispute that has given rise to these proceedings is said to exist.

As the rule is issued only upon the Magistrate to show cause, and as the order that is sought to be set aside is one that is only intended to secure the peace of the district by binding down the petitioner, and does not and cannot determine any question of disputed possession between the petitioner and any other party with whom he may have disputes, the Magistrate in our opinion is the only party entitled to be heard in a case like this; and we have accordingly held that Mr. Jackson, who appears only for the Manjoul Factory, is not entitled to be heard in this rule.

It is true that the learned Magistrate in the last paragraph of the explanation submitted by him says that the first party should be given an opportunity of showing cause against the rule, as they are very considerably interested in the result, and the Magistrate requests that a postponement be granted to admit of their doing so. But we can only express our regret that the learned District Magistrate should have taken this view of the [800] matter. He was called upon to show cause. He has submitted a written explanation which we have duly considered; and if he wished that cause should be shown on his behalf by any one appearing before us, it was quite competent to him to have instructed the Legal Remembrancer to appear and show cause before us. But he has gone a little out of the way in saying that the persons whom he calls the first party should have an opportunity given them of showing cause, because they have a very considerable interest in the result.

As we have said above, the party interested in the result is the Magistrate of the district. Proceedings under s. 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code are only intended for the security of the public peace, and not for the purpose of enabling one of two contending parties to help themselves in recovering or retaining possession of immoveable property, after having their adversary's hands tied down by an order under that section. If it was thought necessary that an order should be made relating to the possession of any immoveable property, which is the subject matter of dispute between contending parties, the proper course was to have instituted proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and then the parties would have had due notice of the case they had to meet, and each party could have put forward evidence to prove his possession of the land in dispute.

We were then referred to a permission granted by the Legal Remembrancer to Mr. MacNair, authorizing him to show cause in this case. We do not think that such permission is equivalent to instructing that gentleman to appear on behalf of the Magistrate; nor were we asked to allow the learned Counsel to appear on behalf of the Magistrate. We do not think that a mere permission of this sort by the Legal Remembrancer is equivalent to an authority to appear for the Magistrate or for the Crown.

That being so, now let us see how the case stands on the merits with reference to the first ground. We observe that what the learned Magistrate has found is that the petitioner before us is doing wrongful acts which may lead to a breach of the peace. To quote the learned Magistrate's own words, he says: "I find [801] therefore, on enquiry that J. C. M. Driver, Baiju Lal and Damri Lal, are doing, and are likely to do, wrongful acts, viz., the giving of leases of lands not in their possession and thereby instigating the lessees to commit criminal trespass on these lands, and otherwise wrongfully dispossess their rightful occupiers, and that these wrongful acts are in the highest degree likely to give rise to breaches of the peace in the village of Manjoul and neighbouring villages, and I therefore order under s. 118 of the Criminal Procedure Code that they give each a bond, with sureties, for the amounts noted below for their good behaviour for one year."

Now this finding and the conclusion based thereon are, in our opinion, clearly wrong. In the first place the giving of leases to tenants by a party who is not in possession is not necessarily a wrongful act. If a party is rightfully entitled to immoveable property and has been wrongfully kept out of possession thereof, there is nothing wrong in his giving a lease of such property to another party. If the party taking the lease goes to take possession peaceably, there is nothing wrong in that act. It is only where a party goes to take possession by force that any wrong is done.

The mere fact, therefore, of the petitioner before us having given leases to parties of land, not in the possession of his employer, cannot in our opinion constitute a wrongful act such as s. 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure contemplates, and if that is not a wrongful act, the whole foundation for the proceeding is gone. It may be that ryots taking leases from, or executing kabuliats in favour of, a lessor who is not in possession may feel induced to commit a breach of the peace in their attempt to take possession. If they attempt to do so, they may be bound down; but that can be done only if it is found that they are going to take wrongful measures to recover possession.

We may observe that the taking of kabuliats from tenants by a landlord who may not be in actual possession is by no means such an uncommon thing as to give rise to any apprehension such as the Magistrate in his judgment refers to.

[802] The learned Magistrate observes in his judgment that, as by law (s. 108 of the Transfer of Property Act) a lessor is bound on the lessee's request to put him in possession of the property, the fact of a lease being given by a party out of possession must be taken to amount to an instigation or an attempt on his part to take forcible measures for obtaining possession. We can only say that the reasoning is a far-fetched one, and that it does not follow that, because a lessee in such a case can ask the lessor to put him in possession, the lessor will necessarily go the length of resorting to force to put his lessee in possession.

The first ground, therefore, on which this rule has been issued, namely, that the facts found are not sufficient to warrant the order, ought, in our opinion, to succeed.

The second ground, namely, that the order made is inconsistent with the notice by which the petitioner was called upon to show cause, is also well founded; for whereas the notice directed him to show cause why he should not be bound down to keep the peace, the order is one directing him to execute bonds for his good behaviour under s. 118 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

The Magistrate says in his explanation that this must be a clerical error. Perhaps it is a clerical error as the terms of the bond subsequently taken would go to show.

We are also of opinion that the third ground, namely, that the order made in this case is not a fit and proper order, is well founded. The effect of the order, as we have already observed, is to bind down one of two contending parties whilst it leaves the other party free. That is hardly fair in any view of the case.

For all these reasons we are of opinion that this rule must be made absolute, and the order complained of set aside.

[803] CIVIL RULE.

The 2nd January, 1890.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE TOTTENHAM AND MR. JUSTICE AMEER ALI.

Tilak Chandra Dass............Plaintiff

versus

Fatik Chandra Dass and others............Defendants.*

Decree—Possessory decree—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 9.

Where a decree was passed under s. 9 of Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) giving the plaintiff possession, and also directed that the costs of removing huts and filling up excavations should be paid by the defendant under this decree:

Held, that the latter portion of the decree was beyond the scope of a possessory decree under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act and must be set aside.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the following judgments.

Babu Jadav Chandra Seal and Babu Chandra Kant Sen for the Petitioner.

Babu Baikanta Nath Dass for the Opposite Party.

The judgment of Dinesh Chandra Roy, Munsif of Madaripur, Zillah Faridpur, was as follows: —

In this summary suit for possession of land the only points for decision are:—

1st. Whether the plaintiff was in actual possession of the land, and 2nd, whether the defendants have taken possession of the land and thereby dispossessed plaintiff within six months before this suit.

From the depositions of the plaintiff and of five witnesses I find that the plaintiff was actually in possession of the eastern bank of the dighi (large tank) and the challan (i.e., disputed land No. 1) by cutting and taking away trees, bamboos, etc.

From the depositions of these witnesses, and also a copy of the fouzdari complaint of the defendants, it appears that actually the plaintiff was in possession of those portions of the disputed land by cutting Hijul trees and canes in 1886. It does not appear at all that after the fouzdari complaint had become unsuccessful the defendant did ever take proper legal remedy to recover the trees and canes, &c., or their price from the [804] plaintiff, or to recover possession of the disputed land by suing in a Civil Court. The defendant has produced some witnesses, but I see that they are not worthy of belief against the strong evidence of the plaintiff. The witnesses do not appear independent and impartial. The defendant cannot show by good and reliable evidence that before the alleged time of dispossession, and after the defendant's fouzdari complaint the defendant was in actual possession of the land by taking trees, bamboos and canes, etc., or by doing any other act of possession. The witness (5) for the plaintiff proves that even in Augran last the plaintiff did cut the trees of the portion of the disputed land. After all I hold that the plaintiff was in possession of those portions of the disputed land before the alleged date of dispossession. There is no good evidence of the plaintiff's possession of half of the dighi or any other portion of the disputed lands.

2nd.—The plaintiff says that in last Falgoon the defendant took possession of the land by erecting new houses thereon and doing such other acts. The defendant in the last portion of his deposition admits that in Falgoon last he raised new huts and did such other acts on the disputed land. So it is ordered—

That this suit be thus decreed partly, that the plaintiff do get khas possession of the disputed land (No. 1), which is called chatan and shown in the maps of both parties as lying on the north-east of the dighi and also of the eastern bank of the dighi. The costs of taking khas possession by removing houses, etc., will be settled in execution of this decree. Each party will bear his own costs.

THE judgment of the High Court (Tottenham and Ameer Ali, JJ.) was as follows :—

This is a rule to show cause why the decree passed by the Munsif of Madaripur, ostensibly under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act, should not be set aside. The grounds upon which the rule was obtained were that upon the face of the plaint it was clear that, although s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act was cited in the plaint as the law under which relief was sought, the prayers contained in the plaint clearly do not all come under that section ; and that the decree passed by the Munsif went beyond a mere possessory decree sanctioned by that section.

We think that this is so. The plaintiff sued to recover possession of a certain portion of land of which he said he was dispossessed by the defendants, and he went on to ask that the defendants might be ordered to pay over to him the cost of removing certain huts erected by them, and of filling up excava- [805] tions made. These prayers are beyond the scope of s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act; and the decree passed by the Munsif, providing that the costs of removing the huts and filling up excavations should be ascertained in execution of the decree and be made payable by the defendants, is also in our opinion beyond the scope of a decree under section 9.

It seems to us, therefore, that the decree of the Munsif must be set aside, and the case be remitted to him to be tried as a regular suit on title. It will, of course, be open to the plaintiff, either to amend his plaint or to file a written statement, disclosing what his title really is.

This rule is made absolute. The costs of this rule will abide the result. We fix the hearing fee at one gold-mohur.

Rule made absolute.

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE STEVENS.

Sarat Chunder Roy Chowdhry and others (Defendants)...........Petitioners
Chundra Kanta Roy (Plaintiff)...........Opposite Party.*

Legal Practitioners' Act (XVIII of 1879), ss. 27, 28, 29—Suit by a pleader to recover fee from his client—Contract Act, s. 70—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, s. 25.

The Legal Practitioners' Act (Act XVIII of 1879), s. 28, debars a pleader from recovering a fee from his client when no contract in writing is made—Rama v. Kunji, (1886) I. L. R., 9 Mad., 375, and Krishnasami v. Kesava, (1890) I. L. R., 14 Mad., 63, dissented from.

A SMALL CAUSE COURT having decreed a suit brought by a pleader to recover from his client a fee claimed for the conduct of a criminal action on the ground that it was based on an oral agreement and for work and labour done, the High Court granted the petitioners a rule under s. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, calling upon the other side to show cause why the decree of the Small Cause Court of Rungpore in Suit No. 589 of 1898 should not be set aside.

[806] On the rule coming on for hearing, Babu Rash Behari Ghose (with him Babus Girish Chunder Chowdhry, Mohini Mohan Chackravarti and Hara Chundra Chuckravarti), submitted that the case came within the terms of s. 70 of the Indian Contract Act and the agreement need not have been in writing, and referred to Rama v. Kunji, (1886) I. L. R., 9 Mad., 375; Krishnasami v. Kesav, (1890) I. L. R., 14 Mad., 63 ; Raziuddin v. Karimbakhsh, (1890) I. L. R., 12 All., 169.

The Advocate-General (Sir Charles Paul) (with him Babu Nalini Ranjan Chatterjee) contended that the judgments of the High Court of Madras could not be followed, as they had lost sight of s. 28 of the Legal Practitioners' Act and considered only s. 70 of the Indian Contract Act.

The judgment of the High Court (PRINSEP and STEVENS, JJ.) was delivered by Prinsep, J.—The plaintiff sued before the Subordinate Judge of Rungpore exercising the powers of a Small Cause Court for certain fees for appearing and acting as a pleader for the defendants.

There was no written agreement within the terms of s. 28 of the Legal Practitioners' Act, 1879, and the fees claimed are not within s. 27.

The Judge of the Small Cause Court has referred to two judgments in I. L. R., 9 Mad., 375, and I. L. R., 12 All., 169, and upon these he has held that the plaintiff's suit, without a written agreement, is maintainable notwithstanding s. 28 of the Legal Practitioners' Act.

It seems to us that the Allahabad case is decidedly against that view. The Act, as we read it, contemplates that legal practitioners shall be entitled to receive under s. 27 the amount payable under certain rules prepared within the terms of that section, and that they shall not be entitled to claim anything further, unless the terms of s. 28 are observed. Section 28 requires that there should be a written agreement signed by the client and that it should be filed [807] within a certain specified time in a particular Court. The sections that follow all refer to s. 28, and, as we understand it, to nothing else, for they all refer to "such agreement," which is an agreement within the terms of s. 28. It seems to us that in enacting these provisions the Legislature deliberately intended in respect of agreements between such parties to provide definitively for them, and even to go so far as to rescind anything in the Contract Act or any previous legislation relating to the subject. We agree with the learned Judges of the Allahabad Court that the intention appears to be as stated by them in the judgment reported in I. L. R., 12 All., 169 (see page 174).

We have had cited to us several decisions of the Madras Court, in which that Court, notwithstanding the express terms of the Legal Practitioners' Act, has applied s. 70 of the Indian Contract Act. We are unable to follow those decisions for reasons already stated. The judgment of the Small Cause Court Judge, therefore, is, in our opinion, contrary to the terms of the Act and must be set aside.

This order will apply to Rule No. 1118. We make no order as to costs in either of these cases.

Nos. 1111, 1113 to 1117 and 1119. The learned Advocate-General who appears for petitioners abandons these Rules on its being shown that the fees given are only such as can be legally obtained under s. 27. These Rules will be discharged.

We make no order as to costs.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

The 21st and 22nd April, and 14th May, 1898.

PRESENT:

LORDS WATSON, HOBHOUSE, DAVEY, AND SIR R. COUCH.

Akikunnissa Bibi..............Defendant

versus

Rup Lal Das and another............Plaintiffs.

[On appeal from the High Court at Fort William in Bengal.]

Pardanashin Lady—Execution of document by a pardanashin lady—Refusal of her application, as defendant, for the issue of a commission to take her evidence—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sections 393, 390—Irregularity not affecting merits of case—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), section 578.

The Court of First Instance rejected an application made under Chapter XXV of the Civil Procedure Code for the issue of a commission to take the [808] evidence of a Mahomedan pardanashin lady, the defendant in the suit, which was brought against her on a mortgage bond, the execution of which she had denied in her written statement. The Courts below concurred in finding that there was sufficient evidence of the execution of the document by the pardanashin with full knowledge of its contents. From their judgments it appeared that if the defendant had been examined on commission, and had given her testimony in support of her written statement, it would not have been believed, and in their Lordships' opinion it could not reasonably have prevailed.

Held, that the error alleged by the appellant to have occurred in the refusal of the Court to issue the commission (whether or not it would have been better to have issued it) was, at all events, no valid ground of appeal. The evidence taken on the commission could not have affected the merits of the case within section 578 of the Civil Procedure Code.

APPEAL from a decree (4th May 1894) of the High Court affirming a decree (26th May 1892) of the first Subordinate Judge of Dacca.

The appellant was a Mahomedan widow residing at Dacca. The respondents were mahajuns carrying on business there. They brought this suit against her on the 9th April 1891 to recover Rs. 30,000, and interest thereon at 11½ per cent. per annum, due on a registered mortgage bond purporting to have been executed by the appellant at Dacca on the 3rd February 1882. By her written statement, dated the 3rd July 1891, she denied receipt of the money and the execution of the alleged bond, stating that she lived in seclusion and was unable to conduct her affairs in person, entrusting her transactions to her son, Dewan Imdad Ali, who, joining one Reza Karim Meah in a fraud upon her, had fabricated the mortgage bond in question. She alleged that she was not in Dacca, but was at Gaghra in Maimensingh, at the time when the bond bore date, and that she was not in fact indebted to any of the persons whose names were mentioned in the bond as her creditors save to one of them, and that to him she had paid the debt due out of the income of her landed property.

On the 21st August 1891 the issue of two commissions under section 383 of the Civil Procedure Code was ordered by the Court for the examination of witnesses named by the defendant; and on the 2nd April 1892 her application for the issue of a commission to take her own testimony in the district of Maimensingh was [809] rejected. Another petition to the same effect was rejected afterwards; as to which all the proceedings are stated in their Lordships' judgment.

The principal questions were, whether the first Court had materially erred in refusing to issue a commission to take the evidence of the defendant, then in another district and alleging herself to be too ill to travel; and also whether the defendant's position as a pardanashin had been sufficiently regarded by the Court in the requirement of proof of her having executed the document with knowledge. The Subordinate Judge found that the mortgage bond had been read and explained to her; that the whole consideration alleged in it, with the exception of Rs. 300, had been paid by the plaintiffs in accordance with her directions; that she was not absent from Dacca at the time of the alleged execution, and that she could not have been personated behind the parda without her having become aware of it. He pointed out that her execution of the document was seen, and attested, by a number of witnesses of whom three knew her personally, including her son Imdad Ali and two others, these three having before acted for her in business shown to have been transacted. He added: "The defendant cannot complain that she could not get competent advice; she executed the bond at her own house, amongst her servants, friends, and relatives, who were quite competent to advise her in the matter." He, therefore, decreed the claim less the said sum of Rs. 300, which he found to have been paid away without the consent of the defendant.

On an appeal by the defendant, the High Court (PETHERAM, C.J., and RAMPINI, J.) gave JUDGMENT as follows:—

"The defence made here is that the mortgage deed was not executed by this defendant at all, but that her name was forged by other people, and that she was not answerable. It is also suggested that, even if this is not shown, the plaintiff has not proved that the transaction was explained to her, so as to make her, under the circumstance of her being a pardanashin lady, answerable upon it; and Dr. Rash Behary Ghose further argues that, whether she is answerable for the principal or not, she is not answerable for compound interest, because there is no evidence that the meaning of compound interest was explained to her; and he asks that the case may be sent [810] back in order that she may be called as a witness and give her statement, she never having given her evidence in the case at all.

"The plaintiff's case is a straightforward one. His witnesses prove that his document was executed at the house where this lady lived, and it was registered on or about the same date. His account is, that the Rs. 30,000 was actually produced at the time the mortgage was executed, but that, at the request of the defendant herself, it was taken away by him and was paid by him from time to time to her son and another person, as it was required for the purpose of discharging old liabilities of this very defendant.

"The plaintiff has produced his books which are kept in a perfectly regular way, and which show, and show satisfactorily, that the whole of this Rs. 30,000 was paid by him to the persons who are named by the defendant, and that as to Rs. 24,000 and odd of it, it was applied in the actual payment of pre-existing debts of the defendant.

"Then it appears that the only person who was called to identify the defendant as the person who executed this mortgage was a person of the name of Reza Karim. Reza Karim says that he was present at the time, that he knew this lady, that he recognized her voice, and that she was the person whose hand he saw sign this document. On the other hand, it appears from his cross-examination that he was actively interested in the preparation of the defence; and another witness for the plaintiff says that on some occasion he said that this woman had not signed this document at all. That fact, taken with the fact that this lady was not called as a witness, raised a doubt in my mind as to whether we should not comply with Dr. Rash Behary Ghose's request and allow her to be examined. Now, the Subordinate Judge was of opinion that she was keeping out of the way, and that the reasons given for her not being examined, when opportunities were afforded her, were untrue; and having heard the whole case discussed by the Advocate-General, I think the Subordinate Judge was right; and I think so more particularly for this reason, that this document is witnessed by her son Imdad Ali and her man of business Chundra Kishore, and execution was admitted for her before the Sub-Registrar by her cousin, the witness Reza Karim. It is said that the reason why Imdad Ali was not called by the defendant was, that he was the person who forged his mother's name and made away with the money, and therefore he was keeping out of the way. But that remark does not apply to Chunder Kishore; and if there had been anything in this point which is now taken, that this lady wished to give her evidence and was unable to do so, it appears to me that this person would have been called, and he would have shown that, though the document was signed by him, he being her man of business, the document was not properly explained to her or that she was not aware of its contents.

"Under these circumstances we cannot say that we think that the learned Subordinate Judge has not come to a proper conclusion upon the whole [811] case; and we do not think that the interests of justice would be served by our sending this case back in order to have this evidence taken, which no doubt would involve the parties in considerable further costs. On the whole, this appeal must be dismissed with costs."

From this decision the defendant appealed.

Mr. J. D. Mayne, for the appellant, argued that there was material error in the judgment of the High Court. The law relating to the execution of documents by pardanashin ladies had been declared many times; but this judgment proceeded as if it had been for the defendant to show that the document had not been explained to her. The burden of proof was on those who made claims against secluded women to show affirmatively that their execution of documents had not been obtained without due and sufficient explanation and competent advice given to them. There had also been material error in the refusal to issue a commission to take the defendant's evidence. The Code of Civil Procedure, in Chapter XXV, gave to the parties to a civil suit the right to have evidence taken on a commission to be issued by the Court upon grounds shown. The discretion to be exercised in the grant of a commission by the Court was not an arbitrary one, but a judicial one. Here the Judge's discretion had not been rightly exercised. The permissive words in section 383—"Any Court may in any suit issue a commission"—were designed to give effect to a right legally established, where, as in this case, there was evidence that the person, whose testimony was required, could not from illness, or other sufficient cause, attend the Court for the purpose. Enabling words were always compulsory when they were words to effectuate a legal right. Reference was made to Julius v. The Bishop of Oxford, (1880) L. R., 5 Ap. Ca., H. L., 214, and to some of the cases cited in the judgment in that case of the L. C. (Earl Cairns), and to Haridas Baisakh v. Moazam Hossein, (1871) 8 B. L. R., Ap., 16.

Mr. J. H. A. Branson, for the respondents, referred first to section 587 of the Civil Procedure Code, and contended that the ground of the present appeal was untenable, in regard to the merits of the case, which had not been affected by the refusal to issue the [812] commission. Next, he adverted to the direct concurrence of the two Courts below on the fact of intelligent execution by the pardanashin. At this stage, in regard to the burden of proof, the question was more as to what was the true effect of all the evidence that was before the Appellate Court than as to the adjustment of the burden at an earlier stage in the original Court. Although it had not been made out that there had been any error there, it was enough to refer to the result of the whole body of evidence. The fact was apparent that, after all the evidence that had been given, the denial of the defendant would not have prevailed, with either Court, as against the evidence for the respondents. The only question relating to the refusal of the commission was whether, or not, injustice had been done by such refusal having excluded evidence that ought to have been before the Court, and that might (had it been before it) have altered its conclusion. Here that had not been the case. Reference was made to Ross v. Woodford, (1893) L. R, 1 Ch. D., 38, and to Doucett v. Wise, (1866) 1 Ind. Jur., 397

Mr. J. D. Mayne replied.

On the 14th May their Lordships' judgment was delivered by Sir R. Couch.—The respondents in this appeal brought a suit against the appellant on a mortgage bond, dated a native date corresponding to the 3rd February 1882, and alleged to be executed by her to secure Rs. 30,000, money borrowed with interest at 15 annas per cent. per month (11¼ per cent. per annum) and compound interest on default to be paid at the end of three years. The appellant in her written statement denied the execution of the bond and the receipt of the consideration. She also said that she is a pardanashin Mahomedan lady of respectable family not able to manage and superintend all her affairs, and on many occasions her son Dewan Imdad Ali, alias Nawab Meah, transacts her business with her permission; that Imdad Ali and his intimate friend and relative Reza Karim Meah and others had previously created certain loans for their own purposes, and afterwards under the pretext of repaying them had fabricated the mortgage bond. The suit was heard before the Subordinate Judge of Dacca on the 21st April 1892. The mortgage bond [813] was produced and appeared to be signed by the appellant by mark, her name being written "By the pen of Imdad Ali." It was endorsed by the Sub-Registrar as presented for registration on the 4th February 1882 and the execution admitted by the appellant at her residence, she being identified by Reza Karim. There were eight witnesses to the execution, two of them being Chunder Kishore Roy and Imdad Ali. The first witness for the plaintiff was Reza Karim. He deposed that the defendant is his cousin, that he saw her and talked to her, and identified her before the Sub-Registrar for registration of the bond which was produced; he put his signature on the back of the bond, and the defendant having put a mark on it he wrote her name on the back on the bond by his own pen; that the defendant made the impression of the seal on the back in the presence of the Sub-Registrar, and admitted the execution of the bond and receipt of the money covered by it. He also said that Chunder Kishore is the mokhtar of the appellant and had been so more than ten years, and Hara Kishore Roy is her dewan. The next witness was Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty who was in the service of the plaintiffs. He deposed that the bond was executed and registered in his presence; he presented it at the Registry office, the appellant put her seal on it and made her signature by mark, her name was written by her son Nawab Meah, he and Chunder Kishore fetched the Rs. 30,000 from the plaintiffs' house; it had been arranged that the money should remain in deposit with the plaintiffs, and after the execution of the bond it was taken back and kept in deposit on the appellant's account to pay her debts with it; that after that Nawab Meah and Chunder Kishore paid off her debts and got evidence thereof and gave them to the plaintiffs; that the appellant was behind a parda at first when he read over the bond to her from a little distance. She said: "I could not clearly understand it." Afterwards her son Nawab Meah read over the document to her and explained it to her. The next witness was Mohini Mohun Basak, an attesting witness. He said he had known the appellant for 14 or 15 years or for a longer period; that he had talked to her and knew her voice; that he saw her put her seal and signature to the bond by mark; the money was fetched and shown to her; he was [814] seated in the room on the west of the room where she was seated; there was a purda on the door between the two rooms, when she executed the bond the purda was lifted a little on one side and he saw through that opening; the appellant had told him to procure a loan of the money and said that she would give him brokerage at 1 per cent.; he acted as a broker and procured the loan.

The appellant met this case by witnesses who deposed that at the time of the execution of the bond she was not at Dacca, and others who deposed that she was on bad terms with Imdad Ali. The Subordinate Judge disbelieved these witnesses and said there could not be any doubt Reza Karim's evidence was fully true. He accordingly made a decree that in default of the principal money and interest and costs being deposited in Court on or before a day named the mortgaged property, or a sufficient portion thereof, should be sold and the proceeds thereof applied in payment. The defendant appealed from this decree to the High Court at Calcutta which dismissed the appeal, but it is in her favour that they said not without a doubt.

Chunder Kishore Roy and Imdad Ali, who, it has been mentioned, are witnesses to the execution of the bond, were not called by the plaintiffs. The reason for this appears in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge and ought not to affect their case. He says that the plaintiffs did their best to produce them as witnesses but without success; that Chunder Kishore and Hara Kishore, who had been proved to have been present when the bond was executed, although not discharged from the defendant's service, had mysteriously disappeared some time after the institution of the suit, and it seemed to him "very likely that the defendant had screened them with the object that the plaintiffs might not avail themselves of their evidence. Imdad Ali, in spite of all the efforts of the plaintiffs, will not appear to give his evidence."

The reasons given for the present appeal in the appellant's case and in the argument before their Lordships are: (1) That the first Court committed a material error in refusing to allow the evidence of the defendant to be taken on commission; (2) [815] that the same Court misunderstood and misapplied the law relating to documents executed by pardanashin ladies.

The facts relating to the first reason can be briefly stated. The plaint was filed on the 9th April 1891 and the written statement on the 13th July 1891. On the 4th August 1891 the defendant applied that the evidence of certain witnesses in the list filed by her and her own evidence might be taken by commission; some of the witnesses being females and others residing beyond the jurisdiction of the Court. It appears on the order sheet of the Court in the record that on that day orders were made for commission to take the evidence of the female witnesses and the witnesses who were out of the jurisdiction. No order was made as to the defendant's evidence.

On the 2nd April 1892 the defendant applied to be examined by commission at her present residence at Itna in the district of Maimensingh beyond the jurisdiction of the Court, to which the plaintiffs objected that she should be examined at her permanent residence in the town of Dacca. The Judge refused to issue a commission for her examination at Itna saying that he was not satisfied that she was ill or in such state of health that she could not be removed to her own residence at Dacca without danger to her life. On the 6th May 1892, the defendant made another application to be examined at Itna supported by an affidavit, which application was refused, the Judge saying that he had on previous occasions disbelieved the defendant's plea of illness and still adhered to that opinion; that he was further inclined to believe that the defendant did not mean to comply with the Court's order, but was simply trying to put off the disposal of the suit.

By section 578 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) it is enacted that no decree shall be reversed or substantially varied nor shall any case be remanded on account of any error, defect or irregularity, whether in the decision or in any order passed in the suit or otherwise not affecting the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court. It is apparent in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge that if the defendant had been examined and had given evidence in support of her written [816] statement he would not have believed it, and in their Lordships' opinion it could not reasonably have prevailed against the evidence given by the plaintiffs. The High Court also appears to have thought so, for it says at the end of its judgment it does not think the interests of justice would be served by sending the case back to have the evidence taken. Whether the Subordinate Judge properly exercised his discretion when he refused to issue the commission need not be determined. Possibly it would have been prudent to issue it, but their Lordships are of opinion that the want of the defendant's evidence has certainly not affected the merits of the case.

As to the second ground of appeal they think the law has been neither misunderstood nor misapplied. They will humbly advise Her Majesty to dismiss the appeal. The appellant will pay the costs of it.

Appeal dismissed.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

The 18th February and 1st April, 1898.

PRESENT:

LORDS HOBHOUSE, MACNAGHTEN AND MORRIS, AND SIR R. COUCH.

Faiz Muhammad Khan............Plaintiff

versus

Muhammad Said Khan............Defendant.

[On appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh.]

Will—Construction of Will—Construction of the will of a talukhdar—Quantity of estate devised—Unlimited gift of share of profits in a talukhdari estate.

The will of a talukhdar, who left daughters, declared that in respect of his estate, in its entirety and without division, the engagement for the revenue should be in the name of his eldest daughter's son and so continue. Besides this grandson, another, the son of his second daughter, as well as two other daughters of the testator, were to be equal sharers entitled to the profits of the estate. Of this estate the will said: "The profits may be divided equally among all the four persons."

The talukh had been included in the first and third of the lists reparod in conformity with the Oudh Estates' Act, 1869.

On a question whether under the will the son of the second daughter took a heritable interest, or only a life-estate, to which, it was argued, the gift was confined by reason of its being only of the profits:--

[817] Held, that, in order to show that an unlimited gift of the profits was less than a gift of the corpus, some evidence should be found in the context, or in the circumstances affecting the property, tending to show restriction of the interest given.

No such evidence having been found here, the interest given by the will was declared to be heritable in the case of the testator's grandson, who was the son of his second daughter. This grandson dying soon after the testator, had bequeathed his interest to the present appellant, his father.

APPEAL from a decree (3rd June 1892) of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, affirming a decree (9th October 1888) of the District Judge of Rae Bareli.

The plaintiff, appellant, brought this suit on the 14th January 1888, claiming title to a share in the profits of a talukh. This share had been bequeathed to him by his son, Sultan Khan, who died on the 4th July 1879. Sultan Khan's share in the profits of the talukh had been derived under the will, dated 21st February 1873, of his maternal grandfather Abdul Hakim Khan, who died on the 23rd February 1878, the talukhdar of one moiety of talukh Amawan in the Rae Baroli District. The plaintiff had married Abdul Hakim's second daughter, and Sultan Khan had been his son by this marriage.

In 1858, at the second summary settlement, Abdul Hakim obtained settlement with the Government in respect of his moiety of Amawan. Afterwards a sanad was granted to him, and his name was entered in the first and third of the lists prepared under the 8th section of the Oudh Estates' Act, 1869. In virtue of the latter entry the descent of the estate of the sanad-holding talukhdar was thereafter to be regulated by primogeniture.

This appeal related only to the claim of the father and devisee of Sultan Khan, deceased, in 1879, to a one-fourth share, on the ground of its having passed by the will of Abdul Hakim whom Sultan Khan had survived. Another claim had been at one time put forward in this suit to a fourth share, which Abdul Hakim had devised to his daughter Shabhan. This share, by reason of that daughter having died before the testator, had lapsed into the talukhdari estate. That claim, which had reference to rights under section 22 of the Oudh Estates' Act, 1869, depended on facts which both the Courts in India had concurred in negativing, [818] and was not further urged. The appellant's right, however, to the one-fouth share which had been Sultan's, depended on questions of law. These were, in effect, whether or not the will of Abdul Hakim conferred upon him a heritable interest in the profits of the talukhdari estate, or only an interest during his life.

Besides this will of 1873 Adbul Hakim had previously made three other testamentary documents, dated respectively the 29th January 1861, the 5th October 1861, and the 9th September 1870. The material contents of all appear in their Lordships' judgment.

Muhammad Said Khan, in whose name as talukhdar, on the death of Abdul Hakim, the estate was held, having been a minor in 1878, the Court of Wards had charge until 1887, when Said, on obtaining possession, refused to recognize the claim of the plaintiff, who now sued for the share that had been devised to his son, and by his son to him.

The defence was that the interest conferred upon Sultan Khan by the will of his maternal grandfather was a personal right to maintenance, which came to an end on his death.

The District Judge held that no proprietary right in the share given by the will to Sultan Khan was conferred by it. There was a remedy prescribed by the will, in case Said should fail to distribute, that each co-sharer should thereupon have a part set aside for him. The present suit had been brought before the end of the first year from the time when Said attaining his majority had obtained possession. The will, directing that the whole estate should remain in the name of Said, entire and undivided, afforded no ground for this suit, which, as claiming a share of the profits, was premature. He dismissed the suit.

The Judicial Commissioner, on appeal, was of a different opinion. He considered that the bequest to Sultan Khan was absolute, and that the son's will in favour of the father must take effect, conveying to him all the rights to the four annas share bequeathed. Accordingly the suit was remanded, as regarded that part of the claim, for findings as to the amount of the profits in question, under section 566 of the Civil Procedure Code.

[819] On the return made by the District Judge the appeal came before a Court constituted under section 8 of Act XIV of 1891. Another Judicial Commissioner who had succeeded the former in office was of opinion that the gift made by the fourth will to Sultan Khan was merely a life-estate for his maintenance. No words of inheritance accompanied it. The gift was one to him personally, in which he had no power to bequeath any interest. On the other hand, the defendant took the talukhdari estate unrestricted by there having been to Sultan Khan a gift of a varying sum unaccompanied by any words of inheritance.

In this judgment the Additional Judicial Commissioner concurred. The appeal from the first decision of the District Judge was dismissed, and the dismissal of the suit affirmed.

The plaintiff appealed.

Mr. J. D. Mayne, for the Appellant, argued that the Courts were wrong in holding that the share given to Sultan Khan by the will of the 21st February 1873 was only a life-interest in the profits, terminating on his death. Under the will the interest given was not merely for maintenance. The interests of the four sharers were all equal and absolute. The special provision for Said only entitled him to be the sharer responsible to the Government in engagements for the revenue. The remedy given to the other sharers for enforcing their claims, should that course be necessary, was not inconsistent with the provision that the estate should remain in the name of Said entire and indivisible. If it would be inconsistent that certain portions of the estate should be set apart, where distribution might have been withheld, and yet that the estate should remain entire, this remedy might fail; but this would not invalidate the bequest. That the talukh should be possessed by one person, himself a sharer, with others equally with him entitled to share the profits, were provisions that could take effect, and they were not inconsistent with one another.

Mr. Lawson Walton and Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the Respondent, contended that the talukh being held subject to the rule of primogeniture, the whole scheme of the will, according as it did with that rule, required that the talukhdari estate should remain undivided and entire; the result being that the bequest [820] in favour of Sultan Khan would be a life-interest only. The words of the will of the 21st February 1873 had been rightly construed by the Appellate Court on this point. The gift, as limited to a share of the property, was a gift for maintenance for the life of the grantee and not an estate of inheritance of which Sultan Khan could dispose by his will. As a suit for the share of the profits the suit was premature. As to the general restriction on the power of a testator to give more than one-third of his property in legacies without the consent of the heirs, reference was made to Macnaghten's Mahomedan Law, chapter VI, para 2, and to the judgment in Khajooroonissa v. Rowshan Jehan, (1876) I. L. R., 2 Cal., 184 (198): L. R., 3 I. A., 291 (307).

Mr. J. D. Mayne replied.

On 1st April their Lordships' judgment was delivered by Lord Hobhouse. -The sole question in this appeal is whether Sultan Khan, the grandson of Abdul Hakim Khan, took under the will of his grandfather a heritable interest in his grandfather's talukhdari estate. Sultan is dead, and the plaintiff, who is now appellant, claims to represent him. The estate is one of those which were entered in List III of Act I of 1869; which means that, not being one in which the custom of primogeniture had previously prevailed, the talukhdar elected that it should so descend in future. The defendant and respondent Said is another grandson of the testator.

The plaintiff claimed a further share in the estate, being that which was devised to Shabhan, a daughter of the testator, who died in his lifetime. That claim has been decided against him, and is not revived in this appeal. At the hearing the District Judge wholly dismissed the suit, holding that Sultan took no more than a life interest under his grandfather's will. The plaintiff appealed, when the Acting Judicial Commissioner, Mr. Dyson, held that Sultan took an absolute interest; and he remanded the suit for trial of the question (among others), to what share of profits is the plaintiff entitled in the 4-anna share of profits inherited by Sultan Khan.

On remand the District Judge found "that two persons have equal rights to this item; one of them is Mussammat Aziz-un-nissa, and the other is plaintiff as representative of Sultan Khan." [821] With that finding the appeal came again before the Judicial Commissioner's Court for final disposal. The Court then consisted of the Judicial Commissioner, Mr. Burkitt, and the Additional Judicial Commissioner Mr. Howell. Those learned Judges held that they were not bound by Mr. Dyson's decision; and, considering that Sultan took only a life-interest, dismissed the appeal with costs. That had the effect of affirming the District Judge's original decree which dismissed the suit with costs.

The testator was a Mahomedan gentleman who married two wives and had children by both of them. His will, which is now to be construed, takes notice that a daughter has just been born to him by his second wife and then proceeds—

"I do execute this will in modification of my will, dated 19th September 1870, and got the same duly registered, so that after my demise the engagement in respect of the ilaka (estate) in its entirety and without division may be made in the name of Muhammad Said Khan, son of Mussammat Shahzadi Bibi, my eldest daughter by my first wife, and that Muhammad Sultan Khan, son of Mussammat Umrao Bibi, my second daughter, by my first wife and Mussammat Moti Bibi, my third daughter by my first wife, and Mussammat Shabhan Bibi my fourth daughter from my second wife, may be as equal sharers (with him) entitled to appropriate profits, and that the profits of the said estate after deducting therefrom the Government revenue, talukhdari, and ahl-i-biradri (members of brotherhood) expenses may be divided equally among all the four persons.

"Let no one act contrary to this. Should any one do so, his act shall be null and void both before the authorities for the time being and the member of the brotherhood. If in case Muhammad Said Khan fail to distribute the profits, or raise a dispute over the distribution, each sharer shall be competent to have with the help of the Government set apart for him lands yielding his share of profits; but the estate shall continue in the name of Muhammad Said Khan entire and undivided."

This will was made on the 1st February 1873, and it is not now disputed that all former wills were revoked by it, or that it is the only instrument now to be construed. But it is not unimportant, especially with reference to the argument founded on the testator's preference of primogeniture for his talukh, to see how he had dealt with it by former wills, and what were his actual dispositions immediately before the will of 1873.

The Government of India thought it important for the quiet of titles in Oudh that talukhdars should be advised to make wills [822] and Abdul Hakim was so advised as early as October 1860. In January 1861 his only issue was three daughters by his first wife, and he provided that Shahzadi, his eldest daughter, should be lumbardar in his place, and that his daughters, Umrao and Morti, should be subordinate co-sharers in equal shares. In the course of that year Umrao gave birth to Sultan; and on the 5th October 1861 the testator made a second will giving the estate to Sultan according to the custom of primogeniture. He directed that his two other daughters, then childless, should get maintenance from Sultan; but with a proviso that if they should not remain on terms of peace and concord, his three daughters should be proprietors in equal shares, Sultan being only lambardar. When the eldest daughter Shahzadi gave birth to Said, the testator made a third will, dated 9th September 1870. By it he gave his estate to Sultan and Said in equal shares and made them joint lumbardars. Also he directed that his third daughter Moti should get maintenance. The fourth and last will was, as stated, made upon the birth of another daughter, Shabhan.

Their Lordships have heard no reason founded on the language of the will of 1873 for confining the interest of Sultan to a life-estate except that the gift is only of profits. But in order to show that an unlimited gift of profits is less than a gift of the corpus some evidence should be found in the context or in the circumstances affecting the property. It appears to their Lordships that the context, so far from favouring the restriction of the gift, bears the other way. The testator does not give the estate to Said, but directs that the engagement shall be made in his name. When he disposes of the surplus after deducting revenue and expenses, he puts all four takers on the same footing, equal shares of profits are given to each. Finally comes the provision that in case of dispute each sharer shall have land set apart for him, only the estate is to continue in the name of Said (clearly as lumbardar) entire and undivided. It may be that such a setting apart would be difficult, as the Court below observes; but the testator clearly contemplated it and it seems more consistent with a permanent than with a limited interest.

The will then, read alone, must be construed as giving a heritable interest to Sultan, and it is not shown from any of his [823] former dispositions that the testator was in the habit of using any of its expressions in any but their ordinary sense, or that he looked upon the gift of the lumbardari as carrying the whole beneficial interest, or that he leant in favour of the rule of primogeniture. On the contrary, in the will of January 1861, he gives the lumbardari according to primogeniture, and the surplus in equal shares. In the will of October 1861 he provides for equality of proprietorship in case of dispute; and in the will of 1870 he gives the proprietorship, lumbardari and all, to his two grandsons equally.

Their Lordships' attention was called to the fact that the plaintiff is not entitled to the whole of Sultan's share. The District Judge found that Aziz-un-nissa is equally entitled. She is not a party to the suit, and would not be bound by any decree made in it. But their Lordships prefer to confine themselves to a construction of the will on the points argued in this appeal. The plaint, which is rather confused both in its statement and in its prayer, sues for possession of an 8-annas share in the talukh. A declaration of the nature of the devise to Sultan will enable the Courts to put him in enjoyment of so much of the share of Sultan as has devolved on him, in the mode appropriate to the circumstances of the talukh. Their Lordships think that the proper course will be to discharge the decrees of the Judicial Commissioner's Court and of the District Judge, to declare that according to the true construction of the will Sultan Khan took a heritable interest in 4-annas of the profits of the estate after deducting Government revenue, talukhdari and ahl-i-biradri expenses; to dismiss the suit so far as it seeks relief in respect of the share devised to Shabhan; and to order that neither party shall pay or receive costs either in the District Judge's Court or in that of the Judicial Commissioner; in both of which Courts the plaintiff was right as to one-half of his claim, and wrong as to the other half. They will therefore humbly advise Her Majesty to this effect. On this appeal the appellant is wholly right, and the respondent wholly wrong; therefore the respondent must pay the costs.

Appeal allowed.

PRESENT:

LORDS HOBHOUSE, MACNAGHTEN, AND MORRIS, AND SIR R. COUCH.

Rash Mohini Dasi............Appellant
versus
Umesh Chunder Biswas...........Respondent.

[On appeal from the High Court at Fort William in Bengal.]

Will—Execution of Will—Testamentary Capacity—Evidence—Burden of proof.

As to the testamentary capacity of a person who was alleged to have executed his will while suffering from paralysis and in his last illness, the Courts below had differed.

The proponent's case was that the will had been signed for the testator in his presence by another person authorized by him, and that he was of sound and disposing mind at the time, though unable to write his name. Against this, there was affirmative, oral evidence tending to show that he was not then capable of making a will. Other circumstances supported the latter view.

On the weight of the evidence the Judicial Committee decided that the proponent had not discharged the burden of proving him to have been capable.

The present case did not resemble one where a testator, near death, might, with the requisite degree of knowledge, have executed a disposition of his property, for which previously and while his mind was still in vigour, he might have given instructions.

APPEAL from a decree (19th August 1893) (I. L. R., 21 Cal., 279) of the High Court, reversing a decree (10th August 1892) of the District Judge of Nuddea, dismissing a suit which originated in an application for probate of a will under Act V of 1881.

On the 5th May 1891 Rash Mohini Dasi, the appellant, widow of Mohim Chunder Biswas of Babanipur, in Meherpur, Zilla Nuddea, who died on the 18th March 1891, petitioned under the Probate Act, 1881, for probate of his will dated the 25th Falgun 1297, corresponding to the 8th March 1891. Khettermohun Chowdhry, a cousin, and manager of the estate of the deceased, having joined in the petition, withdrew from it, on the 18th May following. The deceased left a minor daughter, and the next of kin after her were his two uncles, Tara Chand Biswas and Umesh Chunder Biswas. The latter of these entered a caveat on the 11th June 1891. The proceedings were then conducted as a suit.

[826] According to the case of the widow, proponent, Mohim Chunder having had a paralytic stroke, was unable to use his hand to sign his name, but directed Troilokya Nath Biswas to sign his name for him. Umesh Chunder filed a written statement, denying that the will had been duly executed, and averring that the deceased was not in a state of body or mind to be able to make it. An issue was framed to raise the question, and thereupon the Officiating District Judge found it to be substantially true that Mohim Chunder had had at the time consciousness enough to authorize Troilokya Nath to sign his name for him, and that he had made the will, which accordingly was admitted to probate.

The High Court (PIGOT and BANERJEE, JJ.), on the appeal of Umesh Chunder, after deciding that the issue of due execution raised the question of the alleged testator's testamentary capacity, found on the balance of the evidence that he had not possessed it; and that there had been no proof that he had known, and approved of, the contents of the will.

They reversed the decision of the Original Court, and refused to admit the will to probate.

The judgment of the High Court is reported at length in I. L. R., 21 Cal., 279.

On this appeal—

Mr. A. Cohen, Q.C., and Mr. C. W. Arathoon, argued that the decision of the first Court should be maintained. Parker v. Felgate, (1883) L. R., P. D., 171, was referred to, in which case it had been decided that, where a testatrix had previously given instructions for her will, and at the time of the execution recollected that she had given those instructions, and believed, as was the fact that the will accorded with them, that state of things was sufficient for probate to be allowed.

Mr. J. D. Mayne, for the Respondent, contended that the dispositions of the will could not have been originated with the alleged testator in the state in which he was. There was no evidence that the first draft emanated from him ; and there was a blank period between the time when the draft was made and the alleged execution of the will.

[826] Mr. A. Cohen, Q.C., replied.

Afterwards, on March 5th, their Lordships' judgment was delivered by Lord Macnaghten.—In this case the appellant Rash Mohini Dasi propounded a document as the will of her late husband Mohim Chunder Biswas, who died on the 18th of March 1891. The District Judge of Nuddea admitted the document to probate. The High Court on appeal reversed his decision and dismissed the appellant's petition with costs.

The sole question in issue before the High Court was the testamentary capacity of the alleged testator.

After a very careful review of the evidence from which nothing is omitted, and in which nothing seems to have been unduly pressed, the learned Judges of the High Court state the result of their opinion as follows : "We think that the evidence of Dr. Bepin "—Dr. Bepin was a duly qualified doctor who attended Mohim during the latter part of his illness—" aided by the admissions of the plaintiff's witnesses, the history of the illness and the circumstances of suspicion which arise in the case, lead to the conclusion first that Mohim is not shown to have had due testamentary capacity ; secondly, that the balance of evidence in this difficult case is on the whole to the effect that he had not testamentary capacity; and that there is no adequate proof whatever that he knew or approved of the contents of the will."

Their Lordships agree so entirely with the conclusions at which the learned Judges have arrived and with their estimate of the evidence that it will not be necessary for them to go through the facts in any detail.

Mohim died at the age of 29. Besides his widow he left an infant daughter and two uncles, the younger of whom Umesh Chunder Biswas, the present respondent, opposed the grant of probate. Mohim had a paralytic stroke on the 24th of January 1891. A native doctor named Rakhal was called in and attended him for about five or six days. Then he was treated by a kobiraj or native practitioner whose name does not appear. On the 2nd of March he had another seizure. Two doctors were then called in, Dr. Bepin and a native practitioner called Jasoda. [827] They attended him constantly until his death. It seems to have been determined rather against the advice of the doctors that if possible Mohim should be moved to Calcutta on the 9th. However, as preparations were being made for his removal, and as he was being carried through the house he had another seizure, which after a few days proved fatal.

The story of the preparation of the will is told by Khetter Chowdry Khan, a cousin of Mohim and his manager and trusted adviser. He was the principal, if not the sole, actor in the drama.

It seems that Dr. Bepin, either on the first day of his attendance or a day or two afterwards, said something about a will. It is not very clear what was said. Khetter states that the doctor said that considering Mohim's state there should be a will made. Dr. Bepin himself asserts that what he said was that "considering Mohim's condition they should be ready to get a will executed in case he became at all better." Whatever it was that Dr. Bepin said Khetter acted on the hint and set about getting a will made at once. He says he told the patient " Bepin Babu is saying that you should make a will." . . .

. . . Mohim said : "Let a will be made and then I shall go to 'Calcutta.' " . . . I and Mohim consulted together that night. I drew out a list of the properties which were to be included in the will. No one was present there at that time. Neither his wife nor his mother-in-law was asked at the time about it. I did not tell him to ask either his wife or mother-in-law about it. He did not forbid me to speak of it to any one except his uncle and his enemies. I did not speak of it to Mohim's sister, and one of his aunts. I did not also tell his wife. I did not speak of it to Mohim's wife and family or any one else, but Mohim spoke of it to his sister and wife on the 24th and 25th Phalgoon (7th and 8th of March). There were five executors. I did not let them know before the will. I did not tell Umesh or his sons. They do not speak to me. I made a draft from the note. This was on the 21st or 22nd (4th or 5th of March) I have a draft. I handed over the list to Bhusan to keep it with the miscellaneous papers. I made the draft sitting in a corner of the cutchery. Mohim saw the draft on the morning of the 23rd (6th of March) after washing his mouth and his hands. [828] No one was present at the time. The doctor went daily from the 20th to the 25th. Jasoda and Bepin used not to go together. I did not tell Bepin Babu because Mohim forbade me. He forbade me from the 20th. He forbade me saying 'Let no one know.' On one occasion he named the doctors and told me not to tell them. He said to me 'I do not know whether what you have done will be according to law, go and get it revised by the pleader of Meherpur.' I sent it on the 24th through Taruck Biswas . . . . The draft came from Meherpur on the night of the 24th Phalgoon. It contained just an alteration here and there. What I wrote was there but two conditions were added. Besides Abinash Babu I tried to get a draft drawn up by Narahurri Babu also, I tried to do so by means of a letter purporting to have been written by Mohim Babu on the 21st or 22nd. In it I put down paragraphs of the will. Narahurri Babu's draft came by post a day or two after Mohim's will had been executed. It is with Bhusan. Narahurri Babu sent a letter. It is in the serishta . . . . After Mohim had determined who should be executors and said 'These persons are to be the executors' I did not say anything. He said that on the night of the 20th when we consulted together. Bepin doctor came that day. I do not remember whether I or Mohim spoke about the terms of the will. Mohim spoke about the terms. I gave my opinion. I did not myself suggest any of the terms . . . . It took ten or twelve minutes to read Mohim's will. That was on the night of the 24th. He read it to himself. He read it in a low voice." The story told on behalf of the petitioner further was that Khetter's draft was sent to Abinash the pleader at Meherpur on the morning of the 7th of March by the hand of Taruck, a gomashta in Mohim's employ. Taruck says that Khetter gave him a letter along with it addressed to Abinash. Then he adds "Mohim said 'Take this letter and get the draft corrected by Abinash Babu and bring it back.' . He said 'There are four executors and my wife will also be an executrix.' He further said 'Rs. 300 is set apart for my wife's pilgrimage, it has to be made Rs. 600.' He further told me to ask Abinash to keep this secret that there may be no row."

Putting aside for the moment this alleged conversation with [829] Taruck, and Khetter's statement that Mohim spoke of the will to his wife and sister on the 7th and 8th of March, it will be observed that up to this point no one was in the secret but Khetter. Everything took place between Khetter and Mohim alone. It is not very clear whether Taruck intended to represent that he had a conversation with Mohim in person or whether he was only repeating what Khetter told him. Either way the story is incredible. When Khetter was sending written instructions to Abinash why should he have entrusted part of the testator's wishes verbally to a messenger? If we are to take it that Taruck had a conversation with Mohim about the will in Khetter's presence how is it that Khetter says nothing about it?

The will is said to have been executed on the following day, the 8th of March, between 4 and 5 P. M. There seems to be no doubt that on that day there was an assemblage of persons hastily collected by Khetter. All were servants of Mohim except Shama Churn, who was Khetter's brother-in-law, and Rakhal, the doctor who attended Mohim on the first attack. A person was stationed at the door to keep out "enemies" or to give warning of their approach. Mohim was propped up in bed. The will which had been copied out by one Troilkya was put into his left hand over which he still had some power. Troilkya signed for him. He touched the pen. Then Shama Churn signed and read the will aloud. The other witnesses signed and the ceremony was over. Khetter put the will in his own box. After Mohim's death "he made known the fact of the will having been made." He handed over the will to the appellant. The appellant and Mohim [sic] applied jointly for probate. But Khetter afterwards withdrew his application at the instance apparently of the appellant's maternal uncle. There were other reasons he said. He was forbidden to act by Umesh, the respondent.

The will itself is fairly simple and not very long. The testator begins by stating that Umesh and his son had not behaved well to him; they were behaving so that if he did not appoint any executor in respect of his estate his family would suffer for want of food. Then he gives his wife permission to adopt. He [830] appoints five executors, but no work was to be done otherwise than in accordance with the views of two of them. Then the testator directs that if a son is adopted his infant daughter and the adopted son should share his property between them, but until he or she came of age the estate was to remain in the hands of the executors. In default of an adoption the daughter was to take all. In the event of the daughter's death the entire estate was to go to the adopted son. In the absence of both adopted son and daughter the entire estate was to vest in his widow, and failing her in the testator's nephew or any full brothers that he might have. Then there were provisions for poor relatives of the testator and of his widow.

It is only fair to observe that under the will Khetter took no benefit directly. He had no interest except as executor. What his motive was it is difficult to see unless he hoped to secure his position as manager of the estate by becoming an executor. And it may be that he was anxious to exclude Umesh from all hope of succession. He and Umesh seem to have been on much worse terms than Mohim and Umesh. Umesh and his son did not even speak with Khetter. Umesh constantly visited Mohim during his illness, and Mohim according to Khetter was very anxious that his visits should not be discontinued.

The oral evidence as to Mohim's testamentary capacity may be summed up shortly. Putting aside the statements of Khetter and Taruck, to which attention has already been called, the witnesses for the appellant state generally that the testator was in full possession of his senses. "That," as the learned Judges of the High Court say, "is very unsatisfactory evidence of the patient's condition." "The question," they add, "is what mental state he was in in reference to the making of a will, his capacity for which is challenged by the defendant's evidence and is rendered at least a matter for careful inquiry from the facts of his illness in the plaintiff's evidence itself. Paralysis on 24th January, an increase of illness on 23rd February, another and severe fit on the 2nd March, indistinct speech as stated by all the witnesses, increased by the 8th March according to Shama Churn so greatly that according to Rakhal Kobiraj he had to be asked two or three times before his words could be [831] understood . . . The evidence of some of the plaintiffs just referred to would if read by itself convey the impression that Mohim's mind was quite alert and his speech practically free, although a little indistinct, and although he was physically weak and paralysed. If anything approaching this was the truth some proof of this might have been adduced apart from the story common to all those witnesses in which almost the same things are represented as said about the execution and about going to Calcutta, and nothing else whatever. The obvious comment on it is that they did not venture to leave this common ground, because they were not stating what they remembered, but what it had been agreed should be said—a short story containing some easily remembered incident of a kind which, if not closely inquired into by the defendant, would lead to a belief on the part of the Court trying the case in Mohim's capacity."

On the other hand, the witnesses on behalf of the respondent deposed clearly and positively to Mohim's incapacity. The most important witness of course is Dr. Bepin. He seems to be a person of some position. Khetter himself says "Bepin is regarded as a good doctor." He is positive that at no time during his attendance could Mohim have made a will. He says: "I used to go and visit him daily for 15 or 16 days. Before I went there Mohim was under the treatment of a kobiraj of Mankar. I sometimes used to stop at Mohim's house for 24 hours. When I went on the first day Mohim had but little consciousness. For the first day or two he replied to questions with great difficulty. After that he could not speak at all, but used to try and make sounds. He did not always try to do even this. After I had repeatedly shouted to him he used to try and make a sound. I saw Mohim on the morning of the day before that on which it was proposed to take him to Calcutta. I went in the morning of the day before that on which it was proposed to take him to Calcutta. As regards Mohim's senses on that day I only say this that he could taste food and he used to weep and again to wipe the tears from his eyes as he looked at people. He could take down the first part of each spoonful, and the latter part of it had to be withdrawn. I did not hear him speak, and he did not speak to me. He used to be made to sit up in order to [832] be fed. I came away at 10 or 11 that day. I was against his being taken to Calcutta. The reason was that the whole of the brain had become diseased, and if he received any shock the probability was that he would get apoplexy. The next day at 9 or 9½ in the morning I found the patient almost in a moribund condition."

As regards the testamentary capacity of the alleged testator their Lordships agree with the High Court in thinking that the oral evidence on behalf of the respondent outweighs the evidence on behalf of the appellant. And in this connection, it must be borne in mind that Mohim does not seem to have had any intention of making a will before his illness. It is not like a case in which a testator executes a disposition of his property for which instructions have been given or preparations made while the mind was in vigour.

Apart, however, from the oral evidence there are several matters which in their Lordships' opinion tell heavily against the appellant. What reason was there for keeping in the dark the two doctors who were in daily attendance on the patient? If it be true, as Khetter says, that Dr. Bepin suggested that a will should be made by Mohim in the state in which he was when he paid his first visit, it would only have been natural that he should have been consulted. No doubt Khetter says that Mohim forbade him to tell the doctors. He looked upon them as people of the other party because they were friends with Umesh and attended his family. But then Shama Churn was on good terms with Umesh, and yet Khetter called him in to witness the will, and he was permitted to read it aloud. It is suggested that Mohim was afraid that something would happen if Umesh were told. But what is it that the testator is said to have been afraid of if Umesh had known of the will? Not that there would have been a row, as some of the witnesses said, but according to Khetter's evidence only this that Umesh would discontinue his visits. Then again why were not the wife and sister called to speak to Mohim's mental condition at the time the will was made? Khetter says that the testator himself told them about the will on the 7th and 8th of March. It is true that when the plaintiff's evidence was [833] closed the District Judge was asked to let them be examined, but then it was too late. Lastly, it is a very important fact that Khetter does not produce the draft which he says was sent to Abinash and returned by him, nor was Abinash himself called though he might have thrown some light upon the case.

On the whole, their Lordships are of opinion that the High Court came to a right conclusion. The making of the will from first to last was Khetter's doing, and there is no satisfactory evidence to show that the alleged testator understood the business in which Khetter engaged him. The burden of proof rests on the appellant and she has not discharged it.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise Her Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed. The appellant will pay the costs of this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

LORDS WATSON, HOBHOUSE AND DAVEY, AND SIR R. COUCH.

Balkishen Das and others............Plaintiffs

versus

Simpson............Defendant.

[On appeal from the High Court at Fort William in Bengal.]

Act XI of 1859 (Bengal Revenue Sale Law), sections 3, 8, and 33—Bengal Excise Act (Bengal Act VII of 1868), section 2—Unauthorized sale by Collector—Jurisdiction of Civil Court—Res judicata—Parties—Secretary of State for India.

Act XI of 1859, the Bengal Revenue Sale Law, providing for the sale of estates in arrear of payment of revenue, does not sanction, and by plain implication forbids, the sale of any estate which is not at the time in arrear of such payment. The whole clauses, in so far as they relate to sales, or to their challenge, as well as the provisions of Bengal Act VII of 1868, are framed upon the express footing that they are to be applicable to the sale of estates which are in arrear of duty.

A Collector had sold an estate, purporting to act under Act XI of 1859, for a supposed arrear of revenue. There was, however, only an erroneous debit in the Collectorate books against the estate, in excess of the revenue actually assessed upon it, chargeable against it, and due from it.

[834] Held, that the sale was without authority; that the Civil Court had jurisdiction to declare the sale void; and that the provisions of section 33 of Act XI of 1859, relating to an appeal to the Commissioner of Revenue, did not exclude that jurisdiction.

The enactment in section 8 had no application to such a case. This was not a question about a transfer from the account of one revenue-paying estate to that of another, nor was it a claim for remission or abatement, which had not been duly allowed by the Government. Section 8 has no application, except there be, (1) default in payment of the revenue, and (2) possession by the Collector of money of the defaulter not indisputably placed to his credit. But here there was no default. All moneys paid by the appellants were credited, and their alleged default was based upon erroneous debit entries to which they were not parties.

In this suit, in the Courts below, the Government had been made a co-defendant, but was not a respondent on this appeal; and the objection was taken, on the argument of this appeal, and by previous petition, that they should be made a party respondent.

Held, that it was a mistaken view that a decree annulling the sale in this suit would be res judicata in any future question or proceeding, as between the Government and the unsuccessful purchaser. The Secretary of State for India, therefore, was not a necessary respondent. His position was correctly explained in Bal Mokoond Lal v. Jirjudhun Roy, (1882) I. L.R., 9 Cal., 271, 276, in the judgment of MITTER, J.

APPEAL from a decree (19th July 1895) of the High Court, reversing a decree (27th July 1892) of the Subordinate Judge of Mozufferpore in Tirhoot.

The appellants, plaintiffs in the suit, were the owners of a mehal described in the books of the Collector of Tirhoot as the separate 5 annas share of the village Shazadpur Anderkilla, entered on the register of revenue-paying mehals or tauzi, under the number 3592. This share had been purchased by Balkishen Das, and a brother whom he had survived, in 1883, and belonged to the appellants, the jumma having then been Rs. 89-8-7. Part of the plot having been taken up by the Government for a State purpose, the revenue payable was reduced to Rs. 82-14-9. From the beginning of the ownership of the appellants, down to March 1891, the payments which they made amounted to Rs .691-14-9, but the instalments due with the above abatement amounted only to Rs. 663-6-0; and there [835] should have been a credit entry, to the account of the mehal No. 3592, after payment of the March 1891 instalment of Rs. 44-15-3. By a mistake in the debit entries against that mehal, it was represented as in debt for revenue to the amount of Rs. 7-15-5 in March 1891 ; and for this arrear it was sold by order of the Collector on the 5th September 1891. The respondent on this appeal was the purchaser.

Against this an appeal by petition to the Commissioner of Revenue was preferred on the 25th February 1892, but having been filed after the period fixed by section 2 of Bengal Act VII of 1868 without any extension of that period having been ordered for the petitioners, the appeal was rejected.

The facts are stated in their Lordships' judgment : —

The main questions were: (1), whether section 33 of Act XI of 1859, and section 2, Bengal Act VII of 1868, did not exclude the present objection from the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts, in consequence of there not having been an appeal upon it to the Commissioner. (2), whether it had not been necessary for the plaintiffs, in order to rely on remission of revenue, to proceed in conformity with section 8 of Act XI of 1859, which enacts that the plea that money belonging to the defaulter sufficient to pay the revenue was in the Collector's hands shall not bar a sale unless, after application in due time made, the Collector shall have neglected to transfer the money in payment of the arrear of revenue due: (3), whether the Government should not have been made a respondent on this appeal, having been a successful defendant in the Court below.

The present suit was brought on the 27th July 1892, alleging that at the time of the sale there was nothing due to the Government in respect of the estate sold, and that the sale was contrary to law.

The Government, under their statutory style, were made defendants, as well as the purchaser Mr. C. F. R. Simpson. The defence filed by the Collector on behalf of the Secretary of State for India was first, that as no appeal under section 2 of Bengal Act VII of 1868 or section 33 of Act XI of 1859 had [836] been preferred to the Commissioner, the suit was not cognizable under the latter section : secondly, that the remission was not entered in favour of this estate in the Collectorate books. The defence filed by the other defendant was the same, but he expressed it that, as to the remission of revenue and the over-payment upon it, these matters did not affect the liability of the plaintiffs, as they had not taken steps in conformity with section 8 of Act XI of 1859 to have the abatement made effective.

The Subordinate Judge, Babu Jadu Nath Das, with regard to section 2 of Bengal Act VII of 1868, and to section 33 of Act XI of 1859, and to the fact that no appeal had been preferred in due time to the Commissioner of the Division, did not consider himself empowered to decide upon irregularities alleged to have taken place in the proceedings of sale. But that, in his opinion, was not the main ground on which this case rested. He found that on the true account of what had been paid as jumma for mehal No. 3592, more than was sufficient to cover the revenue due had been paid in March 1891; so that there was no arrear upon which a sale could be based. He therefore decreed that the sale was null and void, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to possession.

His judgment, and this decree, were reversed by the High Court on appeal. A summary of the reasons stated by the latter Court appears in their Lordships' judgment on this appeal.

Mr. J. H. A. Branson, for the appellants, argued that there was error in the judgment of the High Court. The Subordinate Judge was right in deciding that this sale was not authorized by the Revenue Sale Law of 1859, because there had been no arrear. The Collector had had no authority to sell the estate, as if for default in payment of the revenue, for default had not taken place. It was not denied that the appellants' payment into the Collectorate covered all existing demands at the time of commencing the process of sale for default. The estate had been put up to sale for an arrear which had no existence. The High Court had taken an erroneous view in considering this to be the case of a demand on the part of an owner of a revenue-paying estate to have an entry in account carried to the credit of his estate which would otherwise be in default. [837] For such a case the procedure under section 8 of Act XI of 1859 would have been necessary. But here there was no question that the money belonging to, or due and paid in respect of this very mehal, was in the Collectorate at the time. Neither section 8, nor any other part of that Act, had been called into operation. The fact that there was no arrear governed the question whether the omission to appeal to the Commissioner had the effect of barring the suit under section 32 of Act XI of 1859. The High Court had held the appellants precluded from taking objections not stated in such an appeal. But whatever application section 2 of Bengal Act VII of 1868 might have had to a suit relating to irregularities, or illegalities, in the sale proceedings, the plaintiffs' case had a foundation altogether different. These enactments one and all were inapplicable. For that reason there was an entire mistake in the High Court's observation that, "in order to comply with section 8 of the Revenue Sale Law of 1859, it was necessary for the plaintiffs to have made an application, before the revenue fell due, to have a transfer made to their credit of any amount to which they might be entitled by reason of the abatement ordered by Government, which had not been properly carried to their credit in the Collector's Register." For the proposition that there was no application of the Revenue Sale Law unless there was an actual arrear, reference was made to Baijnath Sahu v. Sital Prasad, (1869) 2 B. L. R., F. B., 1; Sreemunt Lall Ghose v. Shama Soonduree Dasi, (1869) 12 W. R., 276; and Thakoor Churn Roy v. Collector of the 24-Pergunnahs, (1870) 13 W. R., 336.

Mr. A. Phillips, for the respondent, contended that the appeal should not proceed without the Secretary of State, who was a defendant in the suit below, being made a party respondent. The present respondent was entitled to claim, under section 35 of Act XI of 1859 that, if the sale should be declared void, the Government should be ordered to refund to him the purchase-money, with interest. The Subordinate Judge had ordered that the defendant, now respondent, should jointly with the Government pay the plaintiffs' costs. If the High Court's judgment should be reversed, the plaintiffs would have that order in their favour; while, as regarded the Government, the decree of the High Court [838] would still remain, and would remain a final decree. It was submitted that the sale could not be set aside, or declared void unless it should also be declared void as against the Secretary of State. At present, whatever might be the result on this appeal, as things now stood, the decree which the present respondent supported, would remain final as regarded the Secretary of State; and it followed that the latter should be treated as a party necessary to any complete decree on this appeal.

In any view, however, it was submitted that the suit was not maintainable, inasmuch as no appeal in conformity with section 33 of Act XI of 1859, and section 2 of Bengal Act VII of 1868, had been duly preferred to the Commissioner. It was a matter of the due construction of the Revenue Regulations and Acts. For the purposes of sales in default, the Collectorate books were the guide; and there were special proceedings, by way of remedy, to secure proprietors. It was sufficient to support a sale that there was an arrear of revenue within the meaning of section 2 of Act XI of 1859. Credits to estates had to be entered in the books, and an abatement was not credited unless upon application made. This was apparent from the requirements of section 8 of Act XI of 1859. There had not been any such application in reference to estate No. 3592. The sale was made for arrears appearing due in the Collectorate books, and that appeared there with the acquiescence of the appellants; and it was valid so far as the purchaser at the auction sale, now respondent, could discover. Reference was made to Baijnath Sahu v. Sital Prasad, (1869) 2 B. L. R., F. B., 1; Gobind Lal Roy v. Ramjanam Misser, (1893) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 70: L. R., 20 I. A., 165; Lala Gauri Sanker Lal v. Janki Pershad, (1889) I. L. R., 17 Cal., 809: L. R., 17 I. Mr. J. H. A. Branson was not heard in reply.

Afterwards, on the 14th May, their Lordships' judgment was delivered by [839] Lord Watson.—The appellants, plaintiffs in the present suit, were, until the 5th September 1891, proprietors and in possession of a separate 5-annas share of the village of Shahzadpur Anderkilla, situate within the Collectorate of Mozufferpore.

Down to the year 1884, the jumma or annual revenue payable to the Government in respect of the said 5-annas share was Rs. 89-8-7. In the beginning of 1884, the Board of Revenue sanctioned a reduction of the revenue annually payable, to the extent of Rs. 6-9-10, thus fixing the jumma for the future at Rs. 82-14-9 instead of Rs. 89-8-7; and their decision to that effect was duly communicated to the Collector of Mozufferpore by a letter dated the 3rd March 1884. From that date until the year 1891 the owners for the time being of the 5-annas share continued to make yearly payments to the Collector to account of the jumma.

It now appears, and it is not disputed, that in 1884 the Collector, on receipt of the decision of the Board of Revenue, erroneously entered in his books the abatement of jumma which they had granted, as applicable to another estate in which the owners of the 5-annas share of Shahzadpur Anderkilla had and have no interest. The mistake which was thus committed by the Collector, or some of his staff, must have been due to their ignoring or disregarding the plain terms of the decision of the Board of Revenue which had been sent to them. It has been suggested, in both Courts below, that the error may have been induced by the fact that, in the letter which enclosed the decision of the Board, there was a clerical error in giving the tauzi number of the 5-annas share in question; but that explanation, if it be correct, can afford no excuse for failure to give effect to the decision itself.

The result of the mistake was that, during a period of eight years, from 1884 to 1891, whilst the proprietors of the 5-annas share were duly credited in the books of the Collector with the full amount of the payments annually made by them on account of revenue, they were wrongly debited in each year with Rs. 89-9-10, being the amount of the jumma before its reduction. In consequence of that error in the debit side of the account, the books of the Collector showed a balance as due by the appellants, in March 1891, being the end of the revenue year 1890-91, in [840] respect of the revenue payable for the preceding year; whereas if the annual jumma had been charged at its reduced rate, in terms of the order of the Board of Revenue, the books would have shown a balance of Rs. 44-15-3 at their credit.

The Collector then proceeded to sell the 5-annas share in question, as for arrears of jumma due by the appellants, in supposed compliance with the provisions of Act XI of 1859. The property was sold by auction on the 5th September 1891, when it was purchased by Charles F. R. Simpson, who is the sole respondent in this appeal.

The appellants thereafter presented an appeal against the sale to the Commissioner of Tirhoot, under section 2 of Bengal Act VII of 1868, which was rejected by the Commissioner as being out of time. On the 27th July 1892, they brought this suit before the Subordinate Judge of Tirhoot, against the auction-purchaser, the respondent in this appeal, and also against the Collector of Mozufferpore, as representing the Secretary of State for India, praying to have the sale set aside, and other relief. The defendants appeared and lodged written statements, in both of which it was pleaded that the action was not cognizable by the Civil Court, by reason of the plaintiffs having failed to appeal in due time, under the provisions of section 2 of Bengal Act VII of 1868. The present respondent asserted that the suit was "based upon false allegations;" and the other defendant alleged that the plaintiffs had taken no steps to have the abatement taken into consideration, and had for several years continued to pay the original Government revenue. It has not been shown that there are any false allegations in the plaint or that the plaintiffs, after the abatement was granted, continued to pay the old jumma They made payments to account of revenue, which in the third of the eight years already mentioned was of the same amount as the old jumma, in three of them were in excess of it, and in four of them were below its amount. There is nothing to show that any of these payments were made on account of the old jumma, with the exception of the erroneous entries in the Collector's Books, for which he alone was responsible. It was not within the right, and it certainly was not the duty, of the appellants to examine and check these entries.

[841] The Subordinate Judge, on the 1st September 1893, held that the suit was not excluded by the failure of the plaintiffs to present an appeal within due time, under section 2 of Bengal Act VII of 1868; that in point of fact there was no arrear of revenue due by the appellants at the time when their property was sold; and that the sale was illegal and injurious to the appellants. He accordingly declared the sale to be inoperative, and decreed possession of the property sold to the plaintiffs, with costs.

The respondent in this appeal brought that judgment under the review of the High Court at Fort William, when two of the learned Judges, Sir HENRY PRINSEP and CHUNDER MADHUB GHOSE, JJ., reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge and dismissed the appellants' suit, with costs to the present respondent in both Courts.

The following were the grounds assigned for their decision by the learned Judges of the High Court. They held, in the first place, that, inasmuch as there had been no adjudication by the Commissioner upon the objections stated to the sale by the appellants, these objections were excluded from the cognizance of the Civil Courts by section 33 of Act XI of 1859. If that course were permitted, the learned Judges observed that it would "permit a defaulter in the payment of Government revenue, who desired to set aside a sale for irregularity with substantial injury resulting therefrom, practically to do so without any appeal to the Commissioner at all." In the second place, they held that the appellants were debarred, in the present suit, from obtaining "any re-adjustment of account," by reason of section 8 of the Revenue Sale Law of 1859, because, "in order to comply with that law, it was necessary for them to have a transfer made to their credit of any amount to which they might be entitled, by reason of the abatement ordered by Government and which had not been properly carried to their credit in the Collector's Register." They were accordingly of opinion that the appellants were without a remedy, although they indicated that the mistake was unfortunate, "and may also be said to be due to carelessness on the part of the office of the Collector."

[842] Their Lordships do not think that the decision of the learned Judges can be maintained upon either of these points, which they will proceed to notice separately.

Section 3 of the Act XI of 1859 provides that, in default of payment of revenue, within the time appointed for each district by the Board of Revenue, the "estates in arrear" in those districts "shall be sold at public auction to the highest bidder." The Act does not sanction, and by plain implication forbids, the sale of any estate which is not, at the time, in arrear of Government revenue. The whole clauses of the Act of 1859, in so far as these relate to sales, or to their challenge at the instance of the proprietor, as well as the provisions of section 2 of Bengal Act VII of 1868, are framed upon the express footing that they are to be applicable to the sale of estates which are in arrear of duty. The enactments of 1859 and of 1868 are obviously intended to apply to cases in which, if the irregularity or illegality of the sale proceedings alleged by the objector be negatived, the sale will remain valid. But the chief and substantial objection upon which the appellants' plaint is based is, that at the time when their 5-annas share of the village Shahzadpur Anderkilla was sold, there were no arrears of revenue due by them in respect of it. It does not appear to their Lordships to admit of dispute that the objection is founded in fact. In their opinion a stupid blunder made by the Collector or his staff in his own books cannot deprive the appellants of their right to claim, and have effect given to, the permanent abatement which was allowed by the Board of Revenue in March 1884. The result is that the whole proceedings of the Collector, with a view to the sale of the 5-annas share, were beyond his jurisdiction, and are not entitled to the protection given him by the Act in cases where sale is authorised, although it may be attended with some irregularity or illegality. Their Lordships are accordingly of opinion that it was rightly held by the Subordinate Judge that he had jurisdiction to entertain the objection to the sale to which he gave effect, although the point had not been considered and disposed of by the Commissioner.

The observations made by the learned Judges in regard to the second point upon which their decision is rested do not appear to their Lordships to be strictly accurate either in fact or law. There [843] is no question in this case about a transfer from the account kept by the Collector for the mehal 10,313, to the credit of the account kept by him for the 5-annas share of Shahzadpur Anderkilla. The only error in the latter account consists, as already stated, in annually entering Rs. 89-8-7, instead of Rs. 82-14-9, to the debit of the appellants. The payments made by the appellants are correctly credited. In that state of the facts their Lordships are unable to conceive what possible application the provision of section 8 of Act XI of 1859 can have to the present case. The clause contemplates two cases only. Appellants are not within the first of these which relates to a defaulter to revenue, who claims a remission or abatement which has not "been allowed by the authority of the Government." In the second case, it is enacted that the Collector's possession of money belonging to the defaulter, shall afford no answer to the default, unless the money stood in the defaulter's name alone and without dispute, or the Collector has failed, after application by the defaulter, to impute his money towards payment of the revenue. The enactment has no application, except there be (1) default in payment of the revenue, and (2) possession by the Collector of money of the defaulter not indisputably placed to his credit. But the appellants were not in default. All monies paid by them have been correctly credited; and their alleged default, which is a pure fiction, is based upon erroneous debit entries, to which they were not parties.

Although the Secretary of State for India had been represented in the Courts below by the Collector of Mozufferpore, the appellants did not join him as a party to the present appeal. Upon that ground the respondent pleaded, in limine, that the appeal taken to this Board was incompetent; and at all events that the hearing of the appeal ought to be delayed until the Secretary of State for India had been made a party to it. Their Lordships rejected the contention, which was maintained upon the mistaken view that a decree obtained by the appellants in this suit against the Secretary of State would constitute res judicata, in any question or proceeding between that Minister and the respondent. In their opinion, the position of the Indian Secretary, in cases [844] like the present, is correctly explained by Mr. Justice MITTER in Bai Mokoond Lal v. Jirjudhun Roy, (1882) I. L. R., 9 Cal, 271 (276).

The appellants, with the view of obviating the preliminary objection stated by the respondent, presented an incidental petition for an order making the Secretary of State for India a party to the appeal. The application was opposed by Secretary of State, and was refused by this Board with costs. The respondent, notwithstanding, persisted in his preliminary objection at the hearing of the appeal.

Their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to reverse the judgment of the High Court, to restore the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Tirhoot, and to order the respondent to pay to the appellants the costs incurred by them before the High Court. The respondent must pay to the appellants their costs of this appeal, including their costs of the incidental petition already referred to.

[On appeal from the High Court at Fort William in Bengal.]

Contribution—Joint Debtors—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Schedule II, sections 19 and 20, and Art. 61—Acknowledgment of Liability—Interest paid on debt.

By a payment into Court under an order on account of decrees for rent and revenue in arrear, due to the landlord zemindar from the joint owners of an under-tenure, their estate was saved from sale. In respect of a proportionate share of liability for money raised for this purpose one of the joint owners became liable to be sued by another of them for contribution; and a question arose as to the application of article 61* of Schedule II of the Limitation Act, 1877.

[845] More than three years before this suit all the joint owners had filed in Court a petition for the appointment of a Manager of their estate, who should, out of its profits, pay debts and interest to creditors from whom had been borrowed the money for the payment into Court.

Held, that this was an acknowledgment of the joint debt by the co-owner who had not contributed, within section 19 of the Limitation Act; whence had followed the legal consequences, one of which was her liability to be sued within due time for contribution.

Whilst the three years from the date of that acknowledgment were running, and at a date less than three years before this suit, interest on part of the money borrowed had been paid by the Manager whom the appellant, jointly with the other co-owners of the estate, had authorized, as her agent, to pay it.

Held, that this interest, being clearly a payment in exoneration, pro tanto of the plaintiff's liability, was such a payment as was contemplated by section 20, and gave a new departure for the period of limitation.

* [Art. 61 :—

Description of suit.	Period of limitation.	Time from which period begins to run.
For money payable to the plaintiff for money paid for the defendant.	Three years ...	When the money is paid.]

APPEAL from a decree (18th August 1893) of the High Court reversing a decree (28th March 1892) of the Subordinate Judge of Tippera on a preliminary point, and remanding the suit for trial on the merits.

The appellant was the widow of Tilak Chunder Roy, deceased, who, with his brothers Ishan Chunder Roy, the present respondent, and Abhoy Chunder Roy, also since deceased, formed a Hindu family owning a joint estate. Abhoy Chunder was represented by his widow Kalitara, a formal defendant, not appearing on this appeal.

The surviving brother, Ishan Chunder, and the widows were joint debtors for money borrowed to be paid into Court to prevent the sale of their joint estate, which was a shikmi taluk in Tippera, held under the superior zemindar, Nawab Khaja Ahsan Ulla Khan, through whom the Government revenue was paid.

This suit arose out of a claim for contribution between the co-owners in respect of a debt due for money raised to pay arrears of rent and other dues, the plaintiff respondent having paid the proportion due from the defendant, appellant.

The principal question was whether the suit was barred under article 61 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act, 1877. Two matters were in dispute on this appeal. One was, whether a [846] petition, in which the appellant had joined, stating joint indebtedness, was an acknowledgment within section 19 of that Act. The other was, whether payment within three years before suit brought, of interest on a loan taken by the parties jointly, had effect within section 20 to give a new starting point for limitation.

The zemindar landlord had in 1885 obtained four decrees against the joint owners for arrears amounting to about Rs. 80,000. The taluk was attached in execution, and the 2nd February 1885 was fixed for the sale of it, objections to the order for sale having been disallowed.

Ishan Chunder appealing to the High Court applied for a stay of execution, which was granted only upon condition that the judgment-debtors should deposit in Court Rs. 50,000. This sum Ishan Chunder, with the help of Kalitara, raised, and paid into Court on the 3rd February 1885, whence it was taken out by the zemindar on the 3rd April following. The whole amount of the decrees was afterwards paid. Ishan Chunder having executed a bond to Kalitara in respect of her contribution, on which bond she obtained a decree, now commenced this suit against Sukhamoni, claiming Rs. 20,999, for her proportion of the liability, on the 24th February 1891. The plaint stated that in 1885 when Ishan Chunder was about to sue Sukhamoni for her proportionate share of the money, she joined in executing, on the 18th March 1885, an ikrarnama referring it to arbitrators to ascertain the debts, and agreeing to the appointment of a Manager. This contained a recital of the borrowing of the Rs. 50,000 upon bonds, and declared that the Manager should pay the debts with interest. The plaint also stated that, on the 22nd July 1887, the three co-owners petitioned the Court to appoint such a Manager; that he was appointed, and that to him a mukhtearnama was executed on the 4th January 1888. That he remained in office till November 1888, during which period he made payments of interest on the debt.

On the defence of limitation the Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit. He found nothing to show that the liability for the contribution claimed by Ishan Chunder was identical as a debt, with liability on the part of Sukhamoni to pay her share of the [847] joint-indebtedness of the co-owners as acknowledged by them in the petition of the 22nd July 1887. Also he was of opinion that the debt on which interest was paid in 1888, to creditors named, was not a debt acknowledged to be due to Ishan Chunder, and that payment of interest could not operate under section 20 to give a new starting point.

On an appeal by the plaintiff to the High Court, a Division Bench (NORRIS and BANERJEE, JJ.) was of opinion that there was not in the agreement of the 18th March 1885 any admission that the appellant was liable for any part of the joint debt, nor was there any promise by her to pay, nor could such promise be inferred from the proviso in the agreement that the Manager should pay off any debt of the appellants out of the income.

They were further of opinion that the suit was not one for compensation for breach of an agreement in writing and registered such as was provided for in article 116 of Act XV of 1877; but was a suit for money paid to the use of the defendant, and, therefore, under article 61, would have been barred, but for what followed, in three years from February 3rd, 1885, the date on which the money was paid. They also decided that the petition of the 22nd July 1887, with its accompanying schedule, was a clear acknowledgment of liability on the part of Sukhamoni for the money due to the plaintiff for which he sued. They referred to explanation 2 of section 19 of the Limitation Act, 1877, adding:

"Under the provisions of that section the plaintiff, therefore, got a fresh start from the date of this petition, and became entitled to bring his suit within three years from that date. The suit, however, was brought more than three years even from that date, and it becomes necessary to see whether there was any further acknowledgment of liability, or any payment of interest within three years from the date of this acknowledgment, and also within three years before the date of the suit. We find an entry, dated the 12th Sraban 1295, corresponding to the 26th July 1888, showing a payment of Rs. 200 on account of interest to the Tippera Loan Office, due on a bond of the 22nd Magh 1291, executed in favour of the Loan Office. The entry recites that the payment was made on the 31st Assar. This entry is corroborated by an endorsement on the bond of the 22nd Magh 1291 for Rs. 5,000, and by the deposition of Bipro Churn Das, the joint [848] manager, who says he paid the whole of the interest due on the bond for Rs. 50,000 to the Tippera Loan Office. The payment is entered in the books of the debtor-defendant No. 1, as one on account of interest, and it is shown to have been made by the joint manager of the plaintiff and the defendant who was expressly authorized by the petition of the 21st July 1887 to make payments on account of the debts contracted for raising the sum of Rs. 50,000 for satisfaction of the Nawab's decrees. That being so, we think it is a payment of interest within the meaning of section 20 of the Limitation Act, and it gave the plaintiff a fresh start; and reckoning from the 31st Assar 1295, that is, 14th July 1888, the suit was brought within three years.

"It might be said that this interest that was paid was paid, not as interest due to the plaintiff on account of his claim against the defendant Sukhamoni, but was paid as interest due to one of the creditors from whom money had been borrowed for raising the sum of Rs. 50,000 which formed the basis of the plaintiff's present claim. But seeing that the plaintiff's claim in this suit arises by reason of his having been compelled to borrow money and pay off the debt due, not only from himself, but also from the defendant, and seeing also that the interest which the plaintiff would be entitled to recover from the defendant would be the interest that he had to pay on the sums borrowed by him, the payment of any interest on account of the sums borrowed by him would in reality be payment of interest on account of his claim.

Under none of the bonds executed by the plaintiff could the defendant have been rendered liable directly, and payment by her of interest to the creditors of the plaintiff must be regarded as payment by her of interest to the plaintiff indirectly, through his creditors. That being so, we think the payment of interest in question is sufficient to save the claim from being barred by limitation.

"The decision of the learned Subordinate Judge in this case, that the suit is barred by limitation, must therefore be set aside; and as the Court below has not gone into the merits of the case the case must be remanded to that Court for trial on the merits."

On this appeal,—

Mr. J. M. Paterson, for the appellant, argued that the dismissal of the suit by the Subordinate Judge was right under article 61 of Schedule II of the Act of 1877. The principal contention was: first, that the High Court had been in error in deciding that the petition of the 21st July 1887 was an acknowledgment by the defendant within section 19, giving a fresh start to the three years' period of limitation. In that petition there was authority to the Manager, to be appointed, to apply surplus income "to the payment of the ijmali debts" of the three co-owners, with a schedule appended. But, though the [849] petition may have admitted the debt to the creditors, it contained no admission by the appellant that she owed her proportionate part to Ishan Chunder. It was a question whether his claim could be brought into this acknowledgment, as contained, or implied in it, or could be taken as referred to, without supplementing the writing by oral evidence as to the transaction. But it was clear that oral evidence for that purpose was inadmissible, as shown by the decision in Lutchumanan Chetty v. Mutta Ibraki Marakkayer, (1869) 5 Mad. H. C., 90.

Section 19 of the Act of 1877 intended an acknowledgment of an existing liability, or legal relation, to a certain person. A mere admission of indebtedness, that might not include the debt to the party suing to recover it, was insufficient. That section did not give its effect to an admission made without knowledge, and without specification, of what particular debt was admitted. And, to constitute an acknowledgment operating within the Act, the liability must be acknowledged as incurred to the person claiming. Reference was made to Dharma Vithal v. Govind Sadvalkar, (1883) I. L. R., 8 Bom., 99; Mylapore Iyasawmy Vyapoory Moodliar v. Yeokay, (1887) I. L. R., 14 Cal., 801, and Venkata v. Partha Saradhi, (1892) I. L. R., 16 Mad., 220.

The petition of 1887 was only an admission of liability to the creditors, without specifying a debt to Ishan Chunder; and, therefore, it gave no new starting point for limitation in this case:

Secondly, the payment of interest, Rs. 200 on the 26th July 1888 to the Tippera Loan Office, was not a payment of "interest on a debt as such," to the respondent, within section 20 of the Act of 1877. The authority to the Manager was to pay interest on debts due to the creditors named in the schedule: Mahalakshmibai v. Nageshwar Parshotam, (1885) I. L. R., 10 Bom., 71, showed that entry in the debtor's books was insufficient. Ichha Dhanji v. Natha, (1888) I. L. R., 13 Bom., 338, and Kollipara Pullamma v. Maddula Tatayya, (1896) I. L. R., 19 Mad., 340, were also cited. Even if this [850] payment of interest had been effective within the Act it could only be so as to the Rs. 5,000, the debt to the Bank that lent it; and it could not be taken to be a payment of interest on the one-third of Rs. 50,000, that one-third being the proportionate part owed by Sukhamoni. There was no evidence of appropriation of this payment by the debtor in respect of all the debts referred to in the petition.

Mr. J. H. A. Branson, for the respondent, mainly relied on the effect of the payment of interest on the 26th July 1888 by the appellant's authorized agent, the Manager, as giving a new starting point for limitation. That payment of interest had been made before the expiration of the period of three years then current in consequence of the filing of the petition of the 22nd July 1887. The High Court were correct in holding the suit on the 24th February 1891 to have been in time.

Mr. J. M. Paterson, in reply, referred to Sunkur Pershad v. Goury Pershad, (1880) I. L. R., 5 Cal., 321, as to liability in a joint family, for the debt of a managing member, barred by the Limitation Act IX of 1871; and to Raman Lalji Maharaj v. Gopal Lalji Maharaj, (1897) I. L. R., 19 All., 244, as to the application of article 61 of Schedule II of Act XV of 1877, to a suit for contribution.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered on the 1st April 1898 by Lord Hobhouse.—The appellant and respondent are two co-owners of lands subject to payment of rent. The owner of the rent obtained decrees for a large sum in arrear, and to save the estate from sale the respondent and another co-owner raised a sum of Rs. 50,000 by borrowing from various persons. That sum was deposited in Court, and on the 1st April 1885 was paid to the judgment-creditor. The respondent is plaintiff in the present suit and is suing the appellant for contribution to the extent of her share in the estate. The only question before their Lordships is whether or no his suit is barred by lapse of time.

The cause of action arose on the 1st April 1885. The suit was brought in February 1891 If the limit of time is three [851] years it would be barred in April 1888 unless saved by acknowledgment or payment. Both Courts below have considered that the case falls within article 61 of Act XV of 1877, and the argument here has proceeded on that footing. Without further examining the point their Lordships will take it, in the defendant's favour, that the limit of time is three years.

It is not necessary to discuss more than two of the transactions between the parties. In July 1887 the co-owners, three in number, presented a petition to the District Judge of Tippora, which was in effect an appointment of one Bhipro as Manager for (among other things) the protection of their ijmali (joint) property by the payment of their debts. One of the directions given to him was to apply surplus income "to the payment of the ijmali debts of us three co-owners of which a list is given below." The list contained the names of twelve persons from whom the money used to pay the judgment-creditor was borrowed; the amount due to each being set opposite to his name, and the total brought to the amount of Rs. 56,750.

That is a distinct acknowledgment that the total of the debts comprised in the list is a joint debt. The Subordinate Judge held that the defendant did not thereby admit any liability to the plaintiff, nor promise to pay him anything. But it is not required that an acknowledgment within the statute shall specify every legal consequence of the thing acknowledged. The defendant acknowledged a joint debt. From that follow the legal incidents of her position as joint debtor with the plaintiff, one of which is that he may sue her for contribution.

This acknowledgment is still more than three years prior to the suit. To gain a later starting-point of time the plaintiff alleges payments, of which it is only necessary to examine one. On the 14th July 1888 Bhipro, the Manager, paid Rs. 200 for interest on one of the loans constituting the total joint debt,

This is proved by his deposition, and by regular entries in his books and by endorsements on the creditor's bond. The Subordinate Judge thought that the date of payment was not proved; but it is difficult to see how proof can be more clear or precise. Then he held that the payment was not made for interest on a debt due to [852] the plaintiff, but was made to a third party, a creditor of the plaintiff, and not by his request. Section 20 of the Limitation Act says that a new starting-point of time shall be gained when interest on a debt is paid as such by the person liable to pay the debt or by his agent. It does not specify any particular mode or form of payment, and there are many modes in which payment may be made. In this case the common agent of the joint debtors paid interest on the joint debt out of joint funds under express instructions contained in the instrument of his appointment. That is clearly a payment in exoneration pro tanto of the liability of the plaintiff, and such as is contemplated by section 20 of the Limitation Act.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit on the grounds above indicated. On appeal the High Court reversed his decree, and remanded the case to be tried. As their Lordships agree with the High Court they will humbly advise Her Majesty to dismiss this appeal. The appellant must pay the costs.

Appeal dismissed.

CRIMINAL REFERENCE.

The 20th June, 1898.

PRESENT:

SIR FRANCIS W. MACLEAN, K. C. I. E., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Queen-Empress
Pratap Chunder Ghose.*

Nuisance—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), section 144—Order regulating boat traffic at a landing place—High Court's power of Revision when order cannot be made under that section.

An order regulating the boat traffic at a certain landing place of a river in the manner directed by the order passed in this case held to be not an order that is authorised by section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

* Criminal Reference No. 144 of 1898, made by L. Palit, Esq., Sessions Judge of Jessore, dated the 10th of June 1898.

If the order be one that cannot be made under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the mere fact of the order purporting to have been [853] made under that section does not prevent the High Court from interfering with it in revision.

Abhayeswari Debi v. Sidheswari Debi, (1888) I.L.R., 16 Cal., 80, and Ananda Chundra Bhuttacharjee v. Stephen, (1891) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 127, followed.

THE District Magistrate of Jessore passed the following order purporting to be made under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882): "Whereas it appears from the report of the Civil Surgeon of Jessore that the crowding of boats in the river Kabadak opposite the town of Kotechandpur above the Fakirpur Ghat is dangerous to the health of the residents of the town, and should be stopped, with this exception, that three or four boats containing altogether not more than twenty-five men in them may be allowed to come up above the said Ghat to discharge their cargo for a period of three days at a time and then return to a place opposite to or not above the said Fakirpur Ghat: It is accordingly hereby ordered that all persons having charge of or any control over boats on the river Kabadak, which are now moored above the said Fakirpur Ghat, do within three days of receipt of this order remove their boats down the river to a place opposite to or not above the said Ghat, and that after such removal any three or four boats containing not more than twenty-five persons in all may be allowed to come up above the said Ghat at a time and stay for not more than three days, and then return being succeeded in turn by others to the same number for a similar period. In order to determine which boats should have preference for the three days stay above the said Ghat, and in what order they should go, it is further directed that a list of the boats affected by this order be sent to the Sub-divisional Officer of Jhenida, who will decide in what order they should go, taking all the circumstances of the case into consideration, and it is directed that, except in the order prescribed by the Sub-divisional Officer, no boats shall proceed above the said Ghat. This order is addressed to the crews, lessees, proprietors or any other persons having control over the movements of the said boats, and is passed under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It extends [854] to all boats not being mere dinghis, and will have effect for two months from the date of publication. The Fakirpur Ghat is the Ghat situated below Mr. Macleod's house and above the Solemanpur Ghat."

The petitioner, who is the owner of the Ghat mentioned in the above order, moved before the Sessions Judge of Jessore, praying for the setting aside of the order or for a reference to the High Court. The Sessions Judge referred the matter to the High Court under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882). The material portion of the letter of reference was as follows:—

"This is a matter in which the petitioner moves this Court to refer an order under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code made by the District Magistrate of Jessore, with the recommendation that the order in question be set aside on grounds which amount to the general contention that the order was made illegally and without jurisdiction.

"The order complained of begins as follows: 'Whereas it appears from the report of the Civil Surgeon of Jessore that the crowding of boats in the river Kabadak opposite the town of Kotechandpur above the Fakirpur Ghat is dangerous to the health of the residents of the town.' This is all that is contained in the order regarding the necessity for making such an order. The petitioner has not been supplied with a copy of the report of the Civil Surgeon referred to in the order. Now according to the provisions of paragraph 2 of section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure the Magistrate making an order under that section is required to state therein the material facts of the case. The Magistrate in this case does not appear to me to have in any way complied with that requirement. The grounds on which danger to the health of the town was apprehended, the nature of the danger etc., are not at all mentioned. The Civil Surgeon's report on which the order has been based should, I think, have been annexed as a part of the order.

"The next point is that the order was passed ex parte Paragraph 3 of section 144 provides that, in cases of emergency, or in cases where the circumstances do not admit of the serving in due time of a notice, the order may be passed ex parte. No doubt the order was directed to boatmen generally; and it may be argued that, that being so, the circumstances did not admit of a notice being served. But it is quite clear that the petitioner was a person who would be very greatly affected by the order, and as it cannot be said to have been a case of emergency; a notice should, I think, have been served upon him, in order that he might appear and show cause why the order should not be made.

[856] The most important and vital point in the case, however, is that the order itself is of a nature not justified by the provisions of section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The heading of the Chapter, which consists only of this section, shows the nature of this provision of the law as contemplated by the Legislature. The heading is "Temporary orders in urgent cases of nuisance," and the first paragraph which sets forth the circumstances which would justify an order under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code uses the phrase, 'In cases . . . . where immediate prevention or speedy remedy is desirable.' Thus it is clear that the section is intended only to apply to urgent cases of nuisance where immediate prevention or speedy remedy is desirable, and where a temporary order would meet the requirements of the case. Now, in the present case, the Magistrate appeared to have been of opinion that the health of the town was likely to be endangered by the crowding of boats opposite the town of Kotechandpur. And he accordingly passed this order regulating the number of boats which were to be allowed to proceed to the place and the length of time they were to be allowed to stay. I do not see how an order of this nature can be said to be one passed to provide for an urgent case of nuisance in which immediate prevention or speedy remedy is desirable. The question of providing for the general health of a town by regulating the boat traffic is not a question which can in any way be considered one concerning an 'urgent case of nuisance' making 'immediate prevention or speedy remedy desirable.' It is not a question of the kind intended to be dealt with by an order under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code. I say nothing as to the wisdom of passing such an order affecting the trade of a whole locality. I say nothing as to the propriety of seeking to secure better health for a town by passing such an order (which, it must be remembered, can only be in force for two months), and as to other and better methods being applicable. I say nothing as to these questions because it appears to me that the Legislature never intended section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code for such a purpose and it is on this ground, along with the other grounds mentioned by me, that I would refer the case to the High Court. The order itself as to only '3 or 4 boats containing altogether not more than 25 men in them' being allowed to come up above the said Ghat to discharge their cargo 'for a period of three days at a time' seems to be so worded that difficulty might well be felt in obeying it. It presupposes that every boat that comes up must acquaint itself with the number of boats already at the Ghat and with the number of men these boats contain. I need not, however, go on to criticise the mode in which the order has been framed. The order itself appears to me to be illegal and ultra vires on the grounds (1) that the order does not state the material facts of the case justifying the order; (2) that it was passed ex parte when circumstances did not justify the passing of such an order without notice being served and (3) that the order is of a nature not justified by the provisions of section 144 of the Criminal [856] Procedure Code. On these grounds I refer the matter to the High Court and recommend that the order be set aside."

No one appeared in support of the reference.

The judgment of the High Court (Maclean, C.J., and Banerjee, J.) is as follows:—

We agree with the learned Sessions Judge in thinking that an order like the one made in this case regulating the boat traffic at a certain landing place, in the manner directed by the order, is not an order that is authorized by section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The very terms of the order go to show that it is not one directing "any person to abstain from a certain act or to take certain order with certain property in his possession or under his management" within the meaning of the section. That being so, the order is not authorised by the provisions of the law under which it purports to have been made, and there is no other law that we are aware of, under which the Magistrate could make such an order, nor does the mere fact of the order purporting to be made under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code prevent this Court from interfering with it in revision, if the order is one that cannot be made under that section. The view we take is amply supported by the cases of Abhayeswari Debi v. Sidheswari Debi, (1888) I. L. R., 16 Cal., 80, and Ananda Chundra Bhuttacharjee v. Stephen, (1891) I.L.R., 16 Cal. 127.

We, therefore, set aside the order complained of as not authorized by law.

TESTAMENTARY JURISDICTION.

The 17th and 28th February, 1898.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE SALE.

In the goods of W. H. Collett, Deceased.

Practice—Official Trustee, Appointment of—Official Trustees' Act (XVII of 1864) section 10—Consent of Beneficiaries—Evidence Act (I of 1872), section 85—Affidavit, Sufficiency of.

On an application under section 10 of the Official Trustees ' Act (XVII of 1864), where the petition was not signed by one of the beneficiaries, the [857] Court held upon other evidence, that such beneficiary was desirous of having the Official Trustee appointed as trustee of the will.

THIS was an application for the discharge of Samuel Cramer, the sole surviving trustee of the will of William Henry Collett, deceased ; and for the appointment in his stead of the Official Trustee under section 10 of the 'Official Trustees' Act (XVII of 1864).

The petition was signed by Samuel Cramer, by the Official Trustee, and by all the beneficiaries except A. S. Collett, who was resident in London. He, however, signed two documents, one an informal agreement to the appointment, the other a power of attorney. The power was not sufficiently proved, nor authenticated in the manner contemplated by section 85 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872), but was attested only in the presence of a solicitor.

Mr. Caspersz, who appeared for the petitioners, submitted that there was here sufficient evidence that all the persons beneficially interested were desirous of having the Official Trustee appointed.

Sale, J.—I think it would be desirable to strike out the name of A. S. Collett. I do not think notice to him is necessary, inasmuch as he is shown to have knowledge of the application and to have approved of it, but there must be an affidavit showing that he is absent in England.

Mr. Caspersz states that he will file an affidavit to that effect, and have the name of the person referred to struck out from the petition, and that he would mention the matter again upon the affidavit being ready.

[Mr. Caspersz subsequently mentioned the matter, and put in the affidavit required, with the original agreement and an office copy of the power of attorney annexed. Upon that his Lordship made the order prayed for.]

[858] CRIMINAL REVISION.

PRESENT:

SIR FRANCIS W. MACLEAN, K. C. I. E., CHIEF JUSTICE AND MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Jurisdiction of Criminal Court—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), section 182—Local area—Uncertainty as to the situation of the scene of offence—Marginal notes to sections of Act.

When there is an uncertainty as to whether a particular spot where an offence has been committed is situated within one district or another the case is governed by section 182 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), and the offence is triable in the Court of either district. The expression "local area" includes, and was intended to include, a "district."

THE facts of the case appear fully from the judgment of BANERJEE, J.:—

Babu Umakali Mukerji on behalf of the Petitioners.

Mr. Jackson and Babu Dwarka Nath Mitter on behalf of the Opposite Party.

* Criminal Revision No. 400 of 1898, against the order passed by G. W. Place, Esq., Sessions Judge of Sarun, dated 23rd of April 1898.

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and BANERJEE, J.) :—

Maclean, C.J.—This rule raises a short but somewhat interesting point. The question is, whether the Diara known as the Mutier Diara lies in the Balia or Sarun district. That depends upon what the boundary line of these two districts is. Now, we find that by a notification of the Government of India, dated the 5th of December 1888, it was declared: "That the deep stream of the Gogra is the boundary between the Balia district in the North-Western Provinces and the Sarun district in Bengal, up to the point where the boundary line between mouzah Ibrahimabad Nanhara in Balia, and mouzah Shitab Diara in Bengal, meets that river."

[859] The Sessions Judge finds: "The Government have frequently notified that the deep stream of the Gogra is the boundary between the two districts. Now at present, and apparently for a year or two, Mutier Diara is an island with a deep stream north of it, and another south of it. This latter is both wide and deep, but the stream north is a trifle deeper and seems more like the main stream."

The contention of the learned Vakil for the petitioner is that, inasmuch as the stream to the north is the deeper of the two streams, that is the "deep stream" within the meaning of the notification of December 1888, in which case this island would be in the Balia and not in the Sarun district, and the Magistrate in the latter district would have no jurisdiction to entertain the complaint. But I think the "deep stream" spoken of in the notification of December 1888 must be the deep stream as it then existed, that is ten years ago. It is a matter of notoriety that the channels of Indian rivers change very materially, and often in a very short time. What was the deep stream in 1888 may not be the deep stream of 1897, and it is consequently difficult for us to say what really is the deep stream which forms the boundary between the two districts. There is an uncertainty in the matter, and if there is such uncertainty, what is the course to be pursued? In my judgment we can invoke the assistance of section 182 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which lays down: "When it is uncertain in which of several local areas an offence is committed it may be inquired into or tried by a Court having jurisdiction over any of such local areas."

I ought to have stated that the alleged offence took place in April 1897 and that processes were applied for on the following day in the Sarun district.

It is urged by the learned Vakil for the petitioner that the words "in which of several local areas" does not apply to any uncertainty as to the district, but uncertainty as to the particular spot upon which the alleged offence was committed. That would be a very narrow construction to put upon the section, and treats the term "local area" as synonymous with the term "spot." In my opinion the expression "local area" includes and was intended to include a "district," and this view is fortified by a [860] reference to the language of section 531 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

In my opinion then, there is, for the reasons I have stated, sufficient uncertainty as to which is the true boundary between these two districts, and there being that uncertainty, section 182 applies, and it is competent for the Court in the Sarun district to inquire into this matter.

I may make a passing allusion to an argument of the learned Vakil for the petitioner that we must read into section 182 the marginal note to that section: in other words, that we must construe the section with reference to the marginal note. I decline to accept that view. It has been decided in the English Courts, and I believe in this Court as well, that the marginal notes do not form part of the section, and cannot be referred to for the purpose of construing the section.

For these reasons I think that the Court in the Sarun district is competent to inquire into this matter, and the rule will accordingly be discharged.

Banerjee, J.—I am of the same opinion. We have been asked to set aside the order of the Court below directing that the case should be tried in the Sarun district in which it has been instituted, on the ground that upon the facts found by the learned Sessions Judge in his decision of the 23rd April last, it is the Court in the district of Balia, and not that in the Sarun district, that has jurisdiction to try this case under section 177 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

It is not disputed that the offence complained of, namely, that of rioting, is alleged to have been committed in an island chur called Mutier Diara, and that the island chur is situated in the River Gogra in that part of it which forms the boundary between the districts of Sarun and Balia, according to the notification of the Government of India.

That notification, which is dated some time in the year 1888, is to the effect that the deep stream of the River Gogra is the boundary between the Balia and Sarun districts; and the learned Sessions Judge has found that of the two streams of the [861] River Gogra, running north and south of chur Mutier Diara, the one on the north is a little deeper than that on the south. This would at first sight go to show that the Mutier Diara appertains to the district of Balia and not to that of Sarun. The learned Sessions Judge, however, is of opinion that in a matter like this, the question of convenience is to be taken into consideration, and upon that consideration he has hold that the Sarun Court has jurisdiction to try this case.

I am unable to accept this view of the matter as correct. But at the same time I do not think that the jurisdiction appertains to the district of Balia as contended for by the learned Vakil for the petitioner.

It is quite true that every offence, as provided by section 177 of the Criminal Procedure Code, shall ordinarily be inquired into and tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction it was committed. The offence here is alleged to have been committed in the island chur, Mutier Diara; and if that chur appertains to the district of Balia it is the Balia Court and not the Sarun Court which would be competent to try the case. But is it clear that Mutier Diara appertains to the district of Balia? It is at any rate open to doubt whether the notification of 5th December 1888 referred to above should bear the construction sought to put upon it by the learned Vakil for the petitioner, namely, that the deep stream of the Gogra, the position of which may shift from time to time, is the boundary between Balia and Sarun. The notification may well be understood to mean that the boundary between Balia and Sarun would be the deep stream, as it existed at the date of the notification, and that this would continue to be the boundary until the Government thought fit to alter it by a further notification. Moreover, it is doubtful whether the notification was intended to meet a contingency like the present where two streams, one to the north and the other to the south, are both deep, with this difference that one is a trifle deeper than the other, as the learned Sessions Judge has found. Again, it is not certain what the position of this boundary was in 1888 with reference to the chur Mutier. In other words, it is not clear whether the chur, accepting the boundary to be the deep [862] stream of the river, as it existed in 1888, fell on the Balia or the Sarun side of the boundary. Nor would the Sessions Judge's finding, even upon the view of the notification which the learned Vakil for the petitioner asks us to adopt, be enough to remove the uncertainty, for although the stream on the north may be the deeper of the two on the 23rd April 1898, or the time when the investigation was made, still that would not go to show which of the two streams was the deeper one in April 1897, the time when the alleged offence was committed.

Therefore in any view of the case the uncertainty remains as to whether this chur appertains to Balia or Sarun. That being so, the question is how is jurisdiction to be determined in a matter like this? I am of opinion that the question is answered by section 182 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which says: "When it is uncertain in which of several local areas an offence is committed, it may be inquired into or tried by a Court having jurisdiction over any of such local areas."

The learned Vakil for the petitioner contends that this section cannot apply to a case like the present, because the expression "local area" is not equivalent to "district," and there is no uncertainty here as to the spot in which the offence was committed, the uncertainty being as to the district in which the case should be tried. In other words, the learned Vakil's contention is that "local area" in section 182 means a spot and not a district or province. He may be right so far that the expression "local area" may comprehend not only a district or province, but also a spot; but his contention is not right so far as it seeks to restrict the expression "local area" to the spot where the offence was committed. And that his contention is not right is evident from section 531, that section clearly showing that a Sessions Division, District, or Sub-Division is, within the meaning of the Act, intended to be included in the term "local area."

Lastly, it was contended that the marginal note to section 182 would militate against the view we take. The answer to that is that the marginal note is no part of the Act, as has been pointed out in Sutton v. Sutton, (1882) L. R., 22 Ch. D., 511, and Dukhi Mullah v. Halway, (1895) I. L. R., 23 Cal., 55. I, [863] therefore, hold that as there is an uncertainty in the matter, the case is governed by section 182, and the offence is, therefore, triable in the Court having jurisdiction either over Sarun or over Balia.

The result is that as the Sarun Court has jurisdiction, this case will be tried there, and the rule will be discharged.

Witness—Right of accused to have witnesses re-summoned and re-heard—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), section 350 (a), section 357—Commencement of proceedings—Interlocutory orders—Trial, Meaning of—Right to have witnesses summoned and re-heard—Irregularity—Refusal to re-call witnesses.

An accused person does not lose the right of having the witnesses re-summoned and re-heard under proviso (a), section 350, of the Criminal Procedure Code, because an interlocutory application for enforcing the attendance of certain witnesses has been made and granted not at the trial but before the trial and with a view to the trial. The proper time for making such application is when the trial commences before the Magistrate.

The expression "trial" means the proceeding which commences when the case is called on with the Magistrate on the Bench, the accused in the dock, and the representatives of the prosecutions and for the defence, if the accused be defended, present in Court, for the hearing of the case.

Section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code cannot cure the defect in the proceedings by reason of the Magistrate's refusal to re-summon and re-hear the witnesses in contravention of proviso (a), section 350.

THE facts of the case are fully set forth in the judgments.

Mr. P. L. Roy and Babu Issur Chunder Chakravarti for the Petitioners.

The Advocate-General (Sir Charles Paul) and Babu Baikunto Nath Das for the Crown.

[864] The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J. and BANERJEE, J.).

Maclean, C. J.—It is only necessary to refer to one or two facts in the history of this case. The petitioners were convicted of rioting on the 15th of March 1897, from which conviction they appealed to the Sessions Judge, who upheld the conviction. An application was then made to this Court to have the conviction set aside, upon the ground, to put it shortly, that the Magistrate had not exercised a proper judicial discretion, in refusing to allow certain witnesses, whom the accused desired to call, to be called.

That application was successful, and on the 5th July 1897, this Court made the rule absolute, and to quote the language of the Judges, they "set aside the conviction and sentence and sent the case back for re-trial, the Magistrate commencing the investigation from the point at which it was left on the 15th March before he delivered judgment."

It is obvious that the Judges of this Court were under the impression that the same Magistrate would continue to hear the case. It appears, however, that that Magistrate had left the District, and another Magistrate had taken his place. The observations of the Judges of this Court, as to the Magistrate taking up the case where he had left it could not apply, and I am satisfied, were not intended to apply, to the second Magistrate, who had not heard any portion of the evidence.

* Criminal Revision No. 239 of 1898, against the order passed by H. Maxwell, Esq., Officiating Sessions Judge of Assam Valley District, dated the 7th of February 1898, affirming the order passed by G. Balthasar, Esq., Assistant Commissioner of Goalparah, dated the 15th of November 1897.

Then what occurred was this: I ought to mention that during this time the accused were out on bail. On the 6th August 1897 a mukhtear, purporting to appear for the accused, and I will assume, though the accused swear the contrary, that he had authority from them so to do, applied to the second Magistrate that certain processes for the attendance of witnesses for the accused might issue, and on the 9th of the same month, apparently upon the application of the same mukhtear, an order, as appears from the order sheet, was passed directing that warrants should issue against the witnesses named. On the 27th August, which was the first day upon which the accused were ordered to attend to be tried, the case was called on, and the [865] accused at once demanded that the witnesses who had been previously examined before the other Magistrate should be re-summoned and re-heard. The second Magistrate had not heard any of this evidence. The Magistrate refused that application upon the ground that the accused were too late in making it. His view, as I understand it, was that he had commenced his proceedings in the trial when he acceded to the applications of the 6th and 9th August, and that the demand by the accused can only be made when he commences his proceedings in the trial. To my mind this view is not well founded, and is calculated to materially prejudice the accused. The question turns upon the construction of proviso (a) to section 350 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, as to which I cannot think there can be any reasonable doubt. That proviso is in the following terms: "In any trial the accused may, when the second Magistrate commences his proceedings, demand that the witnesses or any of them be re-summoned and re-heard." It will be noticed that the primary, and, in one sense, the governing words of the proviso are, "in any trial," and, in my opinion, when the proviso speaks of the second Magistrate commencing his proceedings it must mean his proceedings upon that "trial." Now what is the "trial"? The "trial" to my thinking means the proceeding which commences when the case is called on, with the Magistrate on the Bench, the accused in the dock, and the representatives of the prosecution, and for the defence if the accused be defended, are present in Court for the hearing of the case. That is, I consider, the proceeding which is intended by the term "trial," and in my opinion the proper time for the accused to ask for the re-summoning and re-hearing of the witnesses is as soon as that trial commences before the Magistrate, and that he is entitled to make the demand at that time. The view placed upon the proviso by the Magistrate is far too narrow, for it means that the accused has lost the right given him by the proviso because an interlocutory application, as in this case, for enforcing the attendance of certain witnesses may have been previously granted by the Magistrate. This interlocutory order was not made at the trial, but before the trial, and with a view to the trial. In his explanation the Magistrate appears to attach but little importance to seeing the witnesses, but this would scarcely [866] appear to be a view shared by the Legislature, which, in the interests of the accused, has passed the proviso in question. As a general rule I think the second Magistrate taking up the case would be well advised to hear the whole case de novo. I may add, though in the view I take it is not necessary to decide it, that I am by no means satisfied that under the circumstances we could not have interfered under proviso (b) to section 350. It is unfortunate that both the Magistrates in this case should have miscarried in their procedure, as there must be a retrial, virtually a third trial, and after the lapse of time since the occurrence, if an offence have been committed, as to which I express no opinion, the difficulty of proving the case may be increased. The rule must be made absolute, and as I understand the second Magistrate has now left the district, the case must be retried before the Magistrate who has taken his place.

Banerjee, J.—I am of the same opinion. We are asked to set aside the conviction and sentence in this case on the ground that the Magistrate has acted in contravention of section 350 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in deciding this case upon evidence recorded by his predecessor and in disallowing the application of the petitioners for the re-summoning and re-hearing of the witnesses. The ground upon which the Magistrate appears to have disallowed that application was that it was not made when he commenced the proceedings within the meaning of proviso (a) of section 350, but was made at the third hearing of the case before him. Now this is how the facts stand: The accused, the petitioner before us, who had been originally convicted, having moved this Court, this Court set aside the conviction and sentence and sent the case back for retrial.

The first order that was recorded after the remand was dated the 6th August, and was an order recorded before the accused had appeared in Court. It was recorded in the presence of the gentleman who had acted as their mukhtear at the previous trial, and directed the mukhtear to put in a list of witnesses against whom he wanted processes to issue.

The second order, which was recorded on the 9th August, [867] was simply to this effect that warrants should issue against the witnesses named. And it was not until the day on which the third order was recorded, namely, the 27th August, that the accused appeared before the Magistrate; and on the same day they made an application under section 350 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for the re-summoning and re-hearing of the witnesses who had been examined for the prosecution at the previous trial; and the question is whether it can be said that the proceedings after remand, that is, the proceedings before the Magistrate, who subsequently took up the case, commenced before the 27th August.

I am clearly of opinion that the question must be answered in the negative. For, although two orders were recorded previous to the 27th August, there is nothing to show that the accused had notice to appear before that day.

I may here observe that the procedure ordinarily observed, and the procedure which ought to be observed, when a case is remanded by a superior Court, should be for the inferior Court to make a preliminary order calling upon the parties to appear on a certain day on which the proceedings should commence. This does not appear to have been done here.

In all probability what was done was to send for the person who had acted as the mukhtear of the accused, and to call upon him to put in his list of witnesses, as the order of the 6th August would go to show.

The petitioners in their affidavit deny that this mukhtear had any instructions from them before they had entered appearance, and there is nothing to show that the mukhtear had any instructions from them previous to that.

That being so, as has been very fully and clearly shown by the learned Chief Justice, the retrial could not be held to have commenced before the 27th, which was the first day when the accused entered appearance after remand; and if the retrial had not commenced, it could not be said that the proceedings of the Magistrate had commenced before that day.

I am, therefore, clearly of opinion that the Magistrate acted in contravention of the provisions of section 350 in refusing the [868] application of the petitioner for the re-summoning and re hearing of the witnesses.

A point was discussed as to whether section 537 of the Code may not have the effect of curing the defect in the proceedings by reason of the Magistrate's refusal to re-summon and re-hear the witnesses. I am of opinion that that section cannot cure the defect. For it is of the utmost importance that the first Court that has to try a case should have an opportunity of observing the manner and demeanour of the witnesses in order that it may form a correct estimate of their evidence.

The only exception that the Code of Criminal Procedure contemplates is that referred to in section 360. That provision is made evidently to meet the exigencies of the public service; but even that section provides that where the accused demands that the witnesses should be re-summoned and re-heard by a succeeding Magistrate, who takes up a case before it is finished, the demand should be complied with. A trial held by a Magistrate presiding in the Court of First Instance upon evidence not recorded by him, and upon evidence given by witnesses, whose manner and demeanour he had not the advantage of observing, must ordinarily be considered to be a trial held not according to law, and without one of the most important guarantees for a correct decision; and if that is so, we must say that there has been a failure of justice. Section 537 therefore cannot cure the defect in this case.

Before concluding I wish to make one observation with reference to what has been said by the Magistrate in his explanation, namely, that where an occurrence has taken place many months before a witness gives his evidence, the advantage of observing his demeanour is not of much value.

I do not think that the question of time has anything to do with the matter. The advantage to be derived from observing the demeanour of witnesses is one that ought never to be undervalued.

The conviction and sentences will be quashed, and there must be a fresh trial before another Magistrate.

[869] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 27th April, 1898.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE TREVELYAN AND MR. JUSTICE STEVENS.

Kuldip Sing and another............Plaintiffs

Khetrani Koer, 1st Party, Defendant, and L. MacDonald and another, 2nd Party............Defendants.*

Contract—Hindu Widow—Reversioners—Settlement of Dispute—Ikrarnamah—Condition in restraint of lease—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sections 10 and 15.

In an ikrarnamah executed by a Hindu widow on the one side, and her husband's cousins on the other, in settlement of disputes regarding her husband's estate, one of the conditions agreed upon was that if either of the parties should want to execute a lease jointly or individually, "it would be executed and delivered by mutual consultation of both the parties," and if "the document be not signed and consented to by both the parties, it shall be null and void." In a suit brought on the basis of the ikrarnamah to set aside a lease granted by the widow.

Held, there is nothing in any statute law which renders such a provision inoperative; neither sections 10 and 15 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) nor any principle underlying them is applicable to it; it is not an unreasonable provision; there was no absence of equity in the arrangement, and effect should be given to it.

THE defendant, first party, Mussummat Khetrani Koer, was the widow of one Udit Narain Singh, who was great-grandson of Teka Singh, while the plaintiffs were the grandsons of the same person, Udit as well as the plaintiffs being descended in the male line. The question in this appeal was whether a lease granted by the widow to the defendants, second party, in respect of the shares left by Udit, for a term of years, was invalid by reason of a certain condition in an ikrarnamah executed by the plaintiffs and the widow in settlement of a dispute regarding Udit's property. The facts and the conditions of the ikrarnamah on [870] which the plaintiffs based their claim are sufficiently stated in the judgment of the High Court.

The lower Court held that the condition which imposed restriction upon the widow was void and it therefore dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Babu Umakali Mukerjee and Babu Baldeo Narayan Singh for the Appellants.

Mr. Hyde, Mr. G. B. McNair and Mr. C. T. Geddes for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Trevelyan and Stevens, JJ.) was as follows:—

In this case we regret that we are unable to agree with the learned Subordinate Judge in the view he has taken.

The case is a simple one.

It is alleged in the plaint that there were three persons, Kuldip Singh, Pardip Singh and Udit Narain Singh, who formed a joint Hindu family. Udit

* Appeal from Original Decree No. 216 of 1896, against the decree of Babu Jaggaddurlabh Mozoomdar, Subordinate Judge of Tirhoot, dated the 1st of May 1896.

Narain Singh was a first cousin once removed of the others. On Udit Narain's death his interest passed to Kuldip Singh and Pardip Singh. As a matter of fact, Udit left a widow by name Khetrani Koer. Disputes arose between the plaintiffs, Kuldip and Pardip and Khetrani Koer, and those disputes were settled by an ikrarnamah. The ikrarnamah gives the lady possession for her life on account of her maintenance of her husband's share of the property, and there is a provision in it which has given rise to the present question. That provision is this: "If I (that is Khetrani Koer) take and execute any sort of document then it will be null and void. And be it known that if any party out of the two parties be under the necessity of executing a simple pattah, zarpeshgi pattah, mokarari and kashtkari, jointly or individually, then it would be executed and delivered by mutual consultation of both the parties, and if it be signed by both the parties, then it would be valid and trustworthy, and the document not signed and consented to by both parties shall be null and void." The lady executed a lease for eleven years in favour of the proprietors of the Dooria Indigo Concern. The plaintiffs claim that the execution of that lease is a breach [871] of this covenant, and that they are entitled to a declaration to that effect and to have the lease set aside. There were other questions raised, which have not been determined.

The learned Subordinate Judge has held that this covenant is invalid and has no operation. He has therefore dismissed the suit.

We are unable to follow the reasoning upon which he comes to that conclusion. Admittedly there is nothing in any statute law which renders such a provision inoperative. Sections 10 and 15 of the Transfer of Property Act have no application here; and we are unable to see any principle underlying those sections which can be applied to the present case, or that there was any sort of absence of equity in an arrangement of this kind. This was a settlement of a dispute, and effect should be given, as far as possible, to every portion of it. It is not at all an unreasonable provision that reversioners giving up their claim and allowing a Hindu widow to remain in possession of their property should wish to retain supervision over it and to prevent any acts on her part which might cause injury to their reversionary rights. A provision of this kind is not only not contrary to law, but is one which might reasonably be made in common prudence by reversioners. There being admittedly nothing in law to show that this covenant is illegal, effect must be given to it.

This does not dispose of the case. There are other questions. The case must, therefore, go back to the Subordinate Judge to have those questions determined, the decree of the lower Court being set aside. The respondents who appeared must pay the costs of the appeal.

The Court-fee on the Memorandum of Appeal will be refunded to the appellant under section 13 of the Court Fees Act.

Lala Kandha Pershad............Judgment-debtor

versus

Lala Lal Behary Lal... ....Decree-holder.*

Second appeal—Suit of the nature cognizable in Court of Small Causes—Execution of decree—Transfer of decree for Execution—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sections 223, 224, 228, 586.

A suit not exceeding Rs. 500 in value was brought in a Court exercising jurisdiction as a Court of Small Causes, and that Court passed a decree and transferred it for execution to the Munsif under sections 223 and 224 of the Civil Procedure Code: the Munsif passed an order in execution, and the order was confirmed in appeal.

Held, that the words "suit of the nature cognizable in Courts of Small Causes" in section 586 of the Code is equally applicable, whether the suit be brought in a Court of Small Causes or in any other Court, that section 586 controls section 228 in a case of this kind, and no second appeal would lie from the Munsif's order.

Harakh v. Ram Sarup, (1890) I. L. R., 12 All, 579, cited and approved.

THIS was an appeal from an order passed in execution of a decree for Rs. 365 payable by instalments, which was made by the Subordinate Judge of Arrah in the exercise of his jurisdiction for the trial of suits cognizable by a Small Cause Court, up to Rs. 500 in value. The decree was sent for execution under sections 223 and 224 of the Civil Procedure Code to the Munsif of Arrah before whom the judgment-debtor raised an objection on the ground of limitation. The objection was overruled by the Munsif as well as by the District Judge on appeal.

The judgment-debtor preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Dr. Asutosh Mukerjee for the Appellant.

Mr. C. Gregory for the Respondent.

Mr. C. Gregory on behalf of the respondent raised a preliminary objection on the ground that no second appeal lay in this case.

[873] The arguments on both sides appear from the judgment of the High Court (Trevelyan and Banerjee, JJ.) which was as follows —

The first question, which we have to determine, is whether a second appeal, that is an appeal to this Court, lies.

The suit was brought in a Small Cause Court. The decree was, under the provisions of section 224 of the Civil Procedure Code, sent for execution to the Court of the first Munsif of Arrah, and certain landed property has been attached by such Court.

The judgment-debtor objected to the decree being executed on the ground that the application for execution was barred by the law of limitation. The learned Munsif disallowed that objection. There was an appeal to the Judge, who has upheld the Munsif's decision. A second appeal has been preferred to this Court. The respondent has objected that no second appeal lies. We have to consider such objection. This question depends, in our opinion, entirely upon the construction which should be placed upon sections 228 and 586 of the Civil Procedure Code. The former section provides that where a decree is sent for execution by the Court which passed it to another Court, the orders of the latter Court shall be subject to the same rules in respect of appeal as if the decree had been passed by itself. Section 586 provides that no second appeal shall lie in any suit of the nature cognizable in Courts of Small Causes, when the amount or value of the subject-matter of the original suit does not exceed five hundred rupees.

* Appeal from Order No. 369 of 1897, against the order of F. H. Harding, Esq., District Judge of Shahabad, dated 23rd of September 1897, affirming the order of Babu Mohim Chandra Sarkar, Munsif of Arrah, dated the 22nd of May 1897.

It is quite clear to our minds that the construction of the words a "suit of the nature cognizable in Courts of Small Causes" does not depend upon the tribunal in which the suit is brought, and is equally applicable whether the suit be brought in a Court of Small Causes or in any other Court. It was contended that this expression only applied to cases where suits are brought in Courts other than Courts of Small Causes. The result of this construction would be that there would be no second appeal where the suit was brought in a Court other than a Small [874] Cause Court, and there would be a second appeal where it had been brought in a Small Cause Court. This would be anomalous.

The case comes within the plain words of the section; and in our opinion section 586 in a case of this kind controls section 228. There is express authority on this question, Harakh v. Ram Sarup, (1890) I. L. R., 12 All., 579. With that authority we agree and hold that no second appeal lies. It is therefore unnecessary to consider the other question in this case. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Preliminary objection allowed.

Gopi Nath Chobey v. Bhugwat Pershad, (1884) I. L. R., 10 Cal., 697, distinguished.

THE facts of the case appear sufficiently from the judgment of the High Court

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose and Babu Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty for the Appellant.

Mr. Hill and Babu Jogesh Chunder Roy for the Respondents.

[875] The judgment of the High Court (Prinsep and Stevens, JJ.) was as follows:—

Chunder Nath Dey Sarkar, defendant No. 1, and Puddo Lochan Dey Sarkar, the deceased husband of defendant No. 2, mortgaged certain properties to Harish Chunder Shaha, who obtained an ex parte decree against them. In execution of that decree Sorosoti Dasi and Rutton Moni Dasi successfully objected to the sale of their shares in these properties, and accordingly their shares were exempted from sale, the sale being held of only the remaining shares. These ladies having died, their shares passed to the mortgagors as reversionary heirs, and on application made by the decree-holder these shares were sold in satisfaction of the balance of the mortgage debt An attempt to obtain possession through the Court failed, and proceedings under section 334 of the Code of Civil Procedure were instituted, but were afterwards withdrawn by the decree-holder purchaser, who subsequently sold to the plaintiff. The present suit has been brought by this purchaser to obtain possession as against the judgment-debtors and purchasers from them.

Of the several points raised at the hearing of this second appeal, the principal one relates to the finding of the District Judge, that the purchase by the plaintiff was a benami purchase for her husband, and next, to its effect.

The appellant's pleader contends that there is no evidence in support of the District Judge's finding that it was a benami transaction. We think, however, that facts disclosed by the evidence of the plaintiff's husband, as set out in the judgment of the District Judge, are in themselves sufficient to establish this.

It next becomes necessary to consider the right of the plaintiff as benamidar to sue to recover the lands purchased. As an authority against this we are referred to the case of Hari Gobind Adhikari v. Akhoy Kumar Mazumdar, (1889) I. L R., 16 Cal., 364, which has been followed in Issur Chundra Dutt v. Gopal Chundra Das, (1897) I. L. R., 25 Cal, 98, and we understand also in another case which has not been reported. These cases proceed on the practice of this Court in the cases [876] referred to in the case of Hari Gobind Adhikari v. Akhoy Kumar Mazumdar, (1889) I. L. R., 16 Cal., 364, and there are no cases in this Court to the contrary On the other hand, we observe that in Nand Kishore Lall v. Ahmad Ata, (1895) I. L. R., 18 All., 69, the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court have expressed a dissent.

We can see no reason to doubt the correctness of the law laid down by this Court on the cases mentioned.

In Gopi Nath Chobey v. Bhugwat Pershad, (1884) I L. R ,10 Cal., 697, the learned Judges have no doubt expressed themselves generally in favour of the right of the benamidar to sue, but that was not a suit in ejectment, so we do not feel pressed by it. In this view it is unnecessary to decide the other points raised in this appeal. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Jurisdiction of Civil Court—Sale for arrears of Revenue—Revenue Sale Act (XI of 1859), section 33—Sale for arrears not due—Suit to set aside sale—Appeal to Commissioner.

A suit may be brought in the Civil Court to set aside a sale held under Act XI of 1859, on the ground that no arrears were due, although such ground was not declared and specified in an appeal to the Commissioner as provided for in section 33 of Act XI of 1859.

Gobind Lal Roy v. Ramjanam Misser, (1893) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 70: L. R., 20 I. A., 165, distinguished and explained.

THE facts material to the report of this case and arguments on both sides appear in the judgment of the High Court.

The purchaser (defendant No. 1) appealed to the High Court.

[877] Dr. Rash Behary Ghose, Moulvie Mahomed Yusuf, Babu Karuna Sindhu Mukerjee, Babu Saligram Singh, and Babu Mahabir Singh, for the Appellant.

Babu Srinath Das, Dr. Asutosh Mukerjee, and Babu Ganendra Nath Bose for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Trevelyan and Banerjee, JJ.) was as follows:—

In this case the learned Subordinate Judge, from whose judgment the present appeal has been preferred, has set aside a sale purporting to be for arrears of Government revenue, on the ground that there were no arrears, and that, therefore, the Collector had no power to sell the property.

The first question which we have to determine is whether there were any arrears. If there were arrears, it would follow that the suit must fail. If there were no arrears, there remains the question whether, having regard to the fact that the absence of arrears was not declared and specified in an appeal to the Commissioner, the provisions of section 33 of the Revenue Sale Law do not bar this suit.

With regard to the first question, we had at first some little difficulty in understanding the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge, but when we come to examine the evidence, we see no reason to differ from the conclusion at which he has arrived. There was a butwara of this property, and after partition the revenue and instalments of revenue were fixed by the Commissioner of Revenue. These instalments are shewn in Exhibit 1, which is a copy of an extract from the revenue roll register. The kists are there specified; the first of these being for April, Rs. 33-2-0, the last of these being the kist of March Rs. 16-9-0. By section 2 of the Revenue Sale Law if the whole or any portion of a kist of any month of the era, according to which the settlement and kistbundi of any mehal have been regulated, be unpaid on the first of the following month of such era, the sum so remaining unpaid shall be considered an arrear of revenue. We must take it that this register proves that the kistbundi was regulated according to the Christian era, and therefore the [878] instalment for March did not become an arrear of revenue until the 1st of April.

Under section 3 of the Revenue Sale Law the Board of Revenue has to determine upon what dates all arrears of revenue shall be paid up, in default of which payment these estates shall be sold. The dates which have been fixed are admittedly the 28th of June, the 28th September, the 12th January and the 28th March. It would follow that as the March kist did not become in arrear until the 1st of April, the property could not be sold in respect of it unless default had continued until the 28th of June, which was the next fixed date after that instalment became in arrear.

The whole difficulty has here risen in consequence of the zemindari account register being kept with reference both to the Christian era and to the Fusli era, which is prevalent in the district. That register gives the kists of amounts corresponding to those described in the revenue roll register, but the months when these kists are payable are differently described.

An attempt was made by the learned Vakil for the appellant to induce us to assimilate the month in the two registers, the effect of which would be to compel us to alter the amounts payable in respect of each kist. The sum total would, of course, be the same.

It is perfectly obvious, from a comparison of the two registers to which we have referred, that the course adopted by the officer who computed the zemindari account register has been to call the April kist, the kist for March or Cheyt; the May kist, the kist for April or Bysack; the June kist, the kist for May or Jeyt; the October kist, the kist for September or Assin, the November kist, the kist for October or Kartick; the December kist, the kist for November or Aughran; the January kist, the kist for December or Pous; the February kist, the kist for January or Magh; and lastly the March kist, the kist for February or Falgoon.

The inconvenience of mixing up the two eras is obvious, and [879] its practical effect has been to anticipate the due date of the several kists.

The next document of importance is the memorandum of demands, which shows how the sum of Rs. 3-8-2, for the non-payment of which this property has been sold, has been arrived at. According to that document, that sum is the balance after crediting all sums paid up to and including the 28th of March 1894, and after debiting the kists due, up to and including the kist of Rs. 16-9 which is described in the zemindari account as the kist of February or Falgoon, but which is in reality, as we have pointed out, the kist for March. If this kist of Rs. 16-9, which was due in reality on the 1st of April, had been omitted from the account, there would have been a surplus instead of a deficit, and, therefore, we must hold that there were no arrears for which a sale could take place.

Our attention has been drawn to a decision of a Division Bench of this Court, in which we are told that the circumstances are similar; but the learned Judges arrived at a conclusion different to that at which we have arrived. We need hardly remark that a conclusion of fact in another case can be in no way a precedent, and can be of little, if any, help to us.

Having found as a fact that there were no arrears, we have still to consider the only remaining question, namely, whether, having regard to the fact that the absence of arrears was not declared as a ground of appeal to the Commissioner, the provisions of section 33 of the Revenue Sale Law bar this suit.

There is no doubt that this question was authoritatively determined by a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Baijnath Sahu v. Lala Sital Prasad, (1868) 2 B. L. R. (F. B.), 1; 10 W. R. (F. B.), 66, and has also been decided in several other cases.

It has, however, been argued that the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Gobind Lal Roy v. Ramjanam Misser, (1893) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 70; L. R., 20 I. A., 165, have expressed an opinion inconsistent with the decision of the Full Bench.

[880] In our opinion their Lordships did not express any intention of travelling beyond the points which arose in the particular case.

In that case there were arrears of revenue, and the sale was for such arrears, but it was held good in spite of an express prohibition in the Act.

The decision of their Lordships is to be found in the following words:—

"Giving, however, full weight to these considerations, their Lordships, having regard to the scheme of the Act and the express direction contained in section 33, are of opinion that in every case where a sale for arrears of revenue is impeached as being contrary to the provision of Act XI of 1859, no grounds of objection are open to the plaintiff which have not been declared and specified in an appeal to the Commissioner.

"In the opinion of their Lordships a sale is a sale made under the Act XI of 1859 within the meaning of that Act, when it is a sale for arrears of Government revenue held by the Collector or other officer authorized to hold sales under the Act, although it may be contrary to the provisions of the Act either by reason of some irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale, or in consequence of some express provision for exemption having been directly contravened."

If there were no arrears, this was not a sale for arrears of revenue, and there is nothing in the decision of the Privy Council which can be in point in this case.

We dismiss the appeal with costs. No reference was made at the hearing to the cross-objection.

S. C. C. Appeal dismissed.

PRESENT:

SIR FRANCIS W. MACLEAN, K. C. I. E., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON.

Mokoond Lal Singh............Petitioner

Nobodip Chunder Singha and another............Opposite-party.*

Guardian—Appointment of Guardian—Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), sections 9 and 17—Application by a Christian father to be appointed guardian of his Hindu minor son—Matters to be considered by the Court in appointing guardian.

A, who was originally a Hindu, but afterwards became a Christian and abandoned his family residence, applied to be the guardian of the person of his minor son. On the objections of the paternal and maternal uncles of the boy that, under the circumstances of the case, the father was not fit and proper person to be appointed the guardian of the minor.

Held, although the father is prima facie entitled to the custody of his infant child, he can be deprived of such parental right if the circumstances justify it; therefore in a case where a child who was brought up as a Hindu, and who expressed a desire to remain a Hindu, and was living with his Hindu relation, who was maintaining him and was looking after his education properly, it would not be to the welfare of the child that he should be handed over to the father and brought up in the Christian faith, and that the Court below, under the circumstances of the case, was right in dismissing the application.

THIS appeal arose out of an application made by one Mokoond Lal Singh, under section 9 of the Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), to be appointed the guardian of the person of his minor son, a boy of 12 or 13 years of age. The applicant, who was originally a Hindu, was converted to Christianity on the 23rd April 1893, when he abandoned his family residence and left his minor son in the custody of his grandfather, a Hindu; and since the latter's death, the boy was living with his maternal uncle. The application was opposed by the maternal uncle of the minor, as also by his paternal uncle. The District Judge of Nuddea, upon the evidence, having found that the welfare of the minor would not be promoted by making him over to the custody of his father, [882] dismissed the application. Against this judgment the applicant appealed to the High Court.

Dr. Ashutosh Mookerjee, Babu Hara Prosad Chatterjee, and Babu Gyanendra Nath Bose for the Appellant.

Babu Monmotha Nath Mitter for the Respondent.

Babu Hara Prosad Chatterjee, for the Appellant, contended that a Hindu father is not deprived of his right to the custody of his children, merely because he has been converted to Christianity. See the cases of Muchoo v. Arzoon Sahoo, (1866) 5 W.R., 235, and Skinner v. Orde, (1871) 14 Moore's I. A., 309: 10 B. L. R., 125. A Hindu is primâ facie entitled to the custody of his children as natural guardian in preference to other relations. See Mayne's Treatise on Hindu Law and Usage, 5th Edition, paragraphs 192 and 193. He also referred to section 17 of the Guardians and Wards Act, and argued that the words in clause (2) of the said section to the effect that, in considering what will be the welfare of the minor, the wishes, if any, of the deceased parent should be regarded, clearly show that the parent, if alive, would have a preferential right to the custody of his children.

* Appeal from order No. 236 of 1897, against the order of G. K. Deb, Esq., District Judge of Nuddea, dated the 3rd of April 1897.

Babu Monmotha Nath Mitter for the Respondent.—Under section 17 of the Guardians and Wards Act, in appointing a guardian the Court should be guided by what, consistently with the law to which the minor is subject, appears in the circumstances to be for the welfare of the minor. In this case it will not be to the welfare of the minor if he is made over to his Christian father. He referred to the following cases: In re Newton, L. R., (1896), Ch. D., Vol. I., 740; In re McGrath, L. R., (1893) Ch. D., Vol. I., 143; The Queen v. Gyngall, L. R., (1893), Q. B., Vol. II., 232; In re Joshy Assam, (1895) I. L. R., 23 Cal., 290; and In the matter of Saithri, (1891) I. L. R., 16 Bom., 307; and he also referred to the Treatise on Minority by Trevelyan, pages 78 and 236.

Dr. Ashutosh Mookerjee, in reply, referred to the following [883] cases: Kanahi Ram v. Biddya Ram, (1878) I. L. R., 1 All., 549; Queen v. Nesbit, (1843) Perry's O. C., 103; In re Himnauth Bose, (1863) 1 Hyde. 111; In re Agar-Ellis v. Lascelles, (1883) L. R., 24 Ch. D., 317 (328).

The judgment of the High Court (MACLEAN, C. J. and MACPHERSON, J.) was as follows:—

Maclean, C J.—This is an application by a father, originally of the Hindu persuasion, but now a Christian, to have himself appointed guardian of his infant son, a boy of about 12 years old. The real object of the application is to obtain the custody of the minor. There is virtually no dispute as to the facts. The father in April 1893 embraced Christianity, and then, if he did not actually abandon, at any rate left his child under the care and custody of his grandfather, who was a Hindu, and after his death he remained, as he still is, in the care of his uncle, who is also a Hindu. The boy, hitherto, has been brought up in the Hindu religion, surrounded by Hindu relations. There is no suggestion, least of all any well-founded suggestion, that the child is not being well cared for, or that he is unhappy. No considerations of that nature arise. The father is about 33 years old: he is not well off, his monthly income being some 15 rupees. He apparently lives at a Christian Mission House at Hooghly, and is paid his salary by the Mission. The mother of the child is dead, and the father has recently married a young Christian girl. A somewhat loose suggestion of immorality is made against the father, but I attach no importance to this. After he left his child, the father contributed nothing to his support, has attempted but once to see him; and, beyond that, has taken no notice of him whatsoever. The present application is dated the 9th July 1896. The circumstances of the boy's Hindu relations appear to be good. The District Judge of Nuddea refused the application: hence the present appeal.

I do not think there is any substantial difference in the law applicable to a case such as this, between the law of England and the law of India, except so far as the Guardians and Wards [884] Act (VIII of 1890) may create any difference. That Act is mainly, if not entirely, based upon the principles of English law. The English authorities establish that, even as against the primâ facie legal right of the father to the custody and control of the education of his child, the real object to be considered is the welfare of the child, and under section 17 of the Guardians and Wards Act the Court has to be guided by what, consistently with the law to which the minor is subject, appears under the circumstances to be for his welfare. The boy has been examined, and has expressed a preference to remain with his Hindu uncle, and to continue in the Hindu religion, and not to become a Christian; and though, having regard to his age, and to the possibility that this expression of his wishes may have been suggested to him by his Hindu relations, too much importance must not be attached to what he says, it is a feature in the case which ought not to be left entirely out of consideration. There is no doubt that under the Hindu law, as under the English, the father is primâ facie entitled to the custody and control of his infant child, and it is for those who maintain the contrary to show that, under the particular circumstances of the particular case, he ought to be deprived of such initial parental right. That he can and may be so deprived if the circumstances justify it, is well established by many cases in the English Courts, one of the most recent being that of In re Newton, L. R. (1896), Ch. D., Vol. I, 740, and also in the Indian Courts [see In the matter of Saithri, (1891) I. L. R., 16 Bom., 307, and the recent case in this Court before Mr. Justice SALE of In re Joshy Assam, (1895) I. L. R., 23 Cal., 290]. In the above case in the Bombay High Court, Mr. Justice BAYLEY very carefully reviewed all the authorities, English and Indian, upon the point.

There are some matters incident to this question, —and one can scarcely avoid, if not concluding, at any rate suspecting, that the real question in this litigation is as to whether this child is to be brought up as a Christian or as a Hindu,—which to my mind are fairly well established. The authorities appear to me to establish that primâ facie the father is entitled to say in what religion his [885] infant child should be brought up, but, at the same time, that, in a proper case, there is undoubted jurisdiction in the Court to disregard those wishes. But the circumstances must be at least unusual to justify the Court in so acting.

As was said by Lord Justice LINDLEY in the case of In re Newton, L. R. (1896), Ch. D., Vol. I., 740: "But as a legal proposition, it is clear that the Court has jurisdiction in a proper case to deprive a father of the custody of his children, and it also has jurisdiction to decline to change the religion in which the children have been brought up." Our attention has not been drawn to anything showing, nor has it been argued, that this statement of the law does not apply equally to a Hindu father and child as to an English father and child.

Then we have to consider what is really for the welfare of this minor, using the term 'welfare' in its widest sense, and looking, not only to the question of money and comfort, but to the moral and religious welfare of the child and to the ties of affection. I need scarcely point out, as has been stated by Judges in the Courts of England, that the Court, judicially administering the law, cannot say that one religion is better than another. As I have indicated above, the Guardians and Wards Act says, we must look to the welfare of the child. Those being the principles of law applicable to the present case, and bearing in mind those principles and the initial right of the father to the custody of his infant child and to control its religious education, we must consider whether it is for his welfare that the child should be handed over to the father, and brought up, as the father states is his intention, in the Christian faith. Looking to the fact that when the father embraced Christianity in 1893 he was of, and the child had been brought up in, the Hindu religion, that in 1893 he left the child with his own father who was a Hindu, that on the latter's death he tacitly permitted the child to be taken care of by his maternal uncle, who was also a Hindu, that since April 1893 he has not contributed anything towards his child's maintenance or education, that virtually he has not attempted to recover the custody of his child until he instituted these proceedings, and, practically, has only seen him once, to the fact that (as is sworn to by his brother [886] the witness Nabadwip Chunder Singh) he said "when he was going to become a Christian that he did not want his son, nor his father, nor his brother nor anybody" (a by-no-means improbable statement in his then mood), to the fact that the child, with the father's assent, has been brought up as a Hindu, that he (the child) respects the Hindu gods and goddesses, and that he has himself, a boy of 12 or 13 years old, expressed a preference not to become a Christian: looking, I say, to all the circumstances, not separately, but collectively, I am of opinion that the District Judge was justified in his conclusion that it was not for the child's welfare that he should be handed over to the costody of his father. In arriving at this conclusion, one must not lose sight of the circumstances that if the child become a Christian, he becomes an outcast from his old religion, and if when he attains his majority he desires to return to that religion and method of life, he will only, if at all, be able to do so upon performing strict and possibly costly expiatory ceremonials. For some years this child has been allowed by his father to remain with his Hindu relations, who are willing to educate and take care of him, and who have, in fact, maintained and educated him for some years at their own cost, and has been permitted by his father to be brought up according to the rites of the Hindu religion, the tenets of which, having regard to his age, are not improbably impressed to some extent upon his mind and understanding; and if now he be handed over to his father, such a course must necessarily result in breaking the ties of affection and destroying the associations connected with his life with his Hindu relations. I cannot bring my mind to think that this can really be for the child's welfare. Jealous as the Court is and ought to be in interfering with the legal right of the father as regards the custody and religious training of his child, I consider that, under the circumstances of this case, the father must be regarded as having abdicated his strict legal parental rights, and that it would be (as has been said by a most learned and distinguished Judge) a capricious, if not a cruel, resumption of his paternal authority, if he could now compel his child to be brought up henceforth as a Christian, which admittedly would be the result of handing over the child to the custody of his father. Look-[887]ing at all the circumstances of the case, I think the Court below was justified in its conclusion, and that this appeal must be dismissed. We, however, give no costs.

Macpherson, J.—I am entirely of the same opinion and have nothing to add to the judgment of the learned Chief Justice.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 4th April, 1898.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE JENKINS.

Khetter Kristo Mitter............Plaintiff

Kally Prosunno Ghose............Defendant.*

Costs—Attorney's lien for costs—General jurisdiction of Court over all suitors—Compromise by parties without knowledge of attorney—Lien, Notice of—Attorney and Client.

The decree obtained by the plaintiff in a suit was satisfied by defendant behind the back of the plaintiff's attorney, although he had notice of the lien for costs of the plaintiff's attorney. The plaintiff's attorney thereupon applied for an order upon the plaintiff and the defendant, or either of them, to pay his costs:

Held, that the High Court has general jurisdiction over its suitors; that although a defendant has the right to compromise with a plaintiff without the knowledge of the plaintiff's attorney, such compromise must be made with the honest intention of ending the litigation, and not with any design to deprive the attorney of his costs, and he cannot make a payment to the plaintiff under that compromise, if he has notice of the lien for the costs of the plaintiff's attorney.

THIS suit was instituted in 1887, the attorneys for the plaintiff at that time being Messrs. Gregory and Jones. Subsequently Babu Mohini Mohun Chatterji became the attorney, and at the plaintiff's request he paid a sum of Rs. 2,192-7-6 to the former attorneys in satisfaction of their bill of costs. On 9th September 1895 a decree was passed for Rs. 17,000, each party to bear his own costs. The costs up to and including the decree were taxed as between attorney and client, and Rs. 2,017-13-6 were allowed. Subsequent costs to the amount of Rs. 613 were further incurred. From time to time payments on account were made, leaving Rs. 914-4-9 [888] finally due from the plaintiff to Babu Mohini Mohan Chatterji. In execution of the above decree, certain immoveable property was attached and advertised to be sold on 10th March of this year. In the meantime the defendant, without the knowledge of the attorneys on either side, had settled with the plaintiff personally, and an application was made on behalf of the defendant for stay of the sale. That application was granted with the object of keeping matters in statu quo.

The compromise made no provision for payment of Babu Mohini Mohun Chatterji's costs, and the present application was, therefore, now made for an order upon the plaintiff and the defendant, or either of them, to pay to him Rs. 914-4-9, being the balance of his costs, and also his costs subsequent to the decree to be taxed, and in default that he be at liberty to proceed with the sale of the property attached or for such other order as to the Court may seem meet. It was admitted that Babu Mohini Mohun Chatterji had informed the defendant of his lien for costs.

Mr. Sinha for Babu Mohini Mohun Chatterji.—The authorities in England show that, although the parties are entitled to compromise, no payment can be made under it to the prejudice of the attorney's lien after notice of it has been given to the person by whom the payment is made, and the same rule applies here. In this case the defendant was informed of the lien for costs.

Mr. J. G. Woodroffe for the Defendant.—This Court has no jurisdiction brevi manu to make the order asked for. There is no such practice in these Courts. See Domun v. Emaum Ally, (1881) I. L. R., 7 Cal., 401, and Mahommed Zohuruddeen v. Mahomed Nooroodden, (1893) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 85. The notice of lien also must be of a more definite character than the notice given in this case: Price v. Crouch, (1891) 60 L. J. Q. B., 767. Further, inasmuch as part of the aggregate claim consists of costs paid to a prior attorney, no lien to that extent can be claimed: Christian v. Field, (1842) 2 Hare, 177.

[889] Jenkins, J.—This suit was commenced in 1887, the attorneys for the plaintiff being at that time Messrs. Gregory and Jones. Later on there was a change to Babu Mohini Mohun Chatterji, and on the occasion of that change he paid a sum of Rs. 2,192-7-6 to the former attorneys at the plaintiff's request. On the 9th September 1895 a decree was passed, and by it a sum of Rs. 17,000 became payable from the defendant to the plaintiff. Each party was to bear his own costs of the suit. The costs up to and including the decree have been taxed as between attorney and client, and Rs. 2,017-13-6 have been allowed on that taxation. Subsequent costs to the amount of Rs. 613 have also been incurred. From time to time payments on account have been made, which leave Rs. 914-4-9 still due from the plaintiff to Babu Mohini Mohun Chatterji on account of his costs, besides subsequent costs which are still untaxed.

In execution of the decree in the suit certain immoveable property was attached and advertised to be sold on the 10th March of this year.

In the meantime, however, the defendant had settled with the plaintiff personally without the intervention of the attorneys on either side, and an application was made on the 10th March for stay of the sale. That application was granted for the purpose of keeping matters solely in statu quo, and not so as to prejudice the rights which otherwise existed.

The compromise to which I have referred made no provision for payment of Babu Mohini Mohun Chatterji's costs, and he has accordingly made this present application that the plaintiff and the defendant, or either of them, be ordered to pay to him Rs. 914-4-9, being the balance of his costs, and also his costs subsequent to the decree to be taxed, and in default that he be at liberty to proceed with the sale of the property attached or for such other order as to the Court may seem meet.

This claim on the part of the applicant is based on the right commonly known as an attorney's lien on the fund recovered in suit. Whether that is the most appropriate mode of description it is unnecessary to discuss, for the nature of the right is free from doubt.

[890] It is a claim on the part of the attorney to have secured to him his due reward out of the fruit of his labour, and for that purpose to call in aid the equitable interference of the Court. But while the right is clear, it must be conceded that the litigants themselves are really masters of the suit, and that it is within their power to compromise it without the acquiescence or even the knowledge of their attorneys. The exercise of this right, however, is subject to important qualifications. In the first place the compromise must have been made with the honest intention of ending the litigation, and not with any design to deprive the attorney of his costs; and, secondly, no payment can be made under the compromise to the prejudice of the attorney's claim after notice of it has been given to the person by whom the payment is made.

These principles appear to me to be the clear result of the authorities in England; and founded, as they are, on justice, equity and good conscience, I see no reason why they should not apply in this country. Now the applicant on this occasion claims that both conditions to which I have referred exist, though it is clear it would suffice for his purpose, if he can establish either of them. The facts on which he relies as establishing his position by virtue of notice given are set forth in that part of his affidavit which commences with paragraph 6. He says: "I personally informed the defendant for whom I acted as attorney in a suit in this Honourable Court, being suit No. 770 of 1894, wherein Gooroo Prosunno Ghose was the plaintiff and the defendant herein was the defendant, of my said lien for costs, and at the time when I informed the defendant as aforesaid, Babu Prosunno Chunder Roy, a Vakil of this Honourable Court, who was instructing me on the defendant's behalf in the said suit, No. 770 of 1894, was present."

"That I have personally and repeatedly informed Babu Peari Mohun Chatterji, Dewan or Manager of the defendant's affairs, of my said lien."

The facts set forth in the paragraphs which I have just read are uncontradicted, and it is admitted on the part of the defendant that he had notice of the claim for a lien, so that the case would appear to come within the second of the qualifications I have mentioned.

[891] It has, however, been urged by Mr. Woodroffe, who has argued the case very fully and ably for the defendant, that it is not open to me to make the order asked for, and he has urged several objections. The principal objection is one which goes to the root of the whole matter, and I will, therefore, deal with it first. He contends that the Court has no jurisdiction brevi manu to make such an order as is asked for, and in support of the objection he refers to the absence of any practice justifying such a procedure as is sought to be used on this occasion. In addition he has referred to two cases: one the case of Domun v. Emaum Ally, (1881) I. L. R., 7 Cal., 401; and the other the case of Mahommed Zohuruddeen v. Mahommed Nooroodden, (1893) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 85.

The first of the two cases seems to me to have no application to the matter now under consideration. It simply refers to the question whether, on summary application, an order could be made directing a party to pay his attorney the costs of suit when taxed. It was held that such an order could not be made. That is a wholly different case from the present.

In the same way the case of Mahommed Zohuruddeen v. Mahommed Nooroodden, (1893) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 85, appears to me to throw no light on the point. The facts are shortly these: An attorney had by way of securing his costs taken a deposit of title deeds, and made a summary application in a suit to which he was no party to have that equitable lien enforced. It was held he should, if he desired to enforce his equitable lien, commence a suit of his own. I fail to see how a decision on those facts can in any way negative the applicant's right to proceed in the manner he has selected.

The present application appears to me to be based on the principle that the Court has general jurisdiction over its suitors, and I see no reason why that jurisdiction should not be as fully vested in a Court here as it is in the English Courts. I therefore think it is open to the Court to deal with this particular question on a summary application framed as the present is.

[892] The other objection raised by Mr. Woodroffe were not of so far-reaching a character. He referred to Price v. Crouch, (1891) 60 L. J., Q. B., 767, as authority for the proposition that notice of lien must be of a more definite character than the notice given in this case. I find nothing in the decision given in that case which calls for the conclusion that the notice given by the applicant in the present case was insufficient, for there it was simply held as a matter of fact that the notice was insufficient, because it was not in any sense a notice of lien, but merely of an expectation that provision would be made for costs.

In the present case the attorney has given, in the clearest terms that could have been used, notice that he did claim a lien for his costs of the suit.

Another point urged by Mr. Woodroffe was this: He contended that inasmuch as part of the aggregate claim consists of costs paid to a prior attorney, no lien to that extent can be claimed, and in support of that proposition he referred to the case of Christian v. Field, (1842) 2 Hare, 177. That case is not an authority for the broad proposition in support of which it was cited.

Be this however as it may, the state of facts on which the argument is based has no existence here, for I do not find that the unpaid balance of costs is in any way made up of the amount paid by Babu Mohini Mohun Chatterji to Messrs. Gregory and Jones. That amount was the earliest item in the account, and if Mr. Woodroffe's argument is correct, it is unsecured, and I certainly should presume that the payments already received were, under the circumstances, attributed in the first place to the discharge of that amount.

I have now dealt with all the points raised except that as to the proper form of the order. I hold in this case that sufficient notice of lien was given by the attorney, Babu Mohini Mohun Chatterji, to the defendant before payment was made by him under the compromise, and I, therefore, come to the conclusion that Babu Mohini Mohun Chatterji's present application is [893] rightly conceived. I may add, I think, it is very desirable in this country, both in the interests of attorneys and in the interests of litigants themselves that the Court should possess a power to interfere summarily, as has been done in this case.

I direct payment of the amount of costs, which have been taxed, and subsequent costs when they have been taxed, by the plaintiff and the defendant, including the costs of this application.

[Mr. Sinha asks that the application be certified for Counsel. The Court certifies for Counsel.]

MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE AND MR. JUSTICE JENKINS.

Costs—Application for stay of execution—Practice.

Where the defendants in an original suit applied to the Appellate Court for stay of execution of the decree pending the appeal:

Held, (BANERJEE, J., dissenting) that the applicant who asked for the indulgence must pay the costs of the application.

THIS was an application for stay of execution of the decree passed in this suit by Mr. Justice P. O'KINEALY sitting on the Original Side of the Court.

Mr. Allen for the Appellant.—Applications of this nature can be heard by the Judge sitting on the Original Side, and the practice of getting an Appellate Bench appointed for the purpose of hearing such applications is cumbrous and inconvenient. The Original Side has ample jurisdiction to deal with such applications—sections 239 and 545 of the Civil Procedure Code. The decisions of NORRIS, J, in Mahdab Kissen Sett v. Protap Chandra Ghose, [unrep. Suit No. 98 of 1888, 4th June 1883], and of HILL, J., in Courjon v. Leheraux, [unrep. Suit No. 267 of 1877, 10th May 1892] which have altered the earlier practice of the Court are incorrect. [BANERJEE, J.—Section 545 contemplates that the Appellate Court is the proper Court for such application after [894] appeal filed. MACLEAN, C J.—Section 545 does not seem in any way inconsistent with section 239 of the Civil Procedure Code, but as in my view the Appellate Court has jurisdiction and a Bench has been specially formed to hear this application the discussion is somewhat academical. Besides it has been the practice of late years to make such applications to the Appellate Court]

Mr. Chaudurı for the respondents opposed the application for stay of execution, and submitted that the respondents were entitled to the costs of and incidental to the application—Simpson v. Moore, (1898) 2 Cal., W. N. ccxxxi.

Mr. Allen in reply.—The defendant is successful in this application inasmuch as he has obtained an order staying execution, and the costs should abide the result.

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (MACLEAN C.J., and BANERJEE and JENKINS, JJ.):

Maclean, C.J.—The applicant must pay the costs of this application. He has come for an indulgence, and as he asks for an indulgence he ought to pay the costs of obtaining it.

That, in my view, is the principle which ought to apply generally to applications of this class, and that view is supported by the practice in the courts of England. . I think that should be the general rule; I do not say it is an inflexible rule. Any way under the circumstances of this case the applicant must pay the costs of the application.

Banerjee, J.—I agree in the order made as to costs, having regard to the special circumstances of this case, which are that the decree-holder was, in the first instance, unnecessarily made to appear before the Judge on the Original Side upon this application for stay of execution. That is a point upon which, speaking for myself, I must say that the judgment-debtor has not been able to satisfy me that he was right. But, as a matter of general principle, I am of opinion that the costs of an application like this ought to abide the ultimate result. I do not think that an application like this is an application for an indulgence; when the law allows an appeal, and furthermore when it allows an appellant, upon proper cause being shown, to ask for [896] and obtain an order for stay of execution, it cannot be said that he asks for what is merely an indulgence. And looking at the reason of the thing, it would seem to be something more than an indulgence, being in fact what is necessary to enable the appellant to secure the full benefit of his success in the appeal. For when the law allows an appeal, if the appeal succeeds, and if, in the meantime, the party successful in the Court of First Instance is able to enforce the decree of the first Court by the sale of any immoveable property of his judgment-debtor, the success of the appeal may not secure to the appellant all that he would be entitled to, as the reversal of a decree cannot affect the sale of any immoveable property held in execution thereof while it was in force.

That being so, I think that the applicant ought not to be made unconditionally liable for the costs, but that his liability should depend upon the result of the appeal.

There might be circumstances under which the costs of opposing an application like this should be made payable by the applicant independently of the result of the appeal. Thus, where the opposition has reference to the sufficiency of the security offered, and the security is found to be insufficient, so far as the costs may relate to the opposition to that extent, the applicant may justly be deemed liable for those costs independently of the result of the appeal; but he ought not to be made unconditionally liable for costs generally.

Jenkins, J.—I agree as to the incidence of the costs, and I come to that conclusion for the reasons stated by the Chief Justice. Section 220 of the Code of Civil Procedure no doubt says: "If the Court directs that the costs of any application or suit shall not follow the event, the Court shall state its reasons in writing."

Assuming that the application has succeeded, still I think that there is ample reason in this case for requiring the applicant to pay the costs, because he is asking for an indulgence which will have the effect of interfering for the present with the enforcement by the respondent of his decree, and he who seeks such an indulgence should in the absence of special circumstances pay for it.

On these grounds I think the order proposed is right.

Attorney for the Defendants (Applicants): Babu Ashutosh Dey.

Attorneys for the Plaintiffs: Messrs. Fox & Mandal.

NOTES.

[1. The Appellate Court it is that should stay execution when an appeal has been filed:—(1912) 35 All., 119.

2. On the question of costs, this was followed in (1909) 10 C.L.J., 631. Messrs. Woodroffe and Ameer Ali in their Civil Procedure Code 1908 (I Edn. 1908) p. 1230 say, with reference to the dissenting judgment of Banerjee, J. that "there is certainly strong support in reason for the view that, when the law allows an appeal and allows an appellant upon proper cause being shown to ask for and obtain an order for stay, it cannot be said that, what is asked for, is merely an indulgence."]

[896] FULL BENCH.

The 3rd February, 1898.

PRESENT :

SIR FRANCIS W. MACLEAN, K. C. I. E., CHIEF. JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON, MR. JUSTICE TREVELYAN, MR. JUSTICE GHOSE, AND MR. JUSTICE RAMPINI.

Nabu Mondul............Plaintiff

Full Bench, Reference to—Power of a Single Judge sitting alone, to refer a case in which the value of the subject matter in dispute does not exceed Rs. 50—Division Court—Rules of the High Court, ch. V, Rule 1, ch. VI, Rules 1 and 6 - Statute 24 and 25 Vic. cap. 109, section XIII.

A reference to the Full Bench cannot be made by a Judge of the High Court sitting alone to hear cases in which the value of the subject-matter in dispute does not exceed Rs. 50.

MR. JUSTICE RAMPINI sitting alone referred a second appeal, in which the value of the subject-matter in dispute did not exceed Rs. 50, to a Full Bench for a decision on the point "whether mere long continued possession of a parcel of homestead land, say upward of sixty years, and not mokurari, or held at a fixed rent or rate of rent, is sufficient to justify a Court in presuming that the tenancy of the land is of a permanent and transferable nature, or whether to justify such a presumption something more is required, viz., proof of the land having been originally let out for the erection of pucka buildings, or building purposes, or proof of the landlord having stood by and allowed his tenant to erect pucka buildings, or expend large sums of money in making improvements of a substantial character."

The judgment of reference was as follows:-

"The plaintiff brings this suit to eject the defendants from a certain parcel of homestead land situated in the Munsif of Baraset. The defendant No. 1 is a recent purchaser from the defendant No. 2. According to the plaintiff, the defendant No. 2 had no permanent or transferable interest in the land, and therefore the defendant No. 1 is in the position of a trespasser. The [897] defendant No. 1, however, pleaded that his vendor's ancestor took the land for dwelling purposes more than 50 years ago, that he and his successors have occupied the land ever since, and planted mango, cocoanut, and jack trees on it, that the interest of the defendant No. 2 was kaimi, maurasi and mokurari, and, therefore, that the defendant No. 2 had a right to transfer the land to him.

"The Munsif found (1) that there was no proof as to the origin of the tenancy. The origin, he said, was lost in obscurity; (2) the defendant No. 2's grandfather took a lease of the land over 60 years ago, and he and his successors have since resided there, having erected dwelling houses with mud walls and planted mango, cocoanut and jack trees on it; (3) that "there is no evidence creating the tenure to be maurasi, mokurari or kaimi;" (4) that there was no evidence to prove that the tenure is transferable by custom; (5) that it could not be presumed to be mokurari; but (6) that it may be presumed that the land was acquired for building or dwelling purposes, and so that the tenancy was maurasi, kaimi and assignable. He, accordingly, relying on the cases of Beni Madhub Banerjee v. Jai Krishna Mookerjee, (1869) 7 B. L. R., 152, and Gungadhar Shikdar v. Ayimuddin Shah Biswas, (1882) I. L. R., 8 Cal., 960, dismissed the suit.

On appeal the Subordinate Judge said "that the respondents relied upon a kaimi right and a right founded on custom and long occupation." He then found that "there was not satisfactory proof of the kaimi right and custom, and therefore there are good reasons for making a differentiation between this case and that of Beni Madhub Banerjee v. Jai Krishna Mookerjee, (1869) 7 B. L. R., 152. He, however, went on to say "the long occupation of the respondents is not disputed in this Court, and from it the grant presumed by the lower Court was, in my opinion, presumable." He accordingly affirmed the Munsif's decree.

"The plaintiff now appeals, and on his behalf it has been pointed out that all that the Subordinate Judge has found in favour of the respondent is long occupation of the land by the defendant [898] No. 2 and his ancestors, and it is contended that this is not sufficient to justify the presumption of a permanent, and therefore of an assignable or transferable, right, which the lower Courts have made in favour of the respondents. The learned pleader for the plaintiff, appellant, has cited the following cases in support of this argument of his, viz., Prosunno Coomaree Debea v. Rutton Bepary, (1877) I. L. R., 3 Cal., 696, Tarukpodo Ghosal v. Shyama Churn Napit, (1881) 8 C. L. R., 50, Prosunno Coomar Chatterjee v. Jagan Nath Bysack, (1881) 10 C. L. R., 25, Narayanbhat v. Davlata, (1891) I. L. R., 15 Bom., 647 and Secretary of State for India v. Luchmeswar Singh, (1888) I. L. R., 16 Cal., 223, and he has further called my attention to the case of Ramgopal v. Shamskhaton, (1892) I. L. R., 20 Cal., 93; 19 I. R., I. A., 218, as showing that the question is one which raises a point of law upon which a Court would be justified in interfering in second appeal. This last mentioned case is clear and convincing authority for the learned pleader's second contention, and I therefore propose now to consider the cases above referred to for the purpose of determining whether there is sufficient authority for the proposition laid down by the Subordinate Judge, viz., that from mere long occupation of homestead land, extending over 60 years, a Court is justified in presuming a permanent and assignable grant.

"I will begin with the cases relied on by the Munsif, the first of which is that of Beni Madhub Banerjee v. Jai Krishna Mookerjee, (1869) 7 B. L. R., 152. In that case it was found that the tenures in question were transferable by the custom of the country. This completely distinguishes that case from the present one, in which both Courts have found that no custom of transferability has been proved in respect of such land as is the subject of dispute in this case. Moreover, in that case pucka buildings had been erected on the land. This is not the case in the present suit. There is further in that case an obiter dictum of PEACOCK, C.J., that if a man grants a tenure to another for the purpose of living upon the land [899] that tenure, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, is assignable. But this is a mere obiter dictum, and in the present case it has not been found that the lease was granted for the purpose of living upon the land. On the contrary, the origin of the tenancy is said to be unknown and to be lost in obscurity. In any case the land was not leased to the defendant No. 2's grandfather for the purpose of erecting pucka buildings on it.

"The next case relied on by the Munsif is that of Durga Prasad Misser v. Brindaban Sookul, (1871) 7 B. L. R., 159.

"In this case the lessee had been in possession of the land for 40 years; he had built mud buildings and had planted trees on it. It was accordingly held that he had an assignable interest in the land, but it was not held that he had a permanent interest in it. An interest may be assignable without being permanent; so that this case would seem to be no authority for the view taken by the lower Courts.

"In the next case cited by the Munsif, viz., Gungadhur Shikdar v. Ayimuddin Shah Biswas, (1882) I. L. R., 8 Cal., 960, there is this difference between it and the present one that the lands in that case were apparently let out for building purposes and the buildings are described as being of a substantial character.

"I now turn to the cases cited by the learned pleader for the appellant. The first of them is Prosunno Coomaree Debea v. Rutton Bepary, (1877) I. L. R., 3 Cal., 696, in which the land was homestead land. It had been occupied by the defendants, their father and grandfather, for 60 years, a house had been built on the land and fruit trees planted on it and there was no evidence as to the origin of the tenancy. It was held that these circumstances were not sufficient to justify the presumption of a permanent grant, which could only be presumed from long and uninterrupted possession by the original grantee and his descendants, coupled with the fact of the land having been let by the landlord expressly for the purpose of the tenant building pucka houses upon it.

[900] "This was followed in the case of Tarukpodo Ghosal v. Shyama Churn Napit, (1881) 8 C. L. R., 50, in which it was laid down that there is no law in this country which gives anything in the nature of a protected tenure or holding to a person who has occupied a piece of homestead land, not forming part of an agricultural holding, however long may have been the period of his possession.

"The next case cited for the appellant is the case of Prosunno Coomar Chatterjee v. Jagun Nath Bysack, (1881) 10 C. L. R., 25. In that case it has been said: "The Subordinate Judge says that as the defendants and their ancestors have held this land for generations and have made gardens and dug tanks upon it, they cannot be regarded as tenants at will, but that they have a permanent interest, the nature and extent of which he does not define, and cannot be turned out of their possession so long as they pay rent. This doctrine is directly opposed to several cases in this Court in which it has been held that the mere fact of land having been used for many years for purposes other than agricultural, or even as a homestead, is not enough to confer upon the tenants a permanent tenure [see Addaito Charan Dey v. Peter Das, (1872) 13 B. L. R., 417 note: 17 W. R, 383; Prosunno Coomaree Debea v. Rutton Bepary, (1877) I. L. R., 3 Cal., 696]. No doubt if land is let for building pucka houses upon it, or if the tenant with the knowledge of the landlord does in fact lay out large sums upon it in buildings or other substantial improvements, that fact, coupled with long continued enjoyment of the property by the tenant or his predecessor in title, might justify any Court in presuming a permanent grant, especially if the origin of the tenancy could not be ascertained. But the mere circumstance of a tenant occupying buildings upon property would not justify such presumption, unless it could be shown that they were erected by him or his predecessor, because a landlord might let property of that kind in the same way as agricultural land at will or from year to year."

"Thus, that case seems to lay down that mere long continued [901] enjoyment of property by a tenant or his predecessor in title is not sufficient to justify the presumption of a permanent grant, and that there must be more, viz., either (1) the land must have been expressly let for building pucka houses upon it, or (2) the tenant must have, with knowledge of his landlord, laid out sums upon it in building or other substantial improvements.

"The next case cited for the appellant is that of Secretary of State for India v. Luchmeswar Singh, (1888) I L.R., 16 Cal., 223: L. R., 16 I. A., 6, in which it has been decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council that possession at a low and unvaried rent from 1798 to 1873 does not justify the inference of a permanent grant. But that case is distinguishable from the present one, as in it the origin of the tenancy was well known, the land having admittedly been acquired for the purposes of a stud farm.

"Then, in Narayan Bhat v. Davlata, (1891) I. L. R., 15 Bom., 647, it was said by SARGENT, C.J.: "Both Courts have assumed that the tenure in perpetuity as alleged by defendants could be established by merely long possession at an invariable rent. This is opposed to the rulings of this Court, unless it appears that it may be so acquired by local usage—Babaji v. Narayan, (1879) I. L. R., 3 Bom., 340."

"The Subordinate Judge has alluded to the case of Rakhal Das Addy v. Dino Moyi Debi, (1889) I. L. R, 16 Cal., 652, and says it is distinguishable from the present, because the tenant in that case claimed a right of occupancy which was disallowed, as the subject of litigation was homestead land. This is quite true, but I think it supports the argument of the learned pleader for the appellant in this case that something more than mere long possession is required to justify a presumption of a permanent and transferable grant.

"There remains the case of Dunne v. Nobo Krishna Mookerjee, (1889) I. L. R., 17 Cal., 144. In that case, which was one under the Land Acquisition Act, it was held that, as the defendant had shown his possession of the land for over a hundred years, it was to be presumed that his interest was a permanent and transferable one. There [902] was no standing by on the part of the landlords, except that they never attempted to interfere with the possession of the defendants or to vary their rent. That is, therefore, an authority in favour of the view taken by the Subordinate Judge. It is, however, to be noticed (1) that the head-note in that case is in one respect incorrect : the defendant's rent receipts did not show possession over a hundred years: they extended over only more than 30 years : the possession of a hundred years was evidenced by oral testimony: (2) the learned Judges who decided that the defendant had a permanent and transferable interest in the land did not apportion the compensation in that case on this principle. They gave the defendant the share in the compensation to which he would have been entitled if the land had been agricultural and he had been an occupancy raiyat. On the finding that the defendant's tenancy was a permanent and transferable one, he would seem to have been entitled to the whole of the compensation money after deducting from it the capitalized value of the rent payable to the landlord, and the value of the landlord's right of reversion, if any.

"On a review of the above cited cases it would seem to me that in the case of Dunne v. Nobo Krishna Mookerjee, (1889) I. L. R., 17 Cal., 144, alone it has been held that mere long possession of homestead land is sufficient to justify the presumption of a permanent grant, but that all the other cases, viz., Prosunno Coomaree Debea v. Rutton Bepary, (1877) I. L. R., 3 Cal., 696; Taruk Podo Ghosal v. Shyama Churn Napit, (1881) 8 C. L. R., 50; Prosunno Coomar Chatterjee v. Jagun Nath Bysack, (1881) 10 C. L. R., 50; and Narayan Bhat

v. Davlata, (1891) I. L. R., 15 Bom., 647, show that this fact alone is not sufficient to justify such a presumption, and that before such an inference can be made there must be something more, viz., either (1) the fact of the land having been let for the erection of pucka buildings :or (2) the fact of the tenant to the knowledge of the landlord and without objection on his part having erected pucka buildings or having spent large sums in improvements of a substantial character. [903] The cases of Gungadhur Shikdar v. Azimuddin Shah Biswas, (1882) L. I. R., 8 Cal., 960, and of Rakhal Das Addy v. Dino Moyi Debi, (1889) I. L. R., 16 Cal., 652, also support this view.

"In this conflict of rulings and as I disagree with the ruling in the case Dunne v. Nobo Krishna Mookerjee, (1889) I. L. R., 17 Cal., 144, I think it necessary to refer this case, the decision of which involves the determination of a question of much importance, to a Full Bench, and the question I would propound for their decision is whether mere long continued possession of a parcel of homestead land, say for upwards of 60 years and not mokurari or held at a fixed rent or rate of rent, is sufficient to justify a Court in presuming that the tenancy of the land is of a permanent and transferable nature, or whether to justify such a presumption something more is required, viz., proof of the land having been originally let out for the erection of pucka buildings or for building purposes, or proof of the landlord having stood by and allowed his tenant to erect pucka buildings, or expend large sums of money in making improvements of a substantial character.

"I would add that under section 2, clause (c), Act IV of 1882, the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act do not apply to the lease in this case, as it is admittedly of date anterior to the passing of the Transfer of Property Act [see Hari Nath Karmoker v. Rajendra Karmoker, (1897) 1 Cal., W. N., 136]. If the case had been of later date, the defendant No. 2's interest would have been transferable, section 108 (d), but not necessarily of a permanent nature."

Dr. Ashutosh Mookerjee and Babu Jananendra Nath Bose, for the Appellant.

Babu Chunder Kant Sen, for the Respondents.

Babu Chunder Kant Sen, on behalf of the respondents, when the case came on for hearing before the Full Bench, took a preliminary objection to the hearing of it, on the ground that the reference to the Full Bench was not in accordance with law, inasmuch as a Judge of the High Court sitting alone could not [904] make such a reference, in a case in which the value of the subject-matter in dispute did not exceed Rs. 50.

Dr. Ashutosh Mukerjee was heard on behalf of the appellant.

The judgment of the Full Bench (MACLEAN, C.J., and MACPHERSON, TREVELYAN, GHOSE and RAMPINI, JJ., concurring) was as follows: —

Maclean, C.J.—A preliminary objection has been taken on behalf of the respondent in this case to the effect that a reference to a Full Bench cannot be made by a Judge of this Court sitting alone to hear cases in which the value of the subject-matter in dispute does not exceed Rs. 50. The point is one of considerable importance. Under Rule 1 of Chapter V of the Rules of the High Court, Appellate side, a reference to a Full Bench can only be made when one Division Court differs from another Division Court upon a point of law or usage having the force of law. The question, therefore, to my mind resolves itself into this, whether a Judge sitting alone, as was the case here, is a "Division Court" within the meaning of the rule which I have just read.

When we look at the rules carefully it will be found that in them distinctions are drawn between a Division Court and a Judge sitting alone. That is apparent from Rule 6, Chapter VI, in which, speaking of appeals under clause 15 of the Letters Patent, the rule says: "In every appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent against the judgment of a Division Bench or of a Judge sitting singly on the Appellate side of the High Court." That shows the distinction which is drawn between a Judge sitting alone and a Division Court. In referring to that rule I am not unmindful of the argument which was addressed to us to the inference properly deducible from rule 1 of that Chapter, which speaks of every appeal to the High Court under clause 15 of the Letters Patent from a judgment of a Division Court on the Appellate side of the High Court. It was contended that, inasmuch as there was an appeal under that clause from the decision of a Judge sitting alone, and as the rule only refers to a Division Court, the inference was that a Judge sitting alone was to be treated and regarded as a Division Court within the meaning of the rule, and that an indication was [905] thus afforded that the distinction which I have suggested between a Division Court and a Judge sitting alone was not well founded. But giving all weight to that contention, and it was upon this rule that Dr. Ashutosh Mukerjee mainly relied, we must necessarily look at all the rules, and I think we obtain a fairly clear indication of what was intended by the term "Division Court" from section 13 of 24 and 25 Vic., cap. 109, the Act establishing High Courts of Judicature in India. That section shows that a "Division Court" must be constituted of two or more Judges of the High Court, which is incompatible with such a Court being composed of a single Judge sitting alone. It can hardly be supposed that the framers of the rules made under the Act intended to use the term "Division Court" in a sense different from that in which it was used in the Act itself. Moreover the term "Division Court" is scarcely the term one would ordinarily apply to a Judge sitting alone.

The view that one Judge cannot refer a case to a Full Bench is further strengthened by Rule 2 of Chapter V, which indicates that at least two Judges must differ from the decision of the former Division Court. On these short grounds, I am of opinion that it is not competent for a Judge sitting alone to make a reference to a Full Bench, and consequently that the preliminary objection must prevail. The result, therefore, is that the reference to a Full Bench is irregular, and the case must go back to the learned Judge who made the reference, to be dealt with by him as he thinks right.

Under the circumstances we do not think there ought to be any costs of this hearing.

Case remanded.

After the case was remanded to Mr. Justice RAMPINI, he, having heard the Vakils on both sides, delivered the following judgment:—

This case was heard by me, sitting alone on the 28th May 1897. On that occasion no one appeared for the respondents. I reserved judgment, and on the 7th June 1897 I referred the case to a Full Bench. It has now been held that I had no [906] power under the rules of Court to refer the case to a Full Bench and the case has been returned to me for disposal.

The respondents now appear by pleader, who argues that he has a right to be heard on behalf of the respondents as the order of the Full Bench reopens the case. I am of opinion that looking at the provisions of sections 556 and 571 of the Civil Procedure Code, the pleader for the respondent has no right at this stage of the case to be heard, but I have allowed him to appear as amicus curiæ and argue the case for the respondents in that capacity.

His contentions are: (1) That whether the defendant No. 2 has a permanent interest in the homestead land, which is the subject of dispute in this case, or not, he has an assignable interest in it, and, therefore, that the defendant No. 1 is a tenant of the land and cannot be ejected without a notice to quit; (2) that the cases cited by me in my order of reference lay down no hard and fast rule as to when a Court may infer that a tenancy of homestead land is of a permanent character; and (3) that the lower Courts in this case have come to a finding of fact as to the tenancy of defendant No. 1 having been of a permanent nature, and that I cannot interfere with this finding in second appeal.

In support of his first contention the learned pleader for the respondent has cited the Transfer of Property Act, sections 106, 108 (j) and 111 (h), and the cases of Beni Madhab Banerjee v. Jai Krishna Mookerjee, (1869) 7 B. L R., 152; Durga Prasad Misser v. Brindaban Sookul, (1871) 7 B. L. R., 159; Doya Chand Shaha v. Anund Chunder Sen Mozumdar, (1887) I.L. R., 14 Cal., 382; Appa Rau v. Subbanna, (1889) I. L. R., 13 Mad., 60., and Venkatasamy Naick v. Muthuvijia Ragunada, (1870) 5 Mad. H. C., 227.

Regarding the learned pleader's reference to the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, I would only say that I have already in my judgment of reference expressed my opinion that the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act do not apply to this case as the defendant No. 2's lease is of date anterior to the [907] passing of that Act. The case of Hari Nath Karmoker v. Rajendra Karmoker, (1897) 2 Cal. W. N., 122, which I then cited, has now been fully reported in 2 C. W. N., 122. In the judgment in this case, I have referred to the case of Beni Madhab Banerjee v. Jai Krishna Mookerjee, (1869) 7 B. L. R., 152, and stated that, in my opinion, it shows that previous to the passing of the Transfer of Property Act non-agricultural holdings might or might not be assignable. In the present case the lower Courts have both held that the land in dispute is not transferable by custom, and I do not see that it was ever contended on behalf of the respondents in the Courts below that it was transferable or assignable on any other ground. From the judgment of the Munsif it no doubt appears that the defendants in their pleadings did plead that the "jama was transferable according to law and custom." But the contention raised at the trial was only that it was transferable by custom and this plea was negatived by both Courts. Anyhow, there was no law before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act which made a lease of homestead land transferable otherwise than by custom.

I have nothing further to add to the remarks I have already made in my judgment of reference on this case of Beni Madhab Banerjee v. Jai Krishna Mookerjee, (1869) 7 B. L. R., 152. The case of Durga Prasad Misser v. Brindaban Sookul, (1869) 7 B.L.R., 159 seems to me to lay down no general rule. On the contrary, JACKSON, J., observed that "everything must depend on the circumstances of the case," and in that case the defendant had been allowed to erect buildings on the land, and it was said that his holding was not a temporary one.

Then the case of Doya Chand Shaha v. Anund Chunder Sen Mozumdar, (1887) I. L. R., 14 Cal., 382, evidently refers to a raiyati holding, and not to a plot of homestead land. This is apparent from the terms of the judgment and is demonstrated by the fact that it was referred to and not followed in the case of Kripamoyi Dabia v. Durga Gobind Sirkar, (1887) I. L. R., 15 Cal., 89, which relates to a raiyati holding, and in which the learned Judges who decided it, said: "It seems to us that unless [908] the defendant can prove the tenure set up by him, viz., a permanent and transferable tenure, the plaintiff, the admitted landlord, is entitled to enter into possession, and this view has been uniformly taken by this Court, as would appear from an examination of the case quoted above."

The cases of Appa Rau v. Subbanna, (1889) I. L. R., 13 Mad., 60, and Venkatasamy Naick v. Muthaiyia Ragunada, (1870) 5 Mad. H. C., 227, were also not cases concerning homestead land, and are, therefore, I think irrelevant.

In respect to the learned pleader's contention that there is a conclusive finding of fact by the lower Courts, I would only refer to the Privy Council case of Ramgopal v. Shamskhaton, (1892) I. L. R, 20 Cal., 93; L. R., 19 I. A., 228, which in my opinion effectually disposes of it.

The cases, I have cited in my judgment of reference may lay down no hard and fast rule on the subject, but the rule which I think should be deduced from them is, as I have already pointed out, that mere long possession of homestead land is not sufficient to justify the presumption of a permanent grant, and that before such a presumption can be made there must be something more, viz., either (1) the land having been let for the erection of pucka buildings or (2) a standing by on the part of the landlord, while the tenant without objection erects permanent buildings or effects substantial improvements on the land. In addition to the cases already cited, I would quote one more, viz., Lalla Gopee Chand v. Luakut Hossein, (1876) 25 W. R., 211, which I consider supports the view I take of this subject.

Taking this view of the matter, I must hold that the Court below were not justified in presuming that the defendant No 2 had a permanent and transferable interest in the land, and therefore that the suit should have been decreed. I accordingly decree this appeal and the suit with all costs in all Courts.

My judgment of reference dated 7th June 1897 should be read along with this judgment, as the first part of it

Guardian—Power of Guardian to mortgage Minor's property—Act XL of 1858, section 18—Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), section 30, read with section 2, Retrospective effect of—Mortgage without sanction of Court.

A mortgage of a minor's property, made by his guardian holding a certificate under Act XL of 1858, without obtaining sanction of Court as required by section 18 of the Act, is absolutely null and void.

Section 2 of the Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890) does not give retrospective effect to section 30, which, therefore, does not apply to a mortgage executed before the Act came into operation, so as to destroy its void character and render it merely voidable.

THE facts material to the report of this case and the arguments on both sides appear in the judgment of the High Court.

Defendants Nos. 6 and 7, auction-purchasers of the interest of the minors, appealed to the High Court.

Mr. C. Gregory and Babu Satish Chandra Ghose for the Appellants.

Dr. Ashutosh Mukerjee and Moulvie Syed Mahomed Tahir for the Respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (Trevelyan and Banerjee, JJ.) was as follows:—

In this case a guardian, who had taken out a certificate under Act XL of 1858 on the 27th of May 1884, executed a mortgage, purporting to charge the property of his wards. He did not obtain the sanction of the Civil Court as required by section 18 of Act XL of 1858. This suit is brought against the wards on the footing of the mortgage. Certain persons, who have purchased [910] the interests of the minors at auction sales, are also parties defendants. Two of the wards have attained majority; one has died, and is represented in this suit by his widow; the fourth is still a minor. The learned Munsif, before whom the case first came, dismissed the suit, on the ground that the mortgage, being without sanction, was void. He declined to try any other issue.

On appeal the learned District Judge has held that the mortgage was voidable, but has remanded the case for evidence to be taken as to the bona fide nature of the mortgage, and as to its having been executed for legal necessity. It is admitted before us by the learned Vakil for the respondent, and it is abundantly clear, that if the bond were void the suit must fail.

It is also admitted that the weight of the decisions of this Court treats mortgages made without sanction under section 18 as absolutely void. He, however, contends that the provisions of Act VIII of 1890 apply to this case, and that having regard to the terms of section 30 of that Act he is entitled to sue on the mortgage at any time unless it has been avoided by the ward.

* Appeal from order No. 314 of 1897, against the order of G. W. Place, Esq., District Judge of Sarun, dated the 7th of June 1897, reversing the order of Babu Anant Ram Ghose, Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 30th of August 1895.

In the view which we take of this case it is unnecessary for us to decide what is the effect of section 30, and how it could be applied to the facts of this case. It is also unnecessary for us to decide whether under any circumstances effect can be given to a voidable contract before the ward has attained majority, and has had an opportunity of finally ratifying or avoiding the contract.

In our opinion Act VIII of 1890 has no application to the present case. The mortgage was executed while the provisions of Act XL of 1858 were in force, and section 18 of that Act unquestionably applied to it at the time it was made. The question remains whether Act VIII of 1890 operates to destroy the void character of this mortgage, and to render it merely voidable. It would be somewhat extraordinary if the rights of parties to a transfer had been altered by subsequent legislation; section 30 in terms refers to a disposal of property in contravention of sections 28 and 29, and to nothing else. Section 28 has nothing to do with the present question. Section 29 only contains a prohibition against the disposal of property by Court-appointed guardians without the sanction of the Court. The words are " he shall [911] not." How this can refer to transactions antecedent to the Act, it is impossible to see. A statutory prohibition could have no reference to transactions which had been completed before the Act came into force. If Act XL of 1858 had contained no prohibition, and certificate holders had power to dispose of property without the sanction of the Court, could it have been argued that sections 29 and 30 of Act VIII of 1890 rendered voidable acts done before the Acts came into force, and which were valid according to the existing law?

It is contended before us that section 2 (2) of Act VIII of 1890 has the effect of applying section 30 to this transaction. We do not see how that section can have such effect.

In our opinion the mortgage being void no other issue arose.

We accordingly set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge and restore that of the Munsif. The appellant is entitled to his costs in both Appellate Courts.

Will—Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870)—Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), section 50—Execution of a will, by impression of the fac simile of the name, whether valid in law.

A testator, who, for a number of years, was, as he was unable to write, in the habit of using a name stamp, which used to be attached by a servant to any document or paper he wanted to sign, executed a will, and under his direction a servant affixed the impression of his name stamp on the said document.

Held, that the execution of the will in this case was proper and came strictly within the meaning of the words used in section 50 of the Indian Succession Act.

THIS appeal arose out of an application by one Saratmoni Debya for the probate of the will of her deceased husband Janaki Nath Mookerjee. The caveators opposed the application on the [912] grounds that the alleged will of the deceased was not executed according to law, as only the name stamp of the testator was affixed on the will by his servant; that it was not a genuine document; and that at the time of the alleged execution of the will the testator was not in such a state of mind and health as to enable him to execute the said will, or to understand the purport or effect thereof. The learned District Judge of Hooghly, having held that the affixing of the name stamp by the testator's servant in the testator's presence and by his direction was a signature by another person within the meaning of section 50 of the Indian Succession Act, and also having held that the testator had the mental capacity when the will was so signed on the occasion of its execution allowed the application and granted probate of the will. From this decision the objector No. 1 appealed to the High Court.

Mr. J. G. Woodroffe, with him Babu Boicunt Nath Das, for the Appellant.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty, with him Babu Surendra Nath Roy, for the Respondent.

Mr. Woodroffe, on behalf of the appellant, contended that the affixing of the name stamp only by a third person was not sufficient, and the execution of the will was not proper within the meaning of section 50 of the Indian Succession Act, and he referred to the case of Nitya Gopal Sircar v. Nogendra Nath Mitter, (1885) I. L. R., 11 Cal., 429. Section 50 of the Act contemplates that either the testator shall sign himself or shall affix his mark to the will, or it shall be signed by some other person in his presence and by his direction. In this case, the servant of the testator affixed his name stamp, though under his direction, but that would not be a signature by some other person on behalf of the testator within the meaning of the said section.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty for the Respondent.—Affixing a name stamp in the will by a third party is sufficient, and its execution is proper under the law. See the cases of Jenkyns v. Gaisford, (1863) 11 W. R., (Eng.) 854 : 3 Sw. & T., 93, and In the goods of Emerson, 9 L. R. (Ir.), 443.

* Appeal from Original Decree No. 151 of 1897, against the decree of J. F. Bradbury, Esq., District Judge of Hooghly, dated the 10th of February 1897.

[913] Mr. Woodroffe replied.

The judgment of the High Court (Ameer Ali and Pratt, JJ.) was as follows:—

This appeal arises out of an application by a lady named Saratmoni Debya for the probate of a will, dated the 15th November 1895, alleged to have been executed by her husband, Janaki Nath Mookerjee. The will was undoubtedly registered on the 18th of November 1895. Janaki Nath died on the 11th of December 1895, and it was propounded on the 17th January 1896.

Caveats were entered, one by a person named Nirmal Chunder Banerjee on the 24th February 1896, and the other on the 23rd January 1897, on behalf of the minor, Shibdhone Banerjee, by his father and guardian, Mani Lal Banerjee. In the caveats the factum of the will was impugned. It was stated that the alleged testator was not of a disposing mind; and it was contended that if the will was executed its execution was not proper under the law.

A considerable body of evidence has been adduced on behalf of the propounder of the will. Nirmal, who was the contesting objector, gave no evidence, and the learned District Judge, upon the circumstances and facts deposed to by the witnesses for the lady Saratmoni Debya, held that the will was genuine; that the testator was of disposing capacity; and that there was proper execution.

The caveator No. 1 has appealed to this Court, and the learned Counsel on his behalf has raised the same questions which were raised by the objector in the Court below. We shall deal with the questions relating to the factum of the will and the capacity of the testator under one head, leaving the question regarding the proper execution to be dealt with separately, both upon the facts as well as upon the law.

[The learned Judges then considered the evidence relating to the factum of the will, and continued.]

We think that all the circumstances point conclusively to the factum of the will or that occasion: factum in the sense that the testator was perfectly conscious and able to understand [914] what he was doing, and that his name, or the stamp of his name was attached to the will under his direction.

It is unnecessary to dwell further upon these two questions, because we agree with the District Judge in the opinion formed by him that, in spite of the infirmity from which Janaki suffered, and in spite of his paralysis and the difficulty he was under with regard to movement, etc., he was a person fully competent to make a will, and that he understood fully what he was doing at the time.

There remains now the question whether, if the will was executed on the 15th of November 1895, it was properly executed. We have already mentioned that it was registered on the 18th of November 1895. The Sub-Registrar, who has now retired from service, has given his evidence, and he has proved that he went to the residence of Janaki, whom he found perfectly conscious, and that he had a talk with him; that Janaki acknowledged the will; that at his instance he (Janaki) affixed his thumb-marks to the different pages; and that thereupon he attached his own signature to the will. Another witness, named Jugabundho Banerjee, did the same. The Sub-Registrar states that all this was done in the room where Janaki was lying and "in one and the same assembly;" giving rise to the distinct inference of fact that the witnesses to the impression of the thumb-marks, altogether three persons, including the Sub-Registrar, attached their signatures to the document about the same time in the presence of the testator and in the same assembly. The evidence being to that effect, assuming that the contention to which we shall presently refer was well founded, and assuming even that the will was not properly executed on the 15th November 1895, inasmuch as Janaki himself did not attach his signature or mark to it, the defect would be removed and there would be proper execution before the Sub-Registrar.

But over and beyond this it appears to us that the objection which has been taken by the learned Counsel for the caveator regarding the proper execution of the will on the 15th of November is not well founded. His contention is that the stamp of Janaki's name was attached, not by Janaki, but [915] by somebody else; that consequently the act does not come within the meaning of section 50 of the Indian Succession Act, which was made a part of the Hindu Wills Act; and that, therefore, the execution was not valid under the law. Now section 50 runs thus: "Every testator, not being a soldier employed in an expedition or engaged in actual warfare, or a mariner at sea, must execute his will according to the following rules:—First, the testator shall sign or shall affix his mark to the will, or it shall be signed by some other person in his presence, or by his direction" . . . . It is unnecessary to refer to the 2nd and 3rd clauses. The 1st clause gives sufficient indication of the objection raised. It is contended that the affixing of the stamp, the fac simile of Janaki's name, does not amount to proper execution, inasmuch as the only person under the section who is authorised to make a mark is the testator himself, and nobody else; and that if any other person is directed to sign for the testator, he may not affix his name-stamp, as that is equivalent to making a mark.

Now, under the English Wills Act, it has been held that the affixing of the fac simile of a name, either by the testator or by somebody else, is sufficient under the law. Section 9 of I Vic., c. 26, provided as follows: "That no will shall be valid unless it shall be in writing and executed in manner hereinafter mentioned (that is to say), it shall be signed at the foot or end thereof by the testator or by some other person in his presence and by his direction." The rest is immaterial. It will be noticed that in the English Act the words relating to the affixing of a mark do not occur; the reason for the introduction of those words in the Indian Act seems to us to be obvious.

In England there are not so many illiterate persons as in this country; and probably the Legislature considered it necessary that, in order to cover the case of the vast majority of people who are not sufficiently literate to sign their names, some provision should be made to enable them to make their wills by marks. In order to understand exactly the difference between signing and affixing the mark, it is necessary to explain what we think is meant by these words. We understand the word "signing" to mean the writing of the name of a person so that [916] it may convey a distinct idea to somebody else that the writing indicates a particula individualr whose signature or sign it purports to be. A "mark" is a mere symbol and does not convey any idea to a person who notices it, often even to the person who makes it. The Legislature, therefore, provides that so far as the testator is concerned, if he is literate, he may either sign his name, which would convey a distinct idea regarding the executant of the document, or, if illiterate, may fix his mark as an indication of his act as executant of the will. In the case of somebody else writing for him, it requires that he should write the name or put it in such a manner as would lead anybody else to see at once who the person was who executed the document. If that view be correct, it is evident that the impression of the fac simile of the name is not the making of a mark, but really the affixing the name to the document. The use of a pen and ink does not seem to be necessary for the purpose of putting on the signature required. In the case of Jenkyns v. Gaisford, (1863) 11 W. R., (Eng.) 854 ; 3 Sw. & T., 93, the Judges indicate that the use of pen and ink was not necessary for signing, and that argument may be well applied to this case also. A person may sign or put his name down by means of types, or, if he uses a fac simile for signing his name, he may use it for his signature.

Now let us see what the facts of this case are. It appears that for a number of years Janaki had been in the habit of using a name stamp as he was unable to read or write. That name stamp used to be kept by a servant, and under Janaki's direction used to be attached to any document or papers he wanted to sign. That being so, it appears to us that the learned District Judge was perfectly right in holding that the execution of the will in this case was proper and came strictly within the meaning of the words used in section 50.

We think, therefore, for all those reasons that the order of the District Judge was right, and that this appeal ought to be dismissed with costs.

A fractional shareholder cannot bring a suit for enhancement of rent. Under the provisions of section 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, where there are several joint-landlords, they must all join in bringing a suit for enhancement of rent ; an agreement in a kabuliyat by one tenant to pay an enhanced rent to some of the landlords, if, on measurement, the jama of his jote is increased, does not create a right to maintain such a suit by those landlords. PRESENT :

SIR W. COMER PETHERAM, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE AND MR. JUSTICE RAMPINI.

Hari Charan Bose............Defendant No. 1

Runjit Singh............Plaintiff.†

THE facts of the case are fully set forth in the judgments of the High Court (PETHERAM, C.J., and BANERJEE and RAMPINI, JJ.), which were as follows :—

Banerjee, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff respondent for a declaration of his title to a certain holding, and for an injunction restraining the defendant No. 1 from attaching or proceeding in execution against the same. The main allegations upon which the plaintiff bases his suit are these, namely, that the plaintiff purchased the holding in question in August 1892 at a sale in execution of a decree for rent obtained by a co-sharer in the superior tenure to which the holding is subordinate, in respect of his share of the rent ; that, previous to his purchase, that is, in March 1892, the defendant No. 1, who owns an eight-anna share in the dar-patni, and a two-anna share in the patni, of Taraf Kabilpore, in which the holding in question is situate, obtained a decree for arrears of rent due in respect of his said two shares ; that the defendant No. 1, having sought to sell the eight-annas and the two-annas shares in the holding on the allegation of such shares forming two separate jotes, the plaintiff intervened, but his intervention was unsuccessful ; and that the said shares of the holding do not constitute separate jotes, and the defendant is not entitled to bring them to sale in disregard of the rights acquired by the plaintiff by his purchase.

The defence was that the alleged holding of the plaintiff was not one holding, but consisted of four separate holdings, created by four separate leases granted to the plaintiff's predecessors in title on different dates : two, by the two-annas patnidar and the four-annas patnidar of Taraf Kabilpore in Aghran 1266, one by the two-anna patnidar in Magh 1266, and a fourth by the eight-anna dar-patnidar in Bysak 1267, the rights of the last two lessors having now vested in defendant No. 1, and that the defendant No. 1 was, therefore, entitled to proceed against the two tenancies, the one granted by the two-anna patnidar and the other by the eight-anna dar-patnidar, in execution of the rent decree obtained by him, notwithstanding the subsequent purchase by the plaintiff, the said rent being a first charge on the tenancies. It was not disputed in the Courts below that, if the case came under section 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the defendant No. 1 would be entitled to proceed against the holding. But the main question was whether the case came under that section or not ; the plaintiff contending that it did not, because the leases relied upon by the defendant No. 1 did not create separate and distinct tenancies, whilst the defendant No. 1 contended that it did.

The Court of First Instance gave effect to the defendant's contention, and dismissed the suit. On appeal by the plaintiff, the Lower Appellate Court has accepted the plaintiff's † Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1695 of 1894, against the decree of F. Taylor, Esq., District Judge of Moorshidabad, dated the 31st of July 1894.

(1889). They say that, in 1287, the first [919] defendant executed a kabuliyat by which he agreed to pay to the plaintiffs their share of the rent separately, and also to pay an increased rent, if, on measurement an excess area was found. They allege that the area of the holding has been found by measurement to be in excess of the area for which the defendants were paying rent, and they bring this suit for an enhancement of the rent of the holding, including the increased area, and to get their share of the enhanced rent from the defendants.

It appears to be conceded that the different shareholders were collecting their share of the rent separately from the defendants. Both Courts have dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiffs, as fractional co-sharers, cannot maintain this suit for enhancement. The only question we have to determine in this appeal is whether the suit is maintainable. Apart from the kabuliyat, and in so far as it rests on the agreement of the defendants to pay the plaintiffs their share of the rent separately, we think that this suit is clearly not maintainable as a suit for enhancement, or as a suit for the rent of the area said to be in excess of the area for which the defendant was paying rent. This was held in the case of Gopal Chunder Das v. Umesh Narain Chowdhry, (1890) contention as correct, reversed the decision of the first Court, and given the plaintiff a decree as prayed. Against that decree the defendant No. 1 has preferred this second appeal, and the learned Judges, who heard the appeal first, having differed in opinion, the case has been referred to me under section 575 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The main contention in the appeal on behalf of the appellant is, that two tenures have been created in respect of a two-anna share, and an eight-anna share of certain lands in Taraf Kabilpore, by the two leases granted by the two-annas patnidar and the eight-annas dar-patnidar in Magh 1266 and in Bysak 1267 while the contention on the other side is that those two pattas have not the effect attributed to them, and that, in any view of the case, undivided shares in parcels of land cannot constitute distinct holdings within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It was argued for the plaintiff respondent that the land was originally let out for the purpose of cultivating indigo, that the tentant was, therefore, a "raiyat" and not a "tenure-holder" within the meaning of section 5 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, that the tenancy can only be a "holding" and not a "tenure" within the meaning of that Act, and that the definition of "holding" as given in clause (9) of section 3 does not include an undivided share in any parcel or parcels of land such as goes to constitute each of the alleged separate tenancies in this case. I think this argument is sound. It is clear from the findings arrived at by the Lower Appellate Court, and from the leases relied upon by the appellant, that the tenancy or tenancies were raiyati tenancies and not tenures; and it has never been questioned that the plaintiff would be entitled to a decree if the case does not come under section 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The whole question is, whether it comes under that section, or in other words, whether what the defendant No. 1 is seeking to proceed against in execution of his decree for rent, notwithstanding the plaintiff's purchase, is a "tenure" or "holding" within the meaning of that section; and, as already observed, it cannot be a tenure for the simple reason that the tenancy was created for the purpose of cultivation by the tenant presumably through hired labour. The question, therefore, reduces itself to this, namely, whether the leases relied upon by defendant No. 1 have created separate holdings within the meaning of section 65, or whether there is but one holding under the proprietors of the entire sixteen annas? Now a "holding" is thus defined in section 3, clause (9): "'Holding' means a parcel or parcels of land held by a raiyat and forming the subject of a separate tenancy." Does this mean an entire parcel or entire parcels, or may it also include an undivided fractional share of a parcel or parcels of land? Evidently the definition applies only to an entire parcel or entire parcels, and is not intended to include an undivided share in a parcel or parcels, and the reason seems to be obvious. A raiyati holding, which from the very definition of a "raiyat" in section 5, sub-section 2, means land occupied by a raiyat for the purpose of cultivation, can be ordinarily held only in its entirety, and the cultivation of an undivided fractional share of a parcel of land will be ordinarily meaningless. A "tenure," on the other hand, which is the interest of a tenure-holder, who, as defined in section 5, sub-section 1, is a person who has acquired a right to hold land for the purpose of collecting rents or bringing it under cultivation by establishing tenants on it, may relate only to an undivided fractional share in land without leading to any practical difficulty. And it is for this reason that whilst "tenure" is defined as the interest of a tenure-holder, or an under-tenure-holder, "holding" is defined, not as the interest of a raiyat but as a parcel or parcels of land held by a raiyat and forming the subject of a separate tenancy

I. L. R., 17 Cal., 695. The agreement of the defendant to pay the [920] plaintiffs their separate share of the rent did not constitute a separate tenancy under the plaintiffs. Under section 30 of the Tenancy Act, the landlord of a holding of an occupancy raiyat may, subject to the provisions of the Act, institute a suit to enhance the rent on certain grounds, the grounds alleged in this case being that the defendant was holding at a rate which was below the prevailing rate. Now the plaintiffs are not the "land-lords" of this holding within the meaning of this section; they are only some of the landlords. The holding is an entire one, and there is no separate holding as regards the share of the plaintiffs. That was held in the case of Hari Charan Bose v. Runjit Singh (ante, p. 917). The plaintiffs cannot, therefore, enhance the rent of the entire holding, because, under section 188, all the landlords must join as plaintiffs in a suit for that purpose, and they cannot enhance the rent of their share of the holding as there is no separate holding under them. The case of

I may add that if the definition of a holding were to include an undivided fractional share in a parcel or parcels of land, the definition would be incompatible with the provisions of sections 121 and 122 of the Bengal Tenancy Act which relate to the distraint of crops or other products of holdings. It was argued for the appellant that, if this view is correct, not only would the separate tenancies created by the several leases in this case, not come under the definition of "holding" but the aggregate of the tenancies created thereby would also be a separate tenancy, as it cannot be said that tenancies created at different times, and differing in some of their incidents, constitute "a separate tenancy" within the meaning of the definition; and if that was so, tenancies of the kind in question in this suit, which are by no means an uncommon class of tenancies, would have to be excluded from the scope of the Bengal Tenancy Act. I do not think that we are driven to such a consequence as that. Though the tenancies created by the several documents are, in one sense, separate tenancies, no doubt, still, having regard to the fact that one important element for consideration, namely, the land in respect of which the tenancy or tenancies are created, remains still one and undivided, we may disregard the diversity in the comparatively immaterial elements, namely, the time of creation of the tenancies, and the mode of payment of the rent that occurs in the several leases, and treat them all as combining in the constitution of one tenancy, especially when we find that the rents reserved in the several leases are but the aliquot parts of a whole, such parts corresponding to the shares of the grantors of the leases. Great reliance was placed upon the case of Panchanan Banerji v. Raj Kumar Guha, (1892) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 610, as showing that the leases granted by undivided co-sharers in certain cases go to constitute distinct tenancies. That case, however, is quite distinguishable from the present, as that was a case in which the lease related not to a raiyati holding, but to an ousut taluk or tenure. Some reliance was also placed on the case of Jardine Skinner and Co. v. Surut Soondari Debi, (1878) L. R., 5 I. A., 164: 3 C. L. R., 140, in which their Lordships of the Privy Council held that a right of occupancy might be acquired in an undivided share in land, and also upon the case of Gur Buksh Roy v. Jeolal Roy, (1888) I. L. R., 16 Cal., 127, in which a somewhat similar view was taken; but those cases were under the old law, Bengal Act VIII of 1869, which contained no definition of the term "holding" such as we have in the Bengal Tenancy Act. For the foregoing reasons I agree with Mr. Justice RAMPINI in thinking that the Court of Appeal below was right in its decision; that, what the defendant No. 1 is seeking to proceed against, are not distinct holdings within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but are only undivided shares in a holding; and that the defendant No. 1 is only one of a body of joint landlords. That being so, I think this appeal ought to be dismissed with costs.

PETHERAM, C. J.—An area of land, consisting of about 1,160 bighas, was owned by four groups of fractional sharers. One group being the owners of eight annas, another of four, and the two others of two annas each. Each of these groups about the year 1859 let its own share to Mr. Laruletta in perpetuity at an agreed rental by a separate lease for cultivation, and under these four leases Mr. Laruletta held and cultivated the whole of the 1,160 bighas until his interest in it was purchased by Mr. Howard. Afterwards a decree was obtained by the lessor of one of the leases against Mr. Howard. And after that decree had been passed all Mr. Howard's interest in the land was sold under it and purchased by the plaintiff.

The question for decision in this case is, whether the lessee under each of the four leases is a permanent tenure-holder or a raiyat holding at fixed rates, or an occupancy raiyat within the meaning of section 65 of the Tenancy Act, and the rent a first charge on the holding, or whether all the grantors of the four leases are joint landlords within the meaning of section 188 and the 1,160 bighas of land one holding under them all.

Punchanan Banerji v. Raj Kumar Guha, (1892) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 610, which was relied upon by the appellants, is clearly distinguishable. That case turned entirely upon the particular terms of the kabuliyat, and it was, moreover, a suit to enhance the rent on account of the plaintiffs' share of a tenure and had nothing to do with a raiyati holding.

[921] Then it is contended that the plaintiffs are entitled, according to the terms of the kabuliyat, and apart altogether from the provisions of the Tenancy Act, to enhance the rent of the defendants. The kabuliyat, which has not been quite correctly translated in the translation put before us, was for a term of three years, from 1287 to 1289. It deals with the holding as an entire holding, and the first defendant, who alone executed it, [922] agreed to pay the plaintiffs separately their share of the rent. Then, there is another provision upon which the appellants relied, which is to this effect: "If,

The Subordinate Judge took the former view, the District Judge the latter. I think that the view taken by the Subordinate Judge is the correct one.

The grantee under the four leases is certainly the tenant of the land and as certainly a raiyat holding at fixed rates, as he acquired the land for the purpose of cultivation ; and if he is a tenant of all the land, it must, I think, follow that he is the tenant under each group of the undivided fractional share which the group has let to him and of which it has put him in possession ; but all the groups are not joint landlords of the tenant because he has made no contract with them jointly ; for this reason section 188 cannot apply to this case, and the only question is, whether what the tenant holds under each of the four leases is either a "tenure" or a "holding" within the meaning of section 65.

I have no doubt it is a holding. Section 2, sub-section 9, defines a "holding" as "a parcel or parcels of land held by a raiyat and forming the subject of a separate tenancy," and the argument for the plaintiff is that the use of the words "parcel or parcels of land" excludes the idea that a share though undivided can be a holding. I do not think this is the case. The owner of an undivided fractional share in a parcel of land is the owner of that share in every part of it, and a tenant in possession of such an undivided share is the holder of an undivided share in every part of it, and is, I think, properly described as the holder of the parcel, because he is holder of an undivided share in every part of it.

I would decree the appeal and restore the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, but as Mr. Justice RAMPINI is of a different opinion, the case will be laid before a third Judge.

RAMPINI, J.--The plaintiff purchased a certain jote or holding in the possession of the defendant No. 2 on the 15th July 1892 in execution of a decree for arrears of rent. The defendant No. 1, who is owner of an eight-annas of a darpatni and of two-annas of a patni of this jote, obtained a decree for his share of the rent, due from the defendant No. 2, on the 30th March 1892 In execution of this decree he has attached and had proclaimed for sale ten-annas of the holding, alleging that the defendant No. 2 held two separate holdings, consisting of eight annas and two-annas, respectively, of the original jote, purchased by the plaintiff in 1892. The plaintiff objected to the proposed sale, on the ground that there were no such separate jotes, or holdings, and that the entire jote had been purchased by him. Failing in his intervention in the course of the proceedings taken in execution of the defendant No. 1's decree, he has instituted this suit to have it declared that there are no separate jotes of eight-annas and two-annas each, on which the defendant No. 1, as the holder of a decree for rent, has a first charge under section 65 of the Tenancy Act, and that the entire jote is his by right of purchase; and that the defendant No. 1 cannot proceed against a ten-annas share of it.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, holding that the defendant No. 2 did hold two separate holdings of eight-annas and two-annas of the original jote. The District Judge, however, reversed the Subordinate Judge's decision, as he was of opinion that the original holding had never been sub-divided, though the rent payable for it to the various patnidars and dar-patnidars had been distributed, and was payable in separate shares.

The defendant No. 1 now appeals, and on his behalf it has been contended that the learned District Judge has misinterpreted the documents (Exhibits H, A and R), which, it is said, show that the holding itself was sub-divided, and not merely that its rent was distributed between the co-sharer landlords.

I must premise that as the finding of the District Judge that the defendant No. 2 never held separate holdings, and that the holding purchased by the plaintiff has not been sub-divided, is a finding of fact, it cannot be disturbed by this Court in second appeal, unless the learned Judge has clearly misinterpreted the terms of these documents, and I would add according to your measurement jamabandi, the jama of my jote is increased, I shall pay rent and give kabuliyat without objection according to the increased rate." That, we think, gives the plaintiffs no right to maintain a suit of this description. It merely provides, we think, that if the rent [923] of the entire holding is increased, increased rent shall be paid to the plaintiffs for their share in the holding; but the rent cannot be increased otherwise than under the terms of the Act. There is no agreement to pay any specific amount of rent to the plaintiffs at any further time. So far, therefore, of the terms of the kabuliyat are concerned, we think it gives the plaintiffs no [924] right to maintain a suit of this description, either for enhancement of the rent of the holding, or for the rent of the increased area; nor do we think that the plaintiffs would be in any better position, so far as regards their right to bring a suit of this [925] description, if they limited their claim to recover rent for an excess area in proportion to the two-anna share of the taluk in respect of which the kabuliyat was given. The case of Tejendro Narain Singh v. Bakai that there is unquestionably other evidence on the record besides these exhibits on this point, viz., the dakhilas for rent granted by the landlords, and application for execution filed by the defendant No. 1 himself, so that the determination of the question as to whether the land held by defendant No. 2 is one holding or several holdings does not rest entirely on the interpretation of these documents.

I, however, see no reason for thinking that the learned District Judge has misinterpreted the terms of exhibits H, A and R.

Exhibit H is a kabuliyat executed in 1259 by the predecessor of the defendant No. 2 in favour of one of the eight-annas patnidars. It speaks of 1,150 bighas of diara land, known as "Guru Persad Sirkar," being held under a roka from the patnidars. It is said that in 1259 the executants of the kabuliyat, viz., Messrs. A. and J. Larulетta, held "the whole of this land," that the rent of it was Rs. 772, and that they agreed to pay separately Rs. 386 per annum to the eight-annas patnidars for his share of the rent. This is certainly strong evidence that the 1,150 bighas form one holding, originally acquired for the purpose of the cultivation of indigo in the name of one Guru Persad Sirkar, and that at the time of execution of this kabuliyat the rent only was distributed between the then landlords.

The next document A is a pottah granted to Mr. J. Larulетta on the 6th Magh (not Aughran) 1266, by the two-annas patnidars of the holding, the total area of the whole land is given, viz., 1,160 odd bighas. The boundaries of the whole of the land are described. The lessee is enjoined to keep these boundaries intact, and a permanent lease is granted for the lessor's share of the land on payment of a rent of Rs. 117 odd, after deduction from Rs. 942 odd, the total rent of the holding, of Rs. 824 odd, the rent due to the owners of the remaining 14 shares who are specified.

The other document (exhibit R) is another pottah, dated 31st Bysack 1267, executed by the owners of the eight-annas dar-patni in favour of the same predecessor of the defendant No. 2, viz., Mr. J. Larulетta. It is couched in similar terms to those of exhibit A. It describes the holding as one parcel of land, gives the boundaries of this parcel, grants a permanent lease of the executant's eight-annas share "for the purpose of cultivating indigo and other crops thereon," and stipulates for the payment to the executants of a rent of Rs. 471 odd, being half of the total rent of the holding of Rs. 942 odd.

Both these documents, exhibits A and R, in my opinion, support the view taken by the District Judge that the original holding of 1,160 bighas was never sub divided, but that only the rent of it was distributed.

There is, however, one provision in the documents A and R, which it is contended is inconsistent with this view. Both documents contain provisions that the land within the specified boundaries "shall be surveyed at the interval of every five years. But this does not seem to me to point to the conclusion that the holding was sub-divided. Neither document contains any stipulation that the executants themselves are to be at liberty to survey the lands. The land referred to is the land within the boundaries mentioned in the pottahs, that is, the whole 1,160 bighas, or in other words, the whole holding. The measurement of this land would have to be made by all the landlords jointly. There is certainly no provision that the patnidars and dar-patnidars may each independently measure either all the lands, or the lands appertaining to the share of each, which latter step they could not take, the lands appertaining to the share of each being undivided and undistinguishable from the lands of the others.

Singh, (1895) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 658, which the appellants relied upon, is quite distinguishable. There the tenant had given a [926] kabuliyat before the Tenancy Act came into force for a term of seven years, which expired after the Tenancy Act came into force, and he agreed to pay rent separately to the plaintiff for that term of seven years, and, after the expiry of that term, to pay a fixed sum in case he failed to execute a fresh kabuliyat. The suit [927] was brought for that fixed sum upon the express terms of the agreement,

I may mention that, according to exhibit O, the rent due to its executant is to be paid quarterly, while according to exhibit R, the rent stipulated for is to be paid monthly. These provisions are, however, mere stipulations for the payment of the rent entered into by the parties for the convenience of the landlords. They in no way affect the question of the division or non-division of the entire holding.

Several cases have been alluded to by the lower Courts in their judgments and have been discussed before us. The first of these is the well-known case of Guni Mahomed v. Moran, (1878) I. L. R., 4 Cal., 96. That case decides that when a tenant has agreed to pay a co-sharer landlord his share of the rent separately, he can be sued separately for arrears of such rent, but he cannot be sued for a kabuliyat, "for the grant and acceptance of a binding lease of the separate share," it is said, "cannot exist contemporaneously with the original lease of the entire jote." I do not, however, understand this decision as laying down a general rule to the effect that the granting of a kabuliyat of any kind necessarily operates as the creation of a new and separate tenancy. If it does, it is an obiter dictum, but no such rule would seem to me to be laid down in this case. Whether a kabuliyat creates a new and separate tenancy or not, and effects a sub-division of the holding or not, must, I think, depend on its terms. A kabuliyat merely stipulating for the payment of a certain share of the rent by monthly or quarterly instalments, would not seem to me to operate as creating a new tenancy, or as sub-dividing a holding, and this is all, in my opinion, that the pottahs, exhibits A and R, provide for.

This principle that the effect to be given to a kabuliyat must depend upon its terms is apparently impliedly admitted in the case of Panchanan Banerji v. Raj Kumar Guha, (1892) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 610, which is the second of the cases referred to by the lower Courts and discussed before us. In this case it was held, upon the terms of the kabuliyats executed by the defendant's predecessor, that a separate tenancy had been created. But the terms of that kabuliyat were very different from those of exhibits A and R in this case. In the kabuliyat in Panchanan Banerji's case, the area of the land "which proportionately would belong to the plaintiff," the co-sharer landlord, was set out. It was estimated at 661 bighas. The plaintiff, however, on measurement made it 11 bighas, and the Court after measurement held it to be 679 bighas. Now this is exactly what exhibits A and R in this case do not do.

As already pointed out, they give the boundaries and area of the entire holding, and make no attempt to estimate the proportionate areas of land liable for the shares of the rent payable to the executants of each of them, or to specify their boundaries. Then the kabuliyat in Panchanan Banerji's case, (1892) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 610, gave the plaintiff a right to measure the land, and for the reasons already given I do not think that exhibits A and R give such a right to the co-sharers landlords who executed them.

The case of Lalun Monee v. Sona Monee Dabee, (1874) 22 W. R., 334, has also been cited by the District Judge. In that case it has been said: "If the evidence shows that the amounts were paid as aliquot parts of the whole rental, that would go to show that the tenure was one." That is exactly how the rent payable to each co-sharer in this case is treated in exhibits A and R.

For these reasons I agree with the District Judge in concluding that there was no division of holdings in this case, but merely a distribution of the rent, and, that being so, the defendant No. 1 cannot proceed to sell his eight-annas and two-annas shares of the defendant No. 2's holding, which was purchased by the plaintiff in July 1892, as if they were separate and distinct joles. Nor can he sell these shares as a share or shares of the original holding, because the whole jote has already been purchased by the plaintiff, and under the Full Bench ruling in Beni Madhub Roy v. Jaod Ali Sircar, (1890) I.L.R., 17 Cal., 390, he, being a "fractional co-sharer 'landlord,' must pursue his remedies to recover his share of the rent under the ordinary law of the country and independently of the Bengal Tenancy Act." But independently of section 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the defendant No. 1 has no right to proceed against a share of the holding, for it is only under the provisions of section 65 that he can have a first charge upon a property which is no longer the property of his judgment-debtor but that of a third person.

I, therefore, consider that the plaintiff is entitled to the declaration that he seeks for, and I would accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

and it was held that as the kabuliyat was given before the Tenancy Act came into operation, and there was an express agreement to pay a fixed sum on the expiry of the term, the plaintiffs could maintain the suit on the terms of the agreement, apart from the provisions of the Tenancy Act. That is not the case here, as we think that no suit either to enhance the rent, or [928] to recover rent for the alleged excess area, could be brought otherwise than under the terms of the Tenancy Act. The decision appealed from, therefore, appears to us to be right, and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

S. C. B. Appeal dismissed.

[I. PARTIAL INTEREST—

1. Section 188A was inserted in the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, by Bengal Act I of 1907, and it provides for the procedure in suits by joint landlords.

2. All the fractional shareholders must join in the suit :—(1912) 15 I.C., 847.

In (1913) 20 I. C., 659 (Cal.,) it was held insufficient that the co-sharers who had been unwilling to join as plaintiffs had been joined as defendants.

3. In (1899) 27 Cal., 417, this decision was applied to the converse case of a co-sharer tenant claiming the benefit of section 52, Tenancy Act, 1885.

4. Although the landlords can collect rents on their several separate leases, the tenancy is one and consequently the tenant must bring one application against all the co-sharer landlords for the determination of the incidents of the tenancy :—(1913) 20 I. C., 820 (Cal.).

5. In (1899) 26 Cal., 937, it was held that the Bengal Tenancy Act did not contemplate or provide for the sale of a holding at the instance of one only of several joint landlords who had obtained a decree for the share of the rent separately due to him and that when an occupancy holding, not transferable by custom or local usage is sold in execution of a decree obtained by one of several joint landlords for the share of the rent separately due to him, the purchaser acquires nothing by the purchase, the judgment-debtor having no saleable interest in the holding ; see also (1902) 2 C. L. J., 10.

6. The effect of a consent on the part of some of several co-sharers to an alienation by the tenant was considered in (1909) 10 C. L. J., 618.

Upon the validity or otherwise of alienations by the tenant of occupancy holdings apart from custom or local usage, see (1914) 42 Cal , 172 F. B.

7. As to when there is a separate tenancy, see also (1905) 2 C. L. J., 535 ; (1903) 7 C. W. N., 670.

8. In (1902) 8 C. W. N., 192 it was held that a raiyati right could be acquired in a share in a tank forming an integral portion of an agricultural holding situated on its bank.

II. 'HOLDING'—

'Holding' in sec. 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, means an entire holding :—(1897) 25 Cal., 917 ; (1902) 2 C. L. J., 10 ; (1898) 2 C. W. N., 680 ; (1912) 16 C. L. J., 9 : 16 C. W. N., 877.]

Administrator-General's Act—

II of 1874 —

s. 35. Right of creditors to immediate payment in full if assets sufficient—"Rateable payment." Meaning of - Costs- Meaning of "shall be liable to pay"—Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 282 Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), s. 104. In a suit by a creditor, if his demand be uncontested or proved and the executor admits assets, the plaintiff is entitled at the hearing to an order for immediate payment without taking the accounts. The admission of assets for the payment of a debt is also an admission of assets for the purposes of the suit and extends to costs if the Court thinks fit to give them. There is nothing in s. 35 of the Administrator-General's Act (II of 1874) which qualifies or restricts or otherwise interferes with the right of a creditor to demand immediate payment of his claim in full when the realizable assets in the hands of the Administrator-General are sufficient for the immediate payment of all claims in full. The "rateable payment" referred to in the above section, as well as in s. 282 of the Succession Act (X of 1865), and in s. 104 of the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), is rateable payment out of the assets; it is nowhere provided that it shall be made out of the net income of the estate or any other specific part of the assets. The language ("Shall be liable to pay the costs") used in clause 1 of s. 35 of the Administrator-General's Act (II of 1874) shows that it was intended, not to impose upon a creditor to whom the condition of exemption was inapplicable, an absolute Order appointing Commission to effect partition after preliminary decree—Interlocutory order—Effect of not appealing from order—Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), ss. 2, 244, 591. Held, by the majority of the Full Bench (O'KINEALY, MACPHERSON, TREVELYAN and BANERJEE, JJ.) that an order passed in a suit for partition, subsequently to the preliminary decree appointing a commission to make the partition, is not an order in execution, and, therefore, is not appealable under s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code. It is an interlocutory order pending the suit which has not been finally decided; and the appellant may take objection to it in an appeal against the final decree. (h) of s. 266 of the Civil Procedure Code, read with the interpretation clause (s. 2) of the Code. His pay is therefore subject to attachment in execution of a decree against him, but the operation of the attachment must be restricted to pay received from the Indian Government. The pay of an Officer of the Regular Forces is not so subject to attachment. The attachment in this case was allowed subject to a decree previously passed against the defendant, by which under s. 151 of the Army Act half his pay was ordered to be deducted and applied in payment of the amount due under that decree — the repeal of that section not affecting a decree previously passed under it, and the right to enforce such a decree continuing until satisfaction has been obtained.

In after years the husband, now plaintiff, and the wife, defendant, contested which of the two was the real purchaser. Held, that the burden of proving that the mortgagee gave the consideration for the sale was upon him at the outset, as he claimed contrary to the tenor of the admitted document, which burden had been discharged by his evidence that the substantial consideration for the sale by the mortgagors was the extinction of the mortgage debt due to him. This proof shifted on to the wife the burden of showing that this extinction was effected by her money or of showing that she had continuous possession in accordance with the sale deed She did not prove that any money was paid by her, either to the vendors or to the mortgagee; nor was there such an amount of possession proved as affected the question either way. ss. 34 and 35. Preparation and publication of valuation roll—Liability to pay cess. In the case of rent-paying lands the publication of the valuation roll under s. 35 of the Cess Act (Bengal Act IX of 1880) is not a condition precedent to the attaching of liability to pay road cess in accordance with the valuation rolls. Ashanutulah Khan v. Trilochan Bagchi distinguished.

BHUGWATI KUWERI CHOWDHRANI v. CHUTTERPUT SINGH ... XXV 725

s. 47. Decree for arrears of cess—Sale in execution of decree, Effect of. Although the procedure for the realization of cesses may be the same as the procedure laid down for the realization of rent due upon the tenure, yet it does not necessarily follow that the effect of a sale for cesses should be the same as that of a sale for arrears of rent for which the tenure itself is liable to be sold. Umachurn Bag v. Ajadannissa Bibee followed. Notwithstanding, therefore, that s. 47 of the Cess Act, 1880, provides that "every holder of an estate or tenure to whom any sum may be

Two of the leases were zur-i-peshgi or made on money advanced by the lessee to the lessor. The tenant's possession in this case was in part at least that of a creditor operating payment to himself and was no foundation for a claim for occupancy rights. As to the effect of written stipulations contrary to the latter, s. 7 of the Bengal Rent Law Act X of 1859 is superseded if not wholly repealed by s. 178 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885.

ss. 27 and 29. Landlord and Tenant—Suit for rent—Enhancement of rent—Enhancement of rent by a registered kabuliyat within 15 years from a previous oral agreement to pay enhancement of rent, Effect of. By an oral agreement in the year 1885 the tenant defendant agreed to pay an enhancement of rent, and he paid rent at that rate until subsequently he executed in the year 1893 a registered kabuliyat, by which he agreed to pay a further enhancement of rent which was more than two annas in the rupee. Upon a suit for rent by the landlord based on the registered kabuliyat: Held, that, inasmuch as the enhancement of rent, in s. 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, refers to enhancement after the promulgation of the Act, if in this case the enhancement which was made in the year 1885 was before the Act came into force, it would not bar an enhancement during the period of fifteen years from the date thereof as contemplated by cl. (3) of s. 29. But if the said enhancement was made after the Act came into force, it would also not bar a subsequent enhancement within fifteen years from the date thereof, as the previous contract was only an oral one and was not effectual and binding upon the defendants. Held, also, that having regard to cl. (b) of s. 29, as the enhancement was more than two annas in the rupee, the registered kabuliyat was bad in law, if the rent then agreed to be paid was an enhanced rent. The kabuliyat would also be bad in law, if the rent agreed to be paid is partly enhanced and partly increased rent. Held, further, that having regard to proviso (1) of s. 29, as also the provisions of s. 27, the plaintiff would at any rate (i.e., failing the kabuliyat) be entitled to recover rent at the rate paid by the defendant for more than three years.

s. 50. Presumption—Occupancy raiyats—Raiyats holding at fixed rent—Incidents of tenancy—Transferability of tenure—Alienation of part of a tenure—Suit for khas possession and for declaration that alienation was invalid—Form of decree. In a suit brought in 1893 for declaration that a holding was not transferable and that the alienation of a portion thereof was invalid, and also for khas possession of the land on the ground of such alienation, it was found that the rate of rent payable for the holding had never been changed since 1831, and that there was nothing to rebut the presumption raised by s. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885). Held: (1) That the alienation did not work a forfeiture, and the plaintiffs were not entitled to khas possession, but they were entitled to the declaration that the alienation was not binding upon them. (2) That the presumption created by s. 50 does not operate to convert an occupancy raiyat into a raiyat holding at fixed rates, nor does it render the tenancy subject to the incidents of a holding at fixed rates as prescribed by s. 18 of the Act.

X of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), it having been found that certain raiyats were holding their lands at rates which had not been changed during twenty years before the institution of the proceeding, the Settlement Officer recorded them as "raiyats holding at fixed rates." In second appeal, held, that under s. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the Settlement Officer was right in giving effect to the presumption that the raiyats were holding at fixed rates of rent and in recording them as "raiyats holding at fixed rates." Bansi Das v. Jagdip Narain Chowdhry dissented from.

Carriers Act—

ss. 6, 8. Negligence. Accident. Loss by. Special contract. Suit for damages. The plaintiffs delivered to the defendants certain goods for carriage to Calcutta in a flat belonging to the defendants. The goods were carried under the terms of a special contract or forwarding note signed by the shipper. One of the conditions of the forwarding note was as follows: "The Company will not be under any liability for damages or compensation in respect of loss of or damage to goods ... except such liability as they are or may be subject to under the provisions of any law for the time being in force or of any contract other than this for the time being in existence between the Company and the shipper." While on board the defendants' flat the goods were destroyed by fire. At the trial of the case the defendants gave evidence showing the state of things before the fire occurred, the circumstances leading to the discovery of the fire (but not the cause or origin of it) and the measures taken to extinguish the fire. Held that the occurrence of a fire under the circumstances disclosed in the case without any explanation as to the origin of it was itself evidence of negligence. Held also, reversing the decision of SALE, J., that the defendants had not discharged the onus cast upon them by law of showing that there was no negligence. Central Cachar Tea Company v. Rivers Steam Navigation Company explained. Held on the construction of the above clause (per SALE, J., in the Court below, and per TREVELYAN, J., in the Court of Appeal) that the words "any law for the time being in force" must be taken to refer not to the common law, but to the law as laid down in the Carriers Act (III of 1865), and that unless their liability was enlarged by express contract, the defendant Company were liable only for loss or damage of which under section 6 of that Act they were not allowed to relieve themselves, that is only for loss occasioned by the negligence or criminal acts of themselves, their servants or agents. The decision of HILL, J., in Central Cachar Tea Company v. Rivers Steam Navigation Company followed. Semble on appeal (per MACPHERSON, J., MACLEAN, C.J., doubting) that the above construction of the clause was correct.

Misdirection—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 423—Setting aside verdict of the jury—Power of Appellate Court to deal with the case. It is the duty of the Judge to call the attention of the jury to the different elements constituting the offence, and to deal with the evidence by which it is proposed to make the accused liable. Failure to do so amounts to misdirection. Queen-Empress v. Balya Somya followed. Statements by some of the accused persons, which do not amount to a confession, and which do not in any way incriminate them, are not admissible in evidence against any persons other than those making them. Omission to direct the jury that in dealing with the evidence against the accused other than those making the statements they are not to take into consideration such statements, also amounts to misdirection. If the verdict of the jury is set aside on any of the grounds mentioned in cl. (d) of s. 423 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of

Misdirection—Erroneous verdict owing to misdirection—Failure of justice Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) ss 418 423 (d) and 537 On a charge of rape the Judge in his charge to the jury said "You will observe that this sexual intercourse was against the girl's will and without her consent etc" instead of saying, as he ought to have done "you will have to determine upon the evidence in this case whether the intercourse was against the girl's will etc", and the charge went on in the same style of stating to the jury what had been proved instead of leaving to them to decide what in their opinion was proved In the concluding sentence of the charge the Judge said "You have seen the witnesses and I have no doubt that you will return a just verdict" Held that such a charge amounted to a clear misdirection and that the verdict was erroneous owing to such misdirection Even the concluding sentence did not satisfy the requirements for a proper charge The provisions in s 423 (d) and s 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code do not require that the Court is to go through the facts and find for itself whether the verdict is actually erroneous upon the facts

Article 134 of the second schedule of the Indian Limitation Act (XV of 1877) applies to such a suit. The difference between the provisions of s. 539 of the Civil Procedure Code and those of 52 George III, cap. 101 (Romilly's Act) pointed out. Persons having a right to worship in a temple are within the scope of s. 539. Under that section, as originally enacted, the words were "having a direct interest in the trust," and the word "direct" has been taken out by Act VII of 1888. The inference is that the Legislature intended to allow persons having the same sort of interest that is sufficient under s. 14 of Act XX of 1863 to maintain a suit under s. 539. The Collector in giving his consent to the institution of a suit under s. 539 has to exercise his judgment in the matter, and see not only whether the persons suing are persons having an interest in the trust, but also whether the trust is a public trust of the kind contemplated by the section, and whether there are prima facie grounds for thinking that there has been a breach of trust. But where the form of the permission showed that he had omitted to exercise his judgment in the matter of the interest of the plaintiffs in the trust such omission was held to be a mere irregularity and within the scope of s. 578 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Collision—

Damage by a ship under way colliding with another at anchor—Burden of justifying—Duty of ship at anchor. Where a ship under way comes into collision with another at anchor in a proper place and showing at night an anchor light, it is obvious that the burden of justifying is heavily cast on the ship under way. At the same time there is an obligation on the anchored ship to keep a competent watch to show an anchor light, and to do everything to avert a collision and lessen the damage from it. If, as was the case here, the damaged ship is placed in a difficulty entirely by the erroneous course or conduct of the other, and is obliged to take a step on the instant, she is entitled to claim from a Court a favourable consideration for her action, even if that should afterwards appear not to have been the best possible. A steamship, entering the fairway of a river with the tide flowing, collided with the promovent's tug at anchor in a proper place, and showing an anchor light. Near the tug was a pilot brig, astern of which the steamship wanted to round attempting to pass between the tug and the brig. She could, however, have taken a course astern of both. At the approach of the steamship both the anchored vessels, heading against the tide, hove on their anchors, and drifted back. The justification set up by the owners of the steamship was that she was misled by the pilot brig's drifting, the anchor light of the latter having been kept up. Blame to a third ship, if blame there were, was held to be no excuse for the colliding ship, as against the tug's complaint. The main charge against the tug was that she did not slack away chain as soon as there was danger, but hove on her anchor. It was found, however, that if the tug were already drifting when the collision took place, there was no reason to suppose that by slacking away chain at the earliest possible moment the collision would have been averted, or lessened in force. On the other hand, the facts against the impugnant's steamship were: (1) that her course could, without difficulty, have been directed so that, by going astern of the tug from the port side instead of crossing her bows, all risk of collision would have been avoided; (2) that there was a want of sufficient look-out on board the steamship, especially as regarded the tug; (3) that there was possibly also a miscalculation on the part of the steamship of the room to pass, with reference to the force and set of the tide. She was, accordingly, alone held to blame, and her owners liable in damages.

Commission in Criminal Case—

Commission to examine witness—Purdanashin lady—Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882), ss. 6, 7, 503, 504, 505, 506, 507—Presidency Magistrate, Power of. It is doubtful if a Presidency Magistrate in the Town of Calcutta has power to issue a commission under ss. 503 to 507 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to examine a witness residing within his own jurisdiction; but there is nothing in the Code to prevent a Presidency Magistrate examining a witness within his jurisdiction at some place other than the Court House. Where a Presidency Magistrate, refused, on the ground of want of jurisdiction, to grant a commission for the examination of a purdanashin lady, but offered to take her evidence in his Court when cleared for the purpose, or in his private room in the Court house, and she applied to the High Court for a commission being granted, or for such other order as they might deem proper, the High Court on revision directed that if the lady would take a house or suite of rooms not far from the Magistrate's Court, and pay all the costs which the Magistrate deemed reasonable and proper, he should not enforce her attendance in Court, but examine her in the place so appointed, in the presence of the parties concerned, and in the manner in which purdanashin ladies are ordinarily examined.

Appropriation by vendor — Passing of property — Power of re-sale — Contract Act (IX of 1872) s 107 and ss 77 78 79 82 and 83 Measure of damages Changing shape of claim Evidence Amendment of plaint The plaintiff under several contracts with the defendant produced by manufacture goods answering to the description of the contracts and appropriated them to the several contracts On notice of the production of the goods being given to the defendant he directed the goods so appropriated to be marked and despatched for shipment according to certain instructions The plaintiffs carried out these instructions but the goods could not be shipped as the vessels in which they were to be shipped were not available at their usual place Held the ownership in the goods was transferred to the defendant and the plaintiffs became entitled under s 107 of the Contract Act after due notice to re-sell them on the defendant's refusal to take delivery and to recover as damages the difference between the contract price of the goods and the price at which they were resold Semble —The proper course to be adopted when it is sought to shape a claim for damages differently from what appears in the plaint is to amend the plaint and add a claim for damages on the basis of that amendment Then at the trial evidence may be given in support of the amended statement But that course ought not to be allowed to be adopted after the plaintiffs have once closed their case and the defendants have been called on to meet the claim as originally framed in the plaint Yule & Co v Mahomed Hossain followed

Appropriation by vendor — Sale of unascertained goods — Passing of property — Breach of contract — Power of re-sale — Contract Act (IX of 1872) s 107 — Measure of damages The contract was for sale by description of 15 bales of grey shirtings (to arrive) at an agreed price It was found that the 15 bales which were tendered by the plaintiff did answer the description, but the defendants refused to accept them, alleging that they were wrongly marked Under the contract of sale the plaintiffs had an express power of re-sale After giving notice to the defendants they had the goods re-sold at auction and bought them in themselves as the highest bidders. Then they brought an action for the difference between the contract price and the price realized at the re-sale, framing the suit as for loss on re-sale and not for damages for breach of the contract. Held, the defendants having refused to accept the goods, the property in them remained in the vendors (plaintiffs) and the re-sale had no effect whatever. To such a case as this neither s. 107 of the Contract Act, nor the proviso for re-sale in the contract itself, can have any application. Such power is required when the property in the goods has passed to the purchaser, subject to the lien of the vendor for the unpaid purchase money. The plaintiffs were entitled to receive only the difference between the market price of the day and the contract price, and that was the true measure of damages.

Hindu widow—Reversioners—Settlement of dispute—Ikrarnamah—Condition in restraint of lease—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 10 and 15. In an ikrarnamah executed by a Hindu widow on the one side and her husband's cousins on the other in settlement of disputes regarding her husband's estate, one of the conditions agreed upon was that if either of the parties should want to execute a lease jointly or individually "it would be executed and delivered by mutual consultation of both the parties," and if "the document be not signed and consented to by both parties, it shall be null and void." In a suit brought on the basis of the ikrarnamah to set aside a lease granted by the widow: Held, there is nothing in any statute law which renders such a provision inoperative; neither ss. 10 and 15 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) nor any principle underlying them is applicable to it; it is not an unreasonable provision, there was no absence of equity in the arrangement, and effect should be given to it.
KULDIP SINGH v. KHETRANI KOER XXV 869

Sale of goods—Brokers' bought and sold notes—Special place of delivery "to be mentioned hereafter"—Disclosure of principal—Assessment of damages—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 49, 94, 231—Damages. Bought and sold notes of Purneah indigo seed provided: "The seed to be delivered at any place in Bengal in March and April 1891." It was added: "the place of delivery to be mentioned hereafter." The buyer made mention of this on the 20th March 1891 in a letter to the broker for both parties. This letter specifying Howrah Railway station as the place was forwarded to the vendor, who replied that he would deliver at his own godowns at Sulkea. This the buyer declined. The vendor and the buyer each insisting that the place named by him was the proper one for delivery, the buyer refused to accept at the vendor's godowns or at any place other than Howrah station. The vendor remained for a certain time ready and willing to deliver at his godowns at Sulkea, and the buyer not accepting delivery at that place, the vendor declared the contract cancelled. The buyer then sued him for breach of the contract to deliver at the place mentioned by the buyer. On the question whether the vendor had discharged his liability by readiness and willingness to deliver at his own godowns at Sulkea: Held, that the choice of place given originally by the contract to the buyer, subject only to the express contract that it must be in Bengal and to the implied one that it must be reasonable, had not been converted by the words about "mention thereafter" into a deferred question to be settled by a subsequent agreement. The buyer, according to the contract already subsisting, had the right to fix the place. There was a special promise in the contract as to the delivery, and to complete its terms nothing more was required than a mention by the buyer of a reasonable place within Bengal. This had been made by him. The contract, therefore, did not fall within s. 94 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872) dealing with cases where there has been no special promise as to delivery and fixing the place of production as the place for delivery, but rather resembled what was contemplated in s. 49. And the buyer was entitled to damages on the contract.

Sale of unascertained goods—Breach of contract—Power of re-sale—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 107—Damages. The plaintiffs sold to the defendant under an "indent" contract ten cases of tobacco at an agreed price. On arrival the defendant refused to pay for and take delivery of the goods on the ground that they were not the goods contracted for. After notice to the defendant the plaintiffs re-sold the goods and sued to recover the expenses of the re-sale, and the difference between the price realized and the contract price with interest. Held, that cl. 1 of the "indent" contract gave the plaintiffs a right to re-sell the goods, and sue for the damages mentioned therein. Section 107 of the Contract Act had no bearing on the case. Yule & Co. v. Mahommed Hossain dissented from.

Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882), s. 22—Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (I of 1895) s. 11—Suit brought before, but determined after, the passing of Act I of 1895—Certificate for costs—General Clauses Consolidation Act (I of 1868), s. 6. The plaintiff, before the passing of Act I of 1895, instituted in the High Court a suit to recover from the defendant a sum of over Rs. 2,000, which was reduced to a sum of less than Rs. 2,000 before the hearing and therefore below the limit for suits cognizable by the Small Cause Court. At the time of its institution Act XV of 1882 was applicable, by s. 22 of which Act a plaintiff was deprived, in a suit cognizable by the Small Cause Court, of his costs if he obtained a decree "for less than 2,000 rupees" unless the Judge who tried it certified it was a fit case to be tried in the High Court. The suit was not determined until after the passing of Act I of 1895, s. 11, of which the deprivation of costs applied to cases in which the plaintiff obtained a decree for less than 1,000 rupees. The Judge made a decree in favour of the plaintiff, and, without certifying that the case was one fit to be brought in the High Court, he allowed the plaintiff the costs of the suit. Held, on appeal, that the case was governed by s. 6 of the General Clauses Consolidation Act (I of 1868). Act I of 1895 was not applicable, and the plaintiff was not entitled to his costs of suit. The principle of Deb Narain Dutt v. Narendra Krishna applied.

An offence under s. 9 of the Opium Act (I of 1878), and not coming under s. 14 of that Act, is a non-cognizable offence and is therefore one for which by s. 4 of the Criminal Procedure Code a Police Officer cannot arrest without warrant; and he has therefore under s. 155 of the Code no authority to investigate such an offence without the order of a Magistrate; nor under s. 165 can he make a search in respect of it. The power of arrest without warrant referred to in cl. (q) of s. 4 of the Criminal Procedure Code is an unqualified power, and not a conditional power, as in s. 24 of Act XIII of 1857, which only gives the right to a Police Officer to arrest without warrant in case the accused does not furnish the security required by that section. Where a Police Officer, therefore, in respect of an offence under s. 9 of the Opium Act, not coming under s. 14 of that Act, made a search in the house of the accused without an order of a Magistrate: Held that his action could not be justified, either under s. 24 of Act XIII of 1857, or under the Code of Criminal Procedure, and that he was liable in an action, for damages for the illegal search.

The order of dismissal of an appeal under s. 551 of the Civil Procedure Code, being a final determination of, and an adjudication on, the questions raised in the appeal, is a "decree"; and in this respect there is no distinction between an appeal which is dismissed under s. 551 of the Civil Procedure Code, and an appeal which is dismissed under any other section of the Code after full hearing. Royal Reddi v. Linga Reddi referred to. When an appeal is dismissed under s. 551 of the Civil Procedure Code, or in the case of a second appeal when the decree is one of dismissal, the effect practically is to make the decree which is confirmed the final decree to be executed in the suit; and the High Court making such order has power to amend the decree of the lower Court which has been in effect confirmed by it, so as to bring it in conformity with the judgment which is also confirmed.

Forest Act—

VII of 1878—

Ch. IX, ss. 45 to 56. Drift and stranded timber, Right of Government, under s. 45, to collect and store, with obligation to notify—Meaning of "julkur"—Test of Res judicata—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 13. The object of Ch. IX of the Indian Forest Act, 1878, is to regulate the rights of owners, and not to deprive them of their property in drift and stranded timber and wood Section 45 of that Act does not divest the owner of, or transfer to the Government, any right therein. Nor does anything in the Act affect the right of the Government to take possession and dispose of timber and wood whereof they are the undisputed owners. But, upon certain conditions only, the Government have a right to the possession of any drift and stranded timber and wood, collected by their officers, which, however, may be claimed by the true owner, who may be a person holding a julkur, or water right, comprehending those things. The conditions are that the officers of Government shall store the timber in the manner, and issue the notifications, required by the Act. In case of such procedure not being followed, and the wood being treated as the property of the Government, the latter are, in the event of the wood being found not to belong to them, in no better position than any other trespasser. The title to collect given to the Government by the Act is coupled with and dependent upon, the duty of giving notice to the public, in order that the true owner, whether he be a person from whom the wood has drifted away, or the owner of a julkur, or however he may be entitled, may claim the drifted timber in the manner, and within the time, prescribed by the Act. There is no presumptive ownership of the Government save where their officers collect, and hold, for the true owner, in the first instance, subject to the statutory duty of giving notice The Government having taken possession of drift timber in the river Teesta as having an absolute right thereto, the zamindar owning land on the bank asserted by this suit his right to it, on the ground of his owning the julkur where the river passed by, and through his lands. This julkur, as he showed, had been decreed in 1882 to his predecessor in estate, in a suit against the Government. Held, that this term, signifying water-right, was aptly used to include the right to drift and stranded timber as well as to fishings, or other interest of a similar kind in the produce of the river—a right decreed in the above suit. The rule is that where a final decree is couched in general terms, the extent to which it ought to be regarded as res judicata can only be determined by ascertaining what were the real matters of controversy in the cause. That the question of the right to drift and stranded timber was included in the julkur, decreed in 1882, was, in their Lordships' opinion, established by intrinsic evidence in the record of that suit. They concurred with the High Court that correspondence and orders by officers, of dates subsequent to the former decree, could not be received as aids to its construction. But the record showed that the right was in controversy before the judge, and that he meant to include it in the julkur, which he decreed. The zamindar's claim was, therefore, adjudged to be established.

Abetment of forgery by writing out the deed--Unregistered document purporting to be a valuable security—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 109, 114, and 467. The accused was not only the writer but also took an active part in the preparation of a document, the alleged executant of which was dead before the date of the document, and the person who really had an interest under the document was convicted under s. 82 of the Registration Act (III of 1877). But evidence was wanting to show that the accused took any part in the forgery of the name of the alleged executant: Held, that the accused could not be convicted of the offence of forgery under s. 467 of the Penal Code. There being nothing on the record to show that the accused was a party to, or took any part in, the actual forgery of the document, or that he was present on the occasion when it was forged, the proper section to convict him under would be s. 457/109, that is of abetment of forgery, and not s. 467/114. An unregistered document, though it may not be a valuable security until the registration is completed, "still" purports to be a valuable security within the meaning of s. 467 of the Penal Code. Queen-Empress v. Ramasami approved of.

Appointment of guardian—Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), ss. 9 and 17—Application by a Christian father to be appointed guardian of his Hindu minor son—Matters to be considered by the Court in appointing guardian. A, who was originally a Hindu, but afterwards became a Christian and abandoned his family residence, applied to be the guardian of the person of his minor son. On the objections of the paternal and maternal uncles of the boy that, under the circumstances of the case, the father was not a fit and proper person to be appointed the guardian of the minor. Held, although the father is primâ facie entitled to the custody of his infant child, he can be deprived of such parental right if the circumstances justify it; therefore in a case where a child who was brought up as a Hindu, and who expressed a desire to remain a Hindu, and was living with his Hindu relation, who was maintaining him and was looking after his education properly, it would not be to the welfare of the child that he should be handed over to the father and brought up in the Christian faith, and that the Court below, under the circumstances of the case, was right in dismissing the application.

Guardian ad litem—Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), s. 53—Civil Procedure Code, s. 443, as amended by s. 53 of Act VIII of 1890—Minor, Representation of, in suit. Section 53 of Act VIII of 1890, amending the Code of Civil Procedure, expressly requires the appointment of a guardian ad litem, whether or not a guardian is appointed under Act VIII of 1890. In a suit against a minor, the summons was attempted to be served on his guardian appointed under Act VIII of 1890, but no guardian ad litem was appointed in the suit. The suit was decreed ex parte, no one having appeared for the minor. Held, that the decree must be set aside and the case sent back in order that the minor might be represented in accordance with law and the case retried.

Section 2 of the Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890) does not give retrospective effect to s. 30, which, therefore, does not apply to a mortgage executed before the Act came into operation, so as to destroy its void character and render it merely voidable.

Will. Construction of Will—Adoption—Power to adopt—Validity of power to widow and executors to adopt—Exercise of such power by widow with consent of the surviving executor—Direction for accumulation with proper limitation—Right of adopted son to the corpus and surplus income during the lifetime of the adoptive mother. The testator by his will authorised and empowered his wife to adopt a son in the following words: "I hereby authorize and empower my wife and executrix, and my executors and trustees, to whom I give full permission and liberty to adopt after my decease a son, and in case of his death during his minority or on attaining his full age, and without leaving male issue to adopt a second son and in case of his death during minority or on attaining such age and without leaving male issue to adopt a third son, and no more, etc. Held: The power of adoption was valid. The testator associated the other executors with his wife for the purpose of ensuring a wise exercise of her discretion in the selection of a son for adoption and not with the intention of making it an essential condition of adoption that they should take a part in the ceremony of adoption from which under the Hindu law they were precluded. Held also: The power was given to the executors quâ executors, and therefore survived to the holders for the time being of the office of executors; the death of one of them before the power was exercised did not therefore render the power void. The power was validly exercised by the wife adopting with the consent of the surviving executor. The mere fact of the surviving executor not having actually and physically taken in adoption was not a failure to comply with the terms of the power. In the ninth clause of the will the testator, after directing certain payments to be made out of the income of the estate, proceeded as follows: "But in no case shall such adopted son have or exercise any control or dominion over my estate and effects until the death of my wife; after which event I direct my said executors and trustees to make over the whole of my estate and effects, both real and personal, moveable or immoveable, whatsoever and wheresoever and of what nature or quality soever, to such adopted son who shall survive my wife, if he shall have attained his age of eighteen years during the lifetime of my wife or on his so attaining such age after her decease to whom and his heirs I give, devise and bequeath the same" Held The second adopted son was not presently entitled to the surplus income or profits of the properties until the death of his adoptive mother, not to have the corpus (even after provision being made for the payments mentioned in the will) of the estate made over to him It is not incompetent for a Hindu testator with proper limitation to direct an accumulation of the income of property which under his will vests in his executors or trustees In the absence of special provision the limit must be that which determines the period during which the course or devolution of property can be directed and controlled by a testator.

The gift over was to the effect that any one acting contrary to the terms of the will should be deprived of his interest which should in due course devolve on the other heirs It was found on the evidence that forfeiture under cl 4 of the will had been incurred by the defendant B the younger widow of the testator by reason of her having broken the condition relating to residence Held that s 82 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865) which enacts that "where property is bequeathed to any person he is entitled to the whole interest of the testator therein unless it appears from the will that only a restricted interest was intended for him applied to the case Held also that the will gave only a restricted interest to the widows and that cl 2 of the will should be construed as giving to the widows as joint tenants a life interest in a twelve annas share of the estate with the right of survivorship The clause in the will as to residence was valid and binding Held further that the plaintiff the son of testator's sister who was in existence at the date of the testator's death and who was the next reversionary heir after his widows was entitled to take under the gift over and not the heir to the stridhana of P the elder widow of the testator

Suit for rent of a fishery—Uncertainty as to jurisdiction—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), s. 16 A—Immoveable property—Right of fishery. A suit for rent of a fishery is a suit for immoveable property within the meaning of s. 16 A of the Code of Civil Procedure. Fadu Jhala v. Gour Mohun Jhala referred to. A suit for rent of a fishery was brought in a certain Court, and there was reasonable ground of uncertainty as to the jurisdiction of that Court to entertain the suit. On an objection that the suit ought to fail for want of jurisdiction: Held, that the conditions required by s. 16A of the Civil Procedure Code had been satisfied in the case, and that the objection as to jurisdiction ought not to be entertained.

Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 11 -Bengal Municipal Act (Bengal Act III of 1884)—Ellection of Municipal Commissioners -Right to vote and stand as candidate at an election - Suit for declaratory decree Parties to suit—Magistrate. At an election of Municipal Commissioners held under the Bengal Municipal Act (Bengal Act III of 1884), S, one of the candidates, was declared to have been elected: a poll was demanded, and S was again declared by the presiding officer to have been duly elected. An objection was then taken by the defeated candidates before the Magistrate of the district on the ground that some of the voters gave more votes than there were vacancies, and also on the ground that S was not qualified to be registered as a voter and to stand as a candidate for election. The Magistrate set aside the election on both grounds; and S brought a suit in the Civil Court for a declaration of his right to vote and stand as a candidate and for a declaration that he was duly elected. Held that the suit was one of a civil nature, and under s. 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure (XIV of 1882) such a suit would lie in the Civil Court. Held, also, that the Magistrate should not have been made a defendant in the suit, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to a declaration that the election of the plaintiff was good and valid; but that the decree of the first Court granting a declaration of plaintiff's right to vote and stand as candidate was correct.

Jurisdiction of Criminal Court—

Criminal Jurisdiction along the Railway through Indian Independent State—Locality of crime—Illegal arrest on lands occupied by the Hyderabad State Railway. The authority for the exercise of criminal jurisdiction by the Government of India upon lands within the limits of the Hyderabad State Railway is derived from a grant to that Government in 1887 by His Highness the Nizam as ruler of the territory. The Railway lands remain part of his dominions. The grant of civil and criminal jurisdiction contained in the correspondence of that year between the Nizam's Minister and the Resident at Hyderabad is expressed to be "along the line of Railway as is the case on other lines running through Independent States." This jurisdiction, notwithstanding any words in the Notification of the Government of India of the 22nd March 1888 (which could not of itself give any authority, or add to that granted by the Nizam), does not justify the arrest on the lands of the Hyderabad State Railway of a subject of the Nizam under the warrant of the Magistrate of a District in British India, on a charge of a criminal offence committed in British India, and unconnected with the Hyderabad Railway administration. The mere presence of the accused on the railway lands, over which criminal jurisdiction had been granted as above, was no legal ground for his arrest under the warrant of the Court in British India, his offence, if committed at all, not having been committed on those lands and not having been connected with the railway.

The accused was tried by a jury for an offence triable with the aid of assessors, and the jury by a majority found him "not guilty." The Sessions Judge, who disagreed with the verdict, convicted the accused, treating the verdict of the jury as the opinion of assessors. Held, that the conviction was bad, inasmuch as the case was validly "tried by a jury" within the meaning of s. 536 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), and the trial was complete when the jury had returned their verdict; and that the Judge was bound, under the circumstances, either to give judgment in accordance with the verdict, or, if he disagreed with it, to submit the case for the orders of the High Court as provided by ss. 306 and 307 of the Code. In the matter of Bhoot Nath Dey followed. In a trial by jury, the accused were charged with offences under the Penal Code. The Judge while charging the jury omitted to explain the law by which they were to be guided The jury returned a verdict of guilty on all counts except one, and the Judge agreeing with the verdict convicted the accused. Held, that the omission to explain the law to the jury amounted to a misdirection vitiating the verdict within the meaning of s. 423 (d), Criminal Procedure Code. *Wafadar Khan v. Waste land subsequently made cultivable —Presumption —Possession Onus Probandi —Constructive possession The doctrine of constructive possession applies only in favour of a rightful owner and must not (as a rule) be extended in favour of a wrong doer whose possession must be confined to land of which he is actually in possession In a suit for the possession of lands formerly uncultivable, but subsequently brought under cultivation the District Judge had allowed the plea of limitation to prevail against the plaintiff upon a finding based not upon evidence of actual possession by the defendants but upon an inference from part of the evidence —that the defendants had been in constructive possession for over 12 years prior to the suit Held that so far as the judgment and decree of the District Judge related to certain plots described as patit or uncultivable lands they must be set aside and the case remanded to the District Judge to determine (a) how far the presumption in favour of the plaintiff as to the continuance of the uncultivable state of the lands till within twelve years of suit applied and (b) how far that presumption had been rebutted by evidence of actual possession on the part of the defendants from the joint owners of an under-tenure, their estate was saved from sale. In respect of a proportionate share of liability for money raised for this purpose one the joint owners became liable to be sued by another of them for contribution; and a question arose as to the application of art. 61 of sch. II of the Limitation Act, 1877. More than three years before this suit all the joint owners had filed in Court a petition for the appointment of a manager of their estate who should, out of its profits, pay debts and interest to creditors from whom had been borrowed the money for the payment into Court. Held, that this was an acknowledgment of the joint debt by the co-owner who had not contributed, within s. 19 of the Limitation Act; whence had followed the legal consequences, one of which was her liability to be sued within due time for contribution. Whilst the three years from the date of that acknowledgment were running, and at a date less than three years before this suit, interest on part of the money borrowed had been paid by the manager whom the appellant, jointly with the other co-owners of the estate, had authorized, as her agent, to pay it. Held, that this interest, being clearly a payment in exoneration, pro tanto, of the plaintiff's liability, was such a payment as was contemplated by s. 20, and gave a new departure for the period of limitation.

defendants for possession of immoveable property and damages on 21st May 1886. Against that decree all the defendants, except defendant No. 1, appealed, and on 2nd July 1887 so much of the decree was reversed as made the appealing defendants liable for damages, but was affirmed in all other respects. A second appeal by the plaintiff from the decree of the Appellate Court was dismissed by the High Court on 9th July 1888. An application for execution of the decree was made by the plaintiff on 7th July 1891 within three years from the date of the final decree, dated 9th July 1888. The prayer was for issue of notice on the judgment-debtor for delivery of possession, for attachment and sale of certain immoveable properties, for realization of costs and damages decreed. Notice under s. 248 of the Code of Civil Procedure was issued on the judgment-debtors on 8th September 1891. The judgment-debtors, except defendant No. 1, objected that, as the application did not contain the right number of suit and date of decree, it was not in accordance with law, and as no other application had been made within three years from date of decree, the execution was barred by limitation. Defendant No. 1 objected that limitation as against him would run from 21st May 1886, there being no appeal by or against him from the decree of that date. Held, that material defects only could vitiate an application, and as the defects in the present application for execution were not material, it was not barred by limitation. Asgar Ali v. Troilokya Nath Ghose and Gopal Shah v. Janki Koer distinguished. Held, also, that even if such application was defective as an application for execution of decree it was still an application to take some step in aid of execution, namely, to issue a notice under s. 248, which was necessary, the decree having been passed more than a year before; and such notice having been issued, it kept the decree alive. Behari Lal v. Salik Ram, and Dhonkal v. Phakkar referred to. Held, further, that limitation against defendant No. 1 would run from date of the decree in appeal, therefore the application for execution was not barred by limitation. Gunga Moyee v. Shib Sunker followed. Moshiat-un-nissa v. Rani distinguished.

art. 180. Execution of decree—Revivor—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 223, 230, 248 (a)—Insolvent, Adverse possession of—Attachment. A creditor obtained a decree against his debtor on the Original Side of the High Court on the 19th December 1881. On the 11th December 1893, the judgment-creditor applied to the Court, under s. 223 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for "transmission of a certified copy of the decree to the District Judge's Court of the 24-Pergunnahs, with a certificate that no portion of the decree has been satisfied by execution within the jurisdiction of the High Court," and alleging that the judgment-debtor had no property within its jurisdiction, but had property in the 24-Pergunnahs. The application was headed as an application for execution and was in a tabular form Upon this a notice was issued under s. 248 (a) of the Code, and, the judgment-debtor not having shown any cause, on 19th December 1893 a certified copy of the decree was ordered to be issued. The certified copy of the decree having been transmitted, the judgment-creditor on the 1st March 1894 applied for the execution of the decree to the District Judge. On the objections of the judgment-debtor that the execution was barred by limitation, and that he having been declared an insolvent, and the properties having vested in the Official Assignee, the attachment was contrary to law, held, that the execution was not barred by limitation, as the order of the 19th December of 1893 was an order for execution, and operated as a revivor of the decree within the meaning of art. 180, sch. II of the Limitation Act. Held, also, that the judgment-debtor having been in possession of the property for more than 12 years, the Official Assignee not having taken possession of it, he had a title by adverse possession which was capable of being attached. Ashootosh Dutt v. Doorga Churn Chatterjee and Futteh Narain Chowdhry v. Chandrabati Chowdhrain followed.

Although Act XXXV of 1858 contains no express provisions as to the place of residence of a lunatic governed by the Act, it contemplates that he shall reside within the jurisdiction of the Court that has found him to be a lunatic. The guardian of such a lunatic's person is, in matters connected with the guardianship, subordinate to the District Court which appointed him. A guardian, having obtained leave from the District Judge to take the lunatic out of the jurisdiction for a specified time, was, at the expiration of that time, ordered to return with the lunatic to his residence within the local jurisdiction. He failed to comply with the order. Without further notice, the District Judge, by certain orders which he gave by letter and telegram through the manager of the lunatic's estate, suspended the guardian from his office, and directed him to make over the custody of the lunatic to the manager. The guardian made over the custody accordingly; and then applied to the High Court under s. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to set aside those orders, and restore the custody of the lunatic to him at Calcutta (outside the jurisdiction of the Court to which the lunatic was subject). The High Court declined to interfere, even though the orders were made irregularly; because no case for its intervention had been made out, and because the lunatic ought not to be removed out of the local jurisdiction.

Jurisdiction of. Disqualification of Magistrate to try case—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 202, 540, 555—Summons case. Where a Magistrate before whom a complaint was made held an inquiry under s. 202 of the Criminal Procedure Code for the purpose of ascertaining the truth or falsehood of the complaint before issuing process, and, after holding such inquiry, summoned the accused, examined witnesses on both sides, and, after a short adjournment examined a witness called by himself, and found the accused guilty under s. 341 of the Penal Code. Held, that there is nothing in the Criminal Procedure Code which disqualifies a Magistrate who holds a preliminary inquiry under s. 202 from trying the case himself, and that the provisions of s. 555 had no application, inasmuch as the Magistrate had not initiated or directed the proceedings against the accused person nor taken an active part in the arrest or collection of evidence against such person: Held, also that the Magistrate was strictly within his rights under s. 540 of the Criminal Procedure Code in receiving fresh evidence, after evidence on both sides had been taken, and the case adjourned for judgment, inasmuch as the case was still a pending case when such evidence was taken.

The commitment of a case under s. 147 of the Penal Code to the Court of Session by a Deputy Magistrate is not necessarily illegal. Although the case is shown to be triable only by a Magistrate under the second schedule of the Criminal Procedure Code there is nothing in s. 254 of the Criminal Procedure Code which prevents a Magistrate committing a case under s. 147 of the Penal Code to the Court of Session, provided he finds that the accused has committed an offence which, in his opinion, cannot be adequately punished by him. Will—Right of childless widow—Administration of the estate of a Shiah Mahomedan under his will—Alleged gift—Claims as between his childless widow and the estate—Right of the widow to maintenance—Legacies chargeable on one-third only of the estate—Commission to executor. A Mahomedan of the Shiah sect, dying without issue, left a widow. She, as his childless widow, was entitled to one-fourth of his estate other than land. On the administration of his estate the following matters arose, and were decided. The handing over, with formal words of gift by the testator to the widow, of deposit receipts, with intent afterwards to transfer the money into her name at the Bank, which transfer was not effected, would not constitute a gift. A commission of three per cent. on the proceeds of the sale of the testator's property, directed, by his will was bequeathed to the executor. This was by way of remuneration but was in no sense a debt. As a legacy it was payable only out of one third of the estate which passed by the will. A Mahomedan widow is not entitled to maintenance out of the estate of her late husband, in addition to what she is entitled to by inheritance, or under his will—Hedaya, Book IV, chap. 15, s. 3, Mahomedan law, Imamia, by N. E. Baillie, p. 170, referred to. No contract could be implied that this widow should pay an occupation rent on account of her having continued to occupy a house belonging to the testator's estate, for eleven months after his death. Her occupation was referable to her position, and no notice was given to her that rent would be charged. A Mahomedan childless widow is not by Shiah law entitled to share in the value of land forming the site of buildings that belonged to her husband's estate Her one-fourth includes, as was admitted, a share in the proceeds of sale of the buildings. The text quoted in Book VII, chap. IV., p. 293 of Baillie's Mahomedan Law, Imamia, is not to be construed as referring only to agricultural land.

Order of Criminal Court as to—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 488—Imprisonment for default of payment of maintenance—Warrant of commitment—Procedure. An order of commitment to prison for default in payment of a wife's maintenance allowance cannot be made without proof that the non-payment was due to wilful neglect of the person ordered to pay. Sidheswar Teor v. Gyanada Dasi followed. The law contemplates a single warrant of commitment in respect of the arrears due at the time of its issue. Where six months' arrears were due, an order for separate warrants of commitment awarding a separate sentence of imprisonment of one month on each warrant was, therefore, held to be bad in law. As to the mode of computing the term of imprisonment, the case of Allapichai Ravuthar v. Mohidin Bibi followed.

Wrongful admission of title against a minor—Suppression of facts by a manager appointed by the Court of Wards—Order of Settlement Court cancelled. At a settlement of a district in Oudh a sub-settlement was decreed in conformity with Act XXVI of 1866, which legalizes rules as to claims in respect of subordinate rights to land. The claimant alleged himself to be, in virtue of a birt tenure held by him, under-proprietor of a village within the taluk of a talukdar then a minor, whose estate was under charge of the Court of Wards, whose representative, the Deputy Commissioner of the District, had appointed a manager of the estate. This manager having reported favourably on the claim, the Deputy Commissioner sanctioned its admission ; whereupon a decree for sub-settlement was made on the 30th June 1871. The present suit was brought by the talukdar, after attaining full age, to have that decree set aside as having been obtained by fraud and collusion. That the manager was brother of the alleged birt-holder, and that he was family shareholder with him in the village—facts which the manager had suppressed, were facts proved in this suit. The defendants attempted, but failed, to establish by evidence the existence of the alleged birt. Held, that the admission in the Settlement Court in 1871 was not binding on the plaintiff, and that, even assuming that the defendants' ancestor had been in some way in occupancy before 1857, the evidence was quite insufficient to show that a grant of a perpetual under-proprietary right had been obtained. The decree of the Lower Appellate Court, cancelling the Settlement Court's order, was therefore upheld.

The plaintiffs, who were husband and wife, brought a suit to recover a certain sum of money, part of which was alleged to have been paid by plaintiff No. 1, who was a co-sharer with the defendants in two putnis, to save the putnis from being sold for arrears of rent; and the remainder by plaintiff No. 2, who alleged that she had a subordinate miras taluk under the two putnis granted to her by plaintiff No. 1 and that the sale would have resulted in the cancellation of her miras taluk. In second appeal it was contended by the respondent, in support of the decree made by the Court below dismissing the claim of plaintiff No. 2, that the claim was liable to dismissal by reason of its involving the misjoinder of plaintiffs with different causes of action. This objection had been raised in the written statement, and the Court was asked to raise an issue on the point. In answer to this contention it was urged by the appellants that as the respondents went to trial upon the merits, it was not open to them to urge any objection like this to the frame of the suit on second appeal. Held, that the suit was bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs, as the suit of plaintiff No. 2 ought properly to have been brought against all the holders of the putnis, including plaintiff No. 1, and not merely against the defendants in the suit. Held, further that it was open to the respondents to raise the objection as to misjoinder in second appeal. Tarinee Churn Ghose v. Hunsman Jha distinguished; Smurthwaite v. Hannay referred to.

Cremation—Burning-ghat or cremation ground—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 133, 140, 437—Jurisdiction of District Magistrate to order further inquiry, in a proceeding under s. 133 of the Code—"Legalized Nuisance"—Private cremation ground, Duties of owner of—" Public place "—" Trade or occupation "—Order of removal of burning-ghat—Form of notice. A District Magistrate has, strictly speaking, no power under s. 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) to order a ' further inquiry ' into a proceeding under s. 133 of the Code which has been practically dropped by a Subordinate Magistrate, the proper course being to refer the matter to the High Court. Although a burning-ghat or cremation ground may not in itself be a " nuisance " within the meaning of cl. 2, s. 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), still a Magistrate will have jurisdiction to take action under that section if it is shown that such a ghat or ground is in such an offensive state, or that cremation is carried upon it in such an offensive manner, as to be a source of injury, danger, or annoyance to persons living in the vicinity. Queen-Empress v. Samnadha Pillai and Bamford v. Turnley referred to and discussed. Brindabun Chunder Roy v. Chairman of Municipal Commissioners of Serampore distinguished. A private proprietor may be guilty of acts done on his private property, which may give rise to a public nuisance; the owner of a cremation ground may be held to create a " nuisance " if he allows the cremation of bodies upon that ground to be so performed as to annoy or endanger the lives and properties of persons living in the neighbourhood. The proprietor of a cremation ground cannot be said to be carrying on any " trade or occupation " within the meaning of cl. 3, s. 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code. A Magistrate has no power under s. 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code to order the removal of a burning-ghat from its position, but he can direct a proprietor to " remove the nuisance," i.e., to take such steps as would result in the cremation of corpses ceasing to be a nuisance to the public.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 133 and 137—Reference by Sub-Divisional Magistrate to a second class Magistrate - Bonâ fide question of title—Jurisdiction of Magistrate—Public nuisance—Obstruction in public way. A Sub-Divisional Magistrate having made a conditional order under s. 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) against a person to remove an obstruction on a public thoroughfare, or appear and show cause before a second class Magistrate, the said person appeared as directed, and the order was made absolute under s. 137. In revision the High Court held that, having regard to the penultimate paragraph of s. 133, the order was not illegal on the ground that it was made absolute by a Magistrate with second class powers other than the Magistrate who made the conditional order In re Narasimha approved of. When a question of title is bonâ fide raised the Magistrate ought not to make an order under ss. 133 and 137 of the Criminal Procedure Code, but, should allow the party an opportunity for the determination of the question by a Civil Court. The claim of title must however, be bonâ fide and not a mere pretence to oust jurisdiction, and it is for the Magistrate to say whether the claim is a bonâ fide one or a pretence. Luckeenarain Banerjee v. Ram Coomar Mookerjee and Queen Empress v. Bissessur Sahu followed. Although no length of enjoyment can legalize a public nuisance—see Municipal Commissioners of Calcutta v. Mahomed Ali—yet the long possession or enjoyment of what is said to be a nuisance may give to the objection of the person so possessing or enjoying it the character of a bonâ fide dispute as to title such as might have the effect of ousting the jurisdiction of the Magistrate under ss. 133 and 137 of the Code, and making the question a proper one for the Civil Court.

XXV of the Civil Procedure Code for the issue of a commission to take the evidence of a Mahomedan pardanashin lady, the defendant in the suit, which was brought against her on a mortgage bond, the execution of which she had denied in her written statement. The Courts below concurred in finding that there was sufficient evidence of the execution of the document by the pardanashin with full knowledge of its contents. From their judgments it appeared that if the defendant had been examined on commission and had given her testimony in support of her written statement, it would not have been believed, and in their Lordships' opinion it could not reasonably have prevailed. Held, that the error alleged by the appellant to have occurred in the refusal of the Court to issue the commission (whether or not it would have been better to have issued it) was, at all events, no valid ground of appeal. The evidence taken on the commission could not have affected the merits of the case within s. 578 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Parties—(continued.)

Adding parties as plaintiffs—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 32—Suit by benamidar. A mortgage bond was executed ostensibly in favour of R but J was the real mortgagee. A suit was brought by R, the benamidar, to enforce the bond; J, the real mortgagee, made over the debt on a date previous to the suit, but executed the formal deed of assignment on a date subsequent thereto. The assignees were then added as plaintiffs to the suit. Held, distinguishing the case of Chunder Coomar Roy v. Gocool Chunder Bhuttacharjee, that a benamidar may sue, and that the assignees were rightly added as plaintiffs under s. 32 of the Civil Procedure Code. Held, also, that s. 32 is wide enough to meet every case of defect of parties; and, further, that the power to add parties must be exercised with reference to the interests which those parties have at the time when the addition is being considered.

Parties to suit—Persons having the same interest in one cause—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 26 and 30. In a suit for the removal of masonry structures raised by one member of community of Hindu priests upon a certain platform, on which every member of the community had individual right to perform religious rites, praying also for a declaration and injunction in connection with such removal, the plaintiffs were seven persons claiming relief as the panch or committee representing the whole community, and also in their individual capacity. It was found by the Court that the plaintiffs did not constitute the panch, and that they did not in that character represent the community: Held, that s. 26 of the Civil Procedure Code (1882) was only an enabling section; it allowed the plaintiffs to bring a joint action; and should not be read as though all persons of the community must be joined as plaintiffs. Held, also, that s. 30 of the Code is an enabling section, and did not debar the plaintiffs from suing in their own right in this case.

Section 265 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not apply to a suit for partition of a revenue-paying estate when no separate allotment of revenue is asked for. A Civil Court, therefore, has jurisdiction to decree partition in such a case; and a suit for possession, after partition, of a share in part of an undivided estate, in which part alone the plaintiff has a share, is maintainable in a Civil Court if no division of revenue is sought. Debi Singh v. Sheo Lall Singh approved and followed; Meherban Rawoot v. Behari Lal Barik overruled.

In 1864 his father gave a putni lease of an undivided six annas share of the estate to the defendants' predecessors in title. The plaintiffs alleged that the land being held ijmali, although he and the defendants collected separately from the tenants their respective shares of the rent, difficulty and inconvenience had arisen in the management of the property, and he therefore sued to have his ten annas share of the land divided by metes and bounds from the six annas share of the putnidars, the land of the entire estate remaining liable as before for the entire amount of the Government revenue payable in respect of it. Held by the Full Bench that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for partition.

On an application by the defendant for an order allowing him or his 'agents to enter into the house of the plaintiff for the purpose of inspecting, examining and surveying the alleged injuries and for the purpose of examining the materials employed therein and the formations thereof, and to dig excavations for the purpose of exposing the foundations,' it was objected by the plaintiff that the Court had no jurisdiction to make the order, as the house of which inspection was sought was not the "subject of the suit" within s. 499 of the Civil Procedure Code, and that if the order could be made for inspection of the house it could not be made for inspection of the house including the zenana apartments, and further that no order could be made for the excavation of the foundations. Held, that the house and premises of the plaintiff formed the "subject of the suit" within the meaning of s. 499, and under that section the Court had power to make the order applied for. Held, also, that this was a case in which the order should be made.

The Court has authority, under s. 503 of the Civil Procedure Code, to confer on a receiver the power to sue in his own name; and if the order appointing the receiver gives him liberty, he may do so. DS executed a trust-deed, whereby he made over his property to trustees to manage his affairs and liquidate his debts in manner therein directed. The deed contained this provision : "In order to prepare a list of my debts, the trustees shall ascertain the same by looking into my books of accounts ; and they shall not admit any debt without rokur, hathchitta, or hundi bearing the signature of myself or my monib gomastas, or without decree." Held, in the absence of evidence that this deed was communicated to the creditors, that it did not create a trust in favour of the creditors, but enured only for the benefit of the executant ; that therefore the plaintiff, a creditor, was not entitled to rank as a beneficiary under it ; and that it did not create a trust in his favour so as to take out of the operation of the Limitation Act a claim that otherwise fell within it.

She contended that her costs should be paid by him as between attorney and client. The respondent submitted he ought to pay costs only as between party and party. Held, that the petitioner's costs including costs of this application, be taxed as between party and party, it being open for the attorney for the wife to sue the husband for the rest of the costs.

Practice of. Concurrent judgments on fact—Effect of reception in evidence on appeal, of documents rejected by first Court. The merits of a claim depended upon the authenticity of an anumati patro (deed of permission to adopt) alleged to have been given to a widow by her husband. The first Court found that the instrument was not genuine. The High Court, on appeal, upheld this finding, but had considered relevant, and had admitted in evidence, documents rejected by the first Court when tendered by the appellant. This reception of evidence afforded no reason for making the case an exception to the application of the rule, in the discretion of the Committee, against the disturbance of concurrent decisions upon a fact in issue below.

HURRI BHUSAN MUKERJI v. UPENDRA LAL MUKERJI ... ... XXIV 1

Practice of. Concurrent judgments on fact—Hindu Law—Alienation by one of two co-widows—Want of legal necessity. Two widows of the same husband, each having inherited her undivided share in the inheritance, disputed as to their rights therein. They then settled their dispute by a compromise in which it was agreed that each had obtained "absolute proprietary" right in her share as a co-widow, and that division had been made between them. Having no power by this to affect the rights of the successor to the estate on their deaths each was entitled to her share for her widow's estate only. Upon a mortgage made by the elder widow before her death the mortgagee now claimed, not only the interest of both the widows and thus to deprive the younger who had survived the other of her interest during her life, but also claimed a charge on the estate of her inheritance in the land mortgaged. Against the competency of the older widow to charge the estate of both and to bind the reversioner both Courts below had decided. They had found that there had been no justifying necessity established by the evidence for the mortgage. Those concurrent findings having been accepted by the Judicial Committee as correct in regard to the absence of necessity for the mortgage, they saw no occasion to say anything about any other questions as to the competency of the elder widow to mortgage the whole estate in the way in which she did.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 106—Security to keep the peace on conviction—Breach of the peace—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 448—House-trespass. An order under s. 106 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) binding down the accused to keep the peace, upon conviction for "house trespass" under s. 448 of the Indian Penal Code, cannot stand where the intention of the accused in committing the trespass was to have illicit intercourse with the complainant's wife. The Queen v. Gendoo Khan, and The Queen v. Jhapoo distinguished. It is necessary before an order under s. 106 of the Criminal Procedure Code can be made that the accused should have an opportunity of answering to an accusation for an offence of the kind upon a conviction for which such an order can be made.

Surety bond—Liability to forfeiture—Evidence necessary—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 514. The mere fact of the person for whom another stands surety being convicted of a breach of the peace ought not to be sufficient to make the surety bond executed by the latter liable to forfeiture without any evidence taken in the presence of the surety to show that the forfeiture has been incurred. The language of s. 514 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) does not indicate that the final order making a person bound by a bond can be made without taking any evidence in his presence or giving him any opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses on whose evidence the forfeiture is held to be Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 13—Issue decided in a previous suit not subject to second appeal—Same issue raised in a subsequent suit subject to appeal—Landlord and tenant—Suit for rent—Instalment—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 53 and 153—Second appeal. The question relating to instalments, though it affects the question of interest on the rent is not a question of "the amount of rent annually payable" within the meaning of s. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Therefore no second appeal would lie in a case where the value of the suit is less than Rs. 100, even if there is a question as to the instalment of rent. Koylash Chandra v. Tarak Nath referred to. In a previous suit for rent valued at less than Rs. 100 by the plaintiff against the defendants, one of the questions raised was, in how many instalments the rent was payable, and it was held that it was not payable in instalments. In a subsequent suit for rent valued at more than Rs. 100 between the same parties, the question of instalments was again raised, as the plaintiffs claimed the rent to be payable in four instalments. The defendants inter alia pleaded that the question as to instalments was barred as res judicata. The Munsif held that it was so barred. On appeal the Subordinate Judge reversed the decision of the Munsif. On a second appeal to the High Court: Held, that the judgment in the previous suit operated as res judicata, notwithstanding that no second appeal was allowed by law in that suit. Vithilinga Padayachi v. Vithilinga Mudali and Bhola Bhai v. Adesang dissented from Misir Raghobardial v. Sheo Baksh Singh, Edun v. Bechun distinguished. David v. Grish Chunder Guha referred to.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 13—Landlord and tenant—Suit for rent—Issue whether land was mal or lakhiraj—Question raised in a rent suit, whether directly and substantially in issue in that suit—Subsequent suit for khas possession. In a previous suit brought by the predecessor in title of the plaintiff against the defendants rent, one of the questions raised was whether the land, in respect of which rent was claimed, was mal or lakhiraj, and that question was decided in favour of the defendants. In a subsequent suit by the plaintiff against the same defendants for khas possession of certain land the defence was that the land in dispute was their lakhiraj land, and that the judgment in the previous suit operated as res judicata. Held, that though the previous suit was one for rent, yet the issue upon the question whether the land was mal or lakhiraj was raised directly in that suit and therefore the subsequent suit was barred as res judicata. Radhamadhub Holdar v. Monohur Mukerji followed. Srihari Banerjee v. Khitish Chandra Rai Bahadoor distinguished.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 13—Landlord and tenant—Suit for rent—Question of title incidentally raised in a previous suit—Subsequent suit for declaration of title to land purchased. A suit was brought by A against B and others for rent; and the matter directly and substantially in issue was as to what the share was for which A was entitled to rent. The plaintiff obtained a decree for the whole rent. In a subsequent suit by B and others against A for declaration of title to land purchased by them in execution of their mortgage decree, the defence was that the former decree for rent operated as res judicata. Held, that as the issue in the rent suit was for what share the plaintiff was entitled to rent and not to what share of the property was the plaintiff entitled as owner, the question of title could be said to have been in issue in that suit only incidentally and not directly, and it could not have been entertained in the form in which it was now raised; therefore the subsequent suit was not barred as res judicata. Run Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer followed. Radhamadhub Holdar v. Monohur Mukerji distinguished. Nanack Chand v. Teluckdye Koer, Dirgopal Lal v. Bolakee referred to.

SRIHARI BANERJEE v. KHITISH CHANDRA RAI BAHADOOR ... XXIV 569

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 13—Proceedings in a prior suit—Fact in issue not heard and "finally decided therein." To support the defence of res judicata it is not enough that the parties to the suits are the same and that the same matter is in issue. The matter must have been heard and finally decided: s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code. In 1885 relations of a deceased proprietor, alleging their right to the inheritance, sued for a declaration that they were his next of kin. The defendant set up a title as direct descendant, claiming to be the son of that proprietor's daughter. The first Court decided that this was his true parentage and dismissed the suit. The High Court maintained the dismissal, not upon the merits, but on the grounds that the suit was defective for want of parties, and that a declaratory decree could not be made. In 1888 the same plaintiffs, having purchased the interest of the parties not joined in the previous suit, brought the present suit, with the same object, against the same defendant, whom the Subordinate Judge (not the same officer that disposed of the former suit), now found not to have been the son of the said daughter. A Bench of the High Court (composed of Judges other than those that heard the former appeal) having examined the record of the former suit reversed the Subordinate Judge's decision. They declined, however, to decide whether or not the latter suit was barred on the ground of res judicata. But intimating that they would have affirmed the judgment of the lower Court in the former suit had it, on the merits, come before them, they preferred that judgment to the one before them, and gave effect to this opinion by reversing the latter. Held, that the question of parentage had not been heard and finally decided in the suit of 1885. The appeal in that suit had put an end to any finality in the decision of the first Court, and had not led to a decision on the merits. There was, therefore, no res judicata; but unless treated as such the judgment in the former suit had little or no bearing on the question as afterwards put in issue in this. That issue had been rightly decided by the Subordinate Judge, on the evidence, and his judgment was accordingly maintained.

SHEOSAGAR SINGH v. SITARAM SINGH ... ... XXIV 616

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 13, expl. 2—Different subject-matter of suits—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, art. 124—Suit for declaration of baradari rights—Subsequent suit for assertion of khadimi rights—Sale of office to which are attached conduct of religious worship, and performance of religious duties—Mahomedan Law—Custom. Section 13, expl. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies only to cases in which the plaintiff, having on a former occasion sued for certain relief on the strength of one title, afterwards claims the same relief on the ground of another title of which he might have availed himself in the former suit. It does not apply to cases where the subject-matters of the two suits are different. The plaintiffs, in the year 1881, instituted a suit for a declaration of private baradari rights in connection with the daily receipts and offerings at a certain Mahomedan place of worship, alleging that the defendants had dispossessed them on the 27th September 1881; but they did not assert any claim as khadims. The suit was decreed; but the decree was reversed on appeal. On the 7th March 1892, the plaintiffs instituted a suit for a declaration that they were the khadims of a certain durga and, as such, entitled to perform the duties attached to that office for 21 days in each month, and during that period to receive the offerings made by worshippers at the durga. They also claimed an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with them in the exercise of that office. The plaintiffs claimed their khadimi rights partly by inheritance and partly by purchase, a custom of transferability by sale having been long recognized. Held, that the relief claimed in the second suit was not res judicata, the subject-matters of the two suits being distinct. Denobundhoo Choudhry v. Kristomonee Dossee, Woomatara Debia v. Unnopoorna Dassee, Kameswar Pershad v. Rajkumari Ruttan Koer, Doorga Persad Singh v. Doorga Konwari, Vijaya Raghanadha Bodha v. Katama Natchiar, Soorjoomonee Dayee v. Suddanund Mohapatter and Krishna Behari Roy v. Bunwari Lal Roy distinguished. Held, also, that the second suit, being a claim to an hereditary office, fell under art. 124 of the Limitation Act, and was not barred by limitation. Semble, that a Mahomedan office to which are attached substantially the conduct of religious worship and the performance of religious duties, is not legally saleable, any custom to the contrary notwithstanding; and that, therefore, in so far as the title of the plaintiffs depended upon purchase, the suit failed. Juggurnath Roy Chowdhry v. Kishen Pershad Surmah, Kuppa Gurukal v. Dorasami Gurukal, Mancharam v. Pranshankar and Vurma Valia v. Ravi Vurmah Kunhi Kutty referred to.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 13, expl. 2—Dismissal of suit for want of notice, and also upon the merits—Matter directly and substantially in issue finally heard and decided—Bengal Municipal Act (Bengal Act III of 1884), s. 363. In a suit brought by one A against C for damages for not removing certain offensive matter from his land, the questions raised were, whether there was notice, and whether the defendant was bound to remove the filth from the plaintiff's property. The Court having found that there was no notice, which in its opinion was a ground sufficient for dismissal of the suit under s. 363 of the Bengal Municipal Act, and also upon the merits, having come to the conclusion that the defendant was not bound to remove the offensive matter from the plaintiff's land, dismissed the suit. In a subsequent suit between the same parties, the plaintiff claiming the same relief as in the previous suit, the defence was that the suit was barred as res judicata. Held, that inasmuch as the matter directly and substantially in issue in the subsequent suit was directly and substantially in issue in the previous suit, and as it was finally heard and decided between the same parties, notwithstanding the fact that the previous suit failed by reason of the decision of the Court upon some other matter as well, the subsequent suit was barred as res judicata. Shib Charan Lal v. Raghu Nath distinguished.

PEARY MOHUN MOOKERJEE v. AMBICA CHURN BANDOPADHYA ... XXIV 900

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 13, expl. 2—Suit for rent—Whether the question that the plaintiff was a mere benamidar could be raised in a subsequent suit for rent, it not having been raised in a suit previously brought by the same plaintiff against the same defendant. In a previous suit brought by the plaintiff for rent the defendant denied the relationship of landlord and tenant, but he did not plead that the plaintiff was a mere benamidar. The plaintiff obtained a decree. In a subsequent suit by the same plaintiff against the same defendant for rent for subsequent years, the defendant, inter alia, contended that the plaintiff was a mere benamidar. The plaintiff objected that the previous decree was a bar to defendant's contention. Held, that even if the matter in issue might and ought to have been made a defence in the former suit, yet as it was not finally heard and decided by the Court, within the meaning of s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the defendant was not precluded in this suit from raising the objection that the plaintiff was a mere benamidar.

KAILASH MONDUL v. BARODA SUNDARI DASI ... ... XXIV 711

Consent decree—Decree dismissing party from suit. In 1839 in contemplation of a marriage between M and G a deed of settlement was executed which provided that, during the life-time of M's father half of the rents and profits of two houses in Calcutta, held for a term of years, should be taken by him and half by G; that after the death of M's father the rents and profits should go to G and M, and upon the death of either of them to the survivor; and after the death of the survivor to the use absolutely of the issue of the marriage, if any. The father of M died in 1841 and G on the 23rd of November in the same year. M, on 21st December 1841, shortly after the death of her husband, married AS, and on the 8th of April 1842 gave birth to a child who was named E and afterwards married to T. M died in 1850. By AS she had two children, the plaintiff and a son GS. On the 7th November 1859 E and her husband filed a bill of complaint in the Supreme Court, Calcutta, against the trustees of the settlement of 1839 and against AS and GS, who was then an infant in which she claimed to be entitled to the properties absolutely. On the 21st of June 1860 a decree was made dismissing the suit against GS, and declaring that the properties covered by the deed of settlement were personalty. In the present suit it was objected that the decree of the Supreme Court could not bind GS, as he was dismissed from the suit and because the decree was a decree by consent. Held, that the decree was binding upon GS, and persons claiming to derive their title from him. A consent decree is as binding on the parties to the proceedings in which it is made as a decree made after a contentious trial. In re South American and Mexican Co., The Bellcairn, Nilakandhen v. Padmanabha, and Gajapathi Radhika v. Gajapathi Nilamani referred to.

Fraud—Suit to set aside ex parte decree and sale in execution thereof, on the ground of fraud—Res judicata—Effect of not appealing against an appealable order—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 13, 108, 244, 311. The plaintiff having applied unsuccessfully under ss. 108 and 311 of the Civil Procedure Code to set aside an ex parte decree against him and the sale of his property in the execution thereof on the ground of fraud, and without preferring an appeal against the order rejecting his said application under s. 108 of the Code, instituted this suit praying for the same relief. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit as not maintainable. Held, that such a suit was maintainable, and that ss. 13 and 244 of the Civil Procedure Code were no bar thereto. The facts that his application under s. 108 was unsuccessful, and that he did not appeal against the order rejecting that application, did not disentitle him from prosecuting his remedy by suit on the ground of fraud. Held, also, that when there is an appeal against a decision, the effect of not appealing is that the decision holds good for what it is worth; so far as concerns any other modes of relief available, the person not appealing is in no worse position than if he had appealed and failed. Abdul Mazumdar v. Mohamed Gazi Chowdhry approved. Raj Kishen Mookerjee v. Modhoo Soodun Mundle distinguished.

325 The accused receiving information that the complainant's party were about to take forcible possession of a plot of land which was found by the Court to be in the possession of the accused collected a large number of men, some of whom were armed, and went through the village to the land in question. While they were engaged in ploughing, the complainant's party came up, some of them being armed, and interfered with the ploughing. A fight ensued, in the course of which one of the complainant's party was grievously wounded and subsequently died, and two of the accused's party were hurt. Held, that if the accused were rightfully in possession of the land and found it necessary to protect themselves from aggression on the part of another body of men, they were justified in taking such precautions as they thought were required and using such force or violence as was necessary to prevent the aggression. Held, also, that under such circumstances they could not rightly be held to be members of an unlawful assembly. *Queen Empress v. Riparian Owners—

Water rights for irrigation where a stream flows through separate estates. Relative rights of upper and lower proprietors on the banks to the use of the water—Issues not raising actual rights. A riparian owner where a stream flows in a channel down from a property higher up is entitled to the flow of water without interruption and without substantial diminution caused by the upper proprietor, who may for legitimate purposes withdraw so much only of the water as will not materially lessen the downward flow on to his neighbour's land. In this suit the upper proprietor claimed the right to dam up a stream on his own estate and to impound so much of its water as he might find convenient for irrigation, leaving only the surplus, if any, for the use of the proprietors below. He has no such right in the absence of a right obtained by him in virtue of contract with the lower proprietors or acquired by him as a consequence of prescriptive use. His common law right is to take for the purpose of irrigation so much water only as can be abstracted without materially diminishing what is to be allowed to descend. What quantity of water can be abstracted and used without infringing that essential condition must in all cases be a question of the circumstances, depending mainly upon the size of the stream and the proportion which the water taken bears to its entire volume. In this suit, the upper proprietor's claim having been put too high, the real question as to the proportion of his share had been omitted. No issue had raised it, and no evidence had been given to determine it approximately. The Court of First Instance and the first Appellate Court had attempted to decree what they considered would be the just proportion but the High Court had rightly pointed out that there had been no materials before the Courts upon which a right to a more limited kind than that which had been in excess claimed could be decreed to the upper proprietor, and the suit had been rightly dismissed.

Deposit of decretal amount incorrectly calculated by ministerial officers of Court—Effect of deposit without a prayer in express terms to set aside the sale—Challans. Practice. The judgment-debtor, within thirty days from the date of sale of his holding for arrears of rent, deposited in Court under s 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the decretal amount by a challan endorsed by the chief ministerial officer of the Court executing the decree. Subsequently it was discovered that the amount was short by 9 pies, which the judgment-debtor forthwith paid in, making up the deficiency, and presented a petition, praying that "the execution case may be declared as finally closed," but without applying in express terms to have the sale set aside. Held, that under s 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the Court was Section 73 of the Transfer of Property Act only gives a right to the mortgagee over the residue of the sale proceeds, and refers to cases where the law otherwise provided that the effect of the sale is to nullify a mortgage; it is not intended in any way to enlarge the interest of the purchaser at a sale for arrears of revenue or rent. Prem Chand Pal v. Purnima Dasi referred to.

Sale for Arrears of Revenue—
See JURISDICTION OF CIVIL COURT: RIGHT OF SUIT.

Act XI of 1859 (Bengal Revenue Sale Law), ss. 3, 8, and 33—Bengal Excise Act (Bengal Act VII of 1868), s. 2—Unauthorized sale by Collector—Jurisdiction of Civil Court—Res judicata—Parties—Secretary of State for India. Act XI of 1859, the Bengal Revenue Sale law, providing for the sale of estates in arrear of payment of revenue, does not sanction, and by plain implication forbids, the sale of any estate which is not at the time in arrear of such payment. The whole clauses, in so far as they relate to sales, or to their challenge, as well the provisions of Bengal Act VII of 1868, are framed upon the express footing that they are to be applicable to the sale of estates, which are in arrear of duty. A Collector had sold an estate, purporting to act under Act XI of 1859, for a supposed arrear of revenue. There was, however, only an erroneous debit in the collectorate books against the estate, in excess of the revenue actually assessed upon it, chargeable against it, and due from it. Held, that the sale was without authority; that the Civil Court had jurisdiction to declare the sale void; and that the provisions of s. 33 of Act XI of 1859, relating to an appeal to the Commissioner of Revenue, did not exclude that jurisdiction. The enactment in s. 8 had no application to such a case. This was not a question about a transfer from the account of one revenue-paying estate to that of another, nor was it a claim for remission or abatement, which had not been duly allowed by the Government. Section 8 has no application, except there be (1) default in payment of the revenue, and (2) possession by the collector of money of the defaulter not indisputably placed to his credit. But here there was no default. All moneys paid by the appellant were credited, and their alleged default was based upon erroneous debit entries to which they were not parties. In this suit, in the Courts below, the Government had been made a co-defendant, but were not respondents, on this appeal; and the objection was taken, on the argument of this appeal, and by previous petition, that they should be made parties, respondents. Held, that it was a mistaken view that a decree annulling the sale in this suit would be res judicata in any future question or proceeding, as between the Government and the unsuccessful purchaser. The Secretary of State for India, therefore, was not a necessary respondent. His position was correctly explained in Bal Mokoond Lal v. Jirjudhun Roy, in the judgment of MITTER, J.

Purchaser at a revenue sale—Act XI of 1859, s. 37—"Entire estates"—Estates Partition Act (Bengal Act VIII of 1876), s. 123—"Time of settlement." A new estate created upon a partition by the Collector comes within the meaning of "entire estate" in s. 37 of Act XI of 1859. The words "time of settlement" in that section mean the time when the contract was made with Government, and in the case of a permanently settled estate mean the time of permanent settlement. A partition by the Collector merely apportions the amount of revenue; there is no settlement of the revenue in any sense at the time of such partition.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 15, 285—Sale in execution by inferior Court of property already under an attachment by a superior Court—Jurisdiction of Munsif—Preferential right of purchasers at execution sale—Concurrent decrees, Execution of. A obtained a decree against B in the Court of the Munsif of Jamui, and in execution thereof attached B's property on the 16th March 1891; the property was sold on the 20th April 1891 and purchased by C who obtained possession of it on the 3rd of August 1891, and then sold his interest to the plaintiff. At the same time the defendant R had a decree for costs against B and his heirs in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr, and in execution thereof attached the same property on the 4th February 1891, and sold it on the 24th August 1891, i.e. about four months after the sale of the property by the Munsif. The plaintiff sued for possession on the ground that having purchased the property of B before the second sale by the Subordinate Judge, she was entitled to the property. The defendant contended that the sale by the Munsif of the property under attachment by a Court of a higher grade was absolutely void, and the Munif had no jurisdiction to sell the property under s. 285 of the Civil Procedure Code. Held, that the sale by the Munsif was not without jurisdiction, and that it conveyed to the plaintiff a valid title to the property. Section 285 of the Civil Procedure Code is merely a section for procedure to prevent different claims arising out of the attachment and sale of the same property by different Courts. Bykant Nath Shaha v. Rajendra Narain Rai, Dwarka Nath Das v. Banku Behari Bose, and Patel Naranji Morarji v. Haridas Navalram referred to.

Rights of purchasers—Two judicial sales of the same property, each in execution of a separate decree—Conflicting claims thereunder—Purchase pendente lite—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, arts. 12 and 13. The same property having been sold in execution of two different decrees the result was that the two purchasers at the respective sales afterwards contested title to the property. The sale to the first purchaser was confirmed in November 1882. The sale to the second, who upon it obtained possession, took place in October 1881, the property having been attached under the second decree in March 1883. The first purchaser on the 28th July 1884 brought a suit, to which the second purchaser was not a party, to have that attachment declared invalid. By a decree of the 14th November to that effect the second purchaser was bound as a purchaser pendente lite; and his possession was of no avail to him. Held, that the attachment of March 1883, although it had preceded the institution of the first purchaser's suit of 1881, afforded no support to the second purchaser's claim, attachment under ch. XIX of the Civil Procedure Code merely preventing alienation, and not giving title. Moreover, after the first sale in 1882, there had been no interest left to be sold to another purchaser, so that, without there having been the decree of 1885, the second purchaser would still have had no title against the first. There was no occasion for the setting aside the second sale within the meaning of arts. 12 and 13 of sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877); nor was it set aside. That sale was held not to affect the right of the first purchaser, there being a wide difference between setting aside a sale, and deciding that a plaintiff's right was not affected by it.

A certain property was sold on the 16th August 1895 in execution of a mortgage decree, dated 9th December 1892, and was purchased by A. In the meantime an eight annas share of the said property was sold in execution of a money decree and was purchased by R on the 22nd May 1893. On the 10th September 1895 the judgment-debtor applied to set aside the mortgage sale under s. 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and on the 14th September 1895 a similar application was made by R. On the 28th March 1896 both these applications came on for hearing before the Subordinate Judge who passed no order; and on the same date R presented a petition, asking the Court to set aside the sale held in execution of the mortgage decree upon payment by him of the mortgage money, with interest and costs, and also to declare that he might be entitled to redeem the property. On the 30th March 1895 the Subordinate Judge allowed the petition and ordered the sale to be set aside upon the aforesaid terms. Held, that, inasmuch as under s. 312 of the Code of Civil Procedure A was entitled to have an order confirming the sale of the 16th August 1895, unless the sale were set aside under s. 310A or s. 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and as the sale was not set aside under either of these sections, the Court below had no jurisdiction to set aside the sale upon payment by the applicant of the mortgage money with interest and costs. *Brij Mohun Thakur v.
